After the sermon, an anthem was sung, and then was recited a poem of more than 100 stanzas, by Dr. Allen, pastor in Pittsfield, 40 years ago. The following, in reference to the manly remonstrance of Field, Bryant, and Sedgwick, against the Annexation of Texas, was received by a burst of applause from the audience:—

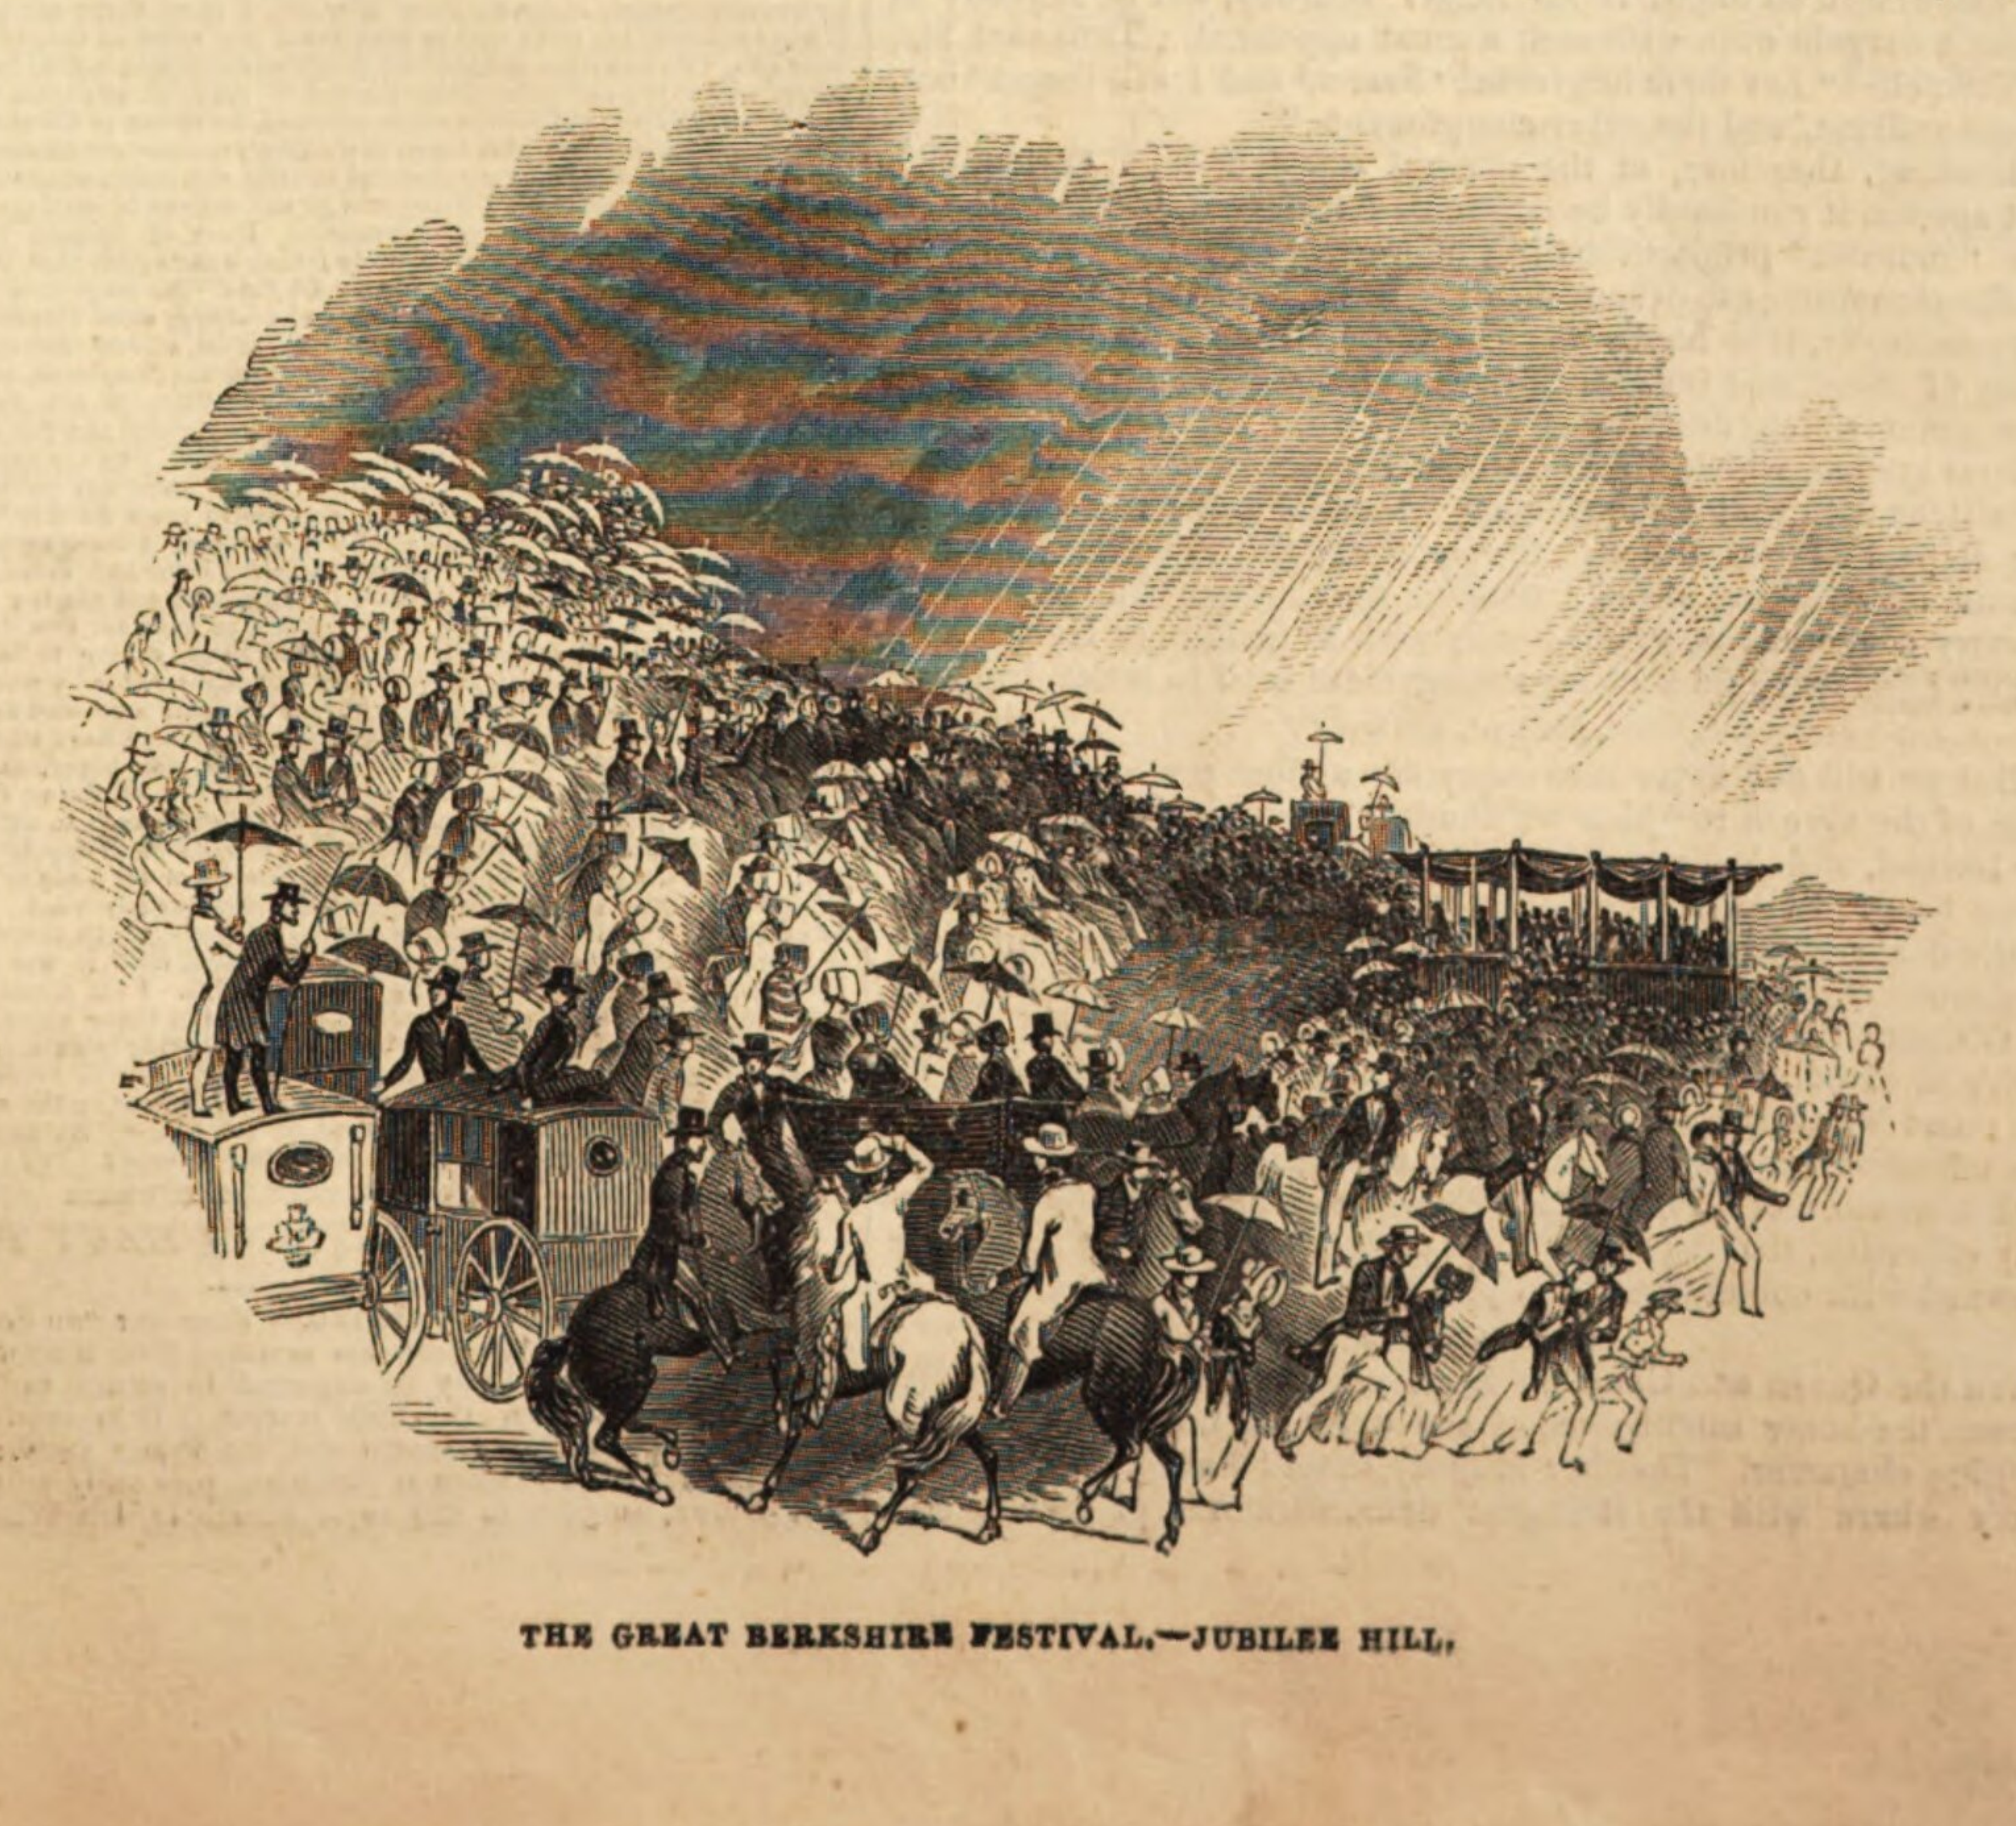
"Of Field and Sedgwick, resolute and free,
By Party's slavish voice invoked in vain
To bend their Berkshire might, and stubborn knee
To the great image on the Texan plain."

There was another poem and a hymn given, and then the assembly dispersed. In the evening, every house in Pittsfield was "open" to strangers. The New York Tribune states:—

No words can express too much in favour of Pittsfield hospitality. In some houses all the parlours are full of beds, and some talked of fixing up the church for reception, and to give still more accommodation a train has been started on the railroad to carry people twenty or thirty miles to bed, returning with them in the morning in less time than a lazy person would require to get down stairs from the third story.

The Second Day of the Jubilee was opened by a gathering of the young men: then an informal meeting in the Presbyterian Church, at which the exiled sons of Berkshire were welcomed, and the memory of the departed was honoured. The procession was then formed to Jubilee Hill, where from 5000 to 6000 persons (the majority of them ladies) were present; in the front of whom sat Miss Sedgwick, the poetess. The proceedings consisted of a hymn, prayer, and oration, the latter an eloquent production, by the Hon. J. A. Spencer, of Utica; at the close of which was produced the first newspaper published in Berkshire, in 1788. Then followed a glee; a poem written for the occasion, by Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler; a poem and song, by Mrs. Sigourney, &c.

The company next marched, in procession, to the dinner pavilion, where nearly 3000 guests took their seats, whilst thousands stood around, to witness the spectacle, and hear the speeches. The first ladies in the place were "out to Jubilee Dinner:" the repast was cold, and was all prepared at Boston. After dinner, the president, Governor Briggs, eloquently recounted the great deeds of Berkshire men, during several crises, and claimed for their fame the taking of Ticonderoga; the detection of Arnold, the traitor; great service in the Florida war, &c. The following sentiments were then given:—"The scenes and friends of our childhood."—"The county of Berkshire—her scenery and her sons, gazing upon these, she exclaims with the Roman mother, 'These are my jewels.'" Dr. O. W. Holmes, of Boston, next addressed the company, and recited a poem of thirteen stanzas: a brass band played "Home, sweet Home!" Judge Dewey then complimented "the array of loveliness;" and Mr. Theodore Sedgwick eulogised the free Republic, quaintly adding, "The stock of New England is the stock of Old England, with our equality added to their liberty and intelligence."



THE GREAT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL.—JUBILEE HILL.

Mr. Macready, our distinguished tragedian, was next called for by the company, when he rose and said:—"Mr. President, and gentlemen—I cannot say brethren; and yet my heart beats as warmly at seeing such a spectacle as any American could desire. I confess, sir, that I am taken wholly unawares, for I came here only to witness the spirit with which you enter into this Jubilee. I cannot make a speech. Believe me, I wish I could banish from the minds of those that hear me, every suspicion that England is opposed to the prosperity of this country. But I will not attempt to make a speech. Instead of that, I will recite to you a short poem, expressing that spirit of love to man which ought to characterise the nations and the people of the earth." Mr. Macready then recited the following Eastern fable, which he gave with all that grace and energy which have given him such celebrity:—

Abon Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight, in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
An Angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised his head,
And, in a voice made all of sweet accord,
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord!"
"And is mine one?" said Ben Adhem. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the Angel. Abon spoke more low,
But cheerly still: "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
The Angel wrote and vanished. The next night
He came again, with a great wakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blest;
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

This recitation was received with loud applause, the band playing "God save the Queen."

Governor Briggs read an eulogy on Channing, by a daughter of Berkshire, and gave a sentiment to his memory, followed by the air of "Yankee Doodle," &c. The next noticeable proceeding was the singing of a song by about sixty young ladies, dressed in white, with white ribbons pendant from their hair, accompanied by several gentlemen on musical instruments, and by the whole audience in chorus. A celebrated belle then gave, by proxy, the following sentiment:—

You scarce can go through the world below,
But you'll find the Berkshire men;
And when you rove the world above,
You'll meet them there again.

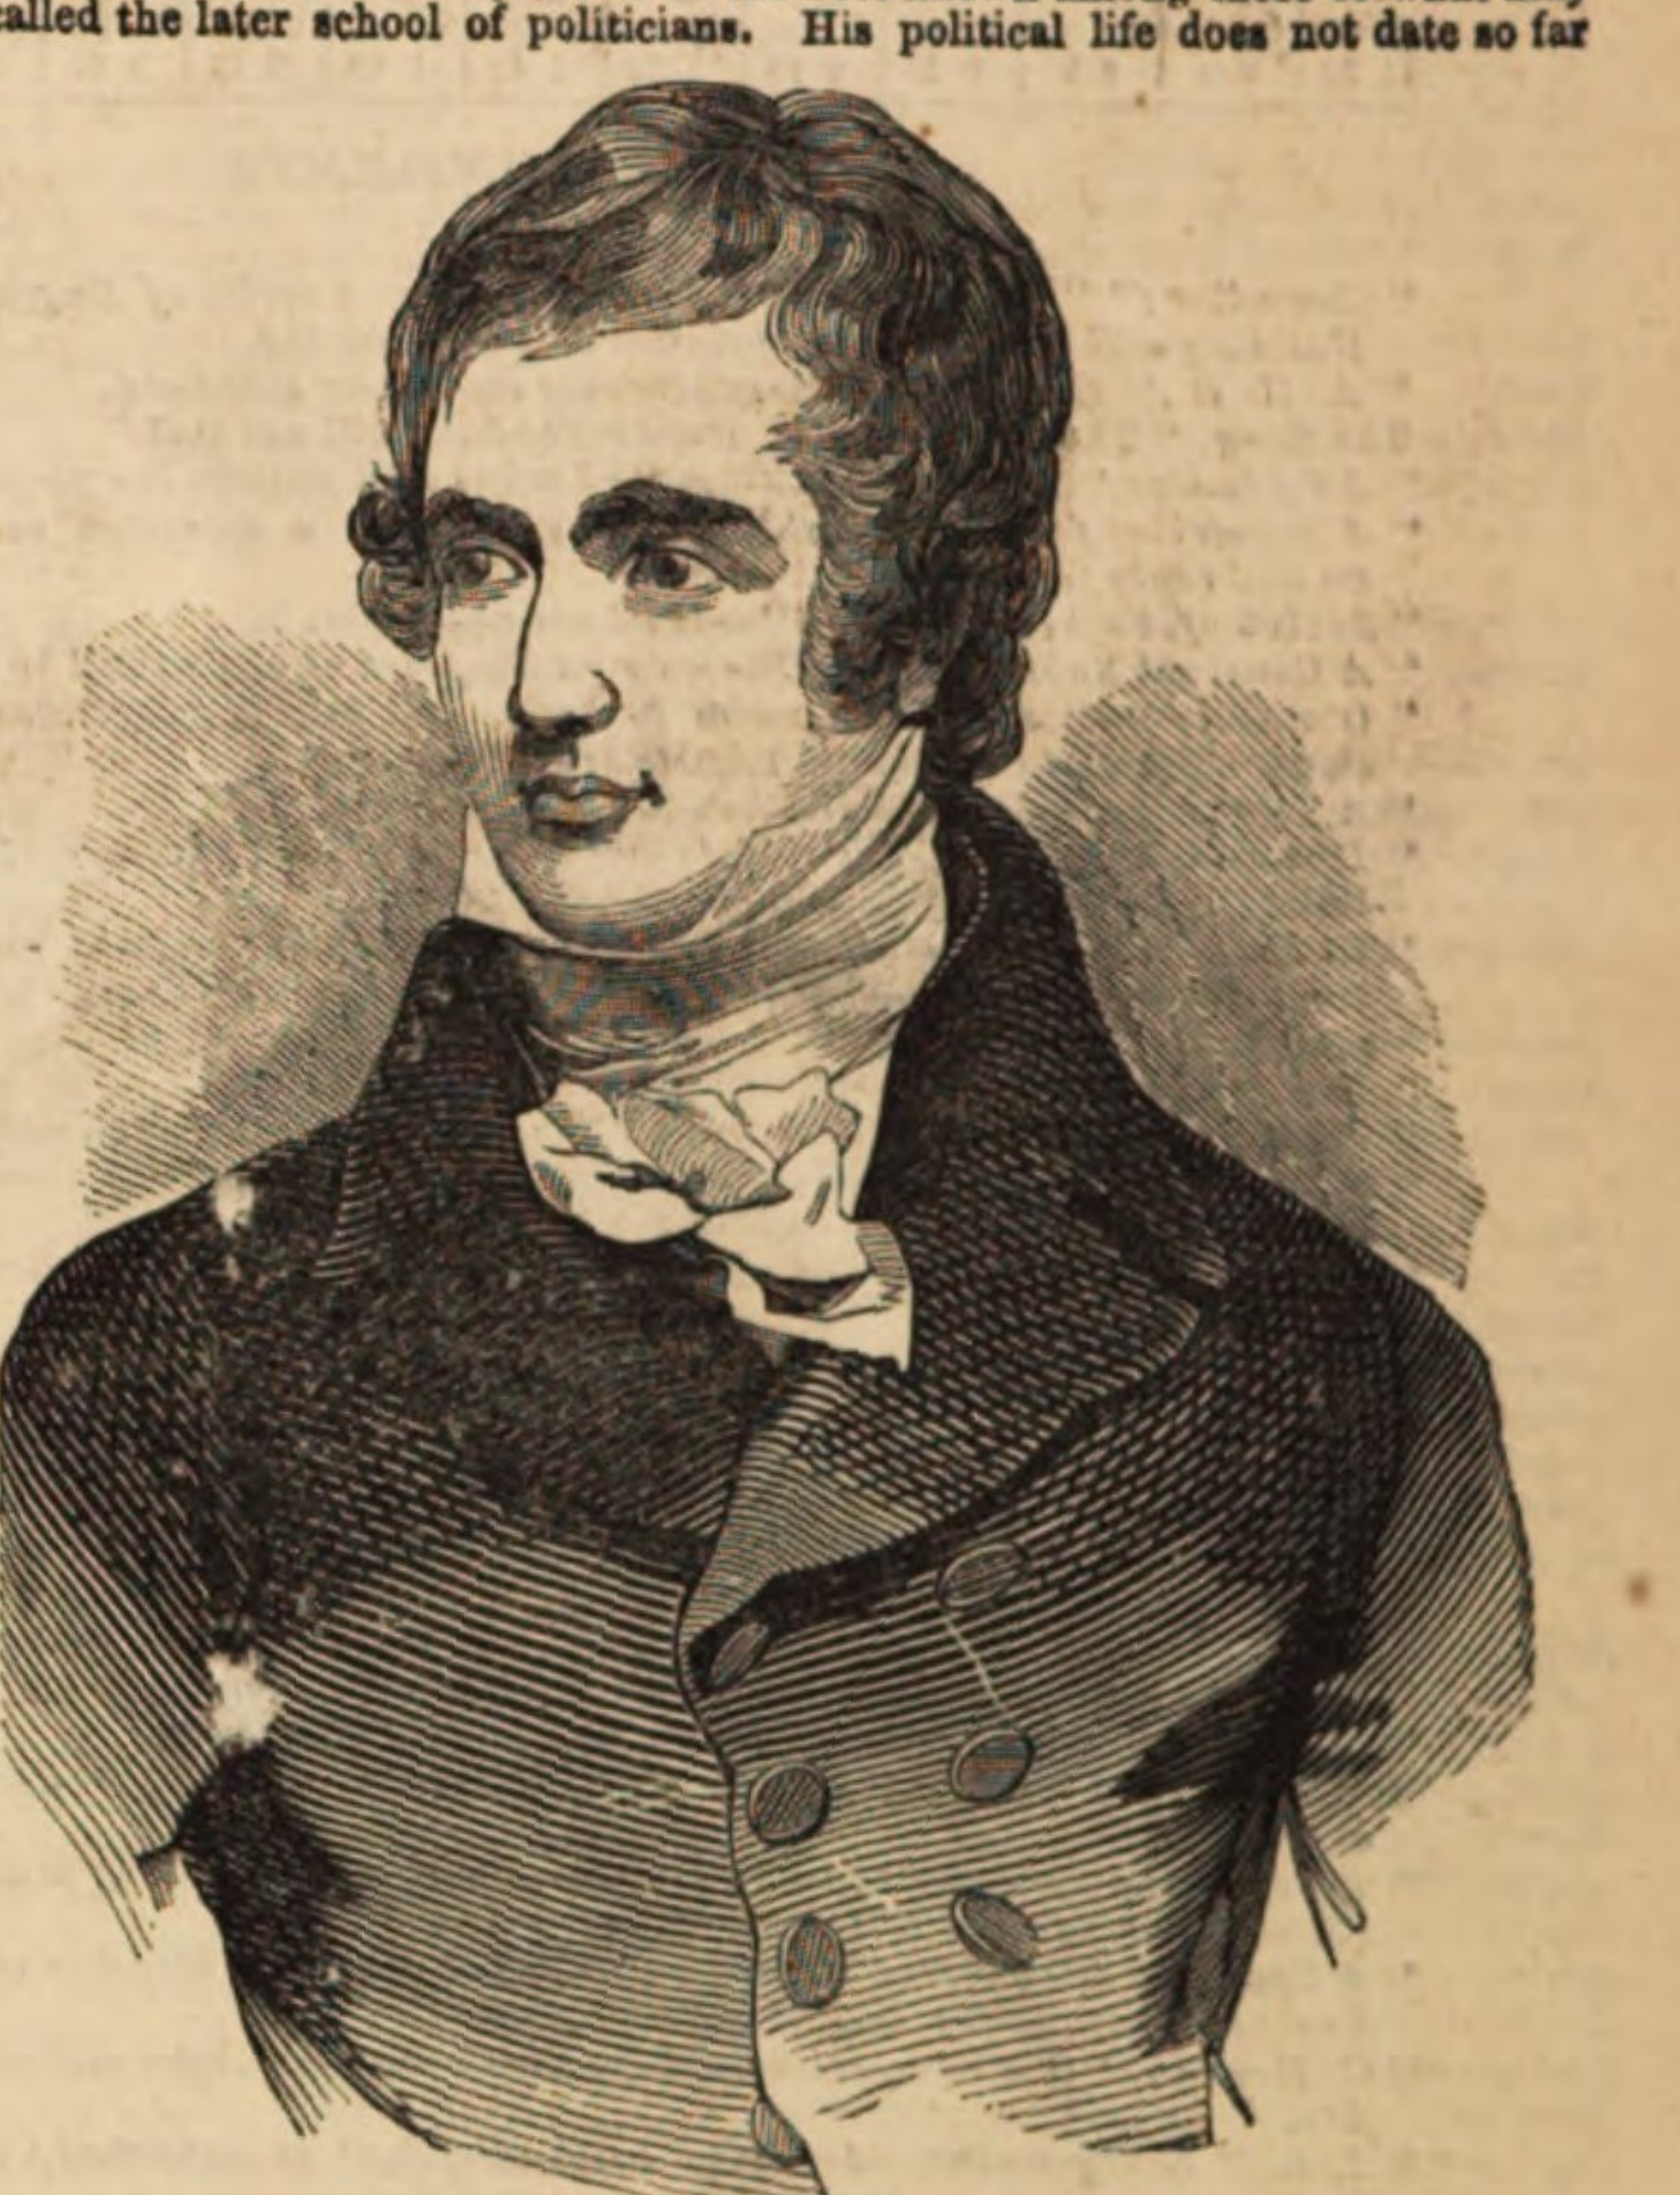
After a few more sentiments, the party broke up, and The Tribune reporter tells us that "many a manly cheek was wet, and many an eye of beauty shed dew-drops, to render still more lovely the white and red roses that were so profusely mingled where they fell."

In the evening, a meeting was held at the Town Hall, at which the people of Pittsfield were thanked for their hospitality. About an hour after the performances closed, when one of the most terrific thunder-storms came on that ever occurred, even in that region. "Among its effects," says the Tribune, "were the prostration of the tent, and a smash of about one hundred dollars' worth of crockery. 'Old Gray Lock' was clothed in fire, and the giant mountains threw living balls of flame at each other's heads. The Titan clouds, bearing terrestrial armour, seemed to rush in battle against the sky, only to be hurled again, weak as water, down to their mother earth. It was a magnificent FINALE TO THE BERKSHIRE JUBILEE."

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.—No. XXIV.

LORD STANLEY.

The name of Lord Stanley is one of the best known among those of what may be called the later school of politicians. His political life does not date so far back as that of most of his colleagues. But what his career wants in length i has made up by activity; and there is yet a long course before him, for he is in the prime of life, though he has changed the sphere of his exertions somewhat before the time when the inevitable fiat of nature would have called him to do so. The house of Stanley is conspicuous in the annals of England. It has produced both statesmen and warriors of great eminence. It was the first earl of the family who crowned Richmond as Henry VII. on the battle-field of Bosworth.



LORD STANLEY

The Right Honourable Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, Lord Stanley, is the eldest son of the thirteenth Earl of Derby. He was born on the 29th of March, 1799, and is not, therefore, more than forty-five years of age. He is her Majesty's principal Secretary for the Colonies, and till his late acceptance of the Chiltern Hundreds, sat for the Northern Division of Lancashire. His first connexion with public affairs was during part of the Goderich Ministry, when he was Under-Secretary for the Colonies. When Earl Grey came into power, he was made Secretary for Ireland. Then began that fierce animosity between him and O'Connell, which partook of the bitterness of personal as well as of political antipathy. A sharp, acrid, and irritable nature, which, having adopted strong party views defended them as strongly, frequently laid him open by its violence to the more wary and lawyer-like method of O'Connell. Great were their battles in the days of Stanley's Irish Secretaryship, and, indeed, long afterwards. His measures, however, with respect to the Irish Church and national education were good. He tried to alter the franchise, but here O'Connell foiled him, and he never afterwards succeeded in doing more upon this question than in thwarting the efforts of the Whigs, after he had quitted their ranks. In 1833 he was made principal Colonial Secretary, and held the office till June, 1834, when came that rupture with his colleagues which threw him for many years into the ranks of the Conservative opposition, along with Sir James Graham and others of less note. The whole of them were rather happily ridiculed by O'Connell as "the Derby Dilly and its six insides." There was not at this time a better debater in the house, as his old associates often felt in his spirited and slashing attacks. But it was rather as an opposer of their policy than an originator of measures of his own that he was distinguished: he considered an opposition to be properly an attacking, not a legislating party. When the accession of the Conservatives became inevitable, he seemed likely to dispute the post of leader with Sir Robert Peel. Some of the more impetuous spirits of the party had far more sympathy with him than with the cautious and measured policy of Peel. But the safer man has carried it, and Stanley became a colleague, sometimes zealous, sometimes impatient, but able always. He resumed his old place in the Colonial Office when the Peel Ministry was formed, and has retained it ever since. There is a strong party out of doors who blame his management of the colonies most severely. His system seems to be pretty much that of all Colonial Ministers—leaving our distant possessions to govern themselves. He was early in Parliament, as he was returned for Stockbridge in 1820. He has sat also for Preston and Windsor; he has been Lord Rector of Glasgow University, and was sworn in as a Privy Councillor in 1830. The Ministry wanting a more active leader in the House of Peers, he is about to be raised to it; but no man, we should think, will be more out of his element in that very decorous and very dull assembly. Stanley is at home in the hottest of a party fight, where all is animation and excitement; though since he has been in office in the present Government he has spoken seldom, and then in that more moderate way which becomes a Minister possessed of place, but which was difficult to the high-spirited patrician, impatient at seeing others holding it. As his elevation to the peerage has excited some interest, we add an explanation of several points connected with it. He of course still retains his office as one of the Ministry.

The practice of summoning the eldest son of a peer to the House of Lords during his father's lifetime does not, as is well known, create any new peerage, if one of the secondary titles of the young peer's father be used on the occasion; the eldest son so summoned takes rank according to the date, not of the summons, but of the original creation of that title which he thus temporarily shares with his father, without really denuding the latter of any of the family honours. The practice has been frequently adopted in the cases of members of the Derby family, and in one instance the erroneous summons of an eldest son of an Earl of Derby in a title which his father did not really possess had the unexpected effect of creating a new peerage. This occurred in the year 1627, when the eldest son of the sixth earl was summoned to the House of Peers during his father's lifetime as Baron Strange. It will be remembered that Lord Stanley's father, the present Earl of Derby, was also called to the Upper House before he had succeeded to the ancestral honours of the family. In that case a new peerage was designedly created, because the earldom was the only title then in the family, for all the subordinate peerages had passed away through the female line to the ducal house of Athol; his lordship was therefore created in 1832 Baron Stanley, of Bickerstaffe, in which title it is not improbable that the noble Secretary for the Colonies will be summoned to the House of Peers, and thus he will be popularly known by the same designation as that which he bore by courtesy in the House of Commons.

THE CENSUS OF SCOTLAND AND IRELAND,

COMPILED FROM THE PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS,

will be Published on SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5th, 1844.

It will also contain

A TABLE OF THE OCCUPATIONS

OF ALL THE INHABITANTS OF

ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND,

SHEWING THE NUMBER OF EACH SEX

EMPLOYED IN EVERY TRADE AND PROFESSION.

This Table is, perhaps, the most Interesting and Important Document ever Published by Parliament.

The above is printed uniform with the CENSUS OF ENGLAND, and will be published as a SUPPLEMENT, Price 6d., to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS; and will be Stamped to go Free by Post.

☞ Subscribers, wishing for the above, must order it of any Newsman or Bookseller.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, September 22.—Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 23.—New Post-office opened, 1829.
TUESDAY, 24.—Don Pedro died, 1834.
WEDNESDAY, 25.—Belgians beat the Dutch, 1830.
THURSDAY, 26.—Old Holy Rood.
FRIDAY, 27.—Brindley died, 1772.
SATURDAY, 28.—Jew's New Year's Day.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending September 28.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
11 39	0 0	0 8	0 36	0 59	1 22	1 41	1 59	2 17	2 35	2 52	3 9

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Consultor:" "Unimportant; near Ipswich."—A series of Engravings of the Building will appear in our journal when completed.

"A. H. B.," Bucks.—The lines scarcely reach our standard.

The Song, "The Yeomanry of Buckingham," will not suit.

"An Admirer," Bicester.—A Camera Lucida will answer the purpose.

"A Subscriber from the First," Birmingham.—If a specimen be forwarded, we will reply further.

"Sketch of Falkland Palace."—We have not room.

"A Constant Subscriber."—The note on the price of coals shall be attended to.

"Otonibee."—We have not room to carry out our correspondent's suggestions, especially as it would involve repetitions.

"A Two Copy Subscriber."—See our present number.

"Dramaticus," City.—We believe our correspondent to be correct, but we do not keep files of play-bills to decide disputes.

"C. M. A. Z."—We believe all the Royal Personages named are descended from Adam, and are, therefore, relations! We havenot room for the proffered sketch.

"Laurens" may send a specimen of the humorous cases.

"H. B."—We cannot publish translations of immoral French novels.

"A. C.," Newcastle-upon-Tyne, is thanked for the name of the architect of the new Catholic Church in that town—Mr. Pugin.

"T. K."—The address of Mr. Coulson, surgeon, is No. 2, Frederick's-place, Old Jewry.

"T. P. S.," Maidstone.—Our correspondent's letter has been forwarded to Mr. Gilbert.

"A. M.," Manchester, should communicate his invention to the Mechanics' Magazine.

"D. J.," Dunkeld, is thanked for the description of Dunkeld Cathedral.

"T. H." should write to Mr. Deacon, of Walbrook, respecting the legal heir to the property in Chancery.

"H. W.," Feversham.—Not of sufficient interest.

"M. M."—B will have the claim on A in case of desertion.

"Mrs. M.," Post-office, Bristol.—St. Michael's Mount has been too often engraved.

"D. S."—We have not room to take up a subject of so long a date since, as the decision referred to by our correspondent.

"A Constant Subscriber," Manchester.—The Montrose steamer will sail from Southampton for the Levant, on Sept. 23.

"C. B——m," Walmer.—Nottingham Castle has not been restored since the fire.

"J. R.," Bridgewater.—A "Key to Coningsby" is published, and may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"An Old Subscriber," Farnborough.—The rule of walking in London, in passing a person, is on the left.

"Brigatel Zhurnala."—We have already engraved the old British Museum.

"Y. L.," Leamington.—The fine goes to the Crown.

"G. T. T."—We do not remember to have received the sketch of Morocco. Thanks for the sketch of the curious tree.

"L. K."—We shall be glad to receive the "Nook of Auld Scotland."

"A Constant Reader," Leeds.—The Royal West India Mail steamers start from Southampton on the 2nd and 17th of every month. We cannot enumerate all of them.

"G. H.," Manchester, is thanked for the sketch, but we have not room to engrave it.

"T. J. B."—The notice to quit must expire at the period corresponding with that at which the house was taken.

"A Subscriber," Cork.—A Law Lord is a Peer who has practised as a Barrister. There were only five Law Lords present at O'Connell's case. Judges can only be impeached before Parliament, and cannot be removed by the Crown.

"H. R.," Wakefield.—The picture of Adam and Eve is now at Hull; where it has been visited by 20,000 persons.

We thank the correspondent who writes to us upon the subject of the Foot Race on Waterloo bridge. Our account was taken from a morning paper. Probably the alleged inaccuracy may have arisen from the cause to which our correspondent alludes when he says, "The bridge was so crowded that it was impossible to see 20 yards either way."

"A Knight of Malta," Malta, should consult Sir W. Blackstone's work on Magna Charta; or, the 1st vol. of the "Statutes of the Realm," by the late Board of Commissioners on the Public Records, in which the Charter is printed, with an English translation. Mr. Thomson's elaborate "History of Magna Charta" may also be referred to with advantage.

"H.," Kirkcudbright.—The Chiltern Hundreds are a portion of the highlands of Buckinghamshire. Formerly, these hills abounded in timber, which afforded shelter to numerous banditti. To put these down, and protect the inhabitants of the neighbouring parts from their depredations, an officer was appointed under the Crown, called the Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds. The duties have long since ceased, but the nominal office is retained (in the gift of the Chancellor of the Exchequer,) to serve a particular purpose. A Member of the House of Commons, not in any respect disqualified, cannot resign his seat. A Member, therefore, who wishes to resign, accomplishes his object by accepting the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, which being held to be a place of honour and profit under the Crown, vacates his seat.

"Cornavius."—An engraving of Witley Court has already appeared in our journal.

The Large Print.—Several correspondents who have addressed to us inquiries respecting the forthcoming Large Print should see future announcements.

Ineligible.—"Lines by a Student in the School of Christ;" "She rides upon the Sea;" "The Dying Epicurean."

Any Country News Agent may receive Posting Bills, bearing his address, by informing our Publisher where a parcel can be enclosed, free of expense.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1844.

THE storm evoked in Ireland by the unlooked-for triumph of O'Connell and his fellow Repealers has naturally been succeeded by tranquillity. It will be seen by our latest accounts that the sound and fury which prompted the return speech at the Conciliation Hall, signified in reality nothing, or at least that the motive of it was rather display than mischief. In spite of O'Connell's fierce denunciations, his bitter personal attacks, and the wholesale application of the epithets of liars and scoundrels upon his political opponents, Mr. O'Connell has made a wondrous advance to the "melting mood." He no longer broaches the doctrines of the fire and sword school, but is rather disposed to copy the meekness of the sucking dove. Not that he abandons his resolves about impeachment, nor that he is more sweet upon "Vinegar Smith," nor is there any professed desire to abandon one jot of his aspiration for revenge for his alleged wrongs; but yet the calm observer, we think, will come to the conclusion that there does not exist any serious intention of prosecuting to the uttermost any one of the alarming threats with which he astounded the excitable audience assembled at the Conciliation Hall to greet the reappearance of so notable a Conciliator.

Let us see how O'Connell treats the "great account 'twixt him and vengeance" at the meeting on Monday last, after the lapse of a week from the time when he first proclaimed the war of extermination. Upon the former occasion, he appeared ready to vindicate the right to hold "monster meetings," even to the death. How changed the scene, however, within a little week! Calm reflection wonderfully assists the imagination of agitators. If in the hey-day of joy and excitement, at the time when, according to O'Connell's truthful illustration, "the happy bird must chirrup," he regarded monster meetings as essential to the success of the Repeal cause, it is agreeable to find that, by thinking better of the matter, even this indispensable mode of excitement may be dispensed with. Witness the hon. and learned gentleman's recantation of Monday last:—

> His own opinion was, that the Clontarf meeting was now unnecessary; and he was sure if it were not necessary it ought not to be persevered in, as it would be considered to have too much the appearance of triumph and defiance. That meeting had been legally convened; its purposes and its objects were legal; and its suppression was unjustified by law, and unsanctioned by any constitutional principle. Need they now vindicate that principle! He thought not; and for this reason, that the indictment itself had done so. The principle was therefore already established, and they were therefore under no necessity of vindicating it.

Mark, too, how summarily he dismisses the second panacea—the Preservative Society. No eloquent persuasives are employed to demonstrate the necessity of such a patriotic body; and, without wishing to be uncharitable, we cannot help believing that, upon reflection, Mr. O'Connell begins to have some misgivings about the £100 qualification. No doubt the great Agitator has wonderful power over his countrymen, who contribute to the rent without much difficulty; but "a hundred pounds down" sounds formidably; and hence it may be that he does not wish to press this proposition too earnestly.

Then as to the "impeachment of the Ministry." His first idea was to make a crusade to England, to see if the "Saxons" would assist him in this great design. It seemed then as if the desirable consummation of kicking out the Tory Ministry was a thing that ought not to be retarded for a single instant. Every one who heard Mr. O'Connell must have supposed that the business was urgent, and admitted of no delay; but, alas! even this fierce onslaught against Toryism is to be quietly postponed until the next meeting of Parliament. Instead of a spirited, prompt, and indignant canvass of the English people, to ascertain if they would join in an address to the Queen for the immediate dismissal of these unworthy Tories, there has been a quiet search for precedents; and now it is discovered that the initiative ought to be taken by both Houses of Parliament, as was done in the case of Sir J. Barrington. So that this great head of accusation may be considered to be postponed until the next Session, or rather until a still more indefinite period—the Greek calends.

It will be collected, too, from the speech of Monday last, that the impeachment of the Irish Judges, and, above all, the impeachment of that functionary whom Mr. O'Connell seems to hold in such especial horror, the Irish Attorney-General, and whom the Agitator, in the fulness of conciliation, yclept the "vinegar cruet on two legs," can be postponed without injury to the cause. In fact, the "be all and the end all" of Monday's speech was an attempt to evade the consequences of the blustering manifesto of the previous week. Qui s'excuse, s'accuse, says the French proverb, and we think the learned Agitator must have felt the force of the assertion, when he sought to explain away his denunciations of the "Saxon" into a compliment. The term, he said, was no reproach. "It was an honoured name, and the purest portion of liberty was derived from Saxon laws and institutions—the Parliamentary system, trial by jury, and the shrievalty." So that the Repeal leader holds out a flag of truce to all his enemies and detractors. The Times, that powerful organ, under whose attacks he has winced so often, is no longer bearded, but he is ready to make a bargain even with such a great opponent. Thus says Mr. O'Connell—"Let them forgive me 'Saxon,' and I will forget 'surpliced ruffians,' and the other compliments."

Looking, therefore, at the general tenor of Mr. O'Connell's last speech, it can hardly be considered rash if we predict that all the "monster" propositions will be quietly inurned in the bosom of the committees to whom they are to be referred. Under these circumstances, it is hardly worth while to discuss the virulence of some of them, and the inconsistency of the others. But there is one point which deserves a passing word of comment. The federal system, which Mr. O'Connell has advocated, is totally inconsistent with that independence which he seeks to establish by the Repeal of the Union. Surely the politician who joins Mr. Hume in speaking of the "baneful domination" of the mother country over Canada, would hardly wish to assimilate Ireland to a colony? How could such an arrangement tend to make Ireland

"Great, glorious, and free?"

But we will not enter into angry discussion, particularly as the tone of the speech to which we allude makes us hope better things for Ireland, and leads us to the fond conclusion, that the differences between the two countries may be healed without a resort to the desperate expedient of impeachment, or to the still more dangerous experiment of Repeal. We look upon the last speech of O'Connell as a feeler, a compromise—as an indication of a desire to withdraw from his false position with the best grace he can; and we trust we are not too sanguine in believing, that now the effervescence arising from hope unexpected has passed away, such a measure of "Justice to Ireland" may be fairly and honourably conceded, that agitation may cease, and that fair island be crowned with contentment and prosperity.

WITH the Queen and Court in Scotland, and the Parliament dispersed, the home intelligence of the week has not been of a very exciting character. That her Majesty should have been received every where with the strongest demonstrations of loyalty and attachment is gratifying; but happily it is not a novelty. The same demonstrations have attended her steps from the first day she ascended the throne; her present visit to Scotland has elicited an enthusiasm not generally supposed to be a characteristic of our northern neighbours; it is pleasant, in these days when it is generally supposed the matter-of-fact pursuits of commerce are destroying the little that time has left of the age of chivalry, which Burke pronounced to have passed, to find so much of the olden spirit existing still, and suiting so well with the natural aspect of the land of mountain and of flood.

WE feel convinced that every honourable-minded and sensible man in the country will rejoice at the manner in which the dispute between France and Morocco has terminated. France, we are bound to say, has fulfilled her engagements. Nay, more, for, with a moderation seldom practised by the victorious party, she is content when she has achieved a triumph with the same conditions which she made before the contest commenced. Assurances were given to Lord Aberdeen that the French Government had no disposition to take possession of the territory of Morocco. The Prince de Joinville occupied the island of Mogadore, but promised that he would evacuate it when the just demands of France were agreed to. That condition we are bound to say has been honourably fulfilled, and, therefore, all the insinuations levelled against M. Guizot for a presumed desire to pander to the wish of the French people for aggrandisement and territorial conquest are disposed of.

We have, heretofore, deprecated the blustering tone of the note of the Prince de Joinville. We did not think it in the best taste that the young sailor was sent to the very sea whereon he had almost courted a collision with a British fleet, but it is only fair to say that he has not exceeded his instructions either in regard to the operations against Tangier or Morocco.

It is too late now to discover objections to the occupation of Algeria by the French; and, assuming for the sake of argument that they are justified in holding that territory, it cannot be denied that they had a right to prevent the hostile incursions of such a daring and unscrupulous foe as Abd-el-Kader. There is no reason to doubt that this Chief was encouraged in his predatory attacks by the Emperor of Morocco. The French, therefore, were warranted in demanding, as they did, that Abd-el-Kader should be restrained.

By a singular fatuity, the Emperor of Morocco refused to do this act of justice; but now, after suffering Tangier to be bombarded, and Mogadore to be destroyed, he consents to a tardy but necessary reparation. He has caused the loss both of blood and treasure, and has not vindicated any principle by his obstinacy. No one who loves strict justice can sympathise with him. Yet such a contest in the Mediterranean naturally excited, if not alarm, at least anxiety, in England; for events of great magnitude are sometimes precipitated by the veriest trifles, and the whole country began to be agitated with the idea of a war with France. Such an event, it was admitted by all, would have been disastrous to both countries. Not that England feared war, or that she would have shrunk from it for the necessary vindication of her honour or her interests; but, as Mr. Canning demonstrated, there is such a dangerous thing as a war of opinion, or countries may be forced into war merely to satisfy the excited feelings of restless politicians, or for some fancied or illusory right.

This country has suffered enough from war to make her desirous of cultivating the blessings of peace, which brings in its train civilization, contentment, and the development of intellectual resources. War we believe to be repugnant to every enlightened man and to every Christian mind, and we rejoice that the danger of it has passed away, without any taint upon the honour of France, or the independence of England.

THE new Royal Exchange is to be opened by her Majesty. The pile raised by that princely merchant Sir Thomas Gresham, was opened by Queen Elizabeth, in all the state which that vigorous minded woman knew so well how to assume. Time and the elements, which, the poet says, make everlasting war on the work of men's hands, swept it away. But the enterprise and wealth of the City of London has but increased, and another Exchange stands upon the site of its predecessor. This, too, is to be opened by a Queen,—but she sways the sceptre of a far wider empire than that which obeyed Elizabeth. And we have no doubt that the splendour of the ceremony at which she will preside, will be worthy of the occasion. On the spot thenceforth to be devoted to the purposes of commerce, will centre half the traffic of the world; to that spot will flow, and from thence will be dispersed, that ceaseless tide of wealth which is the existence of nations. Commerce has a powerful effect on the civilization of the world; and those who wish well to humanity, will rejoice to mark the busy hum of men within the walls of the new Exchange. It is fitting that the building raised to facilitate the operations of our commercial activity, should be opened by the Sovereign, as a recognition of the true source of the greatness of her realm.

SPOTS ON THE SUN'S DISC.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

As you inserted in your paper of Saturday last several drawings of the appearance, situation, and direction of transit, of the spots visible on the Sun's disc, in August last, furnished by a correspondent, of the accuracy of which I think there can be no doubt; and as your object in publishing them may be considered the same as that of your correspondent, viz., inter alia, "To ascertain whether the Sun's power becomes diminished in proportion to the magnitude of the spots transiting his disc." Now, as attention thus publicly called, can only be considered, and results communicated, by means of the same channel, I hope I shall be excused the liberty I have taken in sending you some conclusions derived from numerous observations and drawings, commenced in 1830, and which were submitted to some lecturers on astronomy, and others: I being one of the curious in such matters, who have drawn my own conclusions from my own observations. I am of opinion (and indeed the five last drawings of your correspondent seem to indicate the same) that the spots are not loose and floating on the Sun's disc, but that they are fixed—the large ones having the appearance of immense caverns, surrounded with high and craggy sides (particularly on the east side, as viewed righted), varying in their appearance before, at, and after opposition, somewhat similar to the appearance of the Moon; or rather, as the Sun turns on his axis, or the Earth proceeds in her orbit, and turns on her axis; which, as the Sun's atmosphere becomes more rarefied, or perhaps the gaseous matter with which the Sun appears to be surrounded, they appear plainer. I am led to the conclusion that they are fixed, from their retaining the same angle of position during their transit, which could not be the case, if they were loose and floating. They may, perhaps, be compared to posts fixed in water that ebbs and flows: as they sometimes appear in dull or cloudy weather. I have seen, during observation, immense ebullitions, which appeared to completely cover and overflow the whole crater, and which were slightly tinged with yellow in the centre, and varying to a deep orange at the edge: this would appear, in the largest crater, or spot, for two or three seconds, and then sink down, leaving, in appearance, a deep and black cavern to the view—sometimes much larger, in appearance, than the whole earth. Some spots appeared in clusters, and of a fainter colour. Sometimes, before opposition, they appeared divided by high and craggy ridges; and, when in opposition, appeared all in one. I have no doubt, that if a cluster of spots appeared in the situation of those shown in your paper, as having appeared on the 20th of August, their progress and appearance might be drawn for several days in advance, or during the time of their transit. I requested my friends to observe that no rain fell (no wet set in) before the spots had advanced to the centre, or opposition, or the Sun and Earth had attained the position to make them appear so, or for a day or two after; then, in general, two or three cloudy days before rain, and frequently wind. I observed the weather to be hotter (as I think the statement of your correspondent's thermometer will also show) at the time of the opposition, and a day or two before, than it was after. I always found it hotter when the spots bore directly upon the Earth. I am afraid I shall trespass on your valuable time; but my only intention, in making these observations, is to direct your readers' and correspondent's attention to the following points, as from his present observations many useful results may be expected:

1st. If the appearance of the spots have any influence on the weather—and what?

2nd. Whether, allowing for the motion of the Sun on its axis, and the progress of the Earth in its orbit, any periodical return can be expected?

AMICUS.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A communication reached Windsor this morning from Blair Athol Castle, announcing that her Majesty may be expected to return to Windsor on Saturday, the 28th, or Monday, the 30th instant. It is considered more than probable, however, that the Queen and the Prince Consort will visit the infant royal family at the Pavilion at Brighton, previously to returning to Windsor. Mr. Brown, surgeon to the royal household, left Windsor this morning for Brighton, to pay a professional visit to the infant royal family at the Pavilion, agreeably to the command of the Queen, previously to the Court leaving Windsor for Scotland. The Earl of Mornington (the brother of the Duke of Wellington) and a large party arrived at the Castle this morning, and went over the whole of the private apartments by a special order from the Earl Delawarr, the Lord Chamberlain. His lordship and friends afterwards inspected the state apartments, and returned to town in the afternoon. In consequence of the extensive preparations to be made for the reception of the King of the French, it is not expected that the state apartments will be open to the public after Wednesday next. The Prince Consort's harriers have been hunted on several days during the past week, by Major-General Wemyss, in the neighbourhood of Windsor, in order to get this excellent pack in good hunting condition by the time his Royal Highness returns to the Castle.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent left Witley Court, Worcestershire, on Wednesday morning, to honour Earl Howe with a visit at his seat, Gopsall Hall, Leicestershire.

The Royal Children.—The Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice are at Brighton, under the care of the Dowager Lady Lyttelton. The Prince and his sister were taken to the Pier on Tuesday, where they amused themselves for some time by running about.

Louis Philippe's Visit to England.—Official despatches have been received by our Government, announcing the positive intention of Louis Philippe to land at Portsmouth in the second week of October; the precise day and hour, however, named in the despatch is only known to the Commander-in-Chief and the Lords of the Admiralty. The despatches are to the effect, we believe, that his Majesty wishes accommodation provided for the fleet which will accompany him to this country. His Majesty is to be accompanied by his two younger sons, and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Marine. The Gomer, in which his Majesty is to proceed to England, is the largest war steamer of the French navy. She is of 450 horse-power, and carries 20 guns. The names of the vessels which are to form part of the royal escort, under the command of Vice-Admiral La Susse, are not yet known, but it is believed that the flotilla will only consist of steamers.

The Duke of Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington is at present staying at Walmer Castle. The Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, accompanied by Miss Hope Vere, are expected to arrive there from Germany during the present week.

Approaching Marriage in High Life.—We understand that Lady Augusta Somerset, eldest daughter of the Duke of Beaufort, is about to give her hand to his Excellency Baron Nieumann, Minister Plenipotentiary from the Court of Austria.

Count Nesselrode has left Brighton for Buckhurst Park, Sussex, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Delawarr. The health of the count has greatly improved by a seaside residence.

Present to the Emperor of Russia from her Majesty.—A letter from Elsineur states that, previously to the sailing of the Russian fleet from that place, the Admiral received for the Emperor of Russia, a present from the Queen of England, consisting of the perfect model of a ship in metal, contained in a case.

Lord Brougham.—Lord Brougham arrived at Brougham Hall on Sunday last from London, and on Thursday last Mr. Baron Parke and the Hon. Charles Howard and lady, who had been on a short visit to Henry Howard, Esq., of Greystoke Castle, joined Lord Brougham, at Brougham Hall, for a few days.

Indisposition of Miss Peel.—We are glad to say it will be quite unnecessary to give any further statements relative to the illness of this young lady, as we learn by the last accounts from Drayton Manor, that happily the medical attendants were assured all danger had ceased, and that there was every prospect that their patient would gradually regain her health, so as to render in a short time their professional visits unnecessary.

Sir Robert and Lady Peel returned to their residence in Whitehall-gardens on Wednesday evening, from Drayton Manor.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Court of Aldermen.—A Court of Aldermen was held on Tuesday, at which the new Chamberlain of the City, Mr. Alderman Brown, was sworn into office. A letter was afterwards read from Mr. Brown, in which he tendered his resignation of the gown of Billingsgate ward. The sum of £100 was voted to John and Daniel Forrester, the City officers, for their exertions in the detection and apprehension of offenders. Alderman Copeland complained of an attack upon the Court of Aldermen by Mr. D. W. Harvey.—Alderman Humphery made an explanation upon the subject. He said that Mr. Harvey felt disappointed. He held a situation which yielded no more than £800 a year, and he had been anxious to get another, which was worth £2500 a year. It was, however, out of the question that he could obtain such a place without the aid of the Court of Alderman and he felt annoyed and disappointed at finding no support in that quarter.—Sir Peter Lauriesaid—As for Mr. Harvey, poor fellow! he fancied that his eloquence would have an effect, upon the livery, and, to his unutterable agony, he found that they would not be humbugged, and that he could not even prevail upon them to grant him a little empty applause. Both he and his friend Mr. Heppel had dropped down into their original insignificance, and were likely to remain in that condition undisturbed Portsoken Ward.—The Aldermanic Gown.—The precept for the election of an alderman to represent the ward of Portsoken in the Court of Aldermen has been issued by the Lord Mayor, who has appointed Wednesday, the 25th inst., as the day of nomination.

Alderman Gibbs and the Parish of St. Stephen, Walbrook.—Some excitement has been caused in the City by an account, which appeared in a morning paper of Thursday, purporting to be a report of some proceedings at a Vestry Meeting of the above parish; at which, it was alleged, a letter was read from Mr. Ald. Gibbs, in which he complains of the system of persecution carried on against him in reference to the parish accounts, and stating that he should in consequence withdraw from any further connection with the parish. The whole report turns out to be untrue. The churchwardens of the parish assert that no such meeting was held, and consequently the alleged letter is a fabrication. A meeting of the Vestry did, however, take place on Thursday, when Mr. Rock, one of the churchwardens, in answer to the question, said that with respect to the approaching contest for the Mayoralty, he would not oppose Alderman Gibbs if he would verify his accounts to the parishioners. If the Alderman would adopt that course, he (Mr. Rock), far from being Mr. Alderman Gibbs's opponent, would be his advocate at the election.

The Registrations.—The Registrations for the City and some of the metropolitan boroughs have commenced, but no decision has yet been given involving any point of importance. For the City, the whole number of claims and objections to be inquired into at the present registration amounts to 2406. The revision for the Tower Hamlets is concluded. There were no objections in the 19 parishes forming the borough, and the claims only amounted to 174, of which 101 were allowed, and 73 disallowed. A judgment was given, the effect of which is, that occupiers of houses where the landlord pays the taxes, are only required to claim once to be put on the rate-book as payers of the rate, instead, as the overseers contend, of sending in a fresh claim every quarter.

The Opening of the Royal Exchange.—A Court of Common Council was held on Thursday, at which it was agreed to appoint a committee to consider of the best mode of testifying in what manner the Corporation may show their respect and attachment to her Majesty on the occasion of her visit and that of her royal consort, to open the Royal Exchange in October. In answer to a question, the Lord Mayor said he had waited on Sir J. Graham to know where it would be most agreeable for her Majesty to receive the entertainment of her citizens, and he was told in answer, the Royal Exchange. Nothing else had been communicated to him on the subject.

The Nelson Testimonial.—The public were gratified, on Tuesday, by a view of the Nelson Testimonial, unencumbered by the wooden hoarding that has so long obscured the base and lower portion of the pedestal from observation, and which, when removed, gave this work the appearance of completion. In furtherance of the determination of the Government to complete the monument, a model of the steps and platform round the base had been prepared, and was visited that morning by the Earl of Lincoln, Chief Commissioner of her Majesty's Woods and Forests, the architect, Mr. W. Railton, and other gentlemen connected with the Land Revenues Department.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The number of deaths within the bills of mortality in the week ending on Saturday last, presents a very favourable contrast with the average either of the last five seasons or of the last five years, the numbers being respectively 843, 900, and 946. Still, however, the number of deaths from epidemic diseases is considerably greater than the average, there having died last week of the diseases comprised under this class no less than 236 persons, the average at this season not being higher than 191. In diseases of the brain, of the lungs, and of the stomach, there is a perceptible decrease; but the ratio of mortality from small pox is still greater than ordinary, the deaths last week being 37, while the average mortality is not higher than 11. In both hooping-cough and typhus there is also a considerable increase.

Fire at Bermondsey.—A fire broke out on Monday at noon upon the spacious premises of Mr. Salmons, hearthrug, mop, and woollen-tilting manufacturer, Bermondsey. It commenced in the cellars, the receptacles for finished and partly finished goods, and owing to the inflammable nature of the stock, in less than a quarter of an hour, the entire stores, with their contents, presented one broad sheet of flame. Considerable damage was done before the flames could be subdued.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

This Court resumed its sittings on Monday. We subjoin a report of all the cases tried which possess any interest.

Embezzlement by a Collector.—On Monday, William Burt was tried in the New Court, before Mr. Commissioner Bullock, on a charge of embezzling several sums of money, which he received as collector of the poor-rate for the parishes of St. John and St. Margaret, Westminster. Messrs. Clarkson and Bodkin conducted the prosecution; and Messrs. Ballantine and Huddlestone defended the prisoner. It appeared that some suspicion was excited in consequence of the prisoner not making his payments regularly at the Bank, and upon an inquiry being instituted, it was found that he had received £500 for which he was unable to account. On learning that further steps were about to be taken in the matter, the prisoner absconded, and was retaken at Gravesend a few days after. On being taken before the magistrate he admitted the crime with which he was charged. The prisoner's counsel admitted the fact of the prisoner having taken the money, but contended that the offence did not amount to embezzlement. The Court having overruled the objection, several witnesses were called, who gave the prisoner an excellent character up to the present time. The Jury returned a verdict of "Guilty," accompanied by a recommendation to mercy.

George Hay (aged twenty-one), clerk to Mr. John Melville, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with embezzling and stealing from his master sums amounting to £73 3s., £36 9s. 3d., £23 2s. 9d., and other monies. The Court sentenced the prisoner (who is said to be respectably connected) to ten years' transportation.

Burglary.—Solomon Parker, aged 19, and Joshua Jacobs, 25, were indicted for a burglary in the dwelling-house of Abraham Belasco. From the evidence it appeared that the prosecutor, who keeps a public-house in Petticoat-lane, Aldgate, had some suspicion of the prisoner Jacobs, who had formerly been in his service. He accordingly set his potboy to watch, and the two prisoners were taken in the cellar. Verdict, Guilty. Sentence, Parker nine months' imprisonment with hard labour, and Jacobs twelve months.

The Late Shooting Case in Holborn.—On Wednesday, when the learned judges (Mr. Justice Wightman and Mr. Justice Cresswell) took their seats on the bench, by the desire of Mr. Clarkson, the Hon. William Rose Touchet, charged with shooting Mr. Thomas Smith, in Holborn, was placed at the bar. Before the indictment was read, the learned counsel said he had to apply to their lordships for a postponement of the trial of the young gentleman at the bar until next session. The ground on which he made this application to the Court was, that the prisoner was not at present prepared to enter upon his defence. He had been attended since his committal by Dr. Warburton and another physician, in order to ascertain the state of his mind, but, unfortunately, Dr. Warburton having been seized by a violent attack of gout, sufficient time had not elapsed to enable the medical gentleman to make a satisfactory report. And it was also sworn on affidavits by the prisoner's solicitor, that he could not go with safety to trial without the evidence of Dr. Warburton, and that it was impossible for that gentleman to attend during the present sessions. Mr. Charnock, counsel for the prosecution, said he had not seen the affidavits, but he had no doubt they were correct; therefore he should not offer any opposition to the trial being postponed until next session.—Mr. Justice Wightman, after consulting with Mr. Justice Cresswell, ordered the trial to be postponed until next session. The prisoner, who is a young man of a very mild and prepossessing appearance (aged twenty-one), was then removed from the dock. He seemed quite indifferent to what was passing. The charge against the prisoner in the calendar, is as follows:—"William Rose Touchet (aged twenty-one), gentleman, indicted for feloniously, with a loaded pistol, shooting at Thomas Smith, with intent to murder him." Mr. Smith, the prosecutor, was in court. He appears very weak from the effects of his late wound.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The fêtes at Dieppe, in commemoration of the erection of the statue to Admiral Duquesne, are to commence on Sunday, (to-morrow) and great preparations are going on, but Louis Philippe will not be present.

A Liverpool paper states that several vessels have left that port for the western coast of Africa, with sealed instructions, to be opened in a certain latitude, and each carrying an experienced practical chemist, furnished with tests for ascertaining the real qualities and composition of ores and salts. The destination of these vessels—probably the pioneers of a new traffic—is understood to lie between the 20th and 30 degree of latitude on the western African coast, and their object the discovery of certain suspected veins of copper, lead, iron, or gold, stated to exist about forty miles from the sea coast, and in a rich and fertile country.

A letter from Breslau of the 1st inst., states that the weavers, who had lately caused the disturbances at Peterswaldau, have been condemned, to the number of eighty, by the Criminal Court. They were divided into two categories, the one of rebels, the other of rioters. The highest punishment awarded was nine and eight years of imprisonment with hard labour, to which two of the ringleaders were sentenced. Tranquillity is now perfectly restored.

The State Gazette of Carlsruhe contains the treaty concluded on June 27, between France and the Grand Duchy of Baden, for the reciprocal extradition of criminals for murder, incendiarism, forgery, coining, fraudulent bankruptcy, and perjury. Political offences form an express exception.

The King of Prussia has announced his intention of giving every five years a prize, consisting of a medal, with a purse of 1000 gold crowns, for the best work on the History of Germany, in the German language.

Vincent Cammacini, the most celebrated of the Italian painters of the present day, died a few weeks ago at Rome, in the 70th year of his age.

A fire took place at Jassy on the 4th ult. (says a Smyrna journal), which destroyed 300 houses. About the same time a fire took place at Housch, also in Moldavia, which consumed 200 houses, and destroyed 100 lives.

A letter from Leipsic of the 11th inst. announces that the town of Plauen had been on fire for two days, and was still burning. The church, the great pharmacy, and 160 houses were already destroyed; but the town library was fortunately saved.

A melancholy event occurred at Rome on the 28th ult.; two ecclesiastics, students of the Irish Franciscan College in that city, were unhappily drowned whilst bathing in the Tiber. One of the deceased, the Rev. E. F. Martin, was in priest's orders. His companion, the Rev. Richard Ambrose Kavanagh, was ordained sub-deacon on the previous Sunday.

There is a great increase this year in the number of passengers between Dover and Ostend. In the month of August there were 1400 more than in August, 1843. This increase is owing to the new line of steamers between the two ports.

The number of letters issued on Monday morning was unprecedented for one delivery; the number issued was upwards of 285,000, and the postmen were not despatched till nearly 10 o'clock.

On Thursday week a special railway train, (in four divisions) went from Leeds to Hull. It was decidedly the most monstrous of all monster trains ever recorded. The number of engines employed were 10, the carriages 250, and the passengers conveyed amounted to the enormous number of 7800! About 6000 were from Leeds alone.

Captain Grover has started for St. Petersburg on a mission to obtain the influence of the Emperor Nicholas, in procuring the release of Dr. Wolff from Bokhara.

On Tuesday an immense quantity of the new coin, half farthings, was issued from the Mint.

In consequence of the failure of the harvest in Poland, from the inundations of the Vistula, the Emperor Nicholas has interdicted the exportation of corn from that country.

The culture of rice has just been tried with full success at Camargue, near Arles (France). The vegetation of the crop is so fine, that no doubt remains of the soil, Camargue being perfectly well adapted to it.

Jenkin Morgan, who, with Frost, Williams and Jones, was sentenced to be hanged at the Monmouth Special Commission, in 1840, for the Newport riots in 1839, but whose sentence was subsequently commuted to imprisonment in the Millbank Penitentiary, has been lately released. When he was arrested he was the proprietor of three houses, had a well stocked farm, and was otherwise most comfortably situated. Upon leaving the prison he found himself and his family houseless, and is now endeavouring to raise a subscription to enable him to support his wife and children.

The Universal German Gazette states that gambling on the stock exchange at Berlin had caused so many bankruptcies that the bank has ceased discounting bills entirely, so that the rate of discount has risen to 10 per cent.

A divorce has been decreed between Prince Gustavus Vasa and the Princess Louisa Amelia Stephania of Baden, and the judgment has been confirmed by the Grand Duke. Thus the parties are relieved from the bonds of matrimony, and each may contract a new alliance. They were married on the 9th of November, 1830.

Captain Bullock has just completed the replacement of his safety beacon on the Goodwin Sands, which was run down by a careless Dutchman some weeks ago. It is affixed upon the same principle as at first, with an improvement in its base. This is now composed of iron instead of wood; and it consequently penetrates further into the sand than the former.

Accounts from Trieste state that the reception the Emperor and Empress of Austria met with on their arrival in that city on the 5th instant was most enthusiastic. In the course of the day the civic and military authorities were presented to their Imperial Majesties, and in the evening the entire Court visited the Teatro Grande, which was brilliantly decorated and illuminated for the occasion. The performance consisted of "Nabucco" by Verdi.

Letters from Rome represent the state of the public mind in the Roman States as very unsettled.

Captain Aufray, of the Spahis, has died at Lalla-Maghrin of the wounds which he received at the battle of Isly.

The Austrian Government have given permission to a company to establish a central railroad in Hungary. The concession is made for eighty years. Several branch lines have also been authorised. The works will be executed simultaneously between Pesth and Vienna, and Pesth and Debreczen.

The grand line of railroad between Berlin and Kœnisburgh is decided upon, and is to run by Kustrem, Landsberg, Driesen, and the other towns towards the Vistula. From Driesen, it is said, there are to be two branches, one to Posen and to Stargardt, in Pomerania, in order to unite these two towns with Stettin.

The Court of Proprietors of the East India House had a meeting on Wednesday, at which they unanimously agreed to a former resolution of the Court of Directors, by which an annuity of £1000 had been settled upon Major Gen. Sir W. Nott, G.C.B. Well-deserved eulogiums were paid to the military services of this distinguished officer.

The Augusta.—The Slave Trade.—The case of Mr. Jennings has been postponed till the next session of the Central Criminal Court, the judges entertaining doubts upon some of the legal points submitted in his favour.

Attack upon Mr. Belaney.—Last Monday evening a mob assembled at North Sunderland, and surrounded Belaney's house, carrying an effigy with which they had previously paraded the streets. That person, exasperated at such insulting behaviour, fired a pistol at them, when they immediately proceeded to demolish doors and windows, which was effectually accomplished in a few minutes. After this they entered into the house and destroyed every thing that came in their way. During the latter part of the riot, Belaney contrived to escape. Had he not escaped, it is more than likely that his life would have been forfeited.

POSTSCRIPT.

LATEST PARTICULARS RESPECTING HER MAJESTY.

Blair Athol, Wednesday.

A heavy shower of rain came on suddenly at one o'clock yesterday, and continued to fall in torrents for upwards of two hours. This necessarily compelled her Majesty to defer her drive until a late hour in the afternoon, and Prince Albert was also obliged to retreat from the moors above Bruar, where his Royal Highness was enjoying excellent sport. The rain ceased to fall at half-past three. As soon as the sun made his appearance the carriages were ordered to convey her Majesty to the Falls of Tummell. The Royal party left the castle in two carriages and four, preceded by outriders.

As on the previous occasion when visiting the Pass, her Majesty addressed several questions to an old Highlander, named William Macdonald, who haunts this neighbourhood. The old man is exceedingly proud at having been selected by her Majesty to point out the beauties of his native land, and dilates with loquacious enthusiasm on being thus honoured by his Sovereign.

The postilions were then ordered to drive along the high road to Perth, and, on arriving at the bridle road which leads to the Falls of the Tummel, her Majesty alighted, and proceeded on foot to view the waterfall. Her Majesty walked at a rapid pace along this road, which is nearly a mile in length, and was not, as may be supposed, in a fit state for ladies, on account of the heavy rains which had lately fallen. Her Majesty, however, heeded neither the mud nor the loose gravel, but walked, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, Lord Glenlyon acting as cicerone. Lady C. Cocks, Lady Canning, and the other members of the royal suite were also of the party. On arriving at the confluence of the two rivers, where the Tummel first falls over the rocks into the Garry, her Majesty expatiated in enthusiastic language on this meeting of the waters.

After having passed three quarters of an hour in viewing the beauties of this spot, and in the immediate neighbourhood, her Majesty walked back to the carriages and returned to the castle.

Her Majesty rose early this morning, and took her usual morning walk in the grounds, accompanied by the Prince and the Princess Royal. At eleven o'clock, her Majesty and the Prince, attended by two servants with led ponies, left the castle on foot, and, unattended by any of their suite, forded the river Garry, and proceeded to climb the precipitous hill which overhangs the back of the castle. Her Majesty succeeded in attaining the summit of the rocky mountain, a work of much labour and some peril.

Her Majesty and the Prince, in their descent, mounted their ponies at the foot of the hill, and cantered back to the castle at twelve o'clock.

Her Majesty, we understand, is generally up, and sometimes walking in the grounds, as early as seven o'clock in the morning; she breakfasts between eight and nine, lunches at two, takes a carriage drive between three and four, and dines at eight. The intervals are spent in making short excursions, accompanied by some of her suite, to various points of interest within the policies. The Prince generally spends the earlier part of the day in shooting, accompanied by Lord Glenlyon, and several hardy Highlanders to carry the game.

The Princess Royal is taken out every day for walking and riding exercise. Her Royal Highness is a quick, lively, entertaining child, and it is said her remarks upon the persons and things passing under her notice are very amusing. It is stated that her Royal Highness can already repeat the names of all the hills in the neighbourhood. She has a meet companion in the young heir of Glenlyon, an interesting boy of her own age.

It seems to be certain that her Majesty will make an excursion to Loch Tummel and Loch Rannoch; but it is also talked of that she will visit Dunkeld, though that is not likely, at least till on her way back. It is, we understand, confidently expected at Dunkeld, but little is said about it at the castle. The rumour of a visit to Taymouth is also revived.

Her Majesty continues her habits of early rising. At seven o'clock Peter Mackay, her piper, sounds the pibroch under the windows of the castle, when her Majesty rises, and all are expected to follow her example. Her Majesty has also given instructions that a bouquet of fresh-pulled heather shall be in her bedroom every morning, together with a bottle of pure water from a spring in Glen Tilt, famed for its crystal purity.

Her Majesty appears to have a great taste for things peculiarly Scottish. At Dunkeld, Moulinearn, and Blair, she tasted, and not only so, but, as the report goes, highly relished, the Athol brose which was proffered her; and oaten cake is an established and especial favourite. "Scotch broth," as Englishmen term it, is also in daily requisition at the royal table. It is even whispered that her Majesty is not altogether unacquainted with the mysteries of Scotch "haggis."

The Princess Royal, young though she be, is not slow in these things to imitate her royal mother. Not a child in all broad Scotland likes better to lunch on milk and oaten cake, or dine on broth. Meeting the young son of Lord Glenlyon, the other day, in the castle avenue, she told him how much she liked his tartan dress, and how it was the same as was worn by the Prince of Wales.

Perhaps the most extraordinary circumstance connected with her Majesty's visit to this quarter is the entire absence of anything like popular excitement, or even curiosity. The number of strangers is extremely few, so few indeed, that when her Majesty drives out in the afternoon there are generally not more than 20 people who assemble on the road to see and salute her.

Sir Robert Peel, accompanied by two of his sons, left Whitehall Gardens on Friday for Brighton. We are happy to state that Miss Peel is daily improving in health and strength.

The Election for Lord Mayor.—Various reports are in circulation respecting the election of Chief Magistrate, but we forbear to allude to them. Mr. Alderman Thomas Wood being the senior of the aldermen that have not passed the chair, is, as a matter of course, next in rotation, and it is said every exertion will be used to insure his return. Alderman Gibbs stands next in rotation. After Alderman Gibbs stands Alderman John Johnson, of Dowgate ward.

It is currently reported in the city that Alderman Sir John Pirie has received an intimation that he will be appointed a Commissioner of Excise. Of course an immediate resignation of his gown will be the consequence; and another vacancy in the aldermanic body will take place.

The Dinner to O'Connell and his Late Fellow-Prisoners.—A letter from Dublin, dated on Thursday evening, gives a few particulars of the dinner given in congratulation of O'Connell. About 700 persons had assembled at the Music-hall, at half-past five o'clock. Mr. W. S. O'Brien was to preside. A great many letters of apology for non-attendance had been received. Among others, from Lord Stourton, Lord Camoys, Sir R. Musgrave, Mr. V. Stuart, M.P., Mr. Thomas Duncombe, M.P., Sir V. Blake, M.P., Mr. S. Crawford, M.P., The O'Conor Don, Mr. Redington, M.P., &c., &c. All the Repealers of the Corporation of Dublin were present.

Mr. Balls, the comedian, died on Wednesday night, at Dublin, of delirium tremens. He had just terminated an engagement at the Abbey-street Theatre.

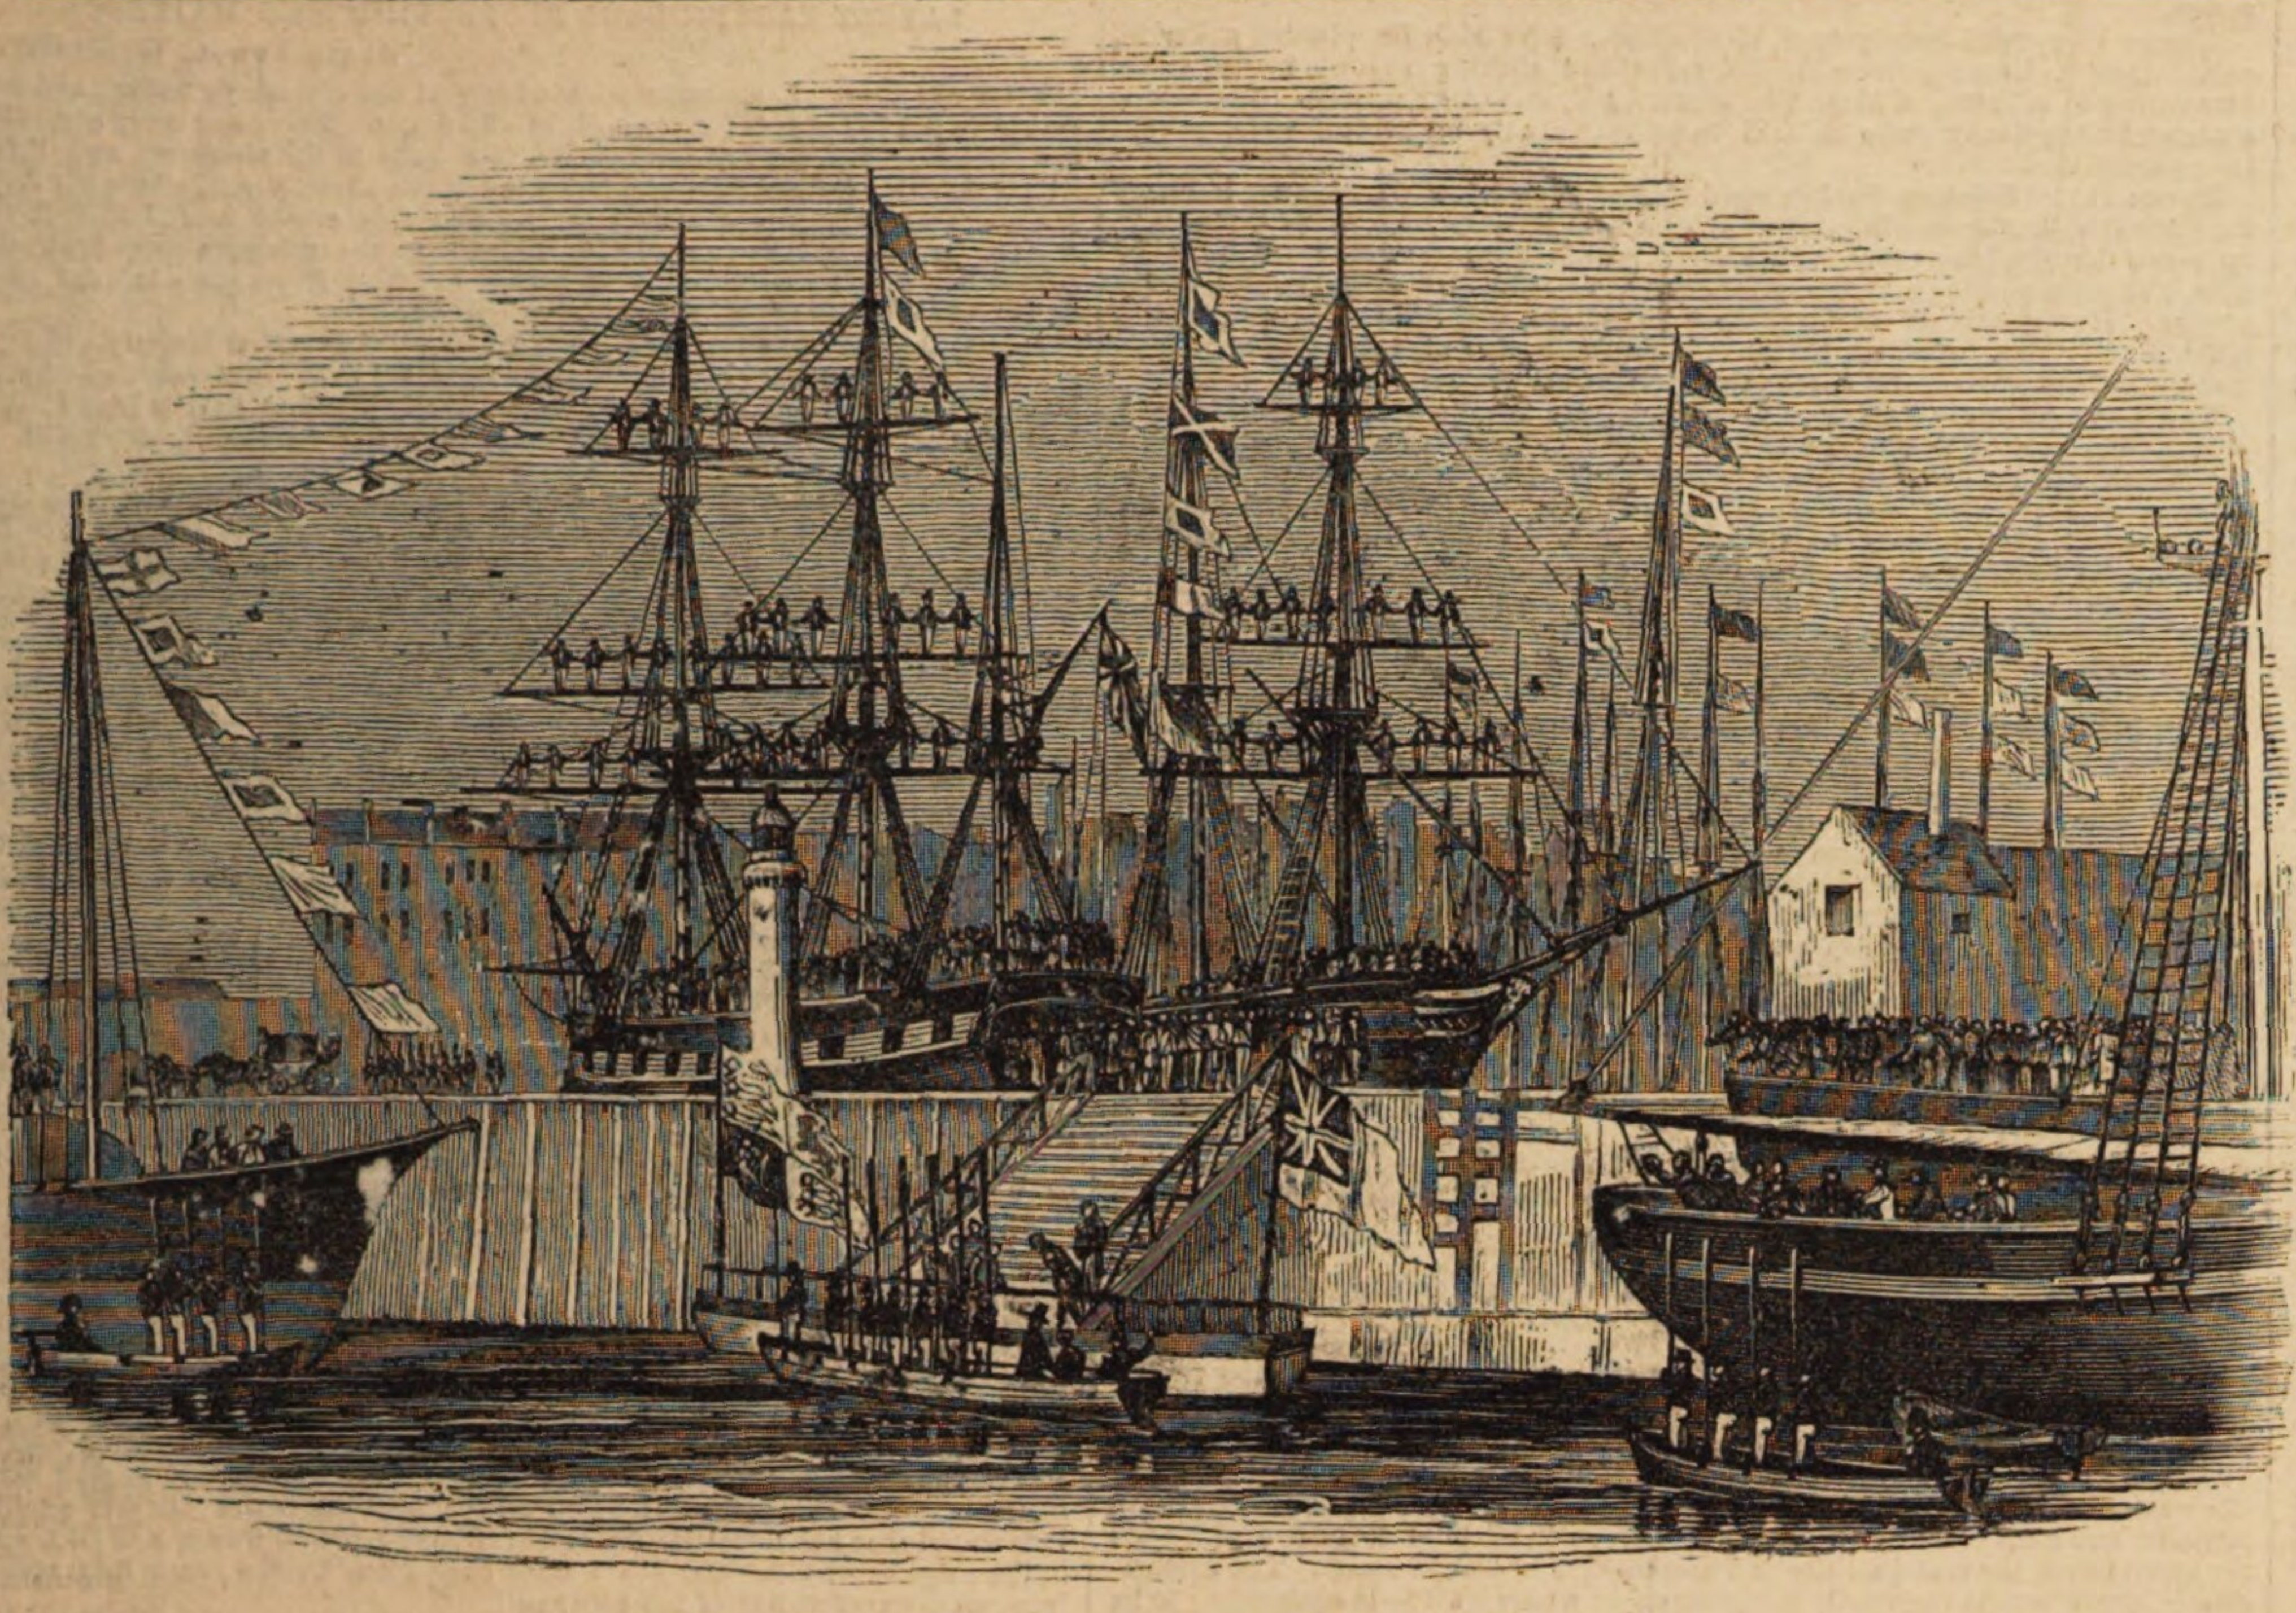
Commision of Lunacy.—A commision of lunacy was opened on Thursday at the Gray's Inn Coffee-house, to inquire into the state of mind of Miss Mary Ann Roberts, described of Brook House Upper Clapton. The evidence proved that the unfortunate object of the present inquiry was the daughter of a clergyman, who died some years since. In July, 1843, she removed to the house of Mr. Ayres, in the Edgeware-road, and whilst here she behaved in a most extraordinary manner. The first delusion she laboured under was, that she was to be married by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Rev. Mr. Machindale, who was coming to fetch her in a carriage and four. She decorated the tables with everything in season, and would use the most endearing expressions to her supposed husband, and attempt to kiss him. On the 13th of July her conduct was most extraordinary. She said that she had had a vision; that she had seen her mother in hell, but that her father was her guardian angel, and she then went down stairs with her hair dishevelled, and said she was to go to hell at four o'clock. Other delusions of a similar character were deposed to, after which the jury found "That Miss Mary Ann Roberts was of unsound mind, and had been so from the 13th of July, 1843."

Alleged Incendiarism.—Yesterday (Friday) a man named Mackey, habited in the dress of an ostler, was brought before Mr. Jardine, at Bow-street Police Court, charged with having attempted to burn down a number of outbuildings and stables belonging to Mr. George Wood, situate in Drury-lane, by setting fire to a quantity of hay therein. The prisoner said in his defence that he went to work at six o'clock in the morning, and having fed the horses, went out to have some coffee at a neighbouring coffee-shop. When he returned he observed smoke through the roof, and immediately gave an alarm to the head ostler. He had had a candle stuck in the wall to light him in getting the hay, but he had put it out when he went to get his coffee. Mr. Jardine remanded him, and urged the police to make every inquiry into the case.

FOREIGN.

Further News from Tahiti.—Our latest accounts from Paris bring intelligence from Tahiti, of a painful character. The Moniteur gives the following official statement:—"The French Government has received the following intelligence from Tahiti, of the date of April 24:—'After having vainly endeavoured to bring back to their obedience the rebels who made the attack at Taravan, Governor Bruat went out to meet them at Mahabana, where they had made themselves entrenchments, defended by 3,000 men and three pieces of cannon. On the 17th, Governor Bruat landed with 441 men of all arms. The redoubts were taken with the bayonet, the enemy having 102 men killed, their colours taken from them, and their cannon spiked. The next day we destroyed their works, and carried away their arms and ammunition. On our side we have to lament the loss of two officers: M. Nansouty, enseigne de vaisseau, and M. Seignette of the artillery. We had besides 52 men wounded.'" The news had created great excitement in Paris, and we are sorry to find that some of the journals make it the occasion for again sowing angry feelings between England and France. A private letter from Tahiti, of the same date as the above, gives a dark complexion to the conduct of the French. The letter says, "The French at Tahiti have been cruelly murdering the natives by broadsides of canister and grape from their two heavy frigates! The unhappy Queen had been upwards of twelve weeks living with her family on board of our small ketch of war Basilisk, and during that long period had not dared to put her foot out of the vessel. The French had carried their unwarrantable measure of confiscation of the Queen's property to so great an extremity, that they had even seized upon the little presents of poultry, and fish, and fruit, which her sincerely attached subjects had from time to time provided for her. These trifles the French had appropriated to their own personal uses!"

Brazil.—It is stated that letters have been received at Liverpool from Bahia, announcing that a commercial treaty between this country and the Brazils had been signed at Rio de Janeiro. The packet now expected thence was waiting to bring the official document.



HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT DISEMBARKING AT DUNDEE.

THE QUEEN'S SECOND VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

We resume our illustrations of the Royal sojourn in Scotland, from our journa of last week. The details of the several scenes may be relied on, as they have been sketched by our artist on the several sites, and during the event thus picturesquely recorded.

In our late edition of last week only appeared the substance of the following particulars of the ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY AT DUNDEE.

The Royal squadron was signaled for Broughty Ferry, at half-past three o'clock, A.M., on Wednesday. The authorities of Dundee, warned by the fate of the Edinburgh magistrates, had made every preparation in case of such an event. As soon as the arrival was known, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired from Broughty Ferry, tar-barrels were lit, and rockets thrown up.

The Queen, however, did not disembark till the morning was more advanced.

At half-past eight, her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Princess Royal (in her nurse's arms), and her suite, left the Royal yacht, and entered the state barge, which was steered by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence.

At a quarter to nine o'clock, her Majesty landed at the quay, and was there received by the authorities. No salute was fired, but this had been determined on for sufficient reasons.

The Royal party included the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Jersey, and their suites. The Black Eagle, the Stromboli, and the Volcano steamers accompanied the Royal yacht.

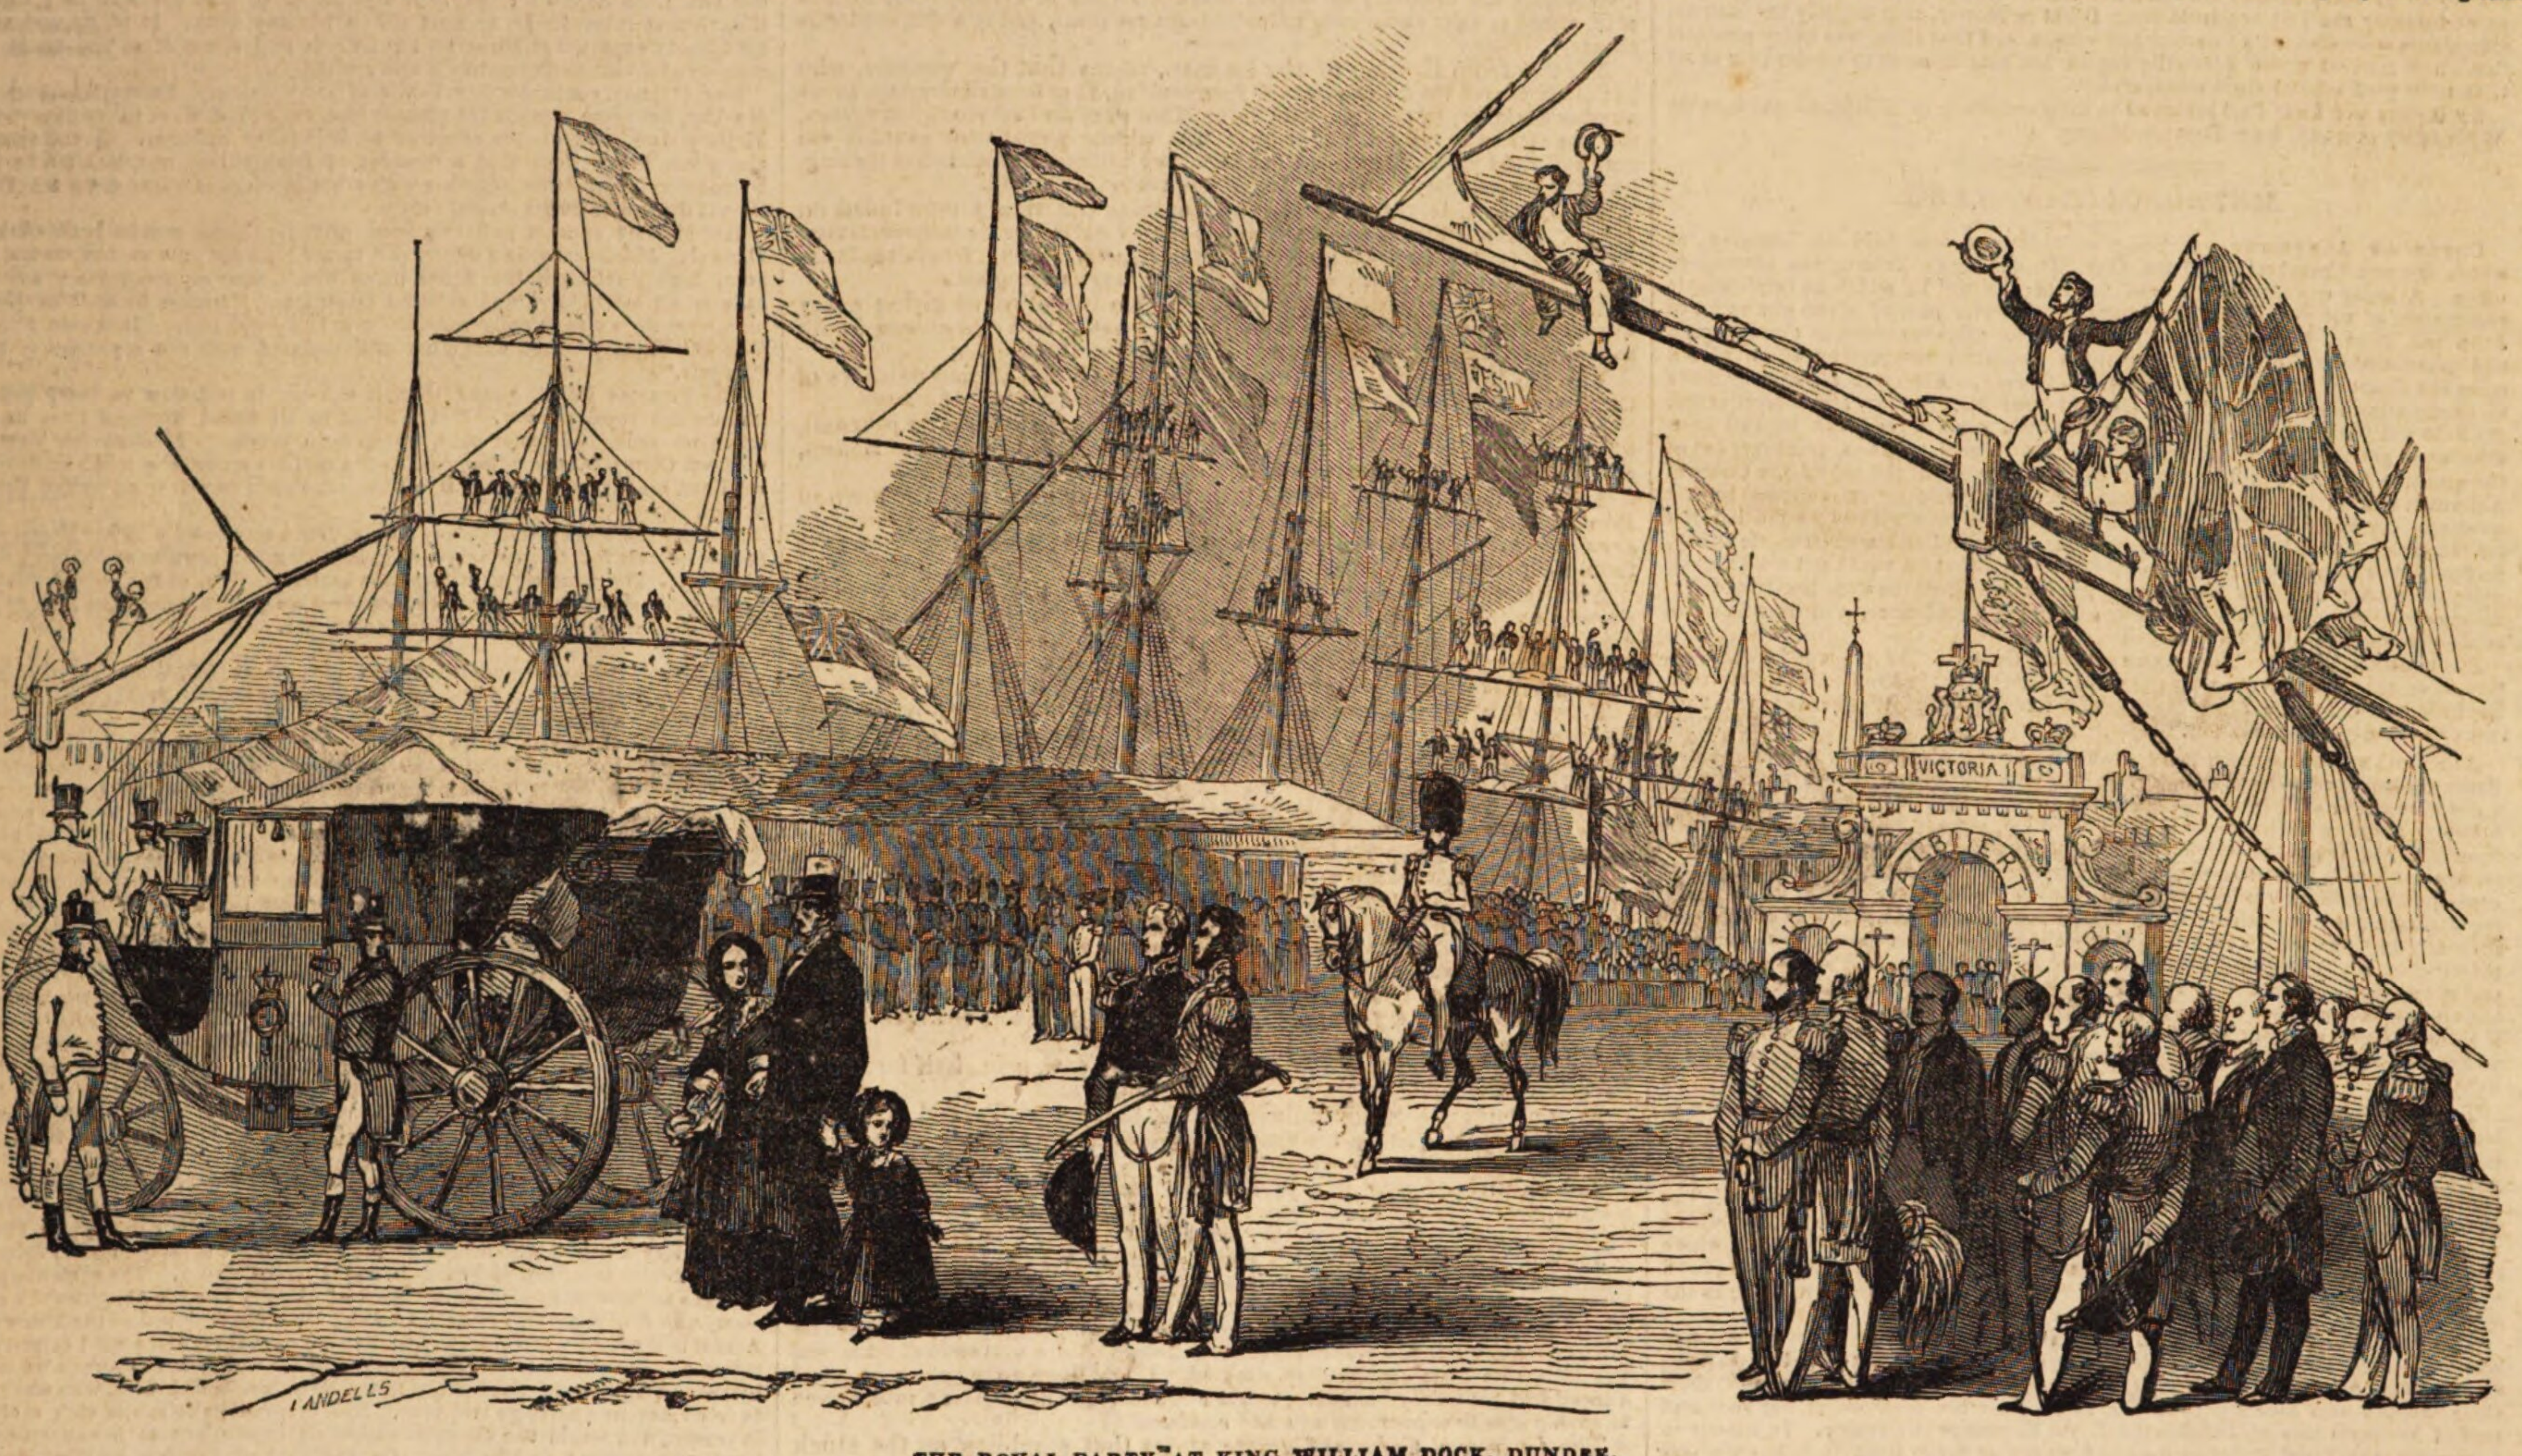
When her Majesty stepped ashore, the yards were manned, and the scene was animated by the cheering of the tars. Nor were the spectators behindhand. They cheered most loyally. In a few minutes her Majesty had reached her carriage, and the Royal party drove off through the town amidst the vociferous cheers of the people.

The Royal carriages were accompanied by a town procession, and by the authorities, and proceeded with the Queen to Dudhope church, where they took leave of her Majesty, who proceeded at a rapid rate on to Blair Athol. One of our engravings shows this interesting scene.

A guard of honour of the 60th Regiment was in readiness to receive her Majesty on landing, and parties of the Scots Greys were stationed at intervals of six miles on the road to Blair Athol, which is fifty miles from Dundee, in order to escort her Majesty as she passed along. A guard of 200 Highlanders, who have been under drill for some time by Lord Glenlyon, will attend her Majesty at Blair Athol.

While her Majesty, the Prince and Princess, were ascending the steps, the feeling of royalty seemed almost lost in the touching domestic appearance the party presented. Her Majesty was received by the Provost, Mr. Duncan, the member for Dundee, and authorities, on the quay, to whom she graciously bowed and smiled, and also to the crowds around, from whom tremendous acclamations resounded on all sides, mingled with the roaring of the saluting guns and the ringing of the town bells.

Two of the illustrations represent these very animated scenes of the disembarkation.



THE ROYAL PARTY AT KING WILLIAM DOCK, DUNDEE.

The Royal party was followed by the Earls of Aberdeen and Liverpool; and to the former of these noble lords the addresses to her Majesty, and the address and burgess tickets for Prince Albert, were given in charge by the magistrates. They were followed by the rest of the royal suite. At the end of the covered way, her Majesty and Prince Albert entered the first carriage; the Princess Royal, with the Ladies in Waiting, in the second; Lords Aberdeen and Liverpool, and the suite following in two other carriages. They then passed on under the Triumphal Arch, escorted by the Scots Greys, and the procession followed in the pre-arranged order, and by the same route.

Along the whole line, great crowds of people were to be seen; and the windows, balconies, and scaffoldings were all very closely filled. The rush upon the streets was very considerable, but, on the whole, excellent order was preserved.

Her Majesty looked exceedingly well, and was very calm and composed. The Prince is much improved in appearance, being stouter and more manly-looking than when last in Scotland.

ARRIVAL AT BLAIR ATHOL.

The Royal party arrived at Blair Athol at three o'clock on Wednesday. Her Majesty was received at the mansion by a body of Lord Glenlyon's clansmen, attired in the Highland dress. The Queen appeared somewhat fatigued. The Prince looked remarkably well, and appeared to have been but slightly incommoded by the sea voyage. The travelling chariot, with its Royal occupants, was followed by four other vehicles containing the Princess Royal, Lord Liverpool, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Charles Wellesley, and the remaining members of her Majesty's suite, including Lord Glenlyon, who had fallen in with the Royal cortège shortly after it left Dunkeld.

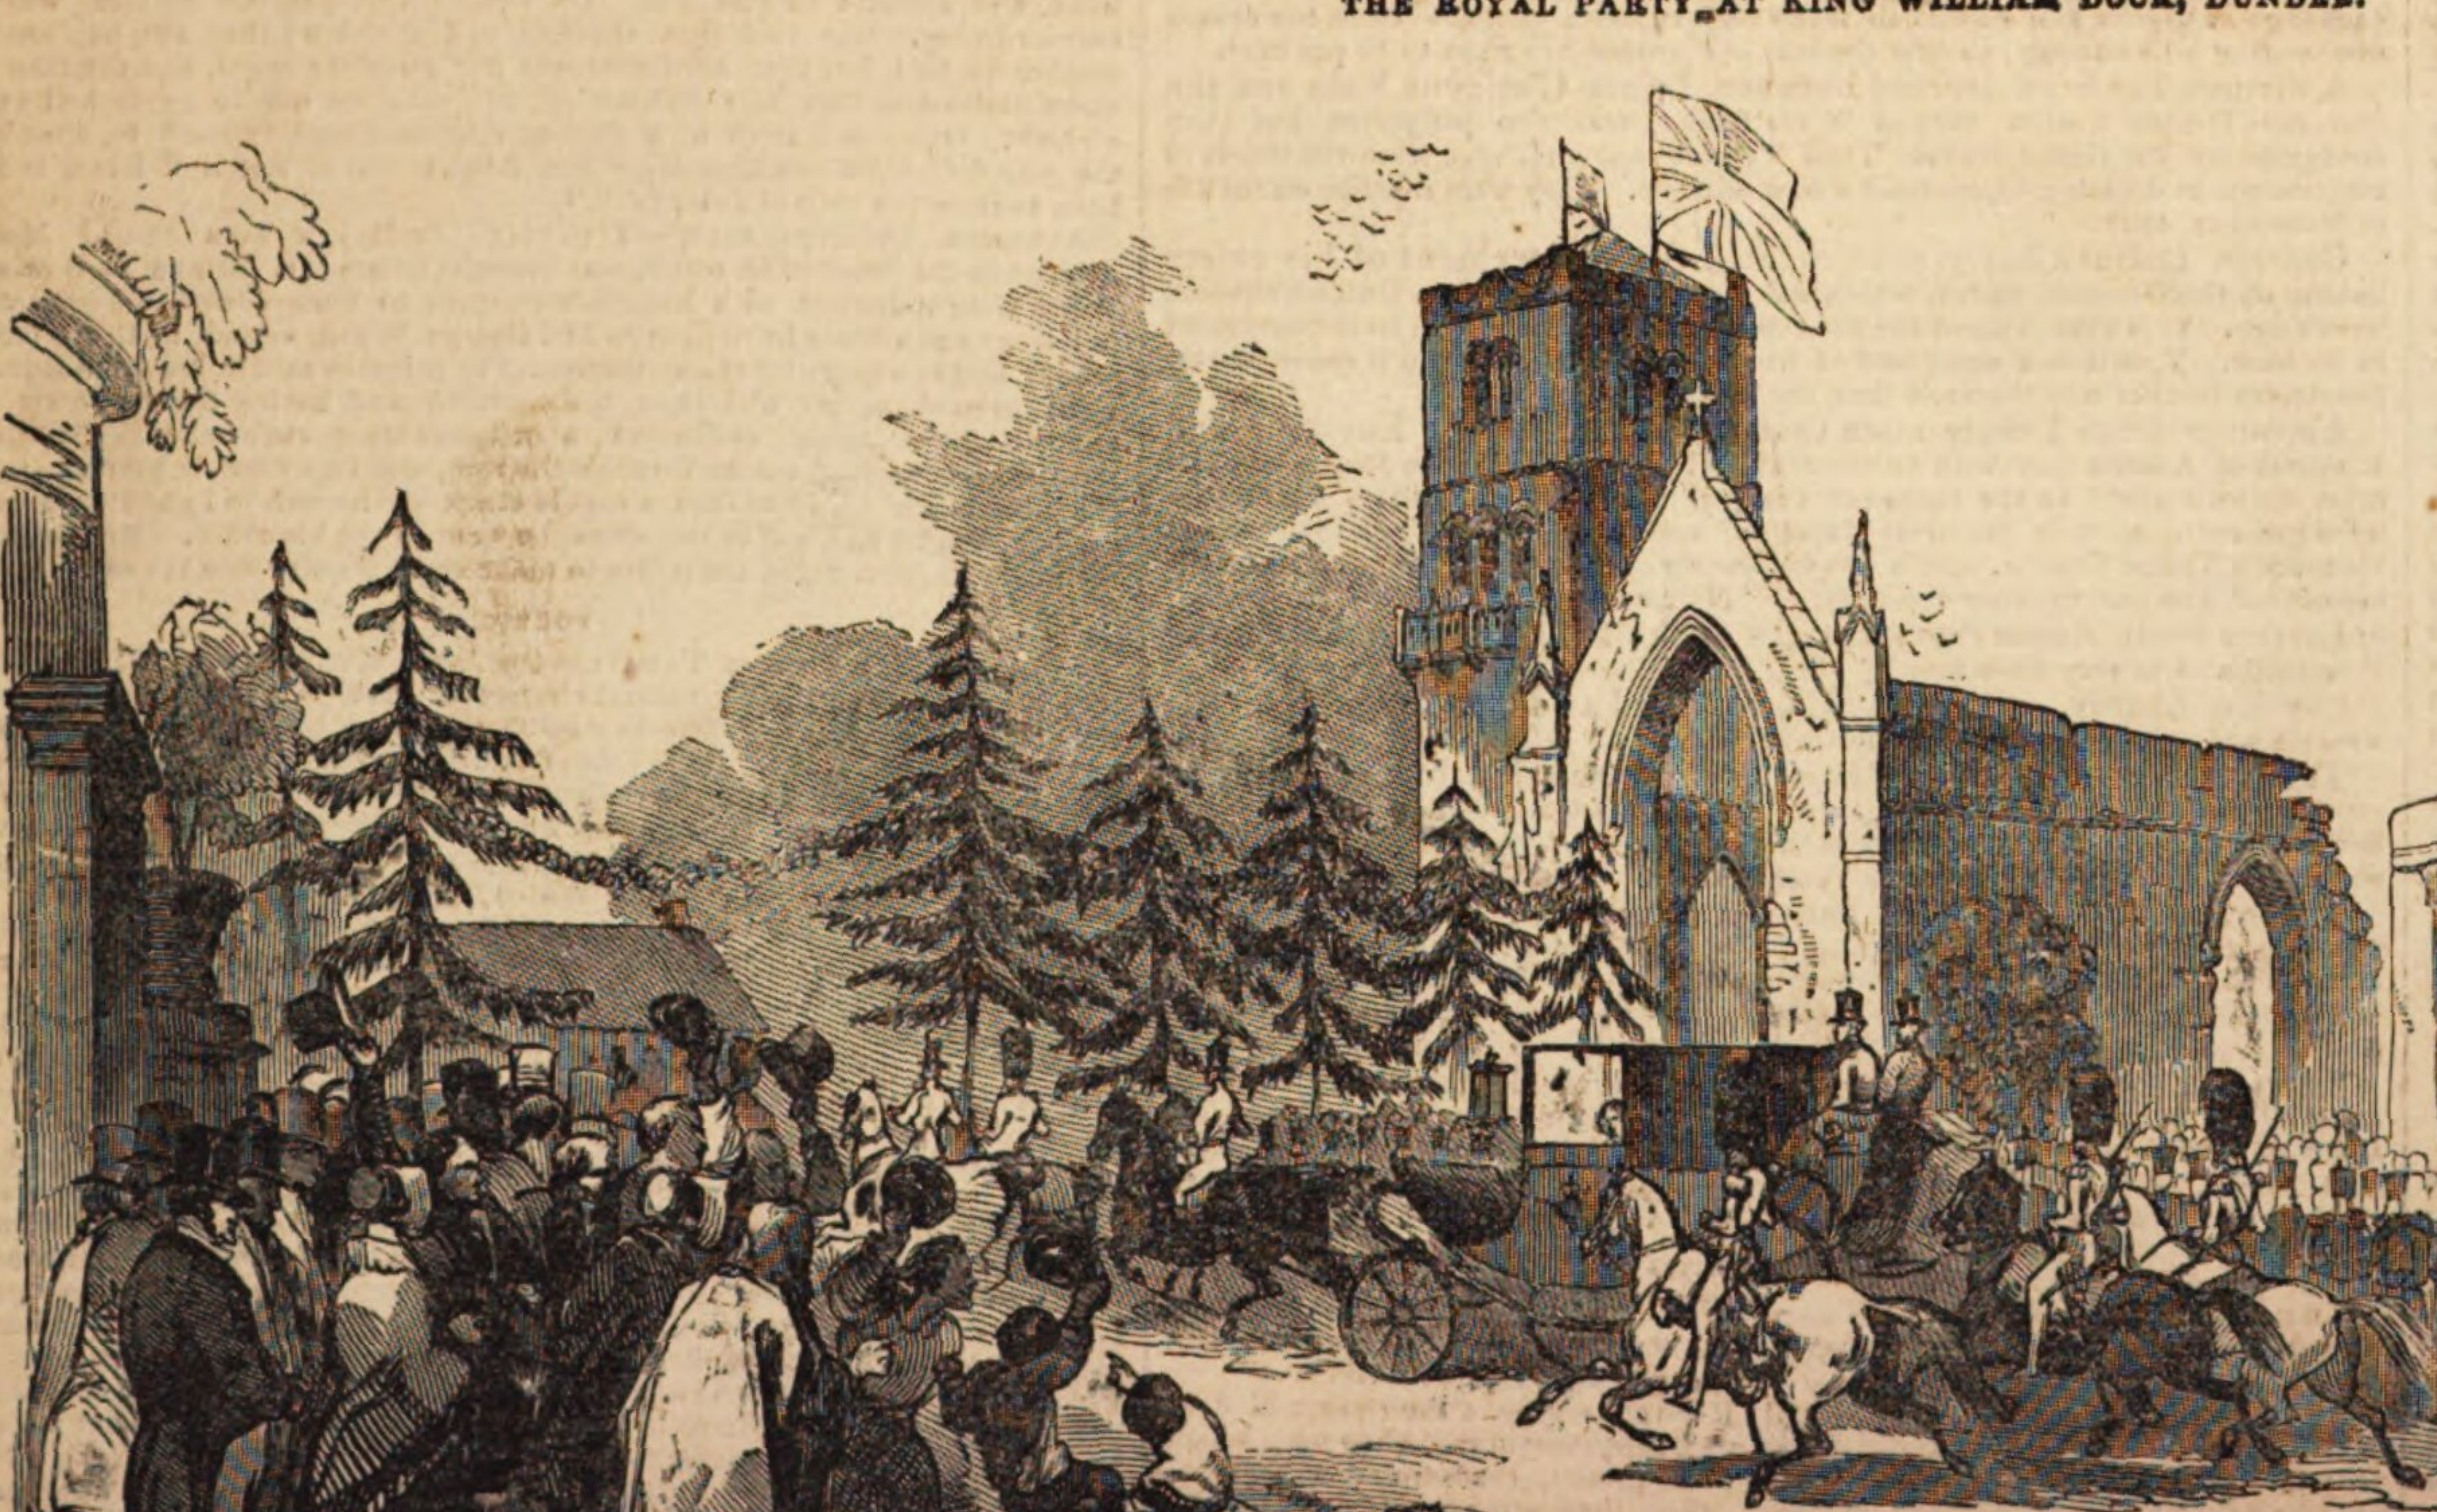
On arriving at the principal entrance of the mansion, her Majesty was received by Lady Glenlyon, who was accompanied by the Young Master of Glenlyon and Mrs. Home Drummond, her ladyship's mother. Four companies of forty each, consisting of his lordship's clansmen, attired in the Highland dress, were drawn up by the side of the portico, the pipers, in full Highland costume, greeting her Majesty with the pibroch. The clansmen were commanded by Lord Glenlyon, assisted by the Major of the corps, the Hon. James Murray. The first company was commanded by Captain Drummond, with his Lieutenant, the Hon. W. Drummond: the second, by Captain Charles Drummond, with his Lieutenant, Sir David Dundas; the third, by Oswald of Dunnikier, with his Lieutenant, Kier of Kindroggan; the fourth, by Stewart of Urrat, with his Lieutenant, Butter of Fascaly, the owner of the magnificent mansion which is situated in one of the most picturesque spots in Scotland, just before entering the pass of Killiecrankie. Her Majesty appeared much pleased with the manifestations of loyalty with which she was greeted; and after addressing a few remarks to Lady Glenlyon, entered the mansion, accompanied by Prince Albert.

Within a few minutes, however, after the arrival of the Royal party, the Prince came out into the front of the mansion, accompanied by his noble host, with Lord Aberdeen, Lord Liverpool, and Lord Charles Wellesley. His Royal Highness inspected the Highlanders, keeping his hat off, as he walked through the ranks, a mark of courtesy which will not be unappreciated by those fine fellows, and which evidently afforded them no small gratification.

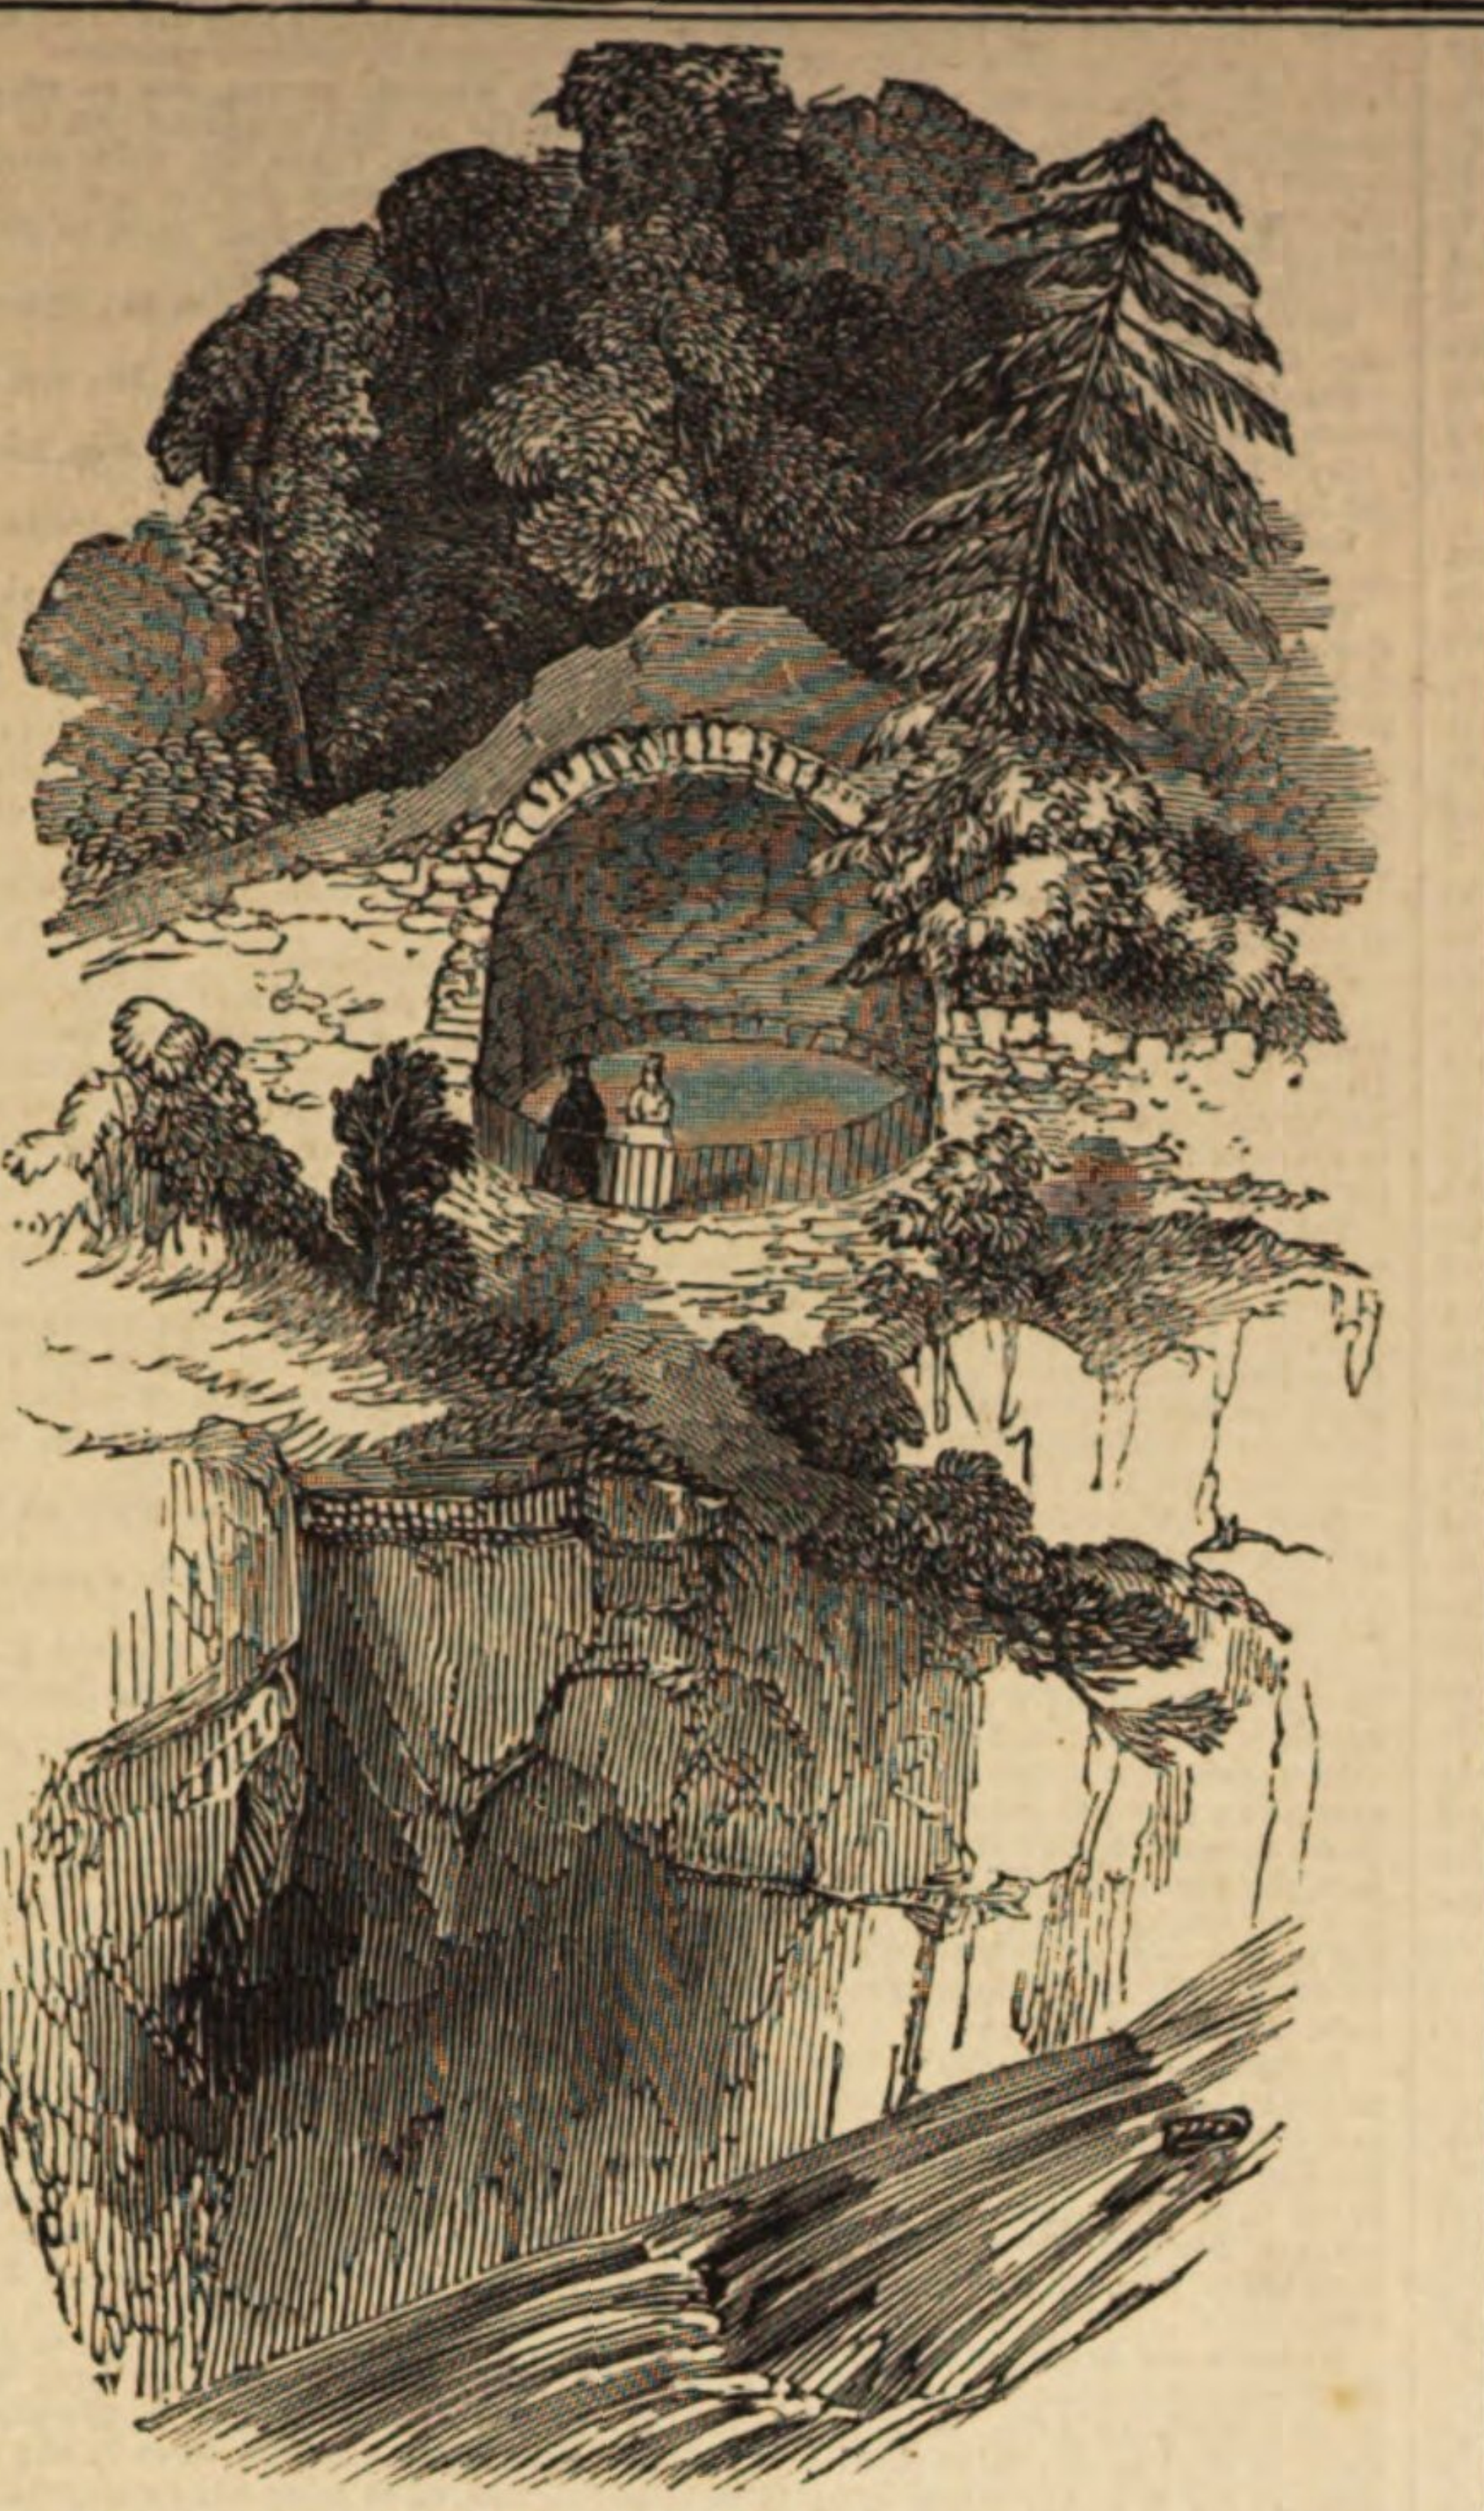
The clansmen then marched round before the Prince, headed by the pipers playing the pibroch; and then her Majesty appeared at the window, and seemed much delighted at the picturesque appearance of her Highland subjects.

Lord and Lady Glenlyon were invited to join the Royal dinner party, which was strictly private.

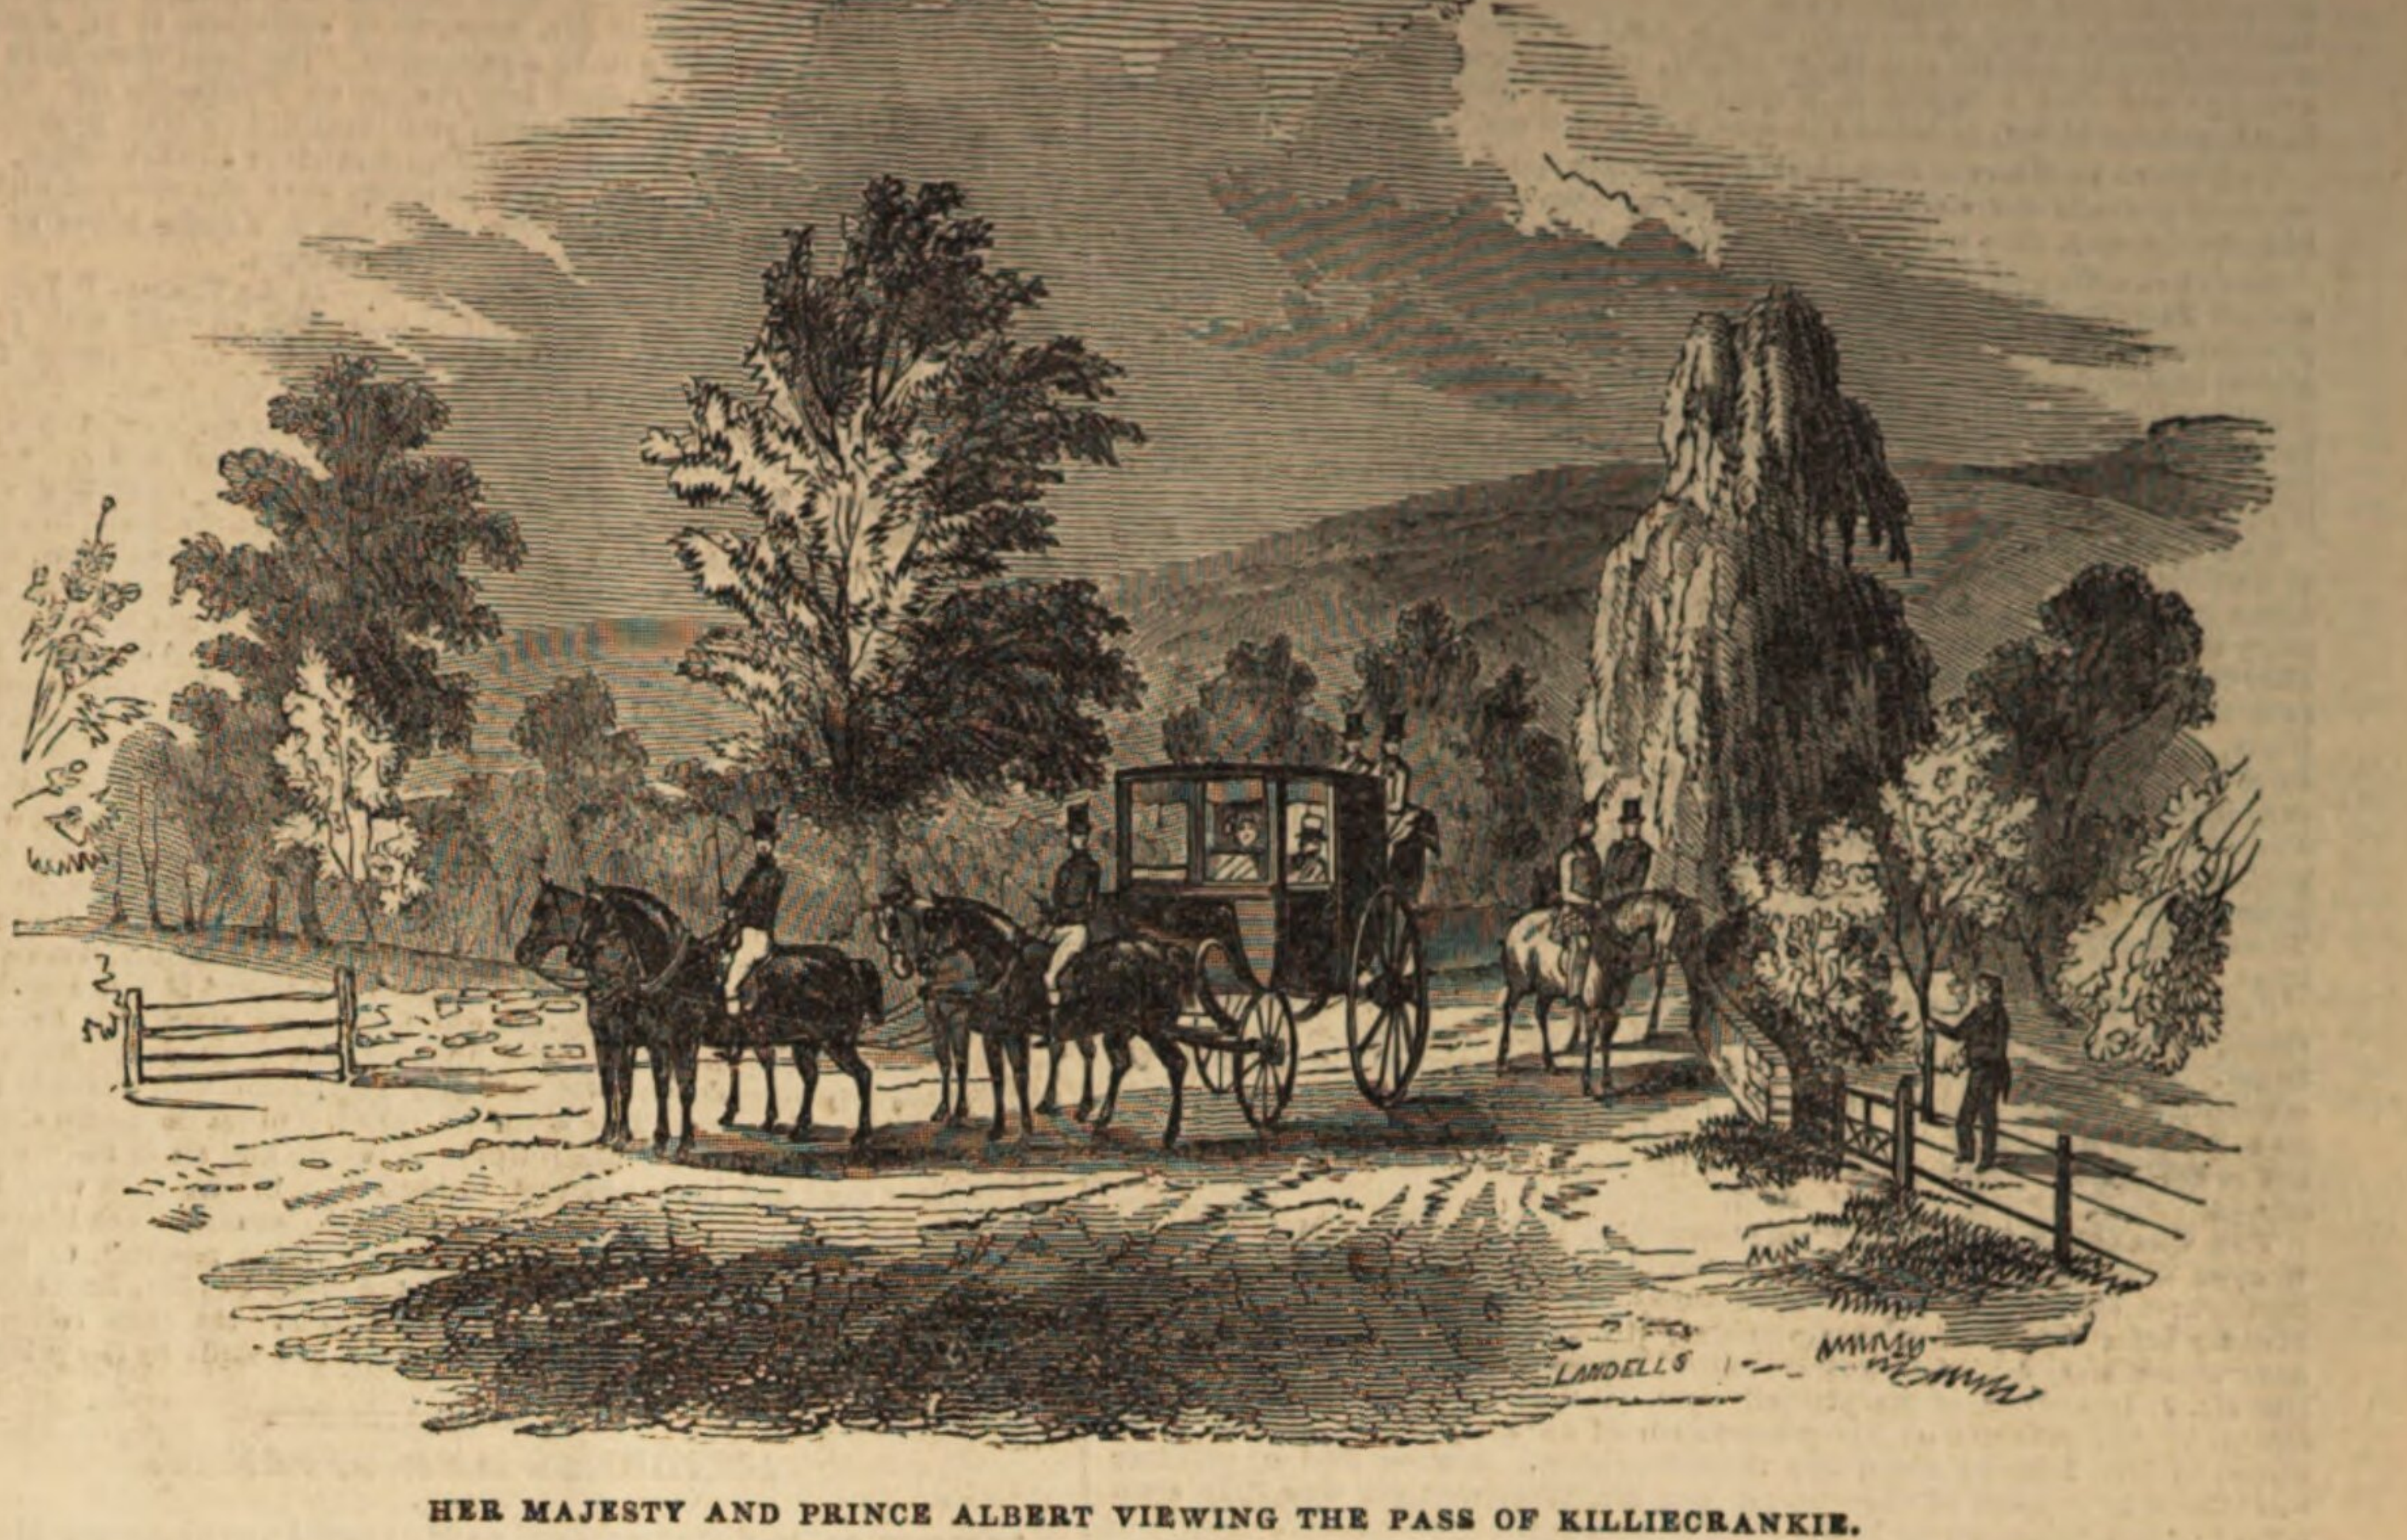
His Lordship, with Lady Glenlyon, will occupy the residence of Captain Macduff, his Lordship's factor, during the sojourn of her Majesty at Blair Athol.



THE ROYAL PARTY PASSING THE TRIUMPHAL ARCH, HIGH STREET, DUNDEE.



THE QUEEN AND LADY GLENLYON VISITING THE FALLS OF THE FENDER.



HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT VIEWING THE PASS OF KILLIECRANKIE.

BLAIR ATHOL, Thursday morning.

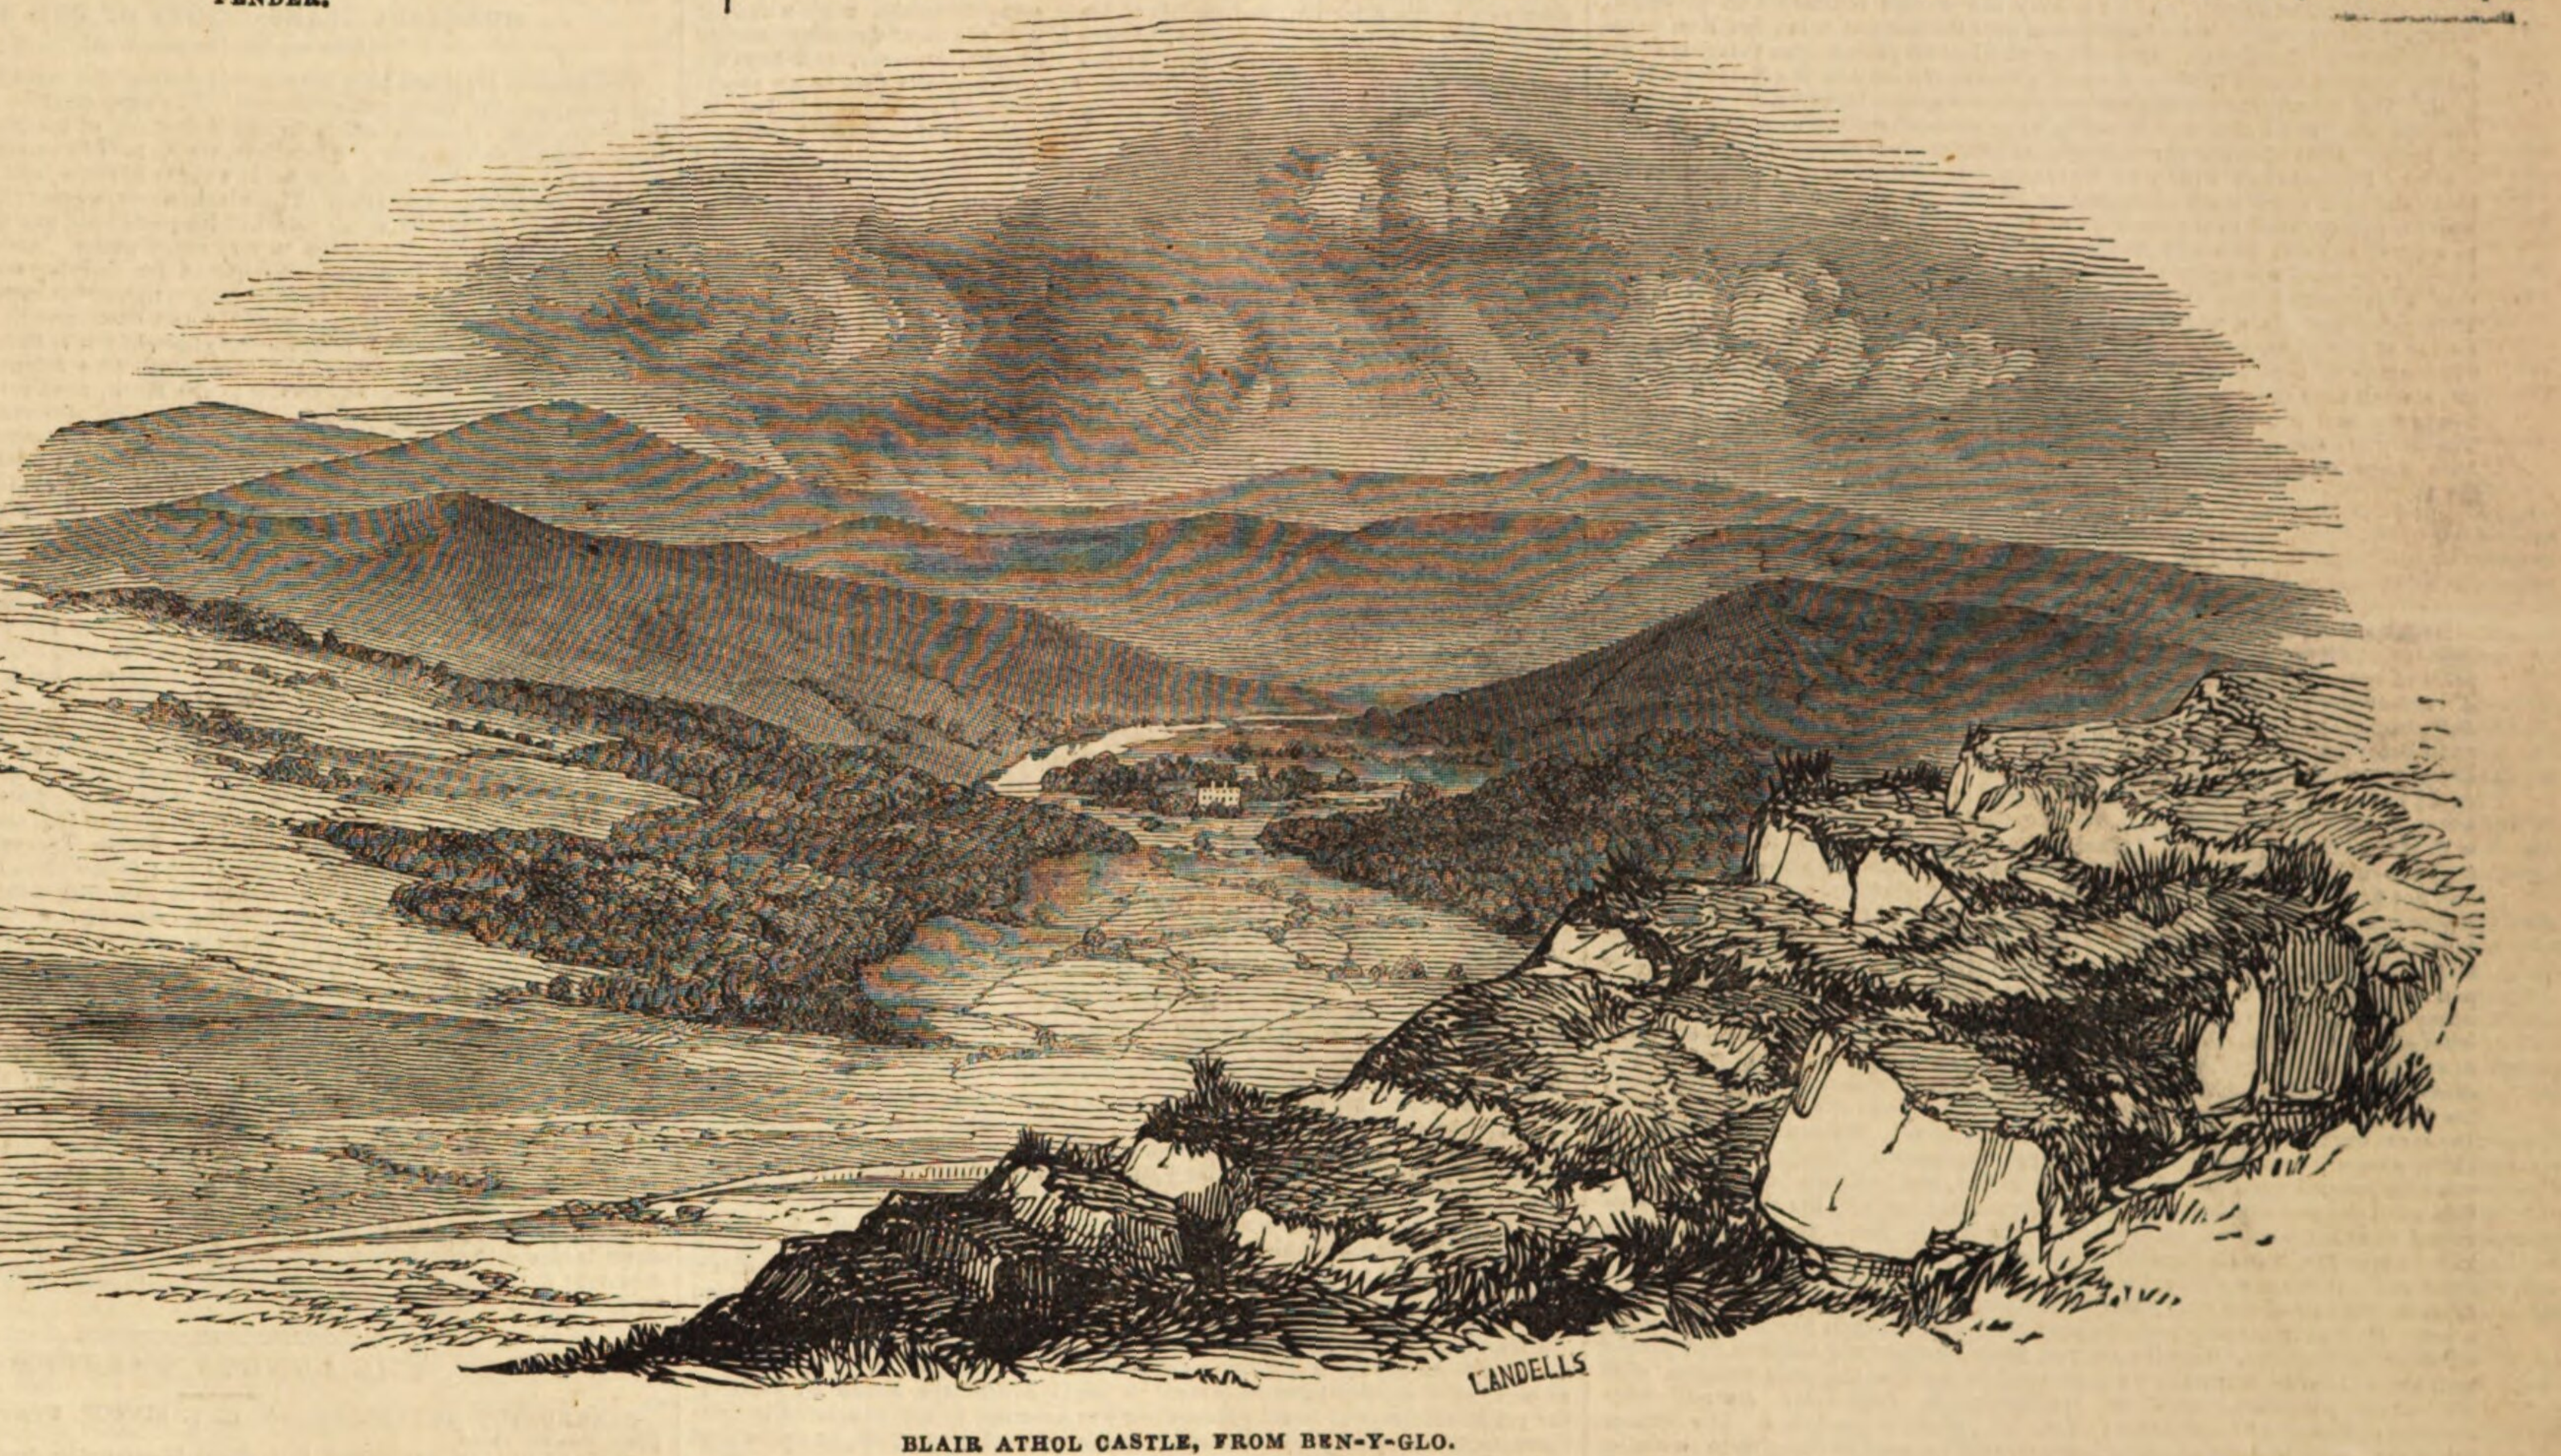
The fatigue attendant upon so long a voyage and journey rendered it necessary that her Majesty should enjoy retirement after her arrival at Blair Athol. It is understood that her Majesty desires to maintain privacy as far as possible during her temporary residence here; but every opportunity which the romantic scenery of the place affords for providing amusement—particularly out-door amusement—will, it is understood, be made available.

The reception of the Royal party at the different points on the road from Dundee to Blair Athol was most enthusiastic.

At Cupar Angus, the first post stage out of Dundee, great numbers of persons were assembled, who cheered her Majesty in the most enthusiastic manner. The same reception was given her at every place on the route.

At Dunkeld, the scene was repeated. Decorations of evergreen, and shouts from the people, expressed emphatically the heartiness of the welcome of the people of Scotland, and more especially those of the favoured district, offered to the Queen.

From Dunkeld, the road, after passing Dowally Kirk, Dalguise, Kinnaird-house (belonging to the Duke of Athol), Monlinearn, Donavourd, Dunfalandry, and the village of Pitlochrie, enters the far-famed pass of Killiecrankie, where a new road has been opened by Mr. Butter, of Faskally. The scenery in this pass is most romantic. Her Majesty appeared much struck with its grandeur and beauty. Here the Royal carriage halted, as shown in our engraving. Not more than four or five miles and further on is Athol House, formerly the Castle of Blair, now a family seat of the Duke of Athol. This is now placed at the entire disposal of her Majesty and suite during her Majesty's stay.



BLAIR ATHOL CASTLE, FROM BEN-Y-GLO.

One or two trifling circumstances attended her Majesty's debarkation and landing at Dundee. As soon as her Majesty had landed from the barge and acknowledged by bows and smiles the cheering of the multitudes of spectators, Lord Duncan presented the Provost, Mr. Lawson, to her Majesty, who thanked him and the authorities for the arrangements made to receive her. The Provost presented addresses from the Town Council; and the Dean of Guild presented one from the Guildry incorporation. The Provost of Arbroath and the Provost of St. Andrew's also severally presented addresses from the corporations of those towns. During her Majesty's progress to the carriage (and she had a short distance to walk) she leant on the right arm of the Prince, and the Princess Royal walked by the side of the Prince, holding his hand. (See the engraving.)

HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT ALIGHTING AT BLAIR ATHOL CHURCH.

BLAIR ATHOL, Friday, Sept. 13.

There is little to record of the movements of her Majesty and the Court here than the mere ordinary routine, so strict is the privacy desired and obtained. For the purpose of retirement, a more favourable spot could scarcely have been obtained, combining as it does such natural beauties with such absolute quiet and seclusion from the bustle and turmoil of the world.

This morning the Queen was again early afoot, and went through the grounds with his Royal Highness and the Princess Royal, mounted on her pony. After breakfast, his Royal Highness, accompanied by Lord Glenlyon, Sir E. Bowater, and another gentleman of his suite, went out upon the hills to shoot grouse, of which there is a great abundance in the immediate neighbourhood of the castle.

None of the nobility or gentry of the neighburhood have called, in respectful deference to her Majesty's wish for complete seclusion during her residence at Blair. The church, which is close to the castle on the other side of the high road, is being prepared for the reception of her Majesty and suite, a large pew directly opposite the pulpit, handsomely lined with crimson satin and cushioned and carpeted, being fitted up within the last day or two.

The body of Athol Highlanders, who compose the Queen's guard of honour are on duty immediately round the castle, twenty mounting guard at a time, and the main body being encamped under tents in the lawn, a little to the left of the house. At the time of her Majesty's arrival there were not more than 200 persons assembled, and these were drawn up on either side of the new Queen's gate, a little below the bridge of Glentilt. Prince Albert called out to the postilions to drive a little slower through the crowd, but mistaking his words they went at full speed up to the entrance.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert have been to the old village of Blair to the lodge, where there was a party of shearers at work shearing sheep. Her Majesty and the Prince remained for some time looking on, highly amused with the proceeding. There were some fine Scotch terriers with the shearers, of which the Queen took great notice, patting and playing with them. The royal pair afterwards visited Glentilt, proceeding as far as the marble quarry, where there is a beautiful vein of green variegated marble. The Queen entered one of the forester's cottages, and found the "gude wife" at her spinning wheel, and conversed with her for some time in the most kind and condescending manner. If report speaks truth the simple and hospitable inmates, quite unaware of the rank of their illustrious visitors, produced a bottle and glass, and invited the Queen and Prince Albert to taste the mountain dew.

BLAIR ATHOL, Saturday, Sept. 14.

Yesterday, after the return of Prince Albert from the hills, the Queen and the Prince went in their pony phaeton for the purpose of visiting the Falls of Bruar, about three miles to the west of Blair Athol. The Prince drove. Lord Glenlyon, in Highland costume, and Sir Edward Bowater, attended her Majesty on horseback. These falls form one of the most interesting sights in the neighbourhood of Blair Athol. There are several separate falls, the waters rushing through a channel almost perpendicular. The sides above and around are covered with fir trees. The state of the weather, which had been threatening during the morning, prevented her Majesty from seeing the falls, as she would have had to walk a short distance. The royal party therefore turned back, after driving on the road towards Dalnacardoch. It rained heavily on her Majesty's return to

(Continued on page 187.)

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Will of the Late Mr. Wood.—We hear that the Corporation of the city of Gloucester have arranged to abandon their extensive claims on the estate of the late Mr. James Wood, of Gloucester, and that the settlement of this long-pending suit is likely to take a most unexpected turn. It is reported very confidently that the real will or codicil, properly attested, is at length forthcoming, and that a family in Worcestershire, of humble respectability, are likely, as heirs at law, to become possessed of Mr. Wood's enormous wealth.

The Hops in Kent.—Hop picking is now general in Kent. It is stated that on those grounds where sufficient progress has been made to form an opinion relative to the crop, they uniformly "come down" short of the estimated quantity.

Dreadful Death.—On Friday morning a young man, about 18 years of age named Parradine, a farm-labourer, was found in a ditch opposite the Phœnix public-house, in Staple Claydon, Buckinghamshire, nearly lifeless, and burnt almost to a cinder. It is supposed the poor fellow got drunk on the preceding night, and rolled into the ditch, with a lighted pipe in his hand, or had some lucifer-matches upon his person, which ignited, thus destroying all the clothes on his body, and burning his frame to a complete cinder, the interior being visible as if he had been flayed alive.

The Murder of the Policeman at Dover.—The inquest on the body of Samuel Couchman, murdered on Sunday week at Bridge-street, Dover, while attempting to quell a riot among a party of broom-dashers and poachers, principally consisting of an old man named James Clark, and his five sons, terminated, after four sittings, on Saturday morning, when a verdict of wilful murder was returned against James Clark, the father, William Clark, Thomas Clark, John Clark, and Stephen Clark (his sons). William Smith, and other persons unknown. Frederick Clark and John Wood, who, with old Clark and one of his sons (Stephen) were taken into custody on the morning of the murder, had been discharged, but the old man and his son Stephen were committed to Maidstone gaol, to take their trial at the next Maidstone assizes, and the witnesses were bound over to prosecute. A reward has been offered for the apprehension of Thomas Clark, William Clark, John Clark, and William Smith, who are still at large.

Curious Death at Devonport.—Last week, as Mrs. Treager, of William-street, Devonport, was cleaning a fish, one of the bones stuck in her forefinger. It was immediately extracted, and but little notice was taken of the occurrence. At the end of two days, however, she felt the most excruciating pain, when it was found that mortification had commenced, and death put an end to her sufferings before the close of the week. She was seventy-four years of age.

The Charge of Forgery against Mr. Winterbottom.—Mr. John Kenyon Winterbottom, who was apprehended in Liverpool a few days ago, after having been absent from the neighbourhood since August, 1840, was charged on Monday before the Stockport magistrates, with forgery upon the Pelican Life Assurance Society for the sum of £5000, which was payable to the family of the late Mr. J. Isherwood, of Marple-hall upon his death, and which sum was received by the prisoner on his presentation of an authority purporting to be signed by Mrs. Isherwood and her three daughters. A good deal of evidence was offered in support of the charge, and Mr. Winterbottom was fully committed to Chester assizes for trial.

Serious Accidents at Liverpool.—Some serious accidents occurred at a soldier's funeral in Liverpool on Monday last. About three o'clock on that afternoon the funeral was passing along St. Anne-street, from the barracks in Soho-street, towards St. James's Cemetery. It was preceded by a band and a party of soldiers, with their firelocks reversed, and it was followed by the chief mourners, another large party of soldiers, the officers in command of the detachment, and a considerable crowd of the lower classes of the town. It seems that a horse and cart were either standing or going along the middle of the way, when the sound of the music frightened the animal, and caused him to plunge and rear, and, at last, he rushed upon the footpath and up the steps of a hall-door, crowded with spectators. The women and children, who were upon the steps, screamed terrifically, and for a while the utmost consternation prevailed. Amongst others, one of the wheels passed over the body of a lad fourteen years of age, named John Couch. One of the wheels also passed over the body of an elderly woman, named Bridget Steckes, who was removed to the Northern Hospital. The others received bruises and contusions, not, however, of any serious consequence; and a few were bleeding from wounds received in various parts of the body. Most of them were conveyed at once to their respective homes.

More Incendiary Fires in Suffolk.—On Saturday evening another fire broke out in a straw stack belonging to Mr. Kerry, of Saxham, Suffolk, which was happily confined to the stack in which it commenced. The stack was near to a barn, and was also surrounded by a number of other stacks. Wednesday evening the town was again alarmed by the cry of fire. We are sorry to state that a destructive fire broke out on a farm at Barton, the property of Mr. J. Phillips, of that place, which consumed a considerable amount of property, consisting of a large barn, nearly new, in which were 100 coombs of wheat and about 200 coombs of oats, recently got in. The fire commenced, it is supposed, in a straw stack near to a row of cart sheds and some other outbuildings, which, with a waggon and a quantity of agricultural implements, were wholly destroyed. The property was insured. There can be no doubt, from circumstances which have since transpired, that the property was wilfully and maliciously set fire to.

POLICE.

Disgusting Cruelty to Children.—At Queen-square Police-office, on Monday, Catherine Stuart, a powerful dissipated-looking woman, about 45 years of age, was charged with the most revolting cruelty to three young children. A warrant was granted for the prisoner's apprehension in the middle of last July, but as she had absconded, the constable was unable to effect her capture until Saturday night, when he found her in a state of intoxication.—William Cooper, a hairdresser, residing at Broadway, Westminster, stated that the accused and a very hard-working man, named Tyler, had taken apartments in his house about a twelvemonth ago, representing themselves to be man and wife, with three children, but he had since ascertained that they were not married, and that the children were by Tyler's wife, who had been dead some years. They had not been in the house many weeks when the screams and cries from the rooms occupied by Tyler left no doubt that the children were being very brutally treated. On the 18th of July witness heard violent screams proceeding from the room, and on going up stairs heard the girl Clarissa Tyler, who was 13 years of age, faintly exclaim, "Oh, mother; oh, mother," and then there was a heavy noise like something falling. Witness knocked at the door and inquired what was the matter, when prisoner replied from within that if he had anything to say he must say it to Mr. Tyler. In about an hour after this Clarissa Tyler came down stairs, and bore evidence of the cruel treatment she had received; her head and face were very much swollen, and the blows she had received about the eyes were so severe that she was nearly blind. Witness questioned the child, who, after much hesitation, said that her mother (the prisoner) had repeatedly jumped upon her while she was in bed, and had then beat her with her fists until she was nearly insensible. Her mother had told her that if she mentioned what had occurred to her father she would jump upon her until she killed her.—Mr. Burrell inquired what was the prisoner's conduct to the other children?—Witness replied: Uniformly most violent and cruel; she would take them by the hair of the head, and dash them from one end of the room to the other. He had frequently seen the poor children with their hair literally pulled off their heads.—Mr. Burrell: Do you know whether the children had proper food given them?—Witness: I am shocked to say that the poor children were fed upon paunches, such as are given to dogs.—Mr. Burrell, with surprise: Paunches?—Witness; Yes, sir, sheep's paunches. The woman has a son, who is assistant to a butcher, and he used to bring them to her.—Mr. Burrell; Is there any act of violence which has occurred in your presence?—Witness: The prisoner flung a saucepan of boiling water over Clarissa Tyler. Although I did not see it absolutely thrown, I saw the poor creature directly afterwards. The girl ran down the stairs in great agony, and there was a succession of bright red stripes down her face and neck, where she had been scalded with the boiling water.—Mr. Burrell asked the prisoner what she had to say. Prisoner replied, that there was not a word of truth in it. It was all through spite, because there was some rent owing. She would not deny that she might have struck the children in a somewhat improper manner. I don't mean to say I might not have thrown water sometimes at her, but not boiling water. The prisoner was remanded until Tuesday, in order that the eldest child might be produced. On that day Clarissa Tyler, aged 13, was examined. She was evidently intimidated, and gave her evidence with much apparent unwillingness. I live with my father at No. 7, Broadway, Westminster. My mother has been dead some years. Prisoner has lived with my father for some time, and has care of us children when he was out. My father, the prisoner, myself, and my little brother and sister all lived together in the same room. My father came home to his meals always, and sometimes I dined with them, and sometimes the other children did. At other times we used to dine when they had done. Sometimes I have had the same food as they. I complained of the food I had, but not lately. It was sheep's paunch. Prisoner gave us the paunch to eat. She and my father had some of it for dinner at the same time. Prisoner was kind to me when she was sober. I came here to complain of her because she gave me a black eye; first she kicked me on the eyes as I was in bed, and then she came with her double fists. I don't know why she kicked or struck me. She said nothing to me before she did it. Mr. Burrell having inquired whether the accused wished to put any questions to the witness, she replied she did, and said, "Now, Clarissa, you know that we frequently haven't had food to eat ourselves—haven't we all gone without, your father and all of us?"—Witness, after a considerable pause, replied, "Sometimes we have, I can't say."—Mrs. Jane Hopkins, who resided in the same house as the accused, frequently heard the children's screams, and had endeavoured to get at them, but the room door was always locked. The children always complained of great ill-usage, and the hair was pulled off their heads by handfuls.—Annette Wilson saw prisoner throw scalding broth over Clarissa Tyler's head and shoulders, and the child screamed, and ran down stairs. She heard prisoner say that if the girl came in there again she would jump upon her.—Caroline Tyler, aged 10 years, was sworn, and said: Prisoner used to beat us very much, and I have complained to Mrs. Cooper of it, but she used to beat my sister Clarissa a great deal more than she did me, and she used to pull her hair out of her head. She gave my sister and little brother and me salted bread and butter. She always had the same. We never had any meat. My father and mother (the prisoner) had meat, but we had not. Sometimes we had a little broth, made of pieces of meat. My father frequently saw mother beating us, but he didn't say anything. My father was gone to work when we had our meals.—The prisoner said the children had sworn falsely, and denied that she had ill-treated them.—Mr. Burrell told her he should commit her for trial for these cruel assaults, but he would take good bail for her appearance.

The Ingenious Robbery in the Waterloo-road.—On Tuesday, at Union-hall, Wm. Timberlake, alias Cooper, George Jackson, alias Contison, and John Western, alias White, were brought up before Mr. Traill, for final examination.—Cooper and Western were charged with stealing twelve and a half sovereigns from the house of Mr. Brundall, a carpenter, at 24, Agnes-street, Waterloo road, by assuming to be a policeman. The particulars have appeared in our paper.—Western was taken into custody on Wednesday last, by Goff and Brooks, two officers of the L division, and identified by Mrs. Brundall as the man who took the property, by representing himself as a police officer, and producing a forged search warrant.—The prisoners were also charged with forging two cheques for £45, and committing a robbery at a coffee-house in Grafton-street, Soho.—They were committed on all the charges.

Committal on a Charge of Stabbing.—At the Thames Police-office, on Monday, a seaman, named George Alexander, was charged with feloniously stabbing Mr. John Tomlinson, the chief mate of the ship Sultana, from Van Diemen's Land, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm. Two seamen, named Lyell and Downes, were examined, from whose evidence it appeared that the ship was at anchor off Gravesend on Sunday evening, and some words occurred between a man named Smith and the chief mate, respecting some beef served out to the crew in the course of the day, and the mate, in answer to a question as to whether the beef was Sydney or Pernambuco meat, said it was the best on board. The prisoner denied this, and said the meat was not fit to be eaten. The mate referred Smith to the master, who was aft on the quarter-deck, and used threatening language to Alexander, and said he would knock his head off; and he then laid hold of him by the collar with one hand and his throat with the other, and applied to him most gross names. The prisoner resisted this rough treatment, and blows were exchanged, and the prisoner at length drew his knife and stabbed the mate under the ear. The blood gushed forth copiously. A waterman was immediately hailed, and the mate, who was in great danger of bleeding to death, was sent ashore in a boat without delay, and a surgeon in Gravesend dressed the wound. Lyell said that after the blow was given with the knife, he and the mate ran after the prisoner, and he took up an iron pin, menaced them both, and then threw himself head-foremost into the forecastle. He also said the blood flowed from the wound in a stream. Downes, on the contrary, said the belaying-pin was flourishing above the heads of both men before the stab was given. The prisoner was remanded. He underwent another examination on Wednesday. Mr. Tomlinson, who was able to attend, said the prisoner was grumbling when he called him aft to pump ship, and he seized him by the collar for the purpose of taking him aft to the master, when the prisoner used bad language, and stabbed him in the neck with his knife. Evidence was given of the dangerous nature of the wound, which bled copiously. Mr. Pelham wished to call witnesses on behalf of the prisoner, to prove great provocation and ill-usage on the part of the mate, but Mr. Broderip declined hearing them, and referred them to the assizes. He then committed the prisoner for trial, and refused an application for bail made by the prisoner's solicitor.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Attempt of one Policeman to Murder Another.—On Monday Mr. Mores and Mr. Busk, county magistrates, sat at the Police-station, Edmonton, to investigate the following charge:—Patrick Harvey, 392 N, police-constable, was placed before them for examination. The facts were stated to be, that Mr. Risley, a cow-keeper, at Winchmore-hill, had repeatedly complained that some parties unknown were in the habit of stealing milk from his cows in the field, and early on Sunday morning Policeman Hannett, who was doing duty, placed himself in the field to detect the delinquent. About four o'clock he observed the prisoner, who was on duty as constable of the beat, make his way stealthily down the fence into the field, and begin to draw milk from one of the cows into a bottle; and while he was so occupied, Hannett advanced, and laid hold of him to take him in custody to the station-house; the prisoner, however, render desperate by the detection, and unable to break away from him, made a sudden attack upon him with his truncheon, beating him in the most dreadful manner about the head, until the truncheon broke. Hannett, however, still kept his hold, until his cries of "murder" brought the cow-keeper's men to his assistance, when the prisoner was secured and given in custody to Sergeant Hill at the station. Hannett was found to be so seriously injured, that on Sunday morning one of the magistrates proceeded to take his deposition, as he then appeared to be in immediate danger of death, but he afterwards rallied. The prisoner declined making any defence at present, and the magistrates remanded him for a fortnight.

Lamentable Accident.—A very sad accident occurred near Exeter, on Saturday afternoon, by the breaking down of a phaeton, on the Whitstone road, near Adderwater, containing the Rev. Prebendary Medley, rector of St. Thomas, Henrietta Medley his mother, the Rev. Prebendary Cornish, and his sister Mrs. Shore, of Mount Radford, and by which one death has ensued, Mrs. Medley, from the injuries she received, having expired about two hours and a half after the melancholy catastrophe. Mrs. Shore is in a rather precarious state, and Mr. Medley was carried home much hurt. Mr. Cornish escaped unhurt. At the inquest a verdict of "Accidental death" was recorded, with a deodand of 1s. on the phaeton. It is supposed that the wheel of the carriage struck against a stone, which caused its instant destruction.

Singular Case.—On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Wakley held an inquest at the sign of the Duke of Wellington, South-street, Sloane-square, Chelsea, on the body of George Bailey, aged 34 years, whose death, it was alleged, had been caused by his having eaten a biscuit supposed to be poisoned, which he had picked up in the street. The deceased resided at No. 17, Seymour-street, Sloane-square, and was employed at a gas work. On Monday last he came home about the middle of the day and complained of feeling very poorly, and said he had been taken so immediately after eating a biscuit he had picked up in the street. He was shortly afterwards seized with great pain in the chest, which he described like a dart running through him, and afterwards like tearing the flesh away from his chest, and notwithstanding medical assistance was procured, he continued in great agony until about five o'clock on Tuesday morning, when he died. Mr. Ward, the house surgeon of the Chelsea Dispensary, who made a post mortem examination of the body, said he could not find any trace of poison, but there were other indications sufficient to account for death. The jury returned a verdict to that effect.

Child Murder, and Death of the Murderess.—On Wednesday Mr. Higgs held an inquest at the Hog-in-the-Pound, Oxford-street, on the body of Mary Levey, aged 23, and on that of her newly-born female infant. Mr. F. Clarke, surgeon, of Marylebone-lane, said that at eight o'clock on Monday morning last he was suddenly called on to Mr. Manscom's residence, 36, South Molton-street. On the half landing between the first and second floors he found the dead body of the deceased woman lying, and she was evidently the mother of the child that lay dead close by her. The woman, no doubt, had been making an effort to get higher up stairs, when she fell and died instantly. She had been dead about a quarter of an hour when he saw her. There was a large quantity of blood on the stairs, but not sufficient to account for death. On removing the body and examining the infant he found the string of an apron twisted tightly around its neck, and which was evidently the cause of death. The apron was attached, and the string was entangled or held in the woman's hand. The child was unquestionably born alive, for the lungs were filled with atmospheric air and floated buoyantly on water. The child died from strangulation by the mother, who died whilst doing the heinous deed. Verdict—"That the child was strangled by its mother, who died of apoplexy immediately afterwards."

The late Bank Robbery and Forgery.—The most active exertions have been made during these few days to discover the delinquents, and it having been ascertained that they have proceeded to the United States, J. and D. Forester, the police officers, will be sent immediately to America, to apply to the authorities there for the necessary powers, under the late act of convention, to apprehend the guilty parties.

Death from Burning.—Mr. W. Payne held an inquest on Tuesday evening at St. Thomas's Hospital, on the body of Mary Andrews, aged eight years. It appeared that on Friday, about one o'clock, the poor child, who had no mother, was boiling potatoes for her father's dinner, and while in the act of removing the saucepan from the fire her pinafore became ignited, and she was instantly enveloped in flames. The poor sufferer was conveyed to the hospital, where she expired, on Saturday, from the effects of the injuries received.—Verdict, Accidental Death.

Fatal Coach Accident.—On Saturday, the 31st ultimo, as the Lord Lovat coach, from Peterhead to Banff, was changing horses about ten miles from the latter place, the fresh horses were startled, and set off at full speed without guard or coachman. Mr. Macduie, perfumer, Banff, who was an outside passenger, unfortunately leaped from the top, and although he alighted upon his feet, fell back from the recoil before one of the hind wheels, which passed over his chest, and caused death in a few minutes. The other passengers, two ladies, who were inside, were more or less injured, the coach having been upset about two miles from where the horses started.

Shocking Death by Fire.—On Wednesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the London Hospital on the body of Thomas Nelson James, a child four years old, whose parents reside in Edward-street, Stepney. It appeared that on Saturday evening last, the deceased was left for a short time in a room by himself, when he began playing with the fire, and his clothes igniting, he was so dreadfully burned all over his body that on being conveyed to the hospital he died soon after his admission. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange—Friday.—Rather an extensive supply of English wheat has been received up to our market since Monday. The trade with that grain to-day was consequently extremely dull, and prices were barely supported. The imports of foreign wheat have been small, and the show of samples this morning was rather scanty. The sale, however, was extremely dull, and the quotations were in some instances a trifle lower. The supply of barley was good. All descriptions were a mere drug, and decidedly cheaper. In malt next to nothing was doing. Oats, beans, and peas ruled about stationary.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 8140; barley, 2150; oats, 3140 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 17,370 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3210; barley, 6120; oats, 4130 quarters. Flour, 2860 sacks. Malt, 4470 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 46s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto white, 42s to 50s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 29s to 33s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 56s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 28s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel. Town-made, 46s to 48s.

The Seed Market.—The supplies of most kinds of seeds offering have been only moderate yet the demand has ruled heavy, and prices have undergone no material variation.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 25s to 37; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £25 to £26 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £5 to £6 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 58s to 63s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d to 8d; of household ditto, 5½d to 7d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 35s 11d; oats, 20s 1d; rye, 35s 9d; beans, 37s 9d; peas, 34s 6d

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 48s 11d; barley, 34s 10d; oats, 20s 3d; rye, 35s 5d; beans, 36s 6d; peas, 34s 0d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 4s; oats, 6s; rye, 7s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 8s. 6d.

Tea.—Since our last, about 1,200 000 lbs of tea have arrived direct from China, yet, as the deliveries continue large, no material increase has taken place in the stock in bond. Common congou is now selling at 10½d to 11d per lb. A small sale of Assam tea will take place on Tuesday next.

Sugar.—Fine qualities of West India sugar are in steady demand, at full prices; but in other kinds very little is doing. Bengal and Mauritius sugars are a free sale, at late rates. The refined market is steady—brown lumps producing 73s 6d; and standard, 74s 6d to 75s per cwt.

Coffee.—Ceylon is in steady demand, at 56s to 57s for good ordinary. In all other kinds of coffee very little is doing, at late rates.

Rice.—Very little is doing in this article, yet prices are supported.

Provisions.—The supply of Irish butter continues large, yet the finest parcels command a steady sale at an advance of 1s per cwt. Other kinds may be considered quite as dear. Dutch butter is in good request, at 1s to 2s per cwt. more money. The best qualities cannot be had under 84s to 86s per cwt. Bacon is in demand—prime sizeable Waterford at 47s to 51s, and Limerick sizeable, 45s to 47s per cwt. Lard is a slow sale, at 52s to 53s per cwt for bladdered. All other kinds of provisions are about stationary.

Tallow.—Very little business has been doing in this article, at previous rates. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling at 41s to 41s 6d for old, and 41s 6d to 41s 9d for new. For forward delivery the price is 41s 6d to 41s 9d per cwt.

Hops.—During the last ten days, upwards of 1200 pockets of new hops have arrived here from Kent and Sussex, and been partly disposed of, at from £8 to £10 5s per cwt. Old hops, the supply of which is small, are a heavy sale, at barely late rates. The duty is called £130,000. The following are the prices of yearlings;—East Kent pockets, £7 10s to £10 10s; Mid Kent ditto, £6 10 to £8 15s; Sussex ditto, £5 18s to £6 10s.

Wool.—Public sales of upwards of 10,000 bales are appointed to take place on the 24th and two following days. Privately, the demand is steady, at full prices.

Potatoes.—The supply of potatoes continues large, yet the demand is steady, at from £4 10s to £5 10s per ton.

Coals.—Adairs, 19s; Carr's Hartley, 18s, Ord's Redheugh, 17s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 19s; Townley, 18s; West Wylam, 18s 6d; Bewicke and Co.'s, 22s; Hilda, 21s; Hetton's, 23s; Lambton's, 22s 9d; and Stewart's, 23s, per ton.

Smithfield.—Although the supply of beasts on sale here to-day was only limited, we have to report a very dull inquiry for that description of stock, at barely Monday's quotations. There were offering 60 beasts from Rotterdam, and 100 Scots from Aberdeen, in, for the most part, fair condition. The numbers of sheep were only moderate, yet the mutton trade was in a very sluggish state, at about previous currencies. The lamb trade was extremely slow, but no depression was noticed in value. Prime small calves were in demand, at full prices. In other kinds of veal, as well as in pork, exceedingly little was doing. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 5s each.

Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality do., 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d: prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 4d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 3s 4d to 4s 8d; sucking calves, 18s to 34s; quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each; Beasts, 619; cows, 168; sheep and lambs, 8160; calves, 236; pigs, 320.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—There was a full average supply of meat on sale to-day, while the trade was heavy at barely late rates.—Per 8lbs by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 6d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 3s 4d to 4s 8d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English securities have been steady during the week, although business has been upon the whole rather limited. The support given to the market by the purchases of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt has, of course, added to the value of quotations, which have in several instances attained par. Exchequer Bills have also made a slight advance, and Bank Stock for the Account has improved in price. There is, however, a great disinclination to invest on the part of the public, at the present high quotations, and this confines the real business of the Stock Exchange to very small limits. Among the wary portion of the capitalists, the large amount required for carrying out the projected railways has excited some attention, as tending to relieve the money market, although by slow gradations. The alteration of the rate of discount by the Bank of England has not yet had time to produce any effect, but it is announced that the new rate will not extend to any of the branches. This regulation is in favour of agencies, without being of any service to the Bank, as of course parties requiring discount will remit their bills to town agents in preference to paying ½ per cent. more for the privilege of discounting at its comparatively few branches.

A Court of Proprietors was held on Thursday, and a dividend declared of Three-and-a-Half per Cent. for the half year. To meet this, £115,000 will be required from the "Rest." It is but fair to add, however, that the present profits are only calculated to the 31st of August, instead of the 10th of October, leaving six weeks to the credit of the next half year. The announcement by the Governor that the loss sustained by the forgeries of Barber and Fletcher, would fall on the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, appeared to be very satisfactory. The dividend will be payable on and after the 11th of October next, and the price of the Stock for Account is 207 to 208. The closing quotation of Consols is 99⅝ for Money, and 99⅞ for Account; India Stock is 283½; Exchequer Bills, 74 to 76.

The business of the Foreign Market has been affected by the limited transactions of the English House, and speculation has been scarcely perceptible during the week. Spanish improved a point on Tuesday, and Mexican made an advance upon the news received vià America, quoting 36¼ to ½. This advance was maintained on Wednesday, and improved on Thursday to 36¼, closing at 36⅜. Spanish Actives are 23⅝; Three per Cent. do, 34⅝. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 62¼; do Five per Cents., 100⅞; Belgian, 103¼; Columbian, 14¼.

The Railway market has been rather declining during the week, although the amount of transactions has been usually extensive. South Easterns are flat, though small dividend declared, and the appropriation of funds not strictly applicable to the revenue account, to make up the requisite amount, is far from satisfactory. The carrying trade is also exciting attention. The French lines are in much demand, and quote different shades of advance. This must, however, be regarded as a speculation which is certainly on the increase in the share market. The closing quotations of lines last dealt in are:—Bristol and Gloucester, 49; Chester and Holyhead, 6⅝; Dublin and Cashel, 10; Birmingham (Stock), 216; Brighton, 47⅛; Greenwich, 10⅛; South Western, 76; Croydon, 16; London and York, 5⅝; South Eastern and Dover, 38; Yarmouth and Norwich, 28; Boulogne and Amiens, 2⅝; Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux, 1⅞; Paris and Rouen, 38⅝; Lynn and Ely, 4; London and Blackwall, 6⅝.

Saturday Morning.—Both the English and Foreign Markets were very inactive yesterday, prices in both remaining at the previous day's quotations. Consols closed at 99⅝ ¾ for money, and 99⅞ for account. The Railway market was very flat, and Birmingham stock receded to 213. Brigtonns were also done at 47. South Westerns quoted 75.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.—S. H. T. BISHOP, Upper Ground-street, Blackfriars, iron merchant.

BANKRUPTS.—G. ROSSITER, Bridgewater, Somersetshire, jeweller. F. C. HOPKINS, Tottenham-court-road, commission agent. S. HADFIELD, Fawcett-street, Manchester, file manufacturer. T and J. JONES, Liverpool, tallow chandlers. J. S. HOLMES, Liverpool, shipbroker. W. TRUMBLE, Liverpool, licensed victualler. W. H. DARKE, Aston juxta Birmingham, chemist. J. CRICH, Sheffield, maltster.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—T. GEMMELL, Riddlaw Wood, Lanarkshire, farmer. A. CARSWELL, Dundee, flax dresser.

Friday, Sept. 20.

WAR OFFICE.—7th Foot: Lieut. D. J. Dickinson, to be Adjutant, vice Dobbie. 30th: Lieut. W. H. Heard to be Captain, vice Brevet Major J. Poyntz; Ensign A. Lowry to be Lieutenant, vice Heard; C. Molyneaux to be Ensign, vice Lowry. 35th: Ensign A. Tisdall to be Lieutenant, vice Harding; A. W. Ord to be Ensign, vice Tisdall. 37th: Lieut C. F Shum to be Captain, vice Brevet Major Lord Keane; Ensign T. Hawley to be Lieutenant vice Shum; J. H Wyatt, Gent., to be Ensign, vice Hawley. 41st: Quartermaster Sergeant J. Gillan to be Quartermaster, vice R. Harker. 60th: Lieut. J. Douglas to be Captain, vice Townsend; Second Lieut. J. Warburton to be First Lieutenant, vice Douglas; W. Hetherington to be Second Lieutenant, vice Warburton. 63rd Foot: Major A. C. Pole to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Logan; Capt. A. G. Sedley to be Major, vice Pole; Lieut. H. W. Coultman to be Captain, vice Sedley; Ensign C. H. Bell to be Lieutenant, vice Coultman; Sergeant Major H. White to be Ensign, vice Bell.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, Sept. 18.—Ordnance Medical Department: Temporary Assistant Surgeon J. M. S Fogo to be Assistant Surgeon.

BANKRUPTS.—F. SHOTTER, Portsea, grocer. W. COLLIER, Cambridge, grocer. F. BATES, Shoreditch, linendraper. B. NICOLL, Rufford's-row, Islington, tailor. T. MARSH, Canterbury, miller. W. SCOVELL, jun., Chilworth, Southampton, builder. E. BURNETT, Riches-court, Lime-street, merchant. J. GRUNDY, Ramsbottom, Lancashire, woollen-manufacturer. J. HIGHAM, Liverpool, provision-dealer. A. PATTERSON, Liverpool, livery-stable-keeper. I. ALDERSON, Warley, Yorkshire, worsted-spinner. J. and W. BALL, Langley, Cheshire, silk-manufacturers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—F. RAE, Glasgow, upholsterer. J. CAMPBELL, M. RAE, and G. JOHNSON, Glasgow, clothiers. A. FRASER and CO., Milntown of Redcastle, Ross-shire, contractors. R. CHARLES, Glasgow, chemist.

BIRTHS.

At Mill-house-cottage, Cumberland, the lady of Colonel Hay, Bengal Army, of a son.——At Westbrook, Hertfordshire, Lady Georgiana Ryder, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Alverstoke, Captain Larcom, Royal Navy, to Miss Westmoreland Jane, daughter of Vice-Admiral M'Kinley.——At Liverpool, Roger Dawson, Esq., to Barbara Yelverton, eldest daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Frederic Powys, and cousin of Lord Lilford.

DEATHS.

The Hon. James Erskine Murray, a younger son of the late Lord Elibank, who was killed by a grape-shot during an action of 37 hour duration with the native pirates of the river Coli, in the island of Borneo. He was shot whilst pointing a gun on board his schooner, Yonge Quene, with which vessel and a brig he had left Hongkong the previous November, with all requisites for forming a settlement on that island.——At Islington, Hannah, the widow of the late Rev. Professor Farish, of Cambridge, aged 77.——At Paris, Ruth Wilson, wife of Major Blundell and sister of the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta.——At Brighton, Thomas Atkins, Esq., late of Walthamstow, Essex, aged 67.——At Rheola, Glamorganshire, Mrs. Edwards Vaughan, widow of John Edwards Vaughan, Esq., formerly M.P., for that county

IRELAND.

MEETING OF THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.

Although the usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday last, did not present such a scene of agitation as on the preceding Monday, yet the hall was very much crowded. The proceedings, however, were not very remarkable. The chairman was the Hon Mr. Hutchinson, the newly-admitted member. Mr. Hutchinson, in the course of a few remarks upon the subject of Repeal, said the Union was a most disastrous measure for Ireland, and that it had been thrust upon the Irish in a moment of weakness. He, therefore, argued that in order to raise the country from the degradation which had come upon it, they should have the Repeal, and to achieve that end they had merely to continue in their present course, and, above all, they should maintain the most conciliatory conduct towards their opponents, not only in this country, but in England.

Some time was occupied in receiving subscriptions from various places.

On the motion of Mr. O'Connell an address was unanimously adopted to the Irish living in Scotland, cautioning them against becoming members of secret societies which were being formed in the latter country.

The association then gave their sanction to a suggestion of the Committee of the Association, offering £100 for the best essay in favour of the Repeal of the Union; for the second best, £75; and for the third best, £50.

Mr. O'Connell then addressed the association in a long speech, devoted to the topics which he had mooted on the previous Monday. He spoke in very confident terms of the Repeal not only being certain, but near at hand, if they behaved with propriety. The hon. and learned member proceeded to say, that his own opinion was, that the Clontarf meeting was now unnecessary; and he was sure if it were not necessary it ought not to be persevered in, as it would be considered to have too much the appearance of triumph and defiance. That meeting had been legally convened; its purposes and its objects were legal; and its suppression was unjustified by law and unsanctioned by any constitutional principle. Need they now vindicate that principle? He thought not; and for this reason, that the indictment itself had done so. The principle was therefore already established, and they were therefore under no necessity of vindicating it. They had had 41 monster meetings. They held them with perfect tranquillity and the absence of the slightest breach of the peace or violation of order. Not even a single accident occurred at any of them, their purpose being to show to the British Parliament and to the people of England the conviction of the great majority of the Irish nation, that their country was misgoverned, and that the Union ought to be repealed. They had demonstrated that completely, and therefore, though he would go through the form of referring the subject to the committee, on account of its importance, it would be with the anticipation that the committee would decide, as he had done, that the Clontarf meeting would not now be necessary. (Hear.) The next subject which he had to refer to was the formation of a preservative society. He thought that society ought to be formed of men who would make a sacrifice for the service of their country, and he thought it would be well that they should be entirely distinct from that association—that each should be distinct from and uncontrolled by the other. Mr. O'Connell next pointed out the course which in his opinion it was best to adopt in regard to the proposals he had already submitted. The third subject which he had to bring forward was that of the impeachment of the Ministry. With respect to the judges, he thought the better course would be to have an address to the Crown from both Houses of Parliament for their removal, as was the case in the removal of Sir J Barrington. He would now come to the address to the people of England, and the impeachment of the Attorney-General. (Cheering.) There was no need for him to enter into the details of the trial, but he wanted to know this:—They had heard much of English sympathy. (Hear, hear.) He was loaded with letters telling him that he was wrong in fixing on the English people the faults of their governors, and that he should not have used such harsh language towards them. Now, he must remind the English people, with all respect, that they had borne with the greatest patience that the Times should lavish the foulest abuse upon their Irish brethren, and should call their priesthood "surpliced ruffians," "hoary-headed incendiaries," "monkish assassins," and themselves "a felonious multitude." (Loud cheering.) Now, if he called them "Saxons" was it not a very mitigated term compared with the language he had quoted from the Times, at the period when it was writing the Whigs out and the Tories in, which it mainly succeeded in by exciting a spirit of anti-Irishism and a "No Popery" cry in England? (Cheers.) "Saxon" was no term of reproach. It was an honoured name, and the purest portion of liberty was derived from Saxon laws and institutions—the Parliamentary system, trial by jury (cheers), and the shrievalty (cheers); but, even if it were a disgraceful name, was not "felonious multitude" rather worse? (Loud cheers.) Was not "hooded assassins" as bad as "Saxon?" Was not "Monkish tyrants and surpliced ruffians" quite as strong as "Saxon?" (Loud cheers.) "But I'll tell Englishmen what I'll do," said the hon gentleman, "I'll make a bargain with them. Let them forgive me 'Saxon,' and I'll forget the compliments of the Times." (Cheers and laughter.) Mr. O'Connell proceeded to eulogise the Covent-garden Theatre dinner, and the warmth of his reception at various towns in England. He was, he continued, now arrived at the time when he would test the English. (Cheers.) There should be no more discussion one way or another, as to what their feelings towards Ireland were. (Cheers.) On this question they would either join Ireland, or not, and one way or another the public mind would be tested. (Loud cheers.) He told England from that place that if she joined them, they would do her ample justice, and would sound her praise in shouts whose echoes should re-echo themselves again. They would pray that she might be great and powerful—that she might obtain every advantage in peace, and victory in war. He promised them, in return, the lion heart and stout heart of Ireland. He offered her the allegiance of the Irish people, which would make Louis Philippe tremble on his throne, and would wipe away the disgrace of Mogadore; but he had his price. He was to be bribed, and his bribe was justice. (Cheers.) In return for that he would make England the greatest of nations. (Cheers.) He was amused with a passage of the judgment of the House of Lords, wherein they commanded that he and his fellows "should be restored to all that they had lost." (Cheers and laughter.) There was the solemn judgment of the House of Lords for them! (Laughter.) How could they give him back three months of his life? (Renewed cheering and laughter.) An inch was a good deal in a man's nose, and three months was something at his time of life. (Cheers and laughter.) They might stop the clock, but not the flood of time.

Mr. O'Connell concluded by drawing a glowing picture of the triumph of the Irish people when their own Parliament should be restored to them. This speech was greeted with uproarious applause. The subjects to which Mr. O'Connell had alluded were referred to committees. The amount of the week's rent was stated to be £715 7s.

Congratulatory Address to Mr. O'Connell.—A calm seems to have succeeded the storm created in Dublin last week by the triumph of the Repealers. On Saturday last a meeting of the Dublin Corporation took place at the Assemby house, the Lord Mayor in the chair, "to present an address of congratulation to Alderman O'Connell, on his liberation from his unjust captivity. After some ordinary business had been disposed of, Mr. Reilly proposed the following resolution:—"That an address of congratulation be presented from this corporation to Mr. O'Connell, on his liberation from his unjust captivity, and that the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the aldermen and town-councillors, do proceed in state to present such address." In doing so, he briefly alluded to the political achievements of Mr. O'Connell, and the fact that it was in that assembly-room "he struck the first blow at the enemies of independence." Mr. M'Loghlin seconded the motion, which passed unanimously. None of the Conservative members of the Council were present.

Departure of Mr. O'Connell.—Mr. O'Connell, it is said, starts for Darrynane shortly after the martyrs' feast, on Thursday. The beagles, it is added, are in training for the "Liberator's" return to his mountain home. On his arrival in Dublin, in November, he promises to attend another feast, to be given in his honour in Meath. It is said that Mr. O'Connell will be present at two more meetings at the Conciliation-hall prior to his departure for Darrynane.

Address from the London Repealers to Mr. O'Connell.—On Monday evening a noisy meeting of the Repealers of London was held at the National Hall, High Holborn, for the purpose of adopting an address of congratulation to Mr. O'Connell and his co-operators, on their release from prison. The meeting was addressed by several members of the Repeal ward, all of whom condemned the late proceedings of the present Ministry towards Ireland and Mr. O'Connell; and they concurred in stating that the Irish nation ought to be ever thankful that such an independent Lord Chief Justice as Lord Denman was still to be found. To him, and also to Lords Campbell and Cottenham, who had delivered their opinions, they believed, entirely divested of any party prejudice or opinion, the thanks of Ireland were due. A long address was adopted, expressing great regard for Mr. O'Connell.

Rejoicings of the Repealers.—According to the Leinster Express, the news of the reversal of the judgment was the cause of several acts of turbulence by the Repealers of the King's and Queen's County, so much so that the magistrates and police had great difficulty in preserving the peace. A Roman Catholic priest, the Rev. Walter Linch, residing at Frankford, would not allow a single candle to be placed in his windows, and the attempt made to illuminate the town is stated to have been done in direct opposition to his expressed wishes. His example, however, appears to have had no imitators, for in the adjoining parish (English) the Rev. Mr. Murt, P.P., had his house brilliantly illuminated; a large fire blazed before his gate, at which an immense mob collected, and remained during the night, dancing, singing, and shouting: and the chapel bell was kept ringing at intervals.

Mr. O'Connell has caused the bed on which he slept during his incarceration to be removed to Merrion-square, and has supplied Mr. Cooper, the deputy-governor, with a new one instead, declaring that he would keep it as a memorial for his children.

The Recordership of Cork is vacant by the death of Mr. Robert Bennett. The appointment is vested by the Irish Municipal Act in the Lord Lieutenant.

Fracas at the Dublin Theatre.—"Norma" was performed on Monday night, to an immense house, and Grisi drew down thunders of applause. In the course of the evening, an unpleasant fracas occurred between an officer of the 11th Hussars (Lieutenant Duncombe) and a gentleman who, not long since, held the office of High Sheriff of the county of Kerry. The officer remained for some time in a standing posture, keeping the door of the box ajar, and, having been first asked by the gentleman whether he had paid for a seat, which was answered in the negative, he was requested to close the door, as the draught of air was too much for the ladies. Mr. Duncombe declining to do so, a warm altercation took place, which ended in a blow being inflicted on the gentleman, who immediately collared his assailant, and a severe scuffle ensued in the box-lobby, in the course of which it is stated that Mr. Duncombe, having been well nigh hors de combat, laid his hand on the hilt of his sword, when, fortunately, some officers of the 11th interposed, and the matter was eventually adjusted to the satisfaction of all parties. It is, however, by no means certain whether the affair is finally settled so far as the military authorities are concerned, for the transaction is in course of investigation before the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Forces. The gentleman first assaulted is Mr. Saunders.

The Addresses to Mr. O'Connell.—On Wednesday a deputation, consisting of the Lord Mayor and several members of the Town-Council, attired in their robes of office, waited upon Mr. O'Connell, at his residence in Merrion-square, Dublin, formally to present him with the address of congratulation which was agreed to at the meeting of the Corporation held on Saturday last. The Lord Mayor having read the address, Mr. O'Connell briefly acknowledged the compliment. He thanked the deputation for the honour they conferred upon him, and after commenting on the late trials he lauded Lords Cottenham, Campbell, and Denman as three of the best judges who ever ornamented the bench. The hon. and learned gentleman apologised to the deputation for appearing before them in his morning gown, having but just risen from bed, to which he had been confined by a severe cold. Similar addresses were presented to Mr. O'Connell from Newry, and from the Corporation of Sligo.

Affair of Honour.—A communication, bearing the signature of "A Sufferer," having been published in the Dublin Monitor, and containing some personal allusions to the pecuniary resources of Mr. Dillon Browne, M.P., that gentleman, through the intervention of his friend and colleague, Mr. Mark Browne, waited on Mr. Coffey, the registered proprietor of the Monitor, requiring him to retract and apologise for the insertion of the offensive paragraph, or be prepared to abide the consequences usual in such cases. Mr. Coffey, however, denied that he was to be held responsible in the matter, inasmuch as there was another channel through which an explanation might be afforded. This was not deemed satisfactory, and Mr. Coffey also fixed on a "friend." A lengthened negotiation ensued without any chance of the matter being amicably adjusted, Mr. Browne concluding the correspondence by informing Mr. Coffey, that he unhesitatingly declared his conduct "as unworthy of a gentleman and a man of courage." On receipt of this letter, Mr. Coffey swore informations against his opponent, and Mr. Browne having voluntarily tendered bail, the affair came on for adjudication before the magistrates of Dublin. Both parties appeared by counsel, and after the necessary quantum of crimination and recrimination had been fairly exhausted, the Bench came to the determination of receiving Mr. Coffey's informations, and holding Mr. Dillon Browne to bail, in his own recognizances of £400, and two sureties of £200 each, to be of the peace towards all her Majesty's subjects for the term of seven years. Sir V. Blake and Mr. Geoghan having given the requisite securities, the parties left the office, and so the matter rests.

Alleged Robbery by an Officer.—Considerable stir has been made at Cork, in consequence of an alleged robbery of plate by Lieut. Puddicombe. It is stated that the Lieutenant is one of two officers of a small detachment of his corps that are borne as supernumeraries on board her Majesty's ship Volage, for service afloat, from which vessel Lieutenant Puddicombe and his men have been disembarked to garrison, under the pendant, the naval portion of the island of Haulbowline. The Cork magistrates have had a private investigation of the affair, and from what has transpired, it appears that the plate was stolen at a ball and supper given by Capt. Augustus Warner at Cove, on the evening of the 26th ult., at which a number of officers attended, and amongst the rest, Lieut. Puddicombe. The following morning some of the plate was missed, amongst which were pieces of Capt. Warner's, and other pieces that he had borrowed from friends for the occasion. The pieces missed were two dinner-forks, crest, a stag's head, and initials, "T.M.A.;" one dinner-fork, crest, a stag's head on a coronet; one dinner fork, with a lion rampant, holding a spear; a dinner-spoon, with a lion rampant; a spoon, with a star; and a spoon, with a stag's head and initials, "T.M.A." Captain Warner identified a piece of the silver, with a star on it, as his property. The servants at Coolgrena were examined, and stated many circumstances that took place on the night of the ball, and one of them swore that, after the company had retired from the supper-room, and when dancing was resumed in the ball-room, the lights were removed from the former. After supper, Mr. Puddicombe waltzed with a lady, and then went up to the supper-room, which was dark, apparently unobserved by the company. Evidence was then given, to the effect that Mr. Puddicombe had attempted to sell the silver in question. The magistrates agreed to take bail, but as the accused could not procure any, he was removed in custody.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Grisi, Mario, and F. Lablache.—This celebrated trio are to appear in Brighton early in October, at concerts which are to be given in the Town Hall, &c. We have not yet seen the programme, but no doubt it will consist of their choicest morceaux.

Braham.—This veteran vocalist, with his two sons, has, during the last week, given two concerts in the Town-hall, at Brighton, which were brilliantly attended. No diminution of the great singer's powers was perceptible.

Lover.—This triplex artist—painter, poet, and musician—has been delighting the good folks of Brighton by his inimitable songs and narratives. The portraits of his pen are quite as striking as those of his pencil. He was enthusiastically received at his first two concerts, and at the general request of his friends and the public he gave a third entertainment on last Thursday, which proved to be equally attractive.

Covent Garden Theatre.—This house, we understand, has been taken by Messrs. Laurent and Mason, with the intention of hiring it out by the night, week, or month, to everything that may come in the way. We believe Jullien's concerts will be the first entertainments on the list, after which, it is rumoured, Mr. Macready will appear. Next French opera comique, and probably a spice of Italian or German will be produced—altogether forming an olla podrida season.

Decline of the Drama in America.—The New York Herald of the 15th August gives the following doleful picture of the state of the drama in America:—Not for a long time past have theatricals been so dull throughout the Union as they are just now. In New York all the theatres, with the exception of Niblo's, are closed; and the same may be said of the other large cities throughout the States. With the exception of those establishments to which are attached gardens, and a few of the museums, there is little or nothing doing. The consequence is, that a whole host of third and fourth-rate performers are "gentlemen with all the outs," living on their resources. The prospect for the legitimate drama during the ensuing season is but very indifferent, indeed; how far the different lady-managers may be able to resuscitate it, remains to be seen. The taste of the people of this country, like that of the old, has undergone a very material change of late years. Music and opera are all the rage; and the artists in this line, from the sublime Ole Bull to the ebony performers on the bone castanets, are drawing overflowing houses wherever they go. Mr. Macready, "the last of the cocked hats," has, in all probability, gleaned the last sheaves in the field of the legitimate drama in this country.

Brighton Theatre.—Mr. Wallack is displaying his versatile genius in a round of different parts; his Shylock and Walter, on the same evening, afford a pleasant contrast. The houses have been gradually improving, since his first appearance on Monday last. Wallack, if he be not an Edmund Kean, is the first actor of the day. There is an honest earnestness in his manner, and a gallant bearing about him which at once enlist you in his favour. Moreover, he is a most correct reader—never interrupting his author's meaning by unnecessary starts and pauses, as is the case with some others who have found favour in the public's eyes.

THE QUEEN'S SECOND VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

(Continued from page 185.)

Athol-house. Her Majesty returned to the castle about five o'clock. The evening was very wet.

The dinner party in the evening was the same as on the previous day, with the exception of Lord and Lady Glenlyon, who did not dine at the castle. The Hon. Mr. Drummond and Mr. Murray Drummond, the officers immediately in command of the guard of Athol Highlanders, dined with her Majesty.

This morning the weather continued wet, until about half-past nine o'clock, when it had sufficiently cleared up to enable her Majesty to take her accustomed walk in the grounds. The Princess Royal also took walking exercises in the grounds, attended by a nurse.

In her drive yesterday her Majesty was accompanied by Prince Albert, who had returned early from grouse shooting on the hills, where his Royal Highness had some excellent sport. At half-past three his Royal Highness rode back to the castle, and drove her Majesty out in the pony phaeton, preceded by outriders—Lord Glenlyon and Sir Edward Bowater rode on either side of the carriage, the Highland chieftain wearing the two eagle's feathers in his bonnet. On the return of her Majesty to the castle, a Scotch peasant, who had been evincing his loyalty in copious libations in honour of the Queen, staggered into the castle, and entered the room where the illustrious party were assembled with far less ceremony and discrimination than were displayed by the "boy Jones." The intruder was forthwith handed over to the tender mercies of the local police.

Within the last few days, there has been a fresh influx of visitors and tourists, who are anxious to combine the pleasures of seeing their sovereign and the beauties of Scottish scenery. The two hotels, the Blair of Athol Inn and the Bridge of Tilt Inn, are completely inundated—people are glad to be allowed to lie down indiscriminately under the dining-tables; every bed-room boasts of three or four occupants, and when they wake in the morning they find themselves placed by the side of some drowsy stranger, with whom they had not the honour of any previous acquaintance, and who had been billeted upon them by an unceremonious landlord during their peaceful slumbers.

The following letter from Dundee gives some information in regard to the return of her Majesty, and also comprises a few interesting incidents connected with the voyage to Dundee, which have not been before noticed.

Orders have been received on board the royal steam-yacht Victoria and Albert to have every thing ready for her Majesty's embarkation on Monday, the 30th instant, on which day her Majesty has signified her intention of leaving Scotland on her return voyage. The yacht is still lying in the river Tay, off Dundee, and it is understood that her Majesty will embark at the same place where she landed, and that the royal party will leave Blair Athol on Monday morning, the 30th, immediately after breakfast, and arrive in Dundee between three or four o'clock the same afternoon, whence they will proceed at once on board the yacht. By this arrangement her Majesty will arrive at Woolwich near midday on Wednesday. The voyage from the river to Dundee occupied upwards of forty-two hours, and, calculating that it will take the same time to return, should her Majesty embark at Dundee at four o'clock on Monday, the 30th, the yacht will reach Woolwich on Wednesday, October 2nd, about ten o'clock.

During her Majesty's voyage from the Nore to Dundee, the weather continued throughout particularly favourable, and enabled her Majesty to spend a great portion of her time on deck, and thus to have the full benefit of the invigorating sea breezes. The Princess Royal was in excellent spirits, and seemed quite delighted at all she witnessed. She did not confine herself to the quarter-deck, but ran occasionally forward, followed by her attendant, asking numerous questions, and laughing heartily at everything that particularly pleased her. There was one circumstance appeared to amuse her very much. While she was on the quarter deck, in company with her Majesty and Prince Albert, a little boy, a native of China, who is in the service of Commander Hall, was presented to the Queen in his Chinese costume, when he exhibited to her Majesty the forms of paying respect to the Mandarins of China. This so pleased the Princess Royal that the boy was presented to her, and went through the same forms before her Royal Highness, which so amused her that she was laughing heartily the whole time. Her Majesty is particularly partial to the sea, and feels quite at home on board the yacht. Although surrounded by upwards of a hundred seamen, her Majesty's privacy is less invaded, and she is more free from anything like intrusion, than she would be if travelling on shore. British sailors, generally, are more polite and considerate than many persons give them credit for.

At twelve o'clock, a signal was made to the Black Eagle, to try her rate of sailing with the royal yacht. For the first half hour, both vessels kept nearly their own, with a very slight advantage to the Black Eagle. During the next hour, the Black Eagle continued drawing ahead of the Victoria and Albert, though but very slowly, for at this period she was very little more than a quarter of a mile ahead. After four hours hard struggle the Black Eagle beat the yacht by one mile.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal, were in excellent health during the whole voyage. The weather was very fine and moderate, and there was but little sea on, so that none of the royal party felt the slightest inconvenience, and were quite free from the malady which generally affects those not accustomed to the sea.

Blair Athol, Sunday.

Her Majesty drove out towards Bruar yesterday afternoon in a carriage and four with outriders. Her Majesty was accompanied by the Princess Royal, Lady Caroline Cocks, and Viscountess Canning. Sir Edward Bowater rode by the side of the carriage on horseback. Her Majesty made a second effort to see the falls of Bruar yesterday, but unfortunately, on arriving at the bottom of the fall, a pitiless storm compelled her Majesty to make a precipitate retreat to the castle.

Yesterday, the Prince went out at two o'clock deer stalking to Glenclynie, in the neighbourhood of the castle. He went on a shooting pony, and was accompanied by Lord Glenlyon. The Prince remained out until seven o'clock in the evening. The Prince shot three of the finest harts that have been shot this season. One of them weighed 16 or 18 stone.

The Princess Royal rode out on her pony in the grounds.

The dinner party yesterday consisted, besides the Queen and Prince Albert, of the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Charles Wellesley, Lady Canning, Lady Caroline Cocks, Sir Edward Bowater, and Mr. Anson.

Her Majesty's health appears to be gradually improving. Although the weather has latterly been unfavourable, she has been out every day, enjoying the fine air of this place. Her Majesty seems to look better every day. The inhabitants of the place and the visitors appear to have discovered that her Majesty desires privacy, for they now make no attempt to cheer her, but merely take off their hats, and bow as she passes along. The Princess Royal is in excellent health.

Blair Athol, Monday.

The rain continued to fall without intermission throughout the whole of yesterday, but the inclemency of the weather did not deter her Majesty from attending divine service at the village. With that punctuality for which every member of the royal family has been so eminently distinguished, her Majesty arrived at this humble place of worship, a few minutes before the commencement of divine service. Lord and Lady Glenlyon, in their britschka, preceded the royal party, and shortly after the arrival of his lordship, one of the royal close carriages, with a pair of horses and a single outrider, was seen driving rapidly down the avenue which leads from the principal entrance to the castle. The guard of Athol Highlanders, who were stationed at the gate which has been recently erected, presented arms as the royal carriage drove along the road; and Lord Glenlyon, accompanied by several of his noble relatives and clansmen, including the Master of Strathallan, Sir David Dundas, Kier of Kindroggan, Oswald of Dunnikier, Captain Drummond, &c., all of whom were attired in the national costume, were drawn up outside the porch of the village church to receive her Majesty. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Viscountess Canning, and Lady Caroline Cocks, were also in the royal carriage.

The engraving represents her Majesty and the Prince Consort alighting, and received by Lord Glenlyon Lady Glenlyon; being seated in the Royal carriage.

On alighting, her Majesty was conducted by her noble host to his lordship's pew, and shortly after the arrival of her Majesty another of the royal carriages drew up to the church, containing Lord Aberdeen, Lord Liverpool, Lord Charles Wellesley, Mr. G. Anson, and Sir James Clarke, all of whom occupied places in the back of the royal pew. Upon these feudal principles, also, which even upon the present occasion were not departed from, places were assigned in the back of the pew for Lord Glenlyon's steward, and some few of the principal members of his lordship's household. The Highland chieftain, with Lady Glenlyon, sat beside Lady Canning, in the front seat with her Majesty.

Divine service then commenced according to the Presbyterian form of worship. A psalm was first sung in excellent time and tune. The clergyman, Mr. Irvine, then delivered an extempore prayer, after which another psalm was sung, and the sermon followed, Mr. Irvine taking his text from the thirteenth verse of the fifth chapter of Matthew:—"Ye are the salt of the earth."

Mr. Irvine's sermon was a plain, straightforward discourse, devoid of all flourishes of rhetoric, and was delivered in a broad Scotch accent; but Mr. Irvine's enunciation was so clear and distinct that every word was perfectly intelligible to the English portion of the congregation.

After the service, according to a custom still existing in some parts of Scotland, wooden boxes attached to thin poles, and called "ladles" by the Scotch, were handed into all the pews, in order that every member of the congregation might contribute his mite towards the support of the parochial poor. Her Majesty appeared to look with great interest at this method of collecting alms, and Prince Albert was evidently anxious to contribute; but a plate being placed at the kirk door, at the entrance to the chieftain's pew, enabled her Majesty, the Prince, and the members of the suite, to leave their donations on going out of the church.

At the conclusion of the service, her Majesty was conducted to her carriage by Lord Glenlyon, an umbrella being held over her Majesty to protect her from the rain, which continued to pour in ceaseless torrents. Her Majesty was fortunately provided with India-rubber goloshes, or she would have infallibly caught cold, as the thick muddy newly-laid gravel, through which the Queen was compelled to pass, was but little adapted for lightly-shod ladies. Her Majesty wore a black silk dress with a mantelet of the same material, and a white drawn crape bonnet. Prince Albert wore a white hat with a crape, and all the members of her Majesty's suite also wore the court mourning.

At four o'clock the rain suddenly ceased; her Majesty availed herself of the propitious change in the weather, and left the castle in her garden chair, drawn by two servants in plain liveries; her Majesty was accompanied by Prince Albert, and proceeded through the grounds to view the Falls of the Tilt and the Fender, which had derived additional grandeur from the recent heavy rain. Her Majesty returned to the castle shortly before seven. There was no addition to the royal dinner circle last evening.

At an early hour this morning her Majesty walked abroad with the Prince to enjoy the fresh morning air. The rain had entirely ceased during the night, and as the day dawned the sun shone forth in all its splendour, and showed the surrounding scenery in all its beauty. Her Majesty and her illustrious Consort were accompanied in the morning walk through the grounds by the Princess Royal, who was mounted on a Shetland pony, and attended by a groom and servant.

After breakfast the Prince left the castle with Lord Glenlyon to shoot grouse on the hills around the castle, which have been hitherto strictly preserved.

Blair Athol, Tuesday.

Her Majesty continues in the enjoyment of excellent health and spirits, and her complexion has already begun to glow under the rude hand of health, whose established dwelling-place is in the hills and glens of Scotland. Prince Albert and the Princess Royal also begin to show the beneficial effects of their residence here. The Princess Royal, mounted on a Shetland pony, and attended by a groom and servant, always accompanies her Majesty and the Prince in their morning walk throngh the grounds.

Prince Albert left the castle shortly after luncheon, and proceeded to the hills immediately in front of the castle, to have some grouse shooting. His Royal Highness was accompanied by his noble host, who merely went with the Prince to point out the most probable places for finding the game. The Prince had some excellent sport, considering the short period which he remained on the hill. His Royal Highness shot eight brace of grouse, a snipe, and a golden plover, and returned to the castle shortly after three, to accompany her Majesty in her drive. Lord Liverpool, who was grouse shooting in a different part of the hill-side, shot six brace of grouse during the course of the afternoon. Lord Glenlyon did not shoot, and respectfully declined the courteous entreaties of his royal guest to partake of the sport.

At half-past three in the afternoon her Majesty and the Prince left the castle in a pony phaeton, with out-riders, to inspect the Falls of Bruar, which are about three miles distant from Blair Athol, on the high road to Inverness. Lord Glenlyon and Lord Charles Wellesley, the chieftain being as usual attired in the Highland costume, rode on either side of the phaeton. On arriving at the cottage of an antique Highland Naiad, the presiding deity of these Falls, her Majesty alighted, and ascended the gravel walk, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert. Her Majesty was struck with the beauty of the scene, and declared that each succeeding object which met her view surpassed its predecessor in beauty and interest. The Falls were seen to great advantage, and the roaring of the waters through the craggy moss-grown chasm was considerably increased by the heavy rains which had fallen during the preceding days; in ascending some of the steeper acclivities which lead to the topmost portion of the Falls, her Majesty entered her garden chair, which was drawn by two servants in plain liveries, and had been previously sent on for the use of her Majesty.

THE ROYAL ENTRY INTO BLAIR ATHOL.

The Royal party did not return to the castle until a late hour. Covers were laid for sixteen. The dinner party consisted of Lord and Lady Glenlyon, Miss Murray, Oswald of Dunnikier, and Small Kier of Kindroggan, the Officers of her Majesty's guard of Athol Highlanders, with the members of her Majesty's suite.

Her Majesty took her accustomed walk in the grounds this morning, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Princess Royal. Gravel walks are being laid down and carefully rolled along the banks at the pass of Killiecrankie, for her Majesty has expressed her intention of paying a second visit to the sublime scenery at the bottom of the pass during her sojourn at Blair Athol.

Prince Albert and Lord Glenlyon, both attired in shooting jackets and caps, have just left the castle in his lordship's phaeton, to try some moors in a distant part of the Athol estates; the Prince will, however, return to the castle to accompany her Majesty in her afternoon drive.

The weather is as propitious as could be desired, which enables her Majesty and the Prince to pass a great portion of their time in the open air.

There is a rumour that the Queen intends to visit some parts of the Western Highlands and Islands before returning to England, and that the royal yacht will be ordered round to the west coast to receive her. Staffa and Iona are mentioned as likely to be visited by her Majesty, in which case she will probably return by Inverary and the Clyde. A little incident occurred on Sunday which has created some observation in the dearth of more important or stirring matter. In reading the usual prayer for the Royal Family at church, the clergyman inadvertently omitted that for Prince Albert, and the Queen when leaving the church laughed and good-humouredly quizzed the Prince upon the circumstance of his being excluded from the prayers of the congregation. Whatever occasioned her mirth, the Queen was certainly smiling and talking earnestly to the Prince on leaving the church. It might have been caused by the mistake of the Prince, who, when the wooden ladles were being handed round at the offertory, put his hand in his pocket and took out some gold, but the ladles were not thrust into the royal pew.

Although the majority of our illustrations have been severally referred to in our narrative of the Royal Visit, it may be interesting to add a few incidental notes on the localities and incidents.

The second engraving—King William the Fourth's Dock at Dundee—presents a very attractive appearance. Our artist was highly favoured in being the only person allowed to be in that part whence the sketch was taken. The Royal party were attired in mourning: Prince Albert wore a white hat, with a crape band; and the Princess Royal wore white trousers. The guard presenting arms are the Rifles. The triumphal arch erected here was raised within 55 hours: it was designed by Mr. Leslie, civil engineer, and constructed under the superintendence of Mr. C. Ower; the contractor for the work being Mr. Boyd: it had a fine and imposing effect, with its appearance of solid masonry so artfully counterfeited as at a very short distance to bid defiance to detection.

In the High street, at Dundee (see the third engraving), firs were planted across the street, and festooned with flowers, which had a very pleasing effect. The guard presenting arms here also are the Rifles; and the body guard, the Scotch Greys. A little to the west of this street, in the Nethergate, are the remains of an old cathedral, which contained four places of worship, one of which was pure Gothic. Three of these churches were completely destroyed by fire, on Sunday morning, Jan. 3, 1841; measures were taken for repairing or rebuilding two of them, and of these one is just completed. This structure is said to have been originally built by David, Earl of Huntingdon, in 1185: at the west end is a tower, 156 feet high.

The Pass of Killiecrankie (a portion of which is shown in the next view,) communicates with the Blair of Athol, and stretches for the space of a mile or upwards along the termination of the River Garry. The hills rise from the bed of the river, flanking it on the western bank with a precipitous wall. The bold rocks, lining its channel, are mantled over with masses of waving ash, birch, and oak, the light and graceful foliage of which, moving and changing its lines with every breeze, contrasts finely with the bleak crags that start at intervals through its leafy screen, and at length soar into the abrupt and rugged outline of Ben-Vracky.

This pass, in reference to its military history, has been styled the Scottish Thermopylæ, and until the present road was constructed, might have been called with no less propriety the Via-Mala of Scotland. But the dangers of the pass, which contributed not a little to its sublimity, have disappeared with the progress of art, and those unprecedented facilities of intercourse which have been thrown open by modern enterprise.

The next engraving shows Blair Castle, as seen from Ben-y-glo, which almost aspires to the rank of mountain. Some of these hills are clothed to the tops with fir, relieved by masses of rich verdure; others are more barren, but strikingly grand. At all hours of the day—from the early morning, when the summits of the hills are hidden in mists, to the night, when their bold outlines form a grand amphitheatre enclosing the domain—the scene is beautiful in the extreme.

Blair Castle is, by no means, the castellated structure which its name imports. It is a large, straggling, and irregular building, which, upon a near approach, arranges itself into a central mansion of three stories, extending to the width of eight windows in front, and two in depth, without any architectural pretensions, the battlements and bastions with which it was formerly surmounted and flanked having been long since swept away, in order to disarm it of the importance attached to it in the feudal times, as the key of the pass into the northern Highlands, and commanding the valley and pass of Killiecrankie. On the left of the main building, and nearer the high road from Perth to Inverness, is a long and low range of buildings, which contains many large and convenient apartments, in which ample accommodation has been found for her Majesty's suite and attendants. Behind these are extensive offices and stabling, all built in the most plain and unpretending style, which is the character of the whole edifice, although there are several spacious and magnificent apartments on the basement and principal story, furnished in excellent taste.

The castle fronts the south, and although environed on all sides by lofty hills, is situated on a high range of table land, which is completely shut out from the lower valley of the Tay by the mountains forming the defile of Killiecrankie. Although there are few trees, and those of small size, in the neighbourhood of the castle, all the mountains around it are clothed nearly to their summits with wood, the dark and majestic forest of Athol forming, with the lofty and cloud-capped range of the Grampians in the distance, a splendid background to the picture. The main entrance, from which the castle is distant about half a mile, fronts the high road from Perth, and is a massive turreted structure, one of the few remaining relics of the old feudal times. The scenery in the neighbourhood is extremely wild and romantic: deep ravines, through which the mountain streams find their way to the Tummel or the Garry; lofty cataracts appearing at a distance like silver threads running down the precipitous sides of the mountains; dark masses of larch and fir, and the bold and naked crags towering above all, form a combination of natural beauties which have rendered this portion of the Highlands deservedly celebrated.

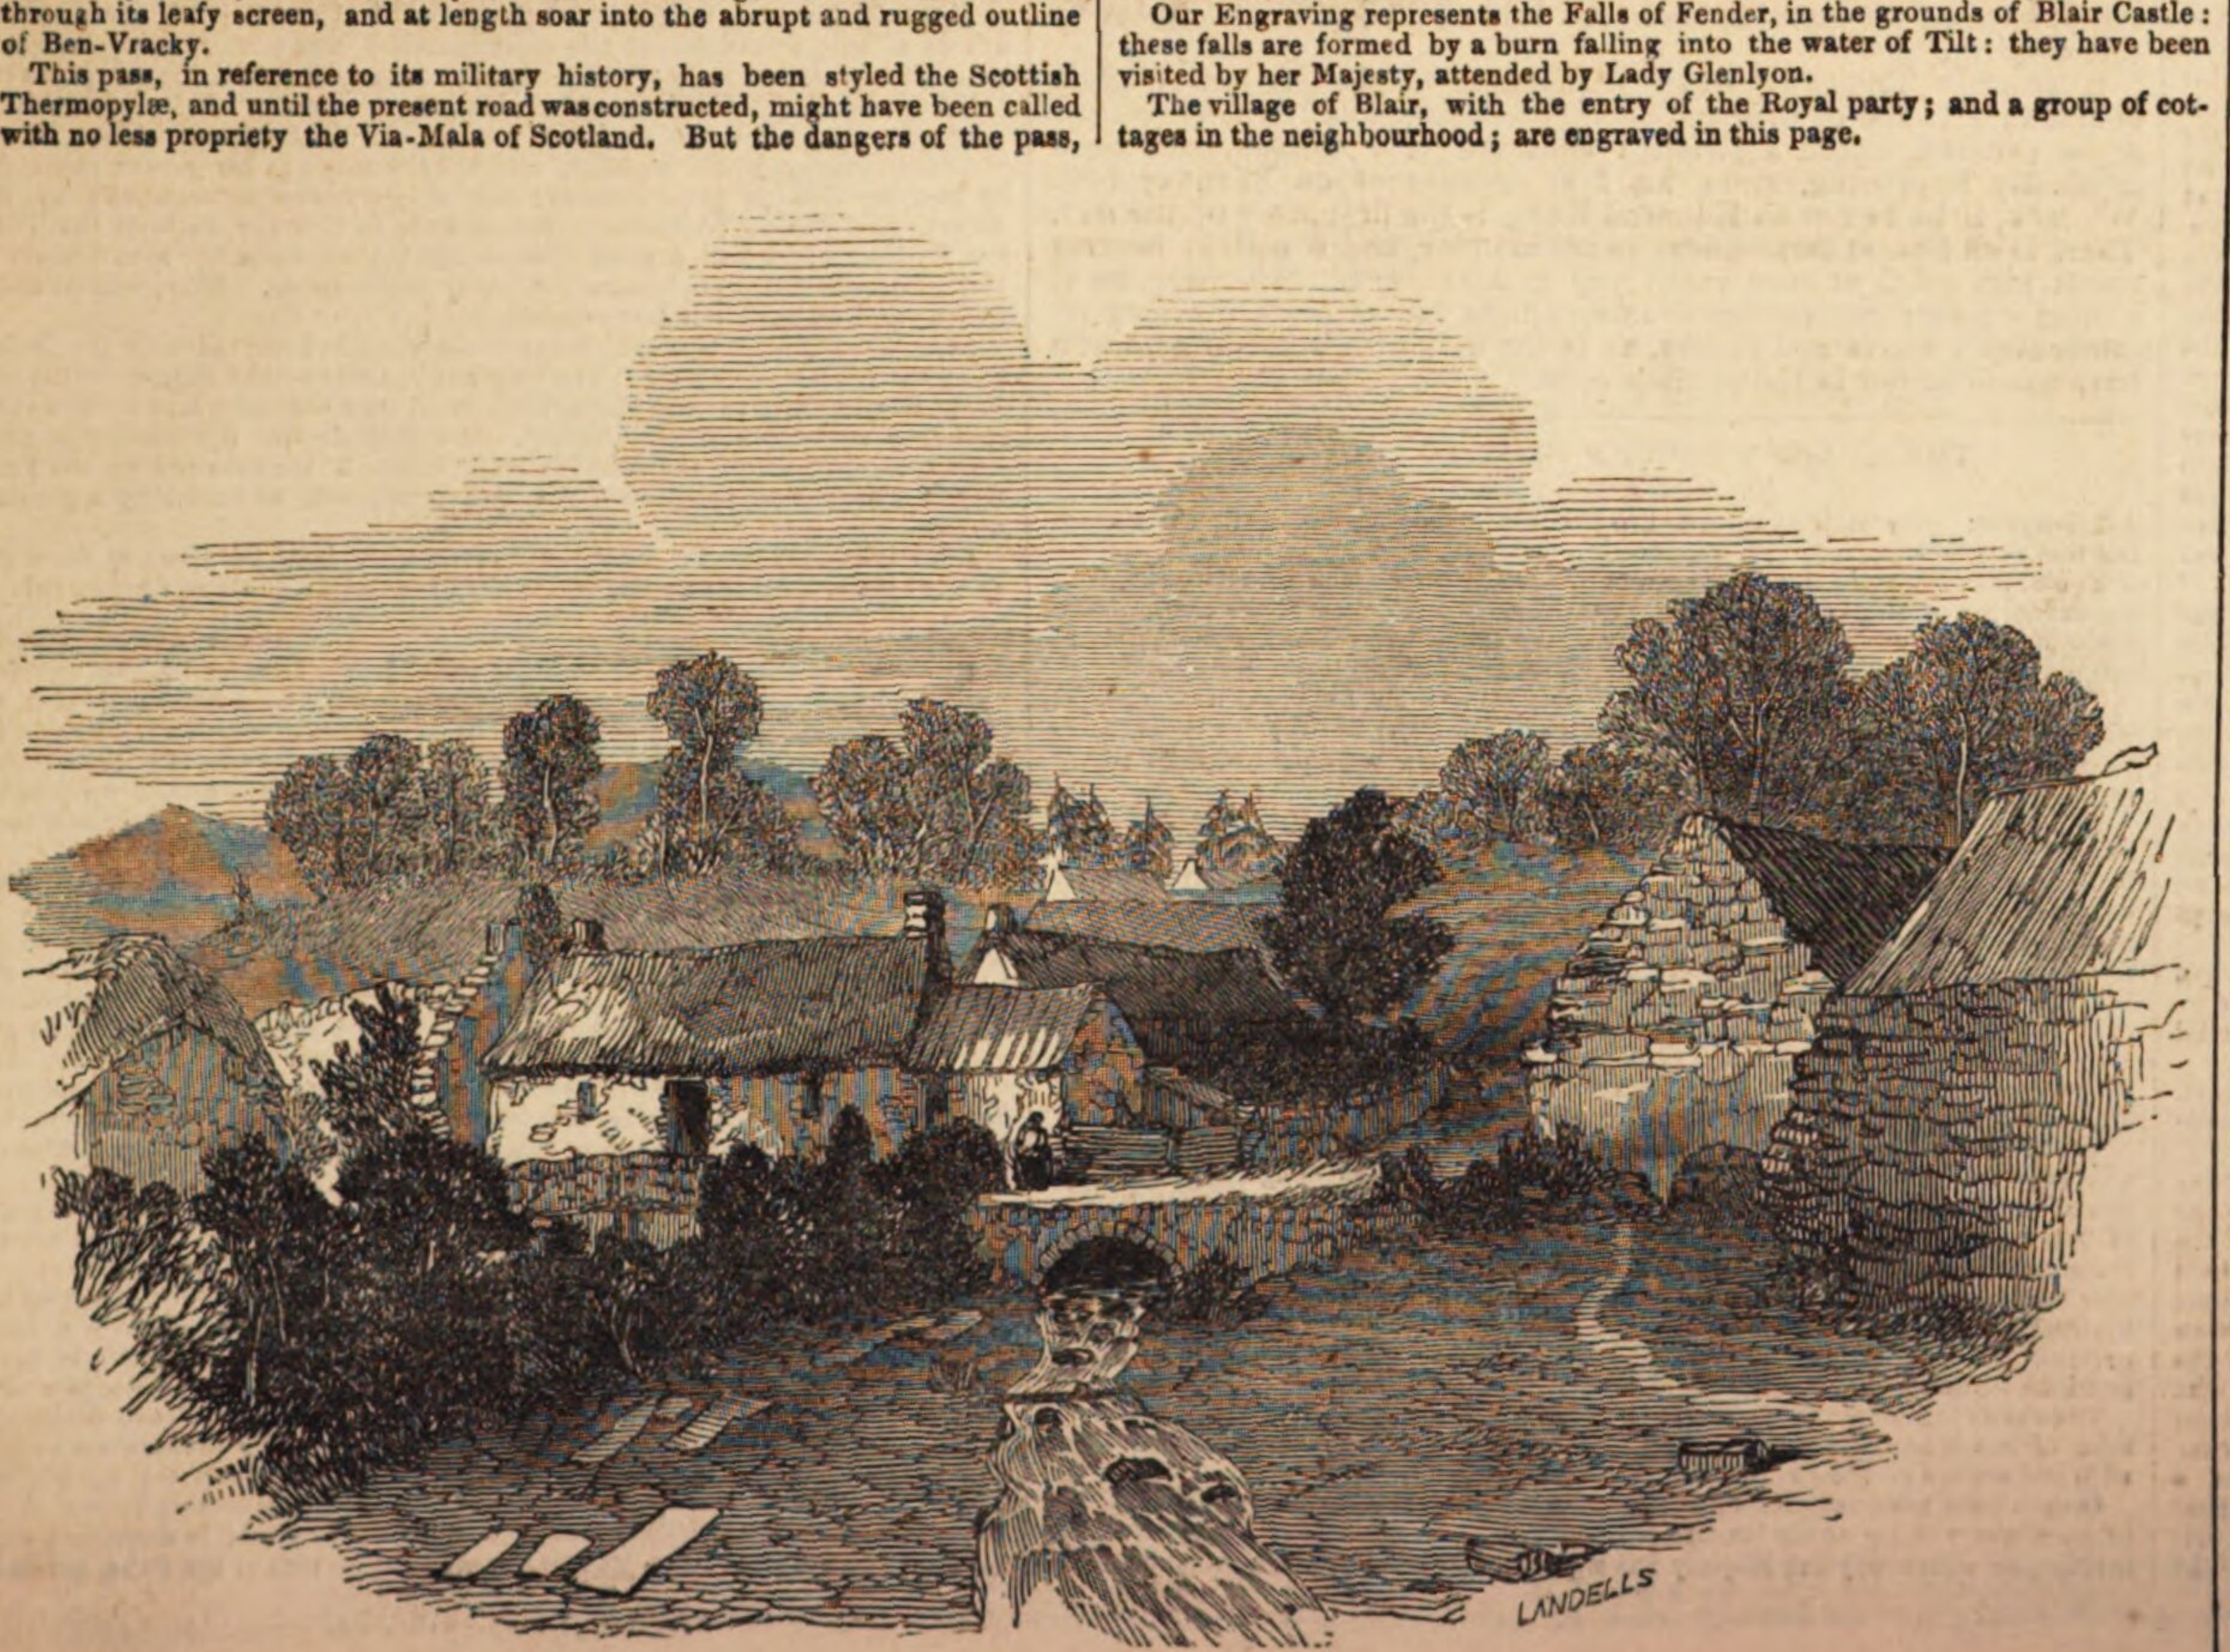
The historical recollections connected with the castle are extremely interesting. In 1644 it was besieged by Montrose, who experienced a very unexpected resistance on the part of the brave men by whom it was garrisoned, which compelled him to retire. In 1655, Colonel Daniel, one of Oliver Cromwell's generals, marched against it with a numerous and well-appointed army, and eventually succeeded in taking it by storm. It afterwards, when under the command of Sir Andrew Agnew, stood a long and vigorous siege against the troops of the Pretender immediately preceding the battle of Culloden, which compelled the assailing party to raise the siege. But the most striking event in which it formed a prominent part was the well-known and bloody battle of Killiecrankie between Lord Dundee and the Government forces, under the command of General Mackey.

The castle, with the rides and drives surrounding it, has an air of the most perfect seclusion and repose.

The gardens extend along the Tay, and command the most delightful and picturesque views. In the immediate vicinity, several thousand acres of forest trees were planted between forty and fifty years ago, greatly improving and ornamenting the scenery around the Duke's domain. On the opposite side of the Tay, is Birnam Hill, the lower part of which was covered with trees in the time of Macbeth, and now celebrated for its blue slate quarries. The extensive lawn on which the castle stands, is nearly 450 feet above the level of the sea at Panbridge. On the river Bruar, about three miles from the village of Blair, there are several beautiful cascades, one of which is between 150 and 200 feet in height.

Our Engraving represents the Falls of Fender, in the grounds of Blair Castle: these falls are formed by a burn falling into the water of Tilt: they have been visited by her Majesty, attended by Lady Glenlyon.

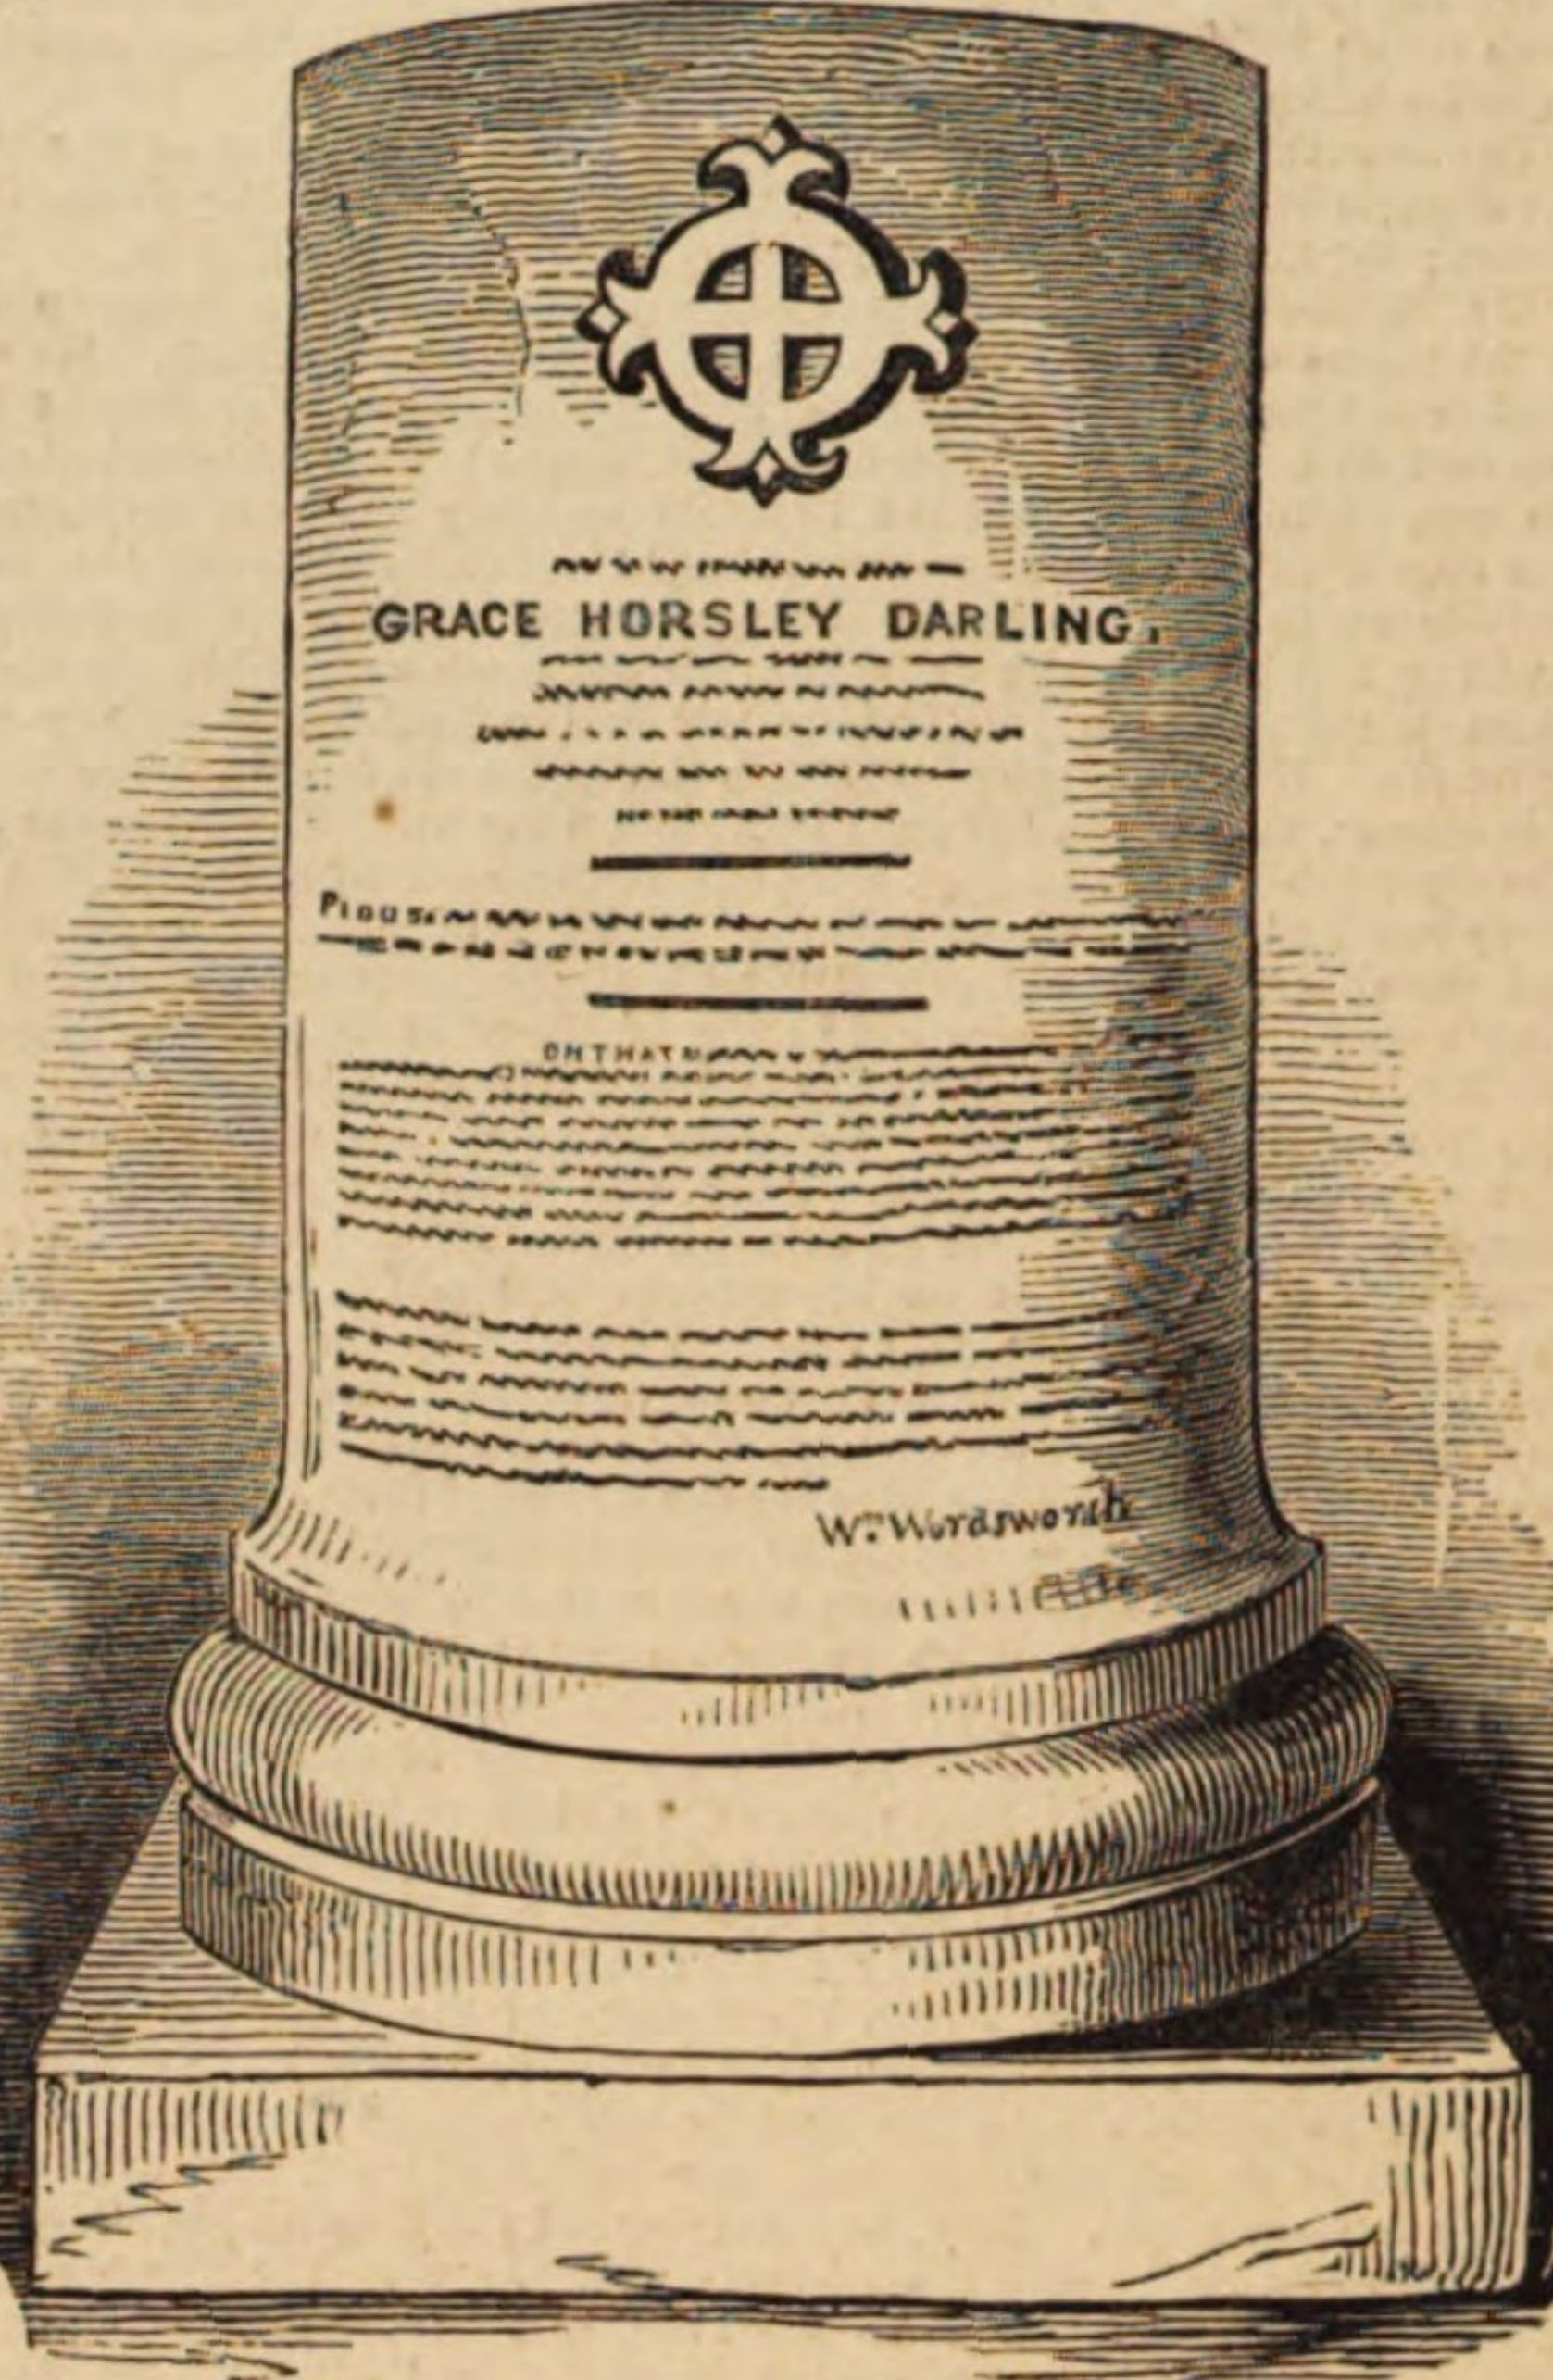
The village of Blair, with the entry of the Royal party; and a group of cottages in the neighbourhood; are engraved in this page.



COTTAGES AT BLAIR ATHOL.

MONUMENT TO GRACE DARLING.

Upon no occasion has the public sympathy been more worthily excited than by the untimely fate of Grace Darling; and, to perpetuate these sentiments, as well as to awaken kindred courage, and cherish kindred virtue, in the breasts of future generations, it has been resolved to erect a monument to the memory of the gentle maiden. Mr. Davies, the sculptor, of Newcastle, has received the commission to execute this interesting but unostentatious memorial, to be placed in St. Cuthbert's Chapel, on Fern Island. It will be, as the engraving shows, a cippus, of stone, six feet in height; with the cross of St. Cuthbert, and the following inscription:



MONUMENT TO GRACE DARLING.

To the Memory of GRACE HORSLEY DARLING,
A Native of Bamburgh,
And an Inhabitant
Of these Islands;
Who Died Oct. 20th, A.D. 1842,
Aged 26 Years.

Pious and pure, modest and yet so brave,
Though young so wise, though meek so resolute.

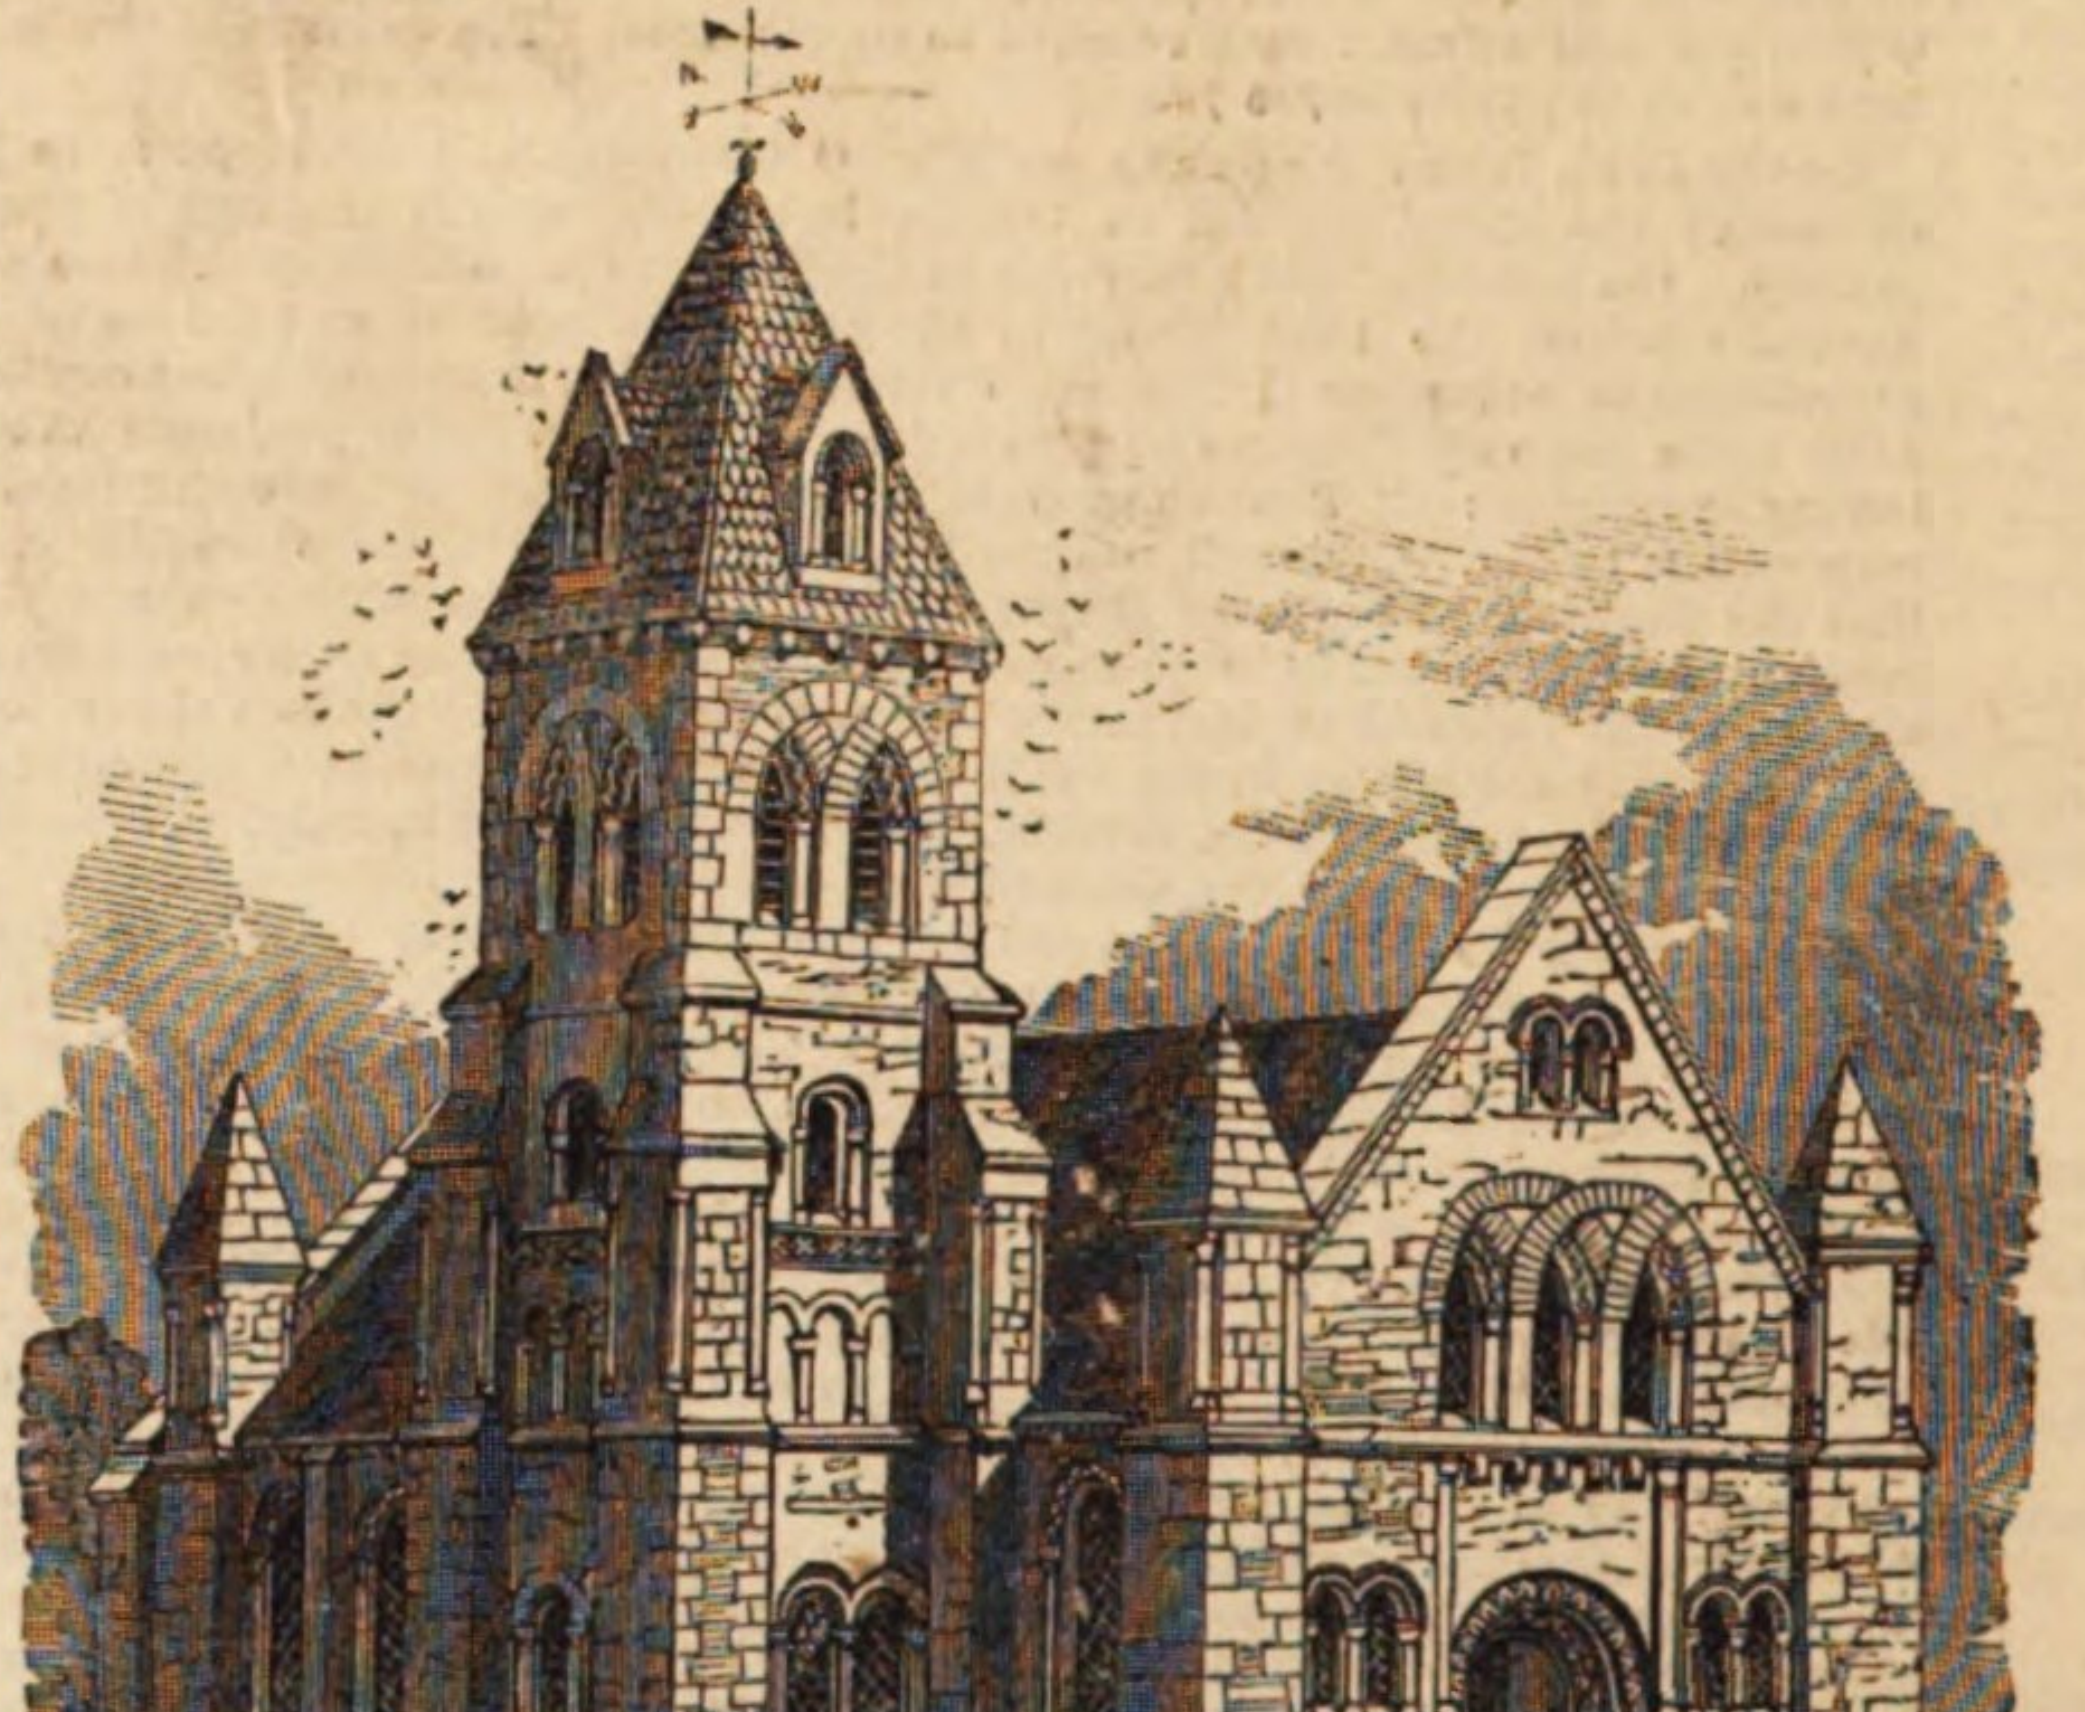
Oh! that winds and waves could speak
Of things which their united power called forth
From the pure depths of her humanity!
A maiden gentle, yet, at duty's call,
Firm and unflinching as the lighthouse reared
On the island-rock, her lonely dwelling-place;
Or like the invincible rock itself that braves,
Age after age, the hostile elements,
As when it guarded holy Cuthbert's cell—

All night the storm had raged, nor ceased, nor paused,
When, as day broke, the maid, through misty air,
Espies far off a wreck, amid the surf,
Beating on one of those disastrous isles—
Half of a vessel, half—no more; the rest
Had vanished!

Wm. Wordsworth.

NEW CHURCH, NEAR OSWESTRY.

Impure examplars of the Norman style of architecture are becoming nearly as abundant as "carpenter's Gothic," among our new churches. The specimen here engraved is, however, a meritorious exception to the above architectural delinquency: it is pure Norman; and, although it will contain 480 sittings, the actual cost of the structure will be £1450, which is a small sum. We mention this circumstance as a set off to the plea so frequently urged in extenuation of the poverty of the pseudo Norman and Gothic churches of our day—disproportionate funds. Now, here is an instance of preserving strict architectural character at a comparatively small cost, which is highly creditable to the skill of the architects, the Messrs. Pearsons, of Oswestry, from whose design, and under whose superintendence, the above church has been erected.



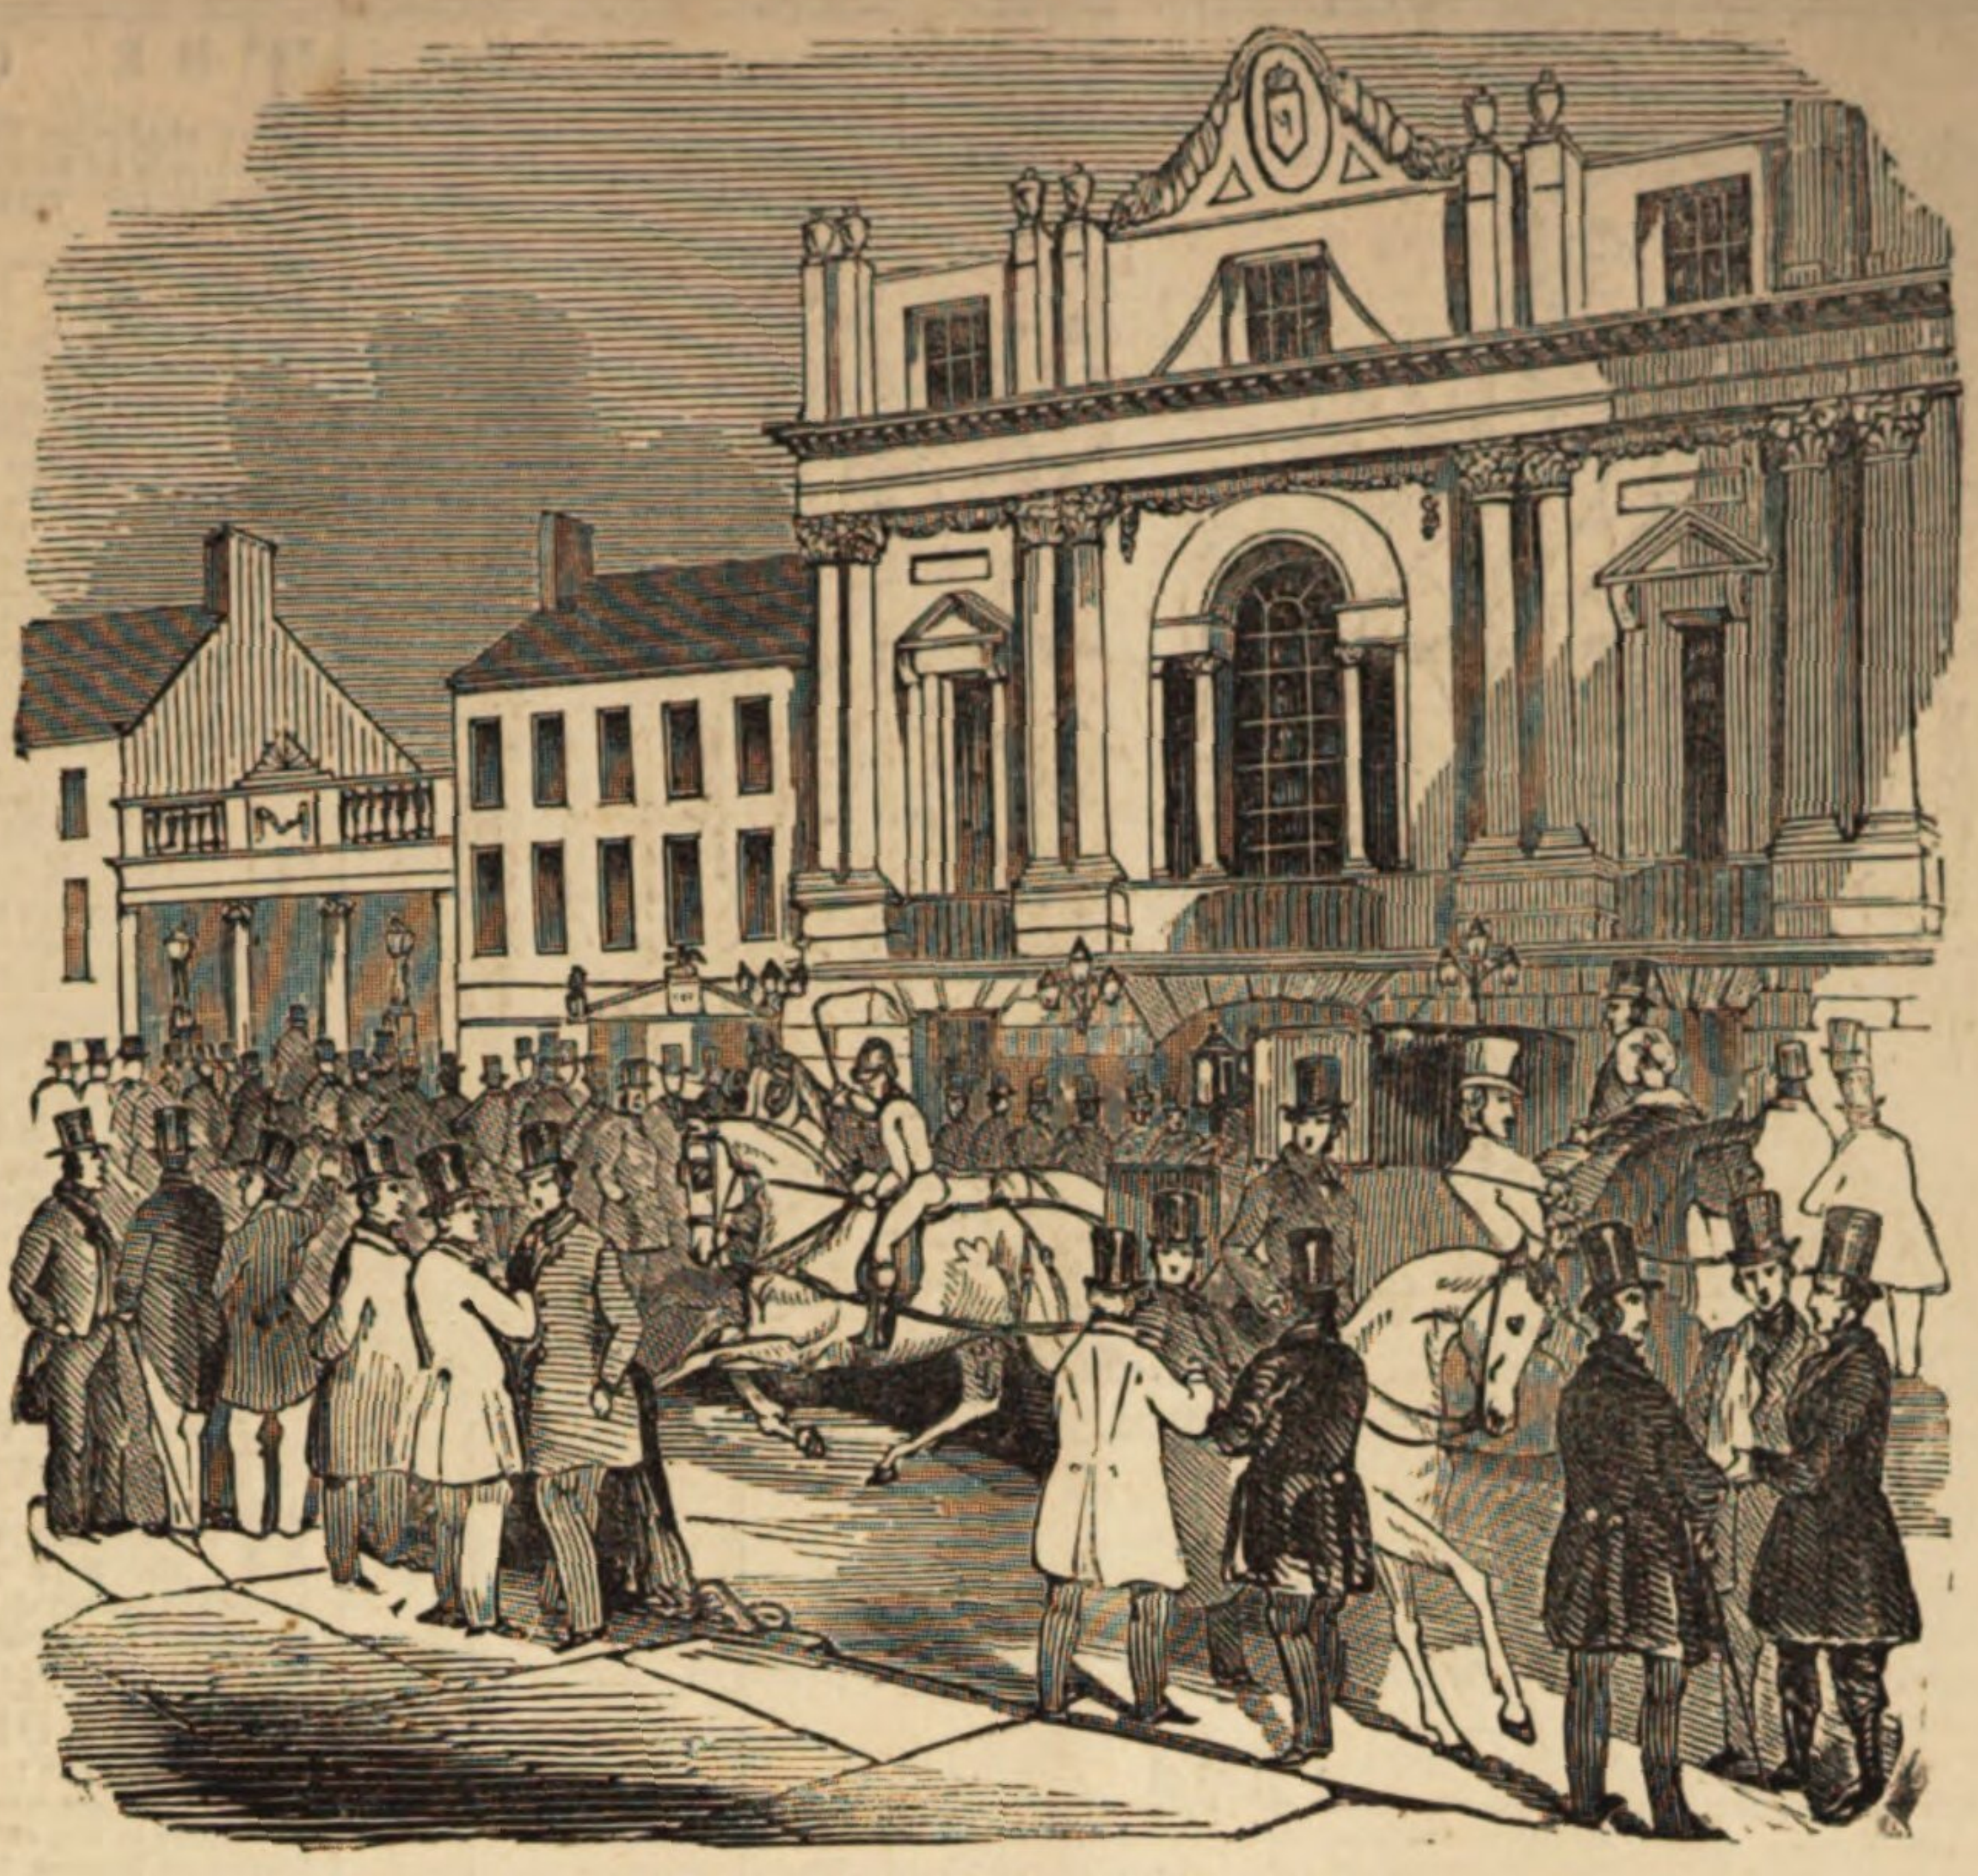
NEW CHURCH AT LLANYMYNECK.

This interesting edifice has just been completed in the village of Llanymynech, near Oswestry; the funds having been raised by private subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels. It is constructed entirely of stone, with the exception of the arches and ornamental portions, which are of moulded fire-brick: the roof is covered with grey tiles. The tower is very characteristic in its details: at the apex of the roof is a round ball, whence spring the vane and weathercock. There is a chancel, which is no shown in our view.

The interior has little decoration. The roof is open. All the seats are open, but are provided with low backs.

Extraordinary Parcel by the Post-office.—Last week, one of the most extraordinary packages, ever sent through the same medium reached the post-office of Glasgow. This was no other than a parcel containing some fifteen or twenty live frogs. The contents of the parcel were discovered by two or three of them jumping out at the post-office. The frogs, it is believed, were of the Egyption or some other rare species, and were addressed to Dr. Buchanan, of Moor-place, in that city. They reached their destination in safety.

DONCASTER RACES.

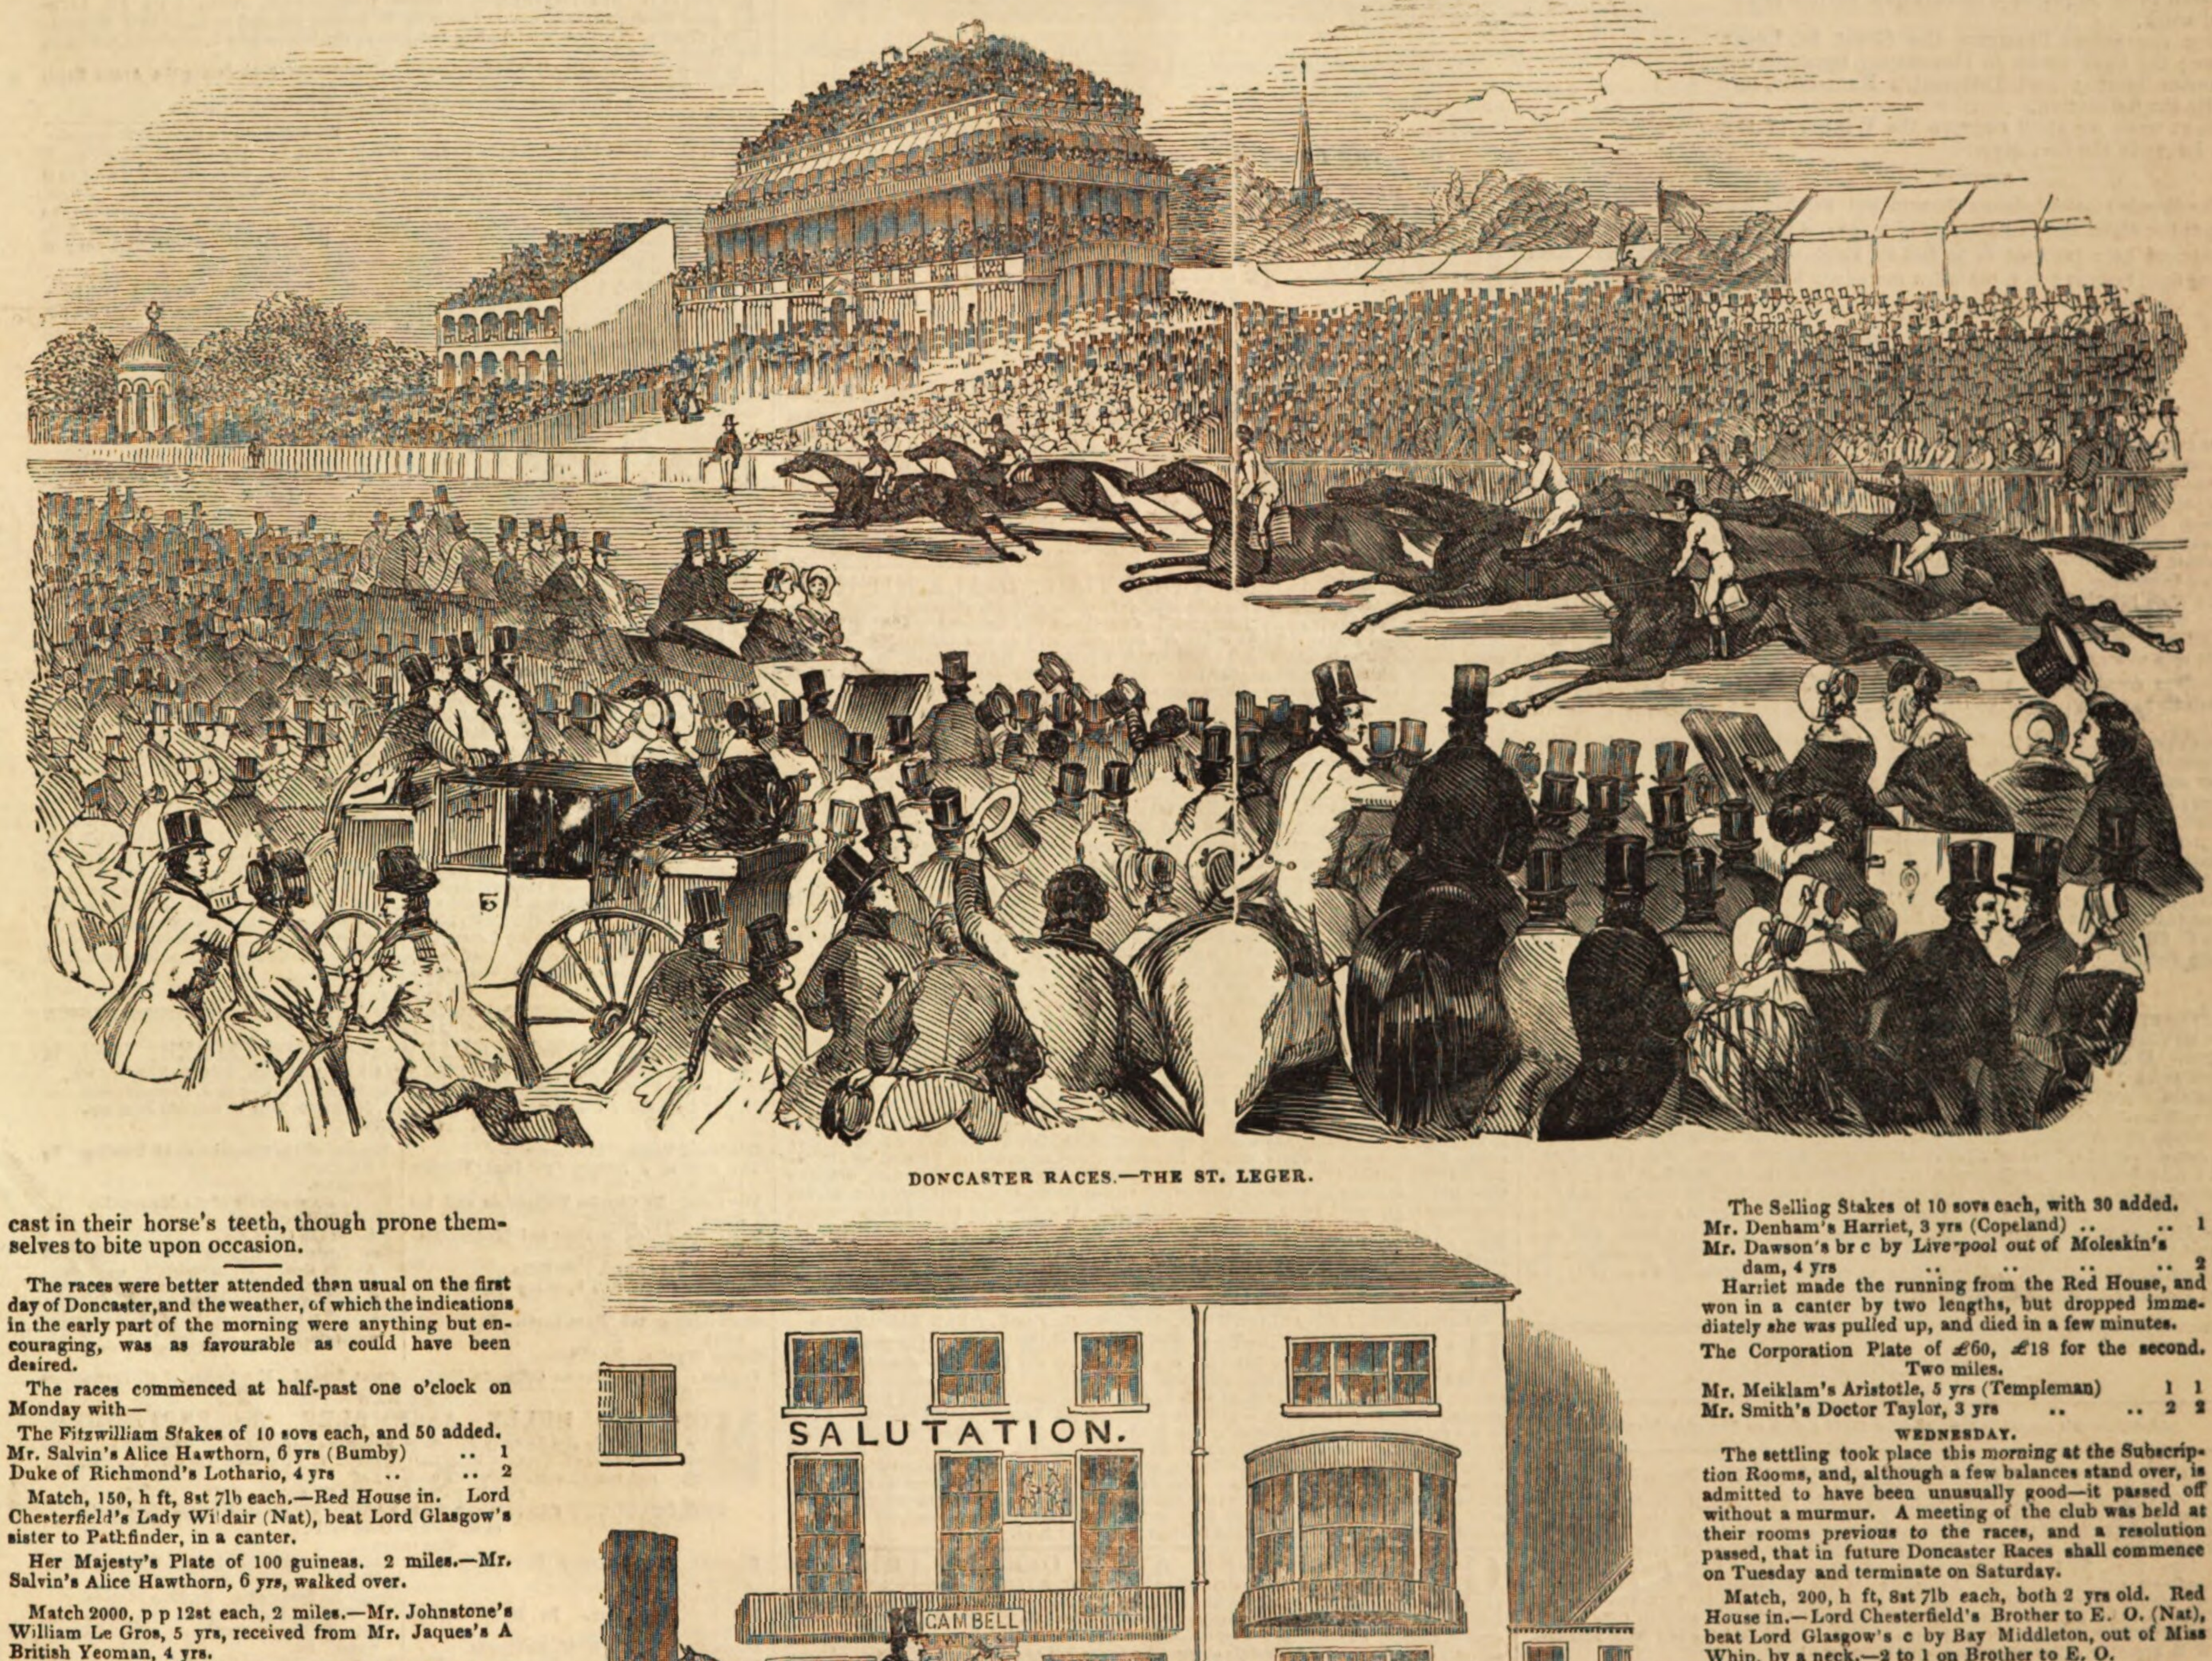


THE MANSION HOUSE, DONCASTER.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF THE LEGER DAY.

Among the truest of all aphorisms is that which declares "there is a tide in the affairs of men." According to historians, the popular flood sets from east to west—at all events, that is the way the stream of gentility flows in the great metropolis. Occasionally, of course, there are exceptions to the general rule, as to all others—the latest variation it is our purpose to treat of in these presents. During the current week the north has been the fashionable point of the compass. The Court is away in bonny Scotland, exchanging the regal for the rural purple—"pomp and circumstance" for health and heather—the imperious ermine for the dun deer's spoil. But all this is to be a sealed book to the million; it is the Queen's pleasure that none intrude on the privacy of her Highland home; and shall not that wish be our law? Turn we then to another northern tryst, where the public was welcome in the exact ratio of its extent. Our scene is Doncaster Races—a rare rendezvous, such as erst it was in the time of the autocrats, the Fitzwilliams, the Harewoods, and similar worthies. The meeting of 1844 was the most brilliant within moderate memory. The recent fomentation of the turf has left it more bright and sparkling than ever: things had come to the worst and they have mended.

On Monday last the Great Northern Meeting commenced, and ended yesterday. Our affair, however, is with its principal feature, the renowned Leger, and, consequently, the time of action is limited to one day. This was Tuesday—which somewhat heavily, with clouds, brought on the fortunes and misfortunes of full many that in anxiety witnessed its dawn. By a very early hour the human tide had begun to flow, and long before noon it was high water—hot water in the rooms. There all who could were betting—these to make their book, those "to mend it, or be rid on't," (which means "going for the gloves"). All sorts of casualties had been busy with the field, so that, at the last hour, out of 109 entries, only the poor units remained—and nine were declared to start. First of these was the Curé, a goodly steed, though small (and having an ungainly right foot withal), backed at even to win, and next him Foigh-a-Ballagh, the champion of Ireland, alone, just before the race, at 3 to 1. Others also had friends at miscellaneous estimates, as will also here be seen. Precisely at three of the afternoon clock the coursers began to appear—among the first being the pair aforesaid—"Foigh" looking as like a clipper as anything lately exhibited in horse-flesh. Thus, the cynosure of all account, the "nine" paraded before the stand, and eventually passed it for the great essay in the following order:—Foigh-a-Ballagh, first by a length; The Curé, The Princess, Lightning, Red Deer, the Amulet colt; Bay Momus, Little Hampton, and Godfrey. The usual functionary started them, the matter being too uncomplicated to call for the aid of my Lord Bentinck. Godfrey made what they called the running, which was a bad substitute for an exercise gallop: in fact, the speed all through was, as Jim Robinson called it, "paltry." Of course, the lot came together to the straight ground. There Foigh-a-Ballagh was in front, with the Curé on his quarters outside, and the brace began to do their endeavour in earnest. Both were flagged—the latter deserving all he got, for he bolted half-a-dozen lengths from home, and finished a cur as well as a loser. The Princess was a good third. Her gallant owner called for an investigation of the winner's mouth in the morning. Won't there be wigs upon the green if requests like these are to become common? There is a story of a Parisian and a Gascon who were playing a game of piquet, together when the Frenchman exclaimed, "Halloa, monsieur! you're cheating!" "Very likely," replied the provincial, with a horrible face, "very probable; but, observe, I don't like to be told so." Unless we are wrong, here and there men will be found who won't relish an imputation cast in their horse's teeth, though prone themselves to bite upon occasion.



DONCASTER RACES.—THE ST. LEGER.

The races were better attended than usual on the first day of Doncaster, and the weather, of which the indications in the early part of the morning were anything but encouraging, was as favourable as could have been desired.

The races commenced at half-past one o'clock on Monday with—

The Fitzwilliam Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added.

Mr. Salvin's Alice Hawthorn, 6 yrs (Bumby) ..	1
Duke of Richmond's Lothario, 4 yrs	2

Match, 150, h ft, 8st 7lb each.—Red House in. Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair (Nat), beat Lord Glasgow's sister to Pathfinder, in a canter.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas. 2 miles.—Mr. Salvin's Alice Hawthorn, 6 yrs, walked over.

Match 2000, p p 12st each, 2 miles.—Mr. Johnstone's William Le Gros, 5 yrs, received from Mr. Jaques's A British Yeoman, 4 yrs.

The Champagne Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft.

Mr. Worthington's Lancashire Witch (Nat) ..	1
Mr. Ramsay's Mid Lothian	2

Plate of £50. Heats, St. Leger Course.

Mr. Smith's Doctor Taylor, 3 yrs (Bumby) ..	1
Mr. Robertson's Little Fairy, 3 yrs	2

TUESDAY.

The races commenced during a slight fall of rain with

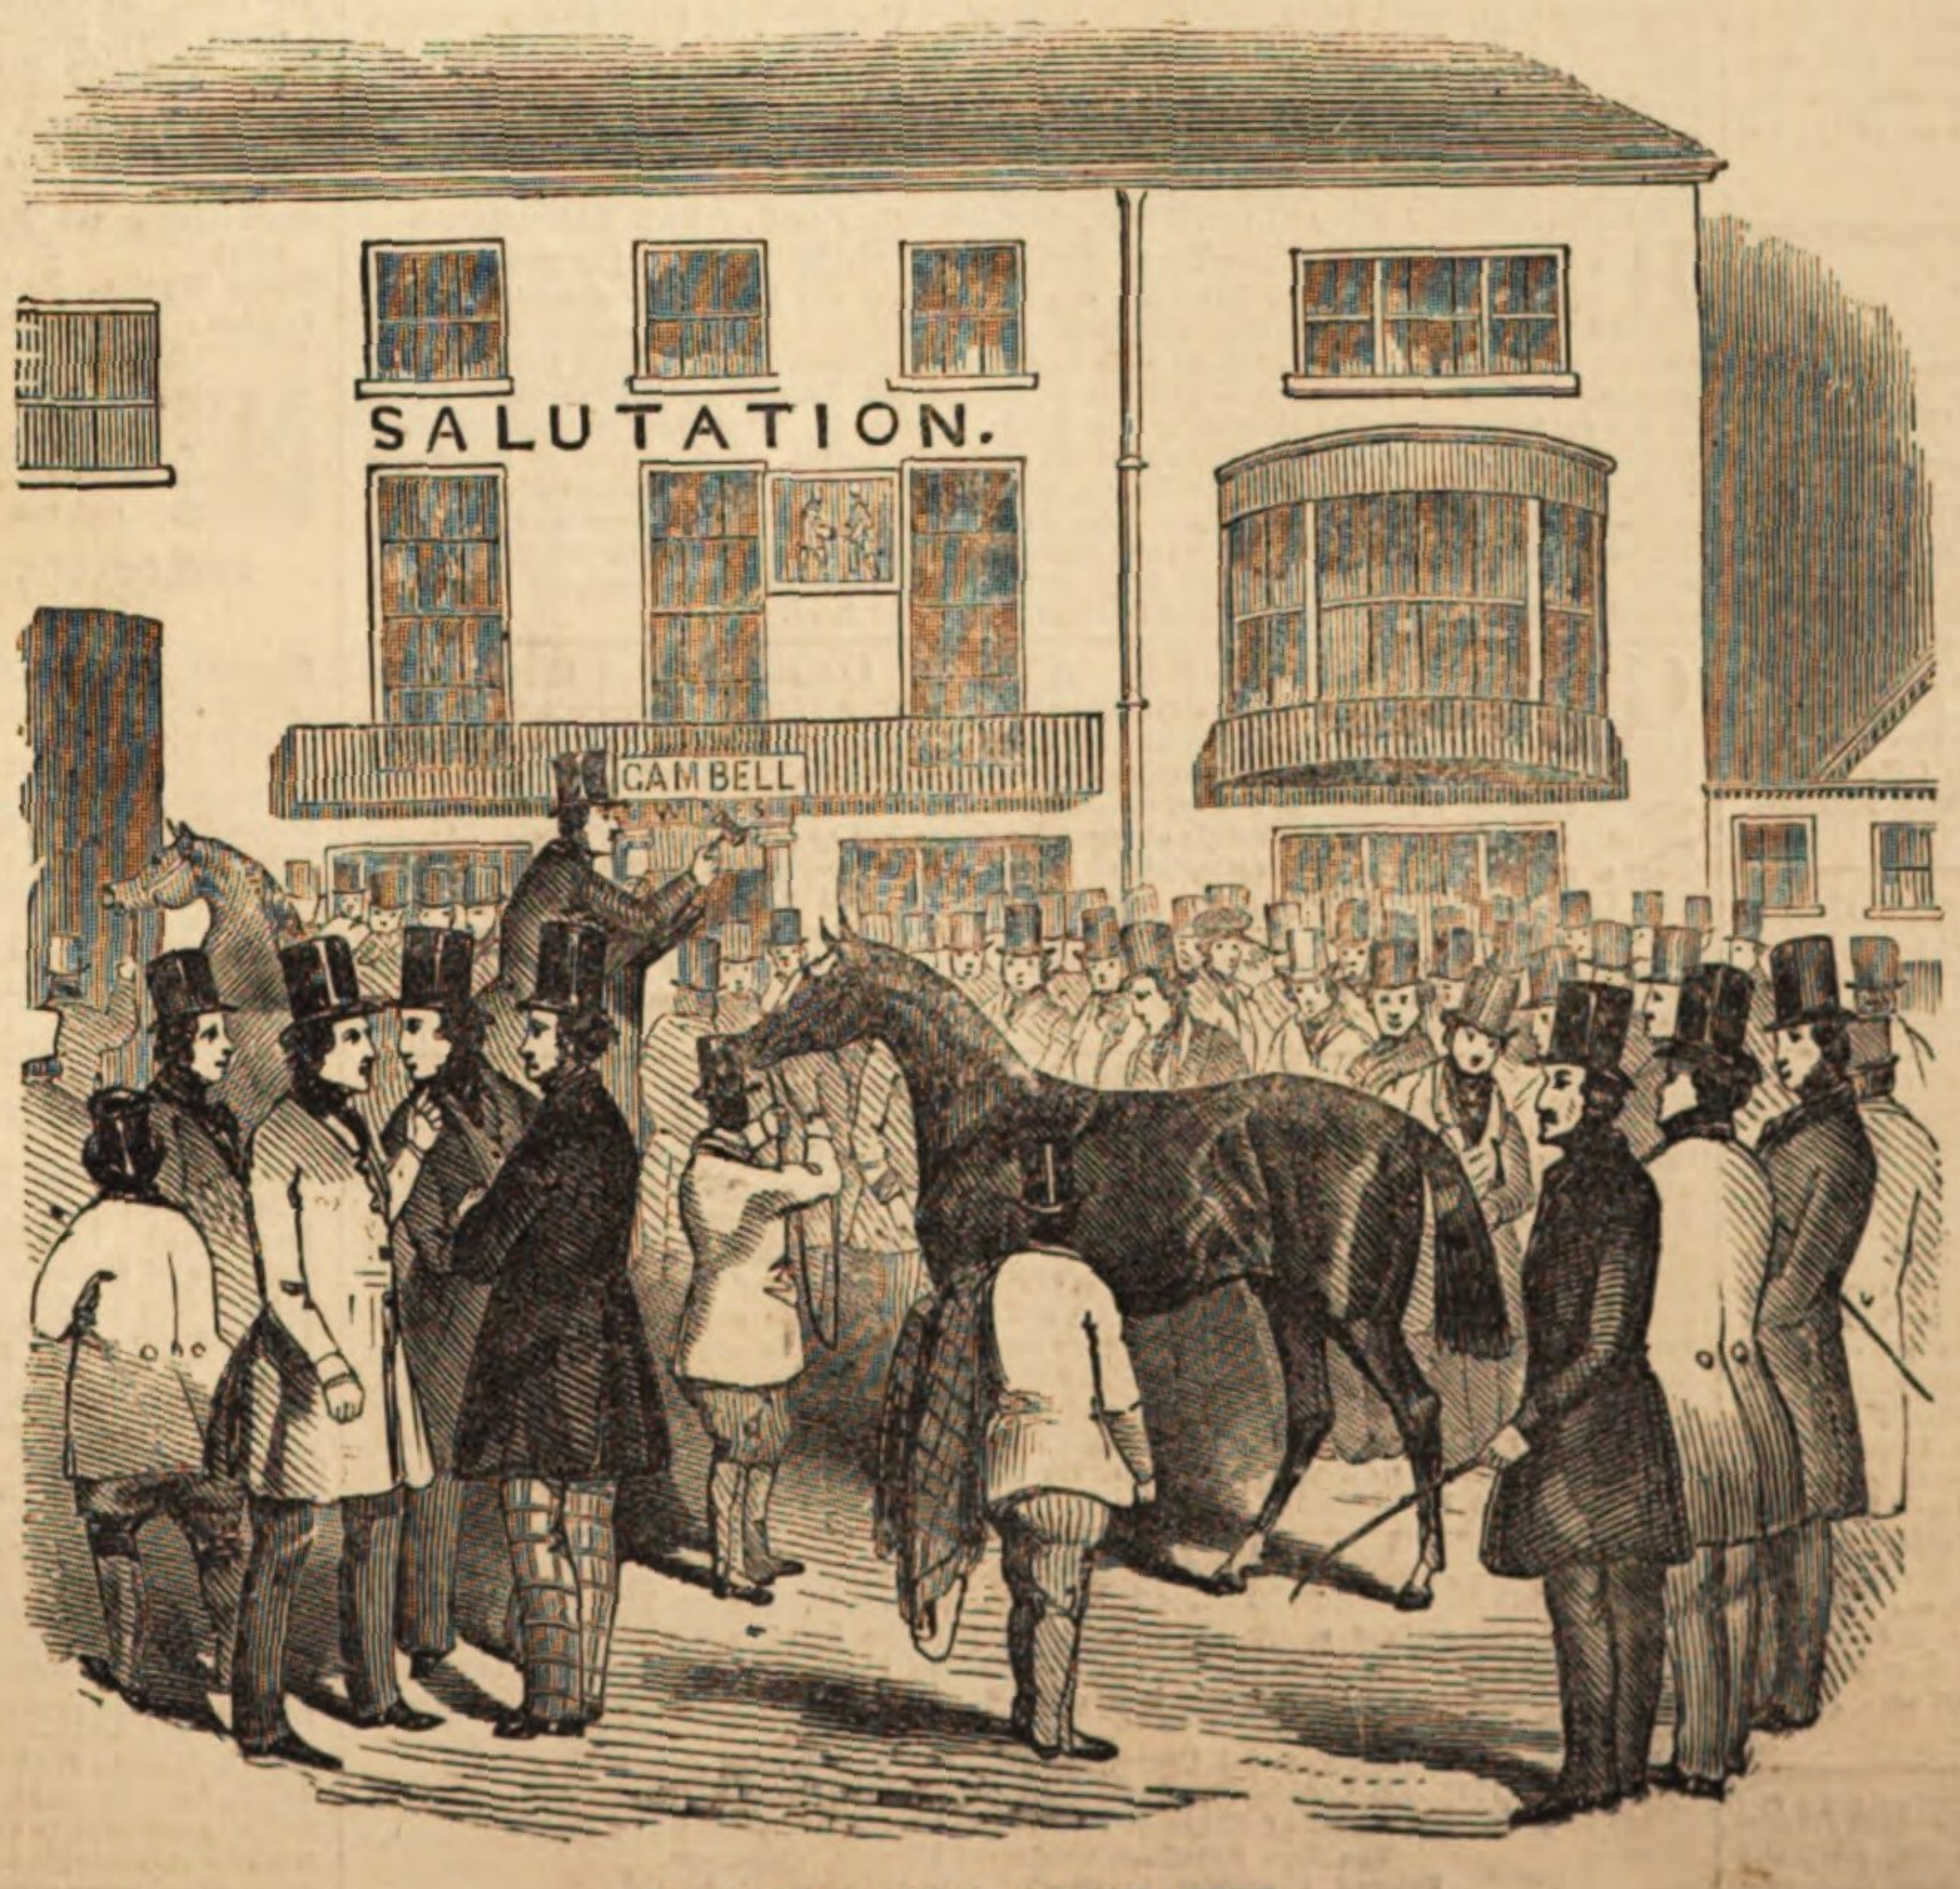
The Cleveland Handicap of 20 sovs each, 60 added.

Mr. Johnstone's Rowena, 3 yrs, 5st 8lb (Riley) ..	1
Mr. Jaques's Semiseria, 4 yrs, 8st 6lb	2

THE ST. LEGER.

The Great St. Leger Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft; the second to receive £200, the third to save his stake, and the winner to pay £100 towards expenses; colts 8st 7lb, fillies 8st 2lb. St. Leger Course. (108 subs.)

Mr. Irwin's Foigh-a-Ballagh (Bell)	1
Mr. Williamson's The Curé (Marson)	2
Col. Anson's The Princess (Butler)	3
Mr. Meiklam's Godfrey (Templeman)	0
Mr. Standish's Little Hampton (Francis) ..	0
Lord Glasgow's c by Velocipede—Amulet (Holmes)	0
Mr. J. Scott's Bay Momus (Nat)	0
Mr. J. Hampton's Lightning (Lye)	0
Duke of Richmond's Red Deer (Robinson) ..	0



THE SALUTATION.—DONCASTER.

The Selling Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 30 added.

Mr. Denham's Harriet, 3 yrs (Copeland)	1
Mr. Dawson's br c by Liverpool out of Moleskin's dam, 4 yrs	2

Harriet made the running from the Red House, and won in a canter by two lengths, but dropped immediately she was pulled up, and died in a few minutes.

The Corporation Plate of £60, £18 for the second. Two miles.

Mr. Meiklam's Aristotle, 5 yrs (Templeman)	1	1
Mr. Smith's Doctor Taylor, 3 yrs	2	2

WEDNESDAY.

The settling took place this morning at the Subscription Rooms, and, although a few balances stand over, is admitted to have been unusually good—it passed off without a murmur. A meeting of the club was held at their rooms previous to the races, and a resolution passed, that in future Doncaster Races shall commence on Tuesday and terminate on Saturday.

Match, 200, h ft, 8st 7lb each, both 2 yrs old. Red House in.—Lord Chesterfield's Brother to E. O. (Nat), beat Lord Glasgow's c by Bay Middleton, out of Miss Whip, by a neck.—2 to 1 on Brother to E. O.

The Foal Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft for three yrs old colts, 8st 7lb, and fillies. 8st 3lb. One mile and a half.

Mr. Gully's Juvenal, br to Satirist (J. Day, jun.)	1
Sir R. Bulkeley's Bebington	2
Lord Westminster's Lancet	3

5 to 2 on Juvenal, who had it all her own way from end to end.

The Municipal Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft for two yrs old. Red House in.

Lord G. Bentinck's b c Cowl, out of Crucifix (Nat)	1
Colonel Anson's Kedger	2
Lord Eglintoun's Britannia	3
Lord Glasgow's f by Sheet Anchor, out of Canada	4

5 to 4 agst Kedger, 6 to 1 agst Britannia, and 4 to 1 agst Cowl. Cowl made all the running, and won by a neck.

The Great Yorkshire Handicap of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 200 added, the second to receive £100, the third to save his stake, and the winner to pay 30 sovs towards expenses. St. Leger Course. (92 Subs.)

Lord Eglinton's Pompey, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb (J. Howlett)	1
Sir C. Monck's Glossy, 4 yrs, 5st 4lb	2
Lord Glasgow's Give-him-a-Name, 6 yrs, 6st 12lb.	3

Won by half a length. Give-him-a-Name a good third.

THURSDAY.

The Innkeepers' Plate of 15 sovs each, 100 added.

Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle 6 yrs (Nat) 1
Sir R. W. Bulkeley's Bishop of Romford's Cob, 4 yrs 2

The Knight made nearly all the running, and won by a head.

The Three-Years-Old Stakes of 200 sovs each.

Col. Anson's Joe Lovell (F. Butler) 1
Lord Glasgow's b c by Velocipede, out of Amulet .. 2

Won in a canter.

The Two-Years-Old Stakes of 20 sovs each.

Lord G. Bentinck's Longitude (Nat) 1
Mr. Hesseltine's The Helmsman 2

The Cup of 300 sovs, with 50 added by the Corporation for the second.

Mr. Salvin's Alice Hawthorn 1
Mr. Meiklam's Aristotle 2

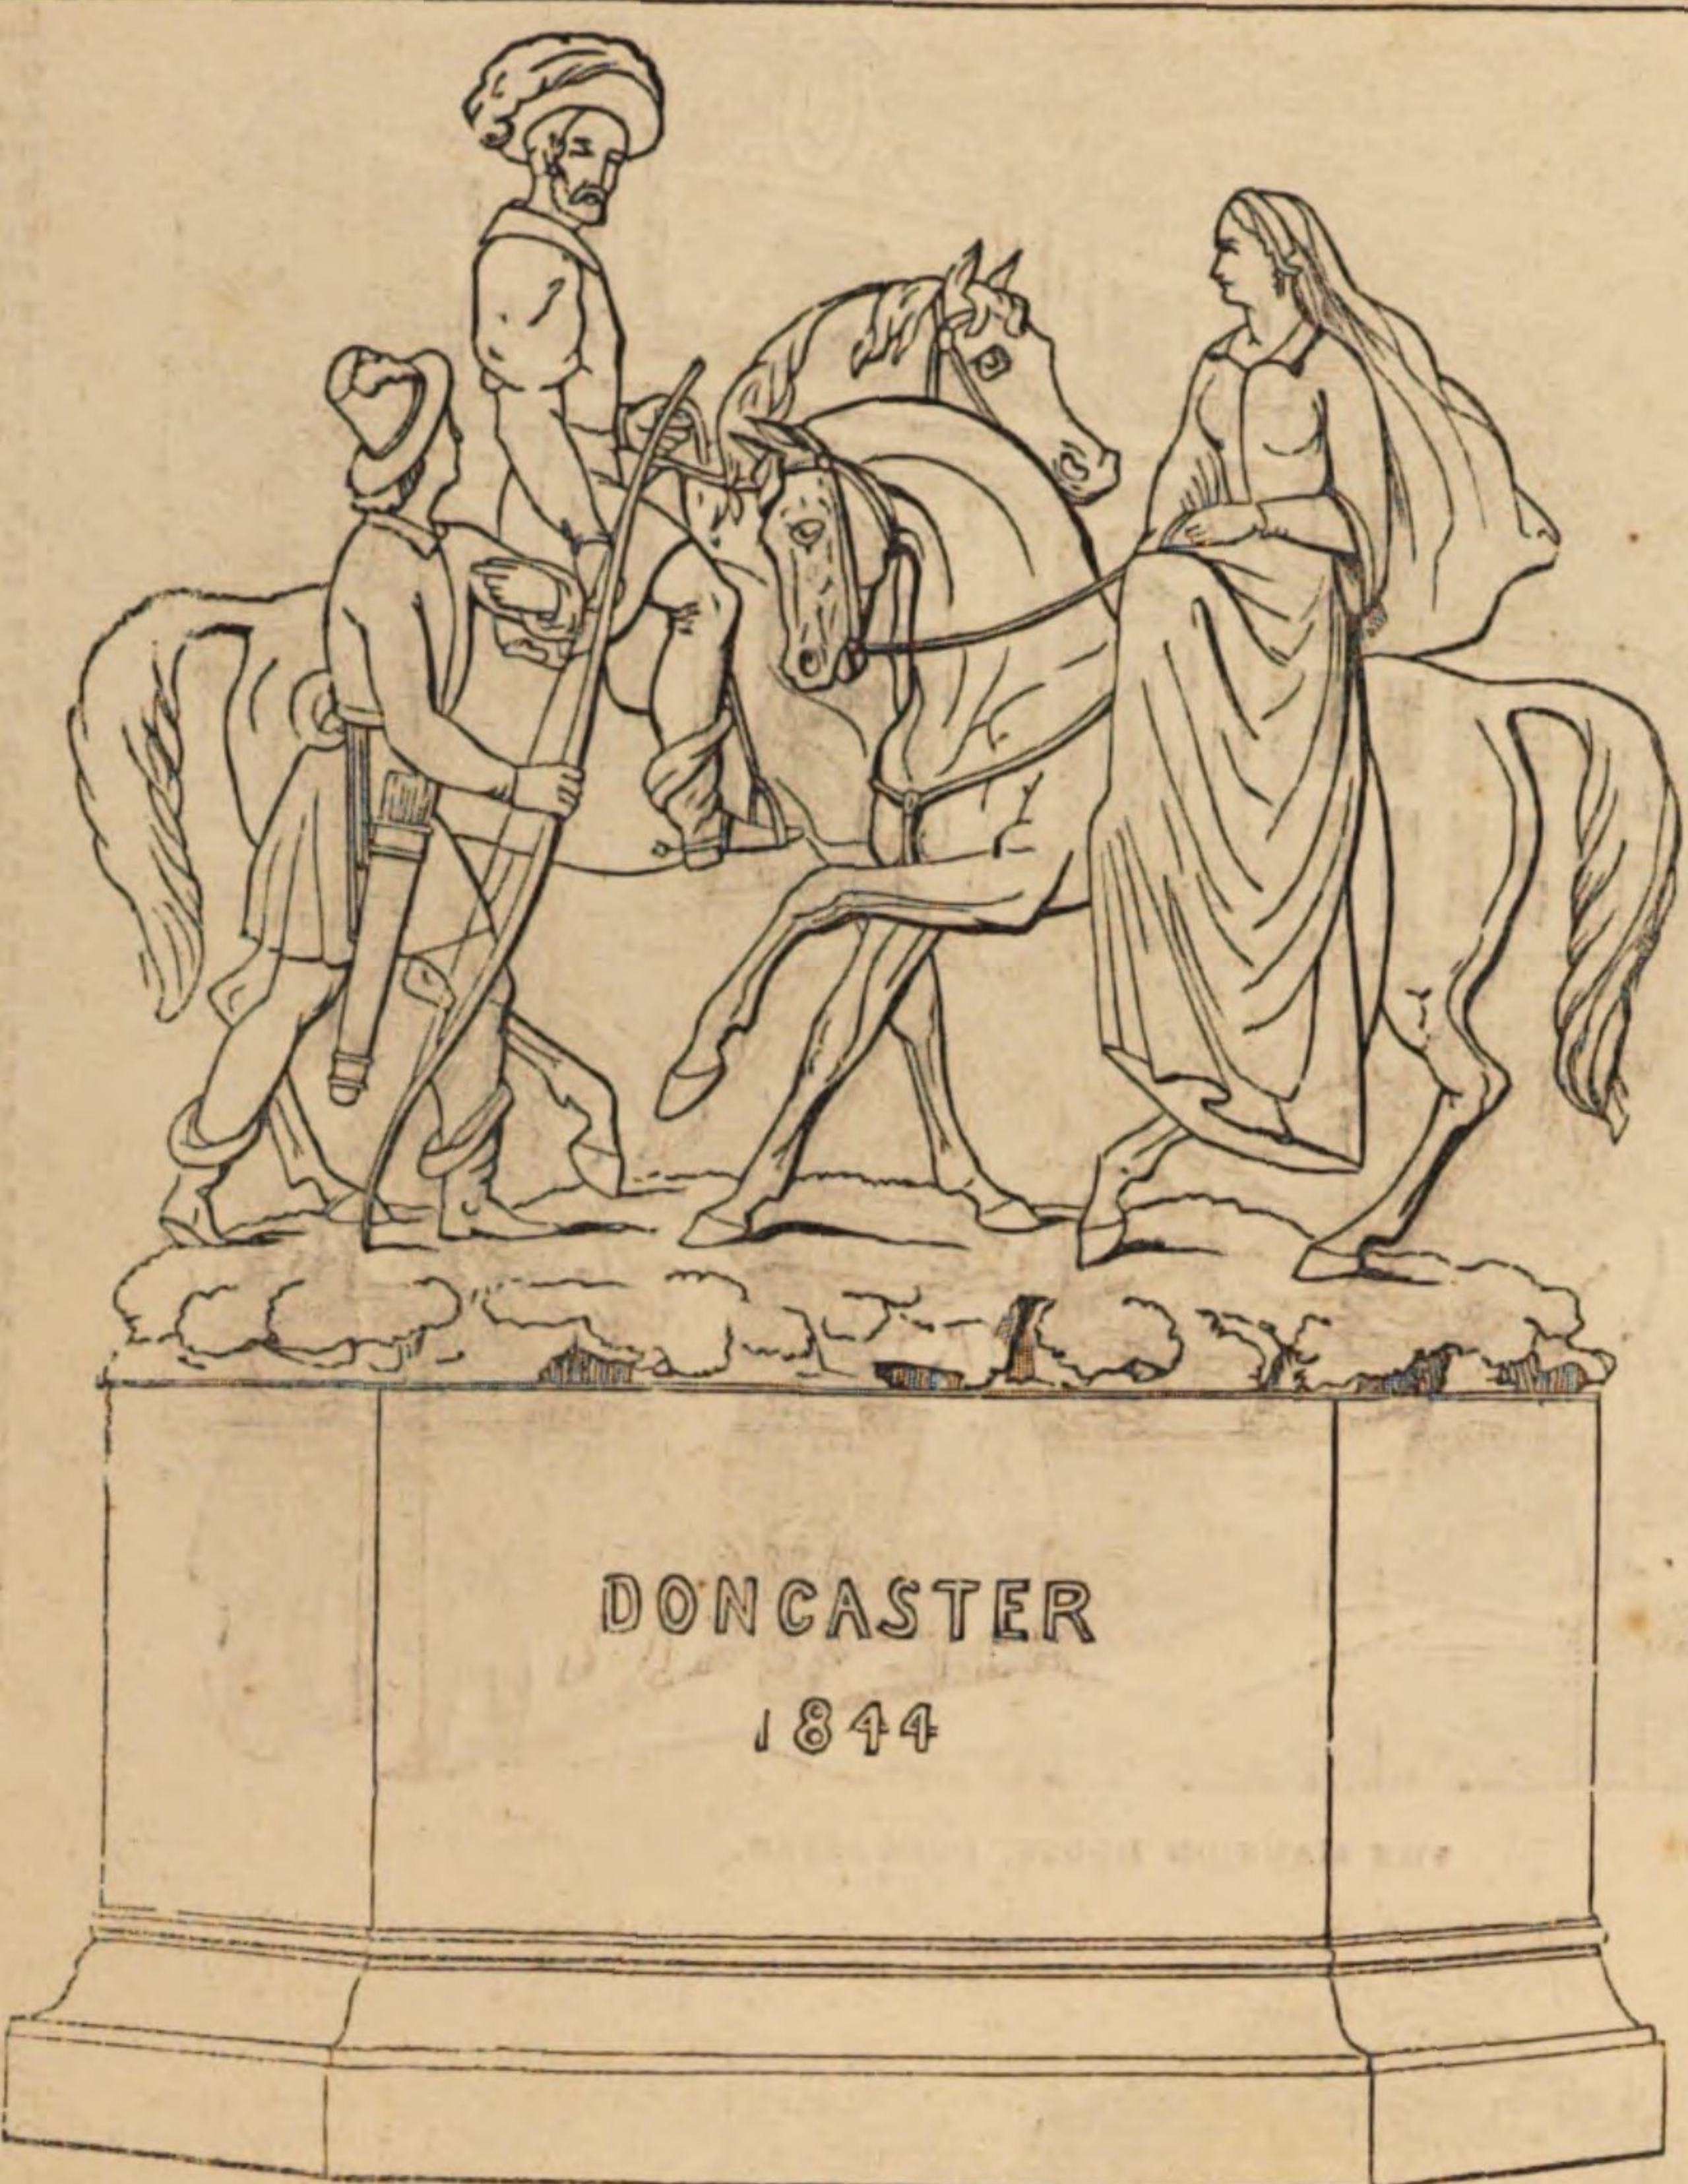
Won in a canter.

THE PRIZE "CUP," &c.

This superb piece of plate consists of a group of two equestrian figures and one on foot, designed from a legend, by Holinshed, of King Henry VIII. and his queen, Catherine Parr, Maying in the woods of Shooters' Hill. Here they were met by their courtiers and archers of the Royal Guard, habited in the costume of the outlaws of Sherwood Forest, and by one of the party, who represented Robin Hood, were invited into the recesses of the forest, and treated with the hospitable cheer of the jovial woodsman, who shot at the target, to the great delight of the royal guests. The group, which is designed by Mr. Bailey, R.A., and by Mr. Macarthy (as far as the horses are concerned), represents Robin Hood saluting the King and his Consort, and begging their company in the forest. The figures are very beautifully modelled, the horses full of animation, and the attitudes excellent. The is whole in frosted silver, mounted on a plinth of ebony, on which is inscribed the words, "Doncaster, 1844." This elaborate group has been executed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, of Bond-street. It has been inspected by her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Prince Royal of Prussia, who have severally expressed their unqualified admiration of this beautiful work.

Our engravings illustrate the Great St. Leger Race; the busy scene in Doncaster, opposite the Mansion-house: and Tattersall's Race-Sale, opposite the Salutation.

Next week we shall engrave the Winner of the St. Leger in the first style.



THE DONCASTER CUP.

The disputed match between Coranna and Foigh-a-Ballagh was amicably arranged last night, Mr. Collett agreeing to pay in proportion to what the odds might have been expected to be laid on Foigh-a-Ballagh; and Captain Rous having fixed them at 9 to 4, the forfeit money will be about £442.

DERBY BETTING AT DONCASTER.—THURSDAY MORNING.

5 to 1 agst Scott's lot	25 to 1 agst Newsmonger	40 to 1 agst Bro to E. O. (t)
5 to 1 —— J. Day's lot	25 to 1 —— Minikin c	40 to 1 —— Twig (t)
16 to 1 —— Alarm	30 to 1 —— Kedger	40 to 1 —— Lycurgus
17 to 1 —— Cobweb	33 to 1 —— Black Prince	50 to 1 — Connaught Ranger
25 to 1 —— Seaman	35 to 1 —— Rebecca c	50 to 1 —— Fitz Allen

The betting very heavy.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Death of Captain Basil Hall.—In part of our impression last week, we announced the death of Capt. Basil Hall, which took place on Wednesday week, at Haslar Hospital, after a protracted illness, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. Captain Basil Hall was not only distinguished in the service as an able, enterprising, and meritorious officer, who had the entire good of his profession at heart, and who lost no opportunity of forwarding its improvement in every way that his inquiring and discerning mind enabled him to do, but he was also known in the world of literature, of which he formed a distinguished ornament. In his early life, in the command of a small vessel, in an unknown sea, he rendered conspicuously interesting a dreary voyage to the north part of China, and the coast of Corea, by the publication of a lively, intelligent, and scientific account of a new people inhabiting the Loo Choo Islands.

Another naval officer, retired Commander Joseph Hellard, died at Portsmouth on Saturday. This gallant officer had been in the service nearly seventy years.

Portsmouth, Sept. 17.—The Queen, 110, Captain Martin, went out of this harbour to Spithead, saluting the Admiral's flag, this morning. The Styx, steam surveying sloop, Captain Vidal, arrived here to-day from the westward. A large French steam-vessel of war, bringing despatches from the King of the French, also arrived at this port, and came into harbour to-day. The brigs at this port are to be docked to have their copper cleaned, previously to proceeding on their trial cruise.

Appointments.—Lieutenants—M. H. Rodney (1840), of the Queen, to the Cruizer; G. R. Preedy (1844) to the Queen. Assistant-Surgeons—William B. Fegan (1840) to the Fearless steam frigate; G. Everett (acting) to the Osprey; Vans C. Clack, M.D. (acting) to the Daring; J. S. A. Brummer (acting) to the Flying Fish.

Attempted Ascents of Mont Blanc.—MM. Bravais and Martins have been for some time engaged in attempts to ascend Mont Blanc, but without success. After spending the intervening time in collecting a series of meteorological and geological observations in the Alpine country which surrounds the mountain, the ascent was happily effected on the 29th ult. The travellers found their tent on the Grand Plateau uninjured, and formed the design of passing a night each on the summit of the mountain, while their companions (M. Lepileur being now added to the number) encamped in the tent. But the intense cold defeated this part of their project. The thermometer stood at 7 4-10 degrees below zero, in the shade, at a quarter past two o'clock in the day, and the ascent was most painful, notwithstanding the fineness of the weather. At a short distance from the summit they were assailed by a piercing wind, and the cold which it brought was so intense, that they describe their sensations on attaining the summit, when they had in some measure escaped its severity, as being that of men who had entered a well-warmed saloon.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after Eight o'clock on Thursday Evening.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Last Six Nights of the Wonders of Mr. CARTER, the American Lion King, with his Lions, Tigers, Leopards, &c., previous to his departure for Paris.—MONDAY, SEPT. 23, and during the Week, at Seven o'Clock, THE LION OF THE DESERT, or the French in Morocco; SCENES OF THE CIRCLE; concluding with, 104th Time, THE CHINESE WAR. WEDNESDAY NEXT, Grand Spectacle; Extraordinary, and First and Only Appearance of Mr. W. Blanchard, Mr. Cony, Mr. W. Smith: together with Mr. Cony's wonderful trained Dog Hector, in THE FOREST OF BONDY; Splendid FEATS of HORSEMANSHIP; FRENCH IN MOROCCO; and the GREAT STEEPLE CHASE, on the Stage and in the Circle.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot.—Box-office Open from Eleven till Five.

TO THE LADIES.—Madame TUSSAUD'S NATIONAL GROUP, in honour of her Majesty and the illustrious Wellington.—The Queen and Prince Albert are supposed to be offering to the hero the honours he so well deserves, surrounded by sovereigns in amity with England, supported by the great characters of the day, in splendid costumes, consisting of eighteen figures.—"This exhibition, in its present state, is one of the very best sights in the metropolis, and abounds with such a variety of objects, that it is a matter of surprise how so many things could have been collected together."—Times. Admittance, 1s.; Napoleon Rooms, 6d. Open from Eleven in the Morning till Ten at Night. Concert at Eight.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—First Exhibition of the PROTEOSCOPE, an Optical Instrument, unlimited in its appliances to Nature and Art. Collins's ODE TO THE PASSIONS, accompanied by Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be illustrated by the Proteoscope, on Monday the 23rd of September, at a quarter to 5 o'clock, and in the Evening at a quarter to 10 o'clock, and so continue Daily. LONGBOTTOM'S PHYSIOSCOPE and OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE. DIVING-BELL and DIVER, with Experiments. DISSOLVING VIEWS, &c., &c. Among the Works of Art are various interesting Novelties recently deposited. The POPULAR LECTURES, delivered daily by Dr. RYAN and Professor BACHHOFFNER, abound in Interesting Experiments. The Subject of each Lecture, and the time at which it is delivered, is suspended in the Hall of Manufactures. Dr. RYAN also Lectures on the Evenings of Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and Professor BACHHOFFNER on the alternate Evenings. Dr. RYAN'S present subject is POISONS and their ANTIDOTES. The Music to "The Passions" is Composed and Conducted by T. WALLIS, Mus. Doc.—Open from 11 to half-past 5, and from 7 to half-past 10. Admission, 1s. Schools, half price.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—IOWAY INDIAN ENCAMPMENT.—THIS DAY, and each day of next Week, from Three to Six, P.M., the FOURTEEN IOWAY INDIANS, ENCAMPED in four wigwams brought from their own country, give their Dances, Ball Plays, Archery, and Riding on Horseback, with shield and lance, &c.—Doors open at Half-past Two. Admittance, 1s. Children and Schools, 6d The Indian Exhibition closes each day at 6.

CHINESE COLLECTION, HYDE PARK-CORNER.—Open daily from Ten till Six, and from Seven till Ten.—This unique collection has been honoured by the flattering approval of all classes in England and the United States. The Saloon, 240 feet in length, is crowded with interesting novelties from China, and at this moment the greatest attraction to be found in the metropolis. His Royal Highness Prince Albert's band will be in attendance on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings, on which nights the Porcelain Pagodas will be brilliantly illuminated. Admittance One Shilling. Full descriptive Catalogues obtained in the Saloon, and a new edition, the one hundred and fortieth thousand, is now in course of preparation. Omnibuses run from all parts of London to the Chinese Collection until the close of the evening's entertainment.

VAUXHALL in the OLDEN TIME.—GALA NIGHTS! A party of Noblemen and Gentlemen, ere this once splendid property is razed to the ground, have determined on a subscription for a series of SIX splendid GALA NIGHTS, in the style in which the "Royal Property" was conducted in the olden time; the first grand entertainment to take place on MONDAY EVENING NEXT, SEPT. 23, when the efforts of all the former celebrated artists at Vauxhall will be united to render the Fête attractive in every department—illuminative, musical, pyrotechnic and refreshment. The distinguished Patrons of these Galas, in order to render the nocturnal fêtes within the means of all classes, have decided that the admission shall be ONE SHILLING only.—Full particulars will be announced in the bills and advertisements of the day. The Gardens still continue open daily, from 3 to 6, for the Exhibition of the Ioway Indians.

MR. GEORGE YATES will commence again the 1st of OCTOBER his LECTURES and INSTRUCTION in PERSONAL DEPORTMENT. Schools and Families attended, and the present mode of Dancing may be included. Address, St. Peter's, Hammersmith; or at Mr. GREEN'S, 23, Soho-square.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS—IMPORTANT to FAMILIES FURNISHING.—A considerable saving can be effected in the purchase of Furnishing Ironmongery, by visiting the PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, where may be inspected the most extensive STOCK of IRONMONGERY GOODS in the Kingdom, consisting of kitchen cooking utensils, German silver wares, drawing-room stoves, shower and vapour baths, ornamental iron work, garden implements, japanned water cans and toilette pails, best Sheffield plate, kitchen ranges, fenders and fire irons, tea trays, ornamental wire work, flower-stands, table cutlery, &c. Every article being marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, will fully convince purchasers at this establishment of the great advantage resulting from Cash payments, as the Proprietors warrant every article of the best manufacture.—58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—A liberal allowance to merchants and captains.

HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT, SUDBROOK PARK, NEAR RICHMOND.

HYDROPATHY.—The British Public are informed that the above Institution has been completed under the immediate direction of Dr. WEISS, in order to convince the public mind that drugs, so highly injurious to the human system, may be altogether dispensed with in the cure of disease. Dr Weiss (formerly the associate of Vincent Preissnitz) is well known throughout Europe for the wonderful Cures he has for many years past effected by the Water Treatment. The beautiful domain, Sudbrook Park, for centuries the residence of the Dukes of Argyll, forming part of Richmond Park, Surrey, has been taken of the Crown, and converted into an Establishment of the first order, which is now in full operation. The Terms vary from Three Guineas and upwards, according to the apartments. This sum includes board, lodging, and professional attendance. Dr Weiss may be consulted daily at Sudbrook Park (Fridays excepted), when he attends at 28, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, from Eleven till Four.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.—THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting and Paper-hanging; and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

BY AUTHORITY OF PARLIAMENT.

THE HEPTAPRÆMION FINE-ART LOTTERY.—The SALE of TICKETS for Mrs. PARKES'S GREAT DRAWING for WORKS of ART will CLOSE on the 28th instant, as the Drawing must take place on the 30th of September, that being the latest day the Act allows. Parliament and the Sovereign having given special permission for the completion of this, the last Fine-Art Lottery, the patrons of art and the public who may wish to subscribe, are requested to apply imediately for shares, as the number is limited to 14,000, and will not, under any circumstances, be enlarged. Only a small portion of the Tickets remain unsold In order to accommodate her large number of subscribers, Mrs Parkes has engaged the Theatre Royal Covent Garden, for the drawing on the 30th inst. Value of the Prizes, £42 000. Tickets, ONE GUINEA each, entitling the subscriber to an engraving of the value. Apply for Tickets at the Bowyer Gallery, 22, Golden-square, where the Prizes are Exhibited Free; or at Mrs. Parkes's City Depôt, 104, Leadenhall street.

REACTION IN THE IRISH LINEN TRADE.

TO FAMILIES, HOTEL KEEPERS, &c.—BAILEY and CO respectfully solicit the attention of Families, &c, to a Manufacturer's Stock of IRISH LINENS, called the Golden Flax, which has been sold to the public many years, and can be recommended; none better made. Prices, 9½d., 11½d.; beautifully fine at 1s. 3½d., by the piece. Also,

A large lot of rich Cameleon-shot SILKS, at 2s. 6½d. per yard.
1729 rich worked Application Collars, new styles, at 1s. 5d. each.
An elegant stock of Crêpe de Polka Dresses, 16s 6d, quite a new fabric.
The Bleu Napoleon Cashmere Dresses, quite new.
Printed Cambrics in all the new patterns, at 3s. 11d.

We have received from Messrs. Paturle Lupin and Co., the eminent manufacturers of French Merino, every shade of colour, at 3s. 11d. per yard.

Albion House, 77, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

THE GO-A-HEAD JOURNAL FOR RAILROADS AND STEAM-BOATS.

Published every Month, price Twopence; with Forty Engravings. The second Number will be ready on Saturday next.

OFFICE OF THE "GO-A-HEAD," 17, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER-ROW, LONDON.

SECOND EDITION.—FORTIETH THOUSAND.—The immense applause bestowed on the First Number of the "GO-A-HEAD," and the promises of universal support received, have encouraged the Proprietors to expend a large sum in preparing and improving future numbers of this work. In No. II., to be published October 1st, 1844, will be found the most Useful Time Tables of the various Railroads, besides other additions of an important character. Twelve months subscription to this beautiful work is only Two Shillings. The "GO-A HEAD" is the cheapest work of the present day. Order the "GO-A-HEAD JOURNAL" of any Bookseller, it will be sent with the Magazine Parcels every month.—17, Warwick lane, Sept. 17, 1844.

Complete in one Vol., handsomely bound in cloth, gilt, price 13s.,

SYLVESTER SOUND, THE SOMNAMBULIST. A Humorous Companion to "Valentine Vox." By H. COCKTON, ESQ. With Forty-six Illustrations by ONWHYN, and a Fine Steel Engraving of the Author.

London: W. M. CLARKE 17, Warwick-lane.

On Saturday next will be published, price One Shilling, the first number of

THE LOVE MATCH. Wherein will be minutely portrayed the lives, the loves, and the languishings of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Todd. "The Love Match," which will be of a profoundly humorous character, will be completed in twelve monthly parts.—Orders will be received by every bookseller in the kingdom.—Country booksellers, with good reference, will be most liberally treated with, and Prospectuses will be sent on application, with their own names and addresses attached.—London: W. M. CLARKE, 17, Warwick-lane.

THE INNISKELLING POLKA FOR THE PIANO-FORTE.—Just Published, Price 2s., as performed by the Bands of the Coldstream Guards and Enniskellen Dragoons.—May be had at Mc CARROLL'S Music Library, 171, North-street, Brighton, and all respectable Music-sellers.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster row.; and the Author, 21, Arundel street, Strand.

TO READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES. Now Ready, Gratis and Post free,

HINTS for the FORMATION of READING SOCIETIES. Also, THE TERMS of SUBSCRIPTION to the BRITISH and FOREIGN LIBRARY, Conduit street, Hanover-square. Families in town or country are supplied with all the new and standard works for perusal in any quantity.

Apply to Saunders and Otley, Publishers, Conduit-street.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION, for OCTOBER, price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 6d., contains a superb Plate, GRATIS, all the Paris Fashions, and an immense variety of ENTIRELY NEW WINTER COSTUMES, which can not appear in any other work; 4 Plates, 70 Figures, 100 NEW PATTERNS of Walking and Children's Dresses, Bonnets, Cloaks, &c., with Descriptions; Tales, Poetry, and Part I. of a Romance—"Leonora the Unfortunate; or, The Bridal and the Murder;" for 1s.

G. BERGER, Holywell street, Strand.

INDIAN MELODIES.—Now published, Nos. 1 to 12, Original Hindostaunee Airs, with Poetry by W. Reader, jun., and arranged by C. E. Horn. (The subject of Mr. Horn's interesting Lectures at the Polytechnic Institution), including four Harmonised Airs.

In the press, CANADIAN AIRS, collected by Lieutenant Back during the Arctic Expedition. Arranged by E. Knight, jun., to Poetry by G. Soane.

J. GREEN, 33, Soho-square, publisher of all Logier's works.

19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.

NEW BOOKS SENT for PERUSAL, by Railroad and Steam-vessels, to all parts of the Coast and Kingdom, from BULL'S ENGLISH and FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London. Terms, Gratis and Post-free, on application. An unlimited supply of New Books is furnished to the Library, which, as soon as the first demand has subsided, may be purchased by the Subscribers, if desired, at half-price. The DUPLICATE CATALOGUE of such works at present on sale is now ready, and may be had, Gratis and Post-free, on application

RHEUMATIC PAINS, WEAKNESS in the LIMBS, JOINTS, &c.—The afflicted with such should read Mr. CABBURN'S PAMPHLET, which will be sent to any part of the Kingdom (gratis) upon a paid letter, enclosing two post stamps, being addressed to Mr. Cabburn's Dispensary, King's Cross, London, wherein proofs are adduced that for a few shillings, or even pence, in some cases, alleviation from pain may be quickly effected, and, in a short period, a perfect restoration. Persons about to take the benefit of change, as to air, &c., should read this Pamphlet, it being the third edition of 100,000.

Mitchell's Illustrated and Improved Work on the Ball Room.—Now ready, price 1s.,

POLKA LESSON BOOK, or Ball-room Guide.—In addition to a complete Cours de Polka, with beautiful representations and correct instructions how to execute the various figures, so that a lady or gentleman may readily become a proficient, this work forms a perfect compendium of the etiquette of dancing with the figures of all the Quadrilles, Gallopades, Mazourkas, Polonaises, Polkas, and all those dances more particularly adopted at Court. May be had, by order, of any bookseller, or of the publisher, C. MITCHELL, Red Lion court, Fleet-street; who will send the work (post-free) on receipt of 1s., or postage stamps of equal value

Price 1s. 6d., neatly bound. New edition, now ready,

PRACTICAL MECHANIC'S POCKET GUIDE. By PROFESSOR WALLACE.—"In no department of science or literature, have we met a more truly useful manual than this tiny volume. Though scarcely so large as an ordinary pocket book, it contains a lucid exposition of the theory of mechanical powers as applied to the chief Prime Movers, human, animal, water, and steam force; an examination of the limits within which the materials used in mechanical contrivances are manageable in point of weight, and safe in point of strength; and a series of the tables most useful to practical engineers. The chapter on water-power is particularly valuable."—Athenæum.

Glasgow: Published by W. R. M'PHUN; N. H. CATES, Cheapside, London; and may be had, by order, of all Booksellers.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—The largest circulation of any Class Paper, is that of THE APPRENTICE AND TRADES' WEEKLY REGISTER. Edited by the Artizan Club, which is read by all classes of society, from the Monarch to the Mechanic. Architects, Builders, Engineers, Decorators, and Men of Vertu, Manufacturers, and Drapers' Assistants, Professional Students, Officers in the Army and Navy, Directors of Steam Companies, Amateurs in Science, Families, and Females, are the chief perusers of THE APPRENTICE. It is also supplied to all the Mechanics' Institutions in the kingdom, and the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duke of Cambridge, Sir Robert Peel, the Lords of the Admiralty, and leading Nobility and Gentry, are regular subscribers to the Artizan Works.—Office, 7, Wellington-street, North.

BY COMMAND.
UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

THE SPORTING REVIEW for SEPTEMBER, 1844, is beautifully embellished with TWO SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, viz., "SEPTEMBER." Engraved by E. Hacker, from a Painting by J. Bateman, and "CHEEK BY JOWL." Engraved by H. Beckwith, from an original Painting.

CONTENTS.

Goodwood Races. By Craven.
The Life of a Jockey. By Lord William Lennox.
The Carp. By Charles Willowdale and his friend Harry Harley.
Rail v. Road; or, Ancient and Modern Travel. By Whiskaway.
Sporting Excursions. By Toho.
My Uncle's Advice on Sporting Matters. By Actæon.
On Training the Race-horse. By Cotherstone.
Cowes Regatta. By Craven.
Reports of the Committees on Gaming. By Castor.
Literature.
Public Amusements of the Metropolis.
Monthly Miscellany.
State of the Odds, &c.
Turf Register: Epping Town, Hungerford Ascoth Heath, Whitchurch, Curragh June Meeting, Hampton, Newton, Tenbury, East Surrey, Sutton Park, Knighton, Hatcham Park, Bibury Club, Stockbridge, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

London: Sporting Review Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand. May be had of all Booksellers

THE NEW

MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLEE, for SEPTEMBER, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate Patronage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, is beautifully Illustrated with highly-finished Portraits of the Nobility, and contains an exquisite Engraving of

LORD BYRON'S ADAH, and
TWO COLOURED PLATES OF THE FASHIONS, finished in the First Style, as they arrive from Paris.

CONTENTS:—

Florence; or Woman's Friendship. By Miss Aguilar.
To Eliza.
My Picture Gallery. By Major Calder Campbell.
Home Slavery. By W. M. Kirkhouse.
The Maiden and the Flowers on May Morning, from the German. By Miss Leslie.
Lines written when a Lark was Singing.
The Young Physician. (A Tale of the Day.) By Mrs. Abdy.
The Death of Cuthelin. (From Ossian.) By W. G. J. Barker, Esq.
The Bride of Heaven. By Miss Georgiana Munro.
A Song of Sappho. By Mrs. Ponsonby (late Miss Skelton).
To a Friend. By Miss F. B. Scott.
Sketches of German Literature. By Miss Mary Ann Youatt.
The Question. By Miss Toulmin.
Memoir of the late Miss Copley Hall. By Miss Jane Roberts.
Literary Remains of the late Willis Gaylord Clark.
Songs for Stray Airs. By Miss Mulock.
The Young Lady who is an Old Maid. By Miss E. Youatt, Author of "The Price of Fame," &c.
Le Premier Grenadier des Armées de la Republique. By the late J. E Inman.
A London Lament. By E. A. H. O.
Helen Macartney. By Mrs. Embury.
Lines. By C. T.
The Rover's Grave. By J. Goslin.
A Visit to Jervaux Abbey.
Round-about Story Tellers. By J. J. Reynolds.
The Rustic Lover.
Literature.
Music.
Amusements of the Month.
The Burns' Festival.
Fine Arts.
Fashions for September.
Description of the Plates.
To Correspondents.

"This Magazine should find its way into every drawing-room in the kingdom."—The News.

"In every respect well worthy the distinguished patronage conferred on the work."—Exeter Gazette.

"This elegant and amusing periodical deserves well the patronage of the female sex."—Newcastle Courant.

May be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

TO SPORTSMEN, TOURISTS, &c.—BERDOE'S SUPERIOR WATERPROOF SHOOTING JACKETS, GARMENTS for the SEA-SIDE, &c. An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials, always ready, guranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and confidently recommended to those who regard a respectable appearance or wish to avoid the disappointment and vexation consequent upon purchasing articles made by slopsellers, and sold by parties not tailors. First rate clothing of every description upon the lowest terms possible, consistent with true economy and ultimate satisfaction.—W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side).

COD LIVER OIL.

DOMESTIC ACCIDENTS, arising from Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, Sprains, &c. &c., are immediately cured by this extraordinary remedy, which no family should be without. Prospectuses, containing cures of Gout, Rheumatism, Scrofula, Diseased Joints, Spinal and Glandular Affections, Lumbago, Scrofulous Ulcers, &c. &c., all testified by the highest medical authorities, will be sent to any address, on receipt of two postage stamps.

CAUTION.—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac-simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London."

Wholesale Agents: BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street; E. EDWARDS, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; SUTTON and Co., Bow Churchyard. Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

INCOME WITHOUT RISK.—The LONDON GENUINE TEA COMPANY, Established November 5, 1818, at 23, Ludgate-hill, are now filling up their lists of Agents; and persons desirous of such an appointment, by which many have derived considerable incomes, without risk, during the last twenty-six years, are requested to apply to the Company, at their Warehouses, 2, Laurence Pountney-hill, London.

LESSONS IN MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Mrs. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dressmaking in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils. Apprentices and Improvers wanted.

CORRESPONDENT WANTED.—An active, intelligent YOUNG MAN, of good address, to furnish the weekly correspondence of a given district, for a Liberal Provincial Journal. A little knowledge of Reporting will be a recommendation. None need apply unless their character for Sobriety and Steadiness can be fully borne out. Address, stating terms, age, and late employment, to £ s. d., at Messrs. Newton and Co's., Newspaper Agents, Warwick-square, London.

UMBRELLAS.—Silk Umbrellas, from 6s. each; Ladies' best silk ditto, 12s. to 16s.; Gentlemen's ditto, ditto, 12s. to 26s.; German steel rib large size silk ditto, 12s.; best ditto, with ivory handles, 16s. to 20s.: gingham umbrellas, from 2s. 6d. The Trade and Country Dealers supplied with Silks, Ginghams, and all kind of Materials, Oil Silk, &c.—E. ALLEN, 198, OXFORD-STREET, Two doors West of Orchard-street, and 14, BURLINGTON ARCADE.—All Letters punctually attended to. Any article exchanged, if not approved of.

NEW PATENTS.—BROCKEDON'S IMPROVED STOPPERS.—This important Invention, a Substitute for Corks and Bungs, has, by new and great Improvements, become a pure, imperishable, and perfect means of preserving, for any length of time, Wine, Beer, Spirits, &c. They are cheap, and easily applied, and the appearance which they now have of fine Cork has removed the prejudice against their former dark colour. Also, DECANTER STOPPERS, to keep Wine which is in daily use in perfect condition.—C. MACINTOSH and Co., 19, Walbrook, London; and 22, York-street Manchester.

LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—NOTICE, the WARWICK and LEAMINGTON UNION RAILWAY will be OPENED at the Coventry Station, where it joins the London and Birmingham Railway, on MONDAY, the 2nd December next. Particulars of the Trains and Fares will be given previous to opening.

By Order, R. CREED,
Secretary to the London and Birmingham Railway.
Office, Euston Station,
9th September, 1844.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly-appreciated appendage of the British toilet has for nearly a century past maintained unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the Skin, together with the valuable properties of a Preserver and Sustainer of the Complexion of the most congenial nature, removing every trace of Sallowness and Discoloration, and promoting the Transparency and Brightness of the Skin which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion.—"ROBT. SHAW, London" is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

OLD WORN-OUT PLATED ARTICLES, instantly REPLATED with a coating of pure silver, by the POTOSIAN LIQUID SILVER, 1s. per bottle, or four in one, 3s. This pure liquid silver is entirely free from any admixture of grosser metals; it restores the beauty of articles utterly useless, and renders that beauty perennial! In application it is so simple that it may be applied by a child.—SMITH and Co., sole proprietors, opposite Norfolk-street, Strand. Sold also by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard. Ask for the "Potosian Liquid Silver." Other preparations are often injurious—always ineffective.

GLASS CHANDELIERS for DRAWING ROOMS.—APSLEY PELLATT, (late Pellatt and Green,) Falcon Glass Works, Holland-street, Blackfriars, has recently constructed a NEW CHANDELIER (Registered), which surpasses in brilliant and refractive effects all former efforts, to which he invites inspection. Renaissance and other glass chandeliers as usual at low prices, which, when lighted, have a far more resplendent effect than buhl. Table cut and engraved glass. The manufactory and steam-cutting works may be seen any Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday. Merchants' orders and outfits for glass or china on the very lowest terms. No connexion with any house in the city. Glass Milk Pans, patronised by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and Condensing Propagating Glasses.

CAUTION to the NOBILITY and GENTRY.—The person now in custody on a charge of robbery has never been in any way connected with me. I have never authorised the above or any other party to work, make out bills, and receive money in my name. My connection is of above 150 years standing, with unimpeached credit and success; and I still with confidence solicit the continued patronage of those who may require assistance in the DESTRUCTION of BUGS, and can assure them that whether in Rooms, Bedsteads, &c., I can thoroughly extirpate them in a few hours, without fumigation, damage, unpleasant odour, or removal; but should a complaint arise from any unforeseen cause during the same season, it will be remedied without additional charge, coach fare for country work excepted. Direct to C. TIFFIN, Punaise Extirpator to the Royal Family, 17, Somers-place New-road, St. Pancras.—Sept. 14, 1844.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six. N.B.—Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

COX'S PATENT SPARKLING GELATINE, FOR MAKING JELLIES, BLANCMANGE, &c., stronger than Isinglass, at one-third the price, is particularly economical and convenient for the use of Families. Hotel keepers, Invalids, and others, and a profitable article for Exportation. Sold in packets only by the principal Druggists, Grocers, and Oilmen in the United Kingdom, at 9d., 1s. 6d., 3s., 5s., and 7s.—each packet bearing the Patentee's signature. Extract from Dr. URE's Testimonial:—"London, 9th February, 1844.—I have much pleasure in certifying that the Patent Sparkling Gelatine of Messrs. J. and G. Cox is prepared by an excellent process, which, while it preserves entire all the virtues of this alimentary substance, renders it equally pure and beautiful. Examined by chemical tests, it is found perfectly free from acid, and fully stronger than the best isinglass in the London market, and affords a Jelly (in a few minutes) equal in all respects to, if not richer and more crystalline than that prepared from Calves' Feet." Agent in London, Mr. HENRY WATSON, No. 11, Old Fish-street, City.—Patent Gelatine Works, Gorgie Mills, Edinburgh.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.—Under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H. R. H. Prince Albert, the Royal Family, and Nobility.—A fragrant White Powder prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the Teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus:—A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed on each Box.

 All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!!!

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced, for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive even in name, beyond a very limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "GENUINE" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. ROWLAND and SON, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials (solely imported by them) renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s per bottle.— All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA CARPETING.—This carpeting having now most successfully stood the test of competition with other descriptions of carpeting, THE PATENT WOOLLEN CLOTH COMPANY, who are the Sole Manufacturers, inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that their patterns for the present season, in entirely new and elegant designs by the first artists of the day, are now out, and may be had at all the principal Carpet Warehouses in London, and nearly every town of the United Kingdom. Economy being now the order of the day with all classes, the public have the opportunity of purchasing an article which, in strength and durability, is superior to Kidderminster and Brussels, and at less than half the price. From the ingenious mode of manufacture it is also quite impervious to dust, an advantage not possessed by any other description of carpeting. The public are cautioned against parties at the present time selling a stout printed drugget, and calling it the Victoria Felt Carpeting, the colours and quality of which will not bear comparison; the drugget being wove, the Patent neither wove nor spun, but felted, and as much superior to druggets as Turkey are to Kidderminster. The Company have also a large assortment of Table Covers and Window Curtains, embossed and printed in the most elegant and récherché designs and in all sizes. Tablings, Waistcoatings, and various other goods of their Patent Manufacture.—Manufactories, Elmwood Mills, Leeds, and Borough-road, London. Wholesale Warehouse, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside.

THE MILLION TEA KETTLE will Boil Two Quarts of Water at less than a farthing expense, and without the trouble of lighting a fire. Price, 6s. and 10s. each; to be seen in action at the LIGHT HOUSE, 201, STRAND.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.

JONES'S PHILOSOPHICAL REMEDY is the most ingenious discovery of the day; it immediately enables the greatest sufferer to walk with the most perfect ease and comfort, and is peculiarly applicable for CORNS BETWEEN THE TOES.

Sold by all Patent Medicine Vendors, in boxes, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each; or sent free by post on receipt of fifteen postage stamps.—LIGHT HOUSE, 201, STRAND.

COUNTRY PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, &c.—ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD executed in the best style, and with the greatest despatch, by F. SMYTHE, Designer and Engraver. Address, 268, Strand.

SIX POUNDS of TEA, whether Black or Green, for 17s., and small bright Gunpowder, in 12lb. boxes, at 4s. 6d. per lb.—East India Tea Company's Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

BOYS' CLOTHING.—The only House in London for really Cheap and Good Boys' Clothes, is SPRATSWILL'S Old-Established Warehouse, 36, HOLBORN-HILL, near Fetter-lane.—N.B. The largest Stock in London of Ready-made Clothes of every description.—36, Holborn-hill.

TO MILLINERS and DRESSMAKERS.—THREE or FOUR IMPROVERS REQUIRED Immediately. They must have had at least three years' experience. Apply, personally, before Ten, or after Six o'Clock, at Mrs. TREACHER'S, 57, Regent-street.

JONES' £4 4s SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to ladies and gentlemen wishing privacy and expedition. An evening academy on Mondays and Fridays. A juvenile academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Lessons in the Polka and Valse a Deux Temps every day. Terms may be had on application as above. The rooms may be engaged by private parties.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented and effectually removed in Youth and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars, on receiving a postage stamp.

PATENT PARAGON CAMPHINE LAMPS.—The great fault which was last year found with the Vesta from its great smoke and emission of black smuts, is happily entirely obviated in the Paragon—which surpasses in brilliancy and whiteness of light anything hitherto seen, giving the light of 16 wax candles at the cost of one halfpenny per hour. The largest stock in London to select from, at C. WATSON'S Warehouses, 41 & 42, Barbican, and 16, Norton Folgate. The Spirit, analyzed and recommended by Dr. Ure, is delivered by C. Watson's carts, at 4s. per gallon, in screw cans.

IMPROVED CAMPHINE LAMPS; also ENGLISH'S PATENT CAMPHINE.—Public attention is respectfully solicited to E. LEWIS'S OIL and ITALIAN WAREHOUSE, 42, High-street, Marylebone, where may be obtained the new Lamps with every recent improvement, by which they are rendered perfect and superior to anything before seen. A trial allowed before purchasing. Lewis's Patent Wax Candles 11d. per lb.; Price's Composite, 10½d. per lb.; Kempton's Moulds, 8d. per lb. These Candles are warranted to burn without snuffing.

SILVER PLATE.—T. COX SAVORY'S Pamphlet of Prices, with outlines, may be had gratis, or will be sent post free if applied for by a paid letter. The contents are the prices, weights, and patterns of new and second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks; new and second-hand Tea and Coffee Services, Waiters, Silver-edged Plated Goods, the new plated on white metal Spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Cutlery, Ladies' Gold Neck Chains, and jewellery.—T. COX SAVORY, 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch street), London.

SPORTSMEN should see DOUDNEY and SON'S Celebrated SHOOTING JACKETS, 10s. 6d. and 21s.; and all sorts of Sportsmen's Clothing, at 49, Lombard-street. Superfine Dress Coats, 38s. and 47s. 6d.; Frock Coats, silk facings, 42s. and 50s.; Codringtons, every make and shape, 12s. 6d. and 21s.; Doeskin, and all the new patterns for Trousers, 10s. 6d. and 21s. Army cloth blue Spanish Cloaks, four-and-a-half yards round, 50s.; ditto Opera Cloaks, 21s. Suit of Livery, 63s. Boys' Hussar Suits, 25s.; Boys' Cloaks, 7s. 6d. and 15s. Ladies' elegant Riding Habits, 63s. and 84s.—Doudney and Son, 49, Lombard-street. Established 1784.

STRONG UNSWEETENED GIN, as from the Still.—Gentlemen who choose to mix for themselves, or to whom any dulcified beverage is objectionable, will gladly adopt this genuine description of BRITISH GENEVA, and dispense with the "making-up" usually resorted to by the Trade. We deliver large or small quantities at the rate of 12s. per Imperial gallon. The Liqueur Geneva on similar terms. London Cream Gin only 10s. 6d. Connoisseurs of Scotch or Irish plain Spirit may be respectively accommodated with the real Glenlivat, or the Lord Lieutenant's ("L. L.") Whiskey, precisely as imported, at 20s. per Imperial gallon. Orders, by post, will claim instant attention.—HENRY BRETT and Co., Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn-bars.

SCHOLASTIC PARTNERSHIP.—The Principal of a first-rate PREPARATORY SCHOOL for YOUNG GENTLEMEN, a few miles from Town, established many years, and in a most salubrious situation, is desirous of meeting with a Lady thoroughly competent to relieve her from the School Room duties. She must have a fair knowledge of the Latin Grammar. The net profits are considerable—the only reason being the state of health of the Principal. To a Lady accustomed to Tuition, and in every respect fully qualified, very liberal terms will be offered, even if a Partnership could not be arranged.—Address, A. C. M., care of Messrs. Hatchard's, Piccadilly; or Mr. Bulgin, 221, Regent-street.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn-out Plated Articles, by immediately depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than the ordinary process of cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious, as it deposits nothing but Pure Silver. It has been highly approved by Dr Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon street, London; and by Messrs. JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-street, Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each; and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations; the Genuine are all Signed on the wrapper, by I. D. COGAN and R. GILLO.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth Brush has the important advantage of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose, 1s. An improved Clothes Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair Brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristle, which does not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes, of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The genuine Smyrna Sponge, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties, profits, and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge.—Only at METCALFE'S sole establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.—Caution: Beware of the words, "from Metcalfe's," adopted by some houses.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be procured from this establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid or even sea-water. Black and Grey and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plads and Merinos of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for mourning, in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c &c. W. C. JAY and Co.

SELF-MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.

No longer let those who are dwellers afar,
Themselves from the Warehouse of MOSES debar,
By adopting our plan, which has never a failure,
Ev'ry gentleman now may become his own Tailor!

E. MOSES and SON are desirous of directing especial attention to their plan of "Self-Measurement," The extreme simplicity and the minute exactness of this admirable plan are such as cannot fail to answer the purpose designed. No failure in point of fit can arise from its use; or, should anything of the kind occur, the proprietors will hold themselves responsible. Thousands are thus enabled to avail themselves of the choice Clothing of MOSES and SON, without any inconvenience arising from distance, &c. A Book with a wood-cut and full directions may be obtained on application (gratis) and free of postage. Residents in the country cannot do better than avail themselves of so favourable an opportunity of purchasing at the greatest Tailoring Establishment in the Kingdom.

READY-MADE.	£	s.	d.
Shooting Coats, in every variety, from	0	10	0
Velveteen do., 7 pockets ..	0	18	6
Tweed Taglionis	0	8	6
Ditto, silk facings, collar and cuffs	0	16	0
Cashmarette Coats, in every shape, handsomely trimmed, from ..	1	1	0
An immense stock of Blouses ..	0	3	6
Summer Vests	0	2	6
Cashmarette and Persian do., in every variety from 3s. to	0	8	6
Black Satin Vests	0	6	6
Cloth do.	0	4	6
Cloth Trousers	0	9	0
Single-milled Doe do., from ..	0	11	0
A great variety of Summer do. ..	0	7	0
Dress Coat, edged	1	0	0
Frock do. do.	1	4	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s.	d
Sporting Coats in the most approved style	0	13	6
Velveteen do., 7 Pockets ..	1	3	0
Tweed Coats trimmed with silk ..	0	16	0
Cahmere fine Saxony do. ..	1	3	0
Cashmarette, new and improved article, warranted waterproof, trimmed with silk, collar, cuffs, &c.	1	18	0
Quilting Vests 7s. each, or 3 for	1	0	0
Cashmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	9	0
Trousers adapted for the season	0	9	6
Mill'd Victoria and plain Doe do.	0	17	0
Best quality West of England ..	1	3	0
Super Black do. do.	0	16	0
Best Black dress do	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Do. do. best manufactured ..	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Do. do., best manufactured ..	3	3	0

MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion with any other house; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing should (to prevent disappointments, &c.) call at, or send to, 154 Minories; or 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset, until sunset on Saturday, when it is resumed until twelve o'clock.

NEW MUSIC.

No. 1. HAMILTON'S Catechism of the Rudiments of Harmony and Thorough Bass. No. 2. Hamilton's Catechism of Counterpoint, Melody, and Composition, &c. No. 3. Hamilton's Catechism of Double Counterpoint and Fugue, &c. No. 4. Hamilton's Catechism on the Art of Writing for an Orchestra, and on playing from a Score. No. 5. Hamilton's Catechism on Musical Ideas. No. 6. Hamilton's Dictionary of 2000 Musical Terms, &c. No. 7. Hamilton's Key to Catechism of Harmony and Thorough Bass. R. COCKS and Co.

This collection is an extremely interesting and ingenious series of opuscula on the art of music—but we think a little too much on the subject has been said. The ancient system of thorough bass, from old Miller to more senile Crotch has been followed, and greater attention paid to figured combinations than to radical elements. Still these books are the work of a contemplative mind, and if we could but make the author believe in a more simple system of harmony, we should like him the better. We are tired of such terms as the chord of the superfluous sixth, Italian sixth, German sixth, French sixth, &c. No. 4 is a most useful work to the young composer or orchestral writer. The Dictionary of terms is extremely comprehensive and explanatory. Altogether each particular volume reflects the highest credit upon the genius and learned industry of the author.

BEETHOVEN'S MOUNT OF OLIVES. Edited by Sir H. R. BISHOP. D'Almaine and Co.

Sir George Smart was the first to present us with an English version of this grand, but little understood, composition, which, with the exception of the last chorus, has never "taken" very well with the dilettanti of this country. It is, nevertheless, a noble inspiration, and, not to make invidious comparisons, has been rendered ample justice by Sir Henry in the present edition. The wild fugue, "But, ah! the wretch," is beautifully condensed in the pianoforte part; and the massive finale also effectively and clearly set forth. We do not see any necessity in these days of retaining the C tenor and tenor clefs—it deprives a great portion of the public of the power of joining in the concerted pieces.

Au reste, this is a splendid edition, and will conduce much to a greater popularity than this great work has hitherto enjoyed. The portrait of the reckless composer is very well executed: it breathes forth all that thoughtful energy which characterises the works of the great musician of Bonn. The biographical sketch and notices by Mr. Hamilton are full of interest to every body who respects the memory of that truly great man, LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN.

A NEW COMET.

The following announcement from Sir James South, introduced the "mysterious visitor" to the public, and at once excited great curiosity for further information:—

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—By a letter which I received from my friend Professor Schumacher, on Friday last, I was informed that a comet had been discovered on the 6th instant, by Mr. Melhop, of Hamburgh.

Owing to unfavourable weather, I have not been able to see it till this evening, when the clouds having cleared off for a few minutes, I found it with an ordinary night-glass without difficulty, and got an observation of it with my five-feet equatorial, by which its approximate place was, at fifty-two minutes past ten o'clock last (Sunday) night—right ascension, about 0 hours, 44 minutes, and 9 seconds; and its southern declination about 12 degrees and 56 minutes.

By the following positions of it, there will be no difficulty in finding it on any clear night during the present week:—

	Hour.	Comet's Altitude. Deg.	Comet's Bearing.		Hour.	Comet's Altitude. Deg.	Comet's Bearing.
Monday	9	7	S.E. b E.	Thursday	9	8	S.E. b E.
	10	14	S.E.		10	16	S.E.
	11	20	S.E. b S.		11	21	S.E. b S.
	12	24	S. b E.		12	25	S.S.E.
	1	25	S.		1	27	S.
	2	24	S.S.W.		2	26	S. b W.
	3	21	S.W. b S.		3	22	S.W. b S.
	4	15	S.W.		4	16	S.W.

Yours, &c.,
J. SOUTH.

Observatory, Kensington, Monday, Sept. 16, two o'clock, a.m.

We lost no time in endeavouring to procure for our readers a correct drawing of its appearance, but owing to the continuance of cloudy and hazy weather, we were not able till late on Wednesday night to get a view of sufficient clearness for the purpose. At that time, favoured by the assistance of Sir James South, and the use of his powerful instruments, we succeeded in getting the sight from which the accompanying cut has been made. The comet appeared to be composed of a brilliant well defined nucleus, four or five seconds diameter, and a broad luminous tail of about two degrees in length.

THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

On Monday week the first annual meeting of this Association was commenced at Canterbury. Long before the hour appointed, the Guildhall was crowded with antiquaries, and scientific and literary men of eminence from all parts of the kingdom; whilst the approaches to the Guildhall were crowded by persons anxious to get a glimpse of the celebrated men who were expected to be present.

In the meeting we noticed Lord Albert Conyngham, President of the Association; Viscount Strangford; Sir William Betham, Ulster King at Arms; Sir R. Westmacott, the Venerable Archdeacon Burney; Doctors Buckland, Spry, Pettigrew, and Russell; the Rev. John Bathurst Deane, the Rev. W. Chesshyre, John Britton, Esq., F.S.A., Alfred Conyngham, Esq., George Godwin, jun., Esq., F.R.S., Edward Solly, Esq., F.R.S., C. R. Smith, Esq., F.S.A., T. Wright, Esq., corresponding member of the Institute of France, and many other eminent gentlemen; there were also present a great number of elegantly-dressed ladies.

Precisely at half-past three o'clock Lord A. Conyngham, the President of the Society, took the chair, and addressed the meeting. Mr. C. R. Smith, one of the secretaries, then submitted the business of the week, and also read a paper detailing the proceedings of the society since its commencement. They had exerted themselves with success to prevent the spoiliation of the few remains of the monuments of former ages, sacred as the repositories of the dust of our forefathers. In 1833, a committee had been instituted in France for Archæological research, under the superintendence of the Minister of Public Instruction, which had rendered most efficient service. The clergy had also used their utmost power to forward inquiries. A series of questions had been printed, and 30,000 copies thereof circulated, by means of which a vast amount of information had been collected. Ample funds had been afforded by the Government, and the happiest results had followed their exertions. After advising as to the future course of the Society, the paper expressed a hope that the Government of this country would be induced to imitate the example set by that of France, and devote an ample fund to accomplish a purpose so truly English.

A very learned and interesting paper was then read by Sir William Betham, on "the origin of Idolatry," after which, the meeting separated.

At eight o'clock in the evening, we found the hall again filled.

The Rev. J. B. Deane read an interesting paper on "Barrows in General;" the object of which was to show the habits of our ancestors previous to the Christian era, and their likeness to the customs of other tribes in the burial of the dead. It was regretted that the ancient inhabitants of Britain had left behind them so few records of a public character; but, strange as it appears, the outline of their private character might be traced in these barrows.

A shorter paper, on the opening of barrows at Bakewell, in Derbyshire, by Mr. Bateman, was read by Mr. Smith, and apparently much approved of.

Lord A. Conyngham having invited the company to Barnes's Rooms, to inspect some curious ornaments, the meeting retired, and a brilliant conversazione closed the business of the day.

SECOND DAY.

This morning about one hundred gentlemen, accompanied by several ladies, left Canterbury to be present at the opening of some tumuli on Breach Downs; where is a group of about twenty tumuli.

Precisely at ten o'clock the exploring party arrived: several of the barrows had been bared for the inspection of the Society. These barrows were examined, and several articles were found in them.

Leaving the downs, the party, which occupied about twenty carriages, exclusive of several stage coaches and other hired vehicles, proceeded to Bourne Park, the seat of the noble President, where a splended entertainment was provided, consisting of every delicacy the season afforded.

About half-past two o'clock, the company assembled at the southern side of the park, for the purpose of examining some other barrows, which were presumed to contain the remains of ancient Saxons, which presumption was proved to be correct by the subsequent proceedings.

At eight o'clock the members and friends of the Association again assembled at the Guildhall; the Very Rev. Archdeacon Butler presiding.

Dr. Pettigrew then laid before the meeting the result of the investigation of the barrows at Breach Down.

Doctor Buckland then rose, and was received with great applause. He gave some of his own observations on barrows, and described at some length the appearances which human bones presented under different circumstances, after a lapse of centuries, and the manner in which the earthworms had carried the earth down to the bottom of some of the graves opened on the present occasion.

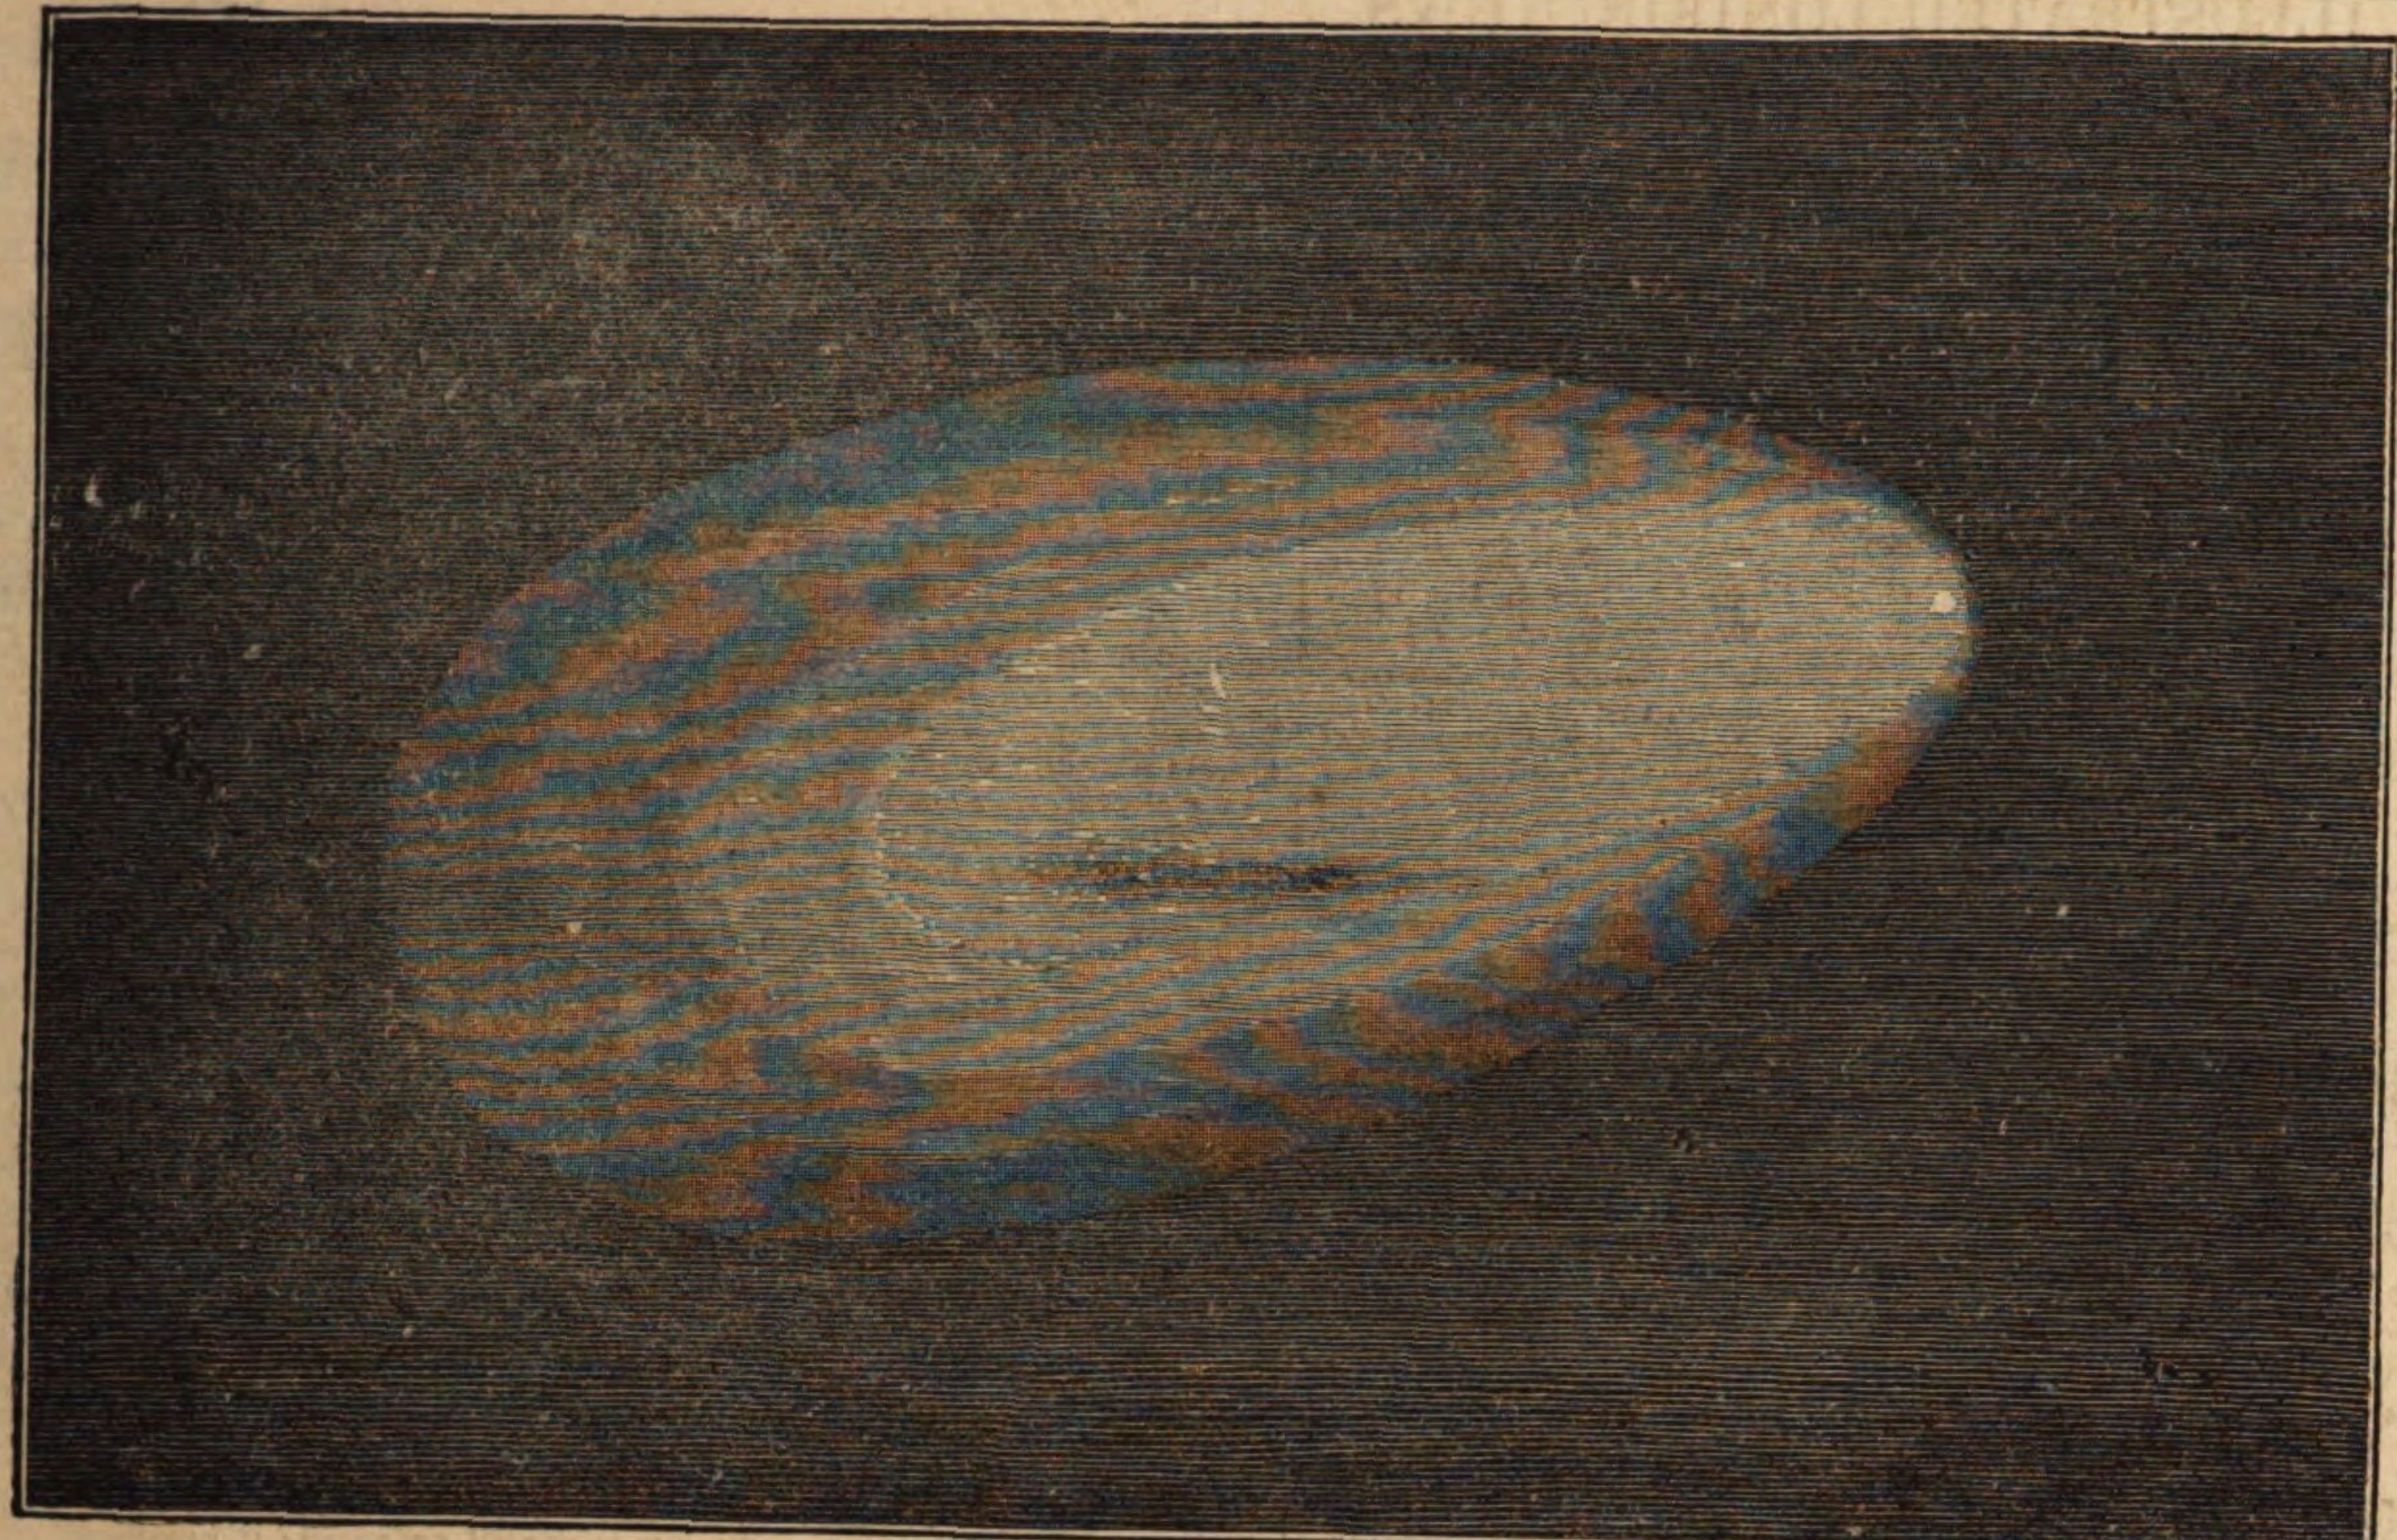
The Rev. Stephen Isaacson read a paper on the recent discoveries at Dymchurch, and produced many specimens of Roman pottery.

John Sydenham, Esq., of Greenwich, read a paper on the supposed Kimmeridge Coal Money, found in the West of England, which Dr. Buckland particularly eulogised. He stated that these articles, of which he exhibited specimens, were only the waste pieces thrown from the lathe in manufacturing armlets and other articles by the Romans.

The Secretary read a communication from the Rev. Beale Post, on Cæsar's landing in Britain, and in conclusion announced the business of the succeeding day.

THIRD DAY.

This morning the Mediæval Section of the Association met in the Guildhall.



THE NEW COMET DISCOVERED ON SUNDAY LAST—See page 191.

The Ven. Charles Parr Burney, F.R.S., F.S.A., Archdeacon of St. Albans, president of the section, took the chair, and addressed the meeting in advocacy of the interesting character of the remains of the Mediæval Age (from the Conversion of the Saxons to the time of Henry VIII.)

The first paper was one by W. Hatcher, Esq., of Salisbury: the subject an illustrated model of Old Sarum. The model was beautifully executed on the scale of two chains to the inch, and represented Sarum a fortified town in the time of the ancient Britons.

Dr. Spry then laid before the section a pencil drawing of a presumed fresco painting in Lenham Church. This was found during some repairs which were done to the church. The subject was allegorical, and represented an angel weighing two souls (a good and a bad one), and the sinner seeking forgiveness of the Virgin Mary, and the whole was highly emblematical of the covenant of mercy displayed in the New Testament. In the course of his remarks the Doctor vindicated the clergy from the charge which was frequently made against them of keeping back the truths of the Bible from the masses of the people. The charge was not correct. The price was the prohibition.

A desultory conversation followed, in the course of which some severe remarks were made upon the spoliation now going on in many ecclesiastical edifices, chiefly through the ignorance and caprice of churchwardens, to whom their care was too often entrusted.

A paper was then read by Mr. Woollaston, on the frescoes in East Wickham Church, drawings of which he obtained, after much difficulty and opposition on the part of a person who had paid a fee for liberty to erect a mural tablet, by which the paintings would be inevitably destroyed.

This led to the adoption of two resolutions, in pursuance of which letters were immediately despatched, to prevent, if possible, the erection of the monument against the walls of the antique church of East Wickham. Dr. Buckland also stated, upon the authority of Mr. Hawkins, of the British Museum, that Llanthony Church, Brecknockshire, famous for its antiquity, was about to be pulled down; and that ancient ecclesiastical edifice had been turned into a public-house, and then despoiled, as is part of the monastery of St. Augustine, at Canterbury, now used as a brewhouse.

An account of "Ecclesiastical Embroidery in the Reign of Edward III.," with drawings of conventional patterns and figures, by the Rev. C. H. Hartshorn, was then read. Specimens of beautiful tapestry, elegantly embroidered on rich Genoa velvet, were produced, and illustrated. The rev. gentleman hoped the day would soon arrive when the fingers of the ladies of England, instead of working the coarse wools of Germany, would be employed in this elegant art, which was early learned, but had been erroneously reported to have been lost, to the present generation. The address was ardently applauded by the ladies, who formed the greater part of the assembly.

A paper on the "Buckle and Badge of the Ancient House of Pelham," was read by J. R. Planché, Esq., and was well received; as was also a lengthy, and apparently learned, production, on the "Succession of William of Arc," by Thomas Stapleton, Esq., F.S.A., after which the assembly separated, some to visit the magnificent Cathedral, and others to the collection of curiosities of Dr. Faussett, both which have been thrown open to the members of the Institution.

The evening meeting at the Guildhall was more crowded than at any preceding sitting.

The Rev. Robert Willis, M.A., F.R.S., Jacksonian Professor, Cambridge, and president of the Architectural Section, took the chair at eight o'clock, and proceeded to read a translation of an account of the destruction of Canterbury Cathedral by fire, and its rebuilding; written by Gervase, a monk of Canterbury, who flourished in the thirteenth century, whose opinions the rev. gentleman most ably sustained. The reading of the translation excited much merriment, the quaintness of style and expression being carefully preserved; and the comments of the president were much applauded.

Dr. Buckland, during a desultory conversation which ensued, stated some facts, which, coming from so high an authority, deserve serious attention. Two instances had come to his knowledge of churches having been destroyed by spontaneous combustion, caused by guano having accumulated, in consequence of birds being allowed to fly through the towers. On visiting the Cathedral of Canterbury this day, he saw at least fifty pigeons flying through as many broken windows in the tower. If such a state of things were allowed to continue, and a storm arose, it was his opinion that the ancient edifice would be in great danger of being set on fire.

Other papers were read by different members, when the assembly departed to a conversazione at Barnes' Rooms, which was kept up until a late hour.

FOURTH DAY.

The interesting locality of Richborough, fully described in THE ILLUSTRATED NEWS, No. 77, page 259, was visited, to-day, by the members. The Dean of Hereford, Dr. Buckland, Dr. Spry, Mr. Bateman, and other eminent gentlemen joined the party. After the inspection of the ruins and excavations, a visit was paid to the mansion of John Godfrey, Esq., of Brook-street House, at Ash, near Wingham, and eventually to Barfreston. The rich sculpture of this venerable church, and especially its richly-ornamented doorway, excited universal admiration.

In the evening, under the guidance of Doctor Buckland and R. Smith, Esq., a visit was paid to the collection of Dr. G. Faussett. The objects principally embraced rather illustrations of the state of the arts in the Anglo-Roman and early Saxon epochs.

Mr. W. J. Taylor has struck a medal in commemoration of the first annual meeting of the Association. On the obverse side is the inscription "British Archæological Association, 1843," and upon the reverse the inscription "First Meeting, Canterbury, 1844—Lord Albert Conyngham, President," which encircles the arms of the city.

FIFTH DAY.

The members of the Historical Section met. Amongst others previously noticed were—T. Amyot, Esq.; T. C. Croker, Esq.; W. H. Ainsworth, Esq.; G. P. R. James, Esq.; P. Cunningham, Esq.; J. O. Halliwell, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A.; and several other eminent literary gentlemen. The noble President, Lord A. Conyngham, in the chair.

The Secretary, T. C. Croker, Esq., read a letter from Miss Halstead, relative to the history of the Reculvers in the time of Richard III.

Mr. Halliwell described some curious manuscripts he had that morning found in the Cathedral.

Mr. John Barrow, a paper upon the State of the Navy in the time of the eighth Henry.

Mr. Croker, upon the "Autobiography of Robert Boyle, Earl of Cork and Ossory," on which it was a severe critique.

Mr. T. Wright, upon the Civic Archives of Canterbury, detailing several curious entries, illustrative of ancient times, manners, and customs.

After which, a few other papers of minor interest were read, and the meeting adjourned until the evening, when a Mummy, said to have been brought from Thebes by Colonel Needham, was opened at the theatre. The leading families of the neighbourhood were present.

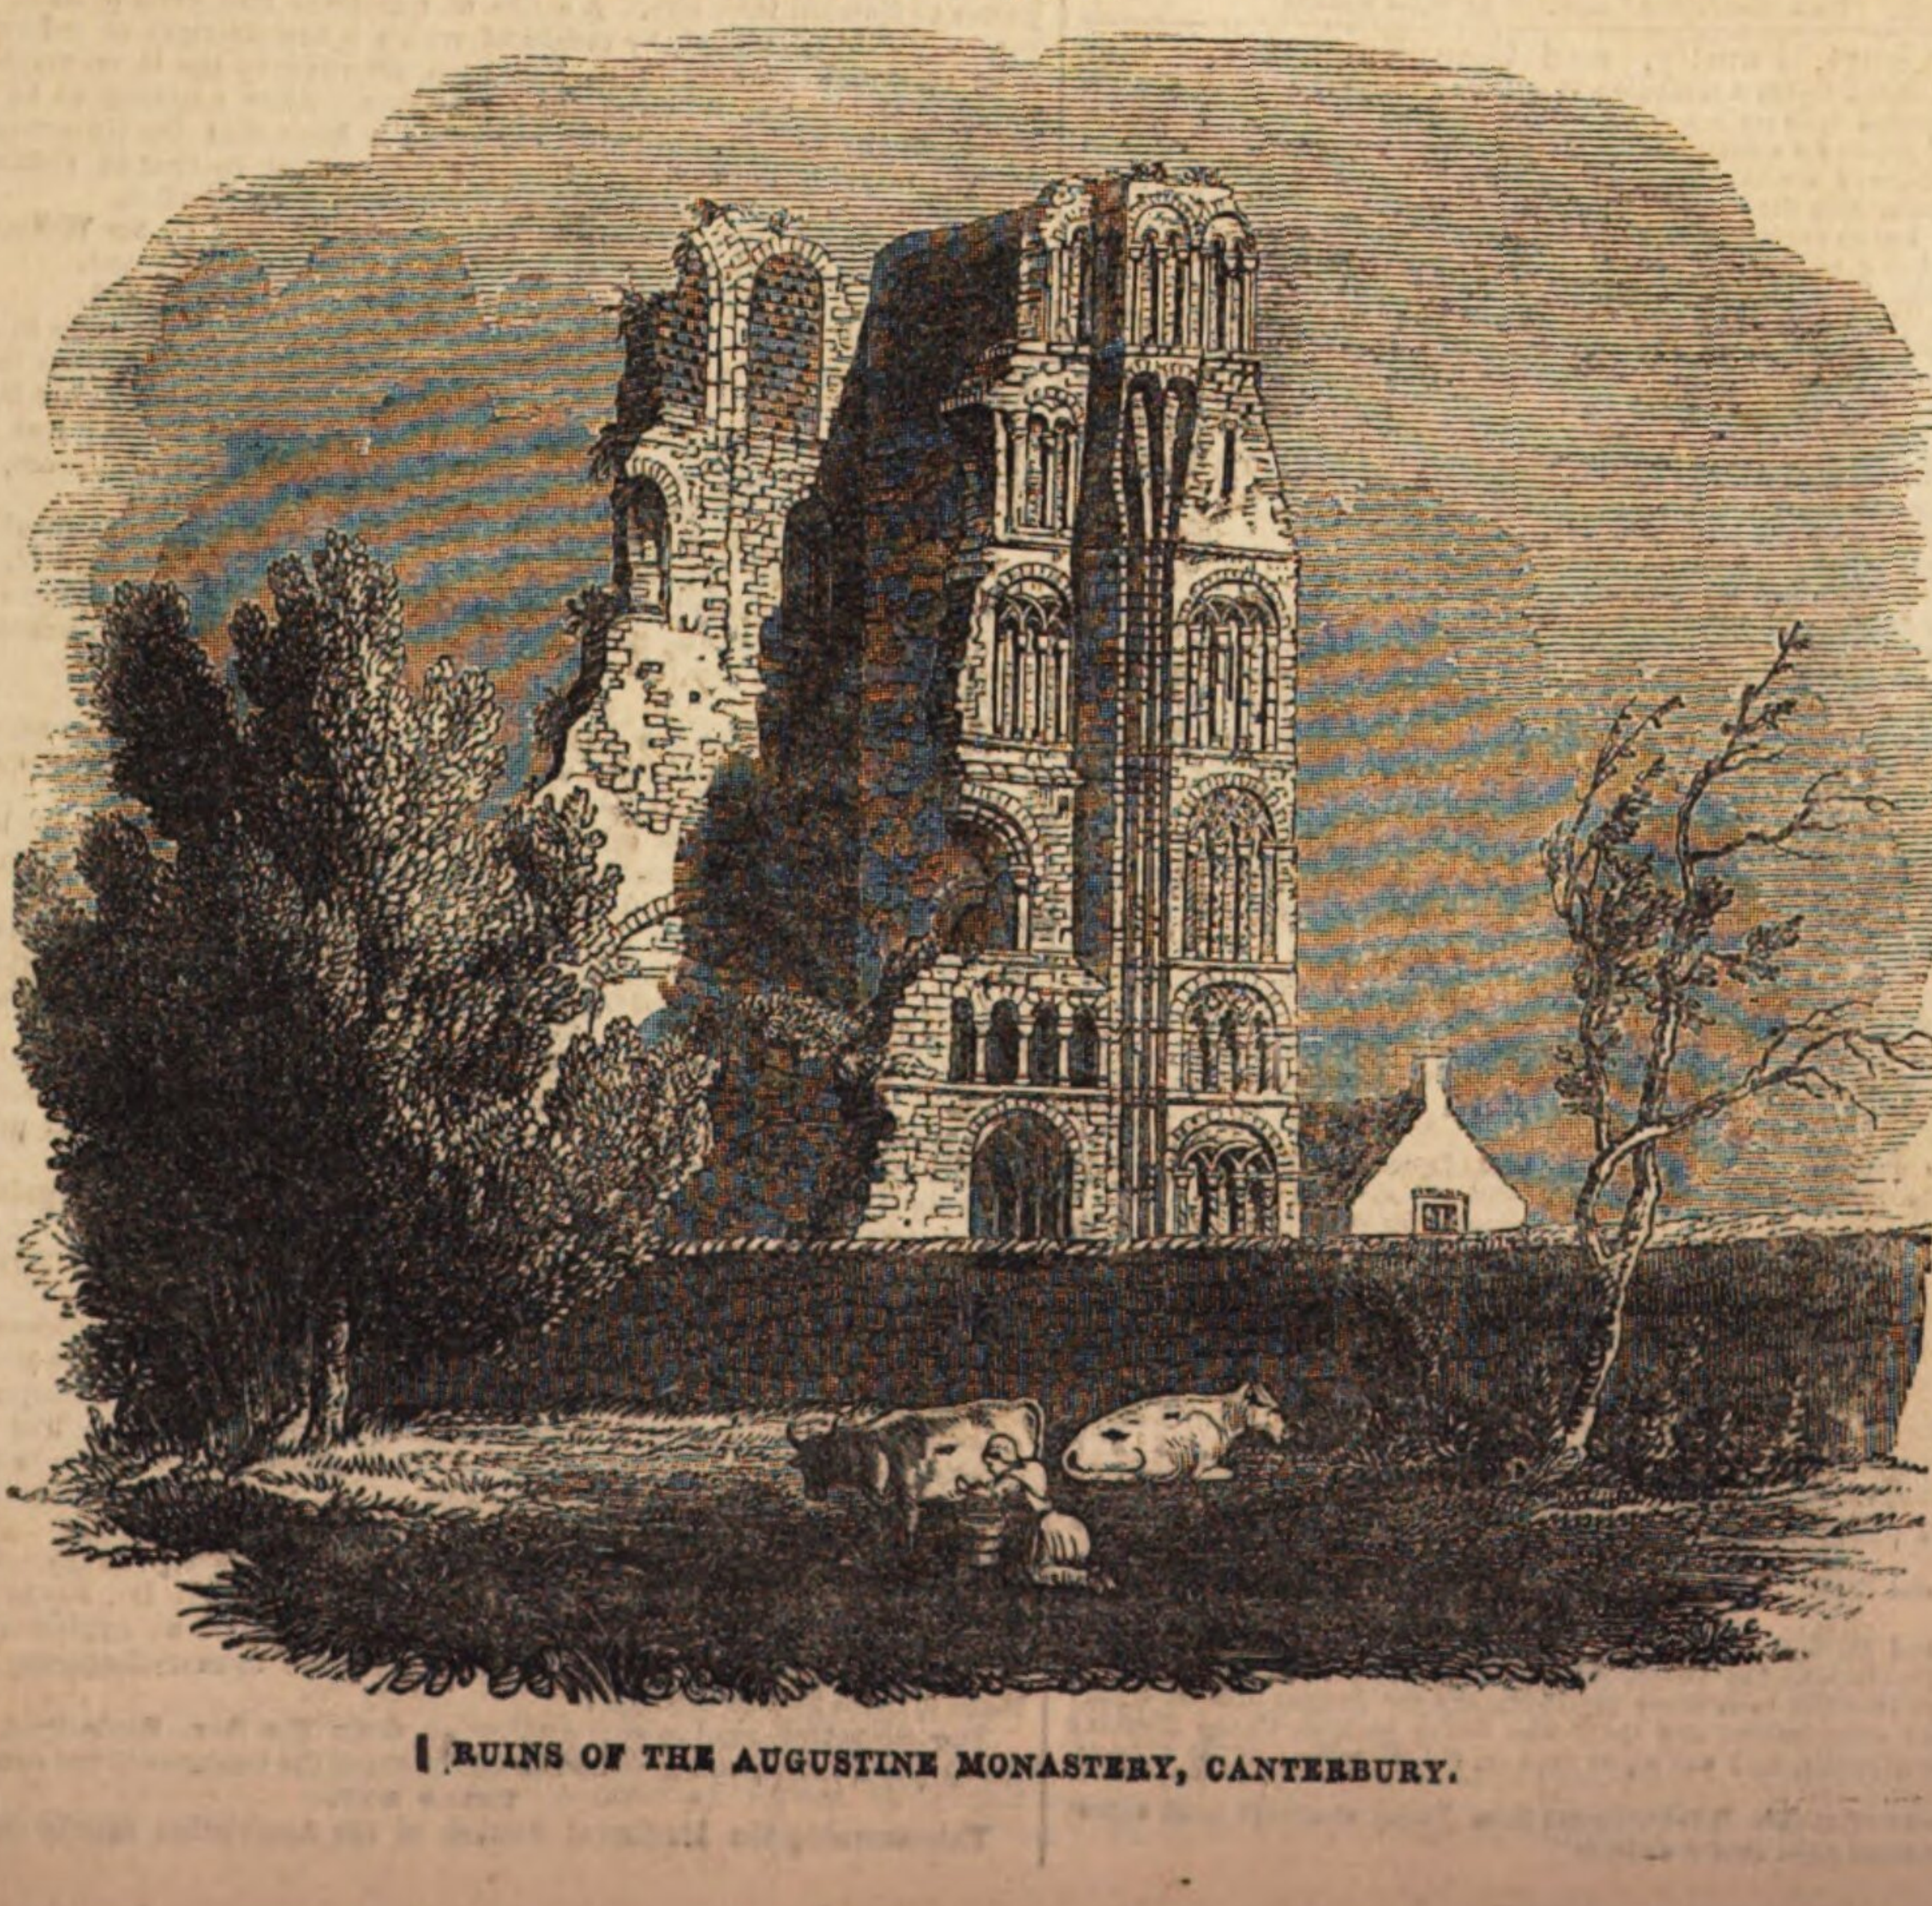
T. J. Pettigrew, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A., after a lucid address, proceeded to the unrolment. This was performed after much delay and difficulty, and the subject declared to be Har, the son of Unefer, the son of the House of Sahener-Eb.

LAST DAY.

The whole of the business of Saturday consisted in the adoption of gratulatory motions to the several executive members; after which, a vote of thanks was passed to the noble chairman, and the interesting proceedings terminated.

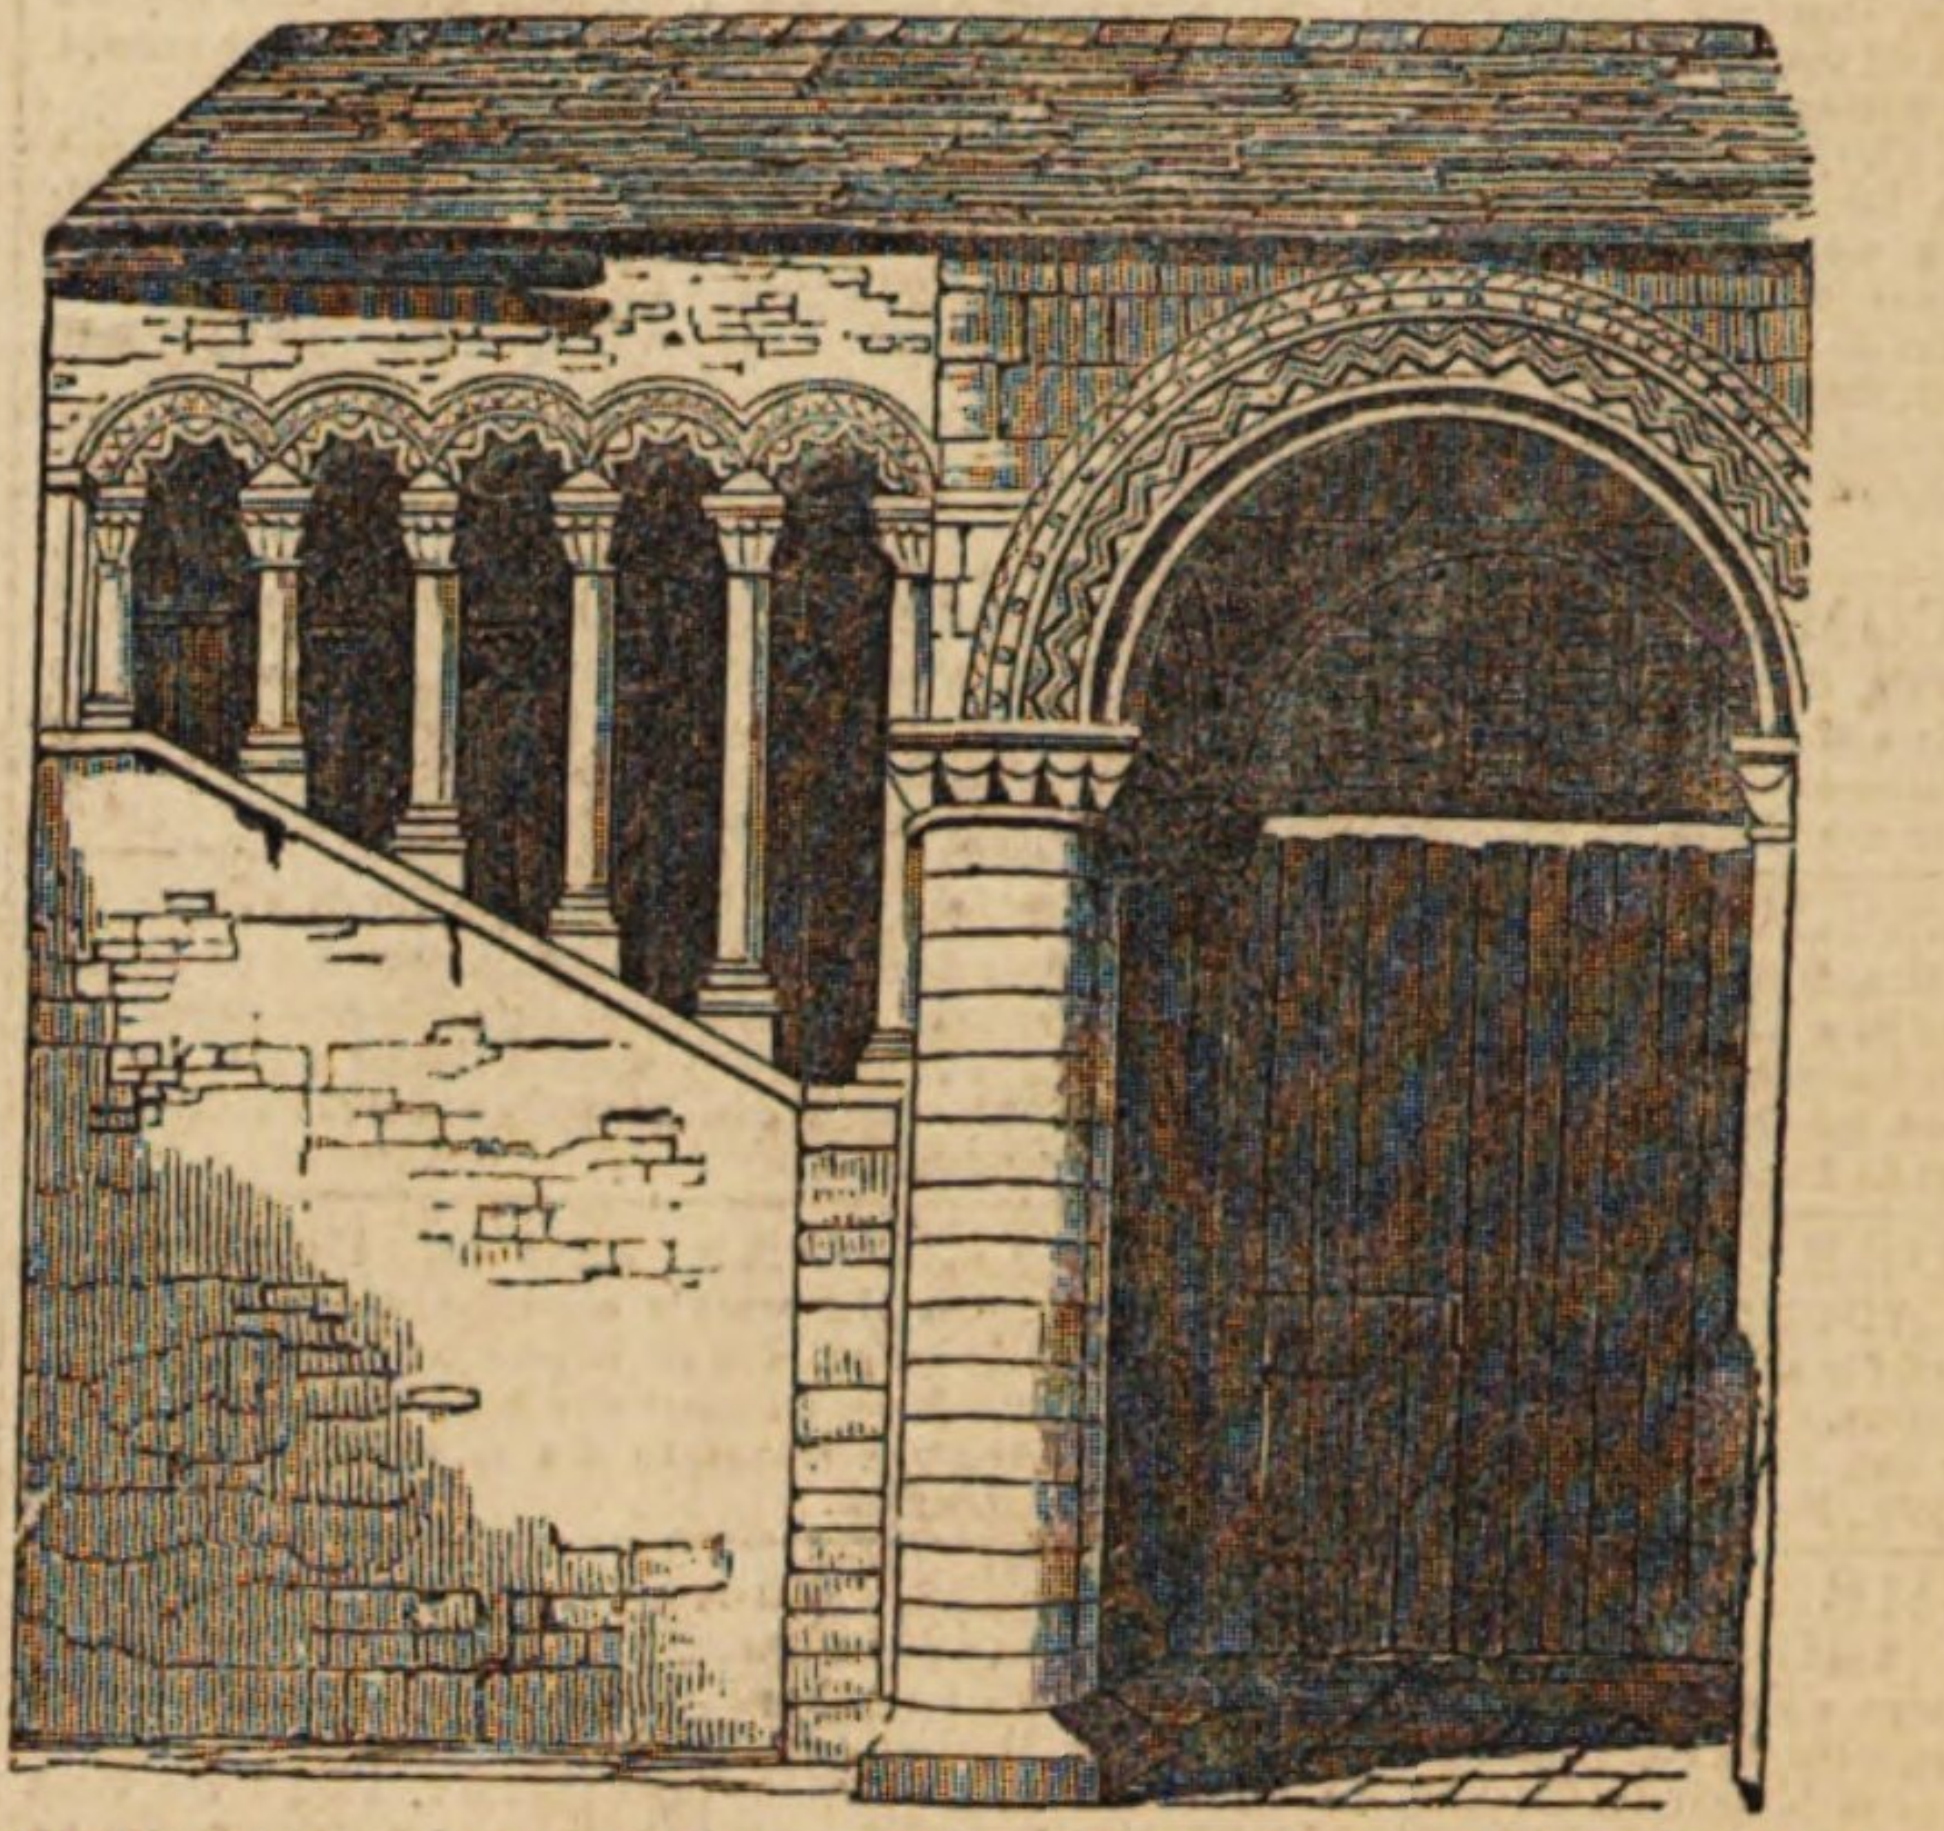
During the week, the members of the Association visited the objects of antiquity with which the city of Canterbury abounds. Our space being limited, we have not room to note the whole of the antiquities inspected. We, however, furnish the following original information respecting three of the most ancient of them, which will prove interesting from the fact of their state up to the present time being presented to our readers.

The monastery of St. Augustine is commonly believed to have been founded originally by the saint whose name it bears; and in one of the works in the library of the Cathedral, it is stated that "the ground thereupon to build was given by grant to Augustine by King Ethelbert, for dedication to St. Peter and St. Paul." By later records we find that St. Dunstan, in the year 978, renewed that dedication, adding to those of the Apostles above named that of St. Augustine.



RUINS OF THE AUGUSTINE MONASTERY, CANTERBURY.

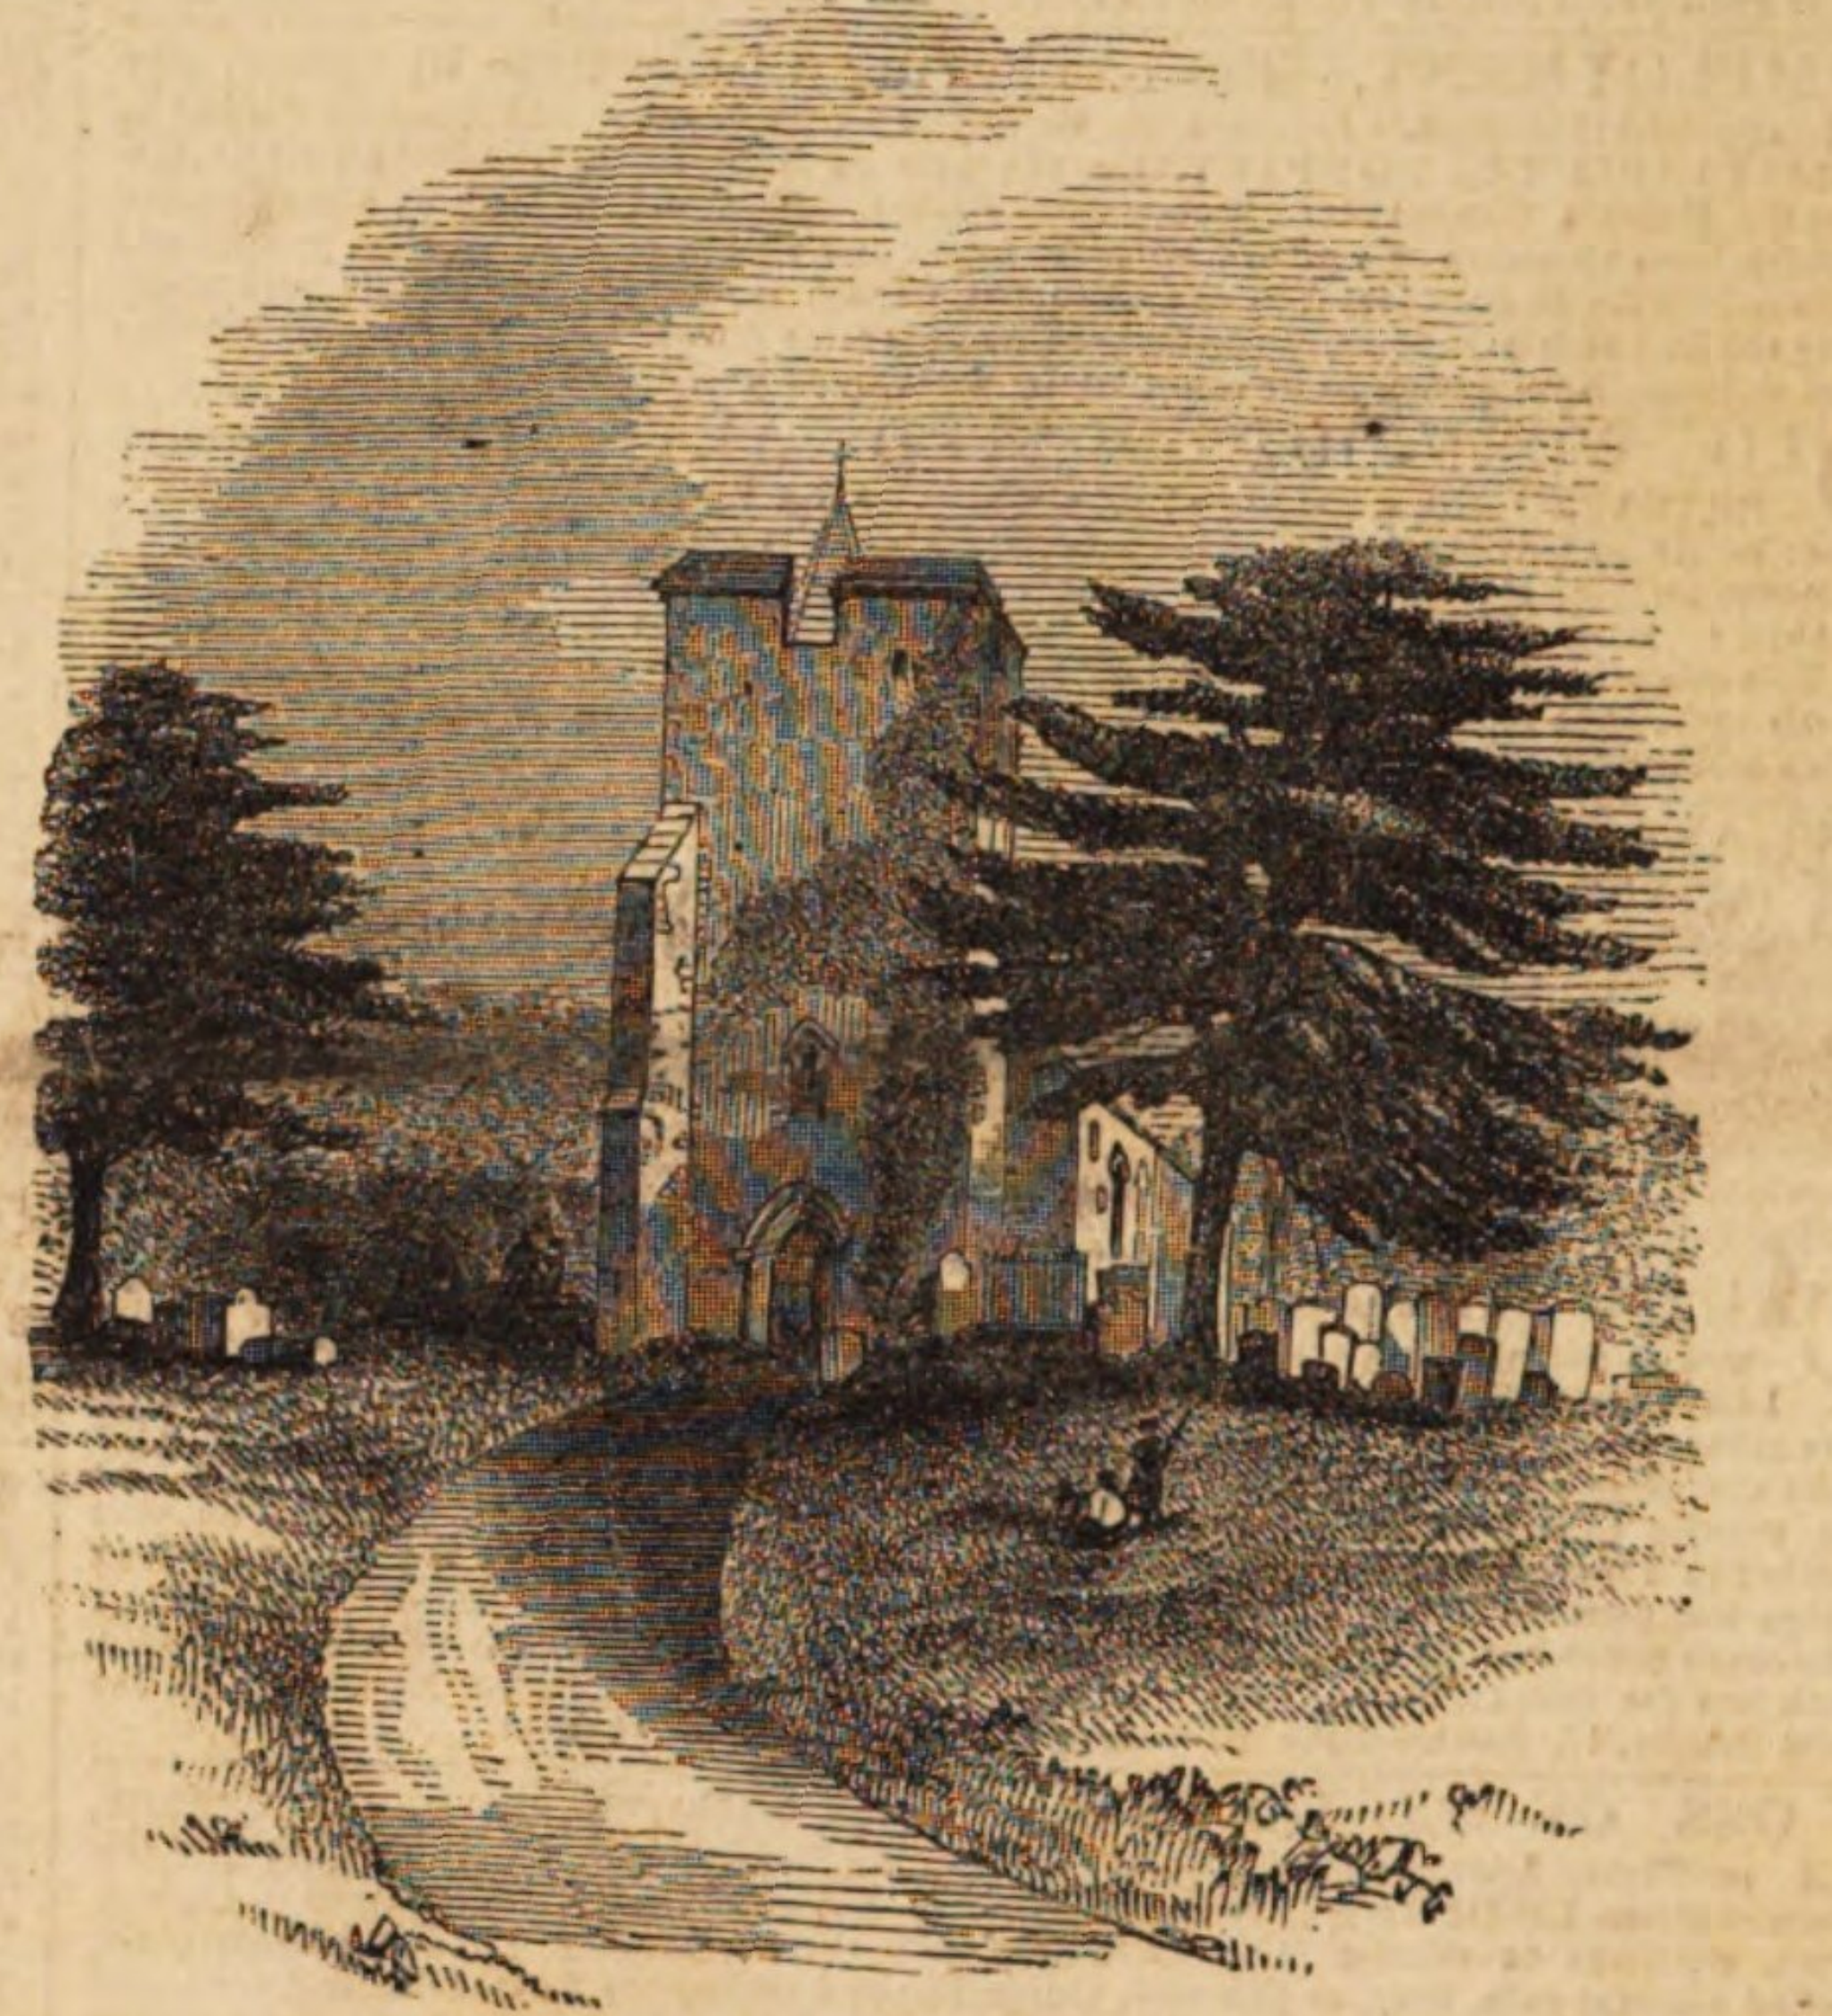
Up to the present day, the history of this monastery is exceedingly curious. At the dissolution of religious houses, Henry VIII. "seized upon it," we are told, "as a palace for himself." Queen Mary afterwards granted it to Cardinal Pole for life. Having reverted to the Crown at the death of Pole, Elizabeth, in 1573, paid a visit to the city of Canterbury, and kept her court within the walls of this edifice. Lord Wotton subsequently became possessor of the monastery, and here it was that Charles II. was entertained at the Restoration.



STAIRCASE IN THE CONVENTIONAL BUILDINGS, CANTERBURY.

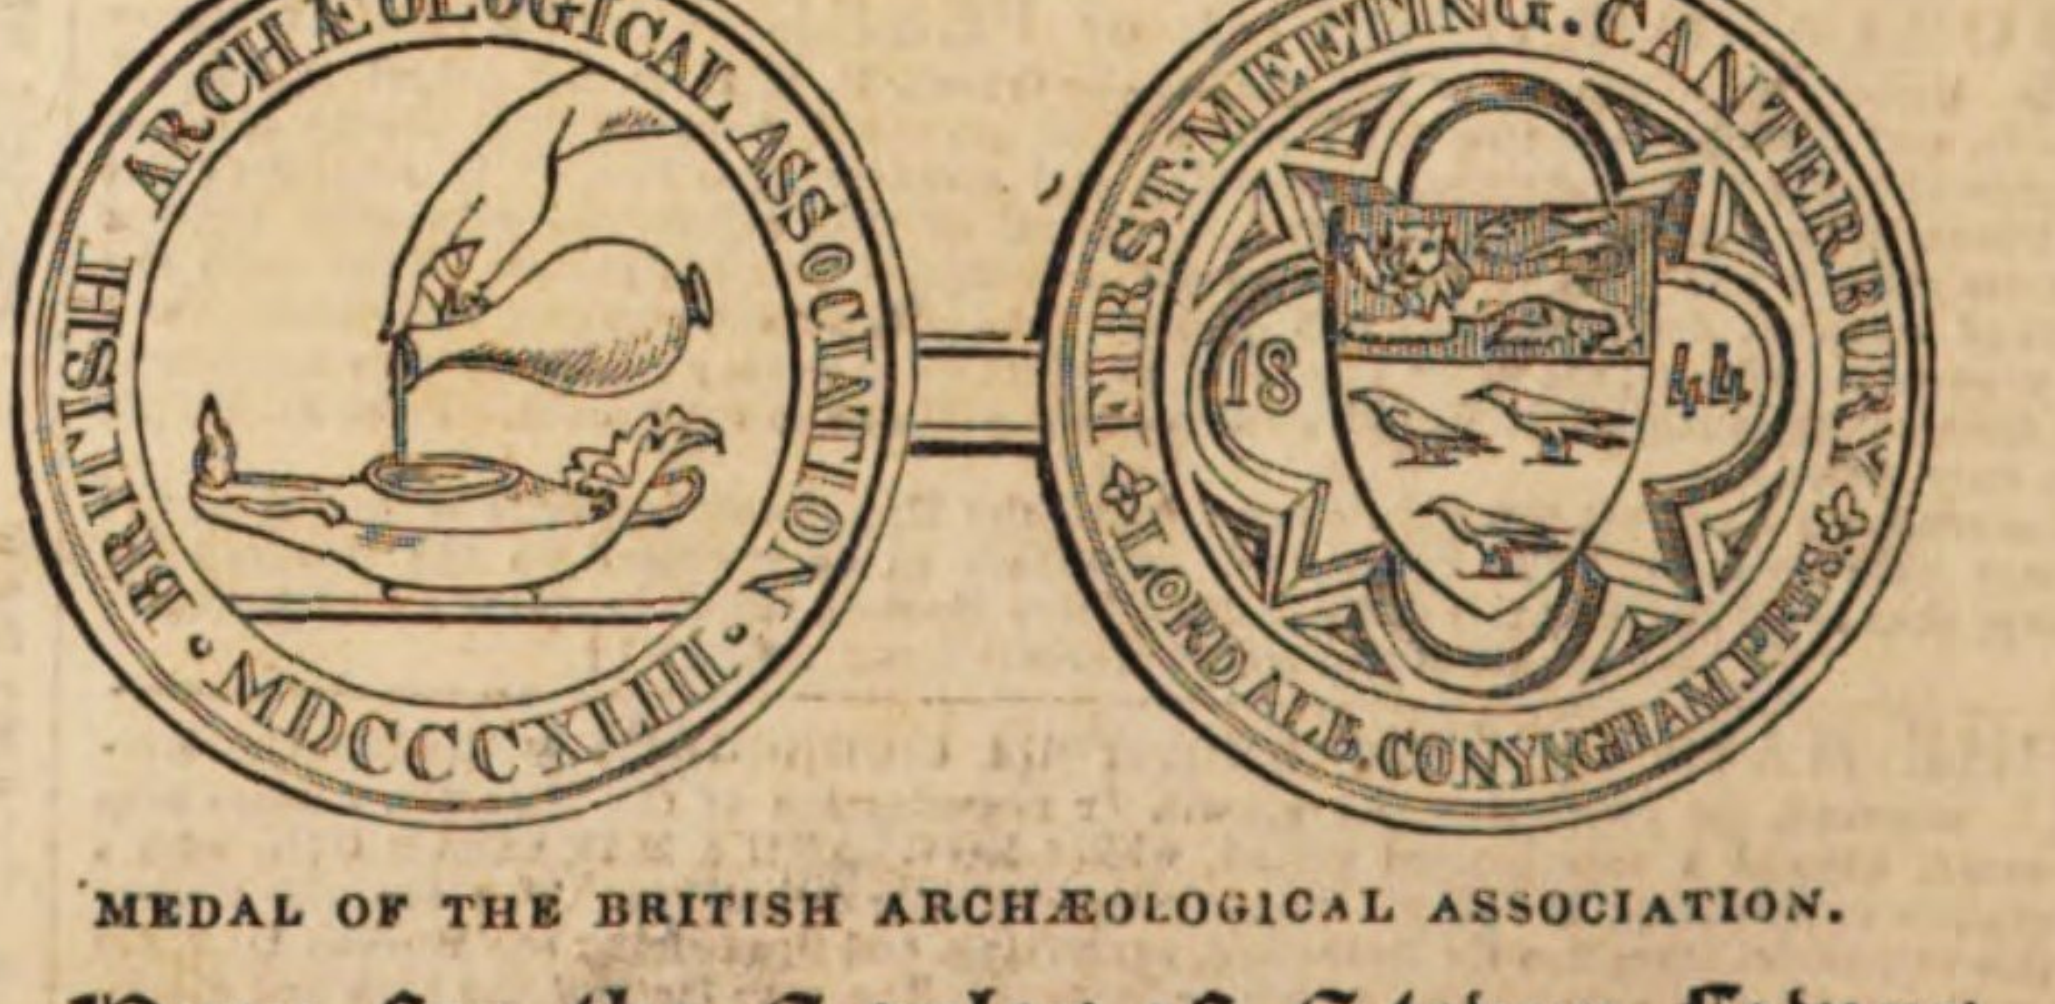
At the present day, this building is a magnificent ruin. The west front stretches along 250 feet, and the walls, inclosing an area of about fourteen acres, are still in part standing. For some years the chief building adjoining the ancient gateway has been occupied as a public-house; and the gateway itself, with a splendid room, the ceiling of which is very curiously painted, has been for some time used as a brewhouse, and the painting miserably defaced by the smoke and steam. The landlord has turned the great court-yard into a bowling-green, the fine chapel adjoining the north of the church into a fives-court, and the great room over the gate into a cockpit. We are, however, glad to learn that these acts of Vandalism are at an end in this case. To preserve from complete destruction so noble an edifice, the ruins of which are consecrated by the religion of our forefathers, has been the object of he honourable member for Maidstone, Mr. Hope, who has purchased the estate for the express purpose of preserving it from further demolition and desecration, and restoring its pristine beauty.

Proceeding westward, from the ruins of St. Augustine's Monastery, we reached the brow of a hill upon which stands the venerable church of St. Martin-in-the-fields, celebrated as the building in which Queen Bertha is said to have had the service of religion performed to herself and her Christian attendants, by her chaplain Luidhard, before the arrival of the Roman missionary. Here also Augustine first performed mass, and King Ethelbert is said to have worshipped.



ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, NEAR CANTERBURY.

The body of this interesting church—now under substantial repair—is built of Roman bricks and flint stones, strongly cemented with a concrete matter, which we found to be quite as hard, if not harder, than the flinty portion itself. Upon entering the church by the eastern door, we found the masonry of the period when it was built, for the authorities could not exactly agree in our hearing, whether its erection preceded the Saxon invasion or not. The opinion most general was consonant with that hitherto credited, that it was built of the materials, if not upon the site, of a Roman edifice: the masonry has been carefully restored, and every provision has been made to prevent the original from being marred by the mixture of modern masonry. The ancient font, which it is pretended is the identical one used at the baptism of King Ethelbert, is now being cleaned prior to its being again used in the sacrament of baptism. The inscriptions, which are of great antiquity, have been carefully preserved. One in the old black letter character, engraved in brass, is inserted in a mural stone, of which the following is a copy:—



BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION
MDCCCXLIII
FIRST MEETING. CANTERBURY
18 44
LORD ALB. CONYNGHAM PRES.

MEDAL OF THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

Pray for the Soules of Stevyn Fawxs and Alys his wife the which decessed the x day of May M.CCCCC. and sex, on whose soules Ct have mercy. Amen.

St. Pancras Chapel is an edifice of great antiquity, situate on the eastern side of St. Augustine's Monastery. The materials and architecture appear to be Roman, and from the most ancient records of the city deposited in the ecclesiastical archives, to which we had access through the liberality of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral, we perceive that the tradition is that this was King Ethelbert's private chapel in which he worshipped his ancestral gods before his conversion to Christianity.

(For the two engravings, the ruins of the Augustine Monastery, and the fine Anglo-Norman staircase, acknowledgment is due to the publishers of the Journey Book of Kent, of which work they form illustrations. This volume is one of the series, to be entitled The Journey Book of England, which we hope to see completed; for the portion already published, is, unquestionably, the best work of its class: the information is correct, and sufficiently copious for any reasonable tourist, without being tediously minute.)

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1844.

Redactions-Exemplar.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR SC. A PARIS

No. 126.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1844. [Sixpence.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

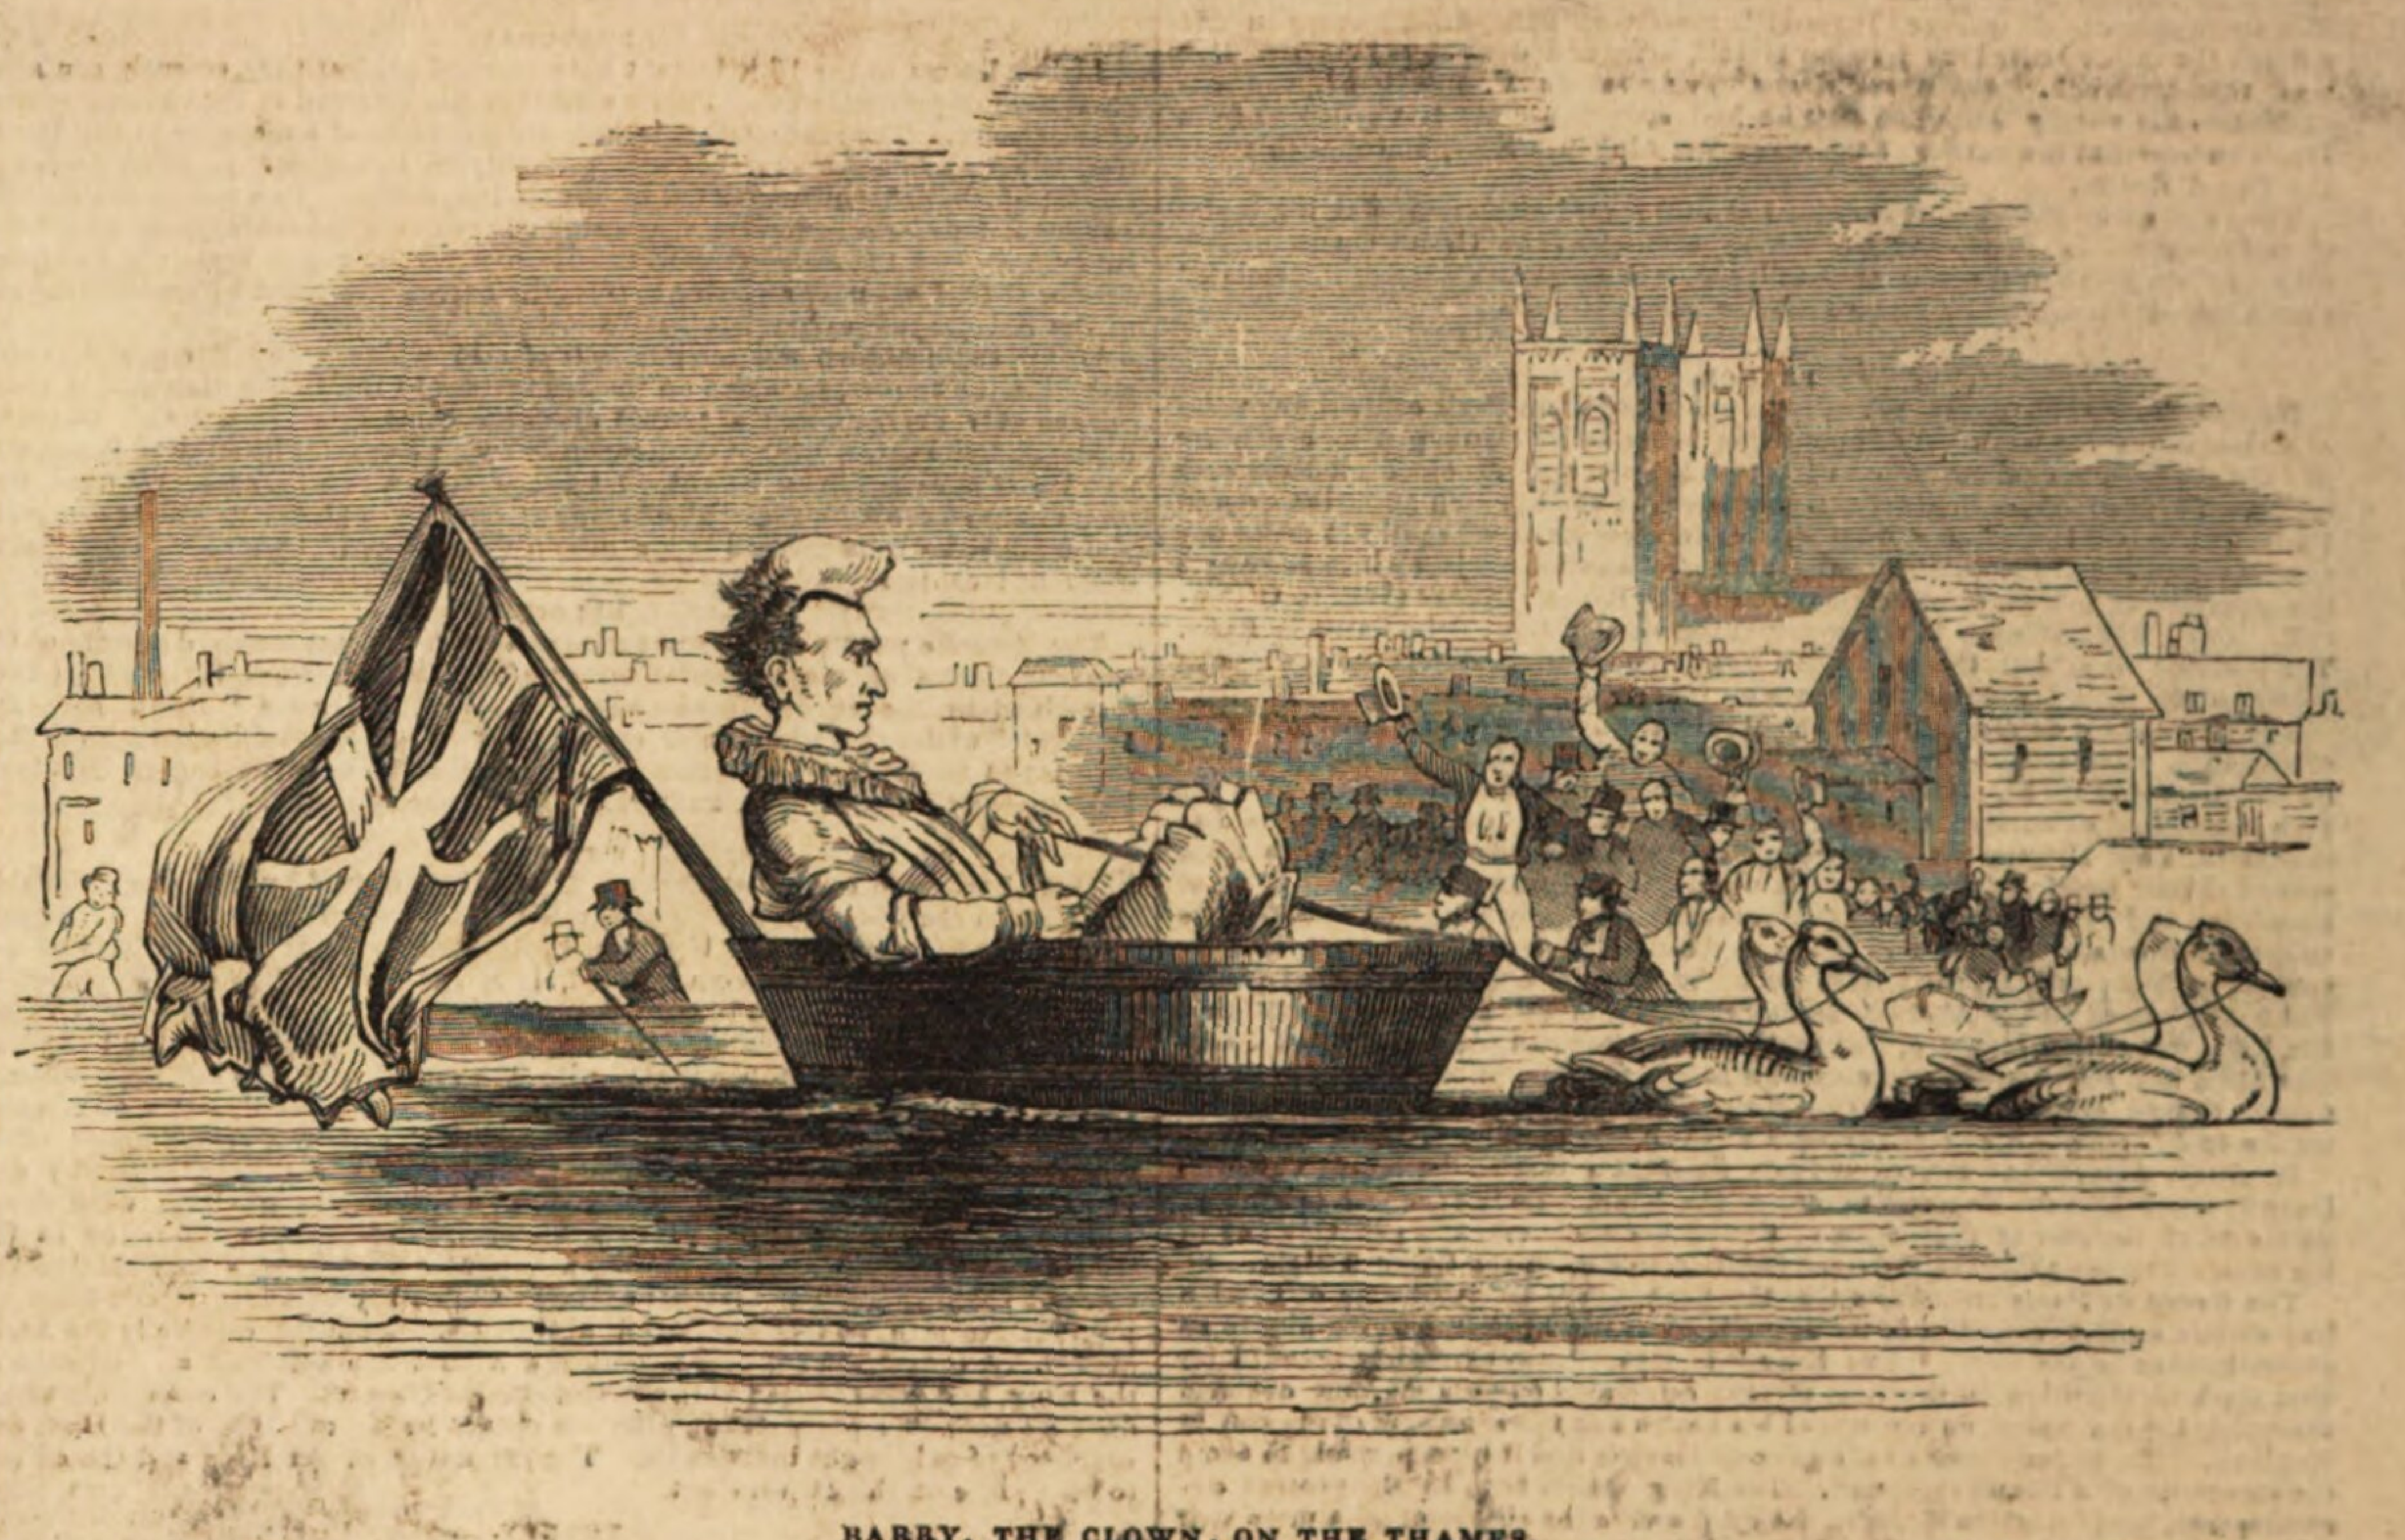
WE have still the gratifying task of recording the daily pursuits and amusements of the Sovereign in the mountain retreat to which she and her illustrious Consort have repaired in merry and romantic Scotland. It must be gratifying to every loyal subject to find that an opportunity has arisen to enable her Majesty to recruit her health and strength after a perilous period, and to relax from the heavy duties and responsibilities which attach to royalty, even where the Sovereign rules over a loyal people. It has been said that, "uneasy lies the head which wears a crown," and doubtless such must be the case when a kingdom is torn by domestic discord, or agitated by foreign commotion; but it must not be supposed that the task is an easy one, in cases where, as in the instance of our beloved Queen, her sway is one of peace and love. In the best of times, the ruler of a nation like England, which excites the jealousy, if not the hatred, of foreign nations, from her very power and influence, there are various difficulties to contend against. Of late, too, there have been many portending symptoms of evil — "war, horrid war," has been the theme of every tongue. At one time the danger seemed imminent. Such was the complication of events, such the malignity of a small faction in a neighbouring state, that at one time it seemed almost impossible to avoid war without incurring a consequence almost as disastrous — the loss of honour. But, happily, under the beneficent auspices of Providence, wise and moderate councils have had the ascendancy both in France and England, and peace is likely to be perpetuated. It is true that, according to the French papers last received, impotent and unworthy attempts are still made to raise doubts of the continuance of the good understanding between France and Morocco; but we look upon such demonstrations as the last dying struggles of desperate men to effect their object of creating mischief. These displays of petty spite and bitterness only serve to prove the danger of the crisis which has passed, and at the same time confirm our supposition that the Sovereign and the Ministry have had of late weighty cares and anxious forebodings to contend with. We repeat, therefore, that it must be matter for unmixed gratification that our gracious Sovereign has not been prevented from throwing aside for awhile the cares of state, and is able to enjoy a privilege scarcely denied to the humblest in the land—that of enjoying the luxuries of ease and retirement, and reaping the advantage of recruited health and strength, from change of air and scene, and cessation from the daily routine of toil and anxiety.

The correspondents of some of the daily papers, individuals for the most part, exceedingly clever in making news out of everything, have been fairly puzzled to fill up a letter with a record of the daily proceedings of the Queen. Thus, one of these gentlemen says:—

> Were it not for the anxiety which naturally pervades all classes of her Majesty's subjects to hear of the welfare of their Sovereign, and the interest excited by her Majesty's present mode of life, there is so little variety in this tranquil routine, that the daily movements of the Royal party are scarcely of sufficient importance to be chronicled.

Now, it must be candidly admitted that it is a sad thing for a journalist, when there is a paucity of startling events, and when it is almost impossible to discover any "moving accidents by flood or field;" but in this case we believe that our brethren generally will rejoice in the circumstance. For ourselves, we are unfeignedly glad that one great object for which her Majesty travelled to Scotland has been achieved, and that she is able to enjoy that "tranquil routine" which, after the many exciting events to which we have alluded, the Queen must so ardently desire. Nor do we agree with some of the carping spirits who object sometimes that unimportant and seemingly frivolous incidents connected with the Court and "the World of Fashion," are chronicled with minuteness. A people so attached as the English to their Queen, naturally take an interest in ascertaining her daily habits and pursuits, not from vulgar curiosity, or from a desire to intrude upon the privacy of the domestic circle, but rather to admire, if not to imitate, the judgment and good sense which prompt the most illustrious of the land to set a good example at home. It is in England only that the magic words "at home" are thoroughly understood. Greatness does not always exist merely of the "pride, pomp, and circumstance," of splendour and festivity; but, as in the case of the "good Queen Charlotte," rank may be even more ennobled by the exercise of piety, and the proper performance of domestic duties. Our gracious Queen, following so good an example, fulfils with dignity not only the duties imposed upon her by the State, but, what is almost of equal importance, she is exemplary in the performance of those of an attached wife and mother. If "trifles make the sum of human bliss," so do apparently trivial and monotonous pursuits form, in the aggregate, tasks of importance. With these views, we do not regard with indifference the innocent, but unexciting, routine of her Majesty's daily life in Scotland; but we rather derive pleasure from the reflection that a Queen may for a time throw aside the tracasseries and pomps of royalty, to indulge in healthful and innocent "rural felicity," and the delights of a happy domestic circle.

The "simple annals" of the Royal visit to Athol may disappoint those who delight in excitement and stirring incident; but yet these unpretending records of the amusements of a Queen, and an accomplished English lady, must, nevertheless, interest all who admire true dignity when allied to unaffected simplicity courtesy, and good-breeding.



BARRY, THE CLOWN, ON THE THAMES.

NOVEL FEAT ON THE RIVER THAMES.

Talk of Apollo and his team
Of winged horses, by which phrase
We mean his swans, we more esteem
And give approval in our days
To him who, by the aid of goose,
Has sail'd up good old Father Thames,
And prov'd a new, unheard of use,
Of pie-bald feathers:—writing names
In Hist'ry's Album fails of this—
But not being Scotch, no "second sight"
May we e'er hope-for of the bliss-
Ful pleasure of unmixed delight
Of seeing one with music borne along
By some Goose quills, the trumpet stops of song!—Anser.

On Monday last, "the Silent Highway" (as Old Father Thames has been poetically named), was scared from its propriety by the performance of an eccentric feat of very rare, though not unprecedented enactment. Mr. Barry, one of the clowns at Astley's theatre, to give éclat to his "Benefit," on Monday evening, announced his intention of sailing from Vauxhall-bridge to Westminster-bridge in a washing-tub, drawn by four geese. The crowd assembled to witness this strange undertaking, was very great. The road from the new Houses of Parliament to Thames-bank was almost impassable, and an immense number of persons stationed themselves upon the wharfs and barges. The opposite shore, particularly Bishop's-walk, was also thronged, and for long before the hour fixed upon a number of boats filled with anxious spectators rowed up to Vauxhall-bridge, and took up favourable positions. At about half-past three o'clock Mr. Barry, in his clown's dress, and accompanied by several of his friends, arrived at the bridge, and all things being prepared, he stepped into his tub and proceeded on his "voyage." The tide being in his favour he went along smoothly enough, and he had but little difficulty in making the geese swim in their proper course. An immense number of boats accompanied this strange water party, and the intrepid voyageur having disembarked at Westminster-bridge amidst loud cheers, proceeded to the theatre.

A similar feat was performed on the Thames, several years since by Usher, the celebrated clown.

New Theatre Royal, Manchester.—John Knowles, jun., Esq., lessee of the late Theatre Royal, at Manchester, has just completed his purchase of the site and buildings of the late Wellington Hotel and Carriage Bazaar, in Peter-street, whereon he proposes to erect the new Theatre Royal. The architects appointed are Messrs. Irwin and Chester, who are preparing designs for the structure. The estimated expense is £17,000, and it is calculated that the new theatre will be opened by Christmas. The style of decoration will be that of the age of Francis I., closely resembling the style of the Princess' Theatre, Oxford-street. All the most recent improvements in general construction and stage detail will be introduced in the new edifice, for the purpose of insuring which the proprietors of the principal London theatres have liberally afforded the Manchester architects every facility.

Death of Mr. Ross.—Mr. Ross, who was a great favourite at the theatres on the Surrey side of the water, died on Friday week. A little before the Christmas of last year he was engaged by Mr. Webster for the Liverpool Theatre. On the journey thither he caught a severe cold, dangerous symptoms appeared, and in May he returned to London. At his own request he was conveyed to Guy's Hospital, where his case received every attention. He expired about twenty minutes to seven on Friday night. It is a curious fact that he had a presentiment upon the subject, and declared that he should no live after half-past six.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Thursday.

The Emperor Abderahman may be said to reign absolute autocrat over the morale of our volatile Parisians. The fashion—the vogue—the rage is Morocco. Not only has it led to the deposition of the lawful Sovereign, but to that of the "Polka." The new dance, the "Marocaine," with its curious steps, and still more eccentric music, is said to be destined to reign paramount this winter with our dancing dervises of the "fantastic toe."

Louis Philippe still intends coming to England about the 9th of October; but he will wait for fair weather to cross over. Great is the contest at Court amongst those who wish to accompany him. He has about him officers with great names of olden time, which would sound well at Windsor—such as the Duke of Praslin, Fezenzac, the Count de la Rochefoucauld, &c.; but the heroes of the Empire and Republic forbid the preference. However, a real aristocracy being one of the necessities of France, the astute royal statesman has availed himself of the victory in Morocco to create a Duke in the person of Marshal Bugeaud. The Dukedom of Isly is the first creation of the present reign which has been openly announced. The Dukedom of Marmier, and that of divers Counts and Barons were secret creations silently enregistered at the Chamber of Peers. However, the anxiety for titles is greater than ever, although by the new French law any one can assume them; and the establishment at Versailles of the Hall of the Crusaders, where all the old names of France are enregistered, and their ancestors pourtrayed, has given a new impulse to ancestral taste.

All is prepared for Louis Philippe's trip. Admiral La Susse has been to Portsmouth to choose an anchorage. The manufactories of the Gobelins, and of Sévres, and the jewellers have furnished the supply of presents for the occasion, and nothing has been neglected to make the rapid passage of the Citizen King as bright as that of a meteor.

Within the last few days Paris has become crowded by a concourse of lovely women, not the habitual élégantes and lionnes of Paris, but beauties of far more blooming complexions. The provinces have furnished this tribute of curiosity to the French Babylon, and amongst the new comers are specially observed a numerous bevy of the fair daughters of Albion. When weather permits, the gardens and temples of pleasure in the outskirts are their rendezvous. The Isle d'Amour, on the island at Belleville, where the Parisian cockneys go to celebrate their marriage feasts, is about to disappear, in the improvements of the capital, and other celebrated places of suburban réunions have declined—the Champs Elysées absorb the gay crowds. Speculating on this vogue, and not satisfied with that most picturesque Astley of France, the Cirque Olympique, its elegant amphitheatre, and three thousand seats, a new edifice is now to be erected for performances in the open air, as in the days of the Greeks and Romans, to contain 12,000 spectators! A Stadium, 350 feet long, and 200 broad, will allow of classical chariot races, as well as the imitation of modern hunts to the life, and gladiatorial combats. But, in the meantime, it is at the Jardin Marbœuf, in these aforesaid terrestrial Elysian fields of Paris, that, during the fine weather, the beau monde of Paris assemble as they did in London, at Ranelagh and Marylebone gardens, in the days of Chesterfield. It is there that wits assemble, who chronicle the gay doings of Paris, in the vein of Horace Walpole.

The Champs Elysées have become the cynosure of the French fashionable world. All that is distinguished in rank, genius and art, are crowding to its dazzling precincts. Comparatively a short time since, this spot was deserted and dangerous: the houseless and the wretched here escaped from the view of Parisian splendour. The Columbus of this now splendid place was a horse-dealer. Here have palaces arisen which may vie with the boasted architectural splendour of a Paladio. Each day sees some new celebrity joining the ranks of the exclusives of the Champs Elysées. Here reside in magnificent palaces Lady Cowley, Maréchal Sebastiani, the Duchesse d'Albafuéra, the Princess Bagration; here is the splendid hotel of the Baron Delmar; further removed is the beautiful hermitage erected by General de Montaillleur, and the hotels of the Prince de Ligne, the Ambassador of Belgium, and Duc Charles de Brunswick. The celebrated marine painter occupies the mansion of M. de Beaujon, the celebrated financier. The Champs Elysées will quickly unite the high fashion of your boasted Belgrave-square with the refined elegance of your Regent's-park.

One of those amongst the foreign residents whose expenditure has contributed most to the amusements of the Parisians, the opulent American, Mr. T——n, with his handsome wife and daughters, is said to be about the point of leaving the capital of pleasure. His name will long be associated with the reminiscences of many a fête and many an anecdote. One of the most amusing of the latter is the following. Alphonse Karr, the author of the satirical monthly periodical The Wasps, turned into ridicule the first gorgeous fête of the American millionaire. He soon after gave one still more splendid, under the auspices of the Princesse de V——, thanks to whose mediation the whole Faubourg of St. Germain flocked to Mr. T's ball. Foremost amongst the guests was the Duc d'Escars. To the latter's astonishment the Amphytrion fixed upon him the most indignantly ireful look, with which he followed him wherever he moved. This lasted so long that the Duc could bear it no more, and walking up to the master of the house, he begged to know whether he had been so unfortunate to have given him some offence. "Offence, indeed!" exclaimed Mr. T., "have you not written the most scurrilous jests on myself, wife, and daughters?" The Duc was thunderstruck. Fortunately the Princess de V. interfered, and explained to the worthy Jonathan that he had only heard the last syllable of the Duc's name—that the author of the satire was Alphonse Karr, and that this was the Duc d'Escars.

Time and space are wanting, or else I should record a thousand floating topics of conversation in Paris, such as the appearance at the Grand Opera of two savages, brought from the wilds of Brazils; and the new translation of "Hamlet," read a few nights since at a grand soirée at Victor Hugo's.

FRANCE.

Neither the French papers, nor our private letters from Paris contain any news of consequence this week. The opposition press is still engaged in censuring M. Guizot for concluding peace with the Emperor of Morocco on such easy terms. Their strictures, however, do not seem to excite much attention even in Paris, and as still less interest would attach to them here, we shall not make any extracts from their voluminous commentaries. Another subject which engrosses the attention of our Paris contemporaries is the Repeal Dinner given to O'Connell. Last, but not least, is the approaching visit of Lord Palmerston to Paris. The journals insist that the noble lord has some political object in view. The Sibele speaks with particular confidence on this point.

The Semaphore de Marseilles of the 21st inst. publishes accounts from Algiers of the 16th. The news of the conclusion of peace with Morocco, which arrived on the preceding night, had been hailed with considerable satisfaction. On the 12th some Moorish horsemen presented themselves at the camp of General Lamoriciere, near Djemmaa Ghazaouat. They were the bearers of letters from several chiefs, and from the Emperor's son himself, demanding a suspension of hostilities, and announcing that Abderahman was entirely disposed to subscribe to the conditions of France, and that a negociation to that effect was then proceeding at Tangier. All the letters from the West declare that Abd-el-Kader had not appeared on the Algerian territory. Some of them positively state that the Emir was still in Morocco, and that the Emperor had pledged himself to remove him into the interior, and confine him in a fortress, in whatever part of his empire France might require. The Meteor steamer, which arrived at Toulon on the 19th, brought the tents captured at the battle of Isly.

M. de St. Aulaire has arrived in Paris from his estate in Perigord, and is to leave in a few days for England to receive the King, who is expected to embark on the 3d of October at Tréport, with two of his ministers, and probably one of his sons. The remainder of the royal family is to stop at the Chateau d'Eu.

The Revue de Paris announces that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London had written a most respectful letter to the King of the French, inviting him to an entertainment in the city. "The King," it says, "was extremely grateful for that mark of attention on the part of that celebrated corporation, but declined accepting the invitation, on account of his health and the shortness of his stay in England. His Majesty would have gone to London had it been possible to avoid the ceremony of a formal reception. The King wishes that, in the present circumstances, his journey to England should preserve the character of a mere visit from one Sovereign to another."

According to letters from Rome of the 9th inst., the Pope had signed on the preceding day the dispensations necessary previous to the union of the Duke d'Aumale with Princess Caroline of Naples, his cousin-german.

Accounts from Toulon of the 18th inst. announce, that the schooner Etoile had been despatched on a mission to Tunis. It was believed that she was the bearer of an order to Admiral Parseval Deschênes to return to Toulon with the naval division under his command.

A severe storm of thunder, accompanied with hail, has visited Marseilles, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Bayonne, and several other places in the south of France, where it has done immense damage to the vintage. The vintage this year is very plentiful, and it is said that the wine promises to be of excellent quality.

The Moniteur contains a despatch from Rear-Admiral Gourbeyre, Governor of Guadaloupe, in which the damage occasioned by the late fire at La Basseterre is estimated at 2,500,000f. It had been ascertained that the fire broke out accidentally, and that no lives were lost.

The Toulonnais contains an article upon the subject of the treaty concluded between France and Morocco, in the course of which it expresses great doubts as to the duration of the peace. The Toulonnais also announces that the Prince de Joinville was daily expected in Toulon harbour, where great preparations have been made to receive him. The same journal states that Abd-el-Kader was encamped in the valley of the Wadel-Azha, between Ouchdah and Teza, 20 leagues from the Algerian frontier.

The following interesting account of the circumstances which preceded the signing of the treaty between France and Morocco, may be considered as the official French version of the transaction:—

"The Pasha of Larache, Sidi-Bon-Sellam, made the first overtures on the 5th instant, when he wrote, in the name of the Emperor, a letter containing the most pacific assurances, and in which he declared that his master, who, notwithstanding the hostilities, had not ceased to be our friend, was disposed to subscribe to all our conditions. The Consul-General of the Two Sicilies, M. Martineau, undertook to carry that letter to the Prince de Joinville. He embarked in the steamer Var, and arrived at Cadiz on the 6th. Sidi-Bon-Sellam had already given us many proofs of his duplicity, and the Prince could therefore place little confidence in his letter. He resolved, however, to ascertain, before entering into any negotiation, the extent and nature of the powers which the artful Pasha mentioned having received from the Sultan. The Prince consequently ordered M. Warnier, the same who had already notified to the Pasha the ultimatum of France, to wait upon him at Tangier. The Cuvier left Cadiz in the evening of the 6th. Mons. Warnier, and Mons. Martineau, who was returning to his consular post, took passage in her. They reached the roads of Tangier on the 7th. M. Martineau went ashore, where he was met by the Kaïd, who had been sent to await his orders. The moment the Moorish functionary heard of the presence of a French envoy in the roads, he mounted his horse, and rode to the Pasha's camp, to apprize him of the fact. At nine o'clock the Pasha and the Kaïd came into town, and called on the Consul of Naples, who shortly afterwards caused a signal, previously agreed upon, to be hoisted on the terrace of his house. M. Warnier immediately landed, and was received at the Marine by the civil and military authorities of the place. Troops of a rather good appearance lined the passage from the pier to the Casbah. The Kaïd, in saluting him, exhausted the entire vocabulary of eastern compliments, and the cortège, preceded and followed by a guard of soldiers, commenced its march. The population seemed favourably disposed, and the women uttered the joyful cry, so well known in Algeria, which is peculiar to the women of the Barbary coast. A post of honour was under arms at the gate of the Casbah. Sidi-Bon-Sellam received M. Warnier as an old acquaintance, and when the letter had informed him that he was instructed to verify the full powers with which he said he was invested, the Pasha expressed his regret at not having demanded a special letter to that effect from the Emperor. But, being anxious to obviate an inconvenience that the distance at which the Emperor was then from Tangier rendered irreparable, the Pasha affirmed, in an act duly drawn up and written in the presence of witnesses, that he had been ordered to treat with the French Plenipotentiary. According to Mussulman usages, the word 'order,' used by the Pasha, indicates, both that the negotiator, in the name of the Prince, is furnished with full powers, and that he has no responsibility to incur. M. Warnier and Sidi-Bon-Sellam parted on the best possible terms; at 2 o'clock the Cuvier put to sea, and returned to Cadiz. The act, signed by the Pasha, was deemed sufficient by our negociators, to show that the Pasha was empowered to treat, and, on the 9th, the whole of the French fleet sailed from Cadiz for Tangier, where it arrived at 10 o'clock on the following morning. The Kaïd Abou, Governor of Tangier, repaired on board the Suffren, and renewed, on the part of the Pasha, his application for peace. The Prince received with distinction the Kaïd Abou, a brave soldier, who, on the 6th of August last, was appointed by public acclamation governor of the place and commander of the garrison. The Prince presented him with a pair of pistols, as a token of remembrance of our attack and his courageous resistance. At two o'clock M. Warnier, accompanied by M. Augier, an ensign, a quartermaster, and a sub-officer of the marines, landed at Tangier, and submitted the treaty to the approbation of the Pasha, who did not hesitate an instant to accept it. A signal flag was then hoisted on the Neapolitan consular house, when Messrs. de Glucksberg and de Nyon landed and repaired to the palace of the governor, with whom they definitively signed the treaty at five o'clock that evening. Our flag, hoisted on the palace of France, was immediately saluted with twenty-one guns."

The Duke of Glucksberg arrived in Paris on Monday. He is said to have brought the original treaty concluded with the Emperor Abderrhaman of Morocco, and to have come to obtain the ratification of the King of the French, with which he is to return to Tangier.

Since writing the above the following news has been received from Paris by express:—

"Prince de Joinville arrived in Cadiz on the 12th instant, with a part of his squadron.

"Information was received at Perpignan on the 22nd, that a revolutionary movement had been made at Carthagena; that similar movements were discovered in many parts of Catalonia; that the authorities had taken measures to suppress them; and that the Director of the Posts, the Director of Customs, and one of the Judges of Mataro had been arrested."

SPAIN.

Our Madrid letters of the 18th inst. inform us that M. Martinez de la Rosa had at length accepted the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs. This appointment is officially announced in the Madrid Gazette. It is stated that the general result of the elections is favourable for the Ministry.

A dinner was given at Madrid on the 17th to the newly-elected deputies and senators. M. Martinez de la Rosa and the other newly-elected members were present. M. de la Rosa availed himself of the opportunity afforded by his health being proposed to explain his political principles. He said that he equally condemned despotism, of which he had been the victim, and the excesses of the Revolution; that he abhorred them with so much the more reason, as he knew, by sad experience, that the abuses of power brought on revolutions, as the excesses of liberty led to despotism.

The Queen of Spain has conferred the Grand Cordon of the Royal Order of Charles III. on the Count de Bresson, the French Ambassador at Madrid.

The Eco del Comercio mentions the release from prison of Don José and Don Ramon Piera, Don José, and Don Manuel Almazora. Don R. Fernandez, Don M. Salamanca, and Don Seyas, who were arrested on account of the pretended conspiracies so much spoken of a few weeks ago. These unfortunate men are now set at liberty, on bail, never having been brought to trial, and not even knowing the charges brought against them. Such is the liberty of the subject in Spain, at the present moment.

On the 11th Mr. Bulwer, and the eldest son of Sir Robert Peel, were at Tarifa, and they have probably by this time returned to Madrid.

PORTUGAL.

Lisbon letters to the 16th instant have reached us, but they scarcely contain a paragraph of political news. Public attention was directed to the ensuing session of the Cortes. The ministers, it is said, are confident of a majority in the Deputies, although in the Peers they will probably be in a minority. The decree of the 1st of August remains for the most part inoperative. In a recent decision the Lisbon Relaçao has defied the Government, reversing the sentence of an inferior judge, by which the Patriota was condemned for language certainly seditious. Sennor Cabral has not proceeded to carry the decree into effect by transferring any of the Relaçao judges to other localities.

One of those sudden and terrible falls of rain which make Portugal at times resemble the tropics, occurred on the 3rd instant in the Douro district. A cloud opened over Pelagao, and a torrent of water came down in a rush. Gardens, fields, and vineyards, were instantaneously swept away. The river of Povoa was swollen at once to such a height, that five masons who were constructing a wall on its banks were drowned. The bridge of Povoa and all the neighbouring walls and boundaries were merged in a common destruction. Other lives were lost in different localities.

BELGIUM.

The Brussels papers notice some riots at Verviers; some hundred persons of the working classes of that manufacturing town left their work for a time: they assembled in the square, broke some windows, and cried "Down with the Jesuits!" under the windows of some of the principal inhabitants, whom they suppose to be favourable to that religious order. The disturbances, however, were speedily put an end to, and some persons were arrested.

SWEDEN.

There have been some disturbances in Sweden, caused by the discussions in the Diet on the Constitution. The commotions of the 28th and 29th of August might have been very serious if vigorous measures for their suppression had not been adopted. This was accomplished, it is said, without the employment of the military, who remained in their barracks, but were ready to act. The police had hired a number of assistants (miners, day labourers, and others), all of them tall and powerful men, who mingled with the crowd, and who not only inflicted summary punishment for every attempt to create disturbance, but also arrested the most conspicuous among the rioters. This unexpected arrangement effectually deterred the mob from indulging in disturbance, and they gradually dispersed. The persons arrested, amounting to fifty-six in number, were fined. Among them were two opera dancers, the others were people belonging to the lowest class of society. It is somewhat singular that in this insurrection the spirit of hostility was not directed against the nobility who first rejected the representation plan, or reform bill, but against the priesthood, especially the Archbishop. After the danger was passed, the Archbishop solicited an audience of the King, and was received with the most marked favour. The committee which drew up the new representation plan was chosen by the minority of the Diet, and consisted of only eight individuals. The coronation of the King and Queen was to take place on the 25th instant.

TURKEY.

Letters from Constantinople, of the 4th instant, announce that Commissioners have been appointed to investigate the proper form of administration suitable to the province of Albania, as it is considered that from the peculiar habits of its people it cannot be reduced to order by the same laws which operate in other parts of the Turkish empire. The French shopkeepers at Constantinople and at Pera, who have enjoyed for many years privileges contrary to the letter of the law, are, it appears, in despair at the Porte now exhibiting a determination to resume its inherent rights, and to make those shopkeepers contribute to the expenses of the state. The shopkeepers are applying to their several ambassadors, and an embarrassing discussion is likely to take place between the Porte and the ambassadors upon the subject.

POLICE.

A CHECK UPON THE SUICIDE MANIA.—At Guildhall on Monday a young woman, named Elizabeth Morris, was placed before Sir Peter Laurie, on a charge of having taken a quantity of laudanum, with a view of putting a period to her own existence.—The beadle of St. Bartholomew's Hospital stated that the prisoner was brought into the hospital on Wednesday night, she having taken poison, and it was with great difficulty that she was recovered by the surgeon, life having been very nearly extinct. From inquiries made it appeared that she had been seduced by a married man.—Sir Peter Laurie said he should send her to the Old Bailey for attempted suicide. He had put an end to persons attempting to drown themselves; he would now try the same cure for attempted poisoning. He had no doubt that those who took poison did not do so for the purpose of self-destruction, but for the purpose of exciting sympathy; and such morbid charity was more calculated to do injury than anything else.—The girl fell back fainting, and exclaiming, "Mercy, oh mercy!"—[Sir Peter Laurie, we think, acts with much judgment in attempting to check the dangerous mania for attempting suicide, a mania which, we think with the worthy knight, is often committed either to excite sympathy, or to gain notoriety. The latter seemed to be the cause of the suicides from the Monument.]

ACCIDENTAL DEATH OF AN ACTOR.—At Union-hall Police-office on Saturday, Thomas Farren and Jeremiah Cross, two draymen in the service of Mr. Thorne, brewer, of Westminster, were charged with causing the death of Mr. James Scott, a retired comedian, living at 4, Herbert's-buildings. Mrs. Jane Philips stated that on the preceding evening, while standing at her door, 4, John's-terrace, Webber-road, she observed the prisoners letting down beer into the cellar of a beer-shop next door to her house, from a dray which was close up to the pavement. In a few minutes afterwards she saw Mr. Scott, whom she had previously known, walking along the pavement on the same side of the way. He seemed to be a little in liquor, and when he arrived near the beer-shop he stumbled off the pavement into the road, and in falling one of the horses attached to the dray kicked and struck him on the head, and, in a moment afterwards, both horses went on, and the wheel of the dray went over the unfortunate gentleman's breast. The witness added, that there was no person standing at the heads of the horses at the time, both prisoners being engaged in the cellar. Mr. Scott was carried to a surgeon, but he expired while in the act of taking a draught. The prisoners said they were busily engaged at the time of the unfortunate accident, and that they left the horses standing quietly at the door of the beer-shop with their nose-bags on, and never knew them to have moved from their position unless they were driven on. Mr. Cottingham censured the men for leaving their horses, but believing that there was not any culpable negligence, was satisfied with holding them to bail to appear that day month.

WHOLESALE ROBBERY BY A SHOPWOMAN.—At Marlborough-street Police-office, on Monday, Adele Dupierre, or Dupre, a young Frenchwoman, underwent a second examination before Mr. Maltby, on a charge of having stolen and pawned a large quantity of shoes, the property of Mr. Van Bever, shoemaker, Burlington-arcade, with whom she lived as shopwoman. The charge was made against the prisoner last week, when some insinuations were thrown out against a Miss Cook, in whose behalf a Col. Loftus interested himself, but many of the statements being unsupported by evidence, we did not think it fair to give an ex parte report of the case. It is now stated that the Colonel Loftus in question is not Colonel Femere Loftus. Upon this occasion, Mr. Lumley, from the office of Mr. Flower, attended for the prisoner; and a clerk from the office of Mr. Goatley, for the prosecutor.—Mr. Van Bever was called, and a statement which he made on the former occasion, relative to the deficiency in his stock, the admission of the prisoner, Adele Dupierre, that she had pawned the property, and the steps he took both against the prisoner and another young woman formerly in his service, in consequence of a statement subsequently made to him by the prisoner, was read over to him. The solicitor then asked Mr. Van Bever various questions, to which he replied, that he had never at any time in his life given the prisoner shoes to pawn for him. On the 9th of August he left England to go on the Continent, and he returned on the 24th of August. The prisoner had money given to her for expenses during his absence. During the time he was out of England the prisoner had never received permission to pawn any goods, nor was he aware that she had pawned any until the robbery was discovered. Mr. Van Bever underwent a very long cross-examination by Mr. Lumley, and much irrelevant matter was gone into. Mr. Van Bever emphatically repeated that he had never authorised at any time the pawning of shoes or boots. He added that the receipts in the shop had fallen off very much within the last week or two. This he attributed to a conspiracy between the prisoner and his former shopwoman. He had received information that the prisoner had sent customers to another shop in the Arcade. Had never expressed a determination to any one to get Miss Cook out of the Arcade. After the prisoner and Miss Cook were in custody, did not say to his solicitor, that he only wanted to punish Cook, and not to hurt the prisoner. What he had said was that from what Dupierre had told him, Cook had been his ruin. Had never promised to give £50 if Miss Cook were got out of her shop. On taking stock, had found 105 pairs of shoes and boots deficient, but from the quantity in the hands of the pawnbrokers, which he knew to be his property, his loss was much larger.—Thomas Wood, shopman to Mr. Wood, pawnbroker, 65, High-street, produced samples of 74 pairs of shoes which the prisoner had pledged at the shop since August. This witness said that the prisoner had been in the habit of pawning shoes at his employer's shop for some years.—A shopman in the employ of Mr. Young, pawnbroker, 65, Princes-street, said the prisoner had pledged between 30 and 40 pairs of shoes since August last. The prisoner had pledged shoes at the shop for a considerable period.—The prisoner, when called upon for her defence, in broken English said she had never known anything about pawning shoes until sent by Mr. Van Bever. Mr. Van Bever wanted to get Miss Cook out of her shop, because since she had opened a shoe-shop for herself he had not done so much business.—Mr. Lumley, for the prisoner, said he should only urge the great improbability that the prisoner could have pawned so large a quantity of shoes, and in her own name, without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Van Bever. There was a great deal of animosity on the part of Mr. Van Bever towards Miss Cook, and this was the foundation of the present charge. The pawnbrokers also proved that the prisoner had for years been in the habit of pledging shoes with them, and this afforded strong presumption that the prosecutor must have supplied her with the shoes, at least during that period when she was not in his service.—Mr. Maltby said there was no proof before him that these shoes were Mr. Van Bever's property. From the evidence which had been produced, he felt it to be his duty to send the case to a jury.—Mr. Van Bever's solicitor then said that his client's shop was set on fire on Monday week, and this act he believed to have been committed by the prisoner, who was alarmed at the prospect of detection which Mr. Van Bever's proposal to take stock held out.—No evidence, however, was offered on this charge.

A VICTIMIZER.—At the Mansion-house, on Tuesday, Algernon Sydney Sparkes, quondam traveller to Mr. Edgar White, a wine and bottle merchant, was charged with obtaining goods from several tradesmen under false pretences. The justice-room was crowded with tradesmen who had been victimized. The prisoner exhibited the utmost nonchalance, took abundant notes, and was continually conveying written suggestions to his counsel, Mr. Doane. The first charge was preferred by Mr. Garratt, of Cheapside. It appeared from the evidence of Mr. Charles Dingle, the managing man of Mr. Garratt, that on the 5th or 6th of August, the prisoner came into his employer's shop, and ordered a coat. The witness, as usual, asked him his name and address, upon which the prisoner handed him the card produced, on which was engraved, "Edgar White, wine-merchant, &c." The article was sent to the address given on the card, and in a few days afterwards the witness called at the address, and saw Mr. White, who said he knew nothing about the matter, but that it must be his traveller, Mr. Sparkes, whom he described as a most respectable young man, who had been in his employment as a traveller for the last two years. At the time the prisoner ordered the coat, he (the witness) believed him to be Mr. Edgar White, and the person whose address was described in the card he had presented. The next charge against the prisoner was preferred by Mr. R. D. Smith, a boot-maker, carrying on business in London-wall, who deposed that the prisoner came to his shop and obtained some boots. He stated that he had been recommended by Mr. Wright, a solicitor. The goods had been sent to Mr. White's premises as directed. The witness had since seen Mr. Wright, who denied having given the prisoner any such recommendation as he had stated. Mr. Wright was a customer of the witness, and he (the witness) had on one occasion seen the prisoner in Wright's office in Newgate-street.—Mr. Bath, of 97, Cheapside, preferred the next charge. Mr. Bath stated, that on Tuesday last the prisoner came to his shop and purchased a dressing case, a set of chess-men, and a draught-board, and desired them to be sent the following morning by eleven o'clock, to 4 or 8, Water-lane, Tower-street, when they should be paid for. He (Mr. Bath) accordingly sent his boy with them as directed, but with express directions not to leave the goods without the money. The boy went and saw the prisoner, who said he was coming into the city in the course of the day, and he would call and pay for the goods. The boy stated that the bill was receipted, and he must either take the goods or the money back. On this the prisoner tore off the receipt from the bottom of the bill, and returned the latter to the boy. Mr. Bath further stated, that not being quite satisfied with this proceeding, he sent the boy, accompanied by his shopman, to the premises, being determined, as Mr. Bath expressed it, "Not to be done by a gang of swindlers." They came back without succeeding in their mission, and at last he (Mr. Bath) proceeded in person and saw Mr. White, who stated he knew nothing about the matter. On Friday last he (Mr. Bath) went again, and again saw Mr. White, for though the boy had been posted to watch for the prisoner, and give him in charge to a policeman, the latter never made his appearance. On Friday, however, White said he would go to the prisoner's lodgings and the goods should be returned, and eventually they were given up. There was another charge against the prisoner, preferred by Mr. Hancock, from whom he had obtained a small outfit, consisting of shirts, silk handkerchiefs, and other articles, under the same circumstances as those already detailed in the previous cases. Mr. Hancock, however, admitted that by the receipt from the prisoner of 5s. on account, the transaction with him had become a civil matter, and therefore not cognizable before the magistrate.—Mr. T. Wood did not think there was sufficient legal evidence to convict the prisoner, and therefore ordered him to be discharged; but on leaving the dock was taken in execution by Walbancke, the sheriffs' officer, at the suit of one of his creditors under his bankruptcy.—[A great outcry has been raised against Lord Brougham's recent act for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, on the ground that it takes away all protection from creditors. Doubtless, the creditor has a right to justice as well as the debtor, but when it is seen with what facility tradesmen give up goods to mere strangers, as in the above case, may it not well be asked whether they are not to blame themselves sometimes for their losses? It is a just and humane principle not to allow imprisonment where a man is unable to pay, and the law will be useful also in checking unlimited credit. We know it is the fashion to talk of the necessity of credit in a commercial country like this. We do not deny it; but we believe it is equally true that there ought to be no temptation to induce men to run into debt.]

A BAREFACED ASSAULT.—On Tuesday William Tilt, a cattle-dealer in Smithfield-market, was summoned before Sir Peter Laurie, for assaulting Mr. Quilter, a butcher, in Gee-street, Pancras, by cutting off his whiskers. Sir Peter remarked that he had no doubt Mr. Quilter looked a great deal better for the shearing. To him, Mr. Q. appeared to have very large whiskers still.—The complainant, who is a very powerful young man, nearly six feet in height, stated that he was in Smithfield-market on the 16th instant, when he met a neighbour named Sturch, and the defendant came up to him and said he had just purchased two beasts which he thought would suit him. Mr. Sturch said he would look at them, and asked complainant to accompany him to judge what they were worth. Witness agreed to do so, and told Mr. Sturch what the animals were worth, and what they would weigh. A bargain was struck, and they all repaired to a public-house in Duke-street. While they were standing at the bar the defendant, without a word of provocation or observation, drew out a long pair of scissors, and quietly snipped off his right whisker at one stroke. Complainant was confounded by the impudence of the thing. "Oh," cried one butcher, "get a looking-glass." "Let's have a sight," said another. "He's got your whisker off," said a third." "If he has," complainant replied, "he had better serve the other side the same, only let him look out." All the butchers had a jeer for him, and while he was answering them and recovering from his surprise, the defendant took advantage of him with his scissors, and down fell the other whisker. He therefore now required redress from the Magistrate.—Sir Peter recommended the parties to shake hands, which they did.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE BY A DWARF.—At Union-hall, on Tuesday, Harriet Thorpe, a young female, about the size of General Tom Thumb, well-known as the celebrated dwarf, was charged with attempting to commit suicide.—Police constable 87 L stated that about four o'clock on Tuesday morning last he found the prisoner lying in a state of insensibility in the Lower Marsh. He immediately took her to the station-house, when it was ascertained she had taken poison. Mr. Wagstaff, the police-surgeon, was sent for, and with the aid of the stomach pump he succeeded in saving her life. She was afterwards conveyed to St. Thomas's Hospital. It was afterwards ascertainnd that she had purchased six-pennyworth of oxalic acid at a chemist's, on Monday night, the whole of which she had swallowed just before the constable arrived. In answer to the charge, the prisoner said that she had travelled the country as a dwarf for nearly six years; but a month ago she quarrelled with her protector, who had deserted her. Her mind became so agitated that she was persuaded to destroy herself. Mr. Cottingham asked her whether she had any friends in London?—Prisoner replied she had none.—Mr. Cottingham said that he could not release her, after making such a determined attempt on her life, without having some security for her future conduct. The prisoner was accordingly sent to prison in default of bail.

CHARGE OF MURDER.—On Tuesday, at Worship-street, Alfred Edwards was examined on a charge of causing the death of an unfortunate female of the name of Jane Gregory, by administering to her a poisonous drug under the appearance of brandy and bitters. Evidence was given to the effect the deceased lived at No. 4, New Court, New Nicholls-street, Bethnal-green, with the prisoner, a maker of pickles. On Thursday evening week she drank a teacup full of a dark fluid, which he had brought to her room in a quart wine bottle, and which he gave to her, saying it was brandy and bitters. In a couple of hours afterwards, Edwards having left her in the meantime, she went to the Britannia Saloon, Hoxton, before entering which she complained of nausea, and was not seen by the witnesses until the following forenoon, when they found her in a dying state in her bed, her face and hands livid and cold, and apparently labouring under the effects of poison. She said she knew she was dying, and repeated several times that she had taken nothing but the brandy and bitters Edwards gave her, and added that was the cause of her illness. Edwards entered the room and heard her say so, and his reply was, "Nonsense, I have taken plenty of it myself before." Witnesses present then urged him to take some of the liquor. He said he would, poured out some, took it into his mouth, but directly spat it out again. Afterwards he went away, saying he would return again in five minutes, but did not. A surgeon was sent for, and soon after his arrival deceased died. The prisoner was remanded.

CHARGE OF ATTEMPTED MURDER.—At Marlborough-street, on Wednesday, Abraham Myers, of Off-court, in the Strand, was brought before Mr. Maltby, charged with having deliberately stabbed Robert Clayard, the proprietor of the White Bear livery-stables, Lisle-street, Leicester-square. It appeared from the evidence that Clayard and Myers were in the habit of meeting at the house of Mr. J. Banks, the Crown, Cranborne-passage, Leicester-square. On Tuesday evening they met as usual, together with several other persons. Some altercation took place between the prisoner and Clayard, and blows were exchanged. This occurred in front of the bar about seven o'clock. About nine o'clock Myers went out, requesting some one to take care of his great-coat till his return. Having been absent about ten or twelve minutes Myers resumed his seat, and no apparent change had taken place in his demeanour. Clayard, who was sitting in a chair at the opposite end of the room to Myers, addressed the latter, saying in a familiar tone, "Come, come, Aby, there should be no animosity between us, here is my hand, and with it my heart," at the same time extending his right hand. Myers, without the slightest hesitation rose from his seat, and approaching Clayard, took hold of the extended hand with his own left hand, and then said, "I freely accept your hand, but I'll have your heart's blood;" and suddenly drew from his coat-pocket a large butcher's knife, and made a desperate lunge at his intended victim. Clayard caught sight of the weapon, and, in order to turn the point from his side, to which it was directed, seized the knife with his left hand, when Myers violently drew it through the hand, cutting through the ball of the thumb in a most dangerous manner. Myers again raised the knife, and, repeating his threat, made a second stab, which inflicted a flesh wound just above the left breast. The fact of Clayard being seated in a chair enabled him to throw himself backward, and to this may be attributed his fortunate escape, for the prisoner's determined purpose was evident to all present, who interposed as speedily as possible. The prisoner then dropped the knife, and was making his escape from the house, but was stopped by a waiter, and given into custody. The policeman who took charge of the prisoner handed to the magistrate a certificate from the medical attendant, which was to the effect that the present removal of the wounded man would be unadvisable. The prisoner, under the advice of his solicitor, reserved what he had to say until the next examination. The knife with which the attempt was made is nearly a new one, and of the largest size butchers use, being from eighteen to twenty inches long.

COUNTRY NEWS.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY ON THE SON OF CAMPBELL, THE POET.—A few days ago a commission of lunacy was held at the Ship Inn, Waltham Abbey, before Mr. Commissioner Winslow, to inquire into the state of mind of Thomas Telford Campbell, only son of the late poet, Thomas Campbell, described as of Dr. Allen's Asylum, High Beach, Essex. The case, from the station of the party, and his relationship to the celebrated author of the "Pleasures of Hope," excited much interest. Dr. Allen said that Mr. Campbell had resided at his lunatic asylum for about 14 years, and stated some acts of eccentricity on the part of that gentleman. Dr. Allen said Mr. Campbell was a great pedestrian, and would walk 30 to 40 miles a day, chiefly in the vicinity of Epping Forest. While at High Beach he was supposed to have walked about 80,000 miles. He fancied Ching's lozenges, which he had taken, had got into his bones, and would lie down in the sun to evaporate their ill effects. He took dislikes, unfoundedly, to several patients. The 6d. a day, formerly allowed for pocket-money, had been increased, because he had discontinued, since he had taken to oatmeal, which, as he said, was a substitute for ardent spirits. He would not wear woollen clothes, and preferred corduroy trousers, and other garments of a light description, as he said they were better to walk in. He was perfectly harmless; but in his, Dr. Allen's opinion, he was of unsound mind. Some other evidence of a similar character was given, after which Mr. Campbell put several questions to the witnesses, and made some very pertinent remarks, observing that the witnesses had given their evidence very fairly, but were wrong in their conclusions; and explained to the jury such parts of the evidence as he seemed to think bore against him.—The jury returned a verdict, "That Mr. Thomas Telford Campbell was of sound mind:" so that a man who has been confined for 14 years as a lunatic, is pronounced to be perfectly sane.

REPRESENTATION OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.—We understand that the Marquis of Chandos, who has just attained his majority, will be proposed as a candidate for the representation of the county of Bucks, at the next election.

THE HARVEST.—It affords us the highest satisfaction that we can congratulate our readers on one of the most abundant harvests, in relation to the grand staple crop of the country—wheat, with which an indulgent Providence has ever blest this kingdom. It is not only abundant, but it is also, in its general characteristics, of excellent quality; the exceptions to this description of it are not to a greater extent than usually occur in highly favourable seasons.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY.—A commission of lunacy has been held during the week at the Ship Inn, Waltham Abbey, to inquire into the state of mind of Herbert Mayo, Esq., aged 40, a gentleman of fortune, of the county of Herts, described in the commission as of "Dr. Allen's Asylum, High Beach, Essex." It appeared from the statement of counsel, and the evidence of Dr. Allen and other witnesses, that Mr. Mayo has a family of six children, and is entitled to property amounting to about £3000 a year. He had, previous to 1840, exhibited some flightiness, but while residing at Oxford, symptoms of aberration first manifested themselves. On one occasion, he got two of his children into a room, shut them in, and alarmed them much by brandishing two cutlasses. In 1842, hearing his wife was coming to Oxford, although he had previously been an affectionate husband, he precipitately left, and went to Cheshunt, where he resided some time at a public-house, until it was found necessary to remove him, under the usual certificate, to the establishment of Dr. Allen, at High Beach. Dr. Allen and the other medical gentlemen were of opinion that Mr. Mayo was decidedly of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs. The remarks made by Mr. Mayo, in reply to the commissioner's questions, were of such an incoherent character as to satisfy the minds of the jury, and a verdict was returned "That Mr. Herbert Mayo was of unsound mind, and had been so from the 25th of September, 1842."

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—Gloucester Cathedral was opened on Tuesday morning, and there was a larger attendance than was expected. The service opened with Handel's overture to "Esther," one of the most effective and impressive of that great master's instrumental productions. The "Te Deum," composed by Handel in celebration of the battle of Dettingen, followed. Dr. Boyce's celebrated anthem, "Blessed is he," or at least a considerable part of it, was given immediately before the sermon, which was preached by the Rev. F. T. J. Bayley, one of the stewards, from 2 Chronicles, v. 13. The collection made at the close in behalf of the charitable fund amounted to £163 18s. 4d.; in 1841 the sum was £130 12s. 4d. In the evening there was a concert in the Shire Hall. "Samson" was performed on Wednesday under the personal auspices of Professor Taylor.

MELANCHOLY DEATH.—Last Thursday week, between the hours of eight and nine o'clock, the ringers were practising in Newington church, near Sandgate, Kent, when one of the bells being pulled over, its unfortunate ringer, Edward Maycock, was thereby drawn up, and his head coming in violent contact with the ceiling of the belfry he fell to the basement so dreadfully injured, that he died in about half-an-hour afterwards.

EXTENSIVE ROBBERY AT MANCHESTER.—Yesterday week a gentleman, named Knowles, came out of the Branch Bank of England, at Manchester, where he had been to get notes for a cheque, and this, with some other money he had in his possession, amounting in all to £440, he placed in a small German pocket-book, putting it in his pocket, inside his coat. He felt the book in his pocket at the time he left the bank. He walked along Chancery-lane, and was on the point of turning into Fountain-street, when he again put his hand to his pocket, and found that his pocket-book was gone. Information was immediately given to the police, who took the most prompt means for the capture of the thief, but he has not yet been apprehended.

INCENDIARY FIRE.—A few nights ago a destructive fire (which is supposed to have been caused by an incendiary) broke out upon the premises of Mr. Parsons, a farmer, at Bromley, near Basingstoke. In the course of less than an hour a barn, filled with barley, a stack of wheat, and a barn-rick, were totally consumed.

THE SEASON.—Mr. Pope, tailor of Bond-street, Brighton, gathered a large quantity of pears from a tree at the back of his house a short time ago. A portion of the same tree is now in full blossom, whilst the other part is dark and faded. We may also mention, as an instance of the backward growth of raspberries, that Mr. George Lucas, fruiterer and green-grocer, of the same town, exhibited some very fine ones, grown out of doors, in his window on Tuesday.

FATAL ACCIDENT FROM THE SHAFTS OF A WINDMILL.—On Tuesday, Mr. George Sidingham, an extensive miller, residing at Datchet, near Windsor, met his death from a stroke of the shafts of his windmill. The mill had been stopped, and while Mr. Sidingham was standing at the door, giving some change to a customer, a sudden gust of wind sprung up, which sent round the sails of the mill with great velocity. The shaft struck the unfortunate deceased on the temple, hurling him to a considerable distance, and when picked up life was extinct.

POWDER-MILL EXPLOSION.—On Thursday week, there was an explosion of the powder-mills of J. Wakefield, Esq., of Sedgwick, near Kendal, which was attended with the loss of the life of one man, who was nearly shattered to pieces. The unfortunate individual who met this untimely end, is a man of the name of William Stewardson, who was employed in the mills, has left a wife and six children. An inquest was held on the following day, but the cause of the occurrence was not discovered. A verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

A MAN KILLED IN A FIGHT.—On Sunday morning, a little before eight o'clock, a man named George Benson, a labourer, 22 years of age, was killed in a fight which took place by appointment, between him and a man named Henry Jones, aged 21, also a labourer, at a place much used for similar encounters on a Sunday morning, situate on the east side of the Kensington-canal. Five persons were apprehended and examined at Hammersmith Police Office on Monday, charged with being concerned in the transaction. They were all labouring men, and gave their names as Harry Jones, of 11, Pye's-buildings, Chelsea; John Hill, of 5, Little College-street, Chelsea; William Benson, of 8, Britton-street, Chelsea; Henry Key, of 6, Pye's-buildings; and James Foreman, of 2, Wellington-buildings, Chelsea. Jones was charged "with having caused the death of George Benson, by striking him with his fist in a fight in the parish of Kensington," and the other four prisoners were charged with aiding and assisting as seconds in causing the death. The evidence proved that the deceased and Jones quarrelled on Saturday night, and the fight took place by appointment next morning. After fighting a great many rounds, deceased received a heavy blow under the ear, fell violently to the ground, was raised upon his second's knee, and having made the remark that he had had "enough of it," sank upon the ground and expired. The prisoners were remanded.—On Thursday Mr. Paynter completed the examinations in the case, and the whole of the prisoners were committed on a charge of murder. The magistrate, however, intimated his intention to take bail.

THE FIRST COMMITTAL UNDER THE CONVENTION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—Jacques Besset, who, under the firm of Pricener and Co., general merchants, of No. 73, Fenchurch-street, and against whom a warrant was obtained on the 13th instant, was brought up at the Mansion House on Monday, charged under the law of France with fraudulent bankruptcy. Evidence was given in support of the charge, and the prisoner was committed, preparatory to his being sent to France.

REMARKABLE ACCIDENT.—On Sunday evening week, at the small village of Dalton, near Gateshead, a singular and dangerous accident occurred to a young woman, servant to Mr. Preston, farmer. She was ascending a plum-tree (procuring fruit), when the branches gave way; and in her fall she came in contact with a large hay fork that was placed against the tree, with its prongs pointing upwards, one of which entered the centre of her arm-pit, and, taking an oblique direction upwards, appeared under the collar-bone. It then pierced her neck about its middle, and again appeared in the back part of her mouth. Thus pierced and supported by the implement, she remained elevated a few feet from the ground, and was unable to render herself any assistance. Her shrieks, however, bringing the neighbours to the spot, they immediately released her from her painful situation. A surgeon was called in without loss of time, and she is now pretty well recovered from the effects of her truly singular accident.

FATAL STEAM-BOAT ACCIDENT.—On Sunday evening, a wherry belonging to a waterman named Robert Henderson, of Kidney Stairs, Limehouse, and containing nine persons, chiefly engineers, was crossing the river nearly opposite Mill-wall, when the Ariel, a Woolwich steam-packet, came up the river at full speed with another vessel in her wake, and the people in the boat being unable to get out of her way were run down. The Ariel struck the wherry, and immediately nine persons were seen struggling in the water. Assistance was at once rendered, and eight persons were taken out of the water alive, some of them in a state of great exhaustion. One unfortunate man perished. His name is John Haywood, aged 27, of No. 5, Tenby-place, Jamaica-place, West India Dock-road.

ANOTHER SUICIDE AT BLACKFRIARS-BRIDGE.—On Wednesday morning, about half-past five o'clock, as James Pope, a workman employed at the City Gas Works, was proceeding on board a barge lying off Capel's Wharf, he saw the body of a man lying on the mud, about ten yards from the wharf, and near to the covering of the Fleet ditch. Some letters, addressed to "Mr. Thomas Holden, Mitcham," and 14s. 6d. in silver were found in the pockets. The body has since been identified as that of Mr. Holden, the coach proprietor of Mitcham, and the cause of his committing the rash act appears a complete mystery.

ACCIDENT AT THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—On Wednesday, Edward Cushin, one of the masons employed at the New Houses of Parliament, was at work at that part of the building which is contiguous to the Chequers Tavern, Abingdon-street; he was in the act of stepping from one part of the scaffold to another, when he took too wide a leap, overstepped his mark, and fell to the ground from a height of forty feet. He sustained a severe concussion of the brain, and was otherwise much bruised, but without fracturing any bones. He now lies in a very dangerous state.

FALL FROM THE TOP OF A HOUSE.—On Wednesday evening Mr. Payne held an inquest at Guy's Hospital on the body of John Greenay, aged 13. It appeared that the deceased was a hod-boy employed upon some new houses in Newington. In the afternoon of Tuesday week he was at the top of the house attending upon the plasterer, when, by a false step, he slipped and fell to the ground. The height from which he fell was above 50 feet, and when raised by the workmen he was quite insensible. Mr. Kent, house-surgeon of the hospital, said that the deceased died from fracture of the skull, the result of the fall. Verdict—Accidental death.

SUICIDE THROUGH SCANDAL.—On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Wakley held an inquest at the Swan, Bloomsbury, on the body of Harriet Hailes, aged fifty-nine, of No. 4, Brunswick-row, Queen-square. It appeared that the deceased was found dead in her room, between six and seven o'clock on Saturday evening, having hanged herself from a crook in the wall by means of a cord. Her husband saw her alive for the last time in the morning. It further appeared that deceased was forewoman, and had been so for fourteen years, to Mr. Caldecott, upholsterer, of Great Russell-street, and that she had for many years lived in perfect happiness with her husband. About a fortnight since she exhibited symptoms of insanity, which her husband attributed to some scandalous allusions made about that time by some of his shopmates, male and female. Though there was no foundation for it, the scandal had rendered her extremely melancholy and restless, so much so, that she had not slept for the last fortnight. The medical adviser, Mrs. Caldecott, and her own husband, urged her to go into the country for change of air and scene, but she refused, and the consequence was aggravation of her delusions, and ultimate suicide. Verdict—"That deceased destroyed herself whilst in an unsound state of mind."

ACCIDENT TO THE HON. AUGUSTUS HERVEY.—On Thursday last, a serious accident befel the Hon. Augustus Hervey, second son of Earl Jermyn. The young gentleman was riding his pony in Ickworth Park, when the animal suddenly took fright and ran away. In his progress, the youthful rider's head came in contact with a tree, with so much force as to produce concussion on the brain, which rendered him for some time insensible, and very serious apprehensions were entertained of his recovery. Happily, he has since become much better, and it is hoped may be pronounced out of danger.

FIRE AND LOSS OF TWO LIVES.—On Sunday morning, a fire broke out in the house of Magdalene Scrimger or Stewart, a widow, residing in Blyth's Close, Lawnmarket, Edinburgh, which caused her death, and also that of a man named Thomas Todd, aged 55, a mason, who lodged with her. Mrs. Stewart was found lying on the kitchen floor burnt to a cinder. The origin of the fire is not known, but it is supposed to have been caused by a burning candle falling amongst a quantity of shavings in the kitchen, where Mrs. Stewart was sitting. Both the sufferers were intoxicated.

DESPERATE ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE.—On Wednesday morning, about nine o'clock, while the coachman of Mr. Collambel, of Lambeth-terrace, was in the stable at the back of the house, he heard some one outside the coach-house door; upon looking out he saw a gentleman standing in a stooping position cutting his throat with a razor, just within the rails of the mews. He immediately caught hold of his arm, and with the assistance of a mechanic, who was passing, wrenched the razor from his hand. Mr. Taylor, of Lambeth-terrace, was passing at the moment, and observing the three men struggling, thought the one was in a fit; but seeing the gentleman had cut his throat, he had him taken into the station, and sent for Mr. Collambel, who attended immediately, and as soon as the crowd could be cleared out of the court-house, proceeded to sew up the wound, which was about three inches long. The mind of the gentleman was evidently in a deranged state. He was taken by the police to Guy's Hospital. In his coat pocket was found a circular from Mr. Stansbury, announcing his benefit; the same was directed to Mr. Cottle, 8, Lyon's-inn, Strand.

ELECTION OF CHIEF RABBI OF THE JEWS.—The great body of the Hebrew persuasion in London is at the present time much agitated in consequence of the approaching election to the office of Chief Rabbi of England, which has been for some time vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Solomon Herschell, and which is appointed to take place in the course of the ensuing month. The reverend candidates for the office are Dr. Nathan Marcus Adler, who has been Chief Rabbi of Hanover since August, 1830; Dr. Benjamin Auerbach, who has been Chief Rabbi of Darmstadt for ten years; Dr. Hirschfield, who has been for a short time Chief Rabbi of Wollstein; and Dr. Sampson Hirsch, who has been Chief Rabbi of Oldenburgh since 1831, and is at present Chief Rabbi of East Friesland. The whole of these reverend gentlemen are celebrated on the Continent in the Christian and Jewish circles for their piety and attainments, the first three being doctors of philosophy of eminent foreign universities.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

THE ORIGIN OF "PARADISE LOST," &c.

They tell that a wand'rer,
Once faint with heat
Of noon's beaming glory
Sought out a retreat,
Where the leaves were so thick
That the soft turf below
Had kept spring's green freshness,
Beneath summer's glow!
So the wand'rer lay down
In that dark forest bower,
And fairy peals came
From the hare-bell's light flower
To lull him to slumber,
To woo him to rest;
And the wood pigeon fanned
With her soft wing his breast,
Till sleep's honey-dew
O'er his weary frame crept,
And his heavy lids closed
And the wand'rer slept.
His slumbers were dreamless,
Until a shade fell
From a form that might seem
The sweet sprite of the dell;
Then as the low wind
Stirs the chords of a lyre
His lips moved in murmurs,
His brow flashed like fire;
But he waked not, although
He felt all through his frame
A magnetic sense
Of her presence, whose name
Thus burst from him sleeping,
And silent tears crept
From his deeply fringed lids—
O 'twas well that he slept!

She saw him and started
And thoughts sad and fast
Of the time that was gone
Through her memory past;
She heard her name whispered,
She knelt by his side;
Had their hopes been fulfilled
She had now been his bride.
'Twas folly to linger—
Yet why since he slept!
She bent her above him
And saw that he wept;
She must wipe that tear off,
She paused once again,
On her finger there gleamed
The first link of a chain—
Of a fetter that bound her,
Through this weary life,
To one whom she loved not.
A moment of strife
Between duty and love,
Between new ties and old,
Made her slender form tremble,
Her warm cheek wax cold;
But then duty triumphed,
She gave one last look
To the tomb of her heart,
And she hastily took
From the volume she carried
An unspotted leaf,
To leave him a record
Of faith and of grief;
She wrote two words there,
And the paper she tost
On the sleeper—those words—
They were "Paradise Lost!"

When her gentle step fled
The vision fled too,
And the wand'rer slept on Till the warm hours flew
To the cool breast of night,
And the moon climbed the skies
And piercing that thicket
Kissed sleep from his eyes.
The soft wind had spared
That last token of love,
And the wand'rer bent
That memorial above;
He thrilled when he saw
That his pathway she'd crost,
And Milton went forth
To write "Paradise Lost."

THE PLEASURES OF HOPE.

It has lately been ascertained that the poet Campbell wrote two copies of "The Pleasures of Hope," which were quite dissimilar from each other. In the first copy, which is in Campbell's hand-writing, the whole poem consists only of about forty or fifty paragraphs, and altogether scarcely amounts to one-half of what it now does; it extends over twenty pages of MS., and may contain about 400 lines. At the end of the poem is "The Irish Harper's Lament for his Dog"—Tune, "The Nine Links of Yellow," word for word, as it is now printed under the title of "The Harper." The Introduction to "The Pleasures of Hope," underwent many alterations.

ANOTHER EXPLOSIVE MISSILE.

A Mr. Lane exhibited before the Lords of the Admiralty, in the year 1811, a four-pound shot, wrapped round with a prepared cotton, and made very hard, so as to appear like a large cannon-ball, on firing of which, it has the usual effect of a cannon-shot; but the moment it starts from the cannon's mouth, it presents one solid mass of fire, and whatever it hits, whether rigging or hull of a ship, will immediately take fire.

A LARGE PIKE.—VERY LIKE A WHALE.

A Suffolk paper states that on the 5th inst., a pike, weighing upwards of 13 stone (14lbs to the stone), was taken from a pond at Bacton, in the presence of a number of spectators!!

A PROFESSIONAL PASTORAL FOR THE LONG VACATION.

See Sergeant Tityrus—in rural ease,
Forgetting all the cares of Common Pleas,
Taking beneath some shady beech his station,
To sip the honey of the long vacation.
Ye nymphs beware, should Tityrus seek your grove,
For his attachment is no name for love.
The gentle lamblings cluster idly round,
Lured by his legal pipe's too dulcet sound.
Ah! little do ye think, ye simple sheep
(Or at a greater distance ye would keep),
That he whose plaintive strains ye flock to hear,
Knows not a greater pleasure than to shear.
Viewing your curling fleece, it o'er him flits
The hide beneath is meant to furnish writs.
While all the woolly treasures on your back,
He hopes one day may stuff for him the sack

Punch.

CHINESE PROVERBS.

A word too much spoils the best affairs; a moment of patience accommodates the worst. The more acquaintances we have the less people we know.—From Captain Pidding's Chinese Olio.

THE POPE AND THE CARDINALS.

The Pope reached his 79th year on the 18th inst. He has filled the Holy See since February, 1831. The Sacred College is composed of 60 Cardinals. Two of the Cardinals were created by Pius VII., seven by Leo XII., and the remainder by the present Pontiff. Mgr. Tardini, the oldest, is 85 years of age, and Mgr. Schwarzenberg, the youngest, 35. At the end of last year Rome contained 176,701 inhabitants, not including the Jews.

THE PROTEOSCOPE.

A new optical instrument, called the proteoscope, because unlimited in its appliances, was exhibited for the first time at the Polytechnic Institution on Monday afternoon. It is the invention of the ingenious secretary, Mr. Longbottom. The instrument reflects drawings magnified to an enormous size on an opaque disc. The subject chosen for exhibition was the celebrated "Ode to the Passions." As the representation of fitful fear, hurried anger, wan despair, bright-eyed hope, dejected pity, &c., made its startling appearance on the wall or curtain, the portion of the ode illustrated was sung by some vocalists present, and was accompanied by the band.

A SCOTCH HAGGIS.

It is stated that her Majesty is exceedingly fond of "the haggis," a dainty much and universally esteemed by the Scotch in every station. The name is derived from "hag—to chop." In his edition of Burns's Poems, Allan Cunningham says in a note, "The joyous nationality of this poem is but part of its merit. The component parts of a haggis are sometimes inquired anxiously into by men who love the pleasures of the table. 'Pray, sir,' said a man of the south, 'what is it made of?' 'Sir,' answered a man of the north, 'I dare not trust myself with telling—I can never name all the savoury items without tears, and surely you would not wish me to expose myself in a public company?'"

POPULATION OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

Constantinople, including the villages on the Bosphorus and all the suburbs, contains 650,000 souls, without the military. The mortality (again without the military) is, on an average, about 900 per month, or 10,800 per annum, which will make one in 60 annually.

A STRANGE FANCY.

A story is told of a hypochondriac gentleman of rank and fortune in Ireland, who fancies one of his legs of one religion and the other of another. He not unfrequently puts one of his unfortunate legs outside of the bed clothes to punish it for its religious errors.

SONNET.

'Tis eve—the hum of men hath passed away;
  Lonely I stand beside the wave-swept shore,
To trace the changeful hues of dying day,
  And list the dirge of ocean's muffled roar.
And now night stalks the heaving billows o'er—
  Pale stars her heralds, fitful blasts her train—
In triumph mounts her ebon throne once more,
  And girds creation with her slumberous chain.
Here would I muse in this lone hour awhile,
  Gazing with awe upon the boundless sea,
And with high thoughts my tranced soul beguile,
  Breathless—and lost amid immensity;
Or in yon mystic scroll above would scan
The might of God, the puniness of man.

T. BODLEY.

BAPTISM IN TURKEY.

The ceremony of baptism is quite a private one in Turkey, and takes place without the interference of the clergy. The patriarch of the family, on the third day after the birth of the child, receives it in his arms. Without form, ceremony, or even ablution, he repeats the ezan, or public call to prayers, in the right ear of the infant, and in its left whispers the name it is to bear. Sometimes the name is altered, from a superstitious notion that it is unsuitable to the individual, and a modification is admitted when a gentleman enters into the public service.

STEAM BY MEANS OF GALVANISM.

Some experiments are in progress for the purpose of ascertaining whether steam can be generated through the agency of galvanism, so as entirely to supersede the use of coals, so cumbersome as freight, in steamers having to make a long voyage. It is conceived that with very slight improvements, a flame of sufficient power could be obtained by means of galvanism for the purpose required.

NEW LIFE BOAT.

A new and extraordinary life boat is being built upon the diagonal principle, the planks of which are composed of India rubber and ground cork. Its specific gravity is stated to be two-thirds lighter than oak, and from which it is believed the boat is incapable of being bilged or sunk. Her length is thirty-four feet, and breadth eleven feet; is copper fastened and pulls twelve oars; has two lug sails, and steers with either rudder or oar. The Belgian government has directed three to be built for that coast.

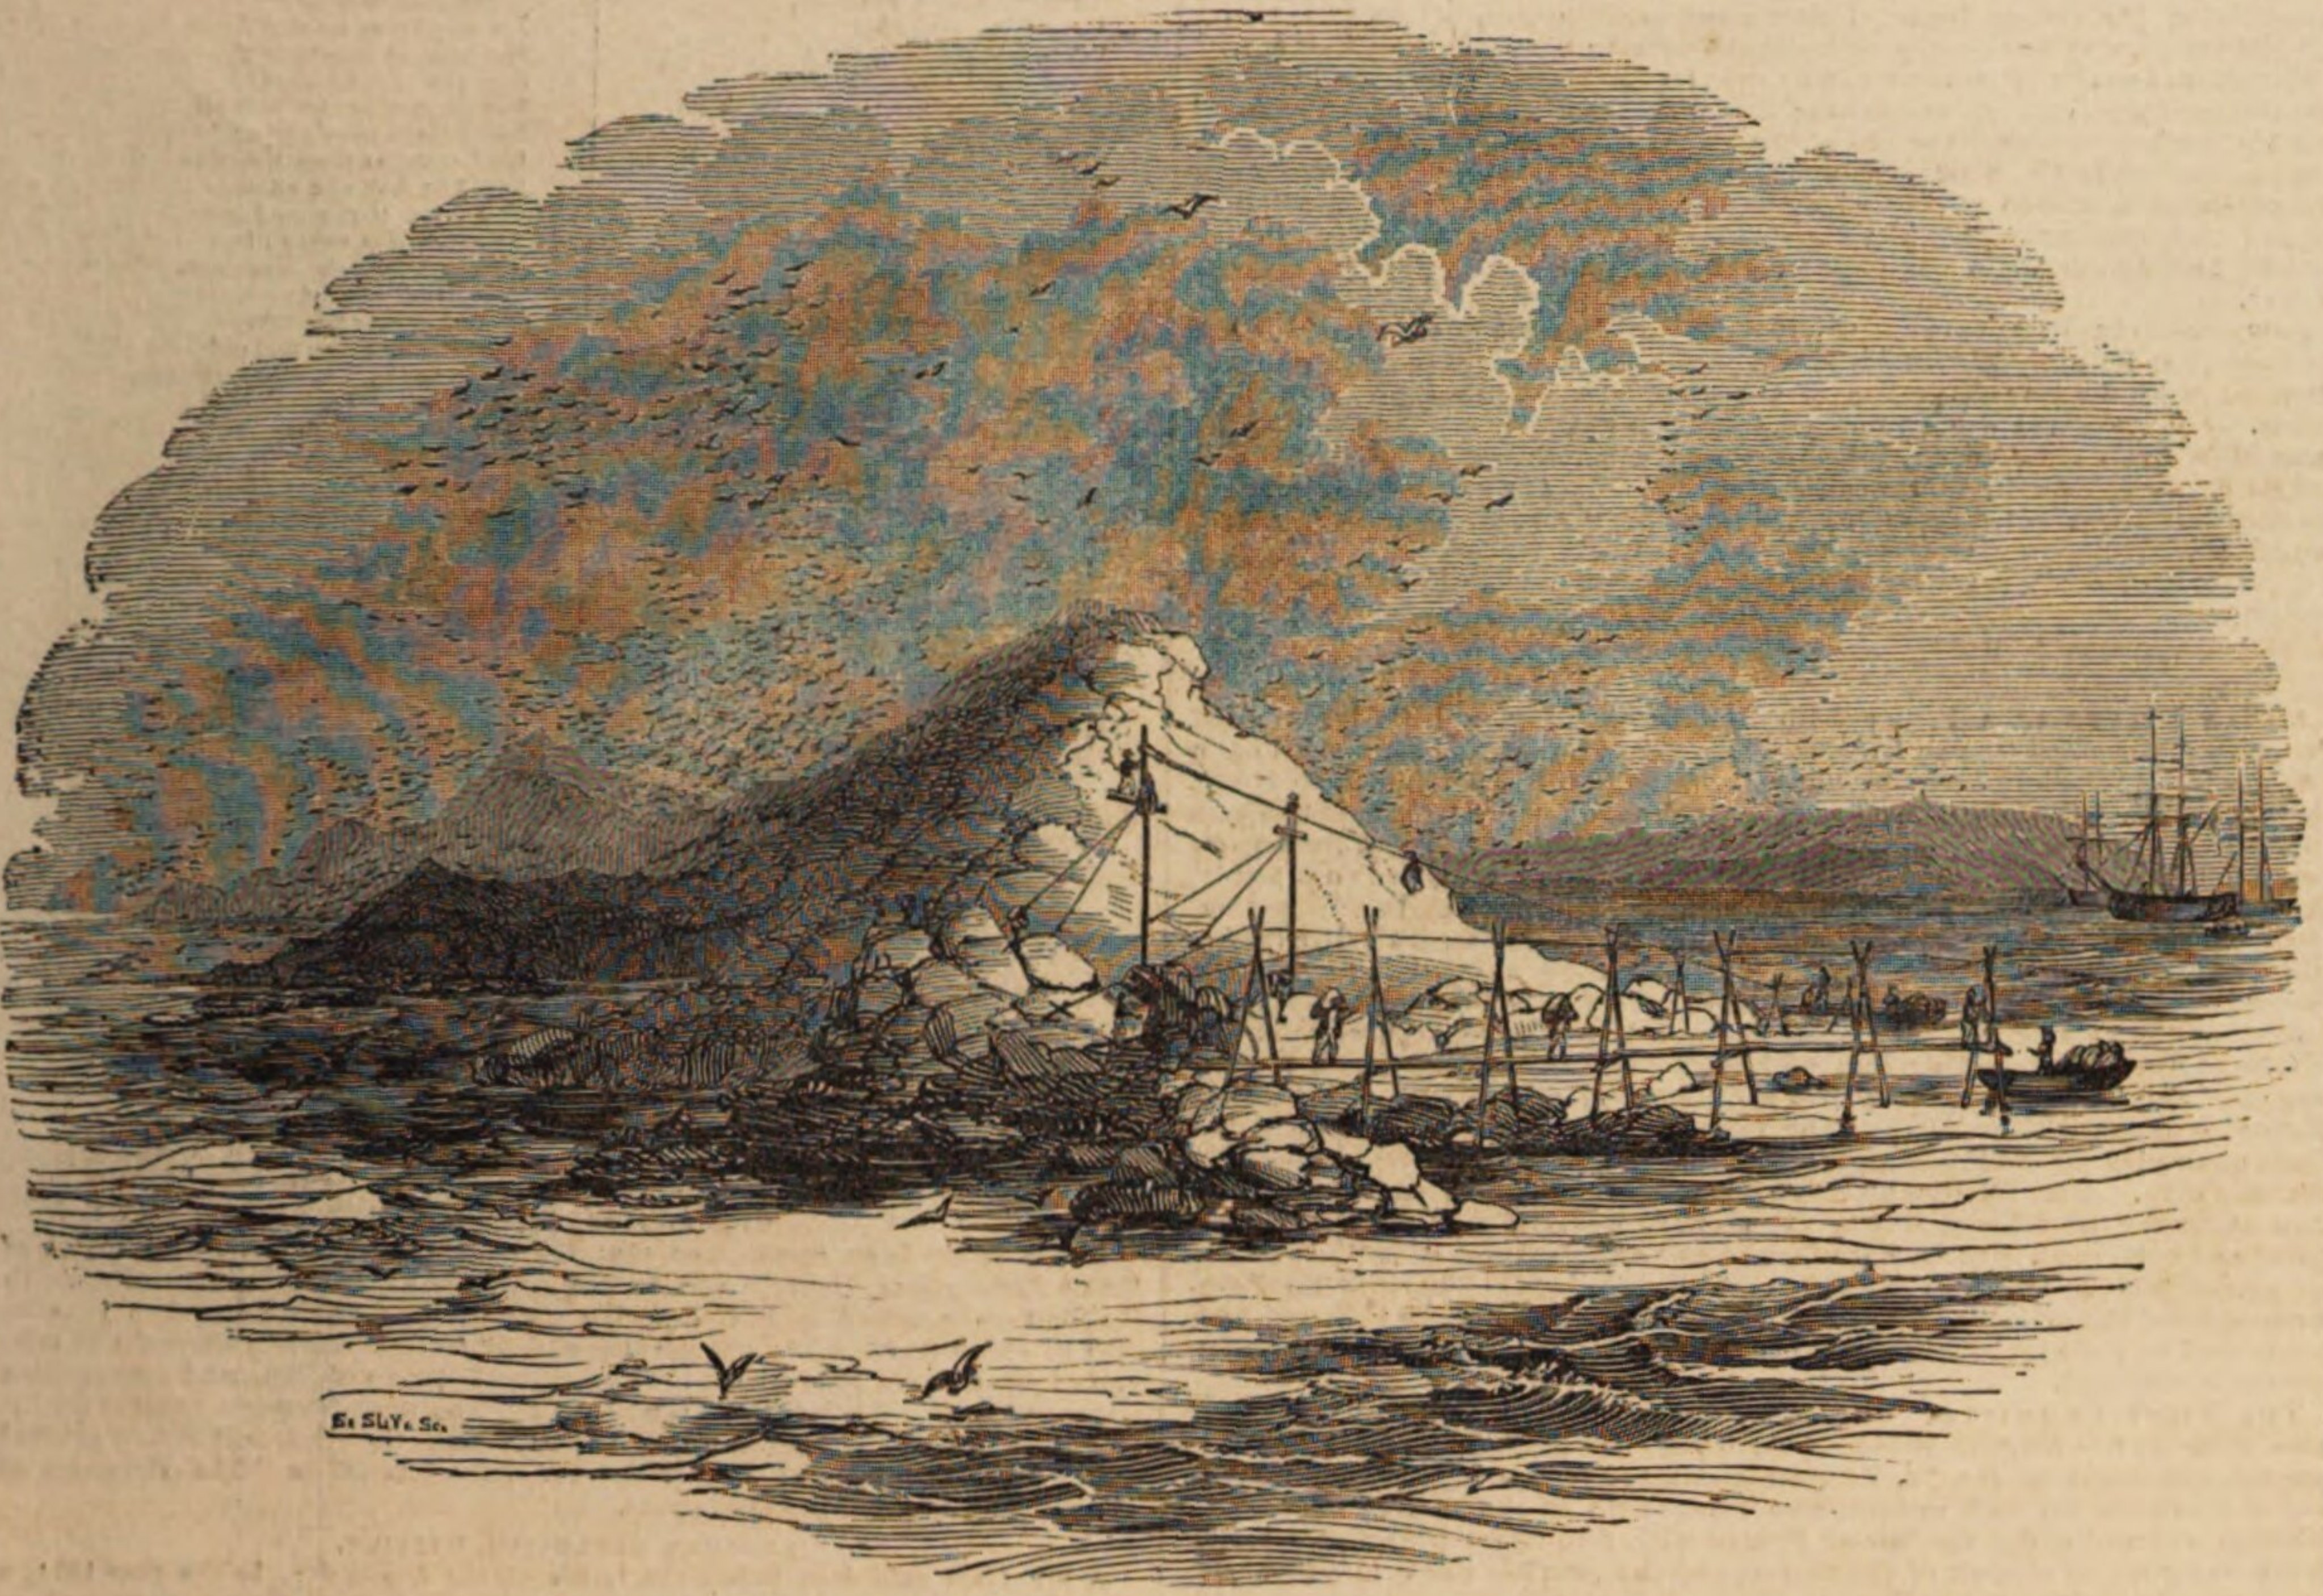
BLAIR ATHOL AND GLEN TILT.

What a change in a century! It is not quite a century since "the Forty-five," and hear in sylvan retreat and Highland sports are a Queen of the detested house of Hanover, her German husband, and her child; in the very heart of the land of Stuart devotedness—

"Down by Loch Tummel and banks o' the Garey."

A hundred years ago their lives would not have been worth a pin's fee; now they are all but worshipped by the same race of men, guarded like idols, the wild deer chased, and the loveliest green of all the Scottish glens, Glen Tilt, and the romantic falls of Bruar, "promenaded" like Kensington and St. James's

"If you ever marry," said a Roman Consul to his son, "let it be a woman who has judgment enough to superintend the getting of a meal of victuals; taste enough to dress herself; pride enough to wash her face before breakfast; and sense enough to hold her tongue when she has nothing to say."



THE ISLAND OF ICHABOE.

ICHABOE ISLAND.—THE GUANO TRADE.

This small island has, of late, become of immense importance to adventurers, rom its being the deposit of the birds' manure termed Guano; and from its being by the latest advices, in a state of desperate mutiny.

Ichaboe Island lies off the western coast of Africa, within one mile and a half from the main, and forty-one miles to the northward of Possession Island, which is in latitude 26 deg. 57 min. S., longitude 15 deg. 8 min. E. Ichaboe is but about one mile in circumference: on the east side ships may anchor in perfect safety, in five fathoms of water, about two cables' length from its shore, a convenience of great moment in connexion with the new trade in guano. Great numbers of the right whale strike on this part of the coast about the middle of June, when they may easily be taken. In the months of October and November, the island is literally covered with jackass penguins and gannets, which convene here for the purpose of laying and incubation. The shores are also much resorted to by multitudes of fur-seal. The south-east part of the bay, on the main land, directly opposite the island, is the finest place on this part of the coast for jerking beef, it being only four miles from a Hottentot village; and the springs of fresh water will supply any number of cattle.

It is, however, to its being the depository of guano, in almost incredible quantities, that Ichaboe owes its importance; and this information is stated to have originated in the following passage in Morrell's "Narrative of a Voyage to the South and West Coast of Africa:"—"The surface of this island is covered with birds' manure to the depth of twenty-five feet." Upon this Lieutenant Petrie, R.N., who has just reprinted Morrell's "Narrative," remarks:—"Our author was quite aware of both the name and nature of guano; but, as it possessed less interest than other objects of traffic with which he was surrounded, he does not enlarge upon the discovery. In his first voyage, when at St. Lobos on the coast of Peru, the bird manure is again mentioned, under the Spanish name of guanar. It is, says he, probably, the richest manure in the world, and is in sufficient quantity to load thousands of ships."

Lieutenant Petrie, in his appendix to Morrell's "Narrative," says:—

"The trade in Guano, which has been lately opened to the coast of Africa, has not only raised high hopes as to its beneficial effects in improving agriculture, by affording an abundance of the richest manure, but on the commerce, and especially on the shipping interests of the country, it has already occasioned considerable improvement. Everything relating to it, therefore, is a matter of importance, and even the natural history of the article is something more than a mere matter of curiosity. Its name, it would appear, is of Peruvian derivation, and had been called in the language of the natives Huano, signifying dung or manure; the Spaniards now name it Guano, or Guanar.

"The aborigines on the coast of Peru seem to have used guano from time immemorial as manure; and at the time of the European discovery of the country, strict laws had been enacted by the Incas, to guard the islands in which it is found, and to punish with death even those who killed the sea-fowls from which it was derived. Much doubt was entertained for some time after being brought to this country, with regard to the origin of guano; the Spaniards early questioned that which seemed to have been clear to the inhabitants of Peru; but chemical examination, and other evidence, leave it no longer undetermined, that the enormous accumulations of this matter on sea islands, in various localities, is nothing more than the droppings of the myriads of fowls which inhabit them for the purposes of rest and incubation."

"The first cargo of Peruvian Guano for the use of the British farmer, was imported in 1840, and since that time the importation of it has rapidly increased; but the trade in Guano, which has been opened last year to the south-west coast of Africa, bids fair to be augmented to a degree which quite baffles any calculation.

"Up to the 24th of May, in this year alone, twelve ships have already arrived in Liverpool, whose united cargoes amount to 6670 tons. A large number of ships are now loading, by last accounts, at Ichaboe, and many more are on their way with cargoes from that place, so that the market will, no doubt, be immediately supplied with abundance, at very moderate prices."

We have not room for Lieutenant Petrie's very interesting details of the "rookeries" of penguins, albatrosses, &c., which congregate on the shores; nor of the chemical history of the manure, or the testimonies of practical men as to its application.

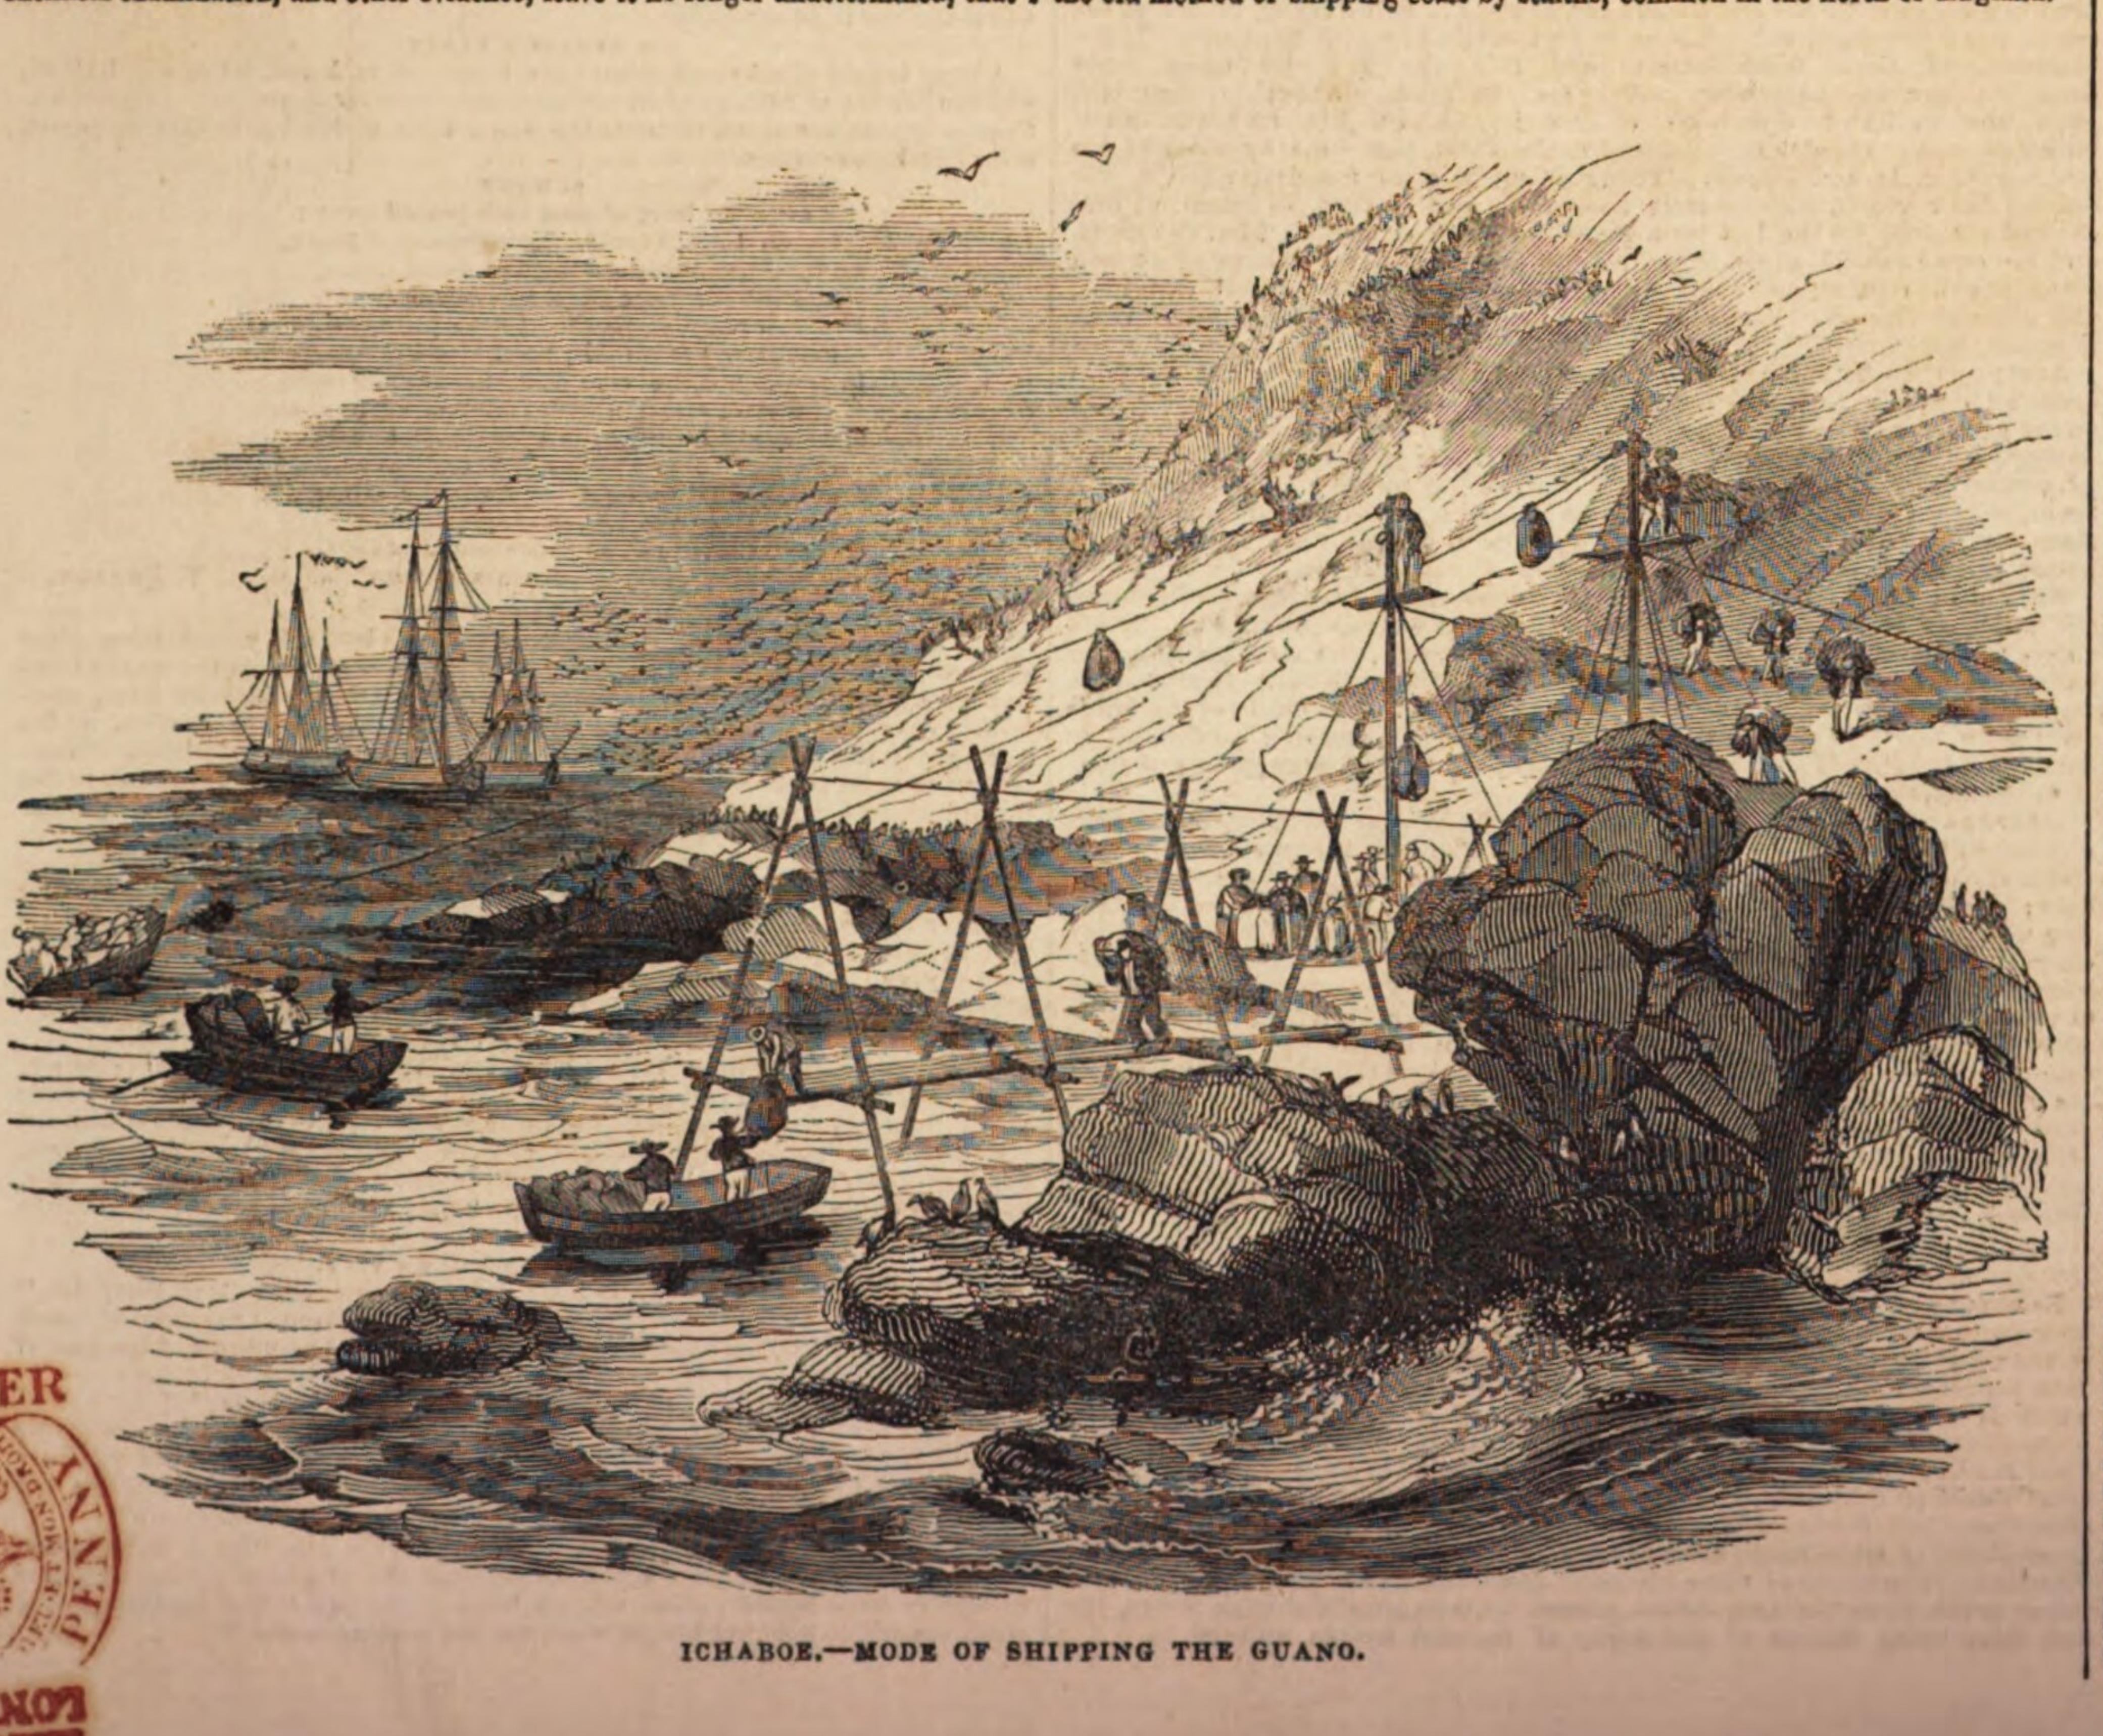
Meanwhile, we turn to the unfortunate state of things at Ichaboe, which has been, in great measure, brought about by the success which has already attended the voyages thither for guano. We learn from a letter, dated there July 6, 1844, that the whole island was in a state of mutiny, and that a vessel had been dispatched to the Cape for a ship of war, to save bloodshed and protect the immense property afloat here—"between seventy and eighty vessels, the one getting athwart hawse of the other; and should anything serious occur, the loss of property would be tremendous." It is, however, calculated in this account that all the guano will be removed from the island in the course of twelve months.

The following extract from a letter, dated two days later (July 8), shows that affairs have not improved. The writer is Captain W. Broderick, Star-o'-the-West:—

"We have had dreadful weather on the coast; two vessels have been wrecked, and several more have lost their anchors, and were obliged to go to sea without them. They have been out now ten days, and we have no account of them, therefore I fear they are no more. I have been here now ten days, and we have had four funerals from accidents, such as boats capsizing, &c. There are at present upwards of 80 vessels and no less than 3000 men on this small island, a great many more common men than officers; a large number of the latter are Irish labourers, and the consequence is that a mutiny is a matter of daily occurrence. Last Wednesday all the masters had to form themselves into a body to take off the island two men who had drawn their knives and threatened to stab the first captain that should come near them."

Nor are the perils of the guano trade confined to Ichaboe; for, in the Times of Thursday last, is a most interesting narrative received by that journal, from Captain Iremonger, (brig Africanus,) of the capture and destruction by the Moors of a portion of the crews of the ships Margaret and Courier, both belonging to the port of London, while in search of guano at the island of Arguin, on the coast of Africa. Mr. Iremonger states, that he received the account which he has forwarded, from Captain Northwood, of the Margaret, whom he had ransomed, with others of the captives, from the Moors.

The mode of shipping the guano, shown in the second illustration, resembles the old method of shipping coals by staiths, common in the north of England.

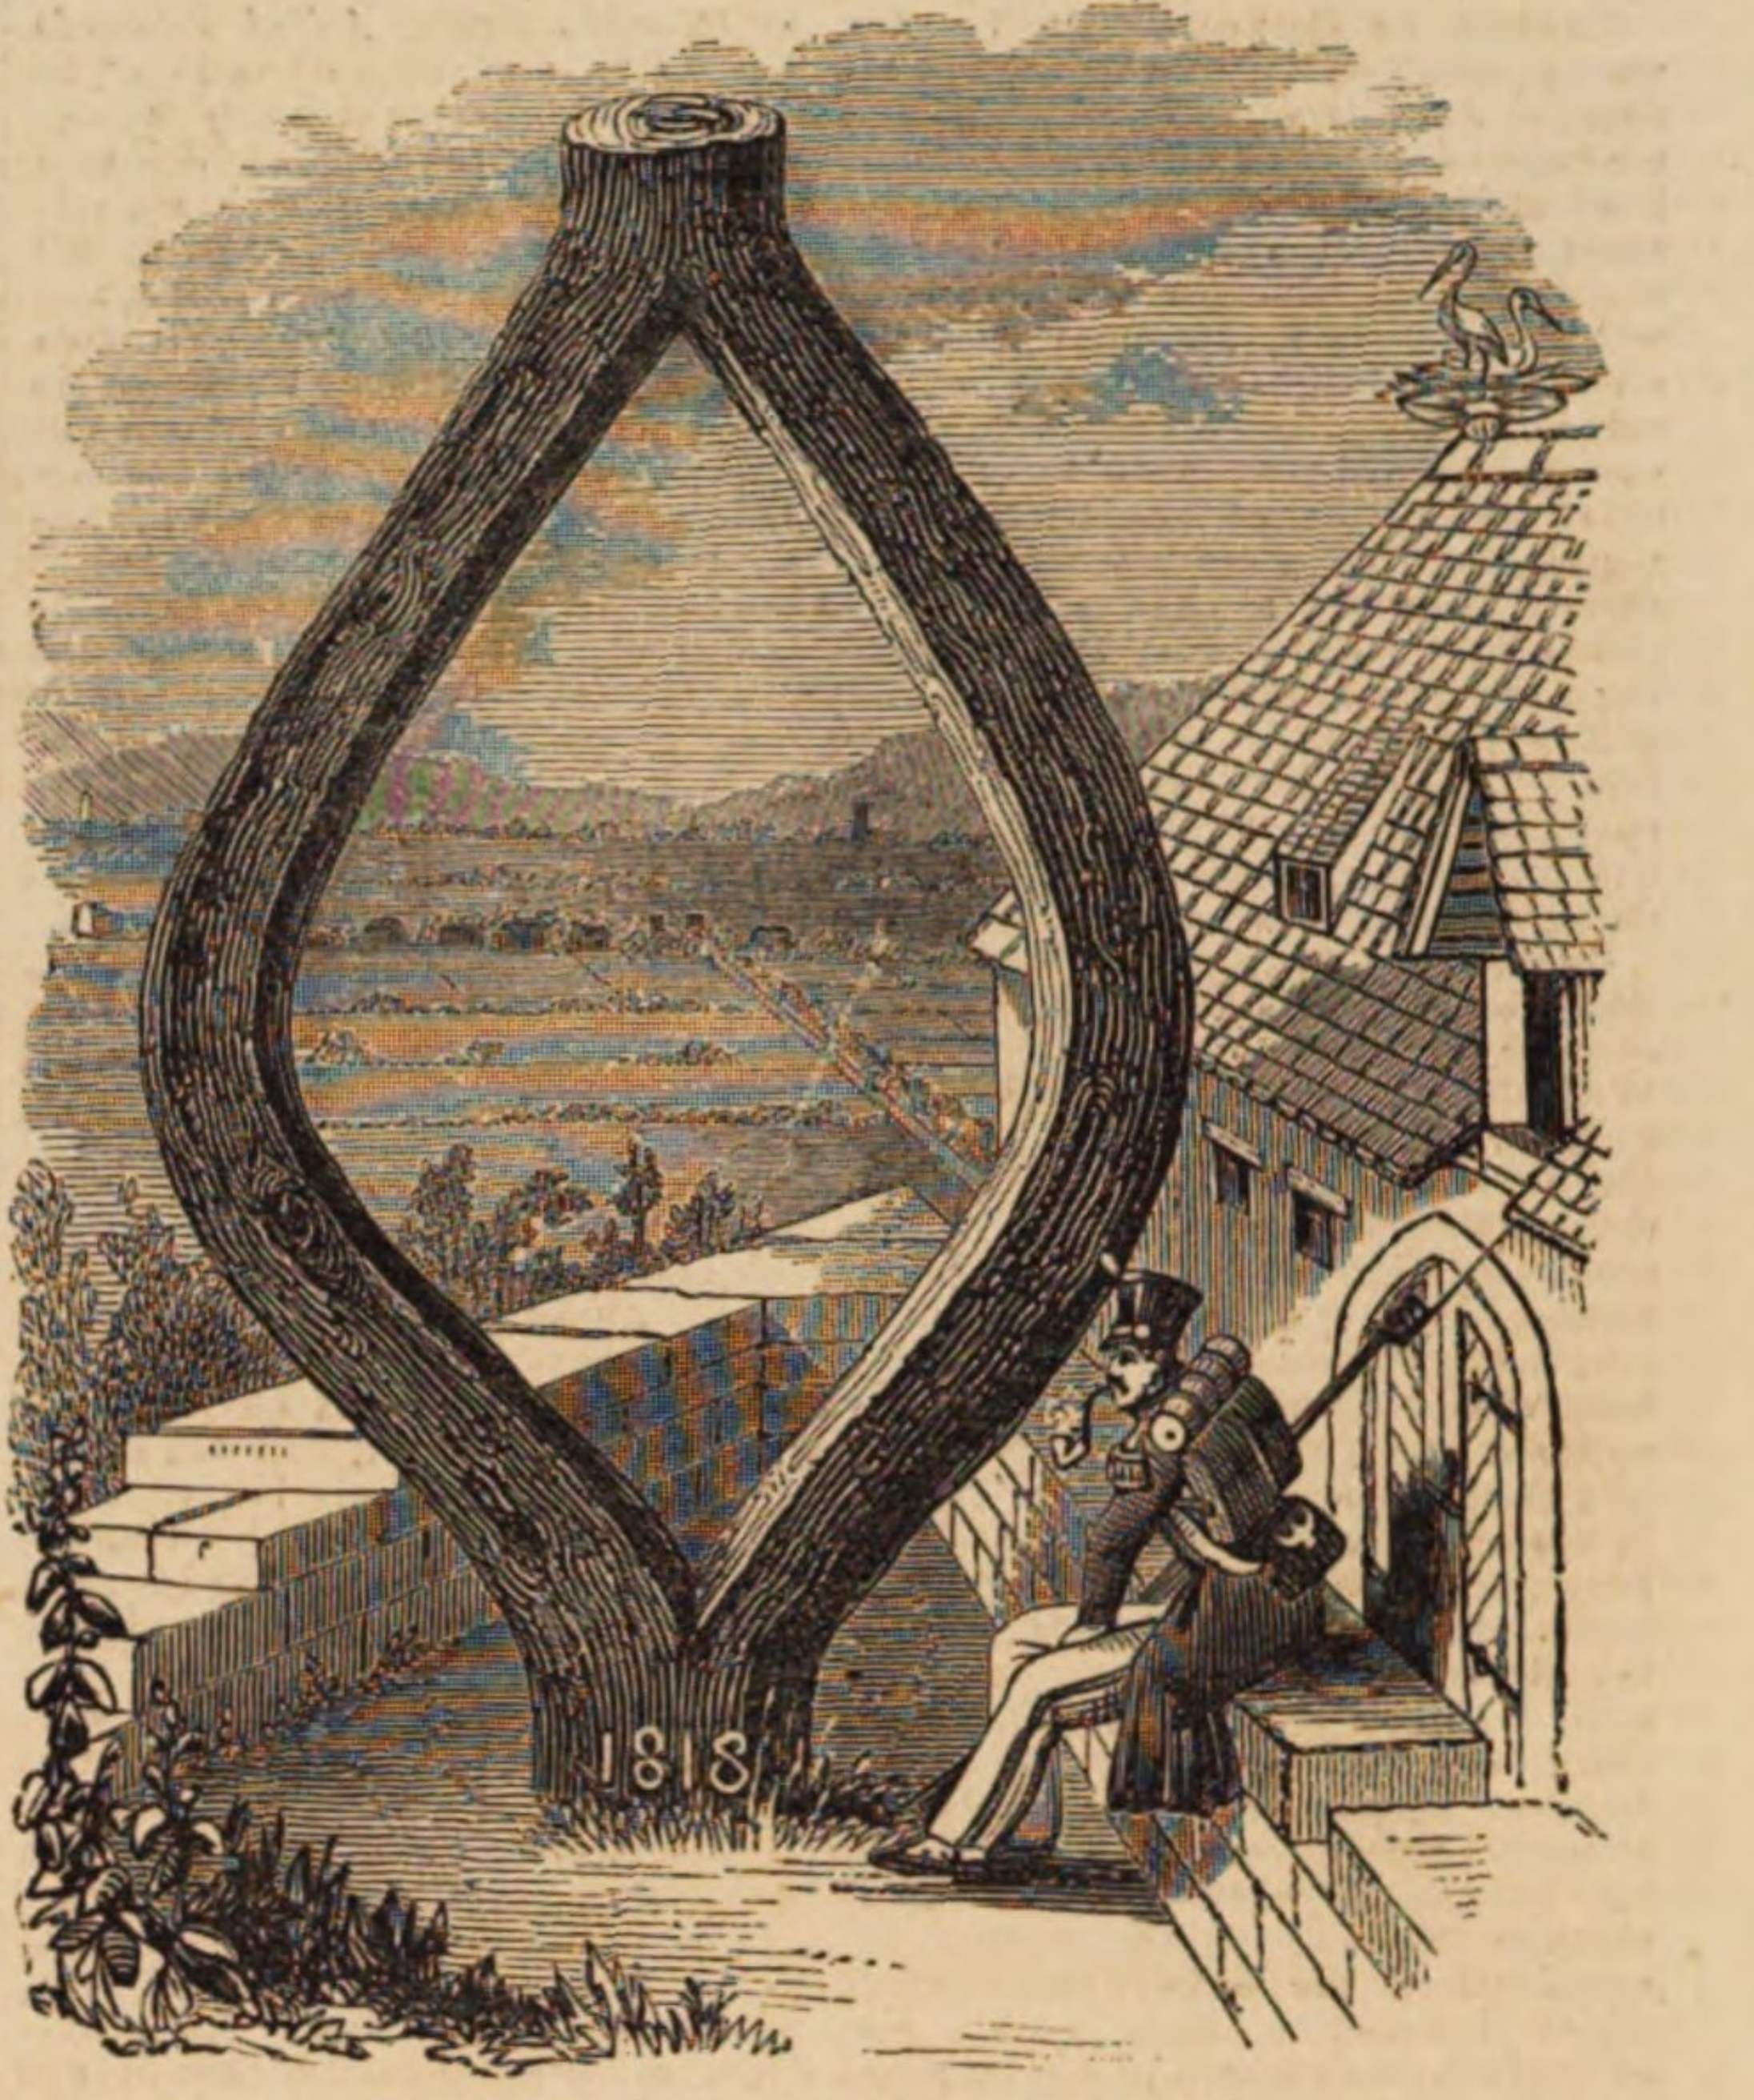


ICHABOE.—MODE OF SHIPPING THE GUANO.

CURIOUS TREE AT BADEN-BADEN.

The annexed outline sketch may interest the arboriculturists and foresters of England. It represents two branches of an oak-tree, which, re-uniting above, again forms one single trunk, as undivided and complete as at the base. Nature, and not art, has produced this junction. The tree was, for the first time, observed in 1818, by wood-cutters in the Kaiserswald (now Mahlbergwald), Grand Duchy of Baden. Being considered a great curiosity, this portion of the tree was cut off and fixed in a part of the grounds surrounding Mahlberg Schloss, a late residence of the Grand Ducal family, and built on the foundations of a Roman fortress.

The circumference of the trunk, where it was cut, is at present, after having been barked and smoothed by the axe, four feet six inches; its height above ground eight feet is nine inches, and the width of the space between the branches four feet nine inches.



CURIOUS OAK AT BADEN-BADEN.

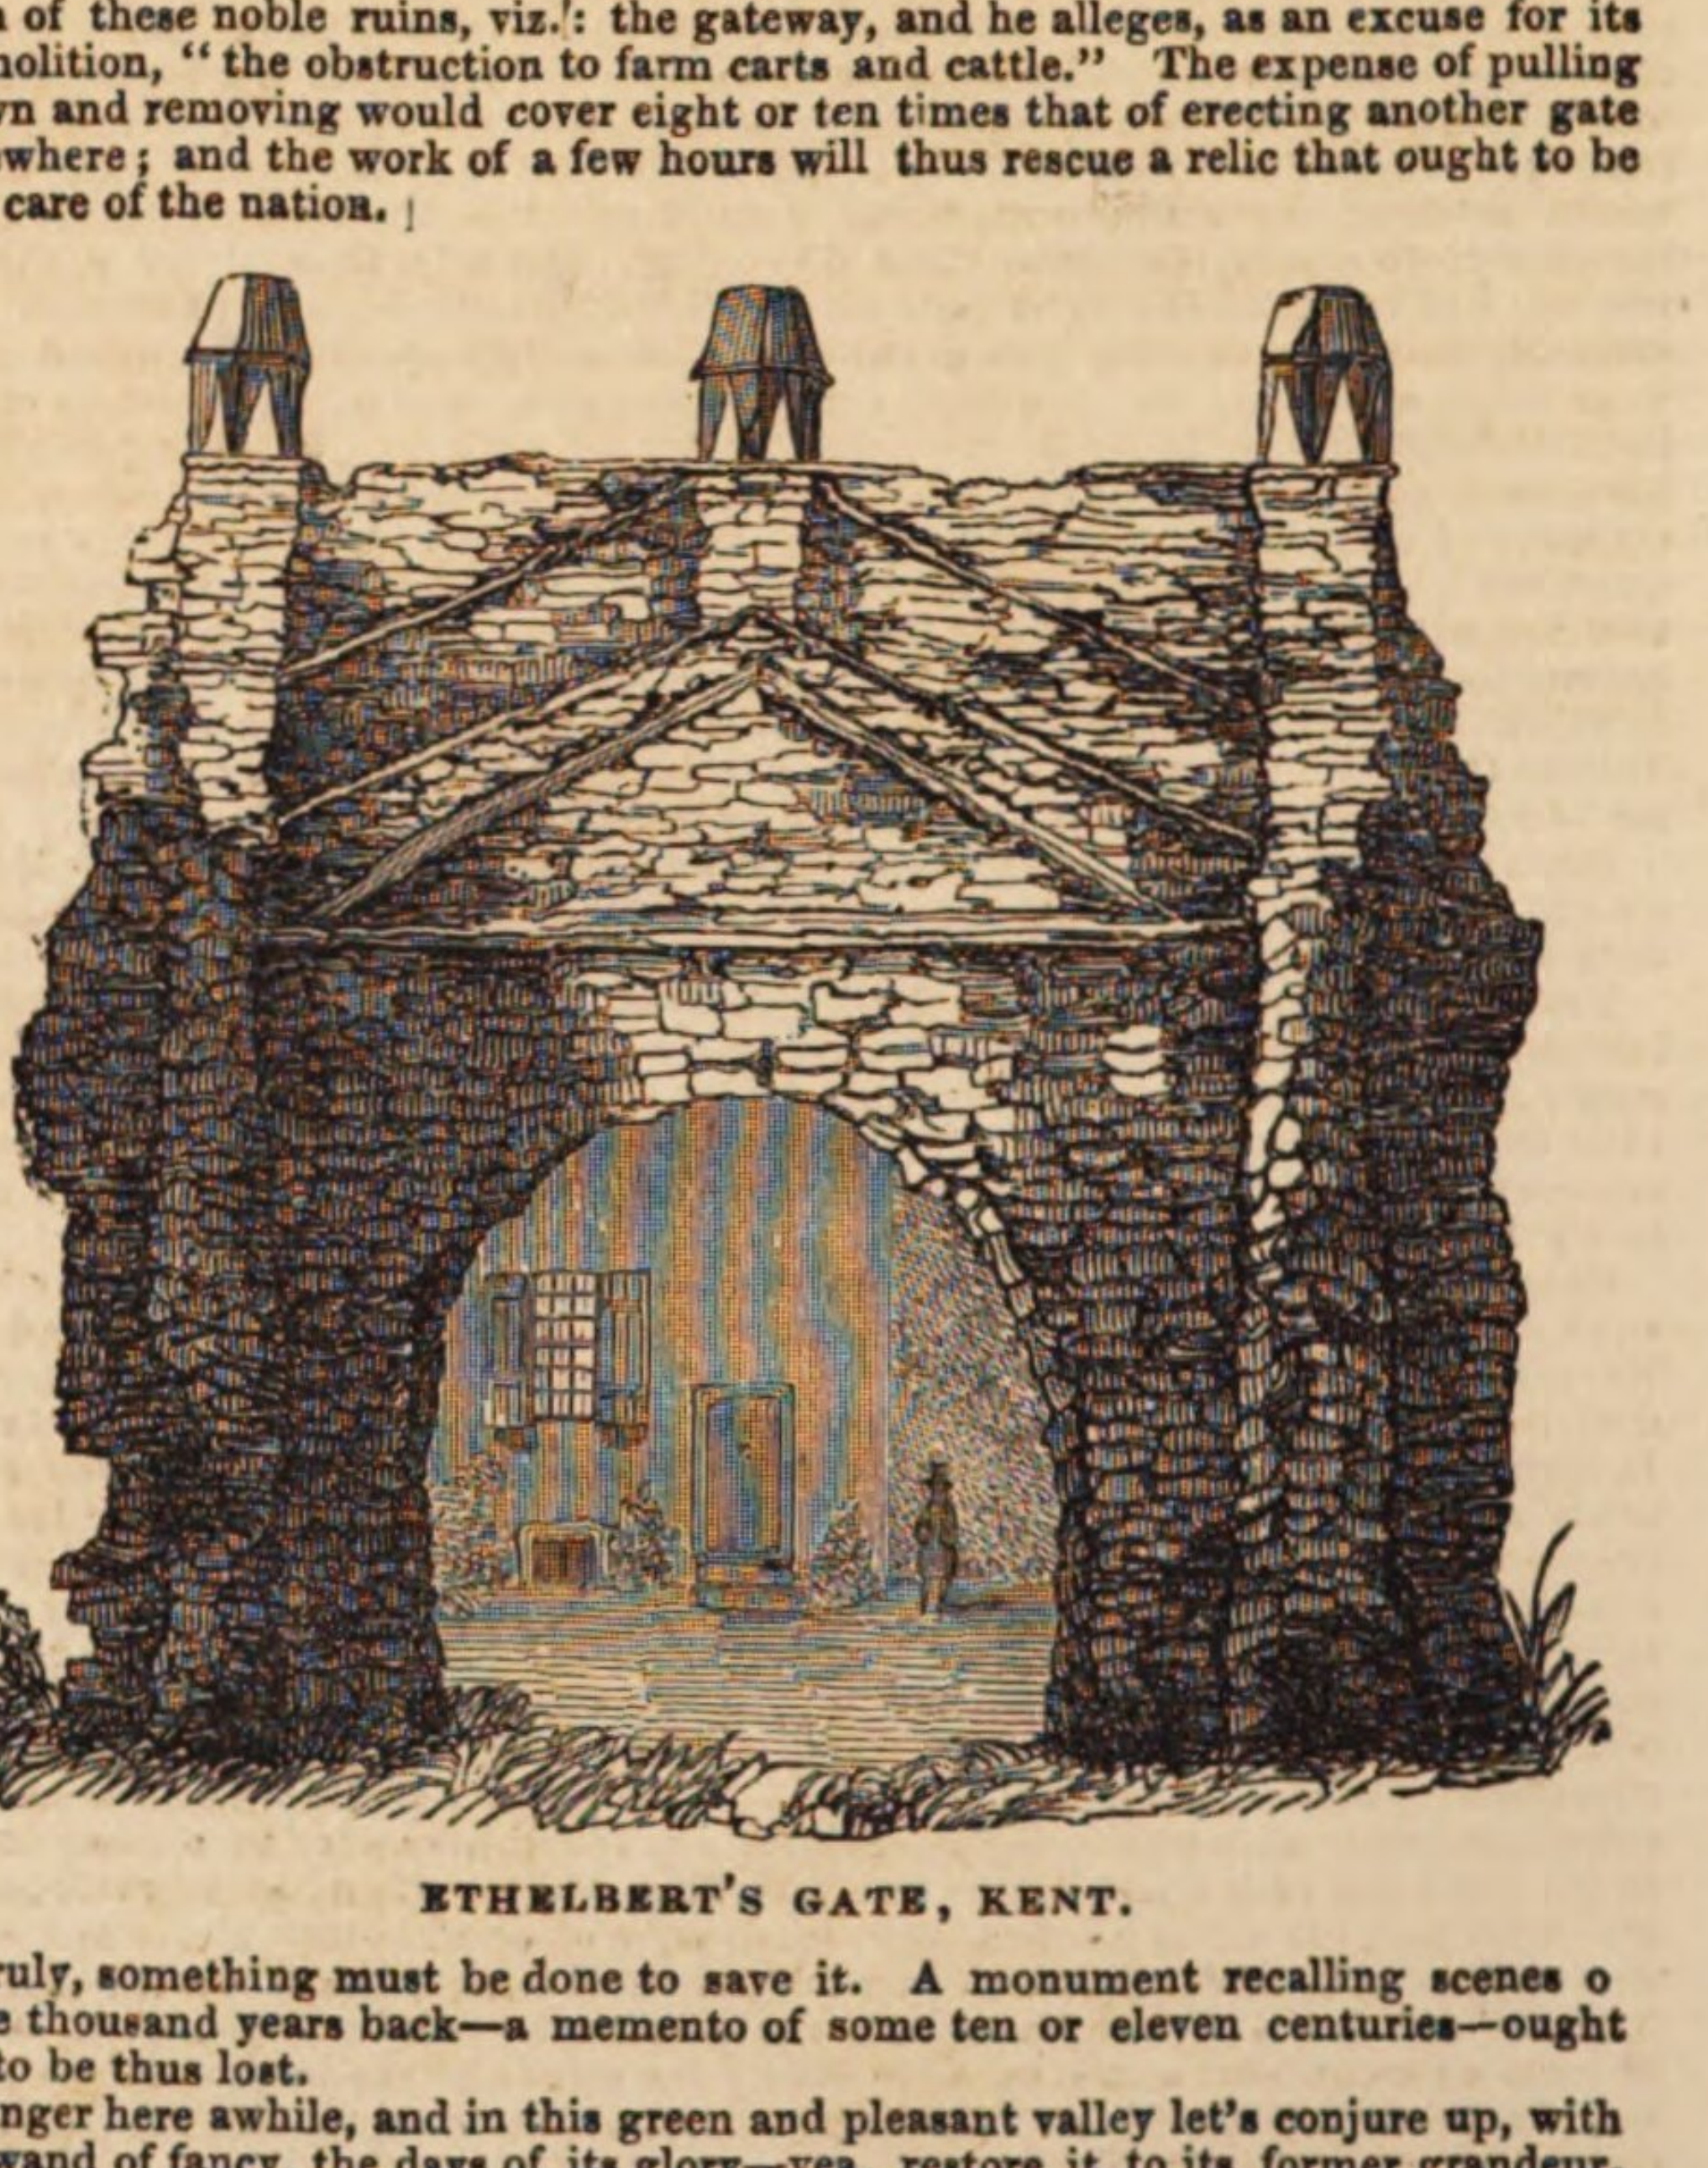
Between the branches is seen the village of Orschweier; beyond are the vine-bearing hills of the Kaiserstahl; and more distant still, on the right, the mountains of the Vosges in France; the Rhine flowing between these two ranges.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE GATEWAY OF ETHELBERT'S CASTLE.

Near to the Reculvers, and within a stone throw of the sea, stands this venerable relic of the Saxon times. It is situated in a lonely valley: a clear limpid stream freshens the sward which thrive around this time-hallowed memento. A stately oak seems to vie with it in its antiquity: its bare and rugged arms, studded with a few withered leaves, speak of nature's slow decay—tell the observer that it is not yet gone. Some straggling cottages, pitched here and there in the sweet recess, can hardly yet boast the name of village. But we are forgetting the farm-house built upon the site of an ancient palace.

The present tenant cares not for old associations. Who is Ethelbert to him, or he to Ethelbert? He even hints at the destruction of the only remaining portion of these noble ruins, viz.: the gateway, and he alleges, as an excuse for its demolition, "the obstruction to farm carts and cattle." The expense of pulling down and removing would cover eight or ten times that of erecting another gate elsewhere; and the work of a few hours will thus rescue a relic that ought to be the care of the nation.



ETHELBERT'S GATE, KENT.

Truly, something must be done to save it. A monument recalling scenes o some thousand years back—a memento of some ten or eleven centuries—ought not to be thus lost.

Linger here awhile, and in this green and pleasant valley let's conjure up, with the wand of fancy, the days of its glory—yea, restore it to its former grandeur. Let the ancient palace stand as in former times, its frowning turrets threatening the outward enemy; the fine old gateway, with its stout and stalwart walls. E'en let us restore animation to the mouldering remains of its kingly tenant; breathe life into his crumbling dust; let him behold his palace as it was—as it is; let him see the work of a few centuries. The yard where once his haughty warriors paraded, is now the abode of swine! Ethelbert would shudder at the sight, and reproach us for disturbing him.

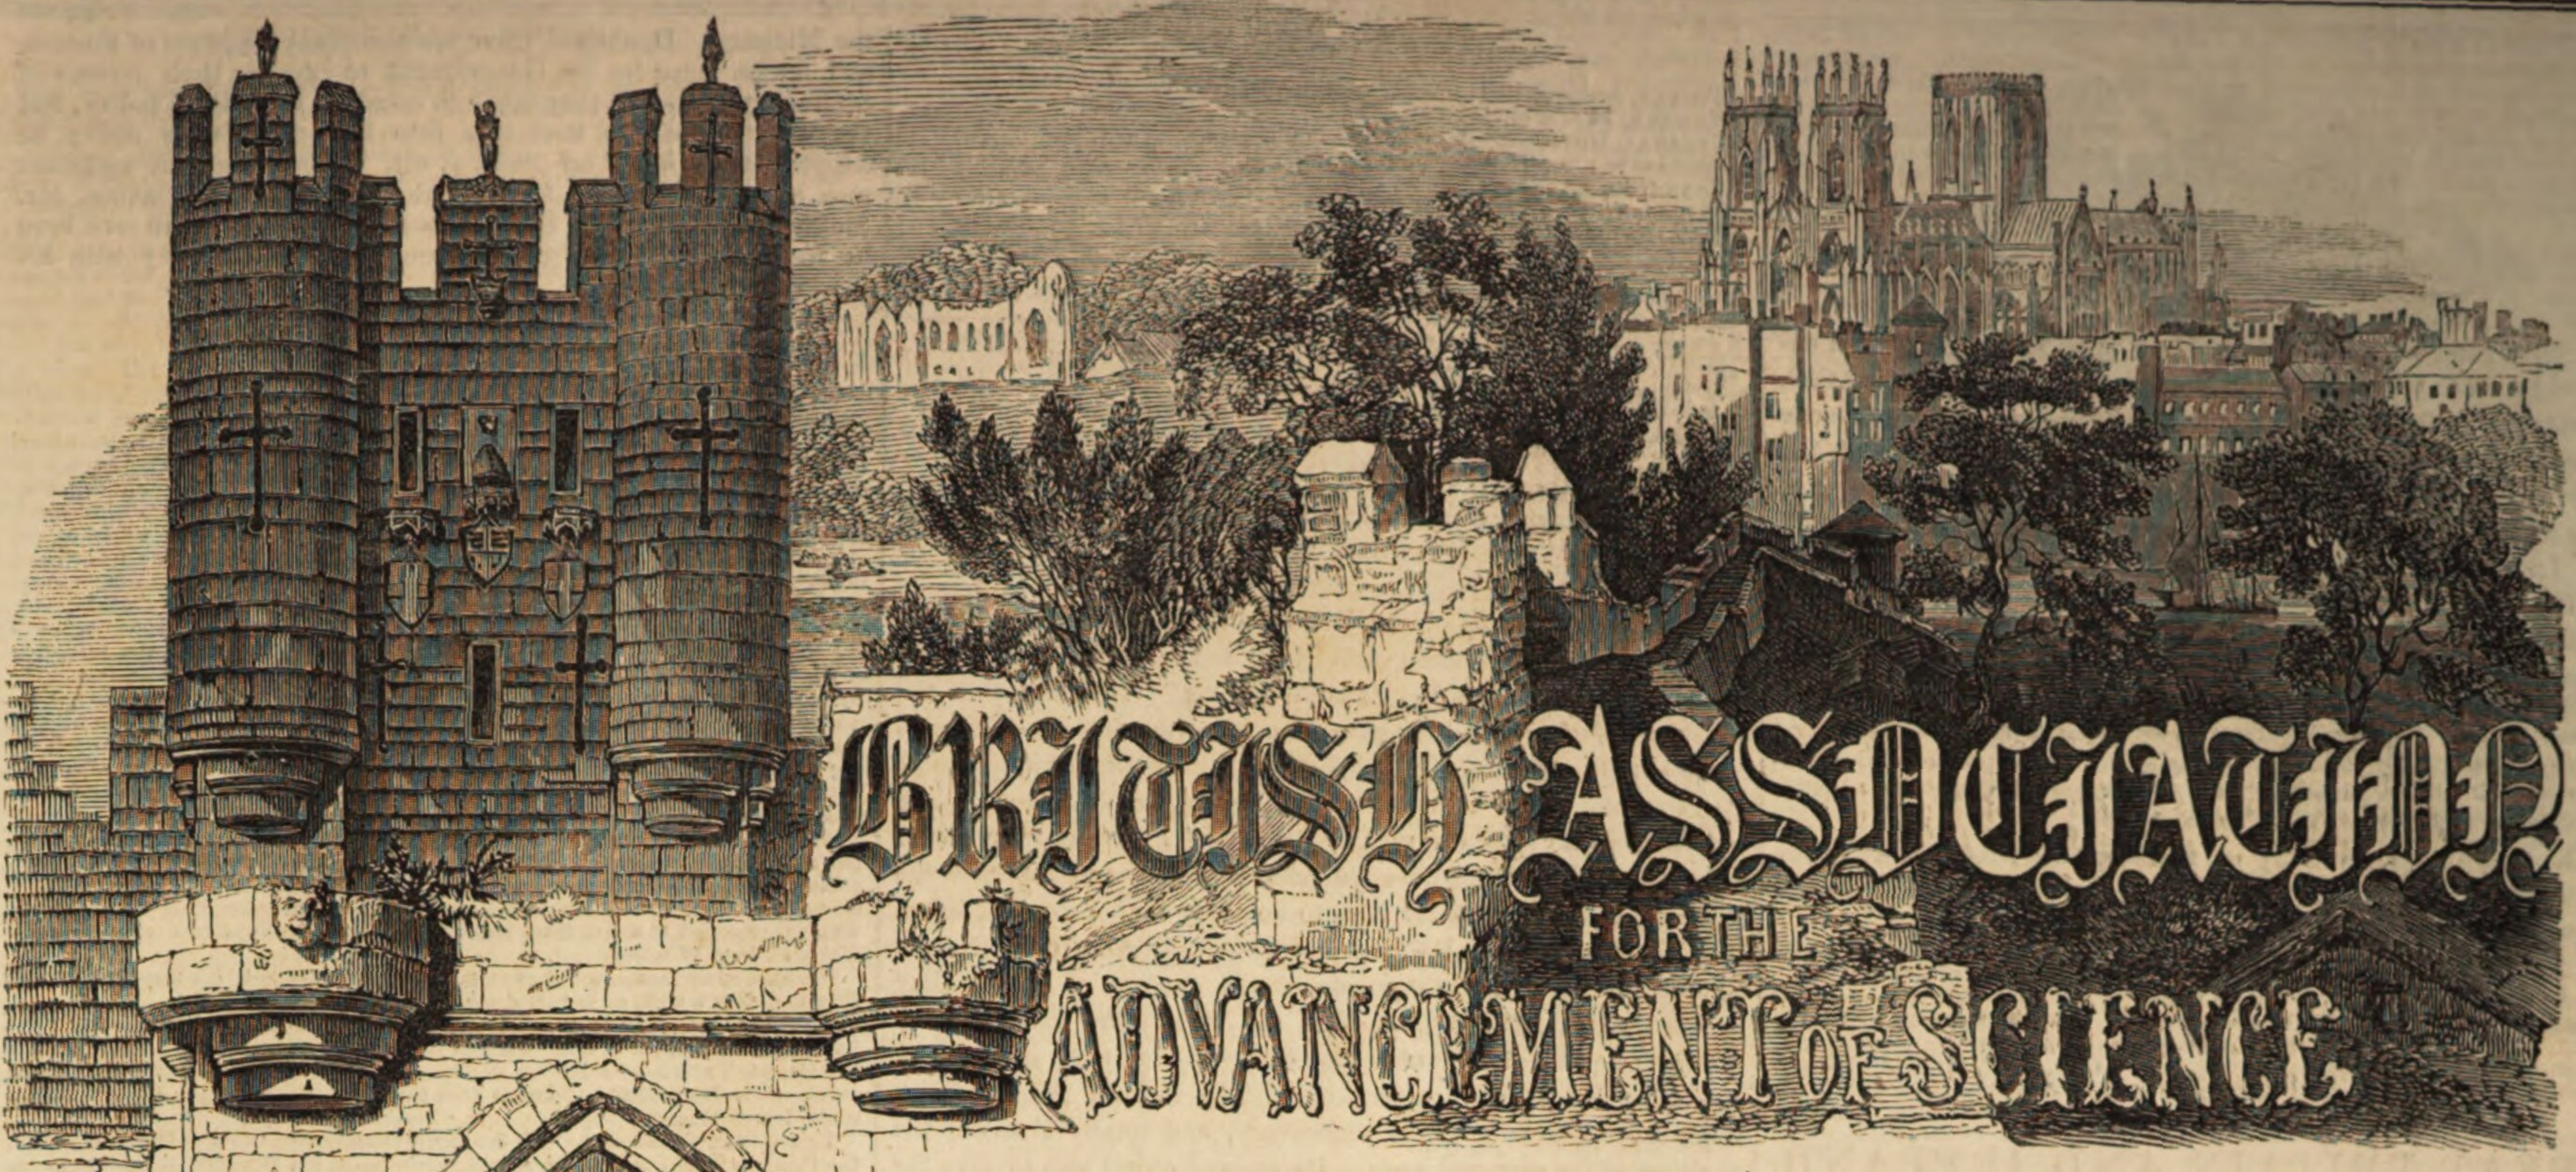
To the nation, or those who profess to represent it, we appeal: to them we appeal, trusting that these venerable remains will be rescued from destruction. Surely this is a case for the British Archæological Association, whose proceedings at Canterbury we reported in our last.

LOUIS PHILIPPE.—We have just seen an excellent portrait of his Majesty the King of the French, drawn in pen and ink, by Mr. Minasi, even with more than his accustomed delicacy and finish. The likeness is admirable.

THE WHARTON PEERAGE.—The obstructions hitherto in the way of Colone Tynte's claim to the Wharton peerage, are understood to be so far removed, that it is expected he will be called to the Upper House by the title of Baron Wharton in a few months.

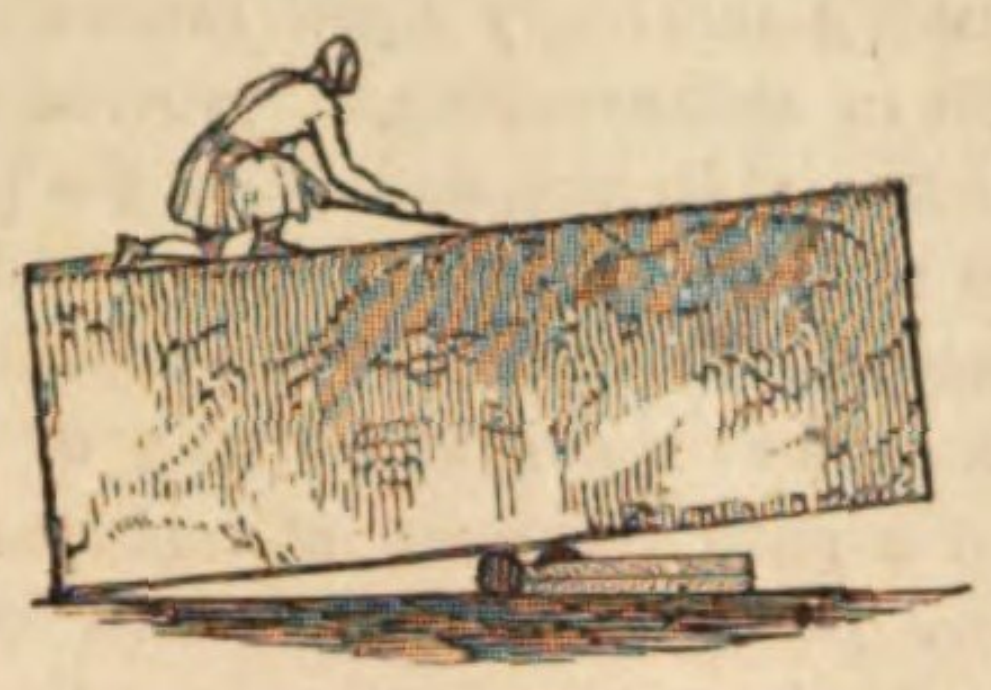
A RAILWAY ON FIRE.—The suspension bridge erected for the purpose of the Middlesbrough branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, where it crosses the Tees, a little above Stockton, having proved insufficient, a handsome one has recently been completed, under the direction of Mr. Robert Stephenson, consisting of longitudinal girders resting upon solid masonry. The centre arch, or water-way, is probably the widest span upon this construction extant. In forming the embankment at the east end of the new bridge, a large quantity of small coal, brought from 25 to 30 miles from the pits, has been made use of, and spontaneous combustion has taken place in this mass. The progress of the fire is not rapid; but such is the hold it has obtained that a complete deluge of water has proved useless. Measures are now taking to put in clay backs; that is, walls of wet clay, and this there is no doubt will prove effectual. In the meantime the passenger trains (10 each way), goods trains, and coals—say 3,000 tons (to which if we add coal waggons each way we shall nearly double the total)—run daily without any inconvenience or interruption.

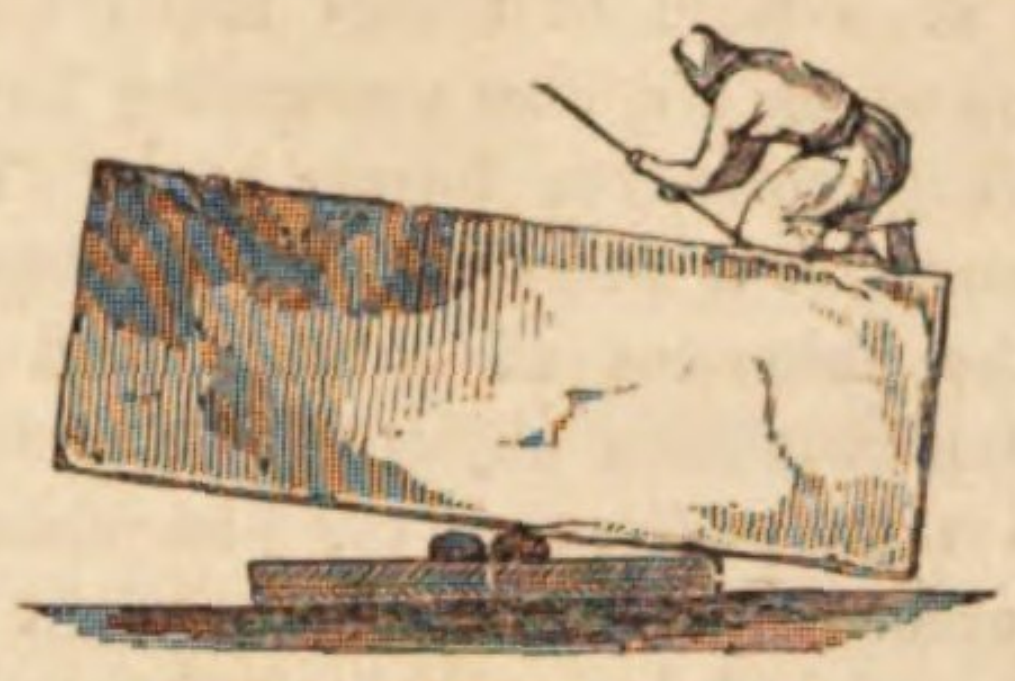
NEWSPAPER ONE PENNY LONDON

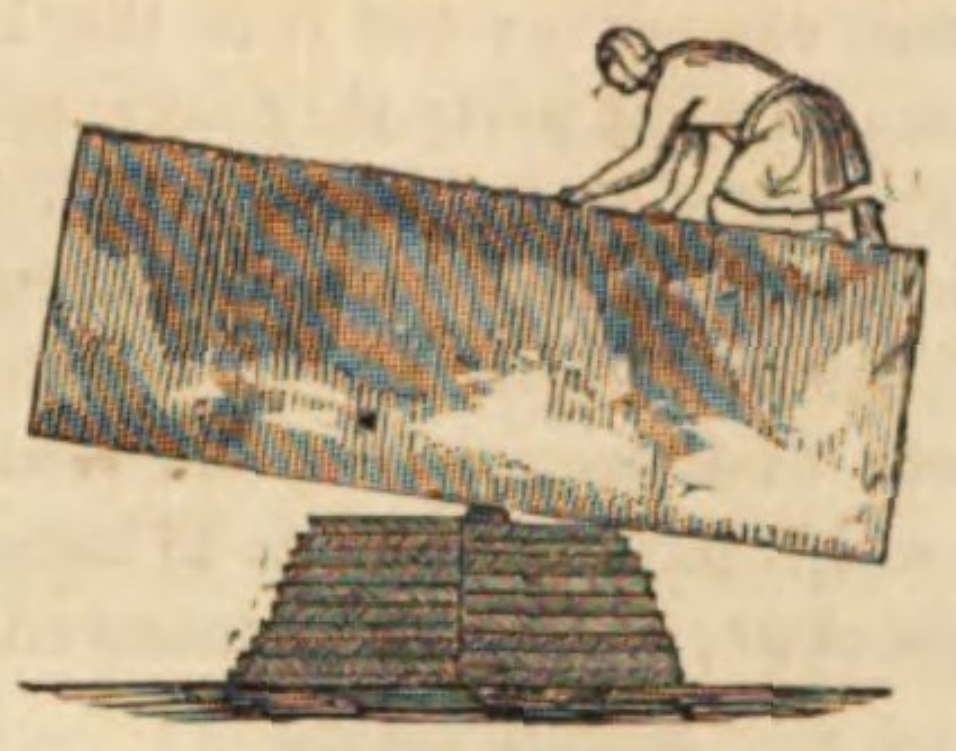


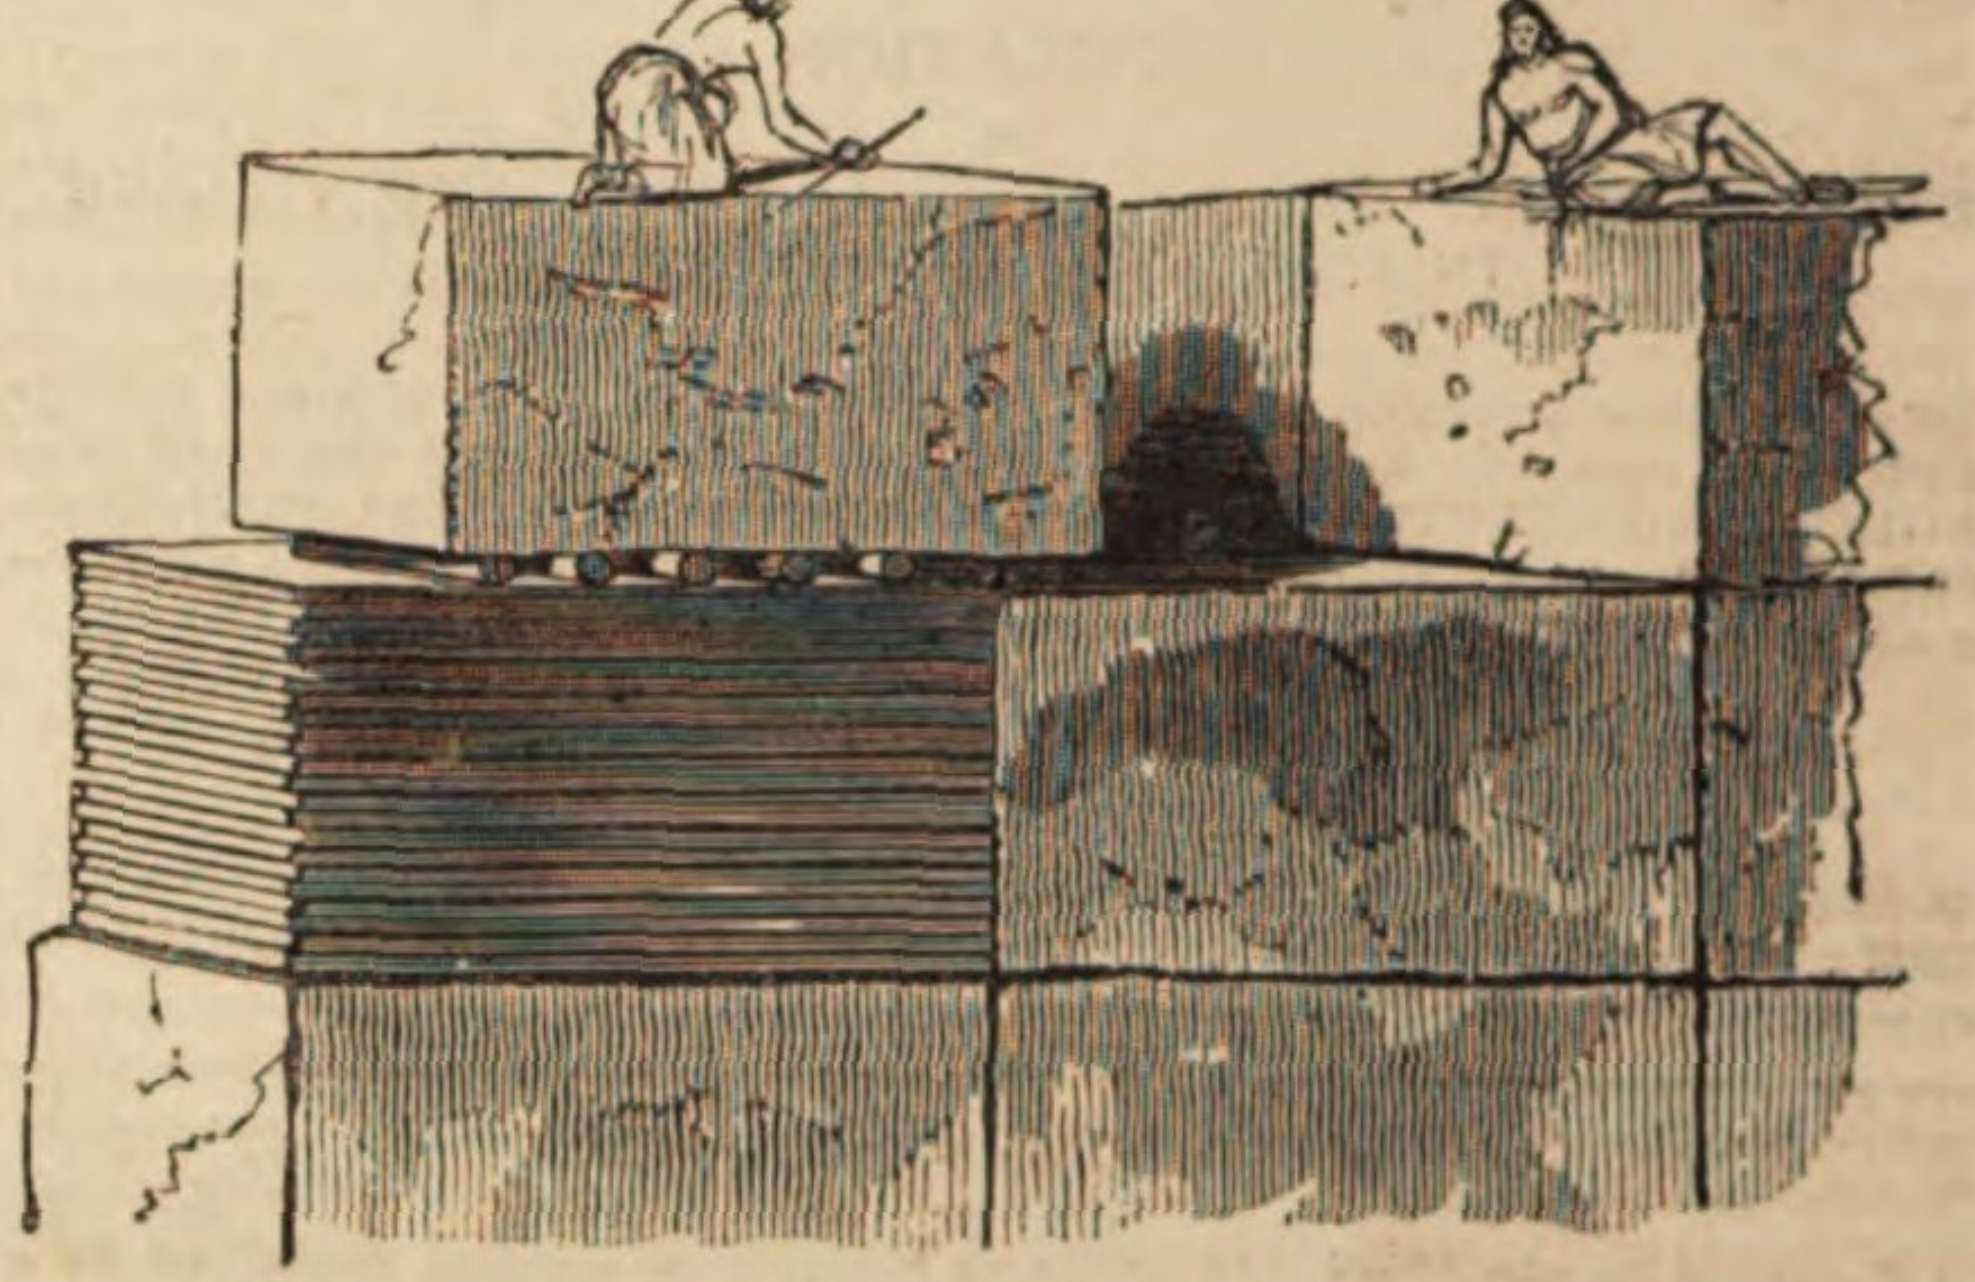
BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE

The fourteenth annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science is now assembled in the ancient city of York, in which place, the public will remember, the first meeting of the Association was held. The locality is an admirable one for the purpose, being well suited in relation to the interests of many important counties, and admirably calculated to furnish abundant and instructive amusement to the visitors. Indeed, few spots equal t in antiquarian or geological interest. Our heading displays a general view of York, combined with one of the venerable City gates; the Minster; the Ruins of St. Mary's; the old walls; and other objects of interest. The president for this year is the Very Rev. George Peacock, Dean of Ely; and the vice-presidents, the Earl Fitzwilliam, Viscount Morpeth, Hon. J. S. Wortley, Sir David Brewster, Michael Faraday, and Rev. W. Vernon Harcourt. The reports on the Progress of Science, and of researches entrusted to members and committees of the Associntion, are understood to be of great interest and importance. With some of these we have been made acquainted; but as their details are mostly of a purely scientific character, we shall, in this notice, confine ourselves to a brief account of a paper which has already excited considerable attention among the mechanical illuminati of London. We allude to Mr. Perigal's plan of raising stones of enormous magnitude, for the construction of pyramids, temples, &c., supposed to be the one employed by the ancient Egyptians in the erection of their ponderous structures. The precise method used by the mighty builders of the Nilotic Valley has for centuries remained a vexed question. Whether Mr. Perigal has answered it successfully, our readers will judge.' He supposes the vast stones of which the pyramids were built to have been raised to their several positions by successive tiltings, in the manner shown in the subjoined engravings. The first "purchase" he concludes to have been obtained by removing the earth, beneath the stone to be raised, to the extent of one half, and then lowering the huge block into the space so formed, by the weight of a labourer placed on its unsupported end. After each tilt, he imagines the height gained, to have been secured by the insertion of a board of hard wood, or a slab of metal, of a size corresponding with that of the stone to be raised. When the stone had, in this way, attained the desired height, he considers it to have been forwarded to its destination on rollers. Our cuts make the successive stages of this proceeding clearly intelligible. In considering this proposition, it is not necessary we should believe Mr. Perigal's method to be the identical one used by the Egyptians; it is enough for us to acknowledge that by such, or similar means, the hitherto inexplicable labour—the "enormous cruel wonder" as it was once called—might have been accomplished. We are confirmed in this conclusion by the fact that a few years ago, Col. Dansey partially used a somewhat similar mode in raising a ship in dock; and also, that in 1834, the authorities of the British Museum successfully tried a modification of the same principle, in moving and placing the Egyptian antiquities in the Great Saloon. Our cut of the pyramids of Jizeh, and viewed from the summit of the one known as Cheops, places the notion of Mr. Perigal's discovery in a very striking point of view.



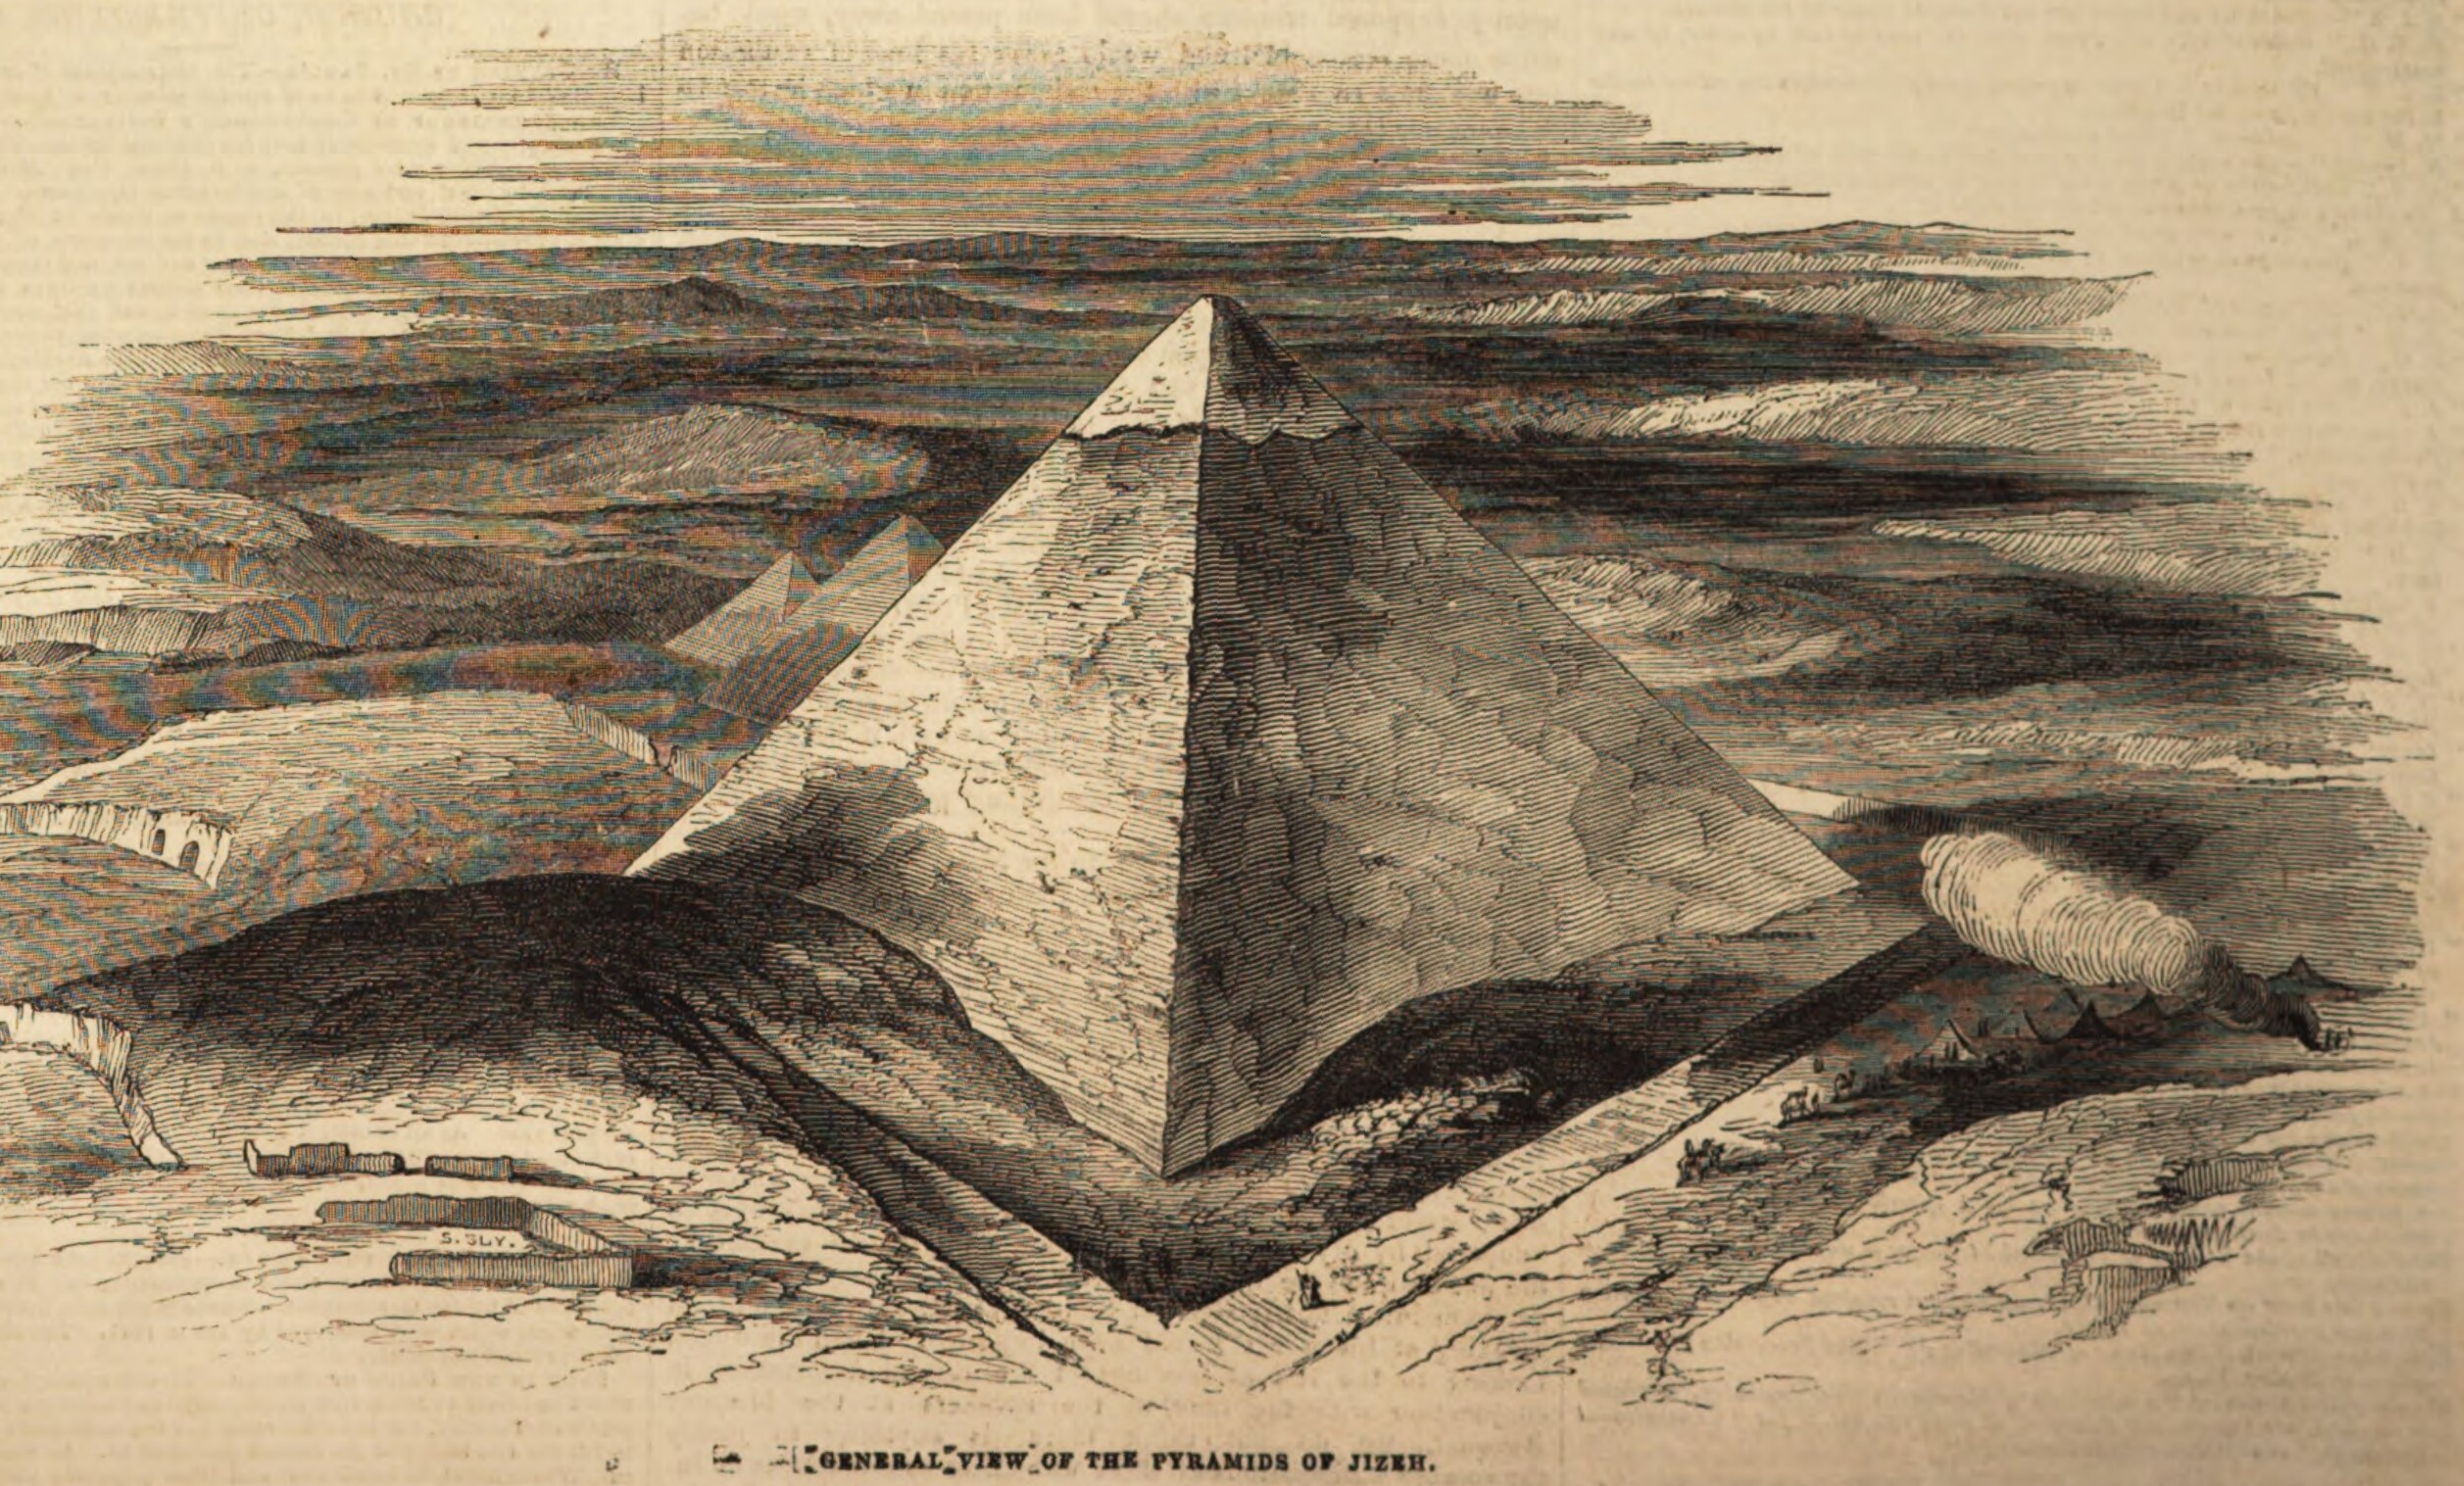






BUILDING THE PYRAMIDS.

Next week we shall resume our illustrated chronicle of the important proceedings of the Association.



GENERAL VIEW OF THE PYRAMIDS OF JIZEH.

WE have received a letter from Mr. Landells, the gentleman engaged by us to take sketches in the neighbourhood of Blair Athol, in which he informs us, that he has had the distinguished honour of submitting several of his sketches to the Queen, with which her Majesty expressed her gratification. Our daily contemporaries have alluded to the distinguished honour conferred on us through Mr. Landells, and the Standard, in its account of the sojourn of the Queen at Blair Athol, notices the reception of that gentleman, in the following terms:—

> Mr. Landells, a gentleman connected with the ILLUSTRATED NEWS, who is taking sketches of the scenery in the neighbourhood for that periodical, has had the honour of submitting some of them for her Majesty's inspection. The Queen expressed herself highly pleased with the spirit and accuracy of the sketches, and has commissioned Mr. Landells to paint for her two views, one of the Upper, and the other of the Lower Falls of Bruar.

The engravings given by us this week are from the sketches submitted by Mr. Landells to the Queen, and which elicited the Royal approval.

TO OUR READERS.

On Saturday the 5th of October, we shall publish a SUPPLEMENT containing the SECOND, and concluding PART of

THE CENSUS

OF

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND,

GIVING AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF THE

OCCUPATIONS OF THE INHABITANTS,

AND

SHOWING THE NUMBER OF EACH SEX EMPLOYED IN THE SEVERAL TRADES AND PROFESSIONS

IN ENGLAND AND WALES, SCOTLAND AND IRELAND,

respectively:—being unquestionably one of the most curious and important documents which has ever been presented to Parliament.—This SUPPLEMENT, will also contain the full details of the

POPULATION

OF

EVERY COUNTY, BARONY, PARISH, TOWN, AND VILLAGE IN SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND;

ALSO,

a list of all places returning MEMBERS to PARLIAMENT, with the POPULATION of each, the number of MEMBERS returned, and the number of REGISTERED ELECTORS; with numerous other STATISTICAL TABLES;—forming a useful and valuable work for reference to the PUBLIC in GENERAL,—the whole carefully arranged and compiled expressly for the

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

PRICE SIXPENCE, POSTAGE FREE.

Orders received by all Booksellers and Newsmen, and at the Office, No. 198, Strand;—where Copies of the First Part, containing the CENSUS of ENGLAND and WALES, may still be had.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Reader."—A fan produces coolness in a warm room, or in a theatre, even though the air which it agitates be very warm. To explain this, it must be considered that the air which surrounds us is generally cooler than the temperature of the body. If the air be still, the particles next the skin acquire the temperature of the skin itself, and form a sort of warm covering for it. The fan, however, by the agitation which it produces, continually expels the air next the skin, and brings fresh and cooler air into its place; and each new particle of air, as it strikes the skin, takes heat from it, and carries off that heat, thus producing refreshing coolness. Such is the philosophy of the fan.

"S. E. E.," Leeds.—The Great Britain steam-ship will shortly be got out of dock.

"A. and M.," Manchester.—The Christian names of the parties are Alfred and William.

"L. M. N."—Accountants are usually paid by the week.

"M. S. M." is thanked; but, Dunluce Castle has been too often engraved.

"H. J.," Chelsea.—It would be invidious to reply to our correspondent.

"H. W.," Islington, is thanked for the pen-and-ink sketch, which may be serviceable anon.

"A. I. Z."—Moorhens and snipes are not declared game by the statute.

"F. T. H.," Holsworthy.—The Print, price 1s., may be had, by order, of any news-agent.

"S. L. T.," Ilfracombe.—A crest engraved upon plate renders the owner liable to the tax on Armorial Bearings.

"H. M. H."—Address, "Royal Exchange."

"N. Sevorg."—The harvest moon was in full on the 26th of August.

"H. S.," Cork.—The property must be sold by public auction.

A. Rugbean's suggestion shall not be lost sight of.

"W. D. L."—The payment of the postage will not be necessary.

"T. S.," Huntingdon.—Leave to shoot over a farm must be given by the landlord.

"A. Z."—The name of Mr. Salvin's horse is "The Cure," not "The Curé."

"B. R.," West Bromwich, should send for the boots—and end the transaction.

"C. C.," Christchurch.—We omitted to record the death of the Rev. H. F. Carey, the celebrated translator of Dante, Pindar, &c.

"J. B."—The office of the London and York Railway is in Lothbury.

"A Conservative Reader" will be entitled to the Large Print.

"Perseverando," Stafford-street, will not subject himself to duty by using a motto only.

"S. B.," Salford.—The long letter on the comet is under consideration.

The Sketch of the Occurrence at Calais will not suit.

"L. R.," Castle Eden.—The present year is, of course, the 44th of the century.

"A Sufferer" should melt a piece of caoutchouc, and apply it to the tooth affected

"H. H.," West Derby, should, by no means, reply to advertisements, but deposit the money in a savings' bank.

"H. F.," Folkestone.—The "Journey-book of Berkshire," as well as the "Pictorial History of England," is published by Messrs. Knight and Co.

"Ignor" can only apply to a Judge, in his case, by affidavit, through a Solicitor.

"A Subscriber."—The price of Sir H. Bishop's edition of "Beethoven's Mount of Olives" is 30s.

"A Correspondent" will find "Anderson's Mercantile Letters" (Wilson, Royal Exchange,) to be a sound work.

We can only express concern at not being able to avail ourselves of the obliging offer of the tale from St. John-street, Manchester.

"R. Greenhill."—We believe the star seen by him, Sept. 13, to have been one of the bright fixed stars, surrounded by a prismatic halo, resulting from the condensed vapours which abound during the autumnal months.

"A Subscriber," Begbroke House, near Oxford.—The address of Mr. Sholl, the inventor of the new Barrel Beehive, engraved in No. 121 of our journal, is No. 33, Lamb-street, Spitalfields.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—The Orphan Working School, in the City-road, receives on election, or by payment of one hundred guineas, orphan and destitute children, between the ages of 7 and 11. They are educated (on the British system), clothed, and maintained, until they are 14 years of age, when they are apprenticed, or put out in respectable situations. A guinea annual subscription gives right to vote at each of the elections, which are in April and November.

The Portrait of the Winner of the Great St. Leger is unavoidably deferred till our next.

Up to a late hour on Thursday night, we had not received any communication from our correspondent at Havre.

Ineligible.—Sonnet, "The Home of Mourning;" "The Procession;" "The Queen at Dundee."

Errata.—The names of the architects of the church near Oswestry, engraved in our last, are Penson, not Pearson. At page 192, col. 3, for "Conventional Buildings," read "Conventual Buildings."

⁂ Any Country News Agent may receive Posting Bills, bearing his address, by informing our Publisher where a parcel can be enclosed, free of expense.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, September 29.—Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 30.—Whitfield died, 1770.
TUESDAY, October 1.—Pheasant shooting begins.
WEDNESDAY, 2.—Nottingham Goose Fair.
THURSDAY, 3.—Robert Barclay died, 1690.
FRIDAY, 4.—Sir John Rennie died, 1821.
SATURDAY, 5.—Old Parr died, 1635, aged 152.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending October 5.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.
3 58	4 14	4 28	4 44	5 0	5 18	5 38	5 56	6 19	6 42	7 9	7 44

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1844.

SOON after the passing of the Reform Bill, Sir Robert Peel made the memorable declaration that the "battle of the Constitution must be fought in the Registration Courts." It is true that the new system of registration gave rise to a vast deal of chicanery, and we believe that many an independent voter suffered himself to be disfranchised rather than submit to the trouble, vexation, and, we may almost say, the disgrace of defending his vote against unscrupulous advocates, whose purpose was rather to diminish the ranks of a particular party than to do away with error and injustice. But Sir Robert Peel was not answerable for these dishonest attempts to serve party interests, at the expense of good feeling and propriety. We believe that the right hon. gentleman is totally incapable of attempting to increase the number of the Conservatives by trickery or evasion. The Reform Bill made an immense advance towards democracy, and totally changed the position of the electoral body. Its avowed object was to give the people a greater share in the representation; and we admit that it was wise and proper to extend their privileges as far as possible, without rushing recklessly upon innovation. Sir Robert was therefore right in endeavouring to provide a system which should protect the honest elector, and defeat the attempts of those who sought rather their own aggrandisement, and the ascendancy of a particular party, than the good of their country.

We admit at once that the first working of the Registration Bill did not afford a good specimen of legislation. The Registration Courts were rather arenas for evasion and legal technicality, than the spots where "the battle of the Constitution" could be fairly fought or gained. We are happy to find, however, that the amendments which have been made from time to time have been productive of a state of things much more satisfactory. The Registrations which are now proceeding have not presented any of the anomalies noticed in former years. There have been few, if any, records of a decision by one barrister totally at variance with the judgment of another, and instead of day after day wasted in frivolous objection, or abusive controversy, the business is rapidly disposed of, just claims are allowed, and, on the other hand, when the right to vote cannot be established beyond reasonable dispute, it is set aside at once, and upon just and fair grounds. This is as it should be. The elective franchise is one of the most valuable privileges which an Englishman can enjoy; and it is the interest of honest men, let them belong to what party they may, to take care that it is not exercised dishonestly or fraudulently. The man who can show that he is fairly entitled to a vote, should be encouraged and assisted in his endeavours to make good his claim; but we hope, for the honour both of Conservatives and Whigs, that the disgraceful struggles which have been made to harass and cheat men of their elective franchise, will never be renewed.

WE are glad to find that we were not deceived in supposing that Mr. O'Connell, when the surprise and exultation consequent upon a supposed triumph should have passed away, would become more reasonable, and would lower his tone of exultation into one more consistent with the real position in which he stands. It is not our intention to enter into the vexed and irritating question of the legality or illegality of the conviction. Suffice it to say, that even Mr. O'Connell himself begins to doubt whether he has been liberated entirely upon the merits of the case. According to our accounts from Ireland, all his dire projects of vengeance and retaliation are abandoned for the present. In his last speech he dwelt only upon two of his propositions—the renewal of the Clontarf meeting and the Peace Preservative Society. Even these two seem likely to fall to the ground. Indeed, the first is disposed of, for the committee report against the meeting, and the learned gentleman entirely concurs in the propriety of not attempting such a perilous step as a monster assemblage, in defiance of the Government, and despite of the eventful consequences of the first effort of that kind. As to the other great step for the regeneration of Ireland—the Peace Preservative Society—every one may understand what is meant by the request made by the committee for more time to consider of the matter. We feel confident that no long time will elapse before a communication will be made, to the effect that it will be as well, if not better, to let the Repeal Association continue the "even tenor of its way," without the assistance of the controlling power of the £100 subscribers.

With respect to the "Banquet to the Martyrs," as the fête celebrated last week is termed by the Irish papers, our readers will gather from our account of it that it was not such a formidable demonstration as some of the most sanguine of the agitators might have expected. It is true it was a monster assembly, consisting of some seven or eight hundred guests; but there was no great display of enthusiasm. Mr. O'Connell's speech was an admitted failure, and if the truth must be told, there was "metal more attractive" in the oration of a subordinate agitator, Mr. Maguire. If the latter gentleman was a little inclined to violence, and seemed disposed to wage war by wholesale upon the whole of this "woful wicked world," yet his outpourings of wrath were so tempered by dry and cutting humour, that it was evident he did not desire to be quite so severe upon the Saxons in general, or upon Mr. Attorney-General Smith in particular, as the literal meaning of his words would have imported. Upon the whole, looking to the last proceedings at the Repeal Association, in conjunction with the tone of the speakers at the Monster Banquet, we do not think there is anything to justify the sombre anticipations of those who affect to see tokens of increasing dissatisfaction in Ireland, and augmented difficulty for the Ministry. Doubtless, there are abundant elements of discord, and ample scope for the Government to exercise their powers of Statesmanship when they come to consider their Irish policy, but yet we fully believe, that if a firm but conciliatory policy be adopted, as we have no doubt it will be, the career of agitation may yet be stopped. Already, the agitators are relaxing, Mr. Smith O'Brien has left Dublin, and Mr. O'Connell will ere long be wandering over his native mountains, in company with his beagles.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The preparations for the reception of the King of the French, at the Castle, are proceeding with the greatest rapidity under the superintendence of Mr. Saunders, the Inspector of Palaces. Independently of the suite of rooms (consisting of the King's and Queen's closets, the King's drawing-room, the ante-throne-room, and the council chamber, forming a portion of the state apartments), which will be devoted exclusively to the use of his Majesty, the whole of the state-rooms will be in requisition during the sojourn of her Majesty's royal and illustrious guest at the Castle. The orders at present are, that all the arrangements connected with the apartments to be occupied by his Majesty shall be completed by Saturday, the 5th proximo, but the King is not expect to arrive until the Monday following. The private apartments will be ready for the reception of the Court on Wednesday next, on which day, it is stated, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, with the Princess Royal, may return to the Castle. It is not expected, however, as the Queen will not leave Blair Athol until the morning of Tuesday, that it will be possible for the Court to reach Windsor until the following Thursday. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, and Prince Alfred, are expected to leave the Pavilion, at Brighton, for the Castle, on Tuesday next There is now not the least doubt of her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and a portion of the Infant Royal Family, paying a visit to the Isle of Wight during the autumn. Osborne House, small, confined, and inconvenient as it is, and in every respect unbefitting the residence of the Sovereign, is now in course of preparation for the reception of the Court, which is expected to arrive there immediately after the departure of the French Monarch from Windsor.

We have some reason to believe that it is the intention of the Queen to honour Brighton with a visit, on her Majesty's return from Scotland.

VISIT OF HER MAJESTY TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—It is most likely the Court intends to sojourn some time at the Isle of Wight. The Monkey, one of her Majesty's steam-vessels, has proceeded to Brighton, to be placed under the orders of the Lord Chamberlain, to take furniture, &c., from the Royal Pavilion to the Isle of Wight.

THE ROYAL CHILDREN.—We are happy to announce that the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, and Prince Alfred, continue at the Pavilion, Brighton, in excellent health. The Royal Infants are taken carriage airings daily on the cliffs, and the elder ones occasionally take pedestrian exercise on the Chair Pier, attended by Dowager Lady Lyttelton. The time fixed for their departure for Windsor is next Tuesday.

THE KING OF THE BELGIANS.—The Brussels Gazette states that King Leopold has been slightly hurt in the leg while following the chase at Ardennes.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER AND THE DUCHESS OF KENT.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, have left Gopsall, Leicestershire, the seat of Earl Howe, for Witley Court, Worcestershire, the residence of the Queen Dowager.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived in Glasgow last Saturday, accompanied by the Marquis of Douglas, the Earl of Dunmore, the Hon. C. A. Murray, &c.

The Duke of Wellington is expected to leave Walmer Castle early in the week after next for Apsley House, en route to participate in the approaching splendid festivities at Windsor Castle, in honour of the visit of his Majesty the King of the French. The Marquis and Marchioness of Douro have arrived at the Castle, from a tour of six weeks in Germany, and shortly come to town to attend the nuptials of her ladyship's cousin, Miss Hope Vere, with Lord Loftus, eldest son of the Marquis of Ely, which are fixed to take place the week after next.

THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.—A Chapter of the noble and illustrious Order of the Garter will be held at Windsor Castle, on Friday, the 11th of October, for the election of two knights. The King of the French, it is expected, will, as a European Sovereign, be elected an honorary Knight of the Order during his sojourn in this country.

Earl de Grey is spoken of as one of the probable new Knights of the Garter.

The Marquis of Lansdowne and family have arriaed at Paris.

Lord Palmerston arrived at Frankfort on the 17th inst.

THE EARL AND COUNTESS OF LINCOLN.—It is stated, on good authority, that, through the mediation of friends, a reconciliation has been effected between the Earl and Countess of Lincoln, and that the slight differences which had caused a partial separation have been amicably adjusted, to the satisfaction, not only of themselves, but of the respective members of the noble families with which they are so intimately connected.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM.—Sir James left town on Sunday evening by the eight o'clock train of the London and Birmingham Railway, and is now at Netherby Hall.

THE MARQUIS OF DONEGAL.—We regret to state that the Marquis of Donegal is at present labouring under very serious indisposition at Belfast, and that the most melancholy fears are entertained as to the result.

A matrimonial alliance is said to be arranged between an accomplished young peeress in her own right, who attained her majority last year, and a reverend gentleman collaterally related to a noble earl possessing large estates in the west of England.

The Duke of Palmella has arrived in London from Lisbon.

DEATH OF LADY HUNTER.—Accounts have been received of the death of the above lady. Her ladyship was daughter and heiress of Mr. James Dickson, of Auton's Hill, Berwickshire, and married, in 1797, General Sir Martin Hunter, G.C.H. The deceased lady was in her 70th year.

DEATH OF LADY ELLEN FANE.—We regret to say that this lady died on Monday last. The deceased lady was third daughter of the Earl of Macclesfield, by his first marriage with Miss Edwards, eldest daughter of Mr. Lewis Edwards. Her ladyship was married 3rd Nov., 1829, to Mr. John William Fane, eldest son of Mr. John Fane, of Wormsley, Oxon, and nephew of the eighth Earl of Westmorland.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

RE-OPENING OF ST. PAUL'S.—The metropolitan church, which has been so long closed for repairs, is to be re-opened to-morrow (Sunday).

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY'S VISITATION.—On Tuesday morning the Archbishop of Canterbury held his triennial visitation at All Saints' Church, Maidstone. There were present, A. B. Hope, Esq., M.P.; Archdeacon Lyall, Dr. Burnaby, and upwards of one hundred clergymen. The Archbishop delivered a lengthened charge, in the course of which he directed attention to the state of education in that county, and to the prospects of the church generally. He stated that, from what he could hear and see, and from what he could gather from the speeches of Dissenters at their various meetings, that there was a growing dislike on their part towards the church, and that some serious designs for its overthrow were in contemplation. From external violence, or the internal dissensions which at present agitate the church, the Archbishop anticipated no ill consequences, although he admitted that it was in the highest degree painful to contemplate them. After discussing at some length the subject of church extension, the Archbishop recommended the formation of auxiliary branches on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and concluded with sundry points of advice to the younger clergy, as to the manner of conducting their ministrations. A dinner was given to the Archbishop in the evening at the Star Hotel.

On Tuesday the Lord Bishop of Exeter consecrated a new church at Woodbury Salterton, Devon.

The Lord Bishop of Norwich consecrated a new church at Lakenham, Norwich, on Tuesday, in the presence of a number of the clergy. It is dedicated to St. Mark.

The Lord Bishop of Chester has instituted the Rev. Henry Deek, curate of Halifax, to the rectory of St. Barnabas, Manchester. His lordship has also insituted the Rev. H. P. Hughes, curate of Hyde, to the ministry of Christ Church, Dolphinholme.

The Lord Bishop of Norwich has collated the Rev. John Bedingfield Collyer, M.A., of Hackford Hall, Norfolk, and Vicar of Wroxham, with Salhouse, in the same county, to the archdeaconry of Norwich, vacant by the death of the late Venerable Archdeacon Bathurst.

The valuable rectory of North Creake, Norfolk, has become vacant by the death of the Venerable Archdeacon Bathurst. The living is worth £1100 a year, and is in the gift of Earl Spencer and the Bishop of Norwich. By the death of the Archdeacon, the living of Hollesley, Suffolk, has also become vacant. It is in the gift of W. Bolton, Esq., and is worth £830 per annum.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.—The following circular has been addressed to members of Convocation:—"Oxford, Sept. 23, 1844.—Members of Convocation are respectfully informed that the Vice-Chancellor, although requested by the Senior Proctor, has refused to give any information as to the day of the nomination of his successor. Whether this information will be open to Dr. Symons, members of Convocation may decide for themselves from the events of the past year. At all events, it is to be hoped that they will hold themselves in readiness to come up on the receipt of a notice of the day, if the discovery of it prove possible; or if not, to show in some other marked way their sense of this fresh act of injustice."

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE TOWER.—Preparations have been commenced for the extensive improvements about to be made in the Tower, agreeably to plans approved of by the Government. Barracks are to be built on the site of the small armouries, which were destroyed by fire in 1841. The alterations in the Jewel-office proceed but slowly.

FALL IN THE PRICE OF BREAD.—In consequence of the large supply of wheat and flour at Mark-lane on Monday, and a general tendency to a decline in prices on Tuesday, the bakers throughout the metropolis lowered the best bread to 7d. the 4lb. loaf, and the second quality to 6d. In Blackfriars-road, the New-cut, Whitechapel, Westminster, and other populous parts, many of them only charge 5½d. for the 4lb., weighed on delivery, and excellent bread.

METROPOLITAN NEWS..

The New Royal Exchange.—This structure is so far advanced that the committee of Lloyd's have announced to the subscribers that the subscription-room will be prepared for the transaction of business in a short time. The centre area of the Exchange is nearly all laid down with the tesellated pavement. The building is entirely cleaned externally, and workmen are employed in placing the flag stones, many of which are from eight to ten feet square. Iron gas pillars are erected at short distances from each other, on every side of the edifice, and the gas pipes are almost all fixed. The bells, fifteen in number, and weighing above 100 tons, have been in the tower some days. They are so arranged that they can be played in three different keys. The key in which they are set is "E" flat; by the introduction of "A" natural they can be played in "B" flat, and by "D" flat being introduced, they can be played in the key of "A" flat. The tunes to be played besides "God save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia," have not yet been finally determined. It is intended, if possible, to have a tune played which was a favourite with Sir Thomas Gresham, and composed by Morley, one of his most intimate friends. The entire machinery of the clock is considered the finest specimen of mechanism of the sort extant. It cost £2000 for the manufacturing of the tools alone, but which it is stated will be available for any similar work.

Billingsgate Ward.—Mr. Thomas Sidney, of Ludgate-hill, was on Thursday elected Alderman of Billingsgate Ward, in the room of Anthony Brown, Esq., who resigned on his election as City Chamberlain. Mr. Sidney's proposer was Mr. Peek, and his seconder Mr. Bower. There being no other candidate, Mr. Sidney was elected as a matter of course.

Election of an Alderman for the Ward of Portsoken.—The nomination for an alderman of the ward of Portsoken, in the room of Mr. Thomas Johnson, resigned, took place on Wednesday. The candidates are Francis Graham Moon, Esq., one of the present Sheriffs, and David Salomons, Esq., who lately filled the office of Sheriff of London. Mr. Scales has resigned. Mr. Wood proposed Mr. Moon, and Mr. Phillips seconded the nomination. Mr. Hall proposed Mr. Salomons. Mr. Scales, jun., seconded the nomination. The Lord Mayor inquired if there was any other candidate to propose, and no answer being given, Mr. Sheriff Moon said, he came amongst them as an independent man—he was called a Tory, but he did not consider the office of alderman a political one. He was a preserver of every thing that was good, and a reformer of everything bad. (Cheers.) He was well known in the ward from his boyhood. Whatever might be the result of the election, he should feel the same respect for the high character of Mr. Salomons as he had always entertained. If returned, he should endeavour to do his duty honestly, independently, and impartially. Mr. Salomons said he was a magistrate for the counties of Kent and Sussex, and therefore acquainted with the magisterial duties. He owed his appointment to the political party to which he adhered, viz., the Whigs. (Hear, hear, hear.) He thought at the present day it was too much to say that a person of the Jewish persuasion was unfit to administer justice. He thought his public character qualified him to hold any office in the power of his fellow-citizens to give him. (Hear, hear.) He was an Englishman born, and had as great a regard for the welfare and honour of the country as any one he was addressing; and he trusted no technical point of form would prevent him from taking an office of honour if he should be elected. (Loud cheers.) He was perfectly willing to sign a declaration consistent with his conscience, and no other declaration ought to be required of him.—The Lord Mayor took a show of hands, when a considerable majority were held up for Mr. Salomons. His lordship declared the election, on a show of hands, to be in favour of that gentleman; upon which a poll was then demanded by Mr. Moon. At half-past four o'clock the numbers for the day were—For Mr. David Salomons, 81; and for Mr. Sheriff Moon, 57; being a majority for the former of 24. On Thursday the Lord Mayor, at twelve o'clock, adjourned the poll till Friday, as he was compelled to attend the election for Billingsgate Ward. The numbers at that hour were—For Mr. Salomons, 132; for Mr. Moon, 94: Majority, 38.—The poll closed finally yesterday, in favour of Mr. Salomons, the majority for that gentleman being 32. The numbers were—for Salomons, 168; Moon, 136.

Albert Park.—The Earl of Lincoln has directed Mr. Page and Mr. Thomas Cubitt to survey and lay out Battersea-fields for a park, to be called Albert Park. They have received instructions to plan an ornamental piece of water for a bathing place, to be screened with plantation. There will be a carriage drive from Battersea-bridge to Nine Elms, in front of the river. Chelsea College, from this park, will appear to great advantage.

The Late Sir Astley Cooper.—A monument and statue have, within the last few days, been erected in St. Paul's Cathedral, to the memory of the late Sir Astley Cooper, the eminent surgeon. It was raised by subscription, confined to the members of the profession of which he was so valuable and valued a member. The greater proportion of the donors were pupils of Sir Astley Cooper. The statue, exclusive of the pedestal, is eight feet high, and the likeness is considered a good one.

The Proposed Hospital in Blackfriars.—On Monday a numerous meeting of the inhabitants of the parishes of St. Bride's, Fleet-street; St. Anne's, and St. Andrew's, Blackfriars; and Bridewell precincts, was held at Radley's Hotel, New Bridge-street, for the purpose of taking measures to prevent the contemplated establishment of an infirmary for the cure of cutaneous diseases, at the house, 25, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, formerly occupied by Mr. Barber, the solicitor. Mr. W. F. Delane took the chair, and in the course of his address stated that in the house at which it was intended to have the infirmary the means of accommodation were extremely small. It had been calculated by the projectors of the institution that they would have 500 patients a week, all of whom would have to be in attendance nearly every morning. As it was impossible that all could be accommodated at once, a large majority of them would have to wander about the adjacent streets, or to take refuge under the porticos of the neighbouring houses. Resolutions affirmatory of the danger to the interests and health of the parishioners to be apprehended from the infirmary were agreed to, and a committee was appointed to carry out the object for which the meeting was convened.

London Missionary Society.—On Wednesday a meeting of the friends of this society was held at Exeter Hall, to celebrate the 50th year of the society's existence. The platform was filled with dissenting ministers from all parts of the country, and some clergymen. In the body of the hall there were upwards of 4000 persons. Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Bart., took the chair, and was supported by Mr. Pritchard, late consul at Tahiti, the Rev. E. Bickersteth, M.A., rector of Watton; Dr. Vaughan, president of the Lancashire Independent College; Dr. Jenkyn, principal of Coward College, London; Dr. Collison, Dr. Leifchild, Messrs. Sherman, James, Callow, Jay, Blackburn, Parsons, Harris, &c. A resolution, expressive of gratitude to Providence for the favour bestowed on the society during the last fifty years, was moved by the Rev. E. Bickersteth, M.A., rector of Watton; seconded by Dr. Bunting, president of the Wesleyan Conference, and carried unanimously. Dr. Leifchild moved the second resolution, deploring the persecutions of the Christians in the islands of Madagascar and Tahiti, and expressing towards them cordial sympathy and prayerful solicitude; also condemning the conduct of France towards the Queen of Tahiti. Fifty years ago this society had only three missionaries, now it had 700; then there was one station, now there were 85, with various preaching places around them. Since its formation a million and a half sterling had been expended, chiefly the contributions of British Christians. The resolution, having been seconded by Dr. Hamilton, was carried. A subscription on behalf of the society was commenced, and £4000 were announced.

The Proposed Improvements in Westminster.—Considerable improvements have been under the consideration of Government, to be effected in the neighbourhood of Westminster. The houses of a notorious character are to be taken down, and a most excellent improvement, not only morally but sanatorily, will be effected. It was in Orchard-street that Oliver Cromwell had one of his palaces; but in those days Palmer's village was close beside it, and was the seat of gentlemen's country houses. In James-street, where Lady Dacre's almshouses now stand, Lady Dacre had her residence, and this by her will has been devoted to the erection, many years since, of one of the first institutions in England, being nearly equal to that of Christ's Hospital in the city of London. Peter-street derives its name from having been built on the grounds upon which formerly stood a splendid mansion belonging to an ancestor of the present Lord Petre. Lady Dacre left to the City an estate of between two and three acres of ground, and that called Palmer's village, which has been occupied in small tenements for a number of years. The whole of this space is to form a part of the new street from Westminster Abbey to Buckingham Palace.

British Porcelain.—Mr. Smith, of Conduit-street, has just completed fo a Russian nobleman, a superb Dinner and Dessert Service of Porcelain, manufactured at his Works in Staffordshire. The service extends to 300 pieces, and the pattern comprises exquisitely painted bouquets of flowers, and splendid ultramarine, relieved with gold in devices of truly classic taste. The forms of the several pieces are very novel and very beautiful: those of the tureens, compotiers, &c., have the best characteristics of the antique gracefully combined; and the effect of the whole is so creditable a specimen of British skill as to satisfy the most sceptical of the tasteless preference too often extended to Continental manufactures in this branch of art.

Extensive Seizure.—A seizure of foreign watches and jewellery was made on Saturday from a dealer in Greek-street, Soho, by a landing waiter, lately appointed, named Griffiths, of the estimated value of upwards of £2000. The watches consist of 126 gold and 30 silver, with upwards of 1400 gold and silver keys, rings, brooches, &c. This branch of contraband trade has lately been carried on most extensively through the medium of the steamers running to the continental ports, and from the small compass occupied by such wares, the utmost vigilance is too often eluded.

IRELAND.

THE CONGRATULATORY DINNER TO O'CONNELL.

The dinner to congratulate O'Connell and his fellow-traversers took place on Thursday week (a report of which appeared in a late edition of last week), at the Music Hall, Dublin. Nothing of a very remarkable character occurred. Between 700 and 800 persons were present. Mr. O'Connell sat on the right of the chairman, W. S. O'Brien, M.P., and to his right sat the Bishop of Ardagh, Right Rev. Dr. Higgins. On the left of the chair sat the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, next him Lord Ffrench and the Bishop of Meath, Right Rev. Dr. Cantwell. After the health of the Queen, which was given with all the honours, the chairman proposed the "Health of O'Connell and the Repeal of the Union." The toast excited great enthusiasm. Mr. O'Connell, in his speech of acknowledgment for the toast, urged every one to renewed exertion for Repeal, and spoke in a triumphant tone of the prospects of the Repealers. He said there should be no rest from agitation, till Ireland was righted. Mr. John O'Connell, Dr. Gray, Mr. Steele, and other traversers, responded to the compliments paid to them as fellow-prisoners of O'Connell; the Rev. Dr. Cantwell, prelate; Mr. O'Hea; Dr. Macnally, the Catholic Bishop of Clogher; the celebrated priest, the Rev. Thomas Maguire; Mr. Grattan, M.P., the Lord Mayor, Caleb Powell, Esq., M.P., Mr. Staunton, and Lord Ffrench, subsequently addressed the assembly, which broke up about 12 o'clock. Among the toasts were "The Healths of Lords Denman, Cottenham, and Campbell." "The Catholic Hierarchy, and Clergy of Ireland," and the "Protestant Patriots of Ireland."

Mr. O'Connell's speech was infinitely inferior in importance, or at least in humour, to that of the Rev. T. Maguire, the parish priest of Ballinamore. The rev. gentleman discoursed in such an epigrammatical and caustic vein, that we cannot resist the temptation of making a few extracts from his speech. So far as the art of dealing out denunciations against opponents is concerned, we think Mr. Maguire is scarcely inferior to his great prototype. The rev. gentleman said, "the Queen can do no wrong, according to the principles of the British constitution; but I know well what wrong a daring, stiff-necked, base, and truculent Ministry, backed by an infamous Tory majority, can do. (Cheers.) We are told by the highest authority that can be quoted—an inspired authority—that no man that ever lived could tame the tongue: there is not a word about women in the text. (Laughter.) The sacred writer positively tells you, that though you may tame the lion and the tiger—and Pliny himself declares that even the adder has been tamed—but yet we are told by the holy and inspired writer, that there never yet was a man who was able to tame his tongue. We all know that Chief Injustice Pennefather could not tame his tongue. (Laughter and cheers.) We all know that Sir J. Graham (groans), who is my political father, for it was he who made a Repealer of me (laughter)—we all know that he could not tame his tongue, an instance of which we had in his saying that the Papists of Ireland had arrived at the maximum of concession. (Hear, hear, and groans.) We all know that Lord Stanley (groans) could not sometimes tame his tongue, particularly when O'Connell was concerned, and when he had a tyrant majority at his back to cheer him and halloo him on. But O'Connell, with a good cause, and superior temper, had often brought the little eloquent, but, at the same time, gabbling and intemperate Stanley, to his senses. (Hear, and cheers.) Gentlemen, I believe you will all admit that Lord Lyndhurst could not hold his tongue with his "aliens," &c. The sentence is too well known to require being repeated. (Hear, hear, and groans.) I now ask you if the licking, fawning, sycophantic, Lord Brougham and Vox, for he is now Vox et præterea nihil, will ever be able to hold his tongue? (Hear, hear, and groans.) I recollect in my boyish classics a sentence which struck me very forcibly as describing a man who had lost all that he had possessed in the world. It was vox hominum sonat. The voice is all that remains of the man—all that remains of the once eminent Henry Brougham is the poor empty Vox. The pretty-faced, beautiful-visaged Lord Brougham, has now become, not the glory, but the shame, of the country and of the Legislature; but paulò majora canemus. I suppose you now think that I am coming down to Mr. T. B. C. Smith. (Groans and laughter.) Facilis descensus Averni; and though I expose myself to the danger of being frightened by him, I will not hesitate from mentioning the General Attorney who is so by patent, and who has more Christian names than Christian virtues. (Cries of Hear, hear, and loud laughter.) John Bull has been lately wrestling with France, but we kept pulling, and dragging, and nipping him, until he was at last brought upon his knees, when he cried out Peccavi, for fear of Ireland. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) Therefore I say, as John Bull eats three times as much as he ought, he requires five times more sleep than we are disposed to give him. But, let him give us the large dose of justice that we demand, and we will allow him to rest in peace, and it can then be said of him that justitia et pax osculatæ sunt, "justice and peace have embraced each other." And remember, gentlemen, that although we deny England peace, we refuse her war. (Cheers.) And why do we refuse her war? Believe me it is not from fear. (Cheers.) You will recollect—at all events the Liberator will recollect—that at Castlebar I offered to meet any force they could bring into Ireland, on three months' notice. It was not then convenient for them to prosecute me, because I would be my own counsel, and would have spoken some wholesome truths, which they might not like to hear—truths which, though they might be unwise for me to speak, might be good for my country. (Cheers.) The reason why we are quiet is this—we are united and schooled by O'Connell, and determined to take his advice." (Cheers.) Mr. Maguire then referred to Sir Robert Peel: "I believe he has inflicted enough on this country. Of course I attack England through his person. I believe she has inflicted enough on us. Will Peel now give us a coercion bill to cure all? If he do—bathershin (laughter); if he do, I remind him of the motto—'Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return.' I would change the word 'dust' for 'dirt.' (Roars of laughter.) Peel himself is not inclined to be brought to such a state; but his party will make him wallow in the mire." (Hear.)

Here is the conclusion of Mr. Maguire's speech:—

"I tell you that the waters of Ireland are naturally good of themselves, but that, through social disorders, through religious bigotry, and through unfortunate sectarianism, those waters have been embittered. (Hear, hear.) The mantle of Elijah fell on Elias, the mantle of Moses has fallen on O'Connell. (Cheers.) He is destined to deliver the children of the promise, long as they are labouring under the proud court of Pharaoh. (Renewed cheers.) I will tell you what—he, by a powerful and uninterrupted agitation, has given the waters a healthy taste. He has purified them by agitation, and by a certain Attic salt, known well to England. By this salt he has purified them in such a manner as that the Orangemen are beginning to come to them. (Hear.) They are no longer the putrid, muddy, and semi-asphaltic waters they once were; but they are becoming pure and healthy. O'Connell has invented a moral screw. (Hear, hear.) Talk to me of your steam! Talk to me of your atmospheric attraction and power! Talk to me, sir, of the great original Archimedean screw! But O'Connell has invented one stronger than all the others; for, by means of his moral screw, he says to the navy of England, 'Go,' and it goeth; and to the army of England, 'Come,' and it cometh. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) O'Connell says to the Rhadamanthus—'You want to preserve a kind of amphibious or dubious connexion in the territories of Queen Pomare; I say, come down here, get into the harbour of Kingstown, and then take the puff up, and make a show of yourself at Waterford, a spectacle to men and angels'—then O'Connell begins to work his moral screw again, and says to the rest of the navy of England—'Ah, you want to be before Tangier, and you want to be before Mogadore; be off instantly, and into the harbour of Cove.' (Hear, and laughter. Thus he commands the navy and army of England, and thus he speaks to every Power in Europe, by means of his moral screw. I have been through every part and parish of the country; and I say there are seven millions Repealers, and out of that number I will give you one thousand altogether of place-hunters, and expectants, and men afraid to speak out. Well, then, there are seven millions Repealers, and half a million Protestants, who are Repealers also, for unquestionably we shall have half a million Protestants. That will settle the question. All you have to do is to give a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether—to abide by the Liberator—to take his advice—not to go an inch to the right or to the left without that advice, and Repeal is certain."

A Proposal from the Dublin Corporation.—A special meeting of the Corporation was convened by the Lord Mayor for Wednesday, to consider a proposition from a leading Conservative member of the Town Council, that the British Parliament should assemble in Dublin every third year.

The Repeal Association.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday was again much crowded, but the proceedings possessed very little interest. In the absence of Mr. W. S. O'Brien, the chair was taken by Mr. F. Cumming. Some small sums were received towards the "Independent Fund," and after an address from Mr. Kelly and Mr. H. Grattan, Mr. O'Connell made another speech, which, however, deserves but little attention. The tone of it completely confirms the view we took last week of the conciliatory disposition of Mr. O'Connell, in spite of his denunciations after his release. It is only necessary to advert to two points, the Clontarf meeting, and the decision of the committee in regard to the Preservative Society. The first of these proposals is negatived, and the second is in abeyance. Mr. O'Connell observed that, on the last day of meeting, it was referred to a committee to report whether it would be proper to hold the Clontarf meeting. There was an object in holding it, as it was a constitutional privilege; for they alleged that they were entitled to meet, and that the number did not make a difference, provided they came unarmed, and assembled with peaceable intentions. But they had vindicated that privilege, and it was not now necessary to hold it. And he, for one, considered that if that principle had not been vindicated he would be for holding it at all hazards. The committee had ordered him to report that it was their unanimous opinion "that the Clontarf meeting should not be held." His next topic was with reference to "the Preservative Society," with regard to which the committee begged leave to sit again upon the inquiry. His two propositions, therefore, were, that further time should be given to consider the nature of the Preservative Society, and that they should avoid the least approach to any violation of the law. Further time was necessary, because the step to be taken must be considered and entered upon more deliberately. Three or four prosecutions which had been directed against him were failures (cheers), and it was a solemn duty which he owed to the people of Ireland to keep them from any violation of the law. (Cheers.) He therefore agreed with the committee that it was right to deliberate upon this subject, and that they should have further time to consider their report. (Cheers.) It was right that people's minds should ripen upon the subject of the difference between the simple absolute repeal, and the repeal with a tendency to admit principles of federalism. There was, he was happy to say, a great growing spirit of nationality in a large portion of the party calling themselves Conservatives. They were beginning to consider the question of the restoration of the Irish Parliament. (Cheers.) It was therefore necessary to undeceive the public mind, and make them understand that the association received Federalist and Repealer alike. There could be no federalism without the repeal of the Union Act, and that Federalists and Repealers sought alike. The repeal rent for the week was announced at £600 12s. 6d.

Recordership of Cork.—Mr. Forsayeth has received his appointment to the recordership of Cork.

Imprisonment for Debt.—On Wednesday, J. E. Hyndman, one of the City coroners, held an inquest in the Four Courts Marshalsea, on the body of Mr. James Morris Drought, who died in that prison on the preceding day, after an incarceration of upwards of eighteen months, for a debt of £8! It appeared by the evidence, that some time after his imprisonment he took to his bed, from which he has never since risen; he was of a highly respectable family, and upwards of seventy years old. This is the fourth life that has fallen a sacrifice in the same prison within a short period. It may not be out of place here to inquire when the unfortunate imprisoned debtors of Ireland may hope for relief, by the extension of the Insolvent Debtors Act (passed last session for the relief of English debtors) to this country? England and Scotland enjoy the advantage of this measure, but not Ireland! Is this justice? If the act were extended to Ireland, hundreds of persons now suffering incarceration would be liberated, and enabled to apply their exertions for the benefit of their now starving families, besides the immense saving of expense in supporting debtors' prisons in the country. If the measure were now in force, there would not be a dozen persons remaining in the above prison whose debts exceed £20, and, consequently, it would not be necessary to maintain that establishment at its present enormous expense.—Dublin Freeman.

The Alleged Plate Robbery by an Officer.—A letter has been written by Lieutenant Puddicombe to a brother officer, dated Haulbowline, near Cork, in which he states that, since his liberation on bail, he has been called upon by Lieutenant-Colonel Burton to tender his immediate resignation, a demand with which he refused to comply, as he felt confident that he should, at his approaching trial, which was to take place in Dublin, be enabled to prove satisfactorily his complete and entire innocence of the foul crime laid to his charge.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE LATEST NEWS RESPECTING HER MAJESTY.

Blair Athol, Wednesday.

The Queen took her usual walk this morning in the grounds of the castle, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Princess Royal on her Highland pony. Her Majesty, it is said, spends at least ten hours every day in the open air, and the pure and bracing air of the Highlands has had the most beneficial effect upon her health.

A large supply of silk, woollen, and velvet tartans, of the finest texture and most novel patterns, has been sent up within the last two days for her Majesty's inspection.

Another excursion to Glen Tilt is projected for this afternoon.

The Queen and her illustrious consort, accompanied by the ladies of her suite, Lord Glenlyon, Lord C. Wellesley, &c., went yesterday down Glen Tilt to the Forest Lodge, his Royal Highness Prince Albert driving the pony phaeton. There being no post from London yesterday, the Queen set out at the unusually early hour of two o'clock, and the royal party reached the Lodge at half-past three, where the Queen and her suite partook of luncheon, which had been sent on in the morning by Lord Glenlyon. The foresters had been sent out at an early hour to drive in the deer, but the wind being unfavourable they were extremely shy, and after some hours spent in endeavouring to come within shot, during which her Majesty rode with Prince Albert some distance on her Highland pony, the sportsmen were obliged to return to the lodge, the entire sport of the day being a hind shot by Lord Glenlyon. The Queen returned to Blair Castle at seven o'clock.

The Earl of Aberdeen left the castle this morning for Laggan, the seat of the Marquis of Abercorn, to whom the noble earl is about to pay a short visit. He will return to Blair Castle to-morrow night.

It is said that one of the huntsmen in charge of the otter hounds has been dispatched to Haddo House to procure some otters, there being none in the neighbourhood of Blair, and the Prince having expressed a wish to witness the exciting sport of an otter hunt before leaving the Highlands.

It is now stated that the Queen will leave Blair Castle on Tuesday next, at half-past eight or nine o'clock, so as to arrive at Dundee between two and three in the afternoon, which will be within two hours of high water. Preparations were being made for a luncheon on a right royal scale for the Queen and her suite at Dundee, but I hear her Majesty will not alight, but go at once on board the royal yacht, which will proceed immediately down the Frith of Tay with the other steamers of the royal squadron.

Louis Philippe's Visit to England.—Louis Philippe was to leave Paris on Wednesday evening for the Château d'Eu, preparatory to his departure for England. He was to be accompanied to Eu by M. Guizot and Admiral Mackau, who will also attend his Majesty to Windsor.

The Queen Dowager.—We hear that the visit of her Majesty the Queen Dowager to Earl and Countess Brownlow, at Belton House, near Grantham, has been postponed from the 2nd until the 10th of October, in consequence, it is understood, of her Majesty being invited to meet his Majesty the King of the French at Windsor Castle.

Banquet to Sir Robert and Lady Sale in Liverpool.—On Thursday evening a splendid banquet was given to Sir R. and Lady Sale at the Town Hall, Liverpool, the Mayor (T. Sands, Esq.) in the chair. After the usual loyal toasts, the Mayor proposed the health of General Sir Robert Sale, who he said had filled Europe with his fame, and handed down the British flag to the world's approbation. He alluded to the more than ordinary difficulties the Gallant General had had to encounter, and spoke in a very touching manner of the conduct of his heroic wife, a captive to a barbarian. He conclued by proposing "The health of Sir Robert Sale."—Drunk with three times three. Sir Robert replied in a very concise manner, but in his usually blunt and effective way; and after many remarks illustrative of the the gratitude he felt for his kind reception, concluded by proposing the health of his Worshipful the Mayor. The health of the Bishop of the diocese followed, and was responded to by Dr. Tattershall. The company broke up, evidently highly gratified with the delightful entertainment provided, and the cordiality and kind feeling that prevailed.

Richmond Races, Thursday.—The Easby Stakes of 25 sovs. each, were won by Sir. J. Gerard's Pluto, beating the Cure, and two others. The Two Years' Stakes of 30 sovs. each, were won by Wynyard beating Alaric. The Gold Cup of 150 guineas, was won by Mr. Salvin's Alice Hawthorn. The Wright Stakes of 5 sovs. were won by Jinglepot. The Consolation Plate was won in four heats by Captain Harcourt's f by Inheritor, beating Epilogue and two others.

The Dublin Corporation and the Irish Parliament.—On Wednesday a special meeting of the Town Council of the Corporation of Dublin was held, which was very fully attended, to discuss the following proposition of Dr. Maunsell:—"That an humble address be presented to the Queen, praying that her Majesty be graciously pleased to hold her court, and to summon an Imperial Parliament, to meet at least once in every three years, in her loyal city of Dublin. Also that she will recommend to the consideration of Parliament the propriety of making such provision as shall secure that the same be done in future times." Dr. Maunsell supported his motion in a long speech, in the course of which he contended that it was calculated to serve Ireland. If agreed to it would decrease absenteeism, and bring capital to Ireland. Dr. Maunsell also argued that it was no novelty to change the locality of Parliament. The speech was listened to with great attention, but the motion did not even find a seconder, and it therefore of course fell to the ground. Mr. O'Connell replied to some remarks of Dr. Maunsell, which personally concerned him, and in reference to the motion said, it was consolatory to see that in political matters they had now come to unanimity of sentiment. Things could not now remain as they are. (Cheers.) There must be a change. (Renewed cheers.) And God forbid that that change should be effected without the assent of men of all persuasions and all religions. He should consider it not a blessing but a curse, if it were forced on any one portion of the Irish people. He rejoiced to see—and every hour was telling him—that new combinations were about to be formed. Every assistance he could possibly give would meet more than half-way the exertions of those who sought for Ireland those advantages of which the Learned Doctor had been speaking. (Cheers.) He would give the Irish a Parliament once in three years, but he (Mr. O'Connell) liked to have one in Dublin every summer season. (Applause.) A spirit of unity was now beginning to manifest itself, and, in the course of a few weeks, he believed one great junction of all parties would take place totally devoid of religious partisanship—combining in love for the benefit of their common country. (Great cheering.)—[A very general feeling of disappointment was evinced that Dr. Maunsell's motion had found no seconder. It was understood that if it had, the repealers would not have opposed, and that the motion would have been carried without a dissenting voice.]

Mr. Belaney and the Mob in the North.—Last Wednesday week the mob set fire to a farmhouse where Mr. Belaney was residing, at the village of Northumberland, near Sunderland. When Belaney, who, with his brother and some friends had been enjoying themselves in the dining-room below, found that the house was in flames, he gave the alarm, and escaped with his party through the corn fields to the house of one of the witnesses on his trial, who keeps an inn in North Sunderland, where they remained incog. during the Thursday. On that evening, a post chaise was ordered from the Black Swan Inn, Alnwick, and proceeded to North Sunderland, with a Newcastle friend of Belaney; the post-chaise left Sunderland about four o'clock, with Belaney, his brother, and his solicitor, who travelled the coast road to Alnwick, where they arrived about seven o'clock on Friday morning. The people mustered strong at Alnwick to give him a salute at the Willow Tree, but the gig was immediately seen going with the solicitor and driver at a rapid pace, and got to the public house before the people arrived; his friend jumped from the gig, and Belaney got in and drove off, at a slashing pace, to Felton, nine miles from Alnwick, on the other side of which place, he left the gig and walked away. The driver brought the gig back to Alnwick. The mail coach took up Belaney about four miles from Felton, and conveyed him to Newcastle, where, it is supposed, he is now on a visit to a respectable tradesman. Belaney, when at the Willow Tree, looked most careworn, thin, dirty, and shabby, and appeared to feel greatly the effects of his confinement, and the reception he had received since his arrival in the north.

FOREIGN.

Projected Insurrection in Spain.—A letter from Bayonne of the 22nd instant, confirms the rumour of an intended movement, on a grand scale, of the Carlists of Navarre; money, and munitions of war, along with a large number of printed proclamations, having been for some time past in readiness. Colonel Jose Maria Ladron, the nephew of the Carlist General Santos Ladron, who was shot in Navarre, in 1833, by the Christino General Lorenzo, with a force of 400 to 500 men, was waiting an opportunity to commence the movement. Colonels Elcharte and Corteta, chiefs who are highly popular in Navarre, had undertaken the organisation of the Carlist forces in that province, when orders were received from General Balmacedo for the discontinuance of their preparations. The reason assigned for this unlooked-for hesitation is, the repugnance of Don Carlos to acts of violence, and a lingering hope that the succession may be adjusted by a marriage between the Prince of Asturias and Queen Isabella.

The Brazils.—By the brig Olive Branch, of Jersey, which has arrived at Falmouth from Bahia, with advices of August 1, we learn that the reports already published of the detention of the packet, and the cause being the pending treaty between Great Britain and the Brazils, are correct. The packet was hourly looked for at Bahia when the brig sailed. Accounts of the annexation of Monte Video were also received as authentic at Bahia, and it was reported that a force was in readiness to co-operate with Monte Video against Rosas' army. Exchange at Bahia, 25 d. Sugars falling.

THE QUEEN'S SECOND VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

[In renewing our illustrations of the Royal sojourn in Scotland, we have the extreme gratification to notify to our readers, that our artist, Mr. Landells, has been honoured by the Queen's commands to execute for her Majesty, two sketches of the Falls of Bruar, the scenery of which has been so much admired by the Royal visitor. We now continue our illustrated chronicle, from the late edition of our Journal of last week.]

BLAIR ATHOL, Wednesday.

A heavy shower of rain came on suddenly at one o'clock yesterday, and continued to fall in torrents for upwards of two hours. This necessarily compelled her Majesty to defer her drive until a late hour in the afternoon, and Prince Albert was also obliged to retreat from the moors above Bruar, where his Royal Highness was enjoying excellent sport. The rain ceased to fall at half-past three. As soon as the sun made his appearance the carriages were ordered to convey her Majesty to the Falls of Tummell. The Royal party left the castle in two carriages and four, preceded by outriders.

As on the previous occasion, when visiting the Pass, her Majesty addressed several questions to an old Highlander, named William Macdonald, who haunts this neighbourhood. The old man is exceedingly proud at having been selected by her Majesty to point out the beauties of his native land, and dilates with loquacious enthusiasm on being thus honoured by his Sovereign.

The postilions were then ordered to drive along the high road to Perth, and, on arriving at the bridle road which leads to the Falls of the Tummel, her Majesty alighted, and proceeded on foot to view the waterfall. Her Majesty walked at a rapid pace along this road, which is nearly a mile in length, and was not, as may be supposed, in a fit state for ladies, on account of the heavy rains which had lately fallen. Her Majesty, however, heeded neither the mud nor the loose gravel, but walked, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, Lord Glenlyon acting as cicerone. Lady C. Cocks, Lady Canning, and the other members of the royal suite were also of the party. On arriving at the confluence of the two rivers, where the Tummell first falls over the rocks into the Garry, her Majesty expatiated in enthusiastic language on this meeting of the waters.

(The Engraving at page 204, represents the romantic Falls.)

After having passed three quarters of an hour in viewing the beauties of this spot, and in the immediate neighbourhood, her Majesty walked back to the carriages and returned to the castle.

Her Majesty rose early this morning, and took her usual morning walk n the grounds, accompanied by the Prince and the Princess Royal. At eleven o'clock, her Majesty and the Prince, attended by two servants with led ponies, left the castle on foot, and, unattended by any of their suite, forded the river Garry, as seen in our illustration, attended by a Highland guide. The Queen was dressed in black, with a shepherd's plaid shawl, and looked remarkably well on the little white pony; Prince Albert wore a shooting-jacket, trowsers of shepherd's plaid, white hat and crape band. The Highlander wore a short grey jacket, and carried the Queen's parasol.

Her Majesty and the Prince, with their guide, then proceeded to climb the precipitous hill of Tulloch which overhangs the back of the castle. Her Majesty succeeded in attaining the summit of the rocky mountain, a work of much labour and some peril. It appears that instead of taking the ordinary pathway, the Queen took one much more steep and difficult of ascent, the Royal pair having to cross the stream of the Garry twice, as also several mountain burns and narrow ravines.

(The Engraving at page 204 shows the Royal pair on the crest of the hill.)

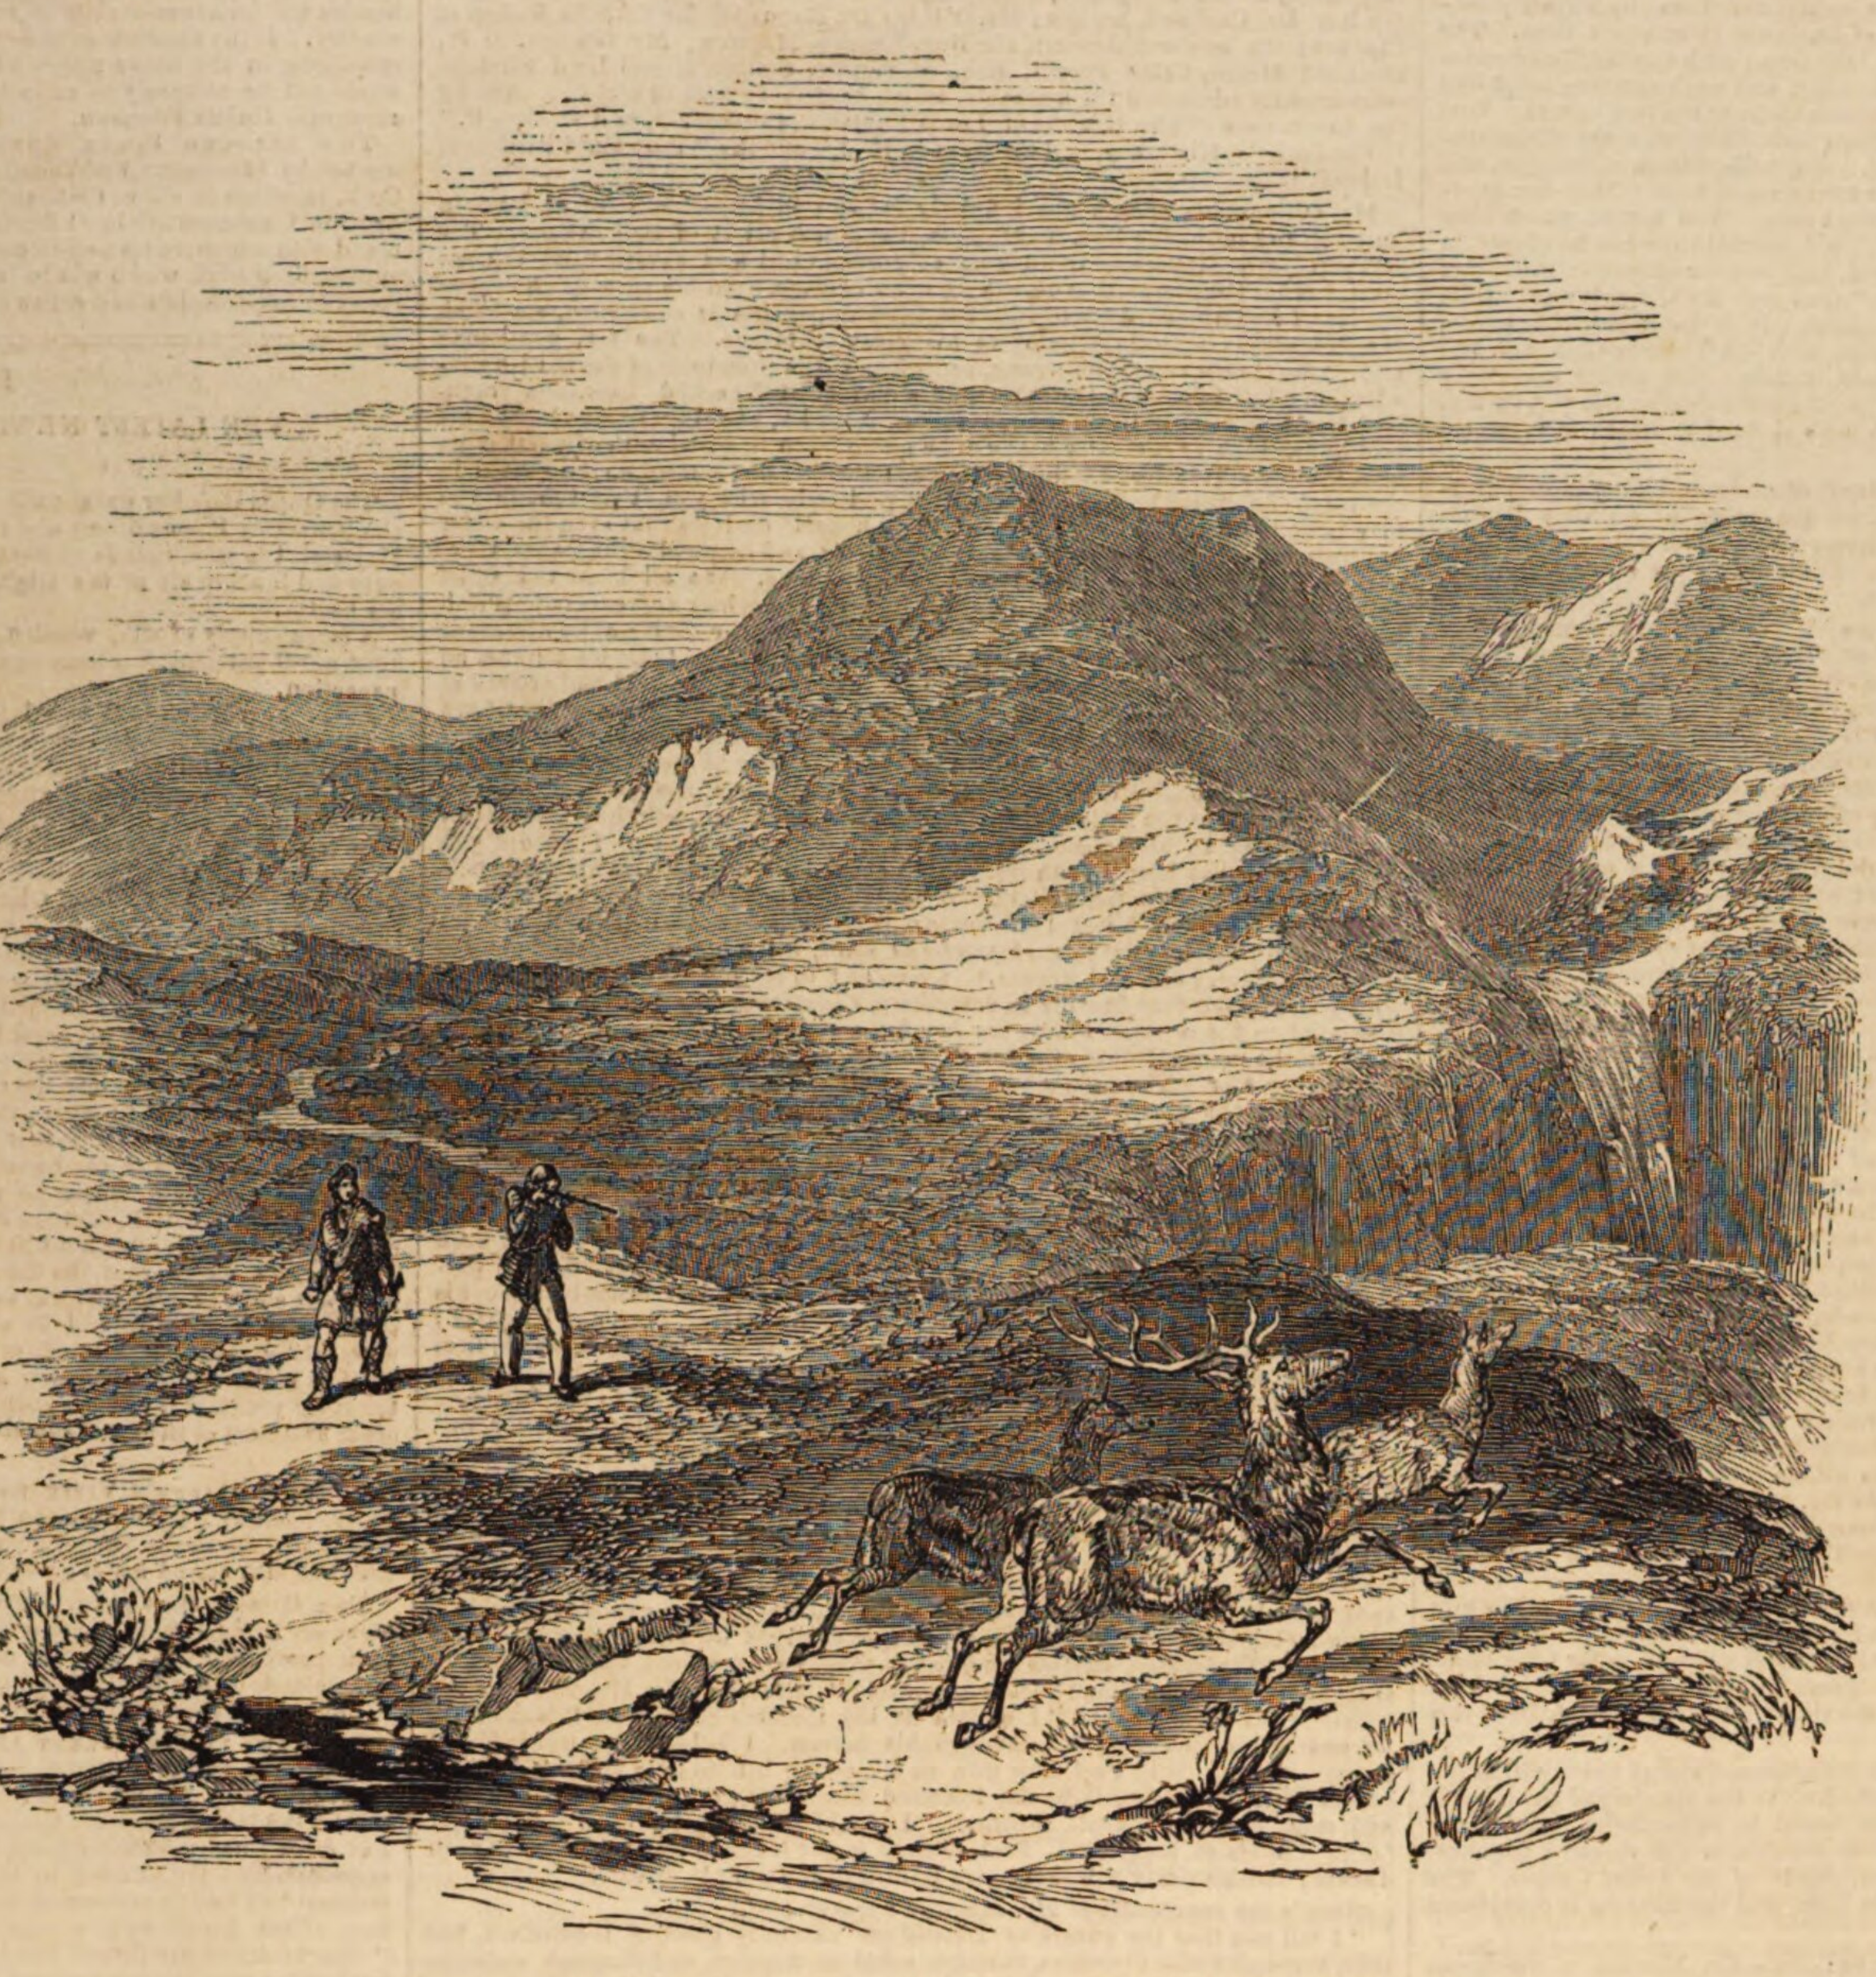
Her Majesty and the Prince, in their descent, mounted their ponies at the foot of the hill, and cantered back to the castle at twelve o'clock.

Her Majesty, we understand, is generally up, and sometimes walking in the grounds, as early as seven o'clock in the morning; she breakfasts between eight and nine, lunches at two, takes a carriage drive between three and four, and dines at eight. The intervals are spent in making short excursions, accompanied by some of her suite, to various points of interest within the policies. The Prince generally spends the earlier part of the day in shooting, accompanied by Lord Glenlyon, and several hardy Highlanders to carry the game.

The Princess Royal is taken out every day for walking and riding exercise. Her Royal Highness is a quick, lively, entertaining child, and it is said her remarks upon the persons and things passing under her notice are very amusing. It is stated that her Royal Highness can already repeat the names of all the hills in the neighbourhood. She has a meet companion in the young heir of Glenlyon, an interesting boy of her own age.

It seems to be certain that her Majesty will make an excursion to Loch Tummel and Loch Rannoch; but it is also talked of that she will visit Dunkeld, though that is not likely, at least till on her way back. It is, we understand, confidently expected at Dunkeld, but little is said about it at the castle.

Her Majesty continues her habits of early rising. At seven o'clock Peter Mackay, her piper, sounds the pibroch under the windows of the castle, when her Majesty rises, and all are expected to follow her example. Her Majesty has also given instructions that a bouquet of fresh-pulled heather shall be in her bedroom every morning, together with a bottle of pure water from a spring in Glen Tilt, famed for its crystal purity.



PRINCE ALBERT AND LORD GLENLYON DEER-STALKING AT ATHOL.

Her Majesty appears to have a great taste for things peculiarly Scottish. At Dunkeld, Moulinearn, and Blair, she tasted, and not only so, but, as the report goes, highly relished, the Athol brose which was proffered her; and oaten cake is an established and especial favourite. "Scotch broth," as English- men term it, is also in daily requisition at the royal table. It is even whispered that her Majesty is not altogether unacquainted with the mysteries of Scotch "haggis."

The Princess Royal, young though she be, is not slow in these things to imitate her royal mother. Not a child in all broad Scotland likes better to lunch on milk and oaten cake, or dine on broth. Meeting the young son of Lord Glenlyon, the other day, in the castle avenue, she told him how much she liked his tartan dress, and how it was the same as was worn by the Prince of Wales.

Perhaps, the most extraordinary circumstance connected with her Majesty's visit to this quarter is the entire absence of anything like popular excitement, or even curiosity. The number of strangers is extremely few, so few indeed, that when her Majesty drives out in the afternoon there are generally not more than 20 people who assemble on the road to see and salute her.

[Nothing occurred during the latter part of last week, to require any detailed notice.]

On Friday (the 20th) the Queen and Prince Albert, after breakfasting at half-past eight, left the castle soon after nine, on their ponies, attended by the servant (Sandy as he is called) who has guided them on former occasions. They proceeded through a thick plantation at the back of the castle, up a hill which lies in a north-easterly direction. They continued on that and the adjacent hills until nearly half-past eleven, at which hour they returned to the castle. After an early luncheon, they again left the castle, to go to Glen Tilt, a spot which appears to be particularly selected by her Majesty for her excursions.

The next day her Majesty went out in the grounds, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Princess Royal, and took her usual ride.

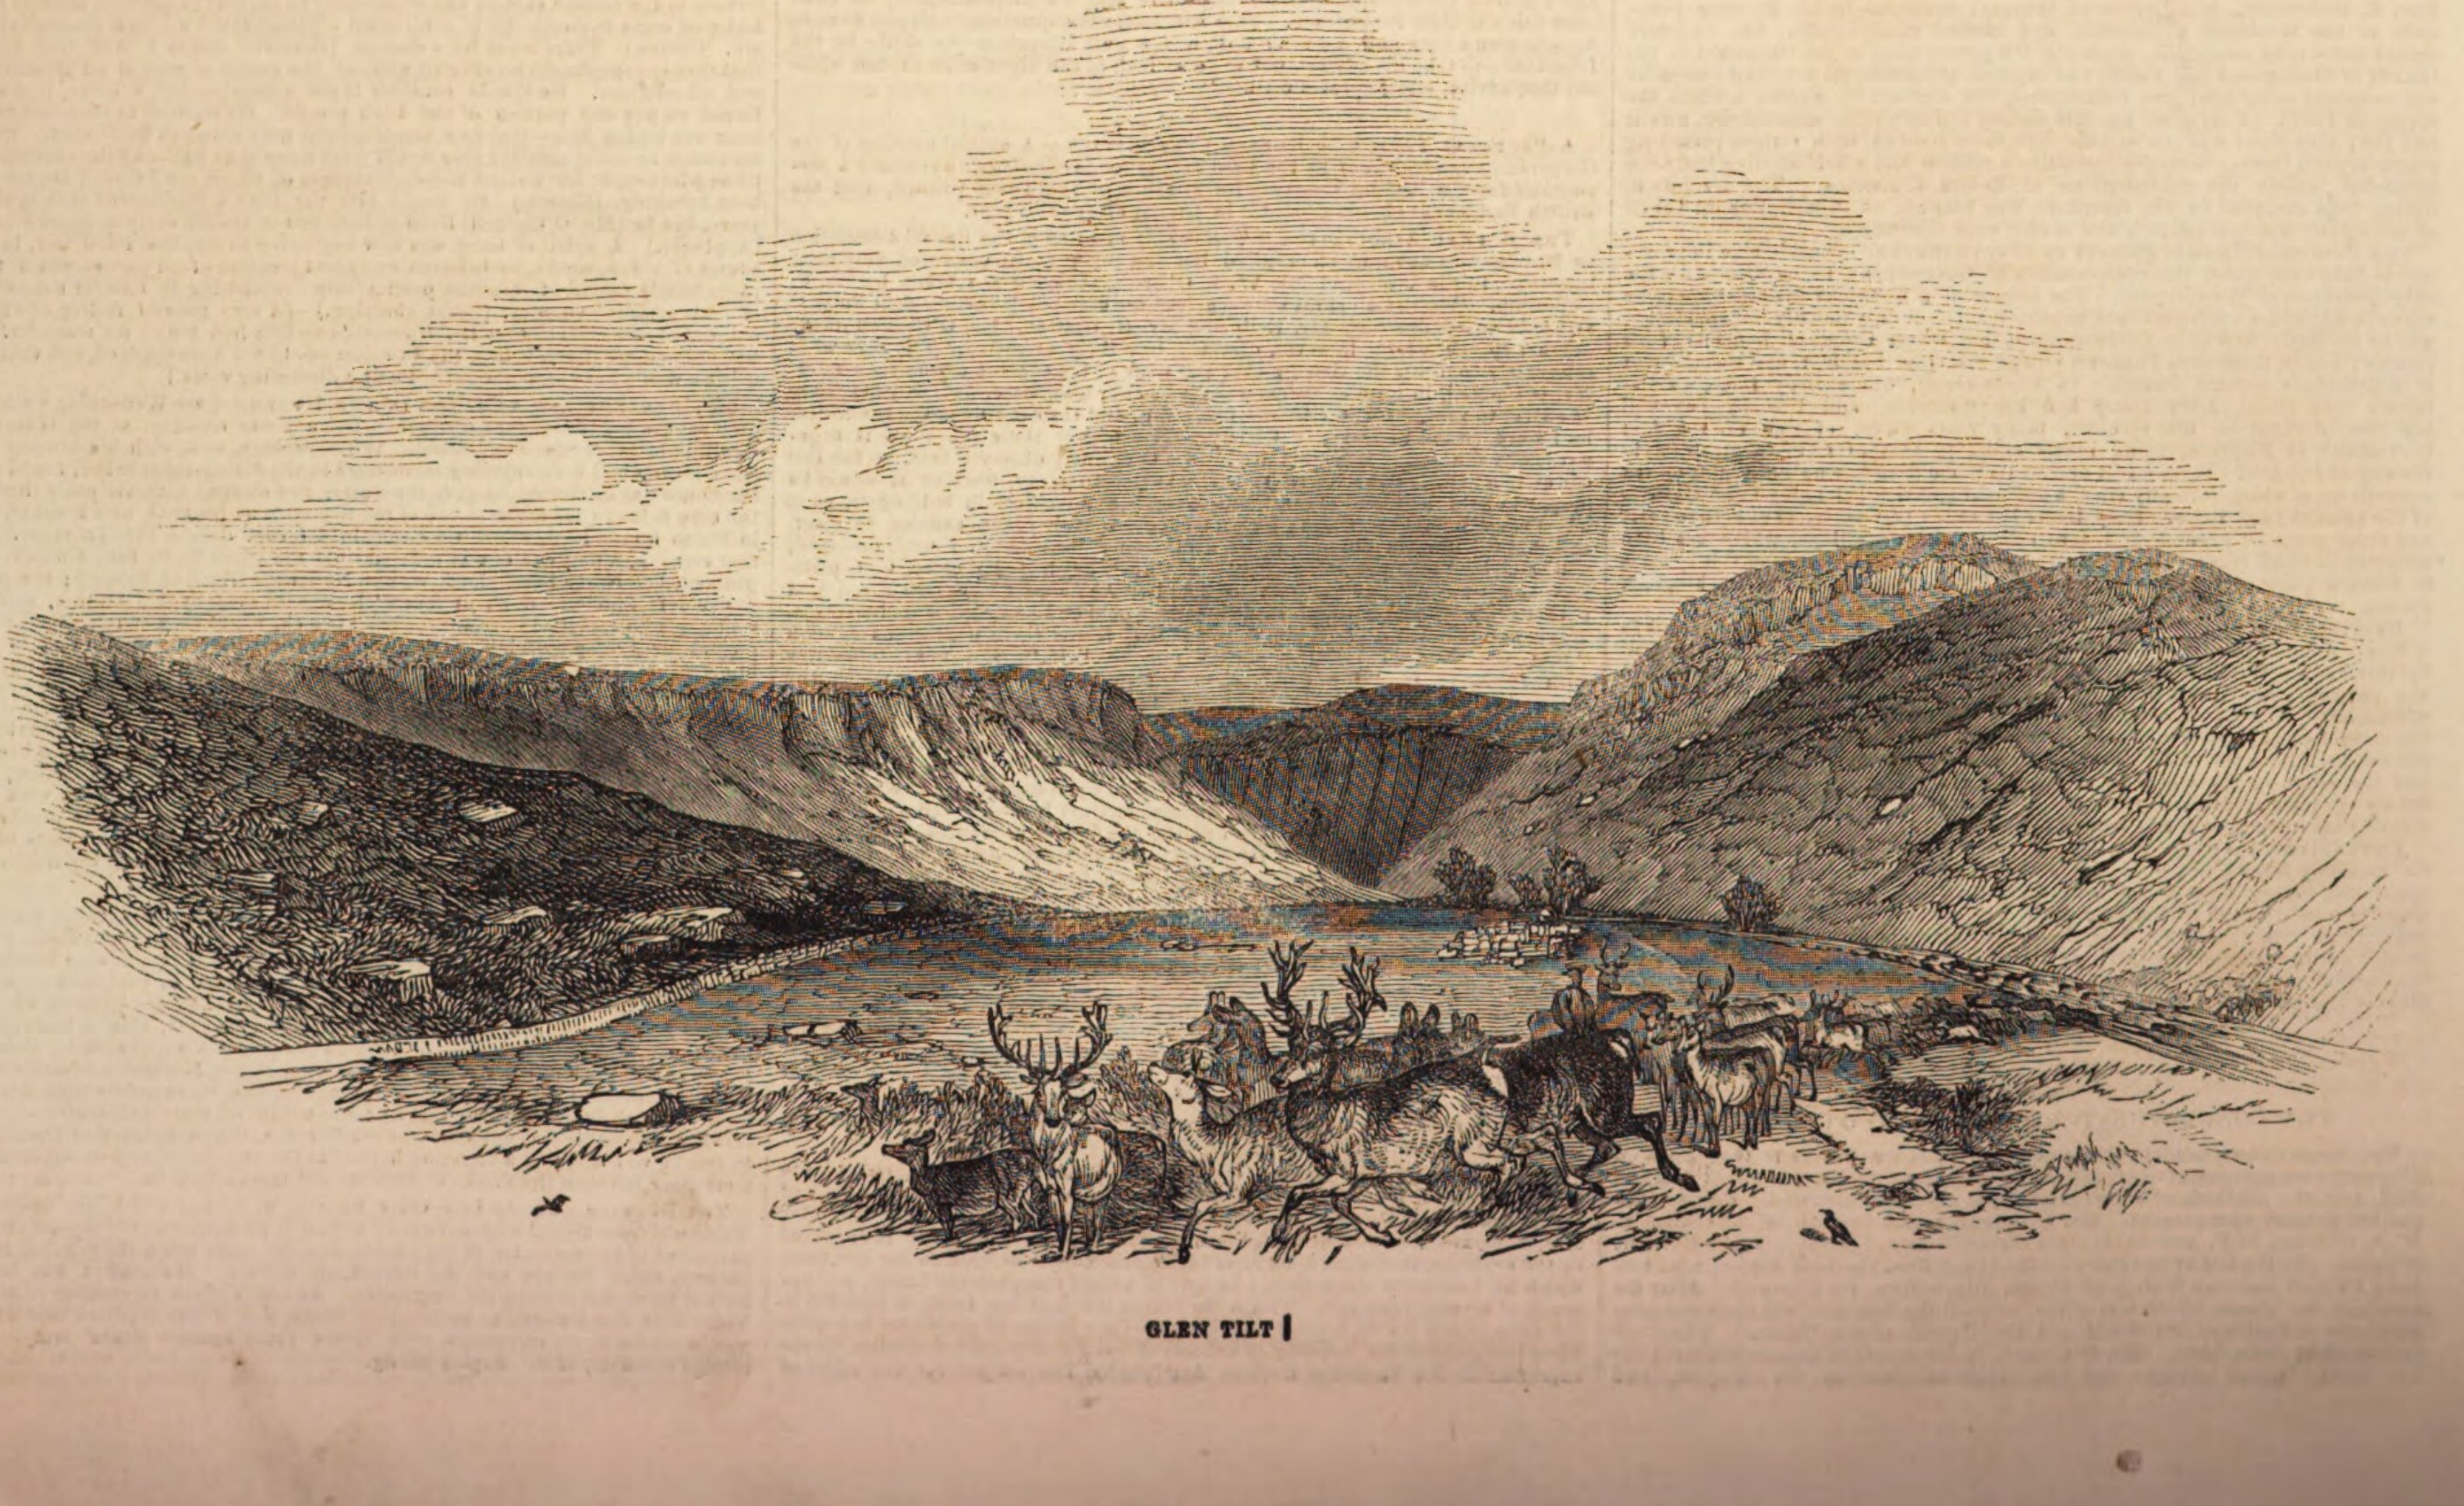
Her Majesty, who was always partial to equestrian exercise, appears to enjoy these rides amazingly, and so simple and unostentatious is the whole turn out, that it is difficult to persuade the strangers who come to Athol to obtain a sight of her Majesty, that the lady in a plain black dress and bonnet, and a shepherd's plaid shawl wrapped round her, mounted on a little ambling grey pony, is the Sovereign, with whom ideas of great pomp, state, and splendour have been associated in their minds.

The Marquis of Breadalbane has paid a visit to her Majesty, to request the Queen to visit Taymouth, but the invitation, although very pressing, was declined.

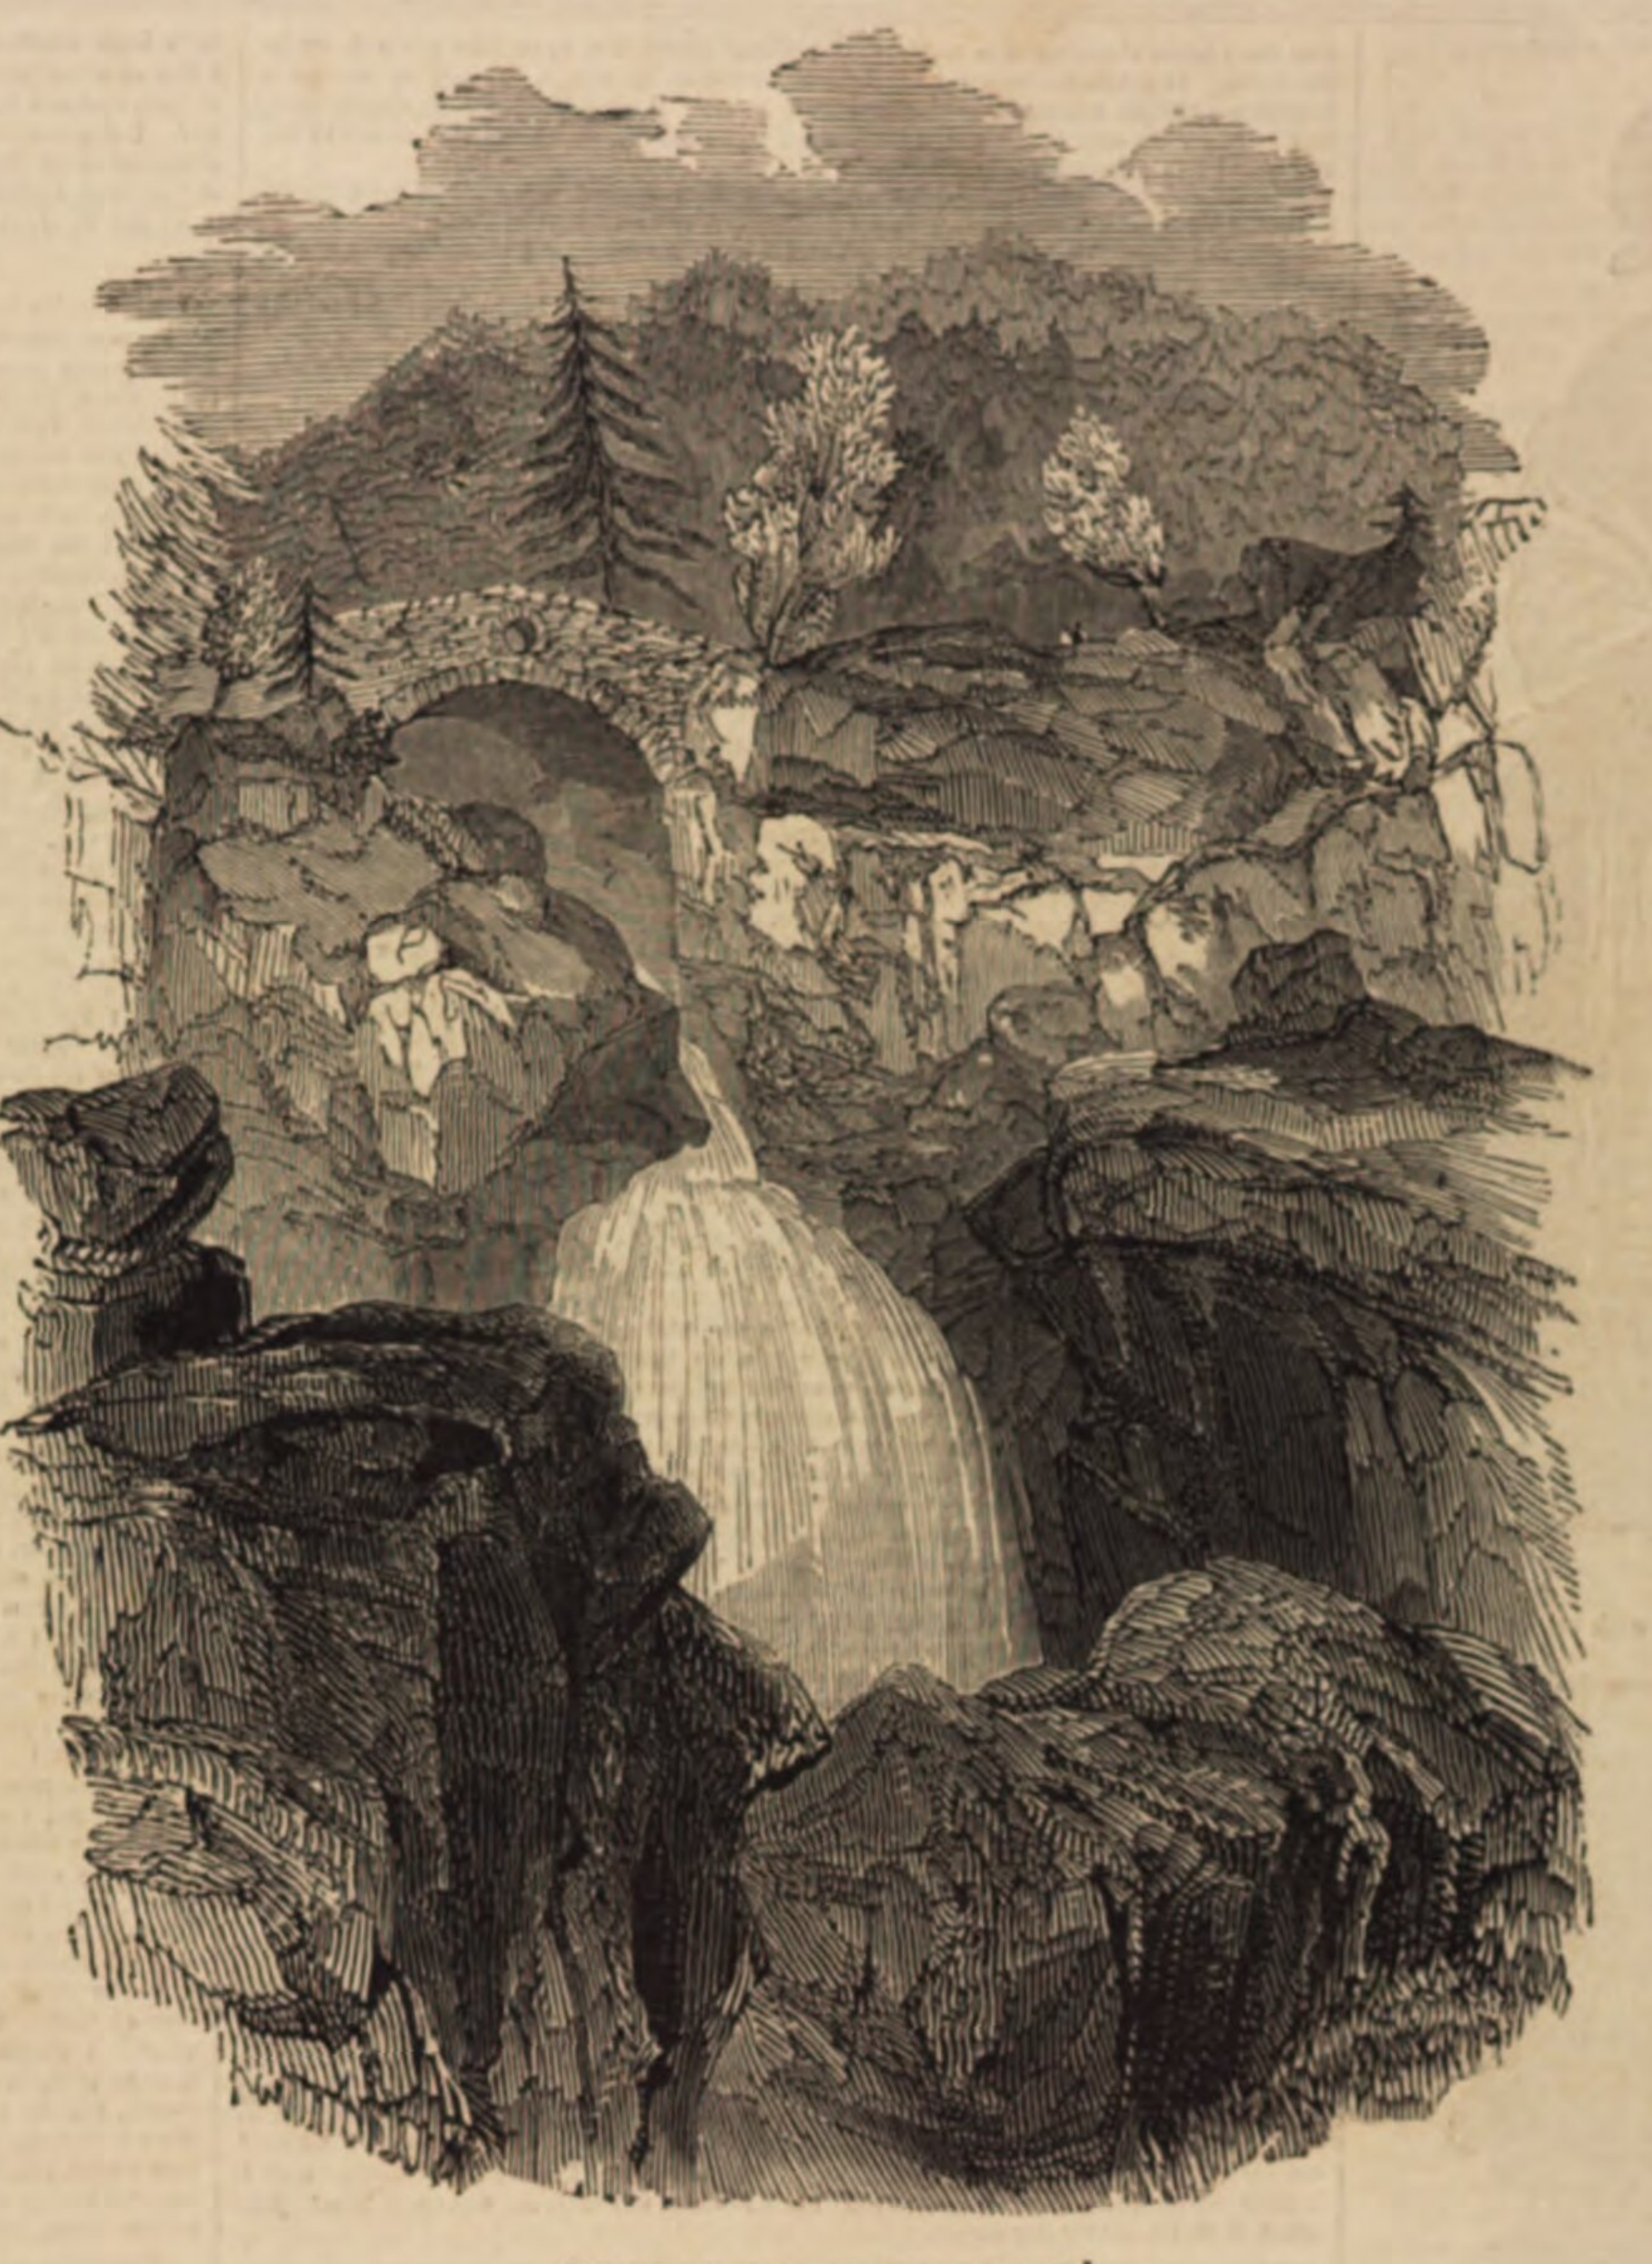
It is said that the restraint which the Queen voluntarily imposes upon herself, of not going to any great distance from the castle until after the arrival of the mail from the south, is one reason why no excursions to any great distance are contemplated. The despatches are generally delivered at the castle at three o'clock, and the Queen peruses those which are addressed to herself or submitted to her by Lord Aberdeen, dictating answers to such as require immediate attention, and a special messenger is in constant readiness to be sent off to London, in the event of any matter of pressing or urgent haste occurring.

Her Majesty writes almost every day to the Duchess of Kent and the Dowager Countess of Lyttelton, and is extremely punctual in attending to all the details of business, and signing any state papers that may be laid before her.

To show the complete freedom from all court formality which her Majesty has been enabled to establish in her Highland home, various little incidents which are almost daily occurring might be mentioned. One morning, about seven o'clock, a lady, plainly dressed, left the castle, who, though observed by the Highland guard on duty, was allowed to pass unnoticed, until after she had proceeded a considerable distance, when some one having discovered that it was the Queen, a party of the Highlanders immediately turned out as a royal body guard. Her



GLEN TILT.



[LOWER FALLS OF THE BRUAR.]

Majesty, however, signified her wish to dispense with their services, and they all returned to their stations. The Queen in the meanwhile moved onward through the castle grounds alone, until she reached the lodge, the temporary residence of Lord and Lady Glenlyon, where, upon calling, with the intention, as was understood, of making some arrangements as to a preconcerted excursion to the Falls of Bruar, she was informed that his lordship had not yet arisen. The surprise of the domestic may be conceived when her Majesty announced who was to be intimated as having called on his lordship. On her return, her Majesty having taken a different route, and finding herself bewildered by the various roads which intersect the grounds in every direction, applied to some reapers whom she met, to direct her to the castle by the nearest way. They, not being aware to whom they spoke, immediately did so, by directing her Majesty across one of the parks, and over a paling which lay before her; and which she at once passed, and reached the castle, a good deal amused, no doubt, with her morning's excursion.

On another occasion, the Queen and Lady Glenlyon having extended their walks a considerable distance up Glen Tilt, entered one of the gamekeeper's cottages, where they found no person except the gamekeeper's wife, he being himself on the hill with the Prince. They entered into conversation with the woman, and were soon furnished with a full account of all her little family arrangements, and also presented with a draught of goat's milk. On their leaving, she expressed her regret in a very homely way, that she did not happen to have any better fare to offer the ladies. It was only in the evening, on her husband's return, that she discovered who had been her guests in the morning.

One evening last week, two of the officers of the Athol Guard—the Hon. Mr. Drummond and the Master of Strathallen, had the honour of taking part in a game of whist with the Queen—an amusement that is generally introduced after the party have retired to the drawing-room. The Master of Strathallen wears the sword which his great granofather wielded at the Battle of Culloden, where he fell, and her Majesty, on learning the circumstance, made various inquiries relating to the history of the weapon, and the use made of it by his brave ancestor. After answering her Majesty's inquiries, young Strathallen is said to have added, with much gallantry, that he was ready to defend her Majesty, to the last drop of his blood, with the same good sword which had formerly been drawn against her royal ancestors.

BLAIR ATHOL, Sunday.

Early yesterday afternoon her Majesty left the castle, taking Lady Canning with her in the carriage. The Prince accompanied her Majesty, and the Earl of Liverpool, Lord Glenlyon, Lord Charles Wellesley, and Mr. Anson, followed on horseback. The royal party proceeded up the Glen towards the Forest-lodge, at which point it was expected the deer would be seen. Her Majesty's pony and guide had been sent on before, and when the party arrived at a place called Lachlass, about two miles on this side of the Forest-lodge, the Queen mounted her pony, and proceeded, attended by the guide, up the side of a high hill called Cairnchlamman (or the Hill of Hawks), from an elevated point of which her Majesty could command a view of the deer, and of every sport that might be had. The Prince went on for the purpose of deer-stalking, but there was no sport, and after her Majesty had enjoyed her mountain ride nearly two hours, during the latter portion of which it was extremely cold, she returned to her carriage, and the party returned home, reaching the Castle about seven o'clock. They lunched at the Forest-lodge. These rambles up the hills seem to be the favourite amusement of the Queen. Had her Majesty been born and bred a mountaineer, she could not enter on them with more spirit. Wrapped in her plain shepherd's plaid, and equipped like a Highland gude wife, on her mountain pony, she leaves all state and following behind her, to breathe the pure air of the hills, and view from a 'vantage ground the splendid prospects which spread themselves on every side. Nor is it at all holiday work to ascend these hills On some there are winding pathways, but the Queen generally takes the more direct, and therefore the more difficult, road, and makes a way for herself, usually the more liked for being the shortest, notwithstanding that it often requires good horsemanship to keep the saddle at all. Some of the hill sides are nearly precipitous, but a sure-footed pony, a cautious guide, and a fearless rider, overcome all difficulties. Her Majesty seems resolved to "rough it" when she goes on these rambles, adopting, without show or affectation, the manners of the country. The exploits and proceedings of royal personages seldom escape magnifying in the telling, but it is no flattery to say that there are very few of the ladies of the country around who would undertake, or could go through, what are the daily recreations of the Queen here.

The Earl of Aberdeen, who takes many solitary walks in the neighbourhood, was yesterday for some time on the Hill of Tulloch, at the back of the village. The Hon. Captain James Drummond, brother of Lord Glenlyon, Sir Philip Durham, and other persons of rank, have lately arrived at Blair Athol.

BLAIR ATHOL, Monday.

Her Majesty was afoot at an early hour this morning, walking in the grounds. The Princess Royal has also taken her usual ride on her Highland pony.

The appearance of the parish-church yesterday differed widely from that of last Sunday. The congregation then consisted of the resident parishioners alone, and many of them were deterred from going to the kirk by the inclemency of the weather. Yesterday, however, all parts of the country, within a circuit of forty miles, sent their bevies of holiday folk. At an early hour in the morning vehicles of every description, in as great a variety as are to be seen at the Cock at Sutton on a Derby day, rattled into the quiet village of Blair Athol, and groups of humble pedestrians made their way at once to the church, which was literally in a state of siege at ten o'clock in the morning. The service does not commence until twelve o'clock, but when the doors were thrown open at eleven, every pew in the church was indiscriminately invaded; and Lord Glenlyon's tenantry, the quiet country villagers, who had an undoubted priority of right to accommodation, were elbowed aside, and were pushed from their stools which they had occupied from childhood, by the substantial burghers from the towns in the neigh- bourhood.

As twelve o'clock approached, the congregation waxed impatient, but before Divine service commenced, her Majesty, with her accustomed punctuality, had already arrived at the church. Her Majesty came in the low close carriage, which was thrown open; Prince Albert, Lady Canning, and Lady Caroline Cocks were also in the carriage, which was drawn by a pair of horses, and preceded by a single outrider; Lord Glenlyon's phaeton followed. As her Majesty entered the church the curiosity of the congregation overcame their discretion; the majority of them forthwith rose and stared at the Queen and the Prince with unseemly pertinacity, notwithstanding the hushing murmurs of the gentry of the neighbourhood. Her Majesty came into the royal pew leaning on the arm of Prince Albert. Lady Canning, Lady Glenlyon, Lady Caroline Cocks, and Lord Glenlyon, attired in his Highland dress, occupied the front seats of the pew. In the back seats were Lord Aberdeen, Lord Liverpool, Lord Charles Wellesley, Sir Edward Bowater, and Sir James Clark. Her Majesty wore a black silk dress, with a shepherd's plaid thrown over her shoulders, and a white crape bonnet. A guard of honour of the Athol Highlanders, but without arms, received her Majesty, and were stationed from the high road to the church.

After the usual service, according to the Presbyterian form of worship, Dr. Macleod preached an excellent sermon from the eleventh to the fourteenth verses of the second chapter of Titus. The concluding prayer was delivered with an earnestness which came home to the business and bosom of every member of the congregation, and a distinctly audible "amen" was heard from every corner of the church when the clergyman prayed with heartfelt fervour that her Majesty Queen Victoria might long wear her crown, and that she might yet see many happy days, and that at the last, when she left her earthly throne, she might ascend a throne of imperishable glory.

The service concluded, as before, with a benediction, after which her Majesty, with Prince Albert, the noble host and hostess, and the members of the suite, returned to the castle in the same order as they arrived.

The Prince has again left the castle this morning for the deer-stalking in Glen Tilt; and, as the wind is favourable, it is expected that his Royal Highness will enjoy some excellent sport. Her Majesty will not leave Scotland, in all probability, before Tuesday next, the 1st of October, as her Majesty will thus be enabled to reach Windsor before the arrival of Louis Philippe on the 6th instant. The royal route towards the sea is not yet definitively settled, but the good people of Perth are anxious that her Majesty should embark on the Tay from their fair city. Lord A. Fitzclarence has pronounced it to be utterly impracticable for the royal yacht to get over the shallows in the river, but there are smaller steamers, drawing less water, in the royal squadron, and her Majesty could avail herself of one of these vessels to embark at Perth, and view the beautiful scenery on the banks of the Tay, as far as Dundee, where the royal yacht is lying in readiness to receive the royal travellers.

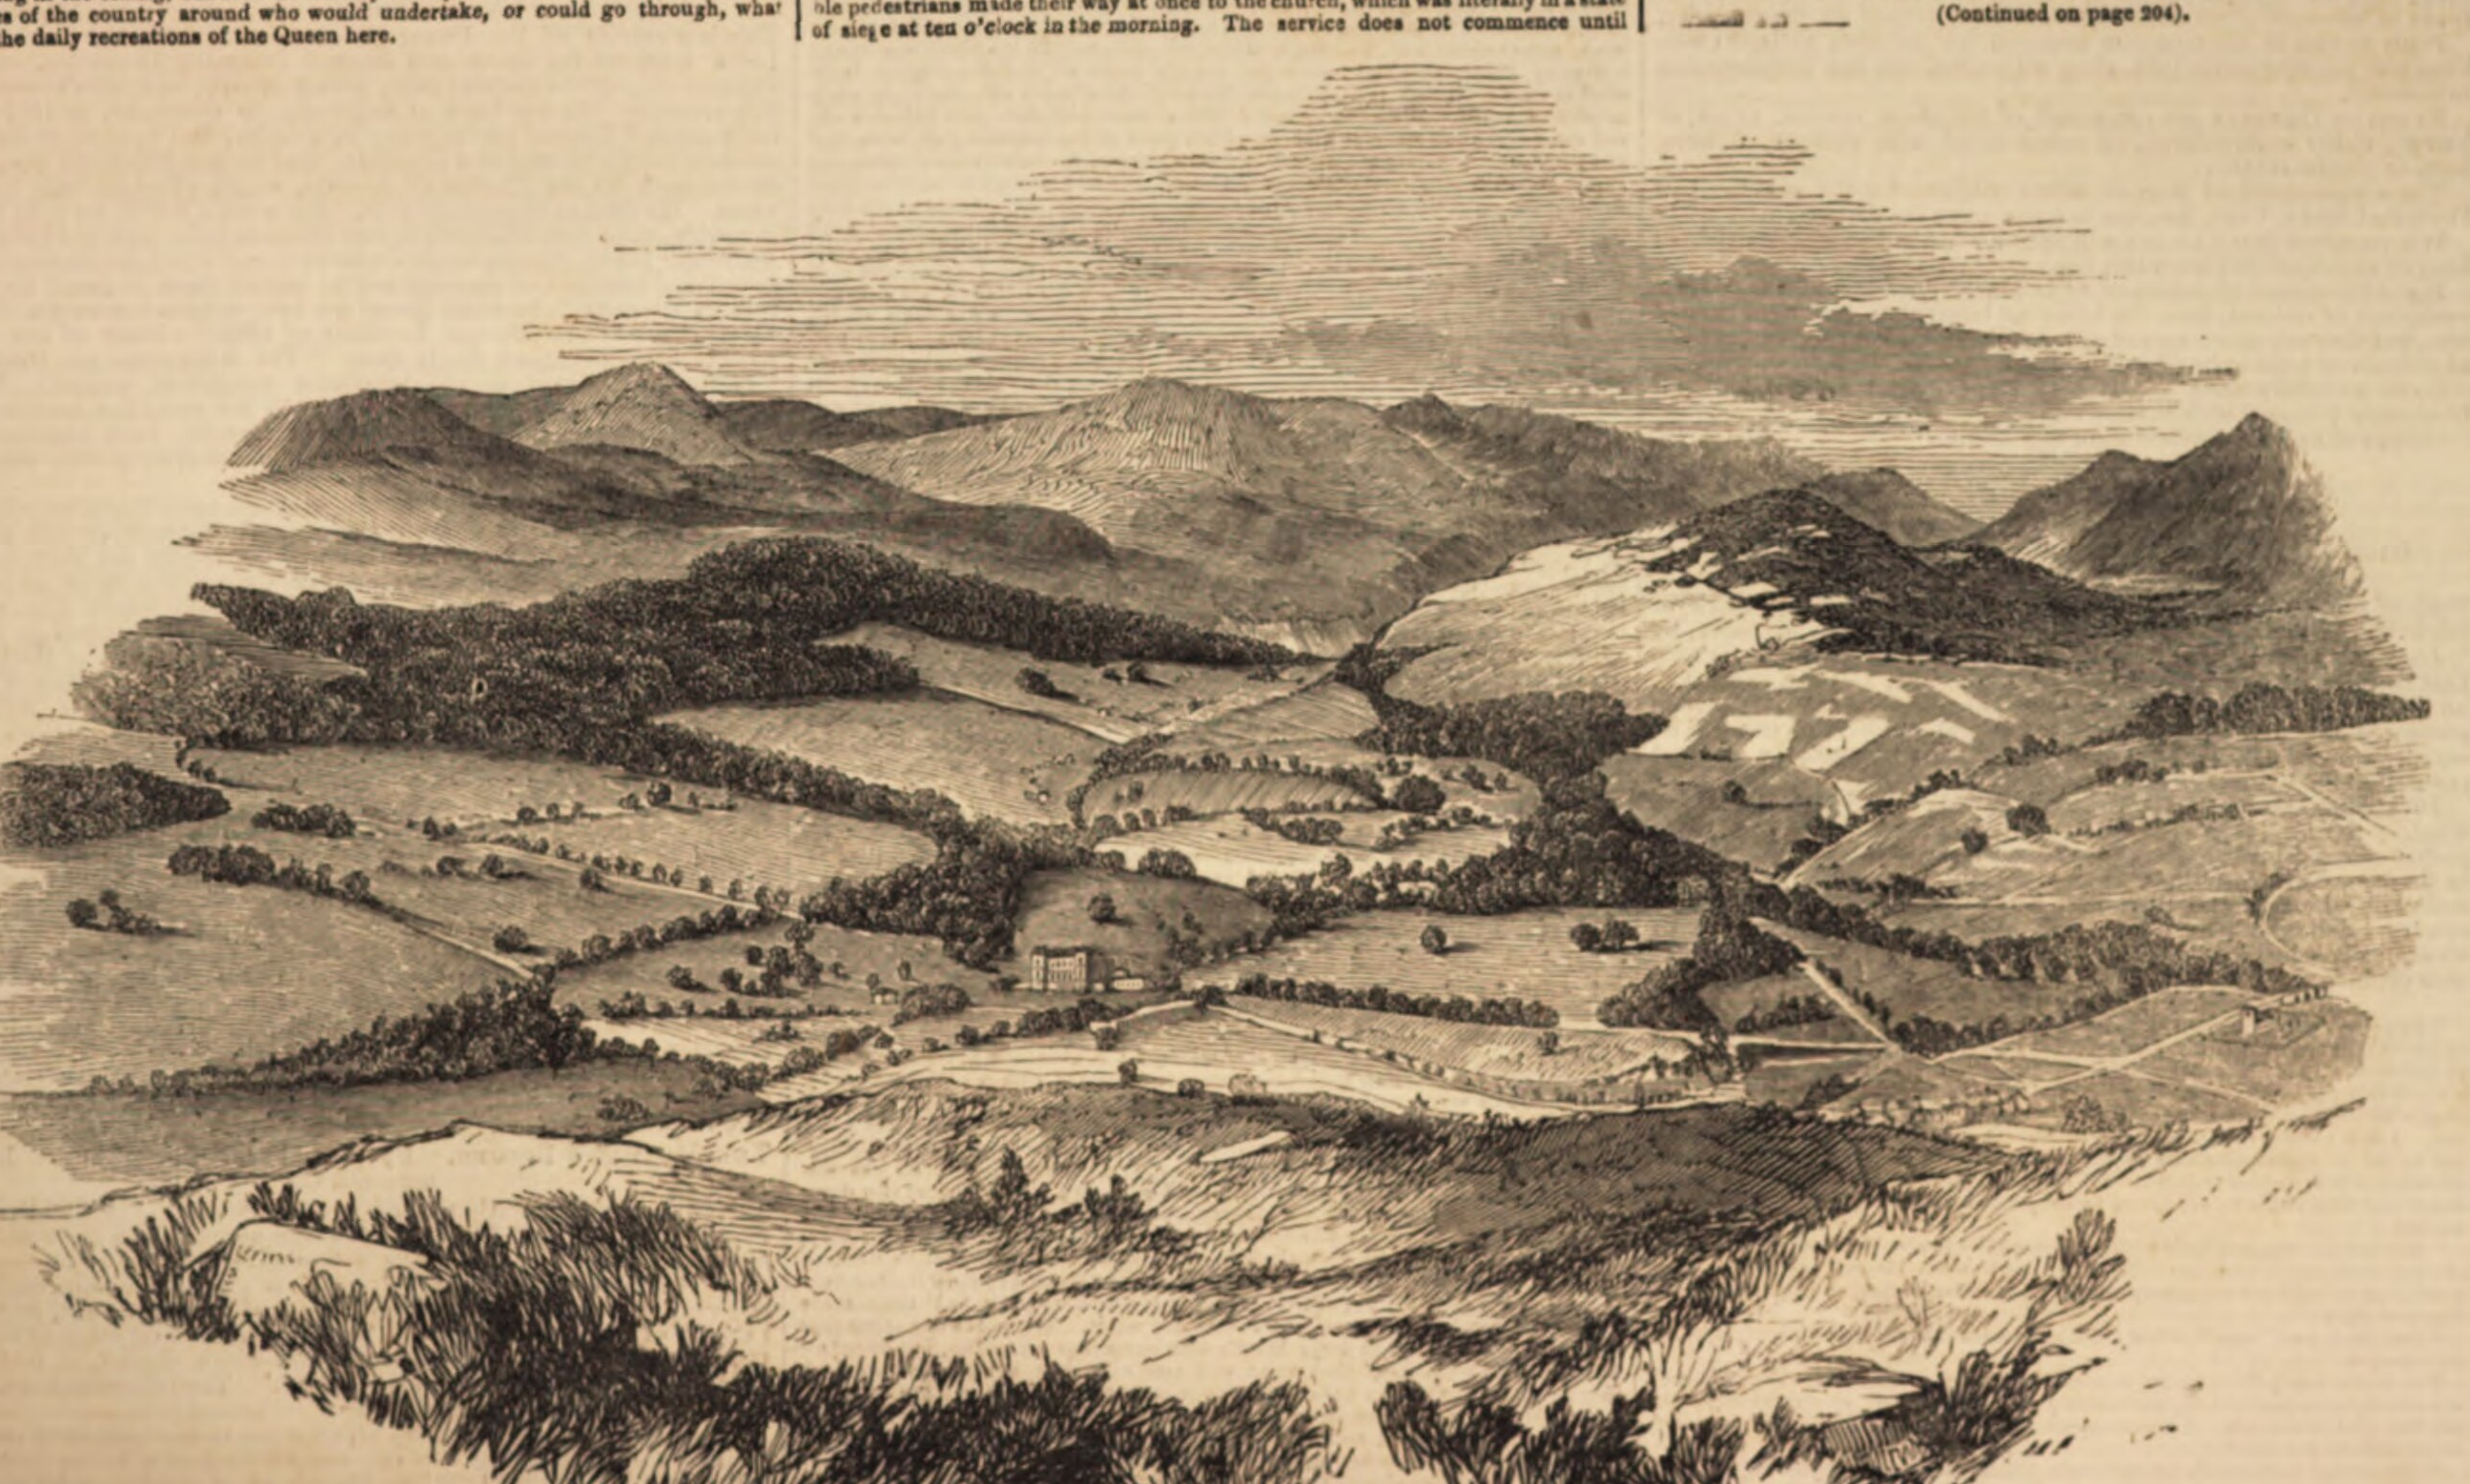
There will be a grand golf match on the North Inch at Perth, on Wednesday next, at which the Duke of Cambridge will be present, as his Royal Highness will arrive on that day at Scone Palace, on a visit to Lord Mansfield. Her Majesty and the Prince will drive to Dunkeld before their departure, to view Lord Glenlyon's beautiful grounds in that part of the county.

BLAIR ATHOL, Tuesday.

The life of secluded retirement which her Majesty has led since her arrival at Blair Athol has not been disturbed by any incident worthy of recording. The morning walk or ride in the grounds of the castle with Prince Albert and the Princess Royal, the afternoon drive or scramble up the hill-side on ponies, the dinner party, the being roused by the shrill pibroch on the following morning, and so on from day to day, toujours perdrix—to-day the same as yesterday, and yesterday the same as the day before. Were it not for the anxiety which naturally pervades all classes of her Majesty's subjects to hear of the welfare of their sovereign, and the interest excited by her Majesty's present mode of life, there is so little variety in this tranquil routine, that the daily movements of the Royal party are scarcely of sufficient importance to be chronicled.

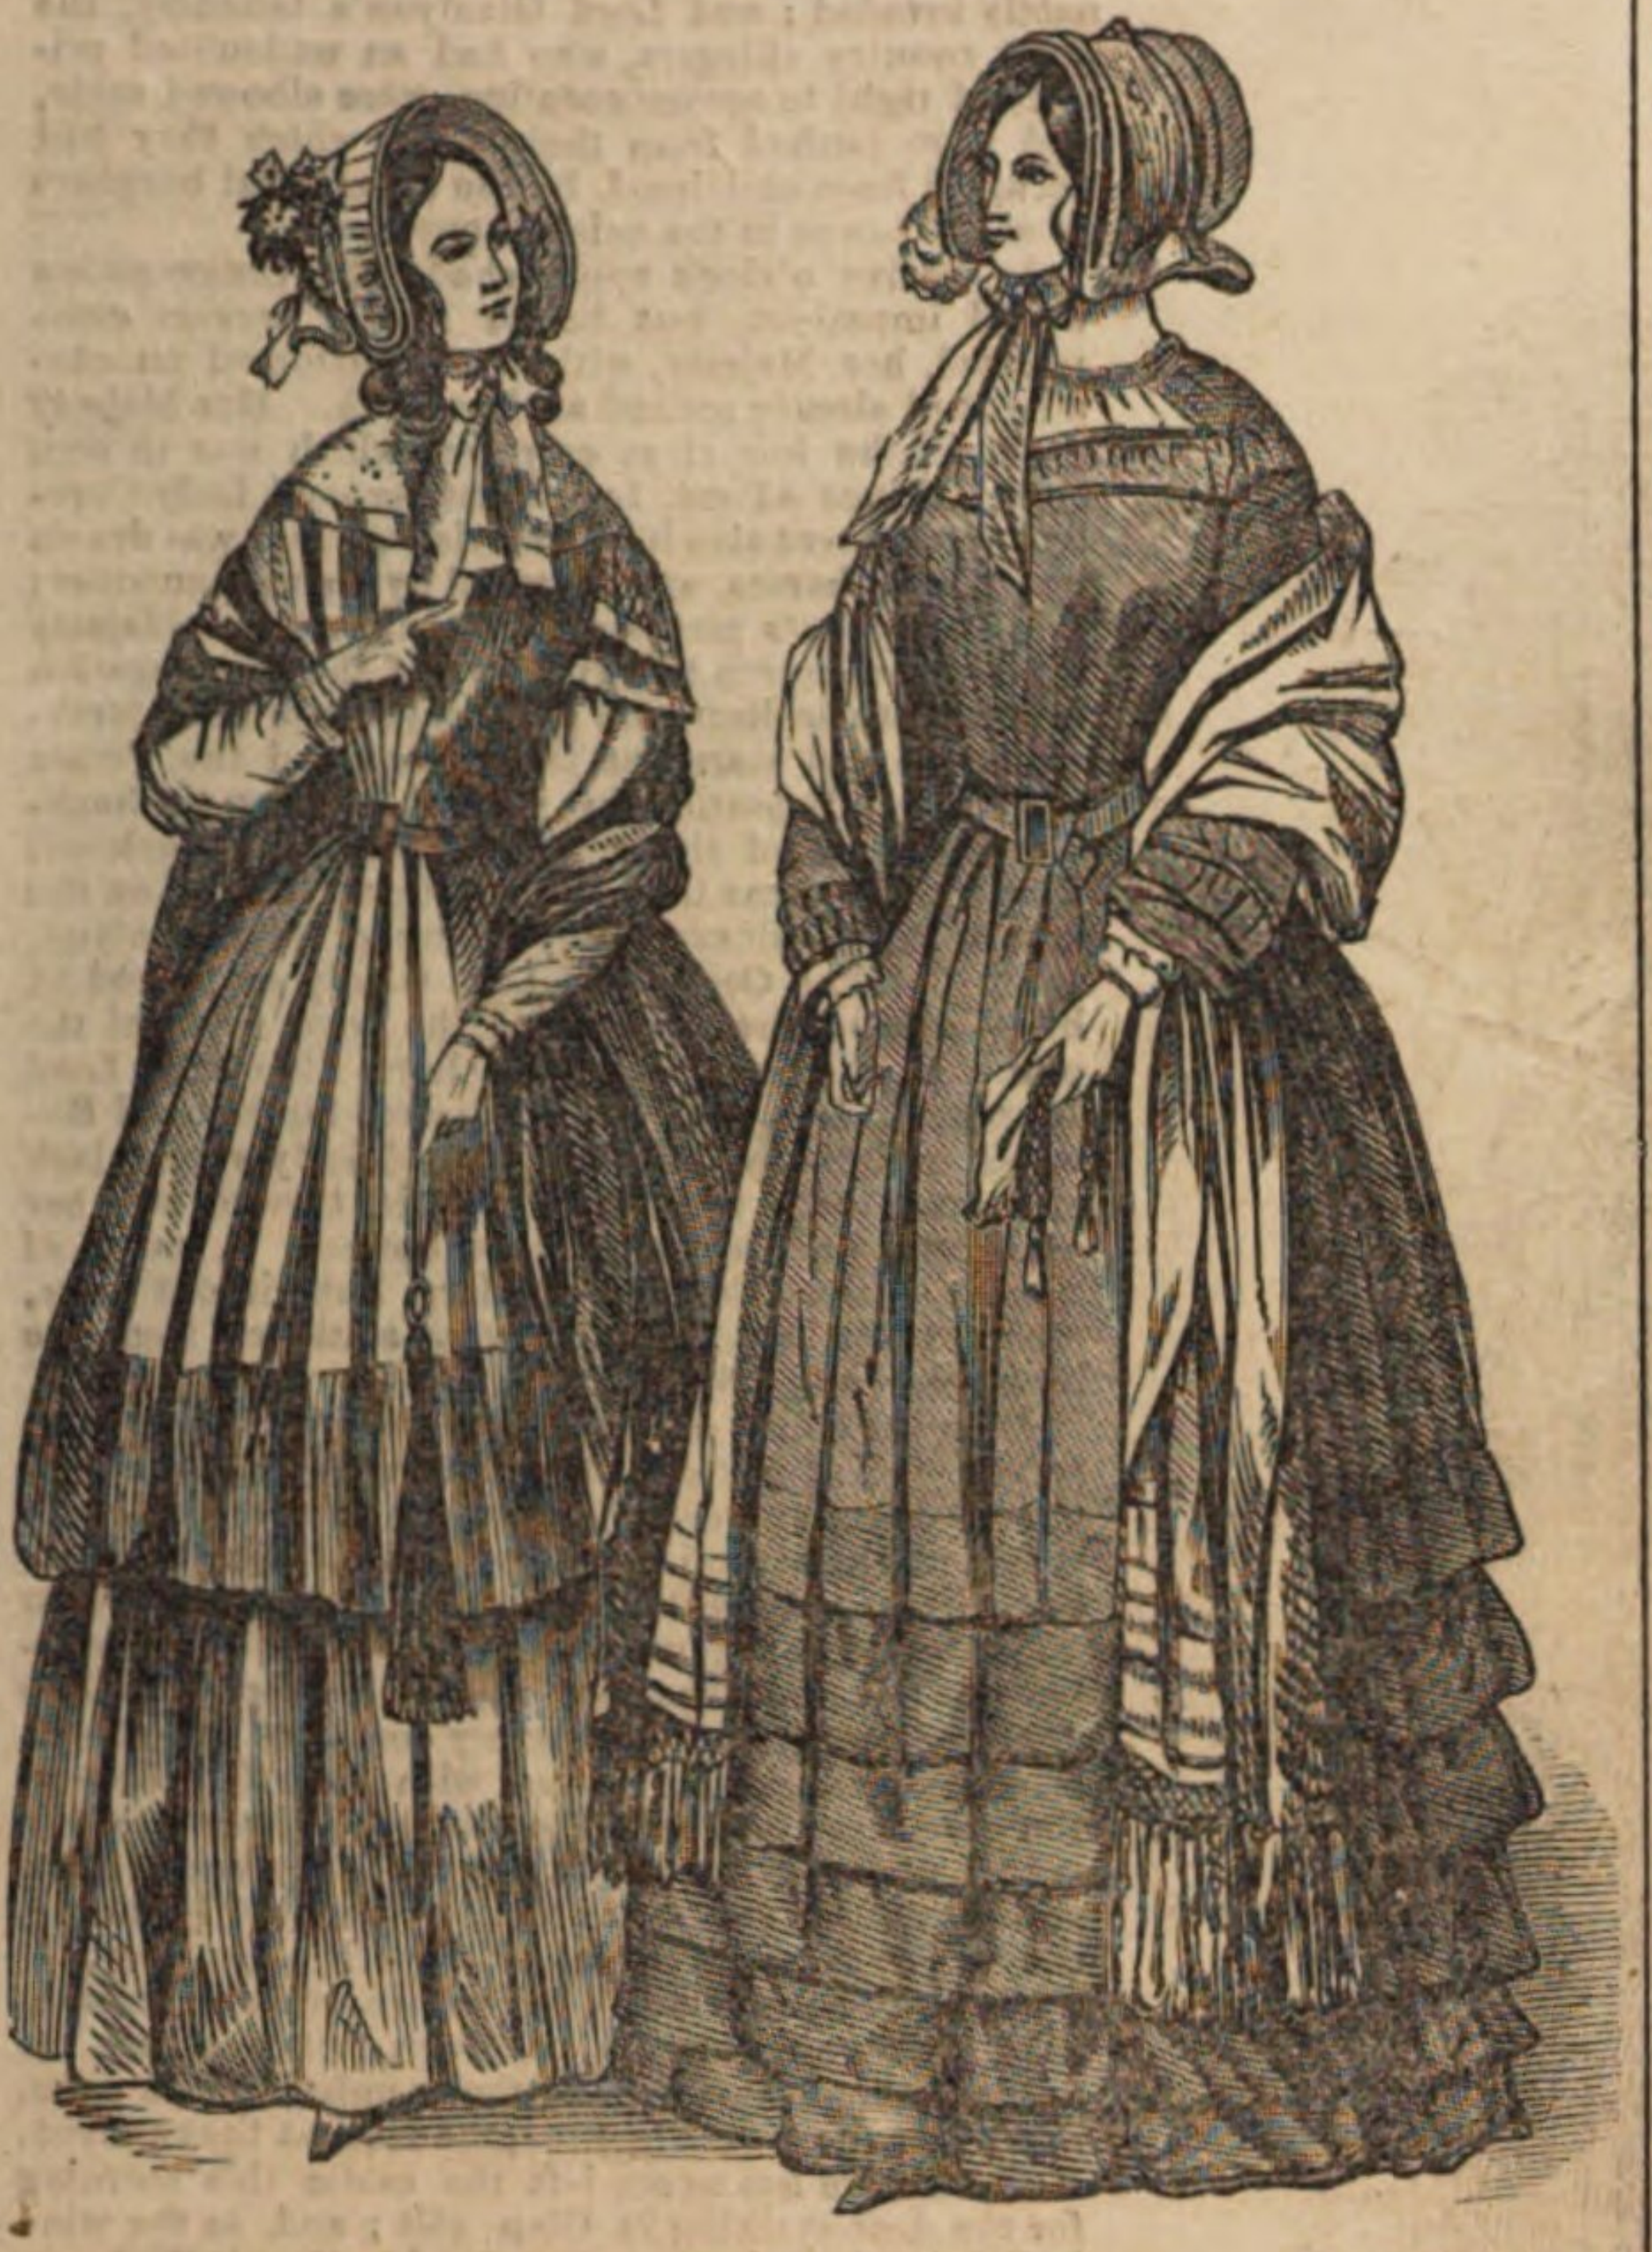
The present propitious weather enables her Majesty and the Prince to pass a great part of the day in the open air, and were it not for the mellow autumnal

(Continued on page 204).



BLAIR CASTLE AND GLEN TILT, FROM THE TOP OF TULLOCH.

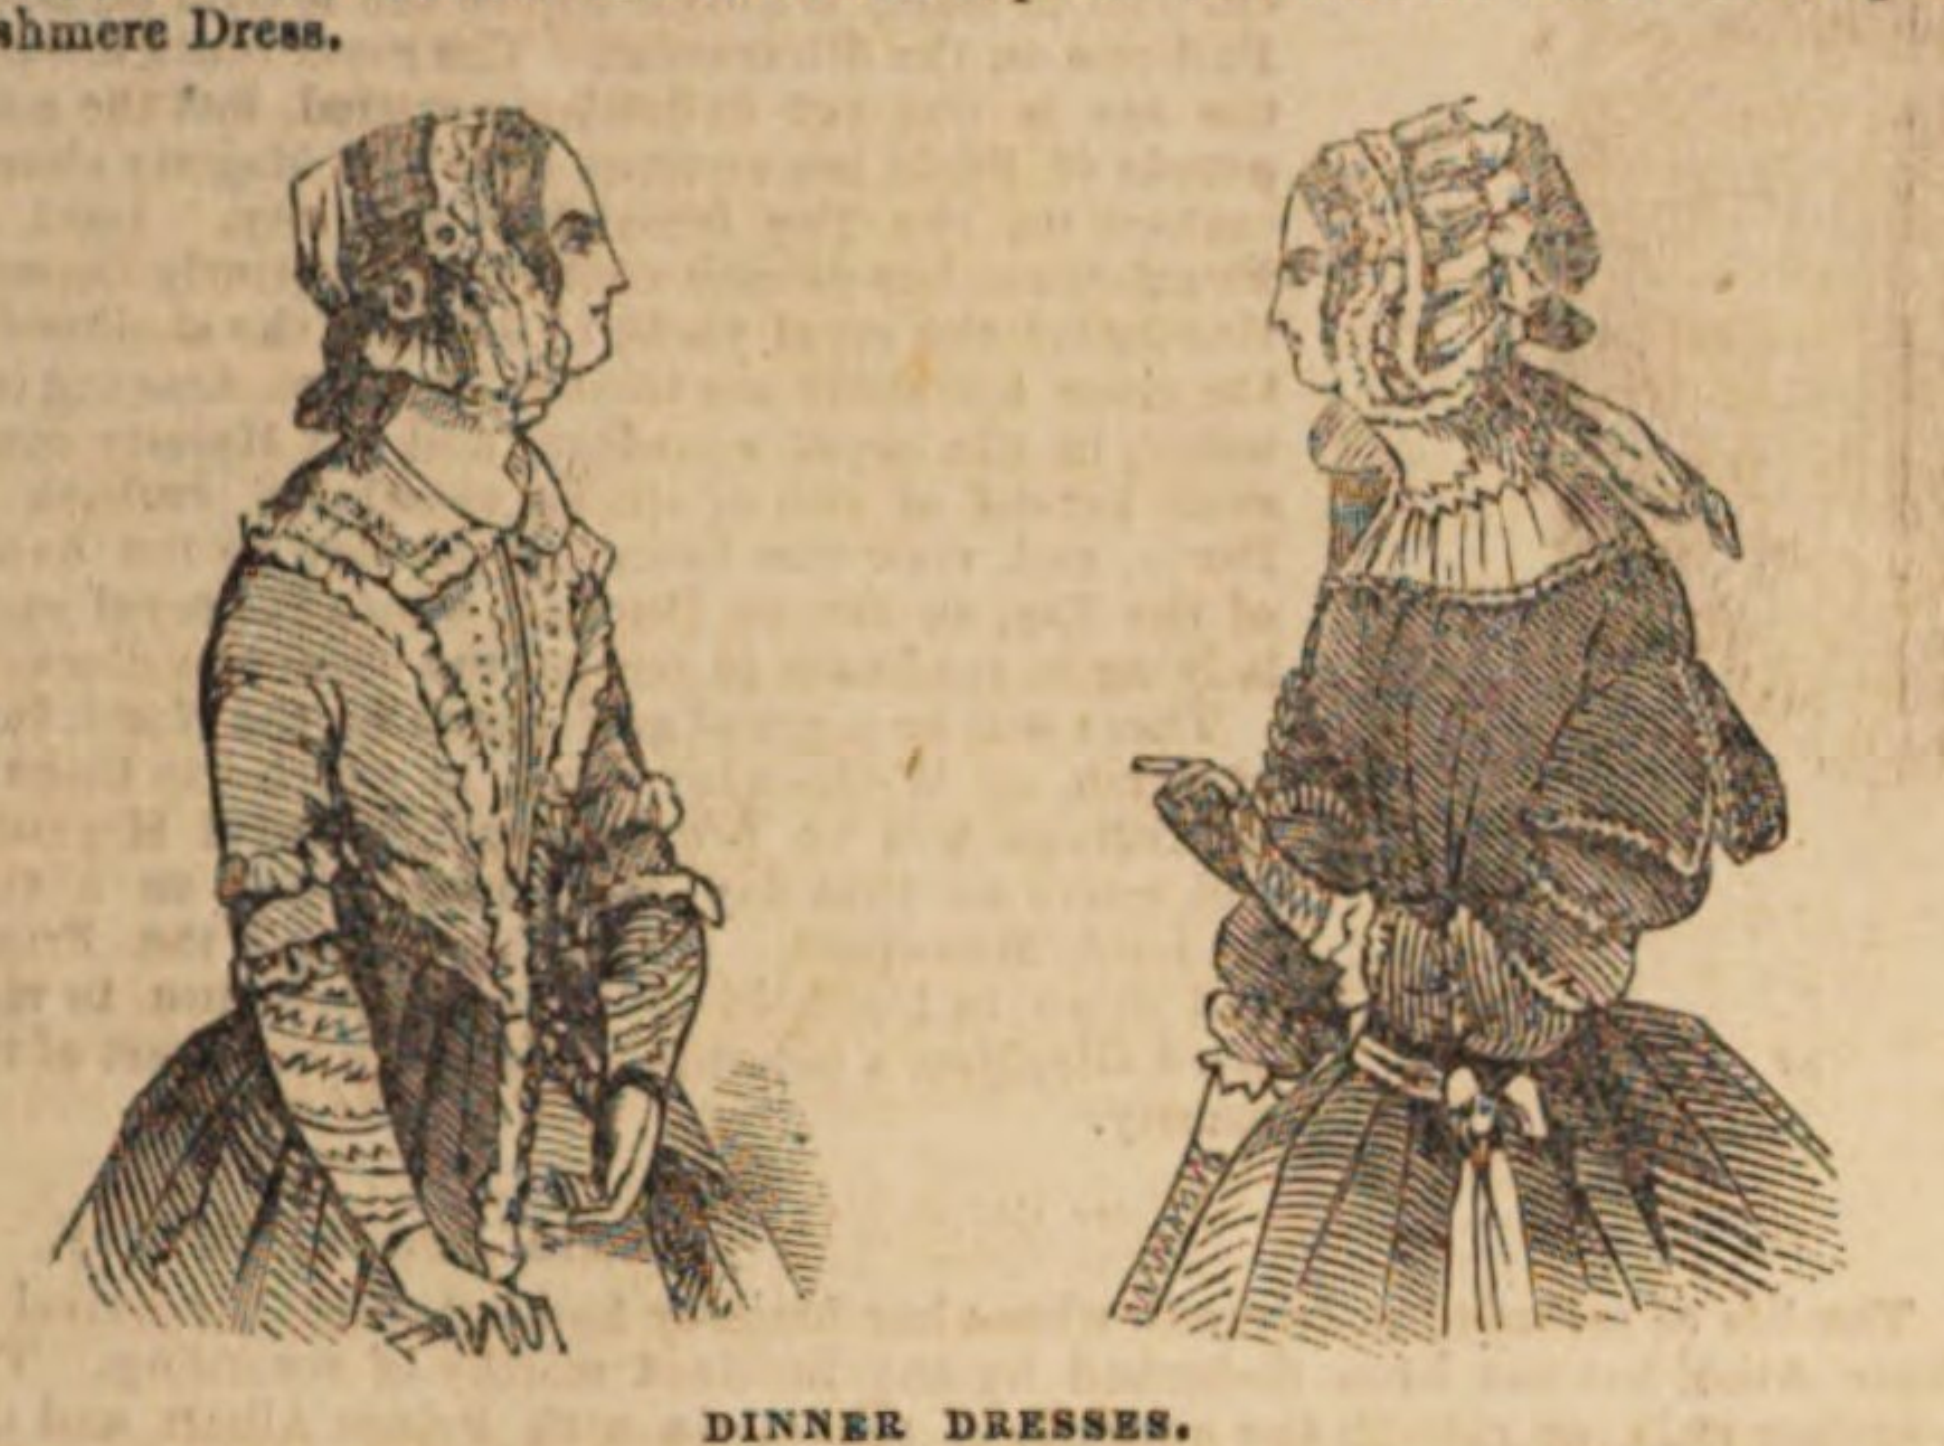
FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.



PROMENADE COSTUMES.

Right Hand Figure.—A Watered Silk Hat trimmed with velvet. A Cashmere Scarf. A Silk Dress.

Left Hand Figure.—A Drawn-silk Capote. A Cashmere Scarf. A Striped Cashmere Dress.



DINNER DRESSES.

Right Hand Half-length Figure.—A Lace Cap. A Silk Dress, with drawn corsage.

Left Hand Figure.—A Lace Cap trimmed with velvet ribbons and flowers. A Silk Pelisse. Muslin Chemisette. Lace spiral sleeves.

Paris, 23rd September.

As the winter approaches, the Corsages of Dresses become high, and are either in the riding-habit style, or that of the closed pelisse.

Pelisses and Peignoirs made of taffeta have the corsages very long; they are generally busked, and open, although not laced, the space is, however, filled with a chemisette, buttoned on the shoulder.

Poult de soie is the favourite material for morning pelisses; ribbons and passementerie (silk gimp trimming) are the indispensable ornaments.

Evening Dresses are composed of tarlatane, muslin, crape, or barège, either embroidered, or ornamented with ribbons, flowers, lace, or passementerie.

The employment of narrow velvet ribbon, for the ornament of Dresses, Cloaks, Caps, &c., has become quite the fashion.

It is expected that Cloaks will not be worn in the winter either so long or so full as they were last year.

Hats Composed of velvet or satin placed on tight, also Capotes composed of ribbons, have the brims no larger than they have been of late, but they are more spread out, to allow of an increased quantity of ribbons or tulle to be placed inside.

Caps generally have the lace in front placed on flat, and are frequently trimmed with narrow velvet.

Striped silks will be much worn this season.

LITERATURE.

High Life in New York. By Jonathan Slick, Esq.
2 vols. How.

Such of our readers as recollect the rare humour of "Sam Slick, of Slickville," will expect high gratification from this pair of tomes, by "Jonathan Slick, Esq., of Weathersfield, Connecticut." It is true that families are chequered in brains as in bulk; but the present is an exception to the rule; for Sam and Jonathan are very brothers in grotesque humour; so that the most ardent admirers of one will be equally amused with the other, whilst both alike sustain the national reputation for hyperbole and broad grin.

Jonathan's volumes contain some two-and-thirty letters describing what he terms "high life" in the Transatlantic Metropolis. This phrase may mislead an English reader, for Jonathan's adventures lie in the New York counting-rooms, city residences, newspaper-offices, and political meetings, ball-rooms, and theatres; interspersed with sundry gaieties and flirtations with Miss Miles and a milliner girl, vivacious cousins, &c. Our first extract describes, with unmistakeable drollery,

A FAMILY DINNER.

Two great doors slid into the partition, and there was another room jest as much like the one we was in, as two peas in a pod. A table was sot in the middle of the room, all kivered with rale China dishes, and first-rate glass tumblers, and a silver thing to set the pepper-box in—you haint no idee how stilish it was. But as true as you live, there stood that etarnal nigger, close by the table, as large as life. I didn't know what to make on it, but sez I to myself, "If cousin John's got to be an abolitionist, and expects me to eat with a nigger, he'll find himself mistaken, I'll be darned to darnation if he don't!" But I need'nt a got so wrathy; the critter didn't offer to set down, he only stood there to git anything that we wanted.

"Do you take verminsilly, Mr. Slick?" says Miss Beebe, biting off her words as if she was afraid they'd burn her. With that she took the kiver off one of the dishes, and begun to ladle out some soup with a great silver dipper, as bright as a new fifty cent piece.

"No, thank you," says I, "but I'll take some of that are soup instead, if you've no objection."

The critter was jest beginning to pucker up her mouth again, as if she'd found out something to poke fun at, but cousin John looked at her so eternal cross that she was glad to choke in. I s'pose cousin John see that I felt dreadful oneasy, so he said, kind a coaxing,

"She meant verminsilly soup, cousin Slick. Let her help you to some, I'm sartin you'll like it."

"Wal," says I, "I don't care if I do."

So I took up a queer looking spoon that lay by my plate, and tried to eat, but all I could du, the soup would keep a running through the spoon into the dish again. I tried and tried to git one good mouthful, but I might jest as well have detarmined to dip up the Connecticut river in a sieve, and the most I could git was two or three sprangles of little white things that I stirred up from the bottom of the plate, that didn't taste bad, but, to save my life, I couldn't make out what they were made out of. Arter I'd been a fishing and diving ever so long, a trying to git one good spoonful, so that I could tell what it was, I looked up, and there was the nigger showing his teeth, and rolling about his eyes, like a black cat in the dark. It made me wrathy, for I surmized that he was a larfing to see me a working so to git a mouthful of something to eat. I couldn't hold in any longer, so I jumped up and flung down the spoon upon the floor, as spiteful as could be, and sez I to the nigger, sez I,

"What do you stand a grinning at there, woolly head? Go and git me a spoon that haint got no slits in it; I'd as lief eat with a rake as that are thing."

"Ha, ha, haw!" larfed out the eternal black varmint, "I thought you would not make the fork hold."

With that Miss Beebe giggled right out, and cousin John looked as if he would a burst to keep from larfing too.

"Stop your noise, sir," says he to the nigger; "pick up the fork, and give Mr. Slick a spoon."

I begun to feel awful streaked, I can tell you; but I sot down agin, and took up the real spoon, which lay on a kind of towel, folded up by my plate, and I begun to eat, without saying a word, though I'd a gin a silver dollar if they would a let me got up and licked the nigger.

Wal, arter I'd got a good mouthful of the soup, I could'nt make out what it was made of, for I couldn't remember of ever seeing the name Miss Beebe called it by, in the dictionary. "Maybe it's Latin," says I to myself, and then I tried to think over what it could mean, and if nobody had told me what the definition was in the Latin school which you sent me tu there in Weathersfield. Verminsilly! Verminsilly! Verminsilly! kept a running through my head all the time. I knew what silly meant well enough, and then it popped into my head, all at once, that vermin comes from the Latin vermis, which means worms. Worm soup! my gracious, the very idee of it made me feel awful bad at the stomach! But I might have known it by the looks, and I should if I'd ever heard of sich a thing, for the little slim critters swimming round in the liquor, looked as much like angle-worms biled down white as could be. Arter I found out what it was made of, I rather guess they didn't catch me a eating any more of their verminsilly soup; so I pushed it away half across the table, and wiped my mouth purty considerably with my pocket handkercher. The nigger took the whole on't away, and I declare I was glad enough to get rid of it.

"What on arth have they put this towel here for?" says I to myself; and then I stole a sly look over to cousin Beebe, to see if he'd got one, or if they only gave towels to company. Cousin John had one jest like mine, but he'd spread it out on his lap, so I jest took up mine and kivered over my cashmeres with it tu.

Considering there was no onions on the table, I made out a purty fair dinner. I was beginning to think about moving when the nigger brought a lot of blue glass bowls about half full of water, and sot one down by each of us. What they could be for I hadn't the least notion, but I kept a bright look out to see what cousin John did, and when I saw him dip his fingers into his bowl and wipe 'em on a sort of red towel which the nigger brought along with the bowls, I jest went over the manœuvre as natural as life.

Wal, while we were talking about the banks, and old times, and Weathersfield folks dying off so, that coot of a nigger cleared the table right off as slick as a whistle; and afore I hardly knew what the fellow was up tu, he come along and sot down a set of decanters, and two cider bottles with the necks all kivered over with sheet lead, and then he brought two baskets made out of silver, one on 'em was filled chuck full of oranges, and tother was heaped up with great purple grapes; I declare it eenamost made my mouth water to see the great bunches a hanging over the edge of the basket. I'd jest put a whopper of a bunch on a little China plate which the feller set for me, and was considering whether it would be genteel to cut the grapes in tu with the cunning little silver knife which was put by the plate, when, all tu once, pop! went something, eenamost as loud as a pistol, close by me. I jumped up about the quickest, I can tell you; but it was only the nigger a opening one of the cider bottles; he poured out some for me in a great long glass with a spindle neck, and I drunk it all at a couple of swallers, without stopping to breathe. By jingo! but it was capital cider; arter I'd drunk one glass I begun to feel as spry as a cricket.

"Here, snowball," sez I, "give us another; these glasses are awful small; now, I like to drink cider out of a pint mug."

"Take care," says cousin Beebe, "I'm afeard you'll find the cider, as you call it, rather apt to get into your head."

"Not a bit of it," sez I, "I can stand a quart any day. Here, cousin Mary, take another glass, you haint forgot old times have you? though I s'pose they don't have applecuts and quiltings here in York, du they?"

I don't remember what she said, but I know this, my eyes begun to grow allfired bright, and afore I got up to go hum, that nigger must have put more than twenty baskets of grapes on the table, and the oranges seemed to grow bigger and bigger every minit, and I knew there wur more than three times as many glasses and decanters on the table as there was at fust. I ruther think it was purty nigh tea time when I got up to go back to the sloop agin. I insisted on giving cousin Mary a buss afore I went; and I won't be sartin, but I kinder seem to remember shaking hands with the nigger, consarn him! jest afore I went down the steps.

Then, we have a true scene from "the land of liberty."—

A POLITICAL MEETING, AND ITS DISASTERS.

A few nights ago, I thought I'd try one of them political meetings the Editors wanted me to attend and see how they carried on there. So Captain Doolittle and I went to one of the great halls hired for caucuses, and crowded in by degrees, for the hull building was jammed full of human live stock long afore we got there. Arter a good deal of scuffling, we got up by one of the winders where we could see purty much all that was going on. I never in all my born days saw sich a lot of horned cattle together. Some on 'em was barefooted, and a good many hadn't more than a coat and a pair of trousers among four or five on 'em. One feller close by me had the rim of his hat ripped off till it hung down on his shoulders; the top was stove in, and he had a black eye, besides another that wouldn't see straight. "Look a here," sez he to me, "why don't you shout when we du?" "Because I aint a mind tu," sez I, "how are you going to help yourself?" Jest then a leetle pussy lawyer cum a crowding through the gang, and at the sight of him they all sot up a noise that made my hair stand on eend. I never heard anything like it, they yelled and hollered enough to split the ruff off the house. The chunked feller, with his hat knocked into the middle of next week, poked about with his elbows till he got room to draw his fiddle bow across a ricketty fiddle, that had two of the strings broke off and was cracked from eend to eend. Squeak, squeak, went the fiddle close to my ear, like a pig when he's being yoked. With that, a lot of fellers, some with their coat tails tore off, and some with their trousers held up with a piece of list instead of galluses, and every one of 'em as ragged as year old colts, begun to dance up and down the room, but such double shuffles and pigeon wings, was enough to make a feller die a larfin. Our old white cow used to dance twice as well when she got into one of her tantrums. "Hurra for our side! hurra! hurra!" yelled out a tall feller close by the fiddler, with a mouth that twisted one way and his nose curling off on t'other side, as if they hated each other like cats and dogs; and with that he took off his old straw hat and shied it off into the middle of the dancers. It lodged on the top of a feller's head that was jest then trying to cut a pigeon wing over one of the benches. "Helloa, you feller you, jest toss back that hat, will you?" sung out the tall feller, a pitching for'ard head over heels arter his hat. "No I wont, I'll be rumbusticated if I du," sez the t'other chap, a pushing toward the door, holding the hat down with both hands, as if he warn't used to them kind o'things; "all fair in 'lection time. Hurra for equal rights!"

Jest then there came in a grist of fellers a yelling and a kicking up their heels like all possessed. They'd brought in some more 'lection news. "Who on arth can these critters be?" sez I to Captain Doolittle. "O, that's a squad of Irishmen; don't you see how the hair's all worn off their heads a carrying brick hods on 'em," sez the Captin. "You don't say so! now by gracious how they du blather out their words, don't they?" sez I, but I might as well a been talking to a stun fence, for jest that minit the hull on 'em sot up a noise that was enough to make a feller's eye teeth jump out of his head. Did you ever hear four hundred thousand wild cats, and bears, and wolves, and screech owls, a squalling, and a howling, and a squeaking together? If you haint, there's no use trying to make you have the least idee how that etarnal crowd of critters did hoot and yell. There they were a screaming, and a stamping, and a dancing, and a fiddling, all in a heap, till a feller could'nt hear himself think, and wouldn't a known what he was thinking about if he did hear. "Now," says a leetle man by the winder, "clear your pipes, feller citizens; let's give 'em a song. I've got one printed off here so that you can all jine in. Them that can't read, or don't know the tune, can sing Yankee Doodle or Hail Columbia." With that he flung a hull grist of papers among the crowd and begun tu raise his ebenezer rather strong afore the rest sot in. By-am-by they all got a going and the way they roared out the song was awful, I can tell you. Some of 'em sung in one tune and some in another—every man went on his own hook.

Next is a whole-length portrait of COUSIN MARY.

I declare I never did see any body dressed out as cousin Mary was. She had on a frock of shining satin, with harnsome pink sprigs all over it, and there was a great wide ruffle round the bottom, made out of something that looked as white and thin as a gal's veil the day arter she's married; and that was hitched up on one side half way to her waist, with a pink rose, made out of ribbon with long eends, that fell down eenamost to the floor. A heap of some kind of shiney thin stuff was ruffled round her bosom, and hung down round her arms, for her frock sleeves were short, and made like a little gal's; and she had on a pair of white gloves, with tops to 'em, that cum eenamost to her elbows. One on 'em was fastened round her wrist with a wide piece of gold, and t'other she let slip down so as to show her arm, which was plaguey white, or else I suppose she would not have let folks see it. Mary al'ers had a tarnal purty little foot, but I never see it look so small as it did in that glistening white shoe of hern: and, to own the rale downright truth, she didn't seem to be much ashamed to show it, but kept it stuck out from under her ruffler, as independent as could be, as if she'd made up her mind to be ready to make a curchy any minit. There was one thing that kinder puzzled me a good deal; Mary's skin never was over white, but somehow it looked like wax-work, that night, and you never see a meadow pink look brighter than her cheeks did; but instead of coming into her face and going away again, as every man loves to see the color in a gal's face when she's a talking, and knows that he's a looking at her, Mary's always kept jest so; it didn't seem as if an arthquake would make her turn pale. The hair hung in long curls down her cheeks and on her shoulders, jest as it did the other day, and she had a great white rose stuck in among the curls, on one side of her head, that looked as if it hadn't but jest been plucked off the bushes.

I looked at her purty earnestly, I can tell you, and I do think she would have been a critter that John might be proud of, if it warnt for that stuck up way which she's got since she cum down here to York. She don't du nothing on arth nateral, and as she did when she was a gal in Connecticut. Instead of standing up straight, and speaking to her company as if she was glad to see them, she stood with one foot stuck out and her hands jest crossed afore her, and kinder stooping for'ard, as if she couldn't but jest stand alone; I never see a critter's back stuck up as her's was, I raly thought she was a getting the rickets, and I felt so anxious about it that I turned to cousin Beebe, afore I went up to speak to her, and sez I, a sort of low—"Cousin John, how did your wife hurt her back so? I declare it makes me feel awfully to see what a great hump she's got a growing since she cum away from Connecticut?" With that cousin John looked at her, and larfed a little, but I could see he didn't feel jest right.

Here is Jonathan's last appearance at

A CARD AND SUPPER PARTY.

I felt kinder bad at the idea of touching cards, arter promisin you not tu, Par, when you ketched me at it and gin me that allfired lickin in the barn;—but Miss Sneers stood right afore me, shuffling a bran new pack o' cards in them little white hands, and a lookin at me so cunnin that I couldn't stand it—yet I felt sort o' loth and held back. "I'm afeared I've eenajest forgot how," sez I a loungin back. "Oh, never mind," sez one of the chaps in a red and green vest, and with checkered trousers on, "Miss Sneers, will show you how." "Certainly," says the harnsome critter—a smilin right in my face again; "Shall I be your teacher, Mr. Slick?" "Jest so," sez I—"I'd jump down my own throat, if you on'y told me tu." With that I sot down by the table—crossed one leg a top of t'other and wiped my nose. Miss Sneers, she leaned her arm on my chair, and the rest sot down. "Wal, what shall we play?" sez the chap in checkered trowsers. "Oh, high, low, jack, and the game—Mr. Slick understands that"—sez the rest, sort a larfin. I began tu rile a trifle—"I guess, Mr. Slick knows a thing or two besides that,"—sez I: "he wasn't born in the woods to be skared at owls" sez I. They all choked in at that—one feller shuffled the cards, I cut, and the checkered trousers took the deal. I got an allfired good hand the first dive—ace, jack, and the two spot of trumps, besides a ten. Miss Sneers, she bent over till I could feel her breath agin my cheek, as warm and sweet as the steam from an apple-sarse cag when the sarse is sot off to cool. I swow, it made me feel so kinder unsettled, that the cards danced afore my eyes, like picters run crazy. We began to play. Miss Sneers kept a pokin that pesky little finger of hern amongst my cards every minute, puttin out them that I ought to play, one by one—and, afore I knew it myself, I'd beat the hull biling on em—three games without stoppin. Miss Sneers she seemed to be eenamost tickled to death to think I'd done em up so slick, and the men they looked streaked enough, I tell you—that one in the checkered trousers above all. Jest as we was cuttin in for a new deal, the doors right afore me slid back inter the wall, and there was another room spread out afore us like a picter. It was as light as day from one eend of the room tu t'other—and it was enough to dazzle one's eyes to see the shiney silk tumblin down from the golden poles over the winders—the great whoppin lookin glasses a blazin all over that eend of the room—the carpet kivered over and trod down with posies—the picters agin the walls and leetle marble babies a standing round, with the candle light a pourin down over em. Oh, gosh! it was enough to make a feller loose his breath, and never ketch it agin. There right in the midst of the room, was a table a shinin and a glistenin, like a heap of ice-chunks and new half dollars piled up together in the hot sun. The plates and the knives and forks, spoons and all, was solid silver—every thing else was silver but the glasses, and they were all pinted and pictered off, and cut down in lines, till there was nothing but flash, flash, flash! wherever the light fell, and that was strong enough; for right overhead was another of them great gold spangles branching out every which way, and runnin over with fire. Miss Sneers she put her hand on my arm, jest so as tu let the tip eend of her little finger lie agin my wrist. I swan! it made the blood tingle up my arm. We went intu the room with the rest a follerin arter, Indian file. A great strappin nigger stood at each side of the door-place, when we went, with white gloves on, and towels in their hands—they bowed a'most tu the carpet as we went by, and when we sot down, then they stood right up on eend behind our chairs, like militia trainers jist tryin tu drill. They lifted up the kivers from a lot of dishes, and up ris the steam amongst the glasses and silver, till it seemed as if they hung in a cloud. O gracious, I can't begin to tell you all that them dishes had in 'em. There was leetle teinty tonty birds cooked hull, claws and all—partridges with their stomachs stuffed till they looked as pussey as cousin Jason—squirrels a lyin there, like human babies, jest baked over a trifle, and all sorts of wild varmints that a feller ever thought of killin. The niggers they dodged about, fillin plates and a handin em round light lightnin. They gin Miss Sneers and I each on us a leetle bird—darn me if I know what it was, without it was a woodpecker stewed hull. It raly seemed tu be a shame tu stick a fork intu the teinty varmint. I kinder diddled my knife and fork about, till Miss Sneers got purty intimate with her bird, for I wanted tu see if it was the fashion tu swaller em down, inards and all. She'd used her little chap purty well up, when I sot my jaws a workin in arnest. The bird went down my throat about the quickest. It was awful sweet tastin; and the leg bones scratched a trifle as they went down, but nothin tu speak on. Wal, we laid inter the squirrels and other wild critters rather hard, till I begun tu feel a dry.

Jonathan, on his arrival at New York from the Onion Beds at Weathersfield, puts up at "that great heap of stones,"

ASTOR HOUSE.

Look a here, did I ever tell you what a looking place that Astor House is? If I didn't, jest you suppose that all the stun walls in old Connecticut had been hewed down as smooth as glass, and heaped together, one a-top of t'other, over two acres of clearing, up, and up, half away to the sky, and a leetle over; suppose then the hull etarnal great heap cut up into winders and doors, with almighty great slabs of stun piled up for steps, and pillars standing on eend, on the top, to hold them down—bigger than the highest oak tree you ever sot eyes on, and then you have some idee what a whopping consarn that Astor House is.

We need not add that Jonathan's letters are brimful of drollery and palpable hits at some of the absurdities of "High Life in New York."

The Reflexions on Eternity of Jeremiah Drexelius.
Burns.

This is a reprint of Dr. Dunster's translation from the celebrated Latin work of the pious and learned Jeremiah Drexelius, whose writings are, at the present time, rather scarce, and little known in this country. He was born at Augsburg, in Germany, in 1581; he early applied himself to the study of divinity, and became so distinguished for his talents as a preacher, that he was appointed chaplain in ordinary by the Elector of Bavaria, which office he held for 23 years. He died at Munich in 1638. His works, which are very considerable, were first collected in two volumes folio, and published at Antwerp, 1643. Among them are to be found many meditations and devotional treatises of singular merit: one of these is the "Reflexions on Eternity," to which there are two companion works, "On Death," and "The Eternal Torment of Hell." Many of our best writers have borrowed freely from "The Reflexions on Death;" "particularly," says an old translator somewhat quaintly, "the learned Bishop of Down and Connor, in his excellent treatises of holy living and dying, and in most of his works, hath ingenuously preferred these thoughts of Drexelius to his own, by placing them in their stead."

It is impossible to glance at the present work upon Eternity, without being struck with the wisdom, tempered zeal, and fervour with which the learned divine seeks to impress upon the reader his duty in respect of the great truth under consideration. We agree with the translator, that the practical observations with which the work abounds are admirable, as well for the knowledge displayed in them of the nature of the human heart, as for the rich variety of the illustrations by which they are enforced. Hence, these "Reflexions" are neither dry nor uninviting, but interesting and attractive, without trenching upon the solemnity of the great subject. The work was first translated in 1710, by Dr. Dunster, Prebendary of Sarum, and chaplain to Lord Maynard, at Shern Hall, Walthamstow, Essex. The reprint before us has been revised and edited by a descendant of the Doctor, the Rev. H. B. Dunster, curate of Tottenham, who has published the work in the hope that the sale of it may possibly benefit the funds for a new church now building at Wood Green, in the above parish. We trust this hope may be fully realised, at the same time that the republication must benefit the present age. By the way, Dr. Dunster was disinherited by his Puritan family, because of his attachment to the church; they lived at Leyton, not far distant from the parish wherein it is now sought to aid the great cause—the building of the church at Wood Green—by means of the Rev. Doctor's erudition and piety.

We ought not to conclude without commendation of the beautiful emblematic illustration, and typographical neatness of this treasurable volume.

The Mother's Primer. By Mrs. Felix Summerly. Longman and Co.

This little book, quaintly termed in the title page "A Child's First Steps in many Ways," presents a few new points which are worthy of notice: Mrs. Summerly's views assimilating with the reforming notions of friend Felix. The "Primer" is chiefly recommended by some very sensible Rules for the Teachers of Children; but, first, the purpose of the book is stated to be "to give the first steps as well in reading as in some of those many things which should, at least, be taught while the child is learning to read." The following is a specimen of the "Hints to Teachers:"—

> Long before a child begins reading, his mind may be kept in healthful employment in various pleasant ways: he may amuse himself with putting bricks together, drawing lines, and even large printing letters on a black board or slate: sorting shells into little parcels, &c.: learning the names of objects, their uses: stringing buttons or flowers: learning to distinguish and name the commonest colours. He may be taught to repeat easy Nursery Songs and poetry, and to count with objects. He should be especially encouraged to ask questions, and have them reasonably and intelligibly answered. I must beg leave to lay some stress upon this last observation, for it is unfortunately too much the practice to put off little children either with wrong or evasive answers. A child is soon discouraged from inquiry by such rebuffs as, "Don't tease so;" "Little children should not ask questions;" "I cannot tell you now."

Some of the lessons are far beyond a Primer: such as those on the "First Elements of Form"—all which to very young children must be like telling the clock by algebra. The "Exercises on Colour and on the Calendar" are in better keeping with the range of the work.

By the way, this Primer has an illuminated cover, and is printed with antiquated type in blue, red, and yellow; it has an artistical frontispiece, we think, by Mulready. One of the least intelligible signs of the day is the rage for revival: possibly, this may be the Primer of "Young England."

CURRIES; THEIR PROPERTIES, &c. By CAPTAIN W. WHITE. Some years since, a retired merchant, who had just returned from Calcutta, a very nabob in wealth, printed a small pamphlet of Directions for making Curries, which he distributed gratuitously in every direction. We were, at the time, struck with the extended philanthropy, the enlarged benevolence, of the above act; agreeing, as we do, with Captain White, that "few subjects are more interesting and important to Man than that of his diet; or is there any other which more generally affects the comfort and welfare of all classes of the community."

The pamphlet we are now called upon to notice is a more extensive affair than the Calcutta merchant's brochure. It sets out with asserting that "the highly nutritive grain of Rice, invaluable for its extraordinary twofold properties of vegetable and bread, is useless to us as a substantial food for man, from the want of cultivating a proper acquaintance with its natural concomitant—Curry." Captain White then enlarges upon the qualities and flavours of the True Indian Curry, and its excellence, more especially for persons just returned from India, who suffer much from change of diet. Curries are then considered "in a domestic point of view," particularly Fish Curries, which are unequalled: "some of the fish of this country, for instance, the salmon and the lobster, make the finest in the world. Eels, oysters, soles, mackerel, &c., make beautiful dishes; and the little sprat affords a most delicious one." The gastronomic Captain then shows how a dinner of curried cod-fish for four persons will cost but 9½d.! It appears, however, that "Selim's Curry Powder or Paste" must be used to insure the full benefits of the condiment, and there are added testimonials of its approval at the Lord Mayor's table, in the last Mayoralty, when the Mansion-House fare was anything but "Dining with Duke Humphery."

INSANITY.—The extraordinary work of the celebrated Pinel on mental diseases, is about to be translated in the Medical Times, with illustrative notes.

THOU ART THERE!

TRIBUTE TO THE UBIQUITY AND VARIETY OF THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

(From a Correspondent.)

Art-wonder! Press-marvel!
Thy far fame is hurl'd
Over land, over water,
O'er ocean and world.
Where the cold North looks down
From his mountainous crest,
In the lap of the sweet South,
The glow of the West,
Where East tosseth palaces
Up to the sun,
And his rivers of glory
Roll gold as they run—
Thou art there!

They gave thee, in Britain,
A land for thy birth,
The fairest, the boldest,
The bravest of earth!
But thy bright island prison
Can never detain
The wings that have borne thee
O'er mountains and main.
The hued rainbow stretcheth not
Over thy span;
Where'er the world's regions
Have dwelling for man—
Thou art there!

Doth sun light the valley.
Doth storm rend the plain,
Is there war in the wild earth,
Or wreck on the main?
Where mines send their treasures
From bosoms of dark,
In the home of the eagle,
The bed of the shark;
Where the fair steeds of Commerce
Run beautiful race,
And the steam-wings of Science
Annihilate space—
Thou art there!

When dew-morn is dawning,
When day-dreams are blest,
When Eve gives her warning
For night's drowsy rest;
When the broad light of heaven
Plays full from the moon,
Or the gloom-eclipse cometh
To cloud her too soon!
When the hurricane roareth
Its passion of dread,
And the Earth growls and shivers,
And throws up its dead—
Thou art there!

At home, in old England,
Where roam as you will,
Thy soul-deep solicitude
Lingereth still!
We watch thy fleet speeding
From city to field,
And all thou art heeding,
And all thou dost yield;
And from the fair coast, where
The frost waters foam,
To the land's very centre,
The heart of thy home—
Thou art there!

Where the palace of Majesty
Reared in its pride,
Waketh royalty's grandeur,
And loyalty's tide;
At the paying of homage,
The spreading of feast,
At the font—at the altar,
Where Queen bends to priest,
Mid the pleasures, our regal ones
Woo when alone,
Or, when fond glory-worshippers
Group round the throne—
Thou art there!

In the hall of our nobles,
Prince, prelate, and peer,
Mid cold lowly grandeur,
Mid high days of cheer,
At the ball and the gala,
The rout and the race,
Where rich pleasure-votaries
Ride in her chace;
On the course, in the yacht,
In the street, at the play,
Where waneth the night out,
Or wasteth the day—
Thou art there!

When the noble is gone
To the glowing link-side—
The home of his fathers,
His castle of pride!
When the city is still
On his desolate track,
And the tradesmen he fostered
Are sighing him back;
When his great guests are joyful
Around him, and hark!
When his kind peasants welcome him
Back to his park—
Thou art there!

When London is loud with Political strife,
And statesmen are stirring
The tumult of life;
In the houses of senate,
The hustings, the poll,
With the rats they entrap, and
The dupes they enrol!
When the bold roar and bully,
The weak cringe and bow,
In the midst of the national Quarrel art THOU:—
Thou art there!

Wherever men jostle,
Wherever men range,
By mart-day or Sabbath,
At church or on 'Change,
Where wealth-seeking merchants
In fever have trod,
Or where becalmed thousands
Kneel down before God—
Mid the hard chase for gold,
Where fine heart-chains are riven—
Or at the soul's shrine, where
The race is for heaven—
Thou art there!

The market, the warehouse,
The theatre, the gaol—
Where'er the fierce contrasts
Of life may prevail—
In the square that is flowered,
The street that is wide,
Or where squalid wretchedness
Draweth its tide:
Now gliding through gardens,
Now trailing through mud;
At the morn by the Park,
In the night by the flood—
Thou art there!

Where the poor artist lingers,
To paint for his bread,
While hope's feverish fingers
Twine bays for his head!
Where the poor author feeleth
His brain growing weak,
Though the hot flush of genius
Burn still on his cheek!
Where the poor actor crouches
Where beggars might lie,
With no one to thank him
For pleasures gone by!—
Thou art there!

Where the rich artist painteth—
Where lordly ones rush—
With wealth on his easel,
And gold in his brush!
Where rich author (rare
And less credited thing)
For his muse keeps a carriage,
And broiders her wing!
Where rich actor flutters,
Mid plaudits of all,
And gathers up roses
When green curtains fall—
Thou art there!

In the field—in the fleet—
By the loom—by the plough—
In the barn and the barrack—
All-where goest thou.
Fair landscape thou gatherest
Up from the land,
And city majestic,
And edifice grand;
By silver-spread river,
And beautiful hill—
To-day and for ever,
At word and at will—
Thou art there!

Where the world of Columbus
Spreads broad wealth afar—
In the home of the Sultan,
The land of the Czar!
Where the pillars of Italy
Rise from the past,
And Rome's ancient splendour
In death seemeth vast;
In the bocages of France,
And the vineyards of Spain;
On the hills of the nations,
The waves of the main—
Thou art there!

Art wooes thy companionship
Land over land;
Science taketh no step without
Grasp of thy hand.
Thou hast shed a new light
On a civilised age,
And the treasures of empires
Shine on thy page;
Where learning abideth,
Where virtue is fair,
Where good men seek knowledge—
Behold! thou art there!—
Thou art there!

HUMAN LIFE is a gloomy chamber, in which the images of the other world shine the brighter, the deeper it is darkened.

A GOOD CONSCIENCE is a spring when thou art thirsty—a staff when thou art weary—a screen when the sun burns thee—and a pillow in sickness.

NEW MUSIC.

ALL REMEMBER THEE. The Music by ROBERT GUYLOTT. Turner, Poultry.

This is an answer to Mrs. Norton's "None Remember Thee." The melody is pretty, in the Bellini style, the which to say is a compliment. The harmony, or accompaniment, might have been better.

LOVE ON. A Ballad. The Poetry by FRANCIS PAGET WATSON, Esq. The Music by ROBERT GUYLOTT. Turner, Poultry.

This is a response to the Hon. Mrs. Norton's "Love Not." We hate parodies. The melody is flowing and pretty; but when will another musical Lucian appear, and assert the right of E flat against D sharp?

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—On Monday night, this fascinating resort was opened with a series of musical and pantomimic entertainments, which appeared to give satisfaction to a very numerous company. There were the old vocal favourites, with new introductions, in the orchestra, al fresco; the ballet of the "Vivandière," and comic pantomime in the rotunda, &c.; a brilliant display of fireworks; and 'rack punch ad libitum, wherewith to protract the festivities of the night. The gala was the first of a series of six, announced to be the last previous to "the royal property" being razed to the ground, and covered with brick and mortar. The illuminated arcades, the glittering orchestra, and the superb saloons, were nearly as varied as ever; though, perchance, the recollection of "the light of other days," and the painful "farewell" may have dimmed the splendour of the fairy scene. The gala was repeated on Wednesday and Friday; and the reduced price of admission must have afforded thousands an opportunity of witnessing this said-to-be last of the glories of Vauxhall. There are to be three more nights next week, for which attractive entertainments are provided; and, as the weather promises to be fine, no doubt the gardens will close with éclat.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—Mr. Webster, the new lessee of this favourite house of entertainment, has made some vast improvements in every department of its interior. We cannot do better than borrow a description of them from a graphic contemporary:—"On that part of the premises occupied by the stage, the whole of the walls, which were previously in a very bad state, have been underbuilt throughout with brick and cement. And an excavation has been formed at the back of the stage of such extent as to afford space for additional scenic effects by sinking traps, &c., as well as to contain all the scenery not in actual use. An entirely new stage has been made, the whole of which is so constructed as to rise and fall by machinery, thereby discarding the old and cumbrous system of ropes and pullies. Extensive property-rooms have been formed beneath and adjoining the stage, as has also a light and spacious green-room at the back. In the dressing-rooms every attention seems to have been paid to the comfort of their future inmates, being well lighted with gas, and having a liberal supply of water laid on. In the front of the house the forms of the public and private boxes are altered, so that they now all radiate from the centre of the proscenium. The pit is extended, and the seats lowered and more equally divided The slips and gallery have also been altered in a similar manner, and in the saloon a large window has been pierced, so as to afford complete ventilation. The approach to the private boxes, so inconvenient and so much complained of in the old house, is greatly improved, as parties can now reach them by a new staircase, instead of being compelled to cross the stage, as was formerly the case, and the size of the boxes themselves has been much increased. The house is lighted by a central chandelier of glass, containing a number of small jets of gas, which produce a very brilliant effect. The ventilation, formerly so bad, appears to have been particularly attended to, copious supplies of fresh air being encouraged in such situations as will not interfere with the comfort of the audience, whilst the warm respired air will be drawn off upwards through the dome, and be thrown off by a cowl of five feet diameter placed upon the roof. The decorations of the house are of the simplest character, the colours being white and gold, and the boxes being lined with chintz of a handsome pattern, and furnished with crimson velvet cushions and curtains. The effect is remarkably good." The theatre will open this evening with several novelties.

Taglioni is now at Brussels, where the eminent French actress, Mdlle. Rachel, is also residing.

The campaign for the season is about to commence, poor Covent Garden lying idle still. The active lessee of Drury Lane has been most industrious. His prospectus for the coming season shows that the entertainments will be limited to opera and ballet, even more strictly than last year. On the list of his operatic company stands the charming vocalist Anna Thillon, who in one opera alone drew crowds to the Princess' Theatre for successive weeks. Madame Balfe, Miss Delcy (who made a successful debût at this house in 1839), Miss Poole, Mr. Burdini, Mr. Weiss (both from the Princess'), and Mr. D. W. King, are new engagements, and the vocalists of last year, Miss Rainforth, Miss Romer, Miss Betts, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Stretton, and Mr. Borrani, are retained. M. Duprez, whose name is announced, will probably not make his appearance till late in the season. Mademoiselle Carlotta Grisi is promised, and two very good engagements in the ballet department have been made in the persons of Mademoiselle Adelaide Dumilatre and Mademoiselle Planquet. The first of these appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre at the commencement of 1843, and was universally acknowledged to be a most graceful dancer. Since that period she has advanced in her profession at Paris, and has sustained principal rôles at the Academie. The progress which Mademoiselle Planquet made this year at the Opera is well-known to all the habitués. Miss Clara Webster (a rising dancer), Miss O'Bryan, and Madame Giubilei, also appear in the ballet list; while the male portion is very strong, including Petipa, Albert, Coralli and Montessu, and our own eccentric George Wieland. The novelties of the season are to be Auber's "Sirène" (for Thillon), "Anna Bolena" (for Madame Balfe), an opera by Balfe, another by Benedict, who is appointed musical director for the season, and a ballet called "Le Corsaire. Mr. Bunn's prospectus, printed on paper, with a border in imitation of lace, is exceedingly neat and elegant. The theatre (Drury Lane), will open next Monday with the opera of the "Bohemian Girl" and a new ballet.

SIR ROBERT AND LADY SALE.—These distinguished persons, with their daughter, Mrs. Stuart, and her son, arrived in Liverpool from Londonderry by the Mercury steamer, Captain Machlachlen, on Wednesday morning, and immediately proceeded to the residence of W. A. Brown, Esq., Everton, where they will remain during their stay. In the course of the day the Mayor and his lady, Mrs. Sands, waited upon Sir Robert and Lady Sale, and accompanied by the remainder of the party, set out on a tour of inspection through the town, calling first at the Town Hall, thence to the Exchange and Underwriter's Rooms, Custom House, Albert Dock, Prince's Dock, St. John's Market, and the principal streets, and other objects worthy of attention. Their reception at each and all of these places was most enthusiastic, and must have been truly gratifying to the feelings of the gallant hero, his lady and family, who appeared to be as much objects of interest as Sir Robert himself, and Lady Sale more so, if possible. The East India Association presented, through their chairman, Charles Turner, Esq., an address of congratulation to Sir Robert Sale, in which they acknowledge deeply and gratefully the services he had rendered his country and the commercial public by achievements in the East. Lady Sale looked well; she wore a black watered silk dress, white satin bonnet, edged with crape; and in answer to a question as to her health, said she felt quite recovered.

THE FRENCH NANY.—The Presse gives the following as the official state of the French navy:—It consists of 23 ships of the line, 29 frigates, 379-24ths of ships of the line on the stocks, and 277,24ths of frigates, 43 steam-vessels, representing a force of 7340 horse power; 16 or 17 of these are ready for sea at the shortest notice; 18 steam-boats in course of construction, 18 trans-Atlantic steam-packets, 24 steam-packets of from 220 to 250 horse-power, employed by the Post-office in carrying mails in the Levant, to Alexandria, Corsica, and England.—(These vessels are not calculated to carry heavy guns.) The class of seamen for 1844 amounts to 122,025 men, but of this number only 62,000 may be regarded as able seamen.

THE DISCOVERY OF FIRE.—Fire was entirely unknown to many of the nations of antiquity, and even at the present day it is unknown in some parts of Africa. The inhabitants of the Marion Islands, which were discovered in 1551, had no idea of fire, and expressed the greatest astonishment on first beholding it—believing it to be some living animal which fed on wood.

It is odd enough that a sheep when dead should turn into mutton, all but its head; for while we ask for a leg or shoulder of mutton, we never ask for a mutton's head. But there is a fruit which changes its name still oftener; grapes are so called when fresh, raisins when dried, and plums when in a pudding.

Life is a dream of time, from which death awakens us to the realities of eternity.

MORE INCENDIARISM IN SUFFOLK.—A farm in the occupation of Mr. Silverstone, of Saxham, Suffolk, was fired in three places on Saturday night last. This makes the third incendiary fire that has taken place in this parish within the fortnight.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The King of Prussia has just created a new branch of administration under the title of "Ministry of Grievances," the object of which is to pay special attention to such complaints as the citizens may have to make against ecclesiastical, administrative, and judicial functionaries. [This seems a very useful sort of institution, but the members of the office are not likely to enjoy a sinecure.]

A few days ago, the flax mills of Messrs. Calernaut and Co., near Chollet, (France) were burned to the ground, with the exception of a small part of the building. The loss is estimated at 600,000f., but the proprietors are insured.

Some rather serious disturbances took place at Presburg on the 8th instant, between the inhabitants and some of the persons attached to the service of the Deputies of the Diet. It became necessary to call out an armed force, and before the tumult could be quelled one man was killed, and sixteen were wounded.

We learn from Geneva, that the house of Voltaire, advertised for sale during the last 12 months at 60,000 francs, remains as yet without a purchaser. The bed and furniture of this principal engine of the French revolution are still exhibited to the curiosity of travellers.

The King of Naples, with the view of perpetually preserving the Alfresco paintings, disinterred from the ruins of Pompeii, the lustre of whose colours are known to fade on exposure to the air, has employed artists of the greatest celebrity to imitate them on the walls of his own palace at Naples.

The Hanoverian Journal of the 18th September brings accounts of a dreadful fire at Clausthat (a town of 10,000 inhabitants) which took place in the night of the 15th of this month. Twelve or thirteen dwelling houses, and as many out-buildings, including many public institutions, were destroyed. Above 3000 persons are without shelter, and the loss of property cannot be less than 300,000 dollars.

Madame Taglioni is said to have accepted an engagement in the United States for one year; £10,000 being secured to the fair Sylphide, with probable contingencies of a much larger sum. With this tour La Sylphide takes leave of the stage, and settles down for life at her villa, on the banks of the Lake of Como.

Mr. Charles Tomkins, an eminent scene-painter of Drury Lane and the Lyceum Theatres, died last week. He had been for several months under restraint in a private asylum. His age was only 44.

Mr. Holman, the blind traveller, who was recently at Venice, is about to proceed by Trieste on an extensive journey. He has visited, amongst other objects of interest, the celebrated Cathedral of St. Mark, at Venice; examining its various details, and ascertaining by the touch the most minute admeasurements. Mr. Holman intends to publish the result of his inquiries.

The Brussels Gazette states that on Monday last, a farmer was robbed and murdered on a public road near Malines.

The largest salmon taken in the Highland streams this season weighed 27lbs. This fine fish was landed by Mr. Ella, after an hour's play, without any assistance, and with a single gut line, in the waters of Arndilly, the property of Wm. Grant Macdowall, Esq.

There is to be an exhibition of the products of industry next year at Vienna, but it will be confined to the manufactures of Austria; whereas the Berlin exhibition includes the products of the whole of Germany. The Emperor of Austria intends, it is said, to create a special order of merit for the manufacturers who shall be declared worthy of it, and the possessor of the decoration will be declared noble; but his nobility is not to be hereditary.

Tsech, who, it will be recollected, attempted to assassinate the King of Prussia, has been tried, and sentenced to be broken on the wheel. Tsech received the notification of his sentence with perfect calmness, declined exercising his right of appeal, and has since not only retained an imperturbable indifference, but even assumed a haughty and arrogant demeanour. It is, however, reported that an ex officio appeal will be laid before the Royal Court of Berlin.

The Austrian Government have given orders to arrest all persons found jobbing in public securities in the streets or elsewhere after the Exchange hours.

The revolutionary Italians who are at Malta, and who have been endeavouring to enrol men at Corfu and on the coast of Albania, for a new descent on the Papal States, have entirely failed in their attempts.

A Stockholm journal of the 10th instant says it is generally understood in Sweden that the Emperor of Morocco has abandoned all claim to tribute from Sweden and Denmark.

The project of still further facilitating the intercourse between Europe and India, by means of a railway across the Isthmus of Suez, is resumed, and hopes are still entertained of its being put into a train for an early accomplishment of the important design.

The railroad from Altona to Kiel was opened on the 18th, in honour of the anniversary of the birth of the King of Denmark. Prince Frederick of Holstein accompanied the municipality of Altona in the experimental trip.

A letter from Gottingen of the 14th announces the death, at the age of seventy-nine, of M. Gustave Hugo, a celebrated writer, and one of the Councillors of Justice of the Hanoverian Government.

The Brussels journals of Saturday state that Mr. Dyce Sombre had arrived in that capital, and that he is on his way to London.

At a meeting of proprietors of East India Company's Stock, held on Wednesday morning, the motion for a grant of an annuity of £1000 to Sir William Nott, was confirmed without a dissentient voice.

Nearly 40,000 letters were received for delivery at the Brighton Post Office during the week ending Saturday last.

According to a Paris letter, a statue of Colbert is about to be erected at Rheims, his native city.

The German papers announce the accession of Bohemia to the German Customs Union for a period limited to five years, and attach considerable importance to the event, as completing the Zollverein on the East.

The Sixth Scientific Congress of Italy is now going on at Milan, and appears to be a very brilliant one. At the first general meeting of the society at the Palace of Brera, the statue of the celebrated Cavalieri, the Galileo of Milan, was inaugurated. The Viceroy of Italy was present, Count Borromeo presided, and M. Piola pronounced the introductory discourse.

The Grand Council of the Valais, in its last sitting, adopted the new constitution by a majority of fifty-three votes; but the first vote is reserved for the declaration of the primary assemblies, which are convoked for the 20th of next month.

The French Government is making great improvements in the post-office. Since the first of the present month letters of value or importance can be placed under the more immediate care of the post-office functionaries, with the privilege of paying the postage before hand or not, as may be convenient. The towns on the line of the Rouen and Orleans railway have two, and in some places three deliveries of letters a day.

A letter from Jassy, Sept. 4. says:—"Our country also is about to have its railroads. Prince Stourdza, who has invested capital in almost all the great railroads of Germany, intends getting one constructed from Zurin, on the frontier of Austrian Gallicia, to Galatz, situated at the conflux of the Pruth and the Danube, so as to pass through the whole of Moldavia, and to form the prolongation of that which the States of Gallicia are getting executed from Oswieczyn (where one of the branches of the northern line of the Emperor Ferdinand is to end) to the frontier of Moldavia."

The Cologne Gazette states that the grand deputation appointed by the Senate and Burghers of Hamburgh to decide on the question of the treaties for the navigation of the Elbe has recommended their ratification.

FOOT-RACING FOR A SILVER CUP.—On Wednesday an interesting foot-race was contested at the Balloon Gardens, Battersea, and from the well-known celebrity of the men who had entered their names, a very large number of spectators were present. The distance contested was six hundred yards, and to leap ten hurdles. The subjoined is a list of the competitors:—John Smith, Mason, Byrom, Wyld, and E. Smith, of London; Badcock, of Birmingham, Hopewell, of Nottingham; and Moon, of Sussex. In betting, Badcock was favourite. The men appeared at the starting-mark attired in a racing costume, and at the signal they went away at a sharp rate; Smith, Badcock, and Byrom taking the lead, the others falling into the rear; Badcock cleared the hurdles in fine style, Smith pursuing him closely, and running hard for the winning goal. Byrom was, when within 200 yards off the last hurdle, thirty yards behind his opponents, when he made a very great exertion, and succeeded in coming up, and a spirited race ensued, which terminated by Smith coming in first, Byrom second, Badcock third. Very large sums of money changed hands; the ground was in excellent condition, and the affair well arranged.

THE PRINTER.—"I pity the printer," said my uncle Toby. "He's a poo creature," rejoined Trim. "How so?" said my uncle. "Because, in the first place," continued the Corporal, looking full upon my uncle, "because he must endeavour to please everybody. In the negligence of a moment, perhaps, a small paragraph pops upon him; he hastily throws it to the compositor; it is inserted; and he is ruined to all tents and purposes." "Too much the case, Trim," said my uncle, with a deep sigh; "too—much—the—case." "And, please your honour," continued Trim, elevating his voice and striking into an imploring attitude, "this is not the whole." "Go on, Trim," said my uncle, feelingly. "The printer, sometimes," pursued the Corporal, "hits upon a piece that pleases him mightily; and he thinks it cannot but go down with his subscribers. But, alas! Sir, who can calculate the human mind? He inserts it, and it is all over with him. They forgive others, but they cannot forgive a printer. He has a host to print for, and every one sets up for a critic. The pretty Miss exclaims, 'Why don't he give us more poetry, marriages, and bon mots?—away with these stale pieces.' The politician claps his specs on his nose, and reads it over in search of a violent invective; he finds none, takes his specs off, folds them, and sticks them in his pocket, declaring the paper good for nothing but to burn. So it goes. Every one thinks it ought to be printed expressly for himself, as he is a subscriber; and yet, after all this complaining, would you believe it, Sir." says the Corporal, clasping his hands beseechingly, "would you believe it, Sir, there are some subscribers who do not hesitate to cheat the printer out of his pay? Our army swore terribly in Flanders, but they never did anything so bad as that!" "Never!" said my uncle Toby, emphatically.—American paper.

THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT FORDING THE GARRY.

(Continued from page 201).

tint on the rich foliage round the castle, it might be supposed that spring was going to return once more before the coming winter. Yesterday the Prince went out grouse shooting on the moors in front of the castle, and her Majesty having expressed a desire to witness the sport, the pony was ordered, and her Majesty set forth to ascend the neighbouring hill, which commands an extensive view of the moors. Her Majesty was accompanied by Lord Glenlyon, who walked by the side of the pony, and the gilly, Sandy Macara, who has had the honour of leading her Majesty's pony during her rambles.

The Prince shot six pair of grouse, which were immediately forwarded to the castle. His Royal Highness had intended to go deer-stalking yesterday in Glen Tilt, but as the wind was unfavourable the projected excursion was deemed impracticable. Lady Glenlyon and Lady Canning drove out in the afternoon to visit Mr. Butler, of Fascala.

Military law is adhered to most rigidly by her Majesty's guard of Athol Highlanders. Lord Glenlyon's brother, the Hon. Captain Murray, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, who has lately arrived here, was refused admittance by the guard, because he was not furnished with the necessary countersign, although he offered to write an order for his own admission. We need scarcely mention that the hon. gentleman has since succeeded in gaining access to his noble brother's domain; but whilst, the circumstance has occasioned some amusement, it has also evinced the strictness with which these fine fellows perform their duty.

Orders have been received on board the royal steam-yacht, Victoria and Albert, to have everything ready for her Majesty's embarkation on Monday, the 30th inst., on which day her Majesty has signified her intention of leaving Scotland on her return voyage. The yacht is still lying in the river Tay, off Dundee, and it is understood that her Majesty will embark at the same place where she landed, and that the royal party will leave Blair Athol on Monday morning immediately after breakfast, and arrive in Dundee between three and four o'clock the same afternoon, whence they will proceed at once on board the yacht. By this arrangement her Majesty will arrive at Woolwich near mid-day on Wednesday. The voyage from the river to Dundee occupied upwards of forty-two hours, and, calculating that it will take the same to return, should her Majesty embark at Dundee at four o'clock on Monday, the 30th inst., the yacht will reach Woolwich on Wednesday, Oct. 2, about ten o'clock.

[So far we quote the statement of a contemporary, for whose opinions altogether we are not responsible.]

Another account says, "It is now arranged that the Queen will leave Blair Athol on Tuesday, the 1st of October, and not Monday, the 30th of September. The reason assigned for the change is, that there would be very extensive preparations to make on the day preceding the journey, and that day being the Sabbath, which in Scotland is observed with very great strictness, there would be some difficulty and inconvenience in making the necessary arrangements."

It is generally understood that her Majesty has been so much gratified with her visit to the Highlands, that she will return to Blair Athol next summer. Orders have been given for a full-dress of tartan, for, shooting, for his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and this has given rise to the report that the Prince is about to don the kilt. Her Majesty will also, as soon as the period of Court mourning has expired, have several dresses of tartan made, and the Scottish fabrics bid fair to be very fashionable in Court circles during the approaching winter.

The large engraving at page 200 illustrates the picturesque locality of Glen Tilt, wherein are vast herds of wild deer, said to number from 12,000 to 15,000. They are driven down from the hill in herds, three of them being generally in advance of the others.

The banks of the Tilt, along the whole of the glen, are beautifully wooded for some distance up the sides, and there is a succession of fine romantic walks and drives. Further on, at the Fender. a small tributary stream which falls into the Tilt, there are some pretty falls, but at this season the volume of water is so much reduced that they lose much of their striking effect. A few miles higher up, the sides of the glen become more naked and barren, and the celebrated geologist, Dr. Hutton, here discovered some junctions of the primary and secondary strata, which so delighted him, that his guides thought he had discovered a mine of gold, and the story runs that several of the peasants spent many days after Dr. Hutton's departure in digging about the neighbourhood, in the hope of finding the golden treasure. On the right, near the rivulet of Torhainn, her Majesty was pointed out the remains of a sylvan palace of great extent, which had been built by a former Earl of Athol, in order to entertain King James V., the Pope's Legate, and other visitors of distinction. When the palace had served its purpose, it is said that it was ordered to be burnt, that strangers might be impressed with a high notion of the easy circumstances in which the Scottish nobility lived. The probability is that the sylvan mansion was destroyed by accident.

The original sketch of the above engraving has been submitted to her Majesty, who has been pleased to express approval of its spirit and fidelity.

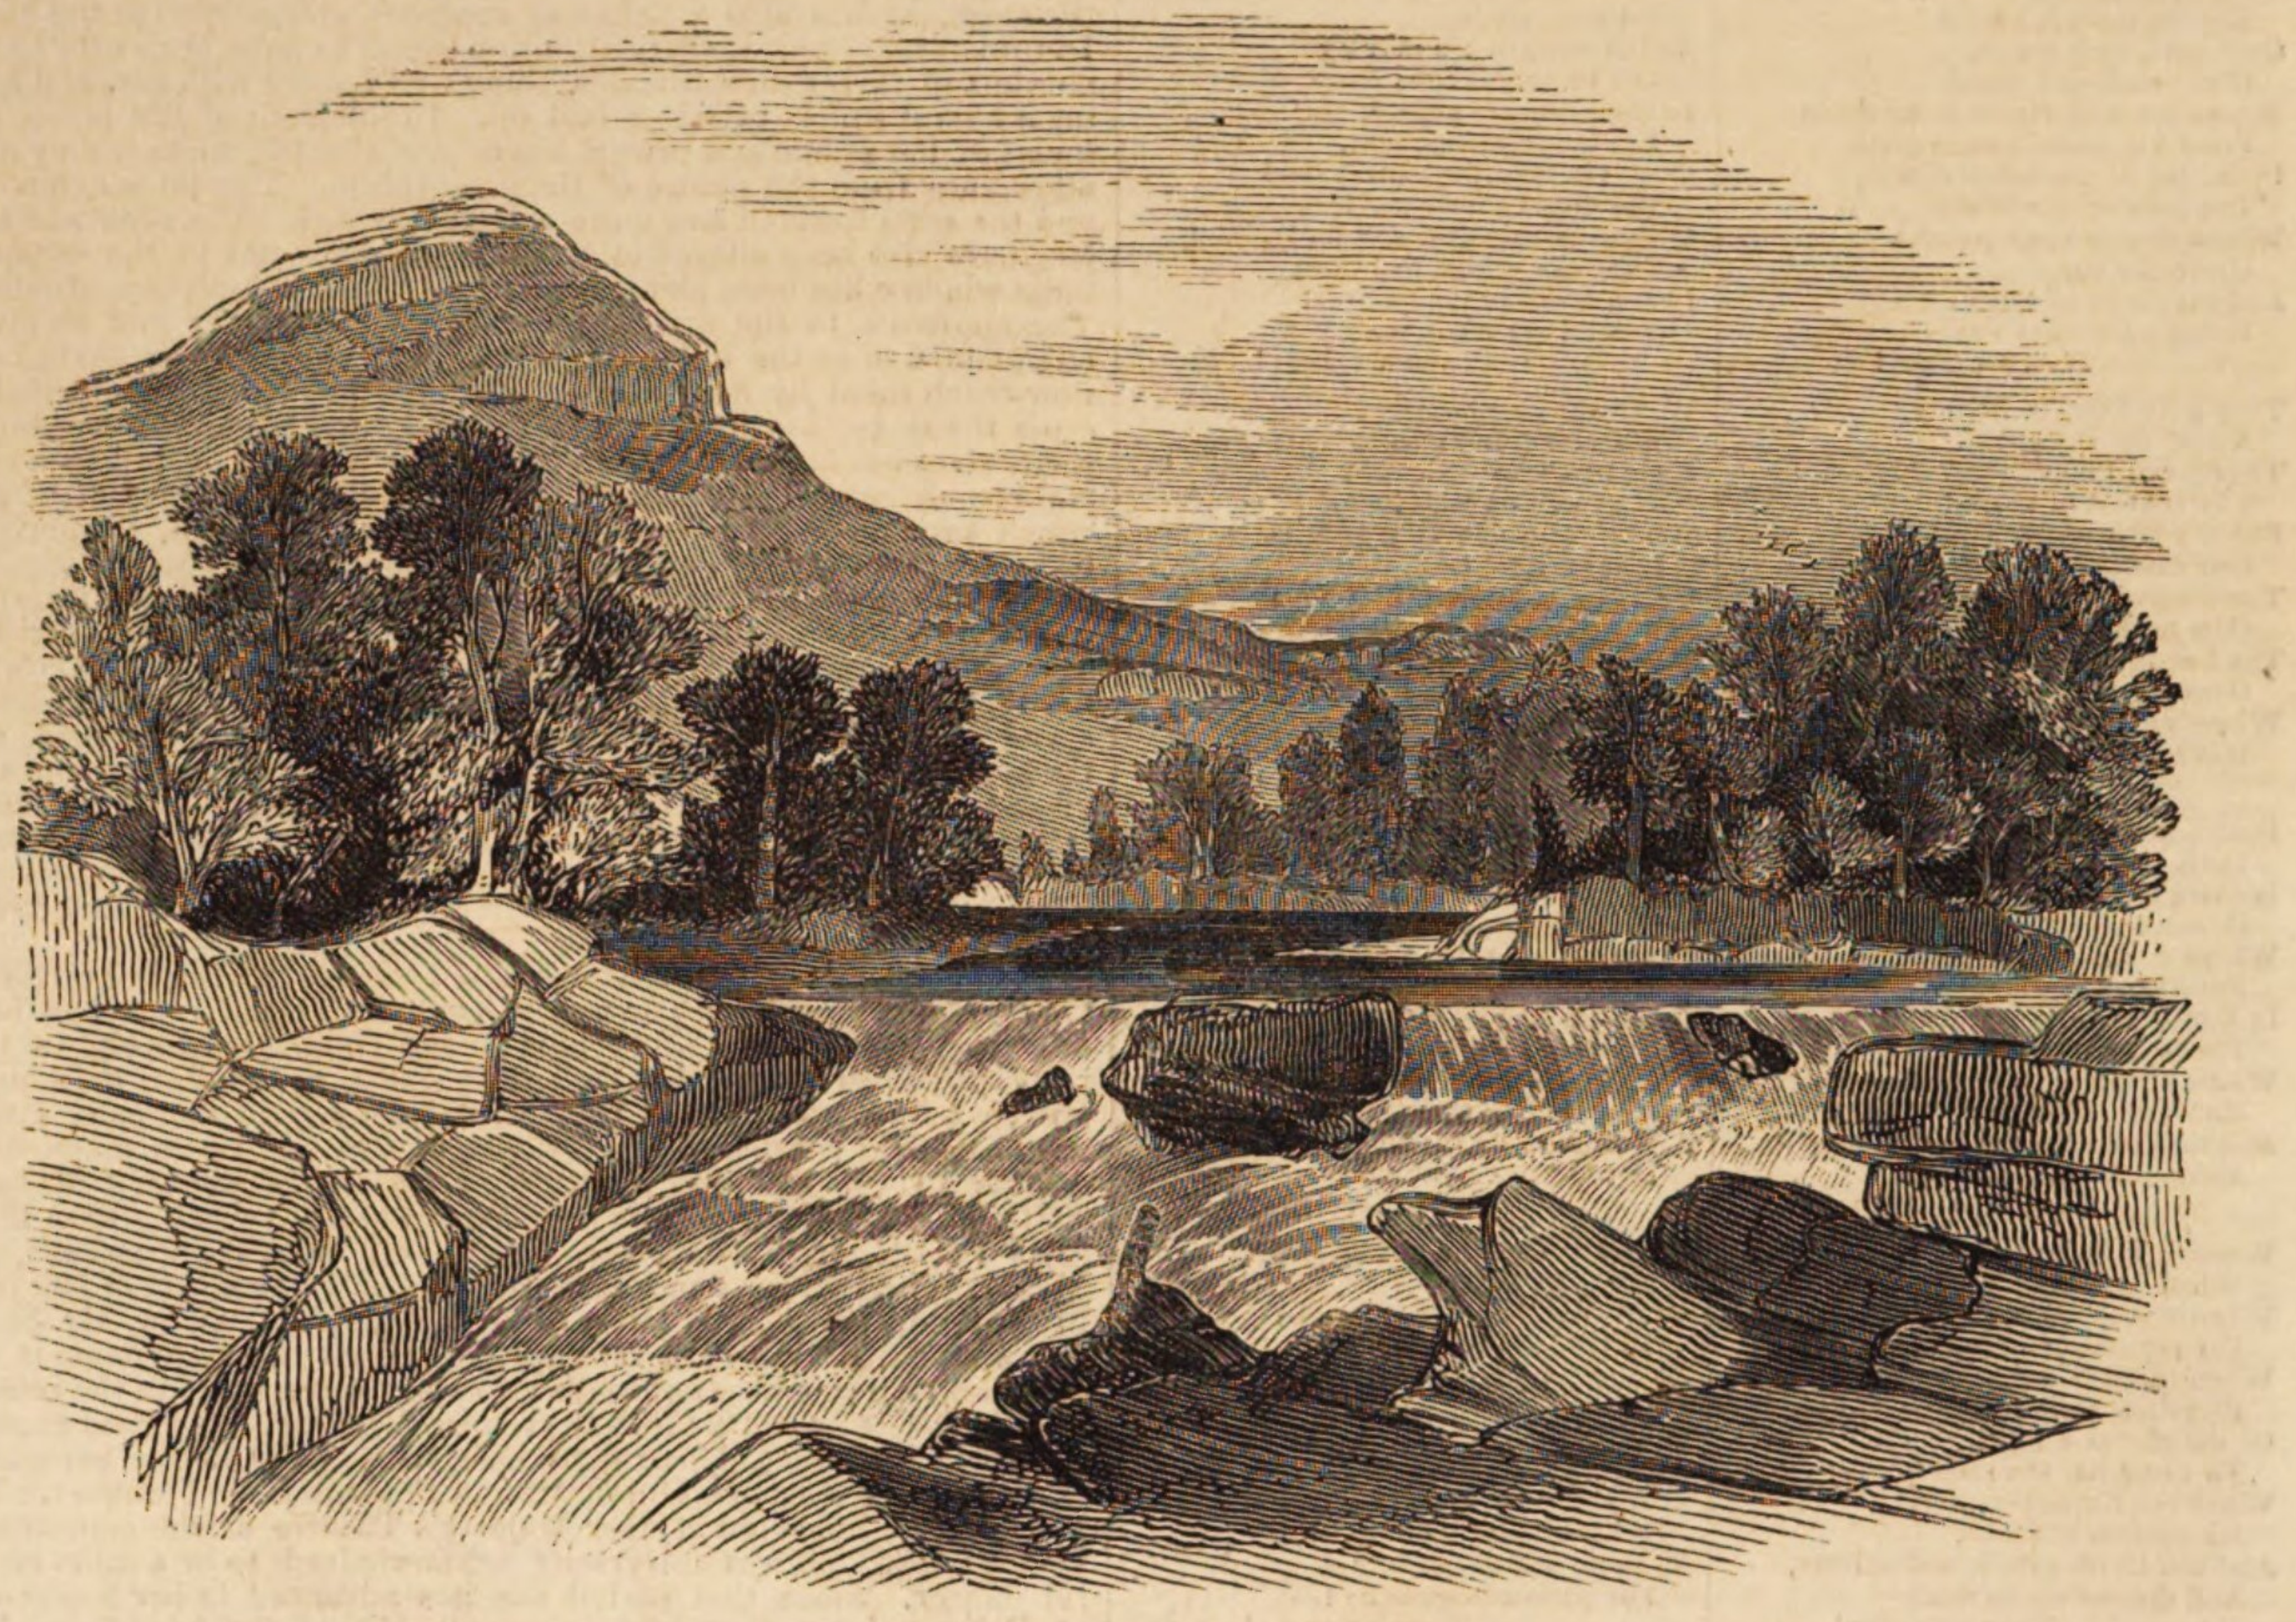
The large engraving, upon the opposite page, shows the most picturesque view of Blair Castle and Glen Tilt, sketched from the Hill of Tulloch.

Above this illustration is a view of the Lower Falls of Bruar, one of the beautiful scenes which our artist has had the honour of sketching for her Majesty.

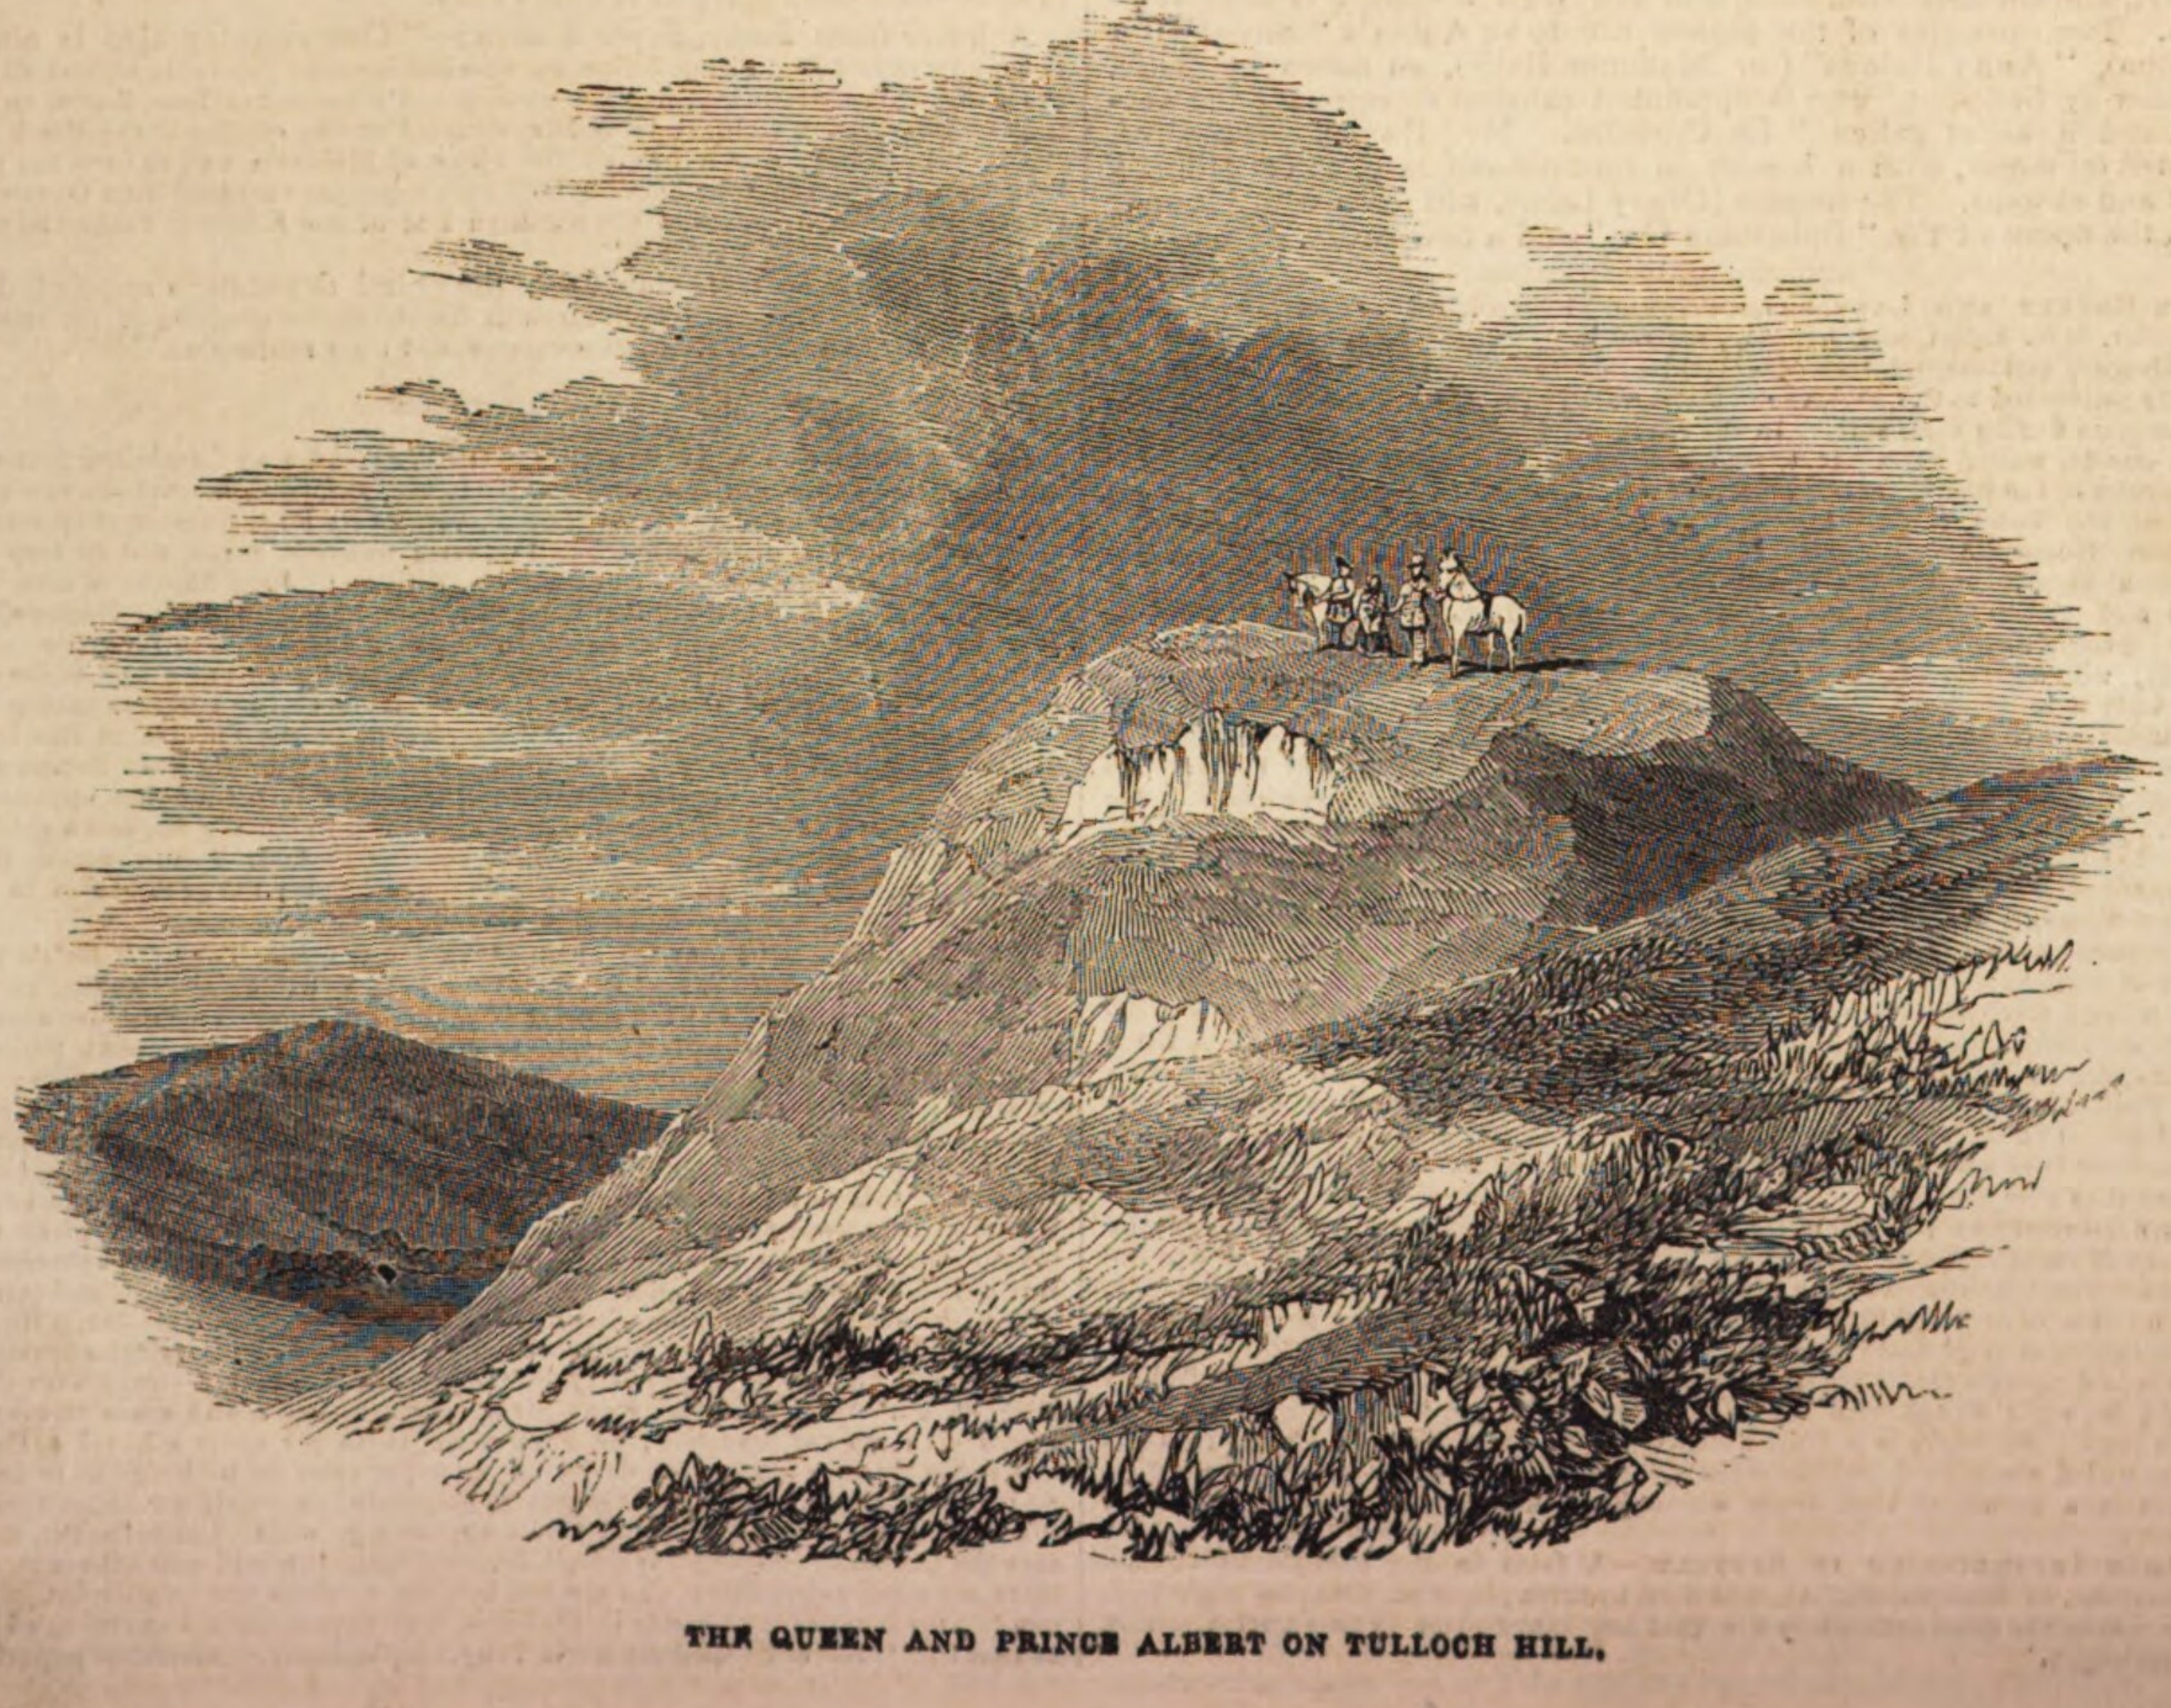
In the other scene, Prince Albert and Lord Glenlyon are stalking deer. "That it is a chase," says Mr. Scrope, "which throws all other field sports in the background, and, indeed, makes them appear wholly insignificant, no one, who has been initiated in it, will attempt to deny. The beautiful motions of the deer, his picturesque and noble appearance, his sagacity, and the skilful generalship which can alone insure success in the pursuit of him, keep the mind in a state of pleasurable excitement."

"Magnificent creature! to reach thee I strain
Through forest and glen, over mountain and plain;
Yet, now thou art fallen, thy fate I deplore,
And lament that the reign of thy greatness is o'er."

The HON. T. LIDDELL.



THE FALLS OF THE TUMMELL.

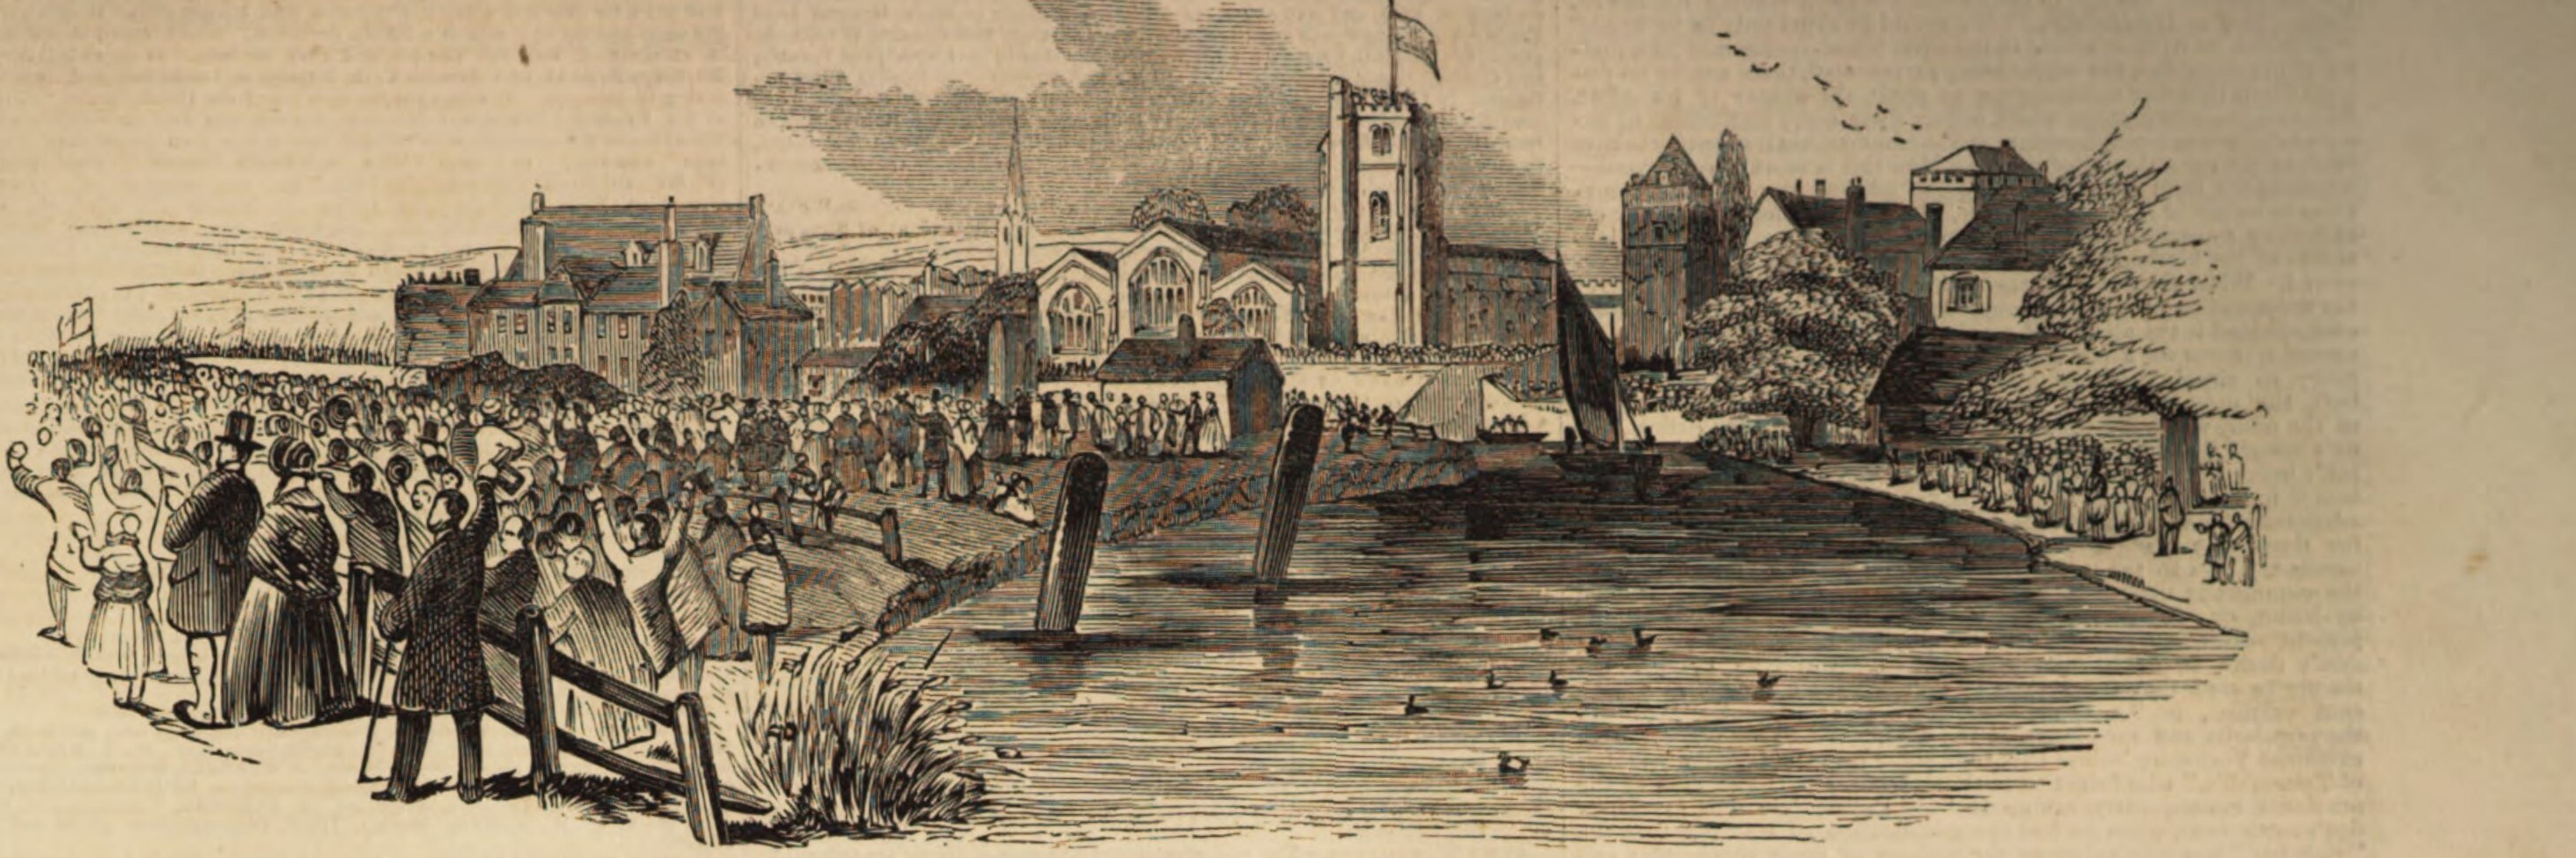


THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT ON TULLOCH HILL.

BUST OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—We are gratified to learn that the Duke of Wellington has intimated to the authorities of Eton College that it is his grace's intention to present to that institution a bust of himself.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—On Tuesday morning the marriage of Henry Tufnell, Esq., M.P., and the Hon. Frances Byng, second daughter of General Lord Strafford, G.C.B., and niece to G. Byng, Esq., M.P. for Middlesex, was solemnized in the parish church of St. Marylebone. The Misses Hope Vere, and Miss Tufnell were bridesmaids. The same day the Rev. Edgell Wyett Edgell, rector of North Cray, was married to the Hon. Henrietta Otway Cave, youngest daughter of the Baroness Braye and the late Henry Otway, Esq., of Stamford Hall, Leicestershire. The Rev. Lord William Somerset, canon of Bristol, eldest surviving son of Henry, fifth Duke of Beaufort, and uncle of the present Duke, was married on Tuesday last, at Filton Church, Gloucestershire, to Frances, widow of the late Mr. Cornelius O'Callaghan, of Ballynahinch, county Clare. We understand the marriage of the Hon. Frederick Paul Methuen and Miss Horatia Sandford, only daughter and heiress of the Rev. John Sandford, of Connaught-place, will be solemnised early in the ensuing month.

THE INAUGURATION OF THE STATUE OF DUQUESNE AT DIEPPE.—The town of Dieppe on Sunday, from sunrise to long after nightfall, presented a scene of gaiety characteristic of the grand fête-days of the French. The occasion was the inauguration of the statue of Duquesne, a French admiral, born in the town in 1610, which had been erected in the Place Royale, facing from St. Jacques to the Hotel de Ville. The vessels in the harbour and offing were decorated with the tricolour, as was likewise the Place Royale, the middle portion of which had been separated from the remainder of the square for the purpose of affording room for the military, the National Guard, and deputations from the various trades connected with ship building, to attend the inauguration. At sunrise the commencement of the fête was announced by salutes fired from the Government steamers in the roads, as well as from the Castle and batteries. Towards noon the military, marines, and National Guards, a portion of them habited in the costume of the time of Duquesne, went through their evolutions on the Place, in front of the Hotel des Bains, whence they marched round the town, assembling at the Place Royal. Precisely at three o'clock, the Place being crowded to excess, some speeches were made by the authorities, commemorative of the achievements of Duquesne, and at a given signal the statue, which is of bronze and of colossal dimensions, was uncovered amidst the plaudits of the multitude assembled to do honour to their deceased warrior and townsman, and salutes from the steamers and escarpments. A splendid display of fireworks took place in the evening, at the Castle, where a representation of the bombardment of Algiers was given on a grand scale. General Gerard, one of Napoleon's generals, was present, and Dieppe appeared to have at least doubled its population on the occasion.



OPENING OF THE MAIDSTONE BRANCH RAILWAY.

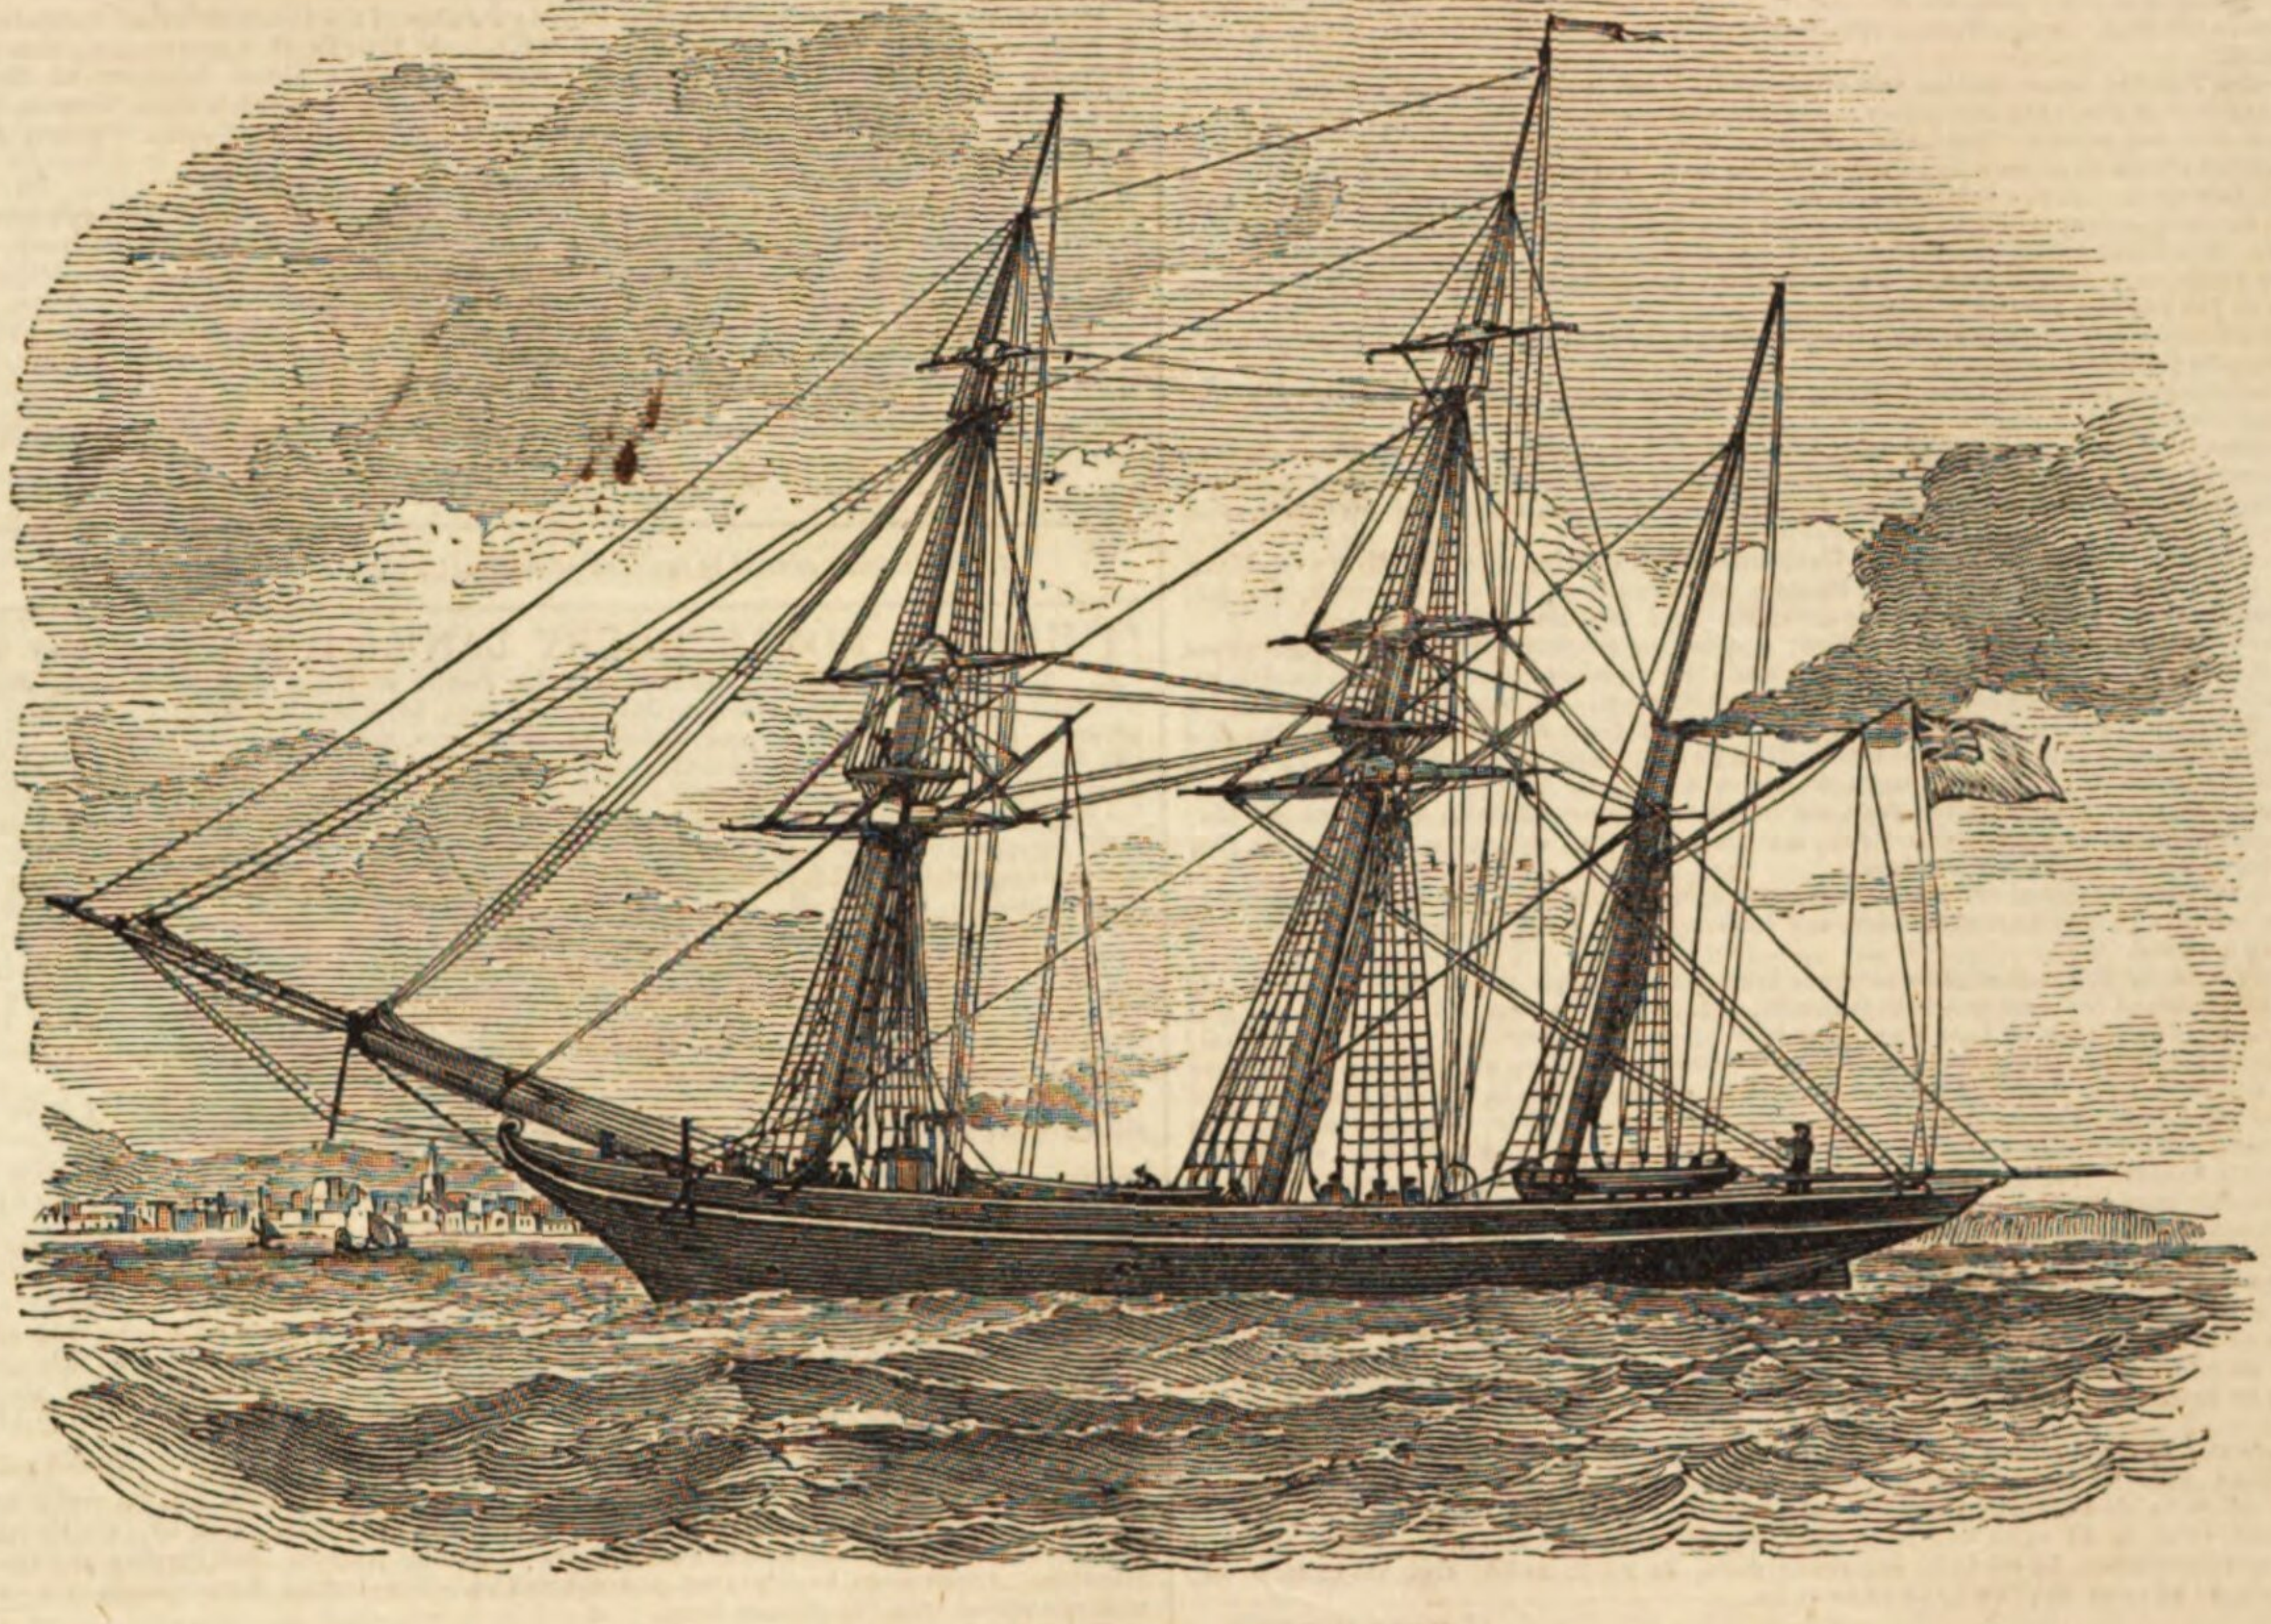
OPENING OF THE BRANCH RAILWAY FROM THE DOVER LINE TO MAIDSTONE.

Newton, of Wingham, writing of the "King's town" of Maidstone, in 1741, says, "The country almost every where round the town is full of populous villages, and good pleasant seats of the nobility and gentry. The greatest blemish is the roads, which used to be rough, stony, and narrow; but are now much mended and improved on every side of the town, to its very great advantage, and to the honour of several worthy gentlemen, who cheerfully contributed to so good a work." Much, however, remained to be done; the famous city of Caer-Medwag continued to our own day to be almost an isolated place. The roads, generally, were "soft," and the only good ones were rendered comparatively valueless by the steep hills in their course. The reproach of Maidstone is now wiped away. On Tuesday last a new branch railway, from the Paddock-wood station of the South-eastern line, put the town in close and easy communication with the metropolis, or the north, and with Folkestone and the continent, or the south. These great advantages—to say nothing of the greater moral ones likely to accrue to the benighted villagers of mid-Kent—seemed to have been fully appreciated by the mayor, jurats, and commonalty of Maidstone, for, on the occasion of opening the branch line, they gave the Directors and friends of the Dover Company an invitation to dine with them under circumstances of more than usual "jollification." Accordingly, at eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning last, a special train, richly dressed with flags and flowers, left the Bricklayers' Arms with the company, and, proceeding on its way, reached the Paddock-wood, a distance of forty-five miles, in little more than one hour and a half. Here the admirable signals recently adopted by the Company, were examined by the visitors, and their use, in connection with the new line, explained. Starting thence, the Maidstone branch, leaving the main line on the right, proceeds by a gentle inflection towards the beautiful wood crowned heights of Mereworth. Soon afterwards the river Medway appears, and then commences the picturesque scenery for which the course of the line is so justly celebrated. The valley of the "Med-Vaga," runs through the chart, marl, ragstone, and galt strata, till it reaches the Shanklin sand, beyond Wateringbury. These formations are proverbial throughout Kent and Surrey, for the beauty of their landscapes, but, in this direction, owing to their sweet variety, and the presence of an ever-shifting stream, they seem to reach their greatest perfection. The hills are clothed throughout with hop gardens, cherry and filbert orchards (the natural produce of the soil), and, occasionally, with fine patches of Holm oak and other celebrated denizens of the Southern Wealds. The boldness of Salvator's grouping seems, in fact, to be united in this charming valley with the softened tints of Claude or Gainsborough. On reaching Wateringbury station, Alderman Lucas, surrounded by his family and a large party of friends, was observed standing beneath a flag, on which were inscribed the words, "Old England, our Church, and our Queen," and loudly hailing the approach of the train. The example of the stout old "water-fencible" was followed by the inhabitants and peasantry assembled, and a scene of "Merrie England" followed.

The worthy Alderman, having thus, in his own words, "bowed to the times and circumstances," mounted the innovating train, and, at eighty-seven years of age, went on a line to Maidstone! Before reaching the terminus, from an elevation near East Farleigh, a splendid view of the town is gained. In the centre is seen Courtney's church of All Saints, and the adjoining college; and, in the background, a noble sweep of the chain of hills, which constitute the northern downs.

The branch is a single line of rails; but provision has also been made for the laying down of another line, should the amount of traffic render the addition necessary. The inclination of the line varies little from a dead level, and its course embraces a succession of somewhat sudden curves, conjoined by what Hogarth would have called, lines of beauty. The length is about nine miles.

After the arrival of the long-expected "first train," the scene at Maidstone became, in the best sense of the term, a holiday one. Trains ran up and down the line gratis. The shops were closed. Social parties were made between the inhabitants and the visitors, to explore the wonders of Allington Castle, Leeds Castle, Boxley Abbey, and other celebrated places in the neighbourhood. The directors and friends of the Company sat down, at five o'clock, to a most sumptuous dinner in the Town-hall. The ruder merry-makers burned tar-barrels in the street; and, finally, huzzaed the Londoners to their cozy seats in the return train to town at ten o'clock. Thus ended a memorable, and, to all parties, a happy day.



THE IRON STEAM SCREW COLLIER, "Q. E. D."

THE "Q. E. D." SCREW STEAM COLLIER.

A perfect novelty in the coal trade arrived in the river Thames, at the close of last week, and took in her moorings at the tier off Princes Stairs, Rotherhithe, where she has attracted considerable attention and curiosity. This was an iron vessel of handsome appearance, barque rigged, with taunt masts and square yards, the masts raking aft in a manner that is seldom seen except in the waters of the United States. The hull was built by Mr. Cootes, who is the owner, at Walker's-quay, near Newcastle, and is of peculiar construction, with a 20 horse power engine, by Hawthorn, which turns a screw propeller (a compound of several inventions), having four flies or flaps a right angles with each other, the bend of each flap at an angle of 45 degrees from the centre. Her length over all is 130 feet; breadth of beam, 27 feet 6 inches; tonnage by admeasurement, 273 tons, but capable of carrying 340 tons of coals, and with this weight her draught of water is 11 feet 9 inches abaft, and 10 feet 3 inches forward. Her hold is divided into separate chambers (so that injury to the bottom in one chamber will not affect the others), and each chamber has a false floor of sheet iron hermetically closed; and between the bottom and these floors are spaces to be filled with water by means of large taps, for the purpose of ballast—so that her only ballast is the liquid element which may, if required, be pumped out again in a very short time by the engine. Her bows are like the sharp end of a wedge rising to a lofty billet-head, and her overhanging stem projects much more than is customary; but, though low, the flatness of what is usually termed the counters must lift her to every swell, so as to render it next to impossible for a sea to break over the taffrail; but we fancy that when struck as she scuds aft, the concussion must be very great. On her stern is an armorial bearing, with the motto, "Spes mea Christus," and beneath these appears her name, the "Q. E. D., of Newcastle."

The cabin is commodious, with a raised roof surrounded with window-lights, enabling persons below to see what is passing upon deck. There are four sleeping apartments and a state-room for the Captain; a swinging compass is suspended, having a magnet on each side, and one before it, to counteract the attraction of the iron. Her shrouds are wire-rope served over, with a strong double screw to each shroud to set it up when slack without the smallest difficulty and with scarcely any labour. Her mainmast from the step to the cap is 65 feet in altitude, her mainyard 52 feet in squareness, and from the keel to the royal-truck the height is about 130 feet; the other masts and yards are in proportion, the mizenmast being of iron, and hollow, so as to form a funnel for the engine-fire, and it is not the least curious part about her to see the smoke issuing from the mizenmast head. This vessel was launched on St. Swithin's day (15th July), took in a cargo of coals at Newcastle (from 18 to 20 keels), but getting aground on the Hook of the Gunfleet Sand, in the Swin, was obliged to heave two or three keels of coals overboard. She laid ashore several hours, but sustained no damage. We are informed that she steers with ease, sails remarkably well, and when tried with the screw propeller, rather exceeded expectation. Much ingenuity has been displayed in putting her together, and we feel confident that the time is not far distant when our ships of the line will be fitted with engines and screw in a somewhat similar manner. Of the success of the constructor's experiment we trust that he may hereafter be enabled to say Q. E. D.

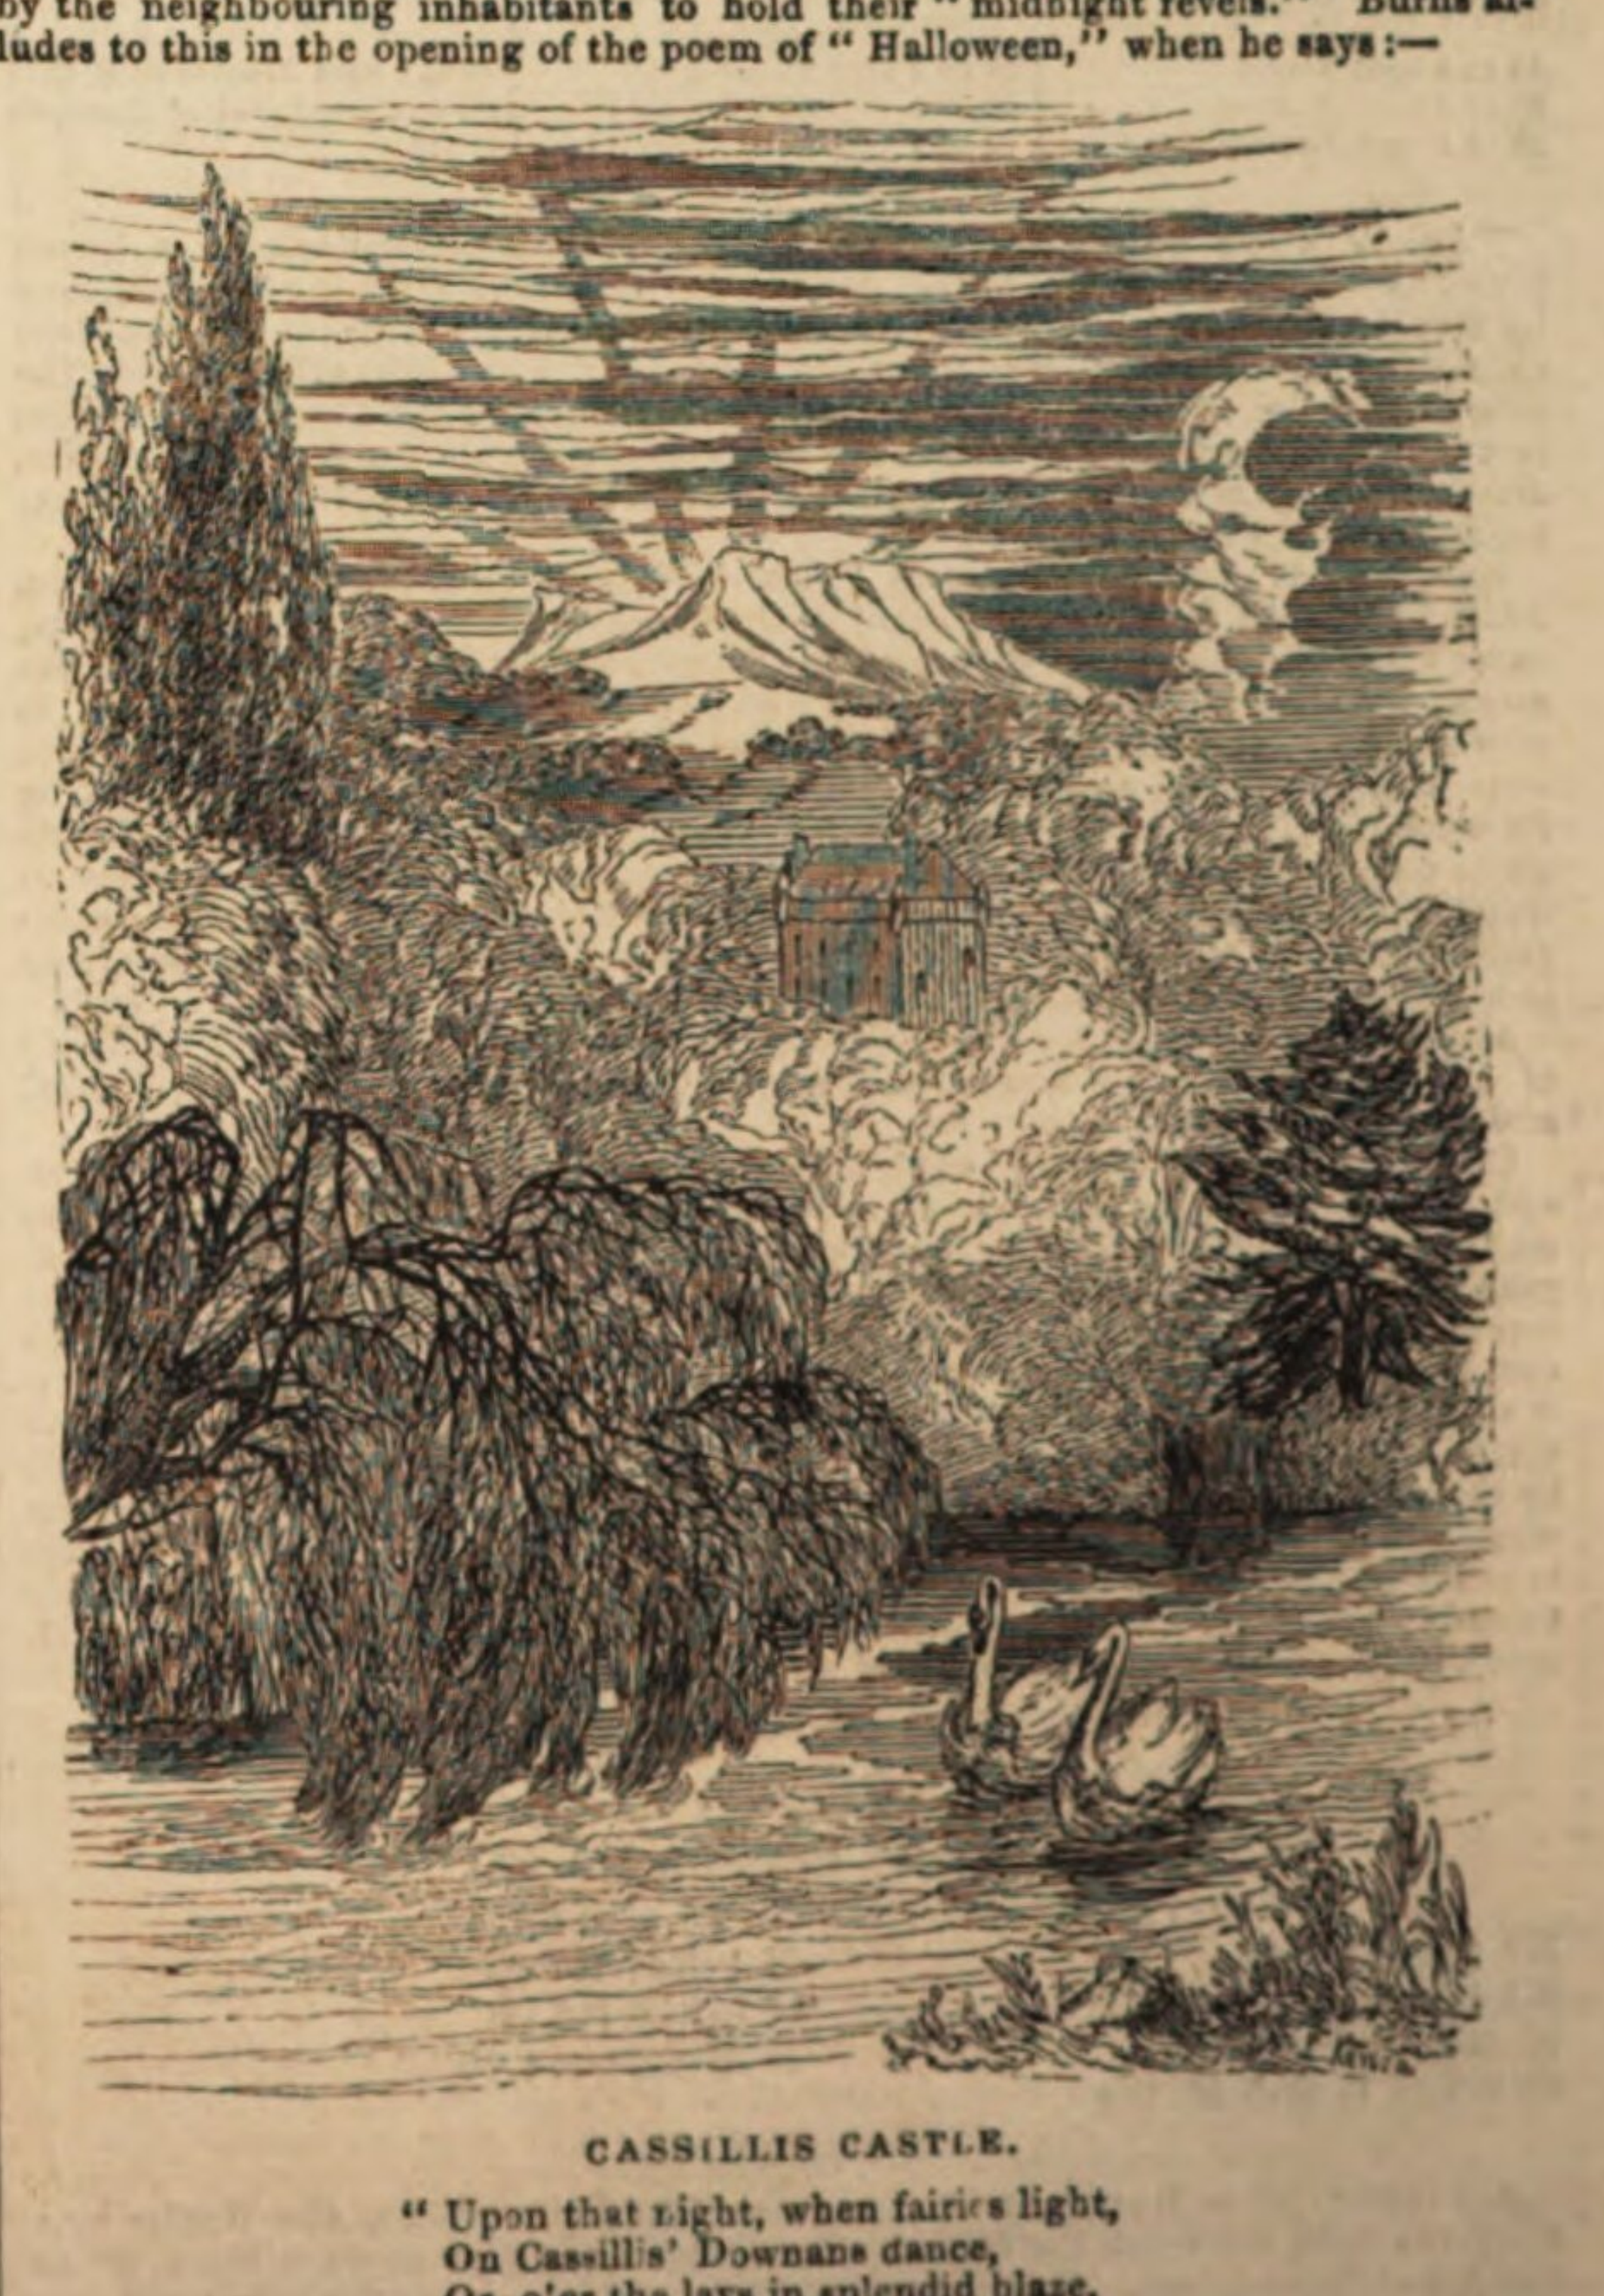
NOOKS AND CORNERS OF AULD SCOTLAND.

CASSILLIS CASTLE.

Cassillis Castle stands on a becautiful "haugh" on the left bank of the Doon, about a mile from the parish village of Dalrymple. The first mention that is made of it is, that it was transferred in the reign of David II., King of Scotland, from a family named Montgomery, to that of Sir John Kennedy, of Dunure direct male ancestor of the present Marquis of Ailsa. Tradition, as is usually the case among the castles of the "olden time," has handed to posterity (in the shape of a beautiful ballad, sung to an air entitled "Lady Cassillis' Lilt.") the following tale connected with Cassillis castle:—While John VI., Earl of Cassillis, was attending the assembly of divines at Westminster, his consort is said to have been seduced away from this house by a party of gipsies, headed by a lover in disguise; the consequence of this imprudence was, her confinement for life in a tower, in the neighbouring town of Maybole. The "Countess' room," a small chamber in the upper floor (from which the tradition represents the unlucky lady before mentioned as compelled to behold her lover and more than a dozen of his companions, as they hung on a tree below) is still shown, but is now a sleeping-room for servants.

The grounds, through which the "Bonnie Doon," made sacred by the muse of the poet Burns, "rins, wimplin, clear," are laid out in the modern style, and are eminently beautiful.

Behind the castle rise three or four small hills, called "the Cassillis Downans." On this enchanted ground it is, that the fays or fairies are supposed by the neighbouring inhabitants to hold their "midnight revels." Burns alludes to this in the opening of the poem of "Halloween," when he says:—



CASSILLIS CASTLE.

"Upon that night, when fairies light,
On Cassillis' Downans dance,
Or, o'er the lays in splendid blaze,
On sprightly coursers prance."

On the top of one of those hills is a circular mound, probably the remains of a fort, as a farm on slope of the hill bears the name of Dunree, obviously Dunrigh, the King's castle.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It may seem, at the first glance, a piece of barbarity to allude, under the head of "sport," to last Monday's town settling for the St. Leger; but, as Hamlet says, "We would be cruel only to be kind." Whether it be right or wrong to bet upon horse-racing may be a matter of opinion; but, the wager being perpetrated, there can be no dispute about its being unhandsome to cheat the winner of his gains. Still this is a contingency which occurs upon every settlement of accounts following a race meeting; and so common has it grown as to have become almost a matter of course. Now this is morally monstrous—we mean the term as relating to human affairs—beyond almost anything to be found in civilized policy. In London the whole business of betting, or very nearly all, is transacted at Tattersall's. There, nine-tenths of the betting-books are made, and turf balances paid and received. What shall be said, then, of a society such as this, towards the preservation of whose honour and honesty the only precaution ever adopted is the placing of a policeman on guard at the door of its assembly-room on a few especial days of the season? With a remedy so simple and so specific at hand, one can only attribute the present state of things to a moneymania, or madness of the odds, which drives men to consider a wager, like virtue, "its own reward," and to despise all ulterior prospects of profit. Tattersall's being the sole mart of metropolitan turf speculation, it follows that if means were used to ascertain the probable solvency of parties admitted as members, a reasonable prospect of security would exist for those who made contracts within its walls. This duty by no means attaches to the landlord or landlords of the premises, but to the community therein holding association. A committee, elected by ballot, or otherwise, should be provided before the end of the present season, to provide over the admissions for next year. We don't desire to devise the plan, or to canvass its details, but simply to state that the system of indiscriminate access, as at present existing, is "a heavy blow and a great discouragement" to the popularity and prosperity of the turf. We know ourselves an excellent Yorkshire 'squire that took some heavy bets of "a member of Tattersall's," who forgot to settle at Doncaster. The man of the provinces, consequently, ran up to "the Corner" in time for Monday's settlement, when he had the gratification of learning that the "member" was a defaulter to the melody of some thousands; and of being assured that when his debtor became "a member," the amount of his capital would not have paid turnpike for a walking stick. As this is the era of racing reform, something ought to be done for the ring: nay, never turn up your eyes, and your nose, at such a doctrine; recollect it is the arena for gambling, according to act of Parliament.

Yachting, and rowing, and cricketing, and fishing, are over; and the rural catalogue, as concerns the man of enterprise and spirit, runs short. Grace to Diana! however, pheasant shooting begins with the next week; grace to Providence! it didn't begin (without the aspirate) some weeks ago, for John Frenchman grinned wickedly through his moustaches, and John Bull was "tucking up his fingers for a fight." Your metropolitan sportsman has had a dull se'nnight of it. The only morsel of excitement dealt him was the publication of the acceptances for the great Newmarket Handicaps, which were out on Tuesday. These number forty-six for the Cesarewitch, in the second October Meeting, and seventy-five! for the Cambridgeshire, in the Houghton. Observe the policy of low prices; the forfeit for the former is fifteen sovereigns—for the latter only ten; which will probably make the stake to the winner a couple of hundred the best. To attempt any analysis of such fields is, of course, out of the question. This crumb of opinion we may venture on, however, and that is, to hint that the Cambridgeshire will be the best betting race of the two. An industrious man on the spot on the day will stand a fair chance of laying against a dozen or a score at about 10 to 1. There will be people, at the last moment, ready to back their fancies at any price. The Cesarewitch, being so long in the market, affords the takers time to pick and choose, and make their own terms; but very little betting takes place on the Cambridgeshire till the eve of the issue. For this reason a trip to the Houghton Meeting admits of being made an excursion of both profit and pleasure.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The St. Leger settling was resumed this afternoon; but, if we may judge from the dissatisfied countenances that met us in every part of the room, was a widely different affair to what is described, and correctly, we believe, to have taken place at Doncaster. Two or three parties who did not show are supposed to have "cut their sticks altogether;" and others who did, might just as well have kept away. On the whole, we should say that of the money that ought to have been paid this afternoon, not one-half was forthcoming—so much for the "town" settling. Of betting, there was so little that a brief quotation will suffice.

CESAREWITCH.

10 to 1 agst Souvenir f (t)
14 to 1 agst The Brewer (t)
20 to 1 agst Campanero

DERBY.

18 to 1 agst Cobweb c (t)
20 to 1 —— Sir G. Heathcote's lot (t)
25 to 1 agst Hedger (t)
33 to 1 —— Minikin c (t)
40 to 1 —— Columbus
35 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger
50 to 1 —— Myrrha c (t)

OAKS.

10 to 1 agst Lancashire Witch (t)

THURSDAY.—The Cesarewitch betting took rather an extensive range, but in the sums laid out held out small encouragement to the round-betters, only the first four or five favourites having been backed with anything like spirit. The Derby was also touched upon, but to almost as little purpose—in time, however, it must be a good betting race. We give the market prices:—

CESAREWITCH.

7 to 1 agst Souvenir
12 to 1 —— The Brewer (t)
14 to 1 —— Haitoe (t)
15 to 1 —— Rowena
15 to 1 —— Glossy (t)
16 to 1 agst Una (t)
18 to 1 —— Give-Him-a-Name
20 to 1 —— Scalteen
20 to 1 agst The Bride
20 to 1 —— Wm. Le Gros (t)
20 to 1 —— Lightning (t)
20 to 1 —— Marquise

DERBY.

10 to 1 agst Alarm
22 to 1 —— Kedger
25 to 1 —— Newsmonger
25 to 1 agst Minikin c.
30 to 1 —— Old England
33 to 1 —— Fitz Allen (t)
40 to 1 agst Brother to E. O. (t)
50 to 1 —— Laird o' Cockpen (t)

THE WINNER OF THE ST. LEGER RACE.—Foigh-a-Ballagh is a brown horse, 15 hands 3½ inches high. He is own brother to Irish Birdcatcher, bred by George Knox, Esq., of Brownstown House, county Kildare. He was purchased by Mr. Irwin of Mr. Knox, in July, 1842, with eight other horses—the price for the lot £2,000. He ran third to the Curé for the Champagne Stakes last year, and paid forfeit for all his other engagements up to the St. Leger. His future engagements are the Grand Duke Michael, the Cesarewitch, and Cambridgeshire Stakes.

RUNNING MATCH FOR TWENTY POUNDS.—On Monday the foot-race between John Smith, the London champion, and Benjamin Badcock, of Birmingham, came off at the Beehive cricket-ground, Walworth, in the presence of an immense number of spectators. The contested distance was 440 yards, in which there were twelve hurdles placed at equal distances, over which the men were to leap. Smith was the first to clear the nearer hurdle, closely pursued by Badcock; and at two hundred yards the men were in equal positions. It was quite manifest that Smith had superiority in speed, while Badcock excelled in leaping the hurdles. A spirited race ensued the remaining distance, both competitors making strenuous efforts, and after an admirable contest Badcock came in the winner, beating his opponent by two yards.

ARCHERY.—On Saturday last, the Pagoda Gold Medal of the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen's Body Guard for Scotland, was shot for in Hope Park, and gained by John Gillespie, Esq.

CHESS.—The "Palamède" contains a correspondence between Mr. Staunton and M. St. Amant, by which it appears that a new chess-match is to take place on Oct. 15, at Paris, for the same stake (£100 a-side) as that played for last year. The conditions will be, in the main, the same as those agreed to for the former match; there are, however, one or two points which are at present under consideration, and which may be modified. One of those is a proposition of Mr. Staunton's, to play the King's pawn two squares by both players, whether for attack or defence, at the commencement of each party; another point proposed by the same gentleman is to limit the match to 13 games in place of 21—the winner of the first 7 games being the conqueror. The object of this latter change is to lessen the time which the match will cause him to remain in Paris. As there is no doubt from the tenor of the two champions' letters that these matters will be arranged, the match may be looked on as settled.

CHESS.

Solution to Problem No. 50.

WHITE.	BLACK.
Kt takes Kt ch	R takes Kt ch
Kt takes R ch	Q takes Kt ch
K takes Q dis ch	B interposes ch
Q takes B and mates

ACCIDENT TO A RAILWAY TRAIN.—On Monday morning the Rugby and other mails did not reach the General Post-office until past seven o'clock, being two hours behind time. It appears that early in the morning the axletree of one of the railway carriages had broken down, near Chesterfield, and caused the delay. Happily no bodily injury of any moment was sustained by any person.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

RUMOURED BREVET.—The expected military brevet will include lieutenant-generals, major-generals, and colonels of 1837; lieutenant-colonels, majors, and captains of 1836, and will cause the following changes:—Major-General Lord Frederick Fitzclarence to command the Dublin district, vice General Wyndham, promoted; Major General Prince George of Cambridge to be Inspector of Cavalry, vice General Lygon, promoted; Colonel Sir Robert Sale to be Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland, vice Colonel Napier, promoted; Colonel Sir Richard England K.C.B., to be Adjutant-General in India, vice Colonel Sir Robert Sale to Ireland; Colonel Love, C.B., 73rd Regiment, to be Colonel on the Staff at Corfu, vice Prince George of Cambridge; Colonel Spink, to be Deputy Quartermaster-General in Ireland, vice Bainbrigge, promoted.

CAPTAIN SUPERINTENDENT OF SHEERNESS DOCKYARD.—Captain Richard Arthur, C.B., is appointed by the Admiralty to be superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard, vacant by the decease of the gallant Captain Fisher.

Captain George Moubray (1812) has been appointed to the command of the Victory, vice Arthur.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN MATTHEW SMITH.—Captain Matthew Smith died on Saturday, at Richmond-hill, in the 76th year of his age. On the 14th of January, 1829, he received a good service pension of £150 per annum.

SUDDEN DEATH OF CAPTAIN BLAKEMAN.—On Monday an inquest was held at Dover, on view of the body of Captain John Blakeman, who fell down in a fit on Saturday, and expired in a few minutes. Verdict, "Died from natural causes." The deceased officer was at the battles of Roleia, Vimiera, and Corunna; the expedition to Walcheren; in the Peninsular from November, 1812, to May, 1814, including the battles of Vittoria, Pyrenees, Heights of Echelar, Nivelle; 9th to 13th December, Orthes and Toulouse; served in the American war, and was at Fort Erie in 1814; was with the army of observation when the Allies entered Paris; and served twenty years in India.

FUNERAL OF CAPTAIN BASIL HALL.—The funeral of Captain Basil Hall took place at Kingston, near Southsea, on Tuesday last. It was strictly private. For two years Captain Basil Hall has been lost to his friends, and to the world. A post mortem examination of the brain was made, proving that the cause of his illness and death arose from a softening of the brain, producing in the first place paralysis. There can be little reason to doubt that this disorder was brought on by severe mental exertion, and by arduous application to the duties of his profession, and especially in tropical climates.

The launch of the Sampson steam-vessel building at Woolwich dockyard, which was appointed to take place to-day, has been postponed to Tuesday next.

Major-General Lord F. Fitzclarence, second son of the late King, it is rumoured, is likely to succeed Major-General Wyndham in the military command of the Dublin district.

ARMY MOVEMENTS.—The undermentioned removals of troops are ordered to take place, viz., the 77th Foot depôt from Clonmel to Carlow, the 61st Foot depôt from Cork to Templemore, the 88th Foot depôt from Paisley to Aberdeen, the 89th Foot depôt from Dublin to Newbridge, the 90th Foot depôt from Carlow to Clonmel, and the 93rd Foot depôt from Templemore to Birr.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—Compared with those of last week, the arrivals of English wheat up to our markets since Monday, have been rather scanty: hence the show of samples of that grain on offer this morning was limited. For most descriptions the demand was steady, and previous rates were well supported. In foreign wheat a fair business was doing at late rates. The duty on foreign barley having declined to 3s., with very little chance of its falling any lower, several large parcels were brought forward, and which had a most depressing influence upon the trade, on somewhat easier terms. The supply of malt was pretty well cleared off, at previous quotations. Oats, beans, and peas, were about stationary.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 3310; barley, 2070; oats, 1170 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, — quarters. Foreign: wheat, 6320; barley, 8710; oats, 2990 quarters. Flour, 3630 sacks. Malt, 2570 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 46s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto white, 42s to 50s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 29s to 33s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 56s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel. Town-made, 46s to 48s.

The Seed Market.—For linseed and rapeseed, as well as canary seed, the demand has been steady, at full prices. All other kinds of seeds have been very dull.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 25s to 37; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £25 to £26 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £5 to £6 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 58s to 63s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 8d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 45s 3d; barley, 35s 6d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 35s 7d; beans, 37s 3d; peas, 33s 1d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 48s 4d; barley, 35s 0d; oats, 20s 4d; rye, 35s 5d; beans, 36s 11d; peas, 33s 0d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 3s; oats, 6s; rye, 7s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 9s 6d.

Tea.—On Tuesday last, a public sale of about 1000 packages of Assam tea took place. The attendance of the trade was rather numerous, and nearly the whole of the parcels found buyers, at very full prices. The quality of these teas was very superior to any yet offered. About 17,000 chests have been imported since our last. Privately, only a limited business is doing, at late rates. At the ordinary sale on Wednesday, on which day, 4000 packages were brought forward, only a moderate business was transacted, yet prices remained unaltered.

Sugar.—The finest colony parcels of sugar are commanding a steady sale, at full prices. In other kinds, very little is doing. The refined market is steady at 73s to 73s 6d for brown and 74s to 75s per cwt. for the standard lumps.

Coffee.—Ceylon coffee continues in steady inquiry, at 57 to 57s 6d per cwt. In other kinds of coffee, very little is doing.

Rice.—Owing to the abundant harvest, very little is doing in this article, the prices of which are not supported.

Provisions.—The best qualities of both Irish and foreign butter are in steady request at an advance of 1s per cwt, while the value of other kinds is supported. The bacon market is firm, at somewhat improved currencies. In other kinds of provisions, comparatively little is doing.

Coals.—Buddell's West Hartley, 17s; Davison's West Hartley, 17s 6d; Holywell Main, 19s 6d; Ord's Redheugh, 16s 3d; Old Pontop, 16s; Townley, 17s 6d; Gosforth, 21s 3d; Killingworth, 20s 6d; Hetton, 23s; Stewart's, 23s; and Lambton, 22s 9d, per ton.

Hops.—The arrivals of new hops from Kent and Sussex continue large, but the principal portion came to hand much out of condition, while the prices range from £6 10s to £10 10s per cwt. The best old hops are a steady sale, at full prices. In other kinds very little is doing. The duty is called £130,000. 1843's:—Weald of Kent pockets, £6 to £6 12s; Mid Kent ditto, £7 to £9 12s; East Kent ditto, £7 4s to £9; Choice ditto, £10 to £11; Sussex ditto, £5 18s to £6 10s; Mid Kent bags, £6 15s to £8.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse Meadow Hay, £3 10s to £4 8s; useful ditto, £4 10s to £4 18s; fine upland ditto, £5 to £5 8s; clover hay, £4 12s to £6 10s; oat straw, £1 7s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s, per load.

Wool.—Very large sales of colonial and other wools—of about 23,000 bales—are now in progress. So far as they have proceeded, the biddings have been spirited, and full prices have been realised.

Potatoes.—About 300 tons of potatoes have been received from the Channel Islands this week. The demand for most qualities is steady, and prices rule from £3 10s to £5 per ton.

Smithfield.—The supply of beasts on offer here to-day was only moderate, yet the beef trade was in a very sluggish state, and Monday's prices were barely supported. There were 80 oxen and cows from Rotterdam, together with 15 sheep, while the arrivals from Scotland embraced 100 Scots. The mutton trade was inactive, yet previous rates were obtained by the salesmen. The numbers of lambs were rather scanty, yet the sale for them was heavy, at Monday's figures. Prime small calves were in demand, but other qualities were a mere drug. In pigs little was doing. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 5s each.

Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality do., 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d: prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 3s 4d to 4s 8d; sucking calves, 18s to 33s; quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each; Beasts, 694; cows, 178; sheep and lambs, 8160; calves, 250; pigs, 330.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had rather an extensive supply of meat here to-day, while the demand ruled heavy on the following terms:—Per 8lbs by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large hogs, 2s 4d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 3s 4d to 4s 8d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The absence of political excitement, and the usual limited transactions of this period of the year, have been made available to an unusual extent by the leading members of the Stock Exchange, who are nearly all out of town. These causes combined, have tended to render the market dull in the absence of business, and a slight decline took place on Tuesday. The Government broker, however, taking his purchase, restored the market on the following day. The settlement of the Bank Charter, and the results of the late meeting, have produced some large purchasers in Bank Stock, which has improved to 209 to 210. India Stock has also been in demand, it being with Bank Stock a favourite investment with wealthy permanent investors. The last quotation is 288. Consols advanced to 100½ on Thursday, which price is maintained. Exchequer Bills are 74 to 76. India Bonds, 93 to 95.

The business of the Foreign Market has been very limited during the week. Brazilian improved on Tuesday upon the faith of a rumoured treaty with Brazil, quoting 90. With this exception, prices have been heavy, the speculators taking advantage of the late trifling advance to realise. Mexican continues tolerably steady at 37½, and Spanish, towards the close of the week, advanced to 24¼ for the Actives. Three-per-Cents, 35⅜. Brazilian suffered a reaction on Thursday, quoting 85, and closing at that price. Columbian is 14⅞.

The Railway Market has been heavy, and prices continue to fluctuate, with an evident tendency to a decline. The daily production of new schemes renders the holders of shares in the old lines tenacious of retaining them at the present prices, and fearful of being too full of stock, should any decided reaction take place. Caution should, however, be exercised by the public generally with regard to the quotations of the new lines, especially those not yet sanctioned by Parliament. A system of jobbing prevails which gives the shares an apparent value, to which in reality they possess no claim. The uninitiated believe, from the high premium quoted, that no doubt exists of the favourable results which will attend an application to Parliament, when a rival line is announced, and the speculators in the first having sold their scrip, are, perhaps, holders in the second, and, of course, add to the value of the last, by depreciating and opposing the orginal scheme. It must be understood, however, that in these remarks we do not include the directors and "bonâ fide" holders of the shares, but only a class of speculators on the Stock Exchange, who write for shares in every new scheme, and having puffed it into value, sell the scrip as soon as it attains a certain premium. A new line has just appeared in competition with the London and York Railway. It is called the Direct Northern Railway, and includes York, Newcastle, Leeds, and Hull, with a great saving of distance. The first general meeting of the Directors and Shareholders of the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railway was held on Wednesday. The report states the contracts were entered into at less than the estimate, but it has been necessary to issue 2100 additional shares. The proposition of the Brighton Company to take up any number of shares not exceeding 3000, provided the option of leasing the line at 4½ per cent. upon the estimate, viz., £475,000, was unanimously agreed to, and £1000 per annum voted to the directors for their services. The rival lines to Portsmouth have rendered South Western flat. During Thursday they were down as low as 71, but have since rallied and closed at 74¾; Great Westerns have receded to 140; Birmingham and Gloucester to 105; the London and York line quotes 1¾ to 2 pm.; Chester and Holyhead, 6⅝; Eastern Counties (New), 13; Birmingham Stock, 215; Brighton, 46¾; Croydon, 15⅞; Dover, 39⅛; Trent Valley, 9½; Paris and Orleans, 38⅛; Paris and Rouen, 38⅝; Midlands, 106 Hull and Selby, 69½; York and North Midland, 103¼.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The transactions in both the English and Foreign Market were extremely limited yesterday. Consols were done at par, and Brazilian at 88½. The Western lines of ralway quoted an advance upon their previous depression. South Western closed at 74½; Great Western, 142½; Birmingham Stock also improved to 217½.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 24.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

CROWN OFFICE, SEPT. 24.—County of Lancaster.—Northern Division.—John Talbot Clifton, Esq., in the room of Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, commonly called Lord Stanley, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—A. KNOTT, Brighton miller.

BANKRUPTS.—C. R. WILLERT, Church-court, Clement's-lane, merchant. D. J. MACKENZIE, Chambers-street, Minories, provision-merchant. W. A. MEARNS, Acre-lane, Clapham, Surrey, ale and porter brewer. J. W. SNELL, Ramsgate, Kent, lodging-house-keeper. P. ROBINSON, Warrington, Lancashire, bottle manufacturer. T. M. Monckman, Bradford, Yorkshire, tobacconist. H. GIBBONS, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, chemist. W. BOWEN, Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, grocer and tallow-chandler.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. HERIOT, Glasgow, wine and spirit merchant. A. MURRAY, Edinburgh, farmer. R. STEVENSON, Glasgow, accountant.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 27.

WAR OFFICE, Sept. 27.—Royal Regiment of Horse Guards.—Cornet H. D. Trelawny to be Lieutenant, vice the Earl of March; F. W. F. Berkeley to be Cornet, vice Trelawny. 10th Light Dragoons—Capt. B. Harrison to be Captain, vice Cathcart. 11th Light Dragoons.—Capt. A. Cathcart to be Captain, vice Harrison.

7th Foot: Ensign R. Kaye to be Lieut., vice Dickinson. 8th: Lieut. C. Holder to be Captain, vice West; R. W. Hartley to be Lieutenant, vice Holder; S. C. Craster to be Ensign, vice Hartley. 22d; Capt. T. White to be Captain, vice Goldie. 33d: Lieut. E. A. Milman to be Captain, vice Todd; Ensign R. Lacy to be Lieutenant, vice Milman; N. Kemp to be Ensign, vice Lacy. 39th: Lieut. Æneas W. Fraser to be Captain, vice J. Blackall; Ensign H. D. Gaynor to be Lieutenant, vice Fraser; G. Wolfe to be Ensign, vice Gaynor. 42nd: Capt. M. W. Goldie to be Captain, vice White. 51st: Brevet Lieut.-Col. C. Pepper to be Captain, vice H. C. C. Somerset; Lieut. A. J. W. Northey to be Captain, vice Pepper; Ensign D. Stephenson to be Lieutenant, vice Northey; G. W. Drought to be Ensign, vice Stephenson. 70th: F. A. Willis to be Ensign, vice Kaye. 92nd: Brevet Lieut. Col. H. Blake to be Captain, vice Pitcairn; Lieut. K. D. Mackenzie to be Captain, vice Blake; Ensign C. M. Hamilton to be Lieutenant, vice Mackenzie; F. Macbean to be Ensign, vice Hamilton.

1st West India Regiment.—Lieut. W. Steevens to be Captain, vice Wickham; Ensign C. Q. Dick to be Lieutenant, vice Steevens; H. L. Cafe to be Ensign, vice Dick.

Ceylon Rifle Regiment.—Second Lieut. J. A. Layard to be First Lieutenant, vice Kelson; Lieut. R. Hartman to be First Lieutenant, vice Stewart; Second Lieut. W. H. Kelson to be First Lieutenant, vice Hartman; L. A. Forbes to be Second Lieutenant, vice Kelson.

UNATTACHED.—Lieut. C. H. G. Lennox Earl of March to be Captain; Lieut. G. R. Pole to be Captain.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—T. W. BUTTERWORTH, Hulme, Lancashire, draper.

BANKRUPTS.—E. M'LAUGHLIN, Long-lane, Bermondsey, hair-merchant. F. B. STACY and W. STACY, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside, warehousemen. J. G. WEBB, Rosamond buildings, Islington, mineral-water manufacturer. T. ELDRIDGE, Upper North-place, Gray's-inn-road, coach-builder. W. WILLIAMS and J. SAWTELL, Newport, Monmouthshire, corn and provision merchants. J. LEYBOURN, Bradford, Yorkshire, provision shopkeeper. J. LAMBERT, New Elvet, Durham, grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. WATT, Edinburgh, turner. D. MILN, Dundee, grocer. H. LECK, Glasgow, manufacturer.

BIRTHS.

In Berkeley-square, the lady of Sydney Smirke, Esq., of a son.——At Norwood Lodge, Surrey, Mrs. Joseph Maudslay, of a son.——At Logie, Mrs. Kinloch, of a daughter.——In Connaught-square, the wife of Commander J. G. Dick, R.N., of a daughter.——At the Rectory, Fledborough, Notts, the lady of the Rev. Augustus Fitzgerald, of a son.——At 48, South-street, Grosvenor-square, Mrs. Evett, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Jamaica, David Turnbull, Esq., her Majesty's Judge of the Court of Mixed Commission, to Alice, daughter of the late John Musson, Esq.——At Halifax, G. Alletson, jun., druggist, Barnsley, son of G. Alletson, gent., same place, to Emma, eldest daughter of Mr. R. Brook, woollen-draper, &c., Halifax.——At Christ Church, Southport, John Coston, Esq., of Merrion-place, Higher Broughton, to Eliza, eldest daughter of John Walker, Esq., Stocks, Cheetham Hill.

DEATHS.

In Devonshire-place, Dr. H. Young, formerly of the Hon. East India Company's service.——In Park-lane, Lucy Elizabeth, Countess Dowager of Bradford, in her 78th year.——At Farnham Royal, Bucks, Ann, the wife of Hugh Kinnaird, Esq., of her Majesty's Household.——Lady Ellen, wife of J. W. Fane, Esq., of Shirbern-lodge, Oxfordshire, and daughter of the Earl of Macclesfield.——At Vevey, Canton de Vaud, Switzerland, Nathan Dunn, Esq., the proprietor of the Chinese Collection.——In the 41st year of his age, Mathew Hawthorne, of the Three Horse Shoes, Milford-lane, Strand.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after Eight o'clock on Thursday Evening.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—It is respectfully announced to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public at large, that this National Establishment will open for the Season on MONDAY, Sept. 30, when her Majesty's servants will perform (81st time) a New Grand Opera, in three acts, entitled the BOHEMIAN GIRL; the Music composed expressly for this theatre by M. W. Balfe. Musical Director and Conductor, Mr. Benedict. Count Arnheim, Governor of Presburg, Mr. Borrani; Florestein, his Nephew, Mr. Harley; Thaddeus, a proscribed Pole, Mr. Harrison; Arline, Miss Rainforth. After which will be produced, for the first time on the English stage, a Grand Ballet, in Three Acts, entitled THE CORSAIR, Composed by M. Albert; Conrad, M. Albert; Julien, M. Desplaces; Sanguo, M. Montessu; Medora, Miss Clara Webster; Une Vivandière, Mdlle. Auguste Delbes; Gulnare, Madlle. Adéle Dumilâtre. On TUESDAY, will be revived, Mr. Lacy's Opera of CINDERELLA; Cinderella, Miss Delcy. The celebrated Danseuse, Madlle. Adéle Dumilâtre, Monsieur Desplaces, Monsieur Montessu, Madlle. Auguste Delbés, and Monsieur Albert, will have the honour of appearing in the New Ballet of THE CORSAIR, on MONDAY NEXT, September 30th. The Box-office is open daily, from 10 in the Morning until 6 in the Evening.

⁂ It is respectfully announced that no one can, on any account, be admitted in future, either to the Dress Circle, or the Stalls, unless in evening costume. By order of the lessee,

J. COOPER, Stage-Manager.

IMMENSE ATTRACTION at ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—MONDAY, Sept. 30, by Special Desire, Revival of Lord Byron's MAZEPPA—LAST NIGHT in England of the Celebrated Mr. CARTER, the AMERICAN LION KING, with his Troop of Trained Wild Animals of the Forest, at ½ to 7. Lord Byron's Equestrian and Dramatic Spectacle of MAZEPPA and the Wild Horse, with all its original effects. SCENES of the CIRCLE. Last Night, and First Time at Half-price, THE LION of the DESERT, or the FRENCH in MOROCCO.—TUESDAY, and During the Week, MAZEPPA. Unequalled Feats of Horsemanship, and the CHINESE WAR.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. BROADFOOT.—Box-office open from 11 till 5.

FOURTEEN IOWAY INDIANS.—VAUXHALL.—(Positively the LAST WEEK). Each day of the next week, from three to six. Encampment in four Wigwams from their own country—Dancing, Archery, Ball Playing, and Horsemanship. Admittance 1s., children and schools 6d. The Indian Amusements are in no wise connected with the evening fetes.

ART-UNION OF LONDON.—The EXHIBITION of the WORKS of ART selected by Prizeholders will be OPEN to the Members and their Friends, presenting the usual tickets, at the GALLERY of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS, Suffolk-street, Pall-mall East, on the Evenings of TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, in NEXT WEEK.

GEORGE GODWIN, LEWIS POCOCK, Honorary Secretaries.

4, Trafalgar-square, Sept. 27th, 1844.

⁂ The Subscription Lists for the year 1845 are now Open.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The PROTEOSCOPE, an original OPTICAL INSTRUMENT, unlimited in its appliances to Nature and Art, a highly valuable addition to LONGBOTTOM'S OPAQUE MICROSCOPE, the PHYSIOSCOPE, and the OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE. The PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATION of the PASSIONS, from COLLINS'S ODE, with Vocal and Instrumental Music, is the first subject exhibited by the PROTEOSCOPE, at a Quarter to Five o'clock in the Afternoon, and at a Quarter to Ten in the Evening. Dr. RYAN'S present daily Lecture is on POISONS and their ANTIDOTES, delivered at Half-past Three, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at a Quarter to Nine. Professor BACHHOFFNER Lectures on the alternate Evenings. The Lectures abound in interesting Experiments. The HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE, DIVING BELL and DIVER, &c. The Music is composed and conducted by T. WALLIS, Mus. Doc.—Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price.

THE POLKA.—Mrs. JAMES RAE begs to announce that she has left town to fulfil her country engagements, and introduce the POLKA to her numerous Pupils in Kent. Mrs. Rae is now in London every Tuesday and Friday for the purpose of continuing her lessons and receiving new Pupils at her residence, 16, Manchester-square. Mrs. James Rae's Academy for Dancing and Exercises, and also her Matinées, will be resumed the first week in December. Families and schools attended.

PATENT PARAGON CAMPHINE LAMPS.—The great fault which was last year found with the Vesta from its great smoke and emission of black smuts, is happily entirely obviated in the Paragon—which surpasses in brilliancy and whiteness of light anything hitherto seen, giving the light of 16 wax candles at the cost of one halfpenny per hour. The largest stock in London to select from, at C. WATSON'S Warehouses, 41 & 42, Barbican, and 16, Norton Folgate. The Spirit, analyzed and recommended by Dr. Ure, is delivered by C. Watson's carts, at 4s. per gallon, in screw cans.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE for OCTOBER, price 1s. 6d. This monthly is an unique combination of Art and Literature. The designs are by KENNY MEADOWS, HINE, &c., &c. The contributions are unusually interesting.

CONTENTS:

Rambles Round London. By Luke Roden, M.D.
Musings of a Wanderer, No. I.
A Village Sketch. By Miss Camilla Toulmin.
The Sea-Serpent Chase.
The Man of High Notions. By Laman Blanchard.
Church yard Thoughts.
Sonnet. By Mrs. Scott.
The Philosophy of Shops. By Angus B. Reach.
Mad Austin. By Augustine Wade.
Song of a Flower Spirit.
Adventures of a Scamp. Chap. VII. The Swinestead Poll. Chap. VIII. The Swinestead Return, and our Return from Swinestead.
Dwellings of the Poor. From the Note-book of an M.D.
Boys of London. The Steam-boat Boy. By Mark Lemon.
Fine Arts. Judgment of Paris.
Addison and Holland House. By John Timbs.
Musings of a Wanderer. Nos. II. and III.
A Tale of the French Revolution.
New Books, &c. &c.

Office, 2, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and sold by all Booksellers.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE for OCTOBER, Price 2s. 6d.

Contains:—1. An Election to the Long Parliament. 2. The State Murder; a Tale. 3. Some Account of a Poet's Friend. In a Letter to Oliver Yorke, Esq. 4. Bull and Nongtongpaw.—By Anglomane. 5. Classics of the Table.—Sweetmeats, Beer, Cider, Perry, Liqueurs, and Wines. 6. On Matters Musical, and of the Italian Opera.—By Morgan Rattler. 7. Greece under the Romans. 8. Little Travels and Road-side Sketches.—By Titmarsh. No. II. Ghent. 9. Apology for Art-Unions. 10. Courses of English Reading. 11. The General Policy of the Cabinet. 12. The Lords are the Liberators.—G. W. NICKISSON, 215, Regent-street, London.

Price 2s. 6d.,

HOOD'S MAGAZINE and COMIC MISCELLANY for OCTOBER.

CONTENTS:—Our Family. A Domestic Novel by the Editor: Chapter XII., Our Godfather; Chapter XIII., Our other Godfather and our Godmother; Chapter XIV., The Christening. September in Paris. Old Mr. Fleming's Journey, by Miss Lawrance. Three Gaelic Melodies, by Delta. The Priest's Dagger. Tempest and Calm. Rambles at Rio, by Peregrine. The Monk's Finger. The Viol of Our Lady, by the Mountaineer. Incidents and Impressions on a Trip to Calais, by F. O. Ward. The Streets of Paris.

H. RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster row.; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

BOOKS GRATIS.—Any Gentleman, whether residing in Town or Country, who will favour the publisher with his address, will receive, gratis, and postage free, W. S. LINCOLN'S CATALOGUE for the Michaelmas Quarter of Cheap Second-hand Books in all departments of Literature. Ready on Tuesday, Oct 1st. Apply, No. 3, Cheltenham-place, Westminster road. Books purchased in any language or quantity.

Just published, price 5s. 6d., with cases and coloured plates,

DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a Successful Mode of treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic, Nervous and Spasmodic Coughs, and Affections of the Heart.—"Full of important and consoling facts."—Gazette. London: SIMPKIN and MARSHALL.—Gratuitous advice by Dr. Maddock to the poor, at his residence, 10, Hunter-street, Brunswick-square.

NEWSPAPER OFFICE, 15, Coventry-street, Haymarket. T. MUDIE and SONS, GENERAL NEWSAGENTS, supply the ILLUSTSTRATED LONDON NEWS and all the London papers, and to secure their regular delivery, they print in full the address of their customers when ordered for some time. Where only a few papers may be required, orders enclosing the amount in postage stamps will be promptly attended to.

CHEAP, PLEASING, and USEFUL.—Vol. 1 of the GAZETTE OF VARIETY, elegantly bound, price 3s., contains upwards of 300 agreeable and instructive articles, including Familiar Sketches of Character—Pathetic and Humorous Tales—Incidents of Travel—Biographic Sketches—Gleanings in Natural History—and an immense variety of other subjects. "A work more fitting to occupy a leisure hour, to amuse a family circle, and to instil all that we admire into youth, is scarcely to be found."—Illuminated Magazine for September. London Office, 1, Shoe-lane, Fleet-street.

Now Ready, price One Shilling, the Eleventh, and CONCLUDING PART OF WINDSOR CASTLE.

An HISTORICAL ROMANCE.
By the Author of "The Tower of London."
With 110 Illustrations, by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, &c.

N.B. The Subscribers to this work are requested to give immediate orders to their respective Booksellers and Newsvenders, for the completion of their sets, to prevent disappointment. HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Marlborough-street.

ROBERTSONIAN METHOD of ACQUIRING LANGUAGES WITHOUT a TEACHER.—On the 30th of September will be published, Price 4d. Lesson, first, Latin without a Master. To consist of Six Lessons, published Monthly. The following are already published:—French without a Master, Fourteenth Thousand, price 2s. Spanish without a Master, Third Edition, enlarged, price 2s. Italian without a Master, Second Edition, price 2s. German without a Master, Three Parts, price 2s. each, or the whole bound in cloth, lettered, 7s. 6d.

London: SAMUEL GILBERT, 51 and 52, Paternoster row; JOHN FIELD, 65, Regent's-quadrant. Glasgow: A. MURRAY, 110, Brunswick-street.

Just published, demy 4to., neatly bound in cloth, with Engravings and Diagrams, price 6s.,

THE HAND-BOOK to the PIANO FORTE, comprising an Easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in General; the Art of Fingering, according to the modes of the best masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the Major and Minor Keys; and interspersed by Relaxations from Study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and selections from the Pianoforte Compositions of some of the most celebrated masters. Also, a Short and Easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint, and a New Vocabulary of Terms. By J. AUGUSTINE WADE, author of "The Dwelling of Fancy;" "Songs of the Flowers;" "The Two Houses of Grenada," an Opera; "The Prophecy," an Oratorio, &c., &c.

London: Published by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

Price 1s. 6d., neatly bound. New edition, now ready,

PRACTICAL MECHANIC'S POCKET GUIDE. By PROFESSOR WALLACE.—"In no department of science or literature, have we met a more truly useful manual than this tiny volume. Though scarcely so large as an ordinary pocket book, it contains a lucid exposition of the theory of mechanical powers as applied to the chief Prime Movers, human, animal, water, and steam force; an examination of the limits within which the materials used in mechanical contrivances are manageable in point of weight, and safe in point of strength; and a series of the tables most useful to practical engineers. The chapter on water-power is particularly valuable."—Athenæum.

Glasgow: Published by W. R. M'PHUN; N. H. CATES, Cheapside, London; and may be had, by order, of all Booksellers.

THE MEDICAL TIMES, now the leading Medical Journal, is the largest, the most complete, and most extensively circulated of any Medical Journal in the world. To secure for its weekly contents that diversity of high talent suited to readers liberally educated and of a learned calling, the management is shared by a Physician, a General Practitioner, and a Barrister, who are assisted by several regularly-engaged contributors—gentlemen recognised as occupying the very highest rank in the profession; and from the unparalleled magnitude of the Medical Times, the judiciousness of its arrangements, the talent and originality of its articles, its unwearied and vigilant attention to every improvement occurring throughout the whole domain of Medicine, it is now universally admitted to have attained a higher position for scientific worth than any other organ of the profession ever before reached—its daring novelty and independence introducing a new era in Medical Literature, and its prodigious success breaking up the oldest, and apparently best, established forms of Journalism.

THE NEW VOLUME will commence on October 5, when the Proprietors will introduce to their Readers the following new courses:—

I. A series of Novel Papers, detailing discoveries and inductions of startling scientific interest, on THE STRUCTURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE BRAIN, THE NATURE, CAUSES, AND TREATMENT OF MENTAL DISEASES, by the celebrated PINEL, Physician to the two National Mad Asylums of France, and translated, with Notes illustrative of the more important doctrines of Physiology, Phrenology, and Mental Education, by DR. COSTELLO, long the friend and pupil of the illustrious Gall, Principal of Wyke House Asylum, Editor of the Cyclopædia of Practical Surgery, &c.

II. A COURSE OF CLINICAL LECTURES ON SURGERY, illustrated by numerous interesting cases by the celebrated G. J. GUTHRIE, F.R.S., late Senior Surgeon to the Westminster Hospital, Senior Surgeon to the Ophthalmic Hospital, President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, &c. Since the deaths of Dupuytren and Sir Astley Cooper, there has been no Surgeon in Europe the extent of whose experience or opportunities of observation have equalled those of Mr. Guthrie; and the Editor of the MEDICAL TIMES has the high gratification of announcing that the present course will be corrected by the distinguished Author expressly for publication in the MEDICAL TIMES.

III. A SELECT COURSE OF TWENTY LECTURES on the most important points of the Theory and Practice of Medicine. By DR. CORRIGAN, Consulting Physician to the Richmond Hospital, Dublin, Lecturer on Medicine to the Dublin School of Medicine, &c.

IV. A SERIES OF REPORTS ON UTERINE DISEASES, by EDWARD RIGBY M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Senior Physician to the General Lying-in Hospital, Lecturer on Midwifery at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Examiner on Midwifery at the University of London, &c. These reports are derived partly from thirteen years' observation of the Uterine Cases at two of our largest Metropolitan Hospitals—St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas's—and partly from the Private Practice of the Author. The Cases will be accompanied by a Series of Observations on each Disease, which will give to them, in addition to their value in practice, a high Scientific importance.

In addition to these Courses, the Editor is enabled to promise Weekly Contributions by W. B. COSTELLO, M.D., the Celebrated Lithotritist, on Lithotrity, Lithotomy, and the Diseases of the Urinary Organs. A Weekly Communication from Dr. DE BEAUMONT, of Paris (the Physician to the Spanish Embassy), detailing every event of professional interest occurring in France; and THIRTEEN LECTURES, by C. J. B. WILLIAMS, F.R.S., Physician to University College Hospital, on the Nature and Treatment of the Diseases of the Stomach, Brain, and Nervous System. The Editor has also the honour of announcing that he has received the promise of a Series of Communications from DUMAS, the greatest of European Chemists, on the Theories of Liebig, in connection with the New Doctrines of Organic Chemistry.

Other original papers have also been engaged for from some of the most eminent Physicians and Surgeons at home and abroad, and as an indication of what may be expected in this direction, it may be noticed that the volume just closing contains original communications from above eighty gentlemen of the highest standing and repute.

Another important feature of the MEDICAL TIMES, which distinguishes it from all preceding periodicals, is its complete weekly ANALYSIS OF ALL OTHER MEDICAL JOURNALS, presenting in a condensed but lucid form, every point of consequence published in every English or Foreign receptacle of Medical literature.

The other customary matter of the MEDICAL TIMES are private and Hospital Cases of interest, Reports of all Medical and Scientific Meetings, Pencillings of Eminent Medical Men (published fortnightly), Reviews of New Books, Monthly Drug Price List, News from Parliament, the Army, Navy, &c., likely to interest Medical Men, and finally (what is not less valuable to all Booksellers and Publishers than to the scientific reader) there will be given a WEEKLY LIST OF ALL BOOKS PUBLISHED IN ENGLAND, adding the names of every scientific book published on the Continent, or in America. This feature, it is presumed, will be of especial interest to all Subscribers to Reading Rooms and Literary Institutions.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Number, plain .. .. .. 5d.
" stamped .. .. 6d.
Half-yearly, stamped .. .. 13s.
Yearly, stamped .. .. .. £1 5s.

Orders received by all booksellers; or a Post-office order, or order on some party in London, may be sent to Mr. J. A. CARFRAE, MEDICAL TIMES Office (late Lancet Office) Essex-street, Strand, London.

Just published, the Third Edition, enlarged, price Sixpence,

HOW TO DANCE THE POLKA, and all the Quadrilles, German Waltzes, Highland Reels, &c., after the method of M. Coulon.

⁂ Sent to all parts of the Country, post free, on receiving a remittance of Sixpence, or six postage labels. London: HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand.

CROSBY HALL VAULTS, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within.—CURRALL and SON beg to invite public notice to their STOCK of OLD BOTTLED WINES; they being desirous to secure that patronage which WINES of the first quality, at fair and remunerating profits, will maintain, respectfully submit the annexed list of cash prices:—Port, old bottled, 36s. and 42s.; Do., six years in bottle, 48s.; Do., superior draught, 28s. and 33s.; Sherries, pale and brown, 36s.; Do., do., 42s. to 48s.; Bucellas, 32s.; Sherry (excellent dinner wine), 28s.; Marsala, 24s. per dozen. Bottles, 2s. 6d. per dozen; hampers, 1s. each.

TO SPORTSMEN, TOURISTS, &c.—BERDOE'S SUPERIOR WATERPROOF SHOOTING JACKETS, GARMENTS for the SEA-SIDE, &c. An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials, always ready, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and confidently recommended to those who regard a respectable appearance or wish to avoid the disappointment and vexation consequent upon purchasing articles made by slopsellers, and sold by parties not tailors. First rate clothing of every description upon the lowest terms possible, consistent with true economy and ultimate satisfaction.—W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side)

CRYSTALLINE STARCH.—RECKITT'S PATENT CRYSTALLINE STARCH possesses greater strength and purity than any other Starch: KEEPS ITS STIFFENING MUCH LONGER WHEN EXPOSED TO DAMP, requires NO BOILING, scarcely any clapping, and does not adhere to the iron, is perfectly transparent when mixed, imparting a clear and brilliant finish to all the finer fabrics; these qualities have already obtained for it that decided preference, which when known, they cannot fail to secure. Manufactured by ISAAC RECKITT, Hull.—Sole Agents in London, J. D. and S. BUMSTED, 86, Lower Thames-street, and Sold by most respectable Oilmen and Grocers in Town and Country.

TEA.—Carriage Free, at the Wholesale Price.—In consequence of the facility of railroad conveyance, we have made arrangements with the principal Carrying Establishment to deliver all our Parcels, free of expense, to any part of the kingdom. By our List of Prices, it will be seen we can supply a good Common Tea at 3s. to 3s. 4d.; Breakfast Souchong for general use, at 3s. 8d.; Pekoe Souchong, 4s; and a Superior kind at 4s. 4d., which will be found all a family would require. It is expected all Orders will be accompanied by a Remittance or Post-office Order; or, if a Reference be given, the amount can be remitted on a receipt of Goods.—MANSELL & CO., 2, Bucklersbury, Cheapside.

GLASS CHANDELIERS for DRAWING ROOMS.—APSLEY PELLATT, (late Pellatt and Green,) Falcon Glass Works, Holland-street, Blackfriars, has recently constructed a NEW CHANDELIER (Registered), which surpasses in brilliant and refractive effects all former efforts, to which he invites inspection. Renaissance and other glass chandeliers as usual at low prices, which, when lighted, have a far more resplendent effect than buhl. Table cut and engraved glass. The manufactory and steam-cutting works may be seen any Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday. Merchants' orders and outfits for glass or china on the very lowest terms. No connexion with any house in the city. Glass Milk Pans, patronised by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and Condensing Propagating Glasses.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.—THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting, Paper-hanging, and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by immediately depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than the ordinary process of cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious, as it deposits nothing but Pure Silver. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon street, London; and by Messrs. JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-street, Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each; and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations; the Genuine are all Signed on the wrapper, by I. D. COGAN and R. GILLO.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

TEETH.—Mastication and Articulation Improved and Guaranteed.—Messrs. DAVIS, Surgeon-Dentists, 123, Pall-mall, opposite the Haymarket, and 104, Fleet-street (entrance, New Bridge-street,) continue to restore DECAYED TEETH, however painful, with celebrated mineral hermasticon, instantly Curing Toothache, rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. Messrs. D. call the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public to their newly-discovered Silicious Teeth, under the patronage of the Royal Family, guaranteed never to discolour, break or decay, being of surpassing beauty, and fixed without springs or wires, without extracting the old stumps or giving any pain. A single tooth, 5s.; a set, £5; filling decayed teeth, 2s. 6d. Three months' trial given. Loose Teeth fastened. Scurvy in the Gums effectually cured. Teeth repaired and misfits remodelled, equal to new.—N.B. Removed from 21, Fleet-street.

COX'S PATENT SPARKLING GELATINE, FOR MAKING JELLIES, BLANCMANGE, &c., stronger than Isinglass, at one-third the price, is particularly economical and convenient for the use of Families, Hotel keepers, Invalids, and others, and a profitable article for Exportation. Sold in packets only by the principal Druggists, Grocers, and Oilmen in the United Kingdom, at 9d., 1s. 6d., 3s., 5s., and 7s.—each packet bearing the Patentee's signature. Extract from Dr. URE's Testimonial:—"London, 9th February, 1844.—I have much pleasure in certifying that the Patent Sparkling Gelatine of Messrs. J. and G. Cox is prepared by an excellent process, which, while it preserves entire all the virtues of this alimentary substance, renders it equally pure and beautiful. Examined by chemical tests, it is found perfectly free from acid, and fully stronger than the best isinglass in the London market, and affords a Jelly (in a few minutes) equal in all respects to, if not richer and more crystalline than that prepared from Calves' Feet." Agent in London, Mr. HENRY WATSON, No. 11, Old Fish-street, City.—Patent Gelatine Works, Gorgie Mills, Edinburgh.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN and COMPLEXION. This Royally Patronized and universally adopted Specific is composed chiefly of extracts from the most rare flowers and herbs of an eastern clime, and perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, gentle, cooling, and purifying action on the skin; and most effectually dissipates all Redness, Tan, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the Cheek, and the softness and delicacy it induces on the Hands, Arms and Neck, render it indispensable to every toilet. It affords immediate relief in cases of Sunburn, Stings of Insects, or incidental Inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

CAUTION.—Many Shopkeepers vend the most spurious trash under the title of "Genuine" Kalydor, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper; and A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, engraved (by Authority) on the Government Stamp affixed on each bottle. ⁂ All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!

INTERESTING TO LADIES.

To Messrs. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London.

Percy-place, Landport, Portsmouth, April 4th, 1844.

Gentlemen,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your admirable Macassar Oil. About six months ago I found my hair getting daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should lose it entirely, and hearing of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thick, dark, and glossy; it also curls freely without the use of paper, which it never did before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your Macassar Oil as an excellent restorative and preservative for the hair. As I have an objection to see my name in print, I beg you will not publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer applicants to me, if necessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil. Your obedient servant, * * * * * * * * * *

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL preserves and reproduces the Hair; prevents it from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its Original Colour; frees it from Scurf and Dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.

Ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL." All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA CARPETING.—This carpeting having now most successfully stood the test of competition with other descriptions of carpeting. THE PATENT WOOLLEN CLOTH COMPANY, who are the Sole Manufacturers, inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that their patterns for the present season, in entirely new and elegant designs by the first artists of the day, are now out, and may be had at all the principal Carpet Warehouses in London, and nearly every town of the United Kingdom. Economy being now the order of the day with all classes, the public have the opportunity of purchasing an article which, in strength and durability, is superior to Kidderminster and Brussels, and at less than half the price. From the ingenious mode of manufacture it is also quite impervious to dust, an advantage not possessed by any other description of carpeting. The public are cautioned against parties at the present time selling a stout printed drugget, and calling it the Victoria Felt Carpeting, the colours and quality of which will not bear comparison; the drugget being wove, the Patent neither wove nor spun, but felted, and as much superior to druggets as Turkey are to Kidderminster. The Company have also a large assortment of Table Covers and Window Curtains, embossed and printed in the most elegant and récherché designs and in all sizes. Tablings, Waistcoatings, and various other goods of their Patent Manufacture.—Manufactories, Elmwood Mills, Leeds, and Borough-road, London. Wholesale Warehouse, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside.

HEALTH BETTER THAN GOLD.—Were a mine of gold of great abundance announced as discovered in this country, what a sensation it would create! What joys for the possessor, what hopes for his friends; and what a scramble for all to obtain a share; as though gold was the grand and only object worthy of a struggle: it is, however, a fact too well known that gold, and all the luxuries it can purchase, cannot be enjoyed without health. It is the charm of existence, the true gold of life; the full enjoyment of which makes the the earth a paradise, enables its possessor to surmount difficulties and to render harmless all the troubles of life. What a stimulant this fact should be to all who are sickly or declining in years, to seek and obtain health; and how anxious should even the robust be to preserve it. What a blessing that a prize so inestimable can be obtained so cheaply and certainly, as hundreds of thousands can proudly testify, who have used PARR'S LIFE PILLS.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Beware of spurious imitations of the above Medicine. None are genuine unless the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in White Letters on a Red Ground, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also, the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, London," on the directions.

COD LIVER OIL.—The following recent and well testified case of cure, will establish the value of Cod Liver Oil, as a remedial agent in the cure of Gout, Rheumatism, Scrofula, &c.

To MESSRS. JONES, and CO.

Sept. 1844.

Gentlemen,—If my case is of any value to you I beg you will make the best use of it, as I have suffered too much from Gout and Rheumatism not to have the strongest sympathy for all who may be similarly afflicted. I purchased only one bottle of your Cod Liver Oil, and after a few applications was completely cured. I could say much in praise of this miraculous remedy, and shall be happy to reply to all enquiries.

I am, Gentlemen, your thankful and obedient servant,

HENRY W. PITMAN.

Moore's Sporting Gallery, St. Martin's-lane London.

CAUTION.—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac-simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London."

Wholesale Agents: BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street; E. EDWARDS, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; SUTTON and Co., Bow Churchyard. Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

COUNTRY PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, &c.—ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD executed in the best style, and with the greatest despatch, by F. SMYTH, Designer and Engraver. Address, 268, Strand.

SIX POUNDS of TEA, whether Black or Green, for 17s.; and small bright Gunpowder, in 12lb. boxes, at 4s. 6d. per lb.—EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY'S OFFICES, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

INCOME WITHOUT RISK.—The LONDON GENUINE TEA COMPANY, Established November 5, 1818, at 23, Ludgate-hill, are now filling up their lists of Agents; and persons desirous of such an appointment, by which many have derived considerable incomes, without risk, during the last twenty-six years, are requested to apply to the Company, at their Warehouses, 2, Laurence Pountney-hill, London.

LADIES about making Purchases will find a New and Splendid Stock of choice Cloaks, Mantles, Shawls, Silks, Ribbons, Lace, and every article of Fancy Goods for the Season, at the enlarged premises of JAMES JONES, 430, West Strand, and Nos. 1, 2, and 3, King William-street adjoining.—This Establishment Closes at Eight o'clock.

THE MEDICAL LIBERTY of the SUBJECT.—Mr. CAMPBELL'S CASE.—How much longer are juries to be bamboozled by the interested Doctors? The fourteen men who held out in Mr. Campbell's case deserve the thanks of the nation. A HYGEIST.

London, Sept. 26.

WINTER HOSIERY, manufactured by POPE and PLANTE, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, of White and Coloured Merino, Lambs-Wool, Real Cachmere, and of other Choice Wools, in Socks, Hose, and Underclothing. Elastic Silk and Cachmere GAITERS for Ladies, and every description of SILK and COTTON HOSIERY.

JONES' £4 4s SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dress-making in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and executing in the most finished style, in SIX LESSONS for ONE GUINEA. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers wanted.

SPORTSMEN should see DOUDNEY and SON'S celebrated Shooting Jackets, 10s. 6d. and 21s., at 49 Lombard-street. Superfine Dress Coats, 38s. and 47s. 6d.; Frock Coats, silk facings, 42s. and 50s.; Codringtons, every make and shape, 12s. 6d. and 21s; Doeskin and all the New Pattern Trousers, 10s. 6d. and 21s.; Army Cloth Blue Spanish Cloaks, 9½ yards round, 50s.; Suit of Livery, 63s.; Boys' Cloaks, 7s. 6d. and 15s.—DOUDNEY and SON, 49, Lombard-street.—Established 1784.

THE NEW DISCOVERY for the NERVES. By Dr. GRANDISON. Patronised by above 100 of the Nobility. The wonderful virtues of this medicine can be attested by all who have tried it. It is a combination of a most remarkable kind, and its efficacy proves how important a one.—Sold by all Medicine Venders. Ask for Dr. GRANDISON'S CHARITY PILLS.—"A wonderful yet safe medicine."—Professor Mollen.

OLD WORN-OUT PLATED ARTICLES, instantly REPLATED with a coating of pure silver, by the POTOSIAN LIQUID SILVER. 1s. per bottle, or four in one 3s. This pure liquid silver is entirely free from any admixture of grosser metals; it restores the beauty of articles utterly useless, and renders that beauty perennial! In application it is so simple that it may be applied by a child.—SMITH and Co., sole proprietors, opposite Norfolk street, Strand. Sold also by Sutton and Co., Bow Church yard. Ask for the "Potosian Liquid Silver." Other preparations are often injurious.

TO LADIES.—GRAFFTEY'S DEPILATORY, price 4s. 6d., is warranted to remove superfluous Hair on the face, neck, or arms, without risk of injury. The directions are simple, and lead to certain success. Small packets, for post, price 2s. 8d. free, may be obtained at S. Grafftey's Perfumery, Comb, and Brush Warehouse, 26, Warwick-street, Regent-street, where may also be obtained the only certain Dye for the Hair, viz., Grafftey's Pompeian Dye, price 5s. 6d., and the celebrated Balma Pompeiana, price 2s. 6d. Order "Grafftey's"

GOLD FLAT HORIZONTAL WATCHES, gold dials, carefully finished, with engine-turned cases, jewelled in four holes, going barrel, to continue the action of the watch while winding, are offered, price 7½ guineas. These elegant little Watches will be found to perform very correctly, and a printed undertaking is given with fixed terms on which they will always receive any attention required.—T. COX SAVORY, Watchmaker, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch street), London. N.B. Secondhand Watches purchased in exchange.

IMPROVED CAMPHINE LAMPS; also ENGLISH'S PATENT CAMPHINE.—Public attention is respectfully solicited to E. LEWIS'S OIL and ITALIAN WAREHOUSE, 42, High-street, Marylebone, where may be obtained the new Lamps with every recent improvement, by which they are rendered perfect and superior to anything before seen. A trial allowed before purchasing. Lewis's Patent Wax Candles 11d. per lb.; Price's Composite, 10½d. per lb.; Kempton's Moulds, 8d. per lb. These Candles are warranted to burn without snuffing.

LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—NOTICE, the WARWICK and LEAMINGTON UNION RAILWAY will be OPENED at the Coventry Station, where it joins the London and Birmingham Railway, on MONDAY, the 2nd December next. Particulars of the Trains and Fares will be given previous to opening.

By Order, R. CREED,
Secretary to the London and Birmingham Railway.

Office, Euston Station,
9th September, 1844.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six. N.B.—Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

SELF-MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.

No longer let those who are dwellers afar,
Themselves from the Warehouse of Moses debar.
By adopting our plan, which has never a failure,
Ev'ry gentleman now may become his own Tailor!

E. MOSES and SON are desirous of directing especial attention to their plan of "Self-Measurement," The extreme simplicity and the minute exactness of this admirable plan are such as cannot fail to answer the purpose designed. No failure in point of fit can arise from its use; or, should anything of the kind occur, the proprietors will hold themselves responsible. Thousands are thus enabled to avail themselves of the choice Clothing of MOSES and SON, without any inconvenience arising from distance, &c. A Book with a wood-cut and full directions may be obtained on application (gratis) and free of postage. Residents in the country cannot do better than avail themselves of so favourable an opportunity of purchasing at the greatest Tailoring Establishment in the Kingdom.

READY-MADE.	£	s.	d.
Shooting Coats, in every variety, from	0	10	0
Velveteen do., 7 pockets ..	0	18	6
Tweed Taglionis	0	8	6
Ditto, silk facings, collar and cuffs	0	16	0
Cashmarette Coats, in every shape, handsomely trimmed, from ..	1	1	0
An immense stock of Blouses ..	0	3	6
Summer Vests	0	2	6
Cashmarette and Persian do., in every variety from 3s. to	0	8	6
Black Satin Vests	0	6	6
Cloth do.	0	4	6
Cloth Trousers	0	9	0
Single-milled Doe do., from ..	0	11	0
A great variety of Summer do. ..	0	7	0
Dress Coat, edged	1	0	0
Frock do. do.	1	4	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s.	d
Sporting Coats in the most approved style	0	13	6
Velveteen do., 7 Pockets ..	1	3	0
Tweed Coats trimmed with silk ..	0	16	0
Cahmere fine Saxony do. ..	1	3	0
Cashmarette, new and improved article, warranted waterproof, trimmed with silk, collar, cuffs, &c.	1	18	0
Quilting Vests 7s. each, or 3 for	1	0	0
Cashmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	9	0
Trousers adapted for the season	0	9	6
Mill'd Victoria and plain Doe do.	0	17	0
Best quality West of England ..	1	3	0
Super Black do. do.	0	16	0
Best Black dress do	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Do. do. best manufactured ..	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Do. do., best manufactured ..	3	3	0

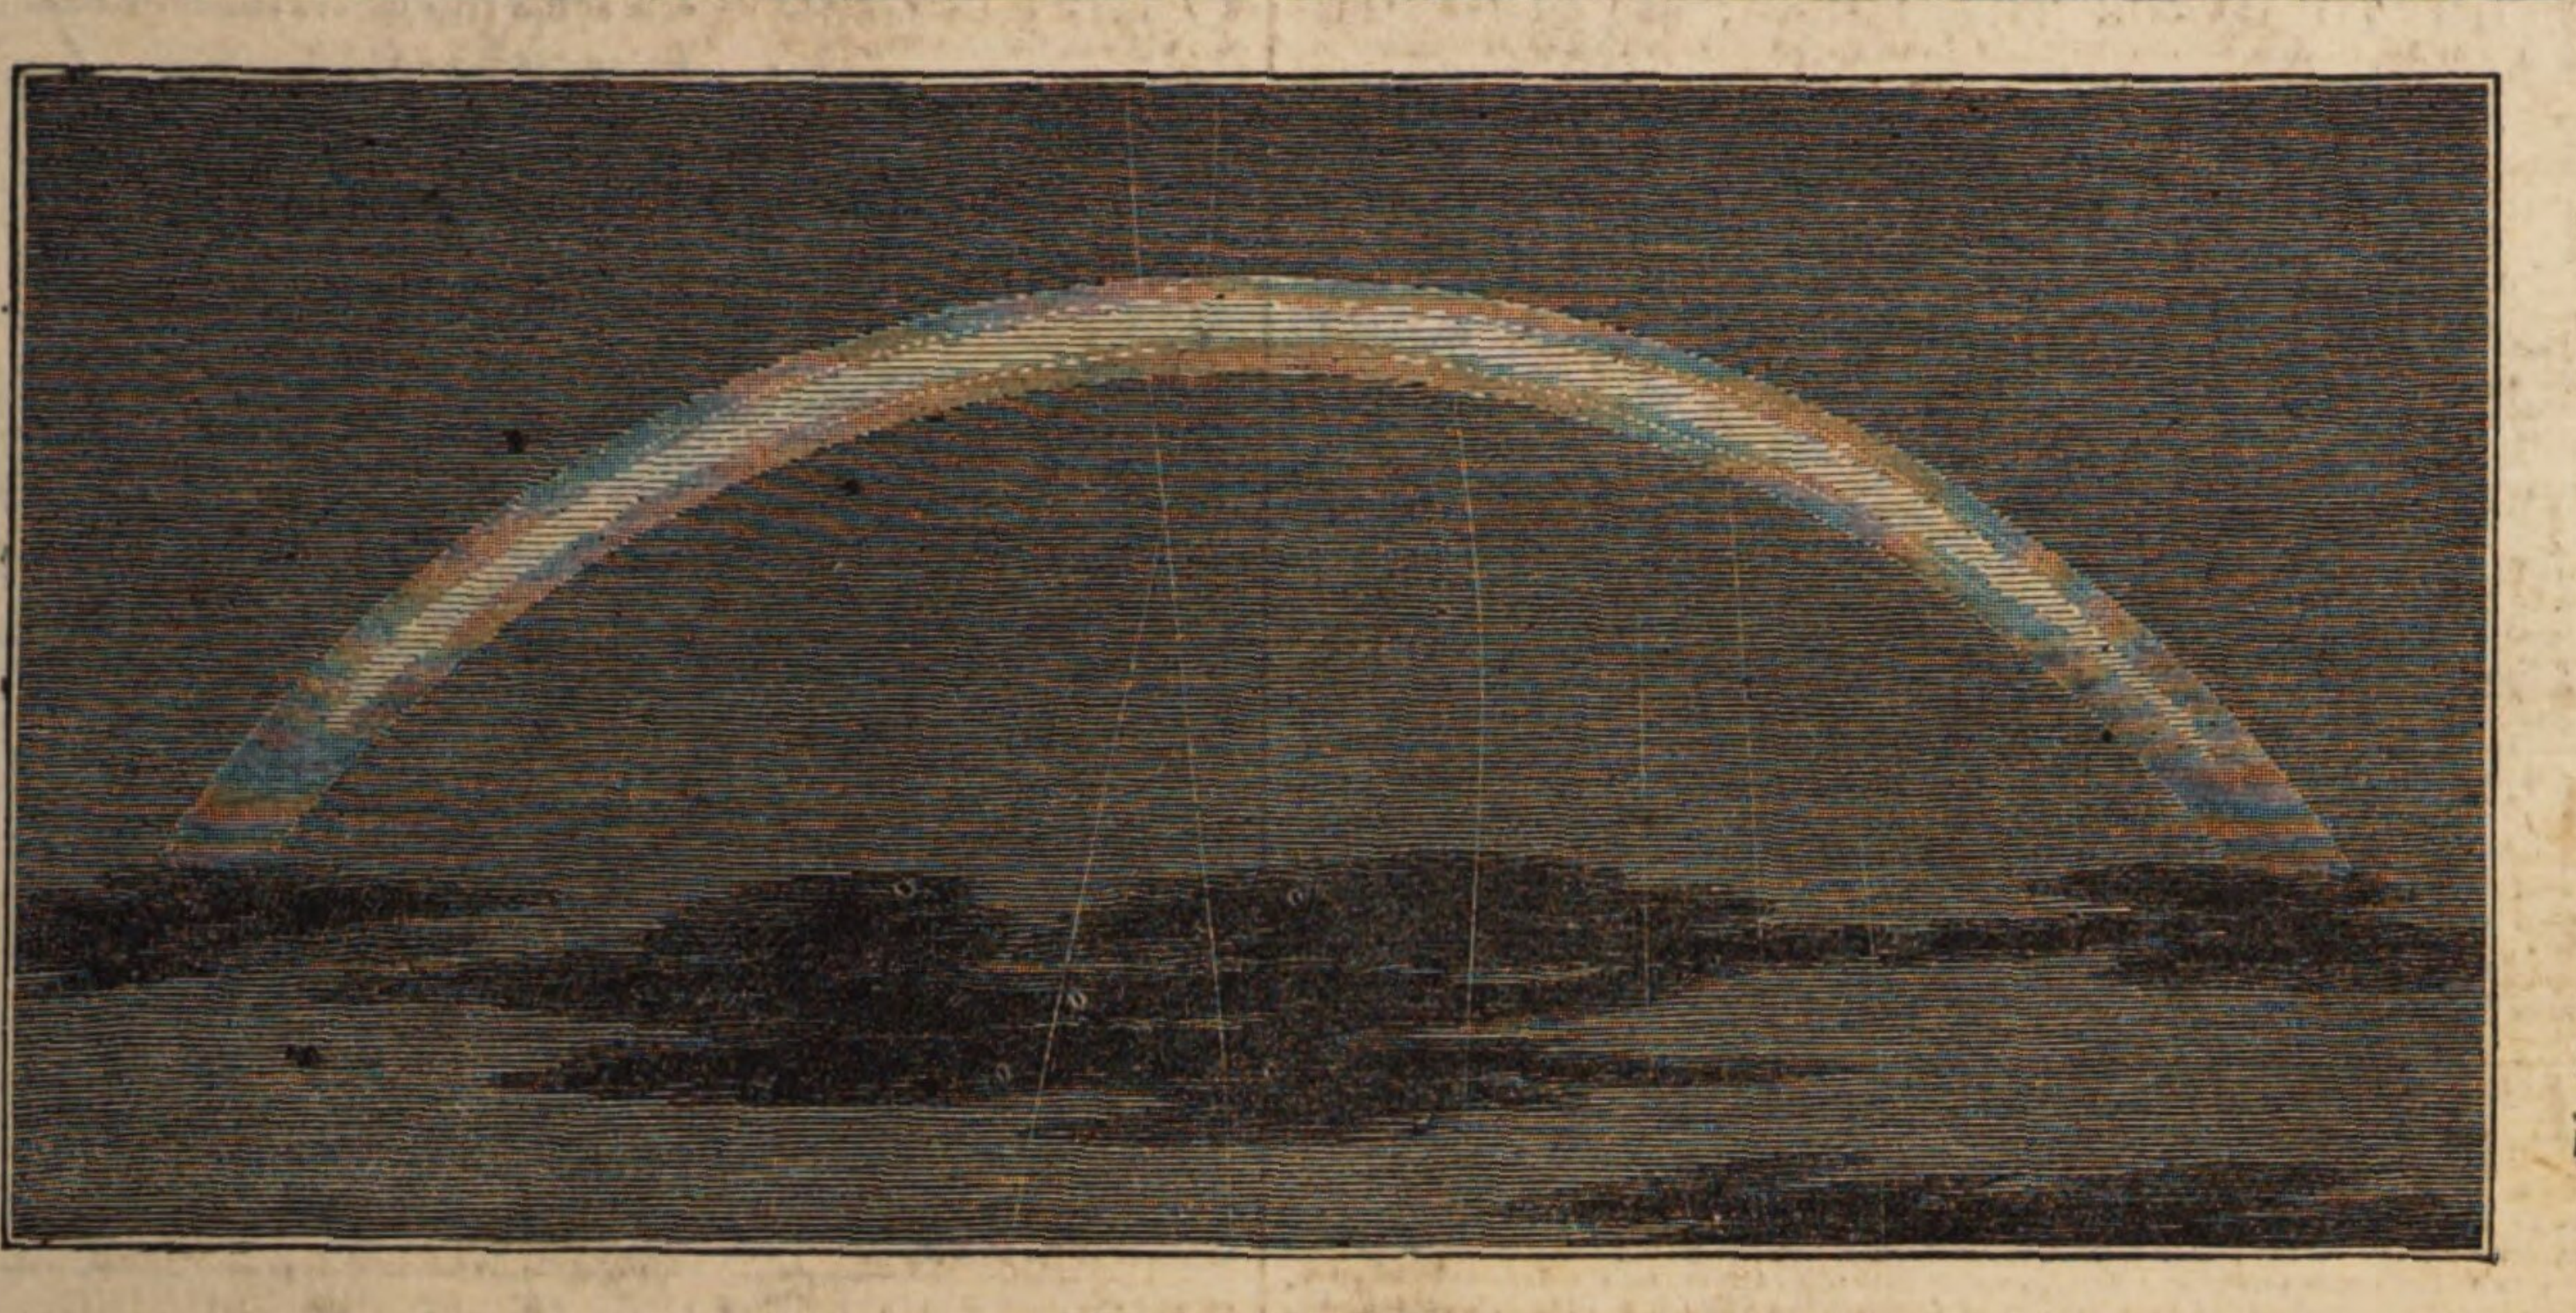
MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion with any other house; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing should (to prevent disappointments, &c.) call at, or send to, 154 Minories; or 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this Establishment from Friday at sunset, until sunset on Saturday, when it is resumed until twelve o'clock.



LUNAR RAINBOW.

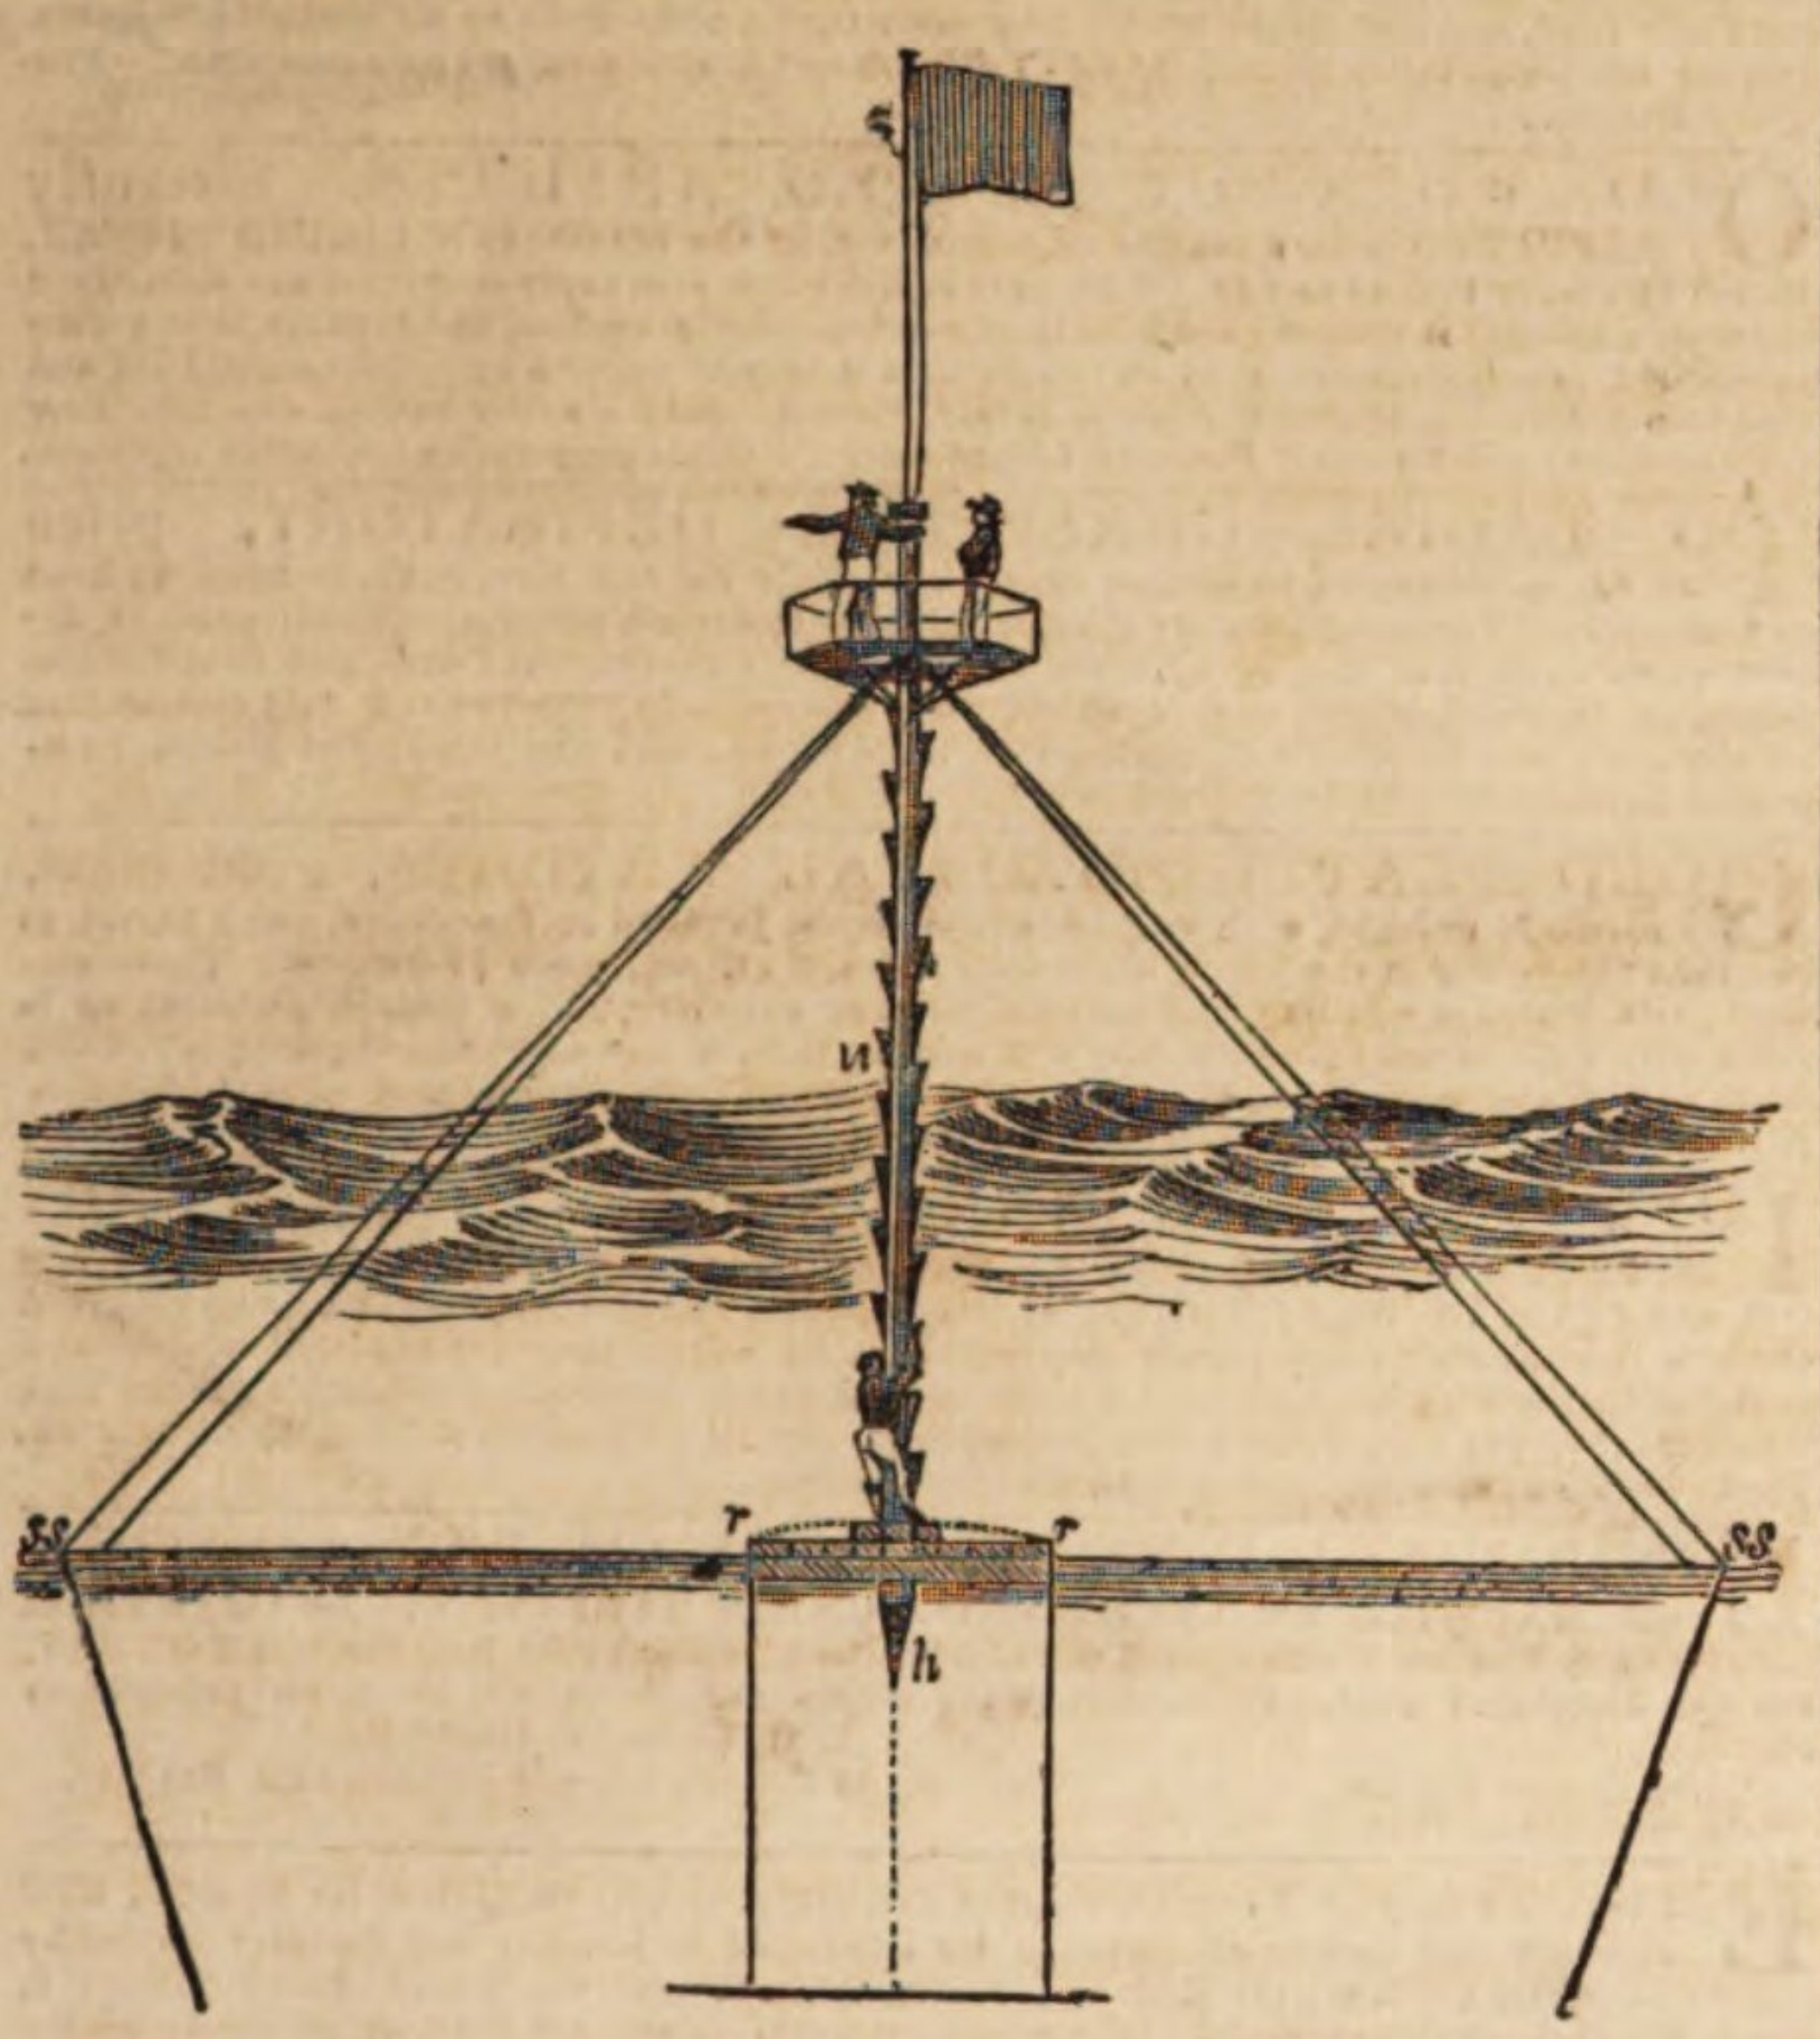
LUNAR RAINBOW.

On the evening of the 19th inst. this rare phenomenon was witnessed by a correspondent at Highfield House, Lenton, Nottinghamshire, who has favoured us with the annexed sketch and details :—

The barometer was stationary during the day. Maximum thermometer, 62 deg.; and minimum thermometer, 52 deg. Wind, in the morning, west; and evening, east. Dull day, with slight showers. At 7 h. 58 m. P.M. this rare and beautiful object was visible. It did not exhibit any of the prismatic colours, being of a silvery hue. The bow was stretched across a dense nimbus in N.E., the summit extending nearly to the zenith. Sky overcast, except a small portion in west, near to the zenith, over which thin cirrocumuli swiftly passed. The bow disappeared at 8 h. 5 m. P.M. It may be added—the clouds at sunset in the west were tinged with bright orange-purple. At 10 P.M. many glow-worms (Lampyris-noctilucæ).

CAPTAIN BULLOCK'S SAFETY BEACON ON THE GOODWIN SANDS.

The Safety, or Refuge Beacon, was first erected on the Goodwin Sands through the indomitable perseverance of Captain Bullock, to whom all the credit of the suggestion and invention is justly due, on the 10th of September, 1840; and it sustaining, without injury, the violence of four most tempestuous winters. About two months ago, however, it was ufortunately run down, during a thick fog, by a Dutch galliot, rendering its entire re-construction, under the superintendence of Captain Bulleck, essentially necessary. This has just been accomplished; and it now stands erect on those dangerous sands, as the successful result of a simple design, which has led to attempts of a similar humane and praiseworthy character, but of a more elaborate and costly description.



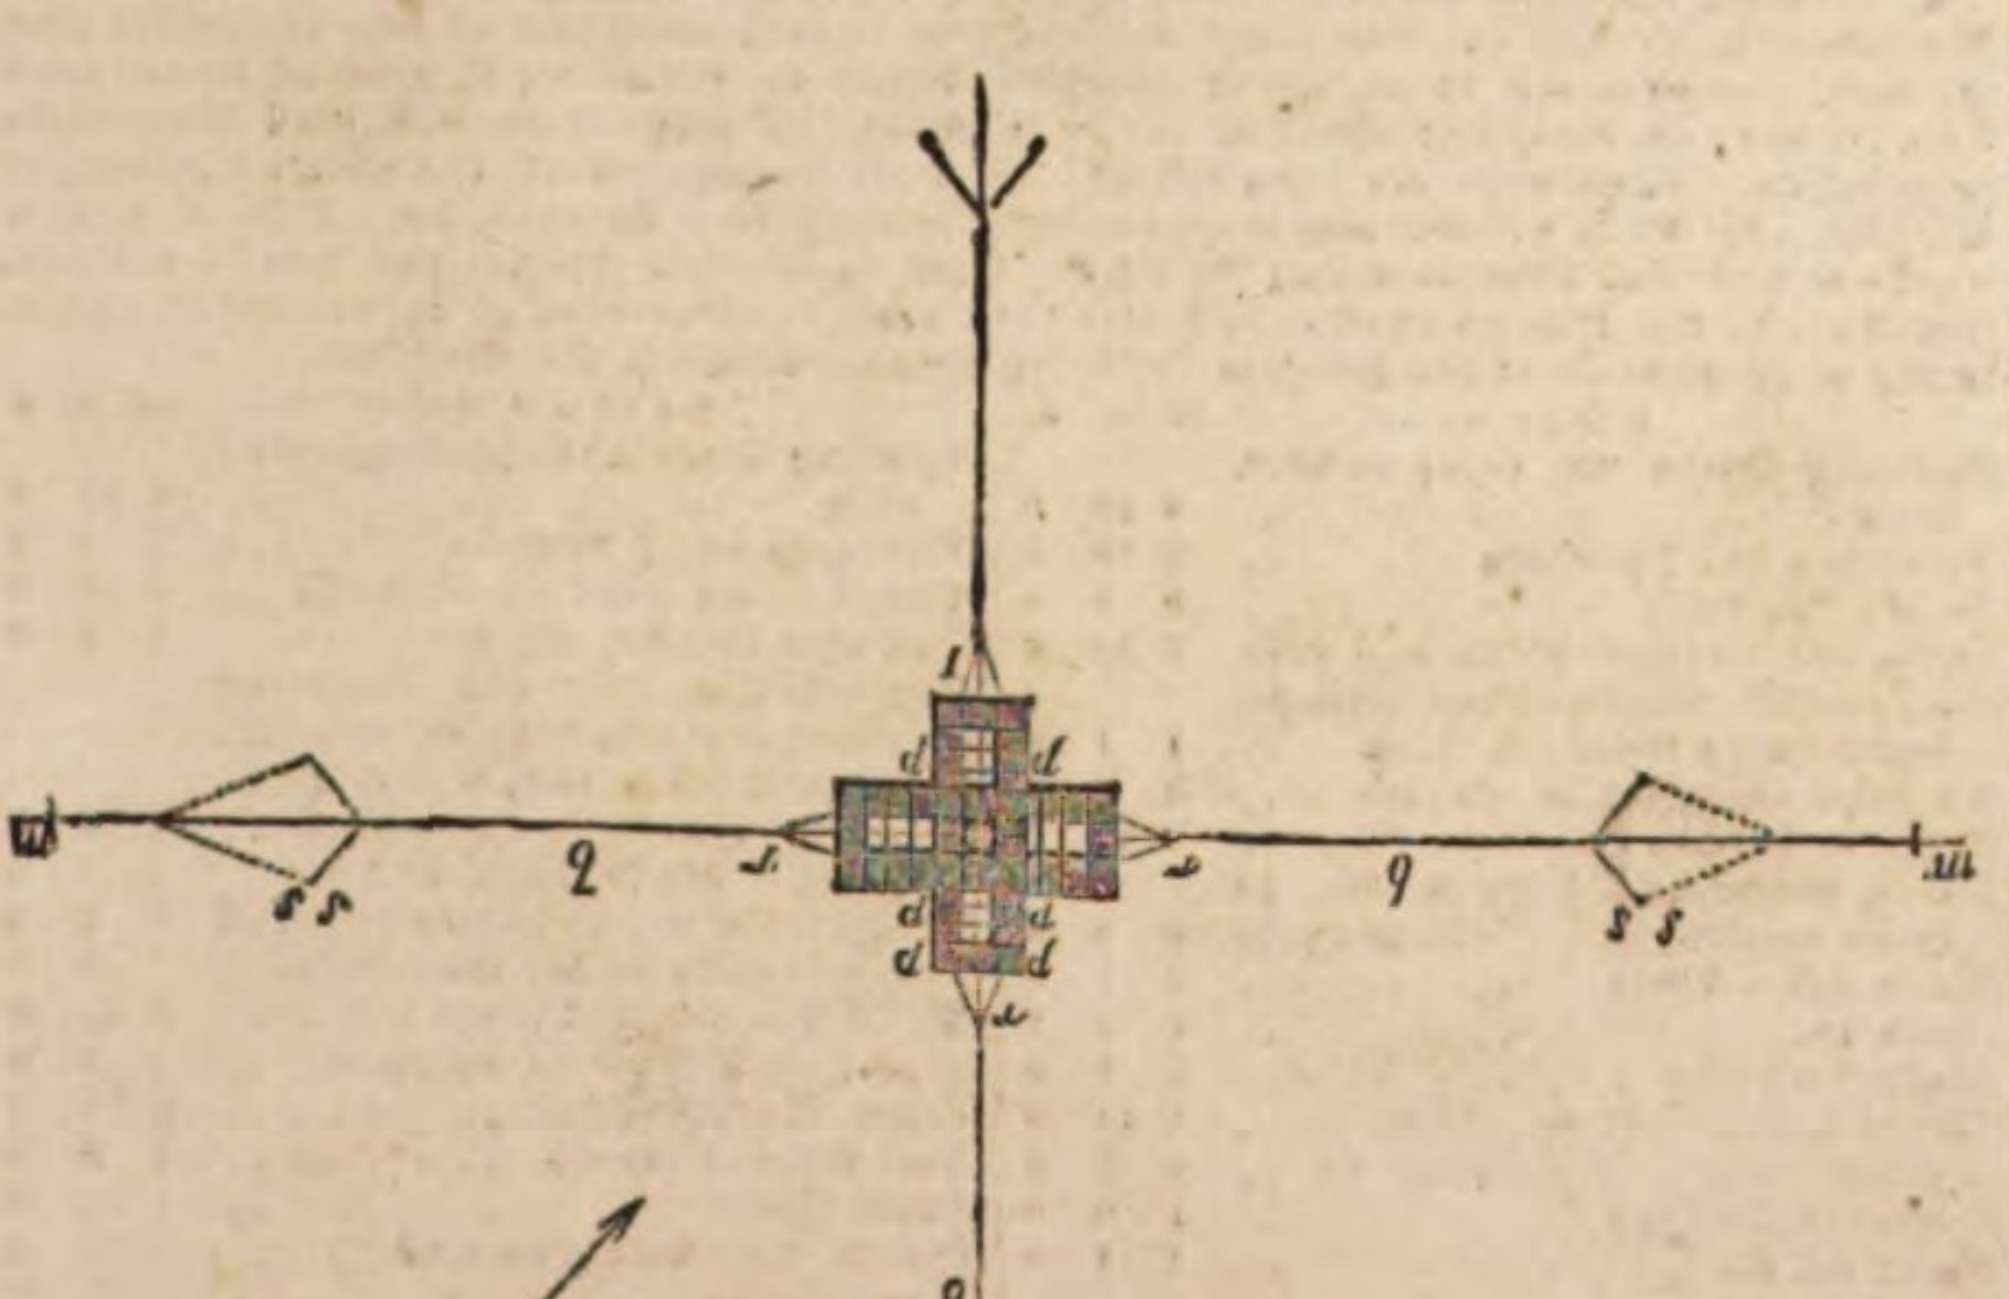
CAPT. BULLOCK'S SAFETY BEACON ON GOODWIN SANDS.

Elevation.—Total length of lower mast, 40 feet; mast head, 6 feet; in the sand, 6 feet; from sand to top, 13 feet; diameter of mast, 30 inches; diameter of octagon, top 9 inches, rails 2 feet high; top-mast, 15 feet. The whole supported by four pair of chain shrouds, leading to eight iron stumps at (S S) from 14 to 17 feet in the sand. (r) Iron bars, 2 inches square, four of them to secure partners and iron ballast with bags of shingle, intended to be placed on the top of all. (h) Heel of mast, shod with iron. (W) High water-mark.

It has been re-affixed upon the same principle as at its first erection, with the exception that the base is composed of iron instead of wood; thus, consequently, penetrating considerably further into the sand than it did originally.

The Beacon has been already described in No. 30 of our journal.

We should observe that the Goodwin Sands are, to a great extent, quite dry at low water; and as vessels which strike on them seldom go to pieces in a single tide, the probability is, that some of the unfortunate crew would be enabled to reach the sand during that interval, and the Safety Beacon would then become their only refuge.



GROUND PLAN OF THE SAFETY BEACON.

Ground Plan.—(p) Partners 10 feet long, 1 foot wide, 6 inches thick. (r) Four iron bars to secure partners, with 24 pigs of ballast, equal to 3 tons 12 cwt. (S S) Eight iron bars, 2 inches square, from 14 to 17 feet in sand. (b) Four iron bars, with span at each end, to fix in at S S, and end of partners to prevent S S from coming home. Distance across from S S to S S, 60 feet. (m m) Mushroom anchor.

It is obvious that the essential principle of this Beacon is, that it rests upon a base not easily broken or displaced, and that the mast, with its gallery (the only superstructure), offers little or no resistance to the wind or waves; so that its strength absolutely lies in its extreme simplicity.

We may add to this account, that during the re-erection of the Beacon, the foundation of the former one was found to remain unmoved and unabsorbed. In consequence of this circumstance, Captain Bullock resorted to his former plan, by throwing upon the same foundation between 50 and 60 tons of concrete blocks, chalk and shingle, which there is very little doubt will remain unchanged. A gentleman, who was an eye-witness to the whole of the late operations on the Goodwins, thus writes on the subject of this addition to the old foundation:—"The tide, so strong as it passes the shallow, has had no visible effect upon the mass, around which the sand had accumulated nearly two feet in height, and it now remains as the result of a most interesting and successful experiment. The present gale (while I am writing) from the southward will prove whether it will eventually stand against the 'boiling surf' by which it will be continually surrounded and assailed. I have myself very little fear for the heavy concrete blocks which constitute the base of the cone; but I think it very likely that the upper portions of the undefended and loose shingle may be disarranged, and the cone somewhat flattened down. It is, however, but an experiment, and the problem will probably be demonstrated that human skill and ingenuity cannot overcome the formidable Goodwins with small means, and that man cannot successfully wage 'a little war' with such a foe. However, I must say, from all I have heard, that the Lords of the Admiralty have behaved in the most kind and handsome manner to Captain Bullock, in enabling him to possess thus far every facility for carrying out his humane and highly praiseworthy undertaking."

The Prince de Joinville and the French Navy.—The Prince de Joinville succeeds Admiral Lalande in the list of vice admirals. The officers of the navy of France in actual service are two admirals, two vice admirals, twenty rear admirals, 100 capitaines de vaisseau, 200 capitaines de corvette, 600 lieutenants de vaisseau, 500 enseignes, 200 éléves (first class), 205 éléves (second class.) The reserve list contains five vice admirals, and six rear admirals. The rank conferred on the Prince de Joinville is next in degree to that of Baron Duperré, promoted 13th August, 1830, and Baron Roussin, promoted 30th October, 1840. The Prince de Joinville, who has hitherto been able to command only a squadron, may now be appointed to that of a fleet.

Directions to Ladies for Shopping.—Shopping is the amusement of spending money at shops. It is to a lady what sporting is to a gentleman; somewhat productive, and very chargeable. Sport, however, involves the payment of one's own shot; shopping may be managed by getting it paid for. Ride all the way till you come to the shopping-ground in a coach, if you can; in an omnibus, if you must; lest you should be tired when you get there. If you are a lady of fashion, do not get out of your carriage; and when you stop before your milliner's, particularly if it is a cold, wet day, make one of the young women come out to you, and without a bonnet, in her thin shoes, stand on the curb-stone in the damp and mud. The best places for shopping are fashionable streets, bazaars, and the like. Street-shopping principally relates to hosiery, drapery, and jewellery of the richer sort. Bazaar and Arcade-shopping, to fancy articles, nick-nacks, and perfumery. In street-shopping walk leisurely along, keeping a sharp look-out on the windows. In bazaar-shopping, beat each stall separately. You had better finish your streets before you take your bazaars and arcades; for there the shopping, which one might otherwise call cover-shopping, though excellent sport, refers mostly to articles of no manner of use; and it may be as well to reserve toys and superfluities to the last. Married ladies, when they have laid in all they want for themselves, are recommended to show their thoughtfulness by purchasing some little trifle for their husbands, who, of course, will have to pay for it in the end.—Punch.

Heavy Crime and Severe Punishment.—An avaricious butcher, who had enriched himself by selling "kehlia" (fried meat), at Morocco, was determined to increase his gains by the more simple method of receipts without expenditure. With this view he nightly inveigled into his house a woman of exceptionable character, who was immediately assassinated, cooked, and disposed of the following day as "kehlia." His wife, who witnessed these nightly murders, apprehending a similar fate, went to the Pacha and denounced her husband. He was soon judged and condemned; a boiler full of water was placed over a fierce fire, before his shop door, which soon reached boiling temperature. The executioner then dragged the criminal to his own block, still stained with the blood of his numerous victims, and chopping off his hands, threw them into the cauldron, which, when boiled, were given to the numerous bands of hungry dogs who had been assembled for that purpose. In the same way his feet and legs were disposed of, until loss of blood terminated his life, and with it this appalling and barbarous justice.

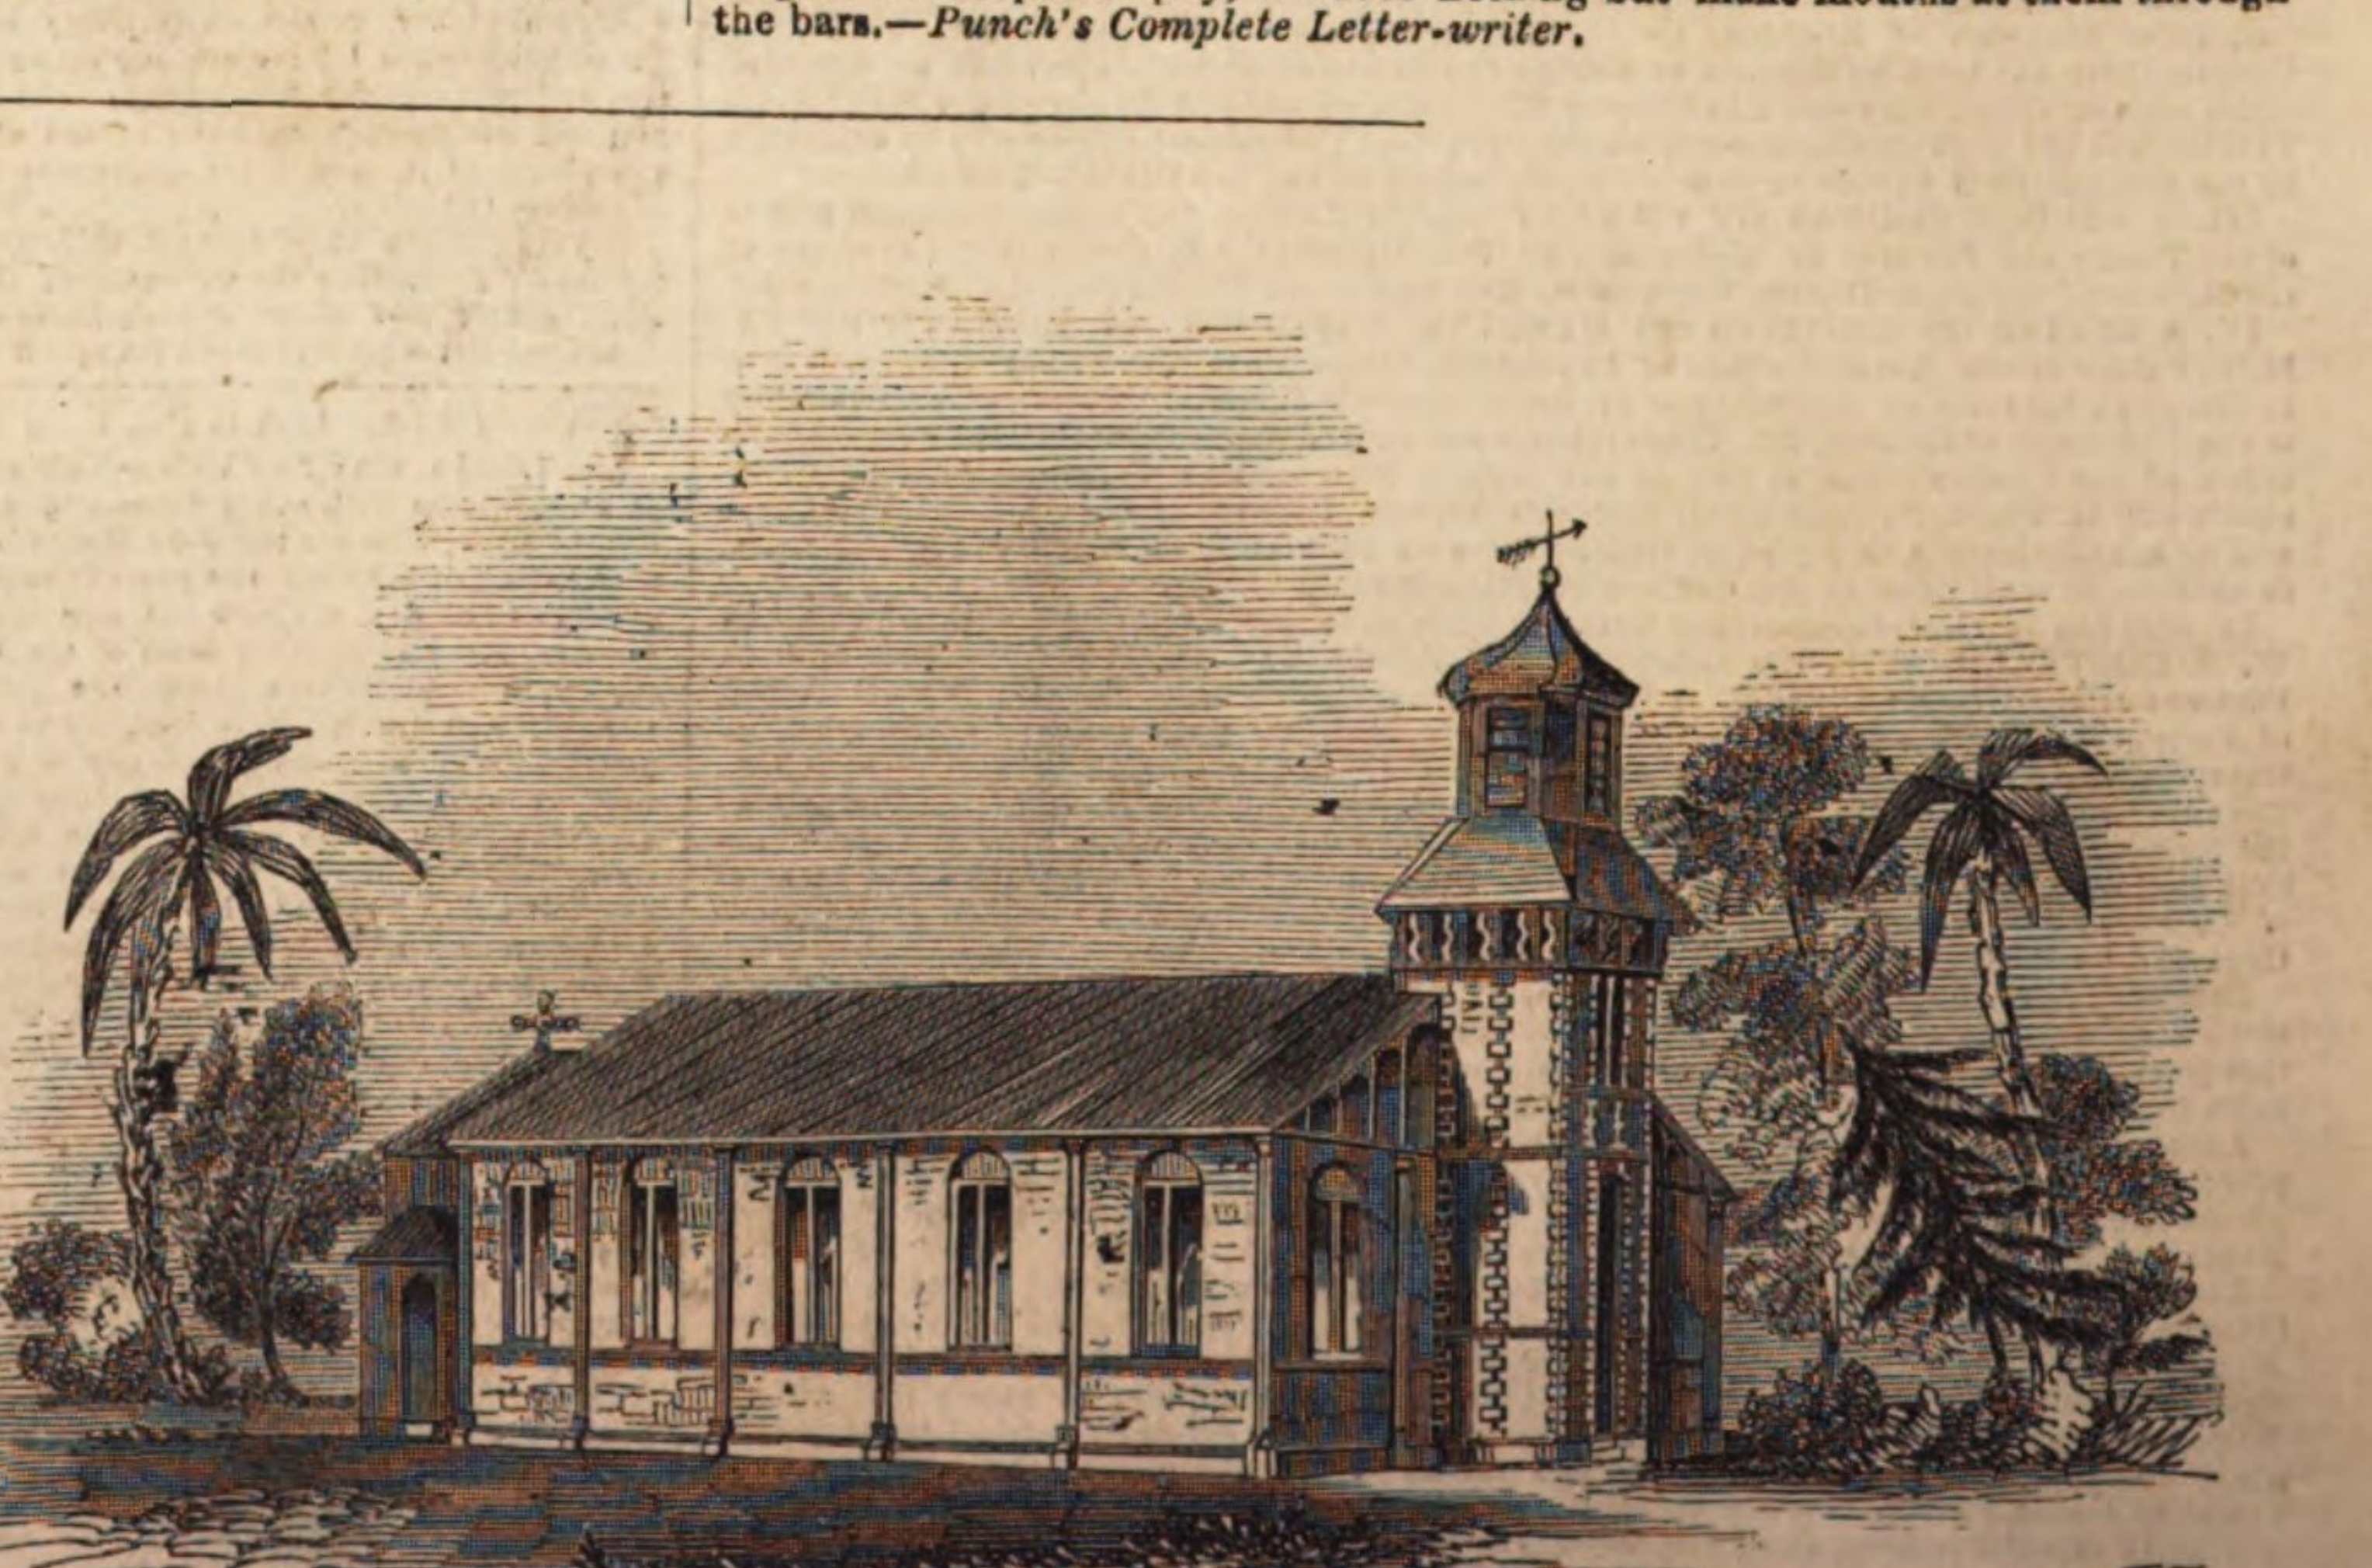
IRON CHURCH FOR JAMAICA.

In giving our readers, three weeks since, a description of a "Temporary Wooden Church," the work of Mr. Peter Thompson, Commercial-road, Limehouse, we were not aware of his being a worker in iron as well as wood, as the annexed sketch will show.

This Church has been sent out to Jamaica, as a specimen, as many of the kind are likely to be required. The pilaster supports are of cast iron, on which are fixed the frame roof, of wrought iron, of an ingenious construction, combining great strength with simplicity of arrangement; the whole is covered with corrugated iron; and the ceiling formed in paneled compartments, covered with felt, to act as a non-conductor of heat.

The body of the church is 65 feet by 40; the chancel, 24 by 12; a robing-room and vestry are attached. The windows are glazed with plate-glass, one-eighth of an inch in thickness; the two chancel windows, and four others are of stained glass.

The cost of this Iron Church is £1000.



IRON CHURCH, FOR JAMAICA.

POISONING BY THE DEADLY NIGHTSHADE.

An extraordinary instance of the fatal consequences of eating the berries of this poisonous plant is recorded in the Lancaster Gazette. It appears that on the morning of Tuesday week, Mr. Adam Clark, of Hest Bank, and a man named John Teesdale, in returning along the shore from eel-spearing, had reached a spot where grows in considerable abundance the Deadly Nightshade (Atropa Belladonna), a perennial plant with herbaceous stem. The fruit has a berry as large as a small grape, and a dark purple colour. Two elderly women, both residing in Lancaster, were standing amongst the plants and eating the berries when Mr. Clark and Teesdale came up. Mr. Clark inquired what the berries were, and on being told by the females that they were blaberries or barberries, he began to gather and eat also, as did Teesdale.

The parties separated, Mr. Clark and Teesdale proceeding to the Hest Bank Hotel, and taking with them several of the berries, which were immediately pronounced to be poison. Finding this, Mr. Clark swallowed a dose of medicine which served as an emetic. Nevertheless, he was seized with an alarming illness, parched tongue, dizziness, difficulty of swallowing, swollen face and eyes, and delirium; and it was not until the following morning that he was brought round by medical aid.

Meanwhile, the two women made the best of their way home, but they had not proceeded far before the symptoms described above began to manifest themselves. Parched and thirsty, the great desire was for drink, but one of the two having heard that drinking ought to be avoided in such cases (for they had suspicion they were poisoned) had the fortitude to abstain. They succeeded in reaching their homes, and obtained medical aid: they were in a state of mania throughout the night, but eventually, after much suffering, the poor women both recovered. It should be mentioned that the one who abstained from drink, though she had eaten most, suffered the least. One ate about a pint of the berries, and the other only about a dozen. Mr. Clark thinks he could not have swallowed half-a-dozen, at most.

The tragic part of the story remains to be told. The poor fellow, Teesdale, had been missed very soon after his arrival at the Hest Bank Hotel, about Tuesday noon; and was not found until Wednesday morning, when he was stiff and insensible, with his body swollen to an extraordinary size, eyes closed, &c. He was immediately put to bed, medical aid was procured, and every means taken to neutralize the poison: for a time, the patient rallied, but throughout Thursday, he grew worse, and next morning, died in a state of utter exhaustion. He was about sixty years of age, and of robust constitution.

THE DEADLY NIGHT-SHADE.—(Atropa Belladonna).

We annex a representation of the deleterious plant, with the view of aiding in the prevention of accidents similar to the above. The plant Atropa Belladonna, Deadly Nightshade, or dwale, is found not unfrequently in hedges and thickets in this country. The whole is of a lightish green colour, except the flowers, which are of a large and dingy-brownish purple; and the berries, which are of the rich deep black of black cherries. The odour of the whole plant is nauseous and oppressive, as if to warn us of its venomous nature: the berries, from their resemblance to cherries, have often been eaten by children, with fatal consequences. The active property of the leaves and roots is employed medicinally.

In the engraving: 1, a Corolla, cut open, showing the position of the stamens. 2, the calyx, with the pistil. 3, a berry cut in half, to show its two cells, in each of which are several seeds.

Good News for the Pensioners.—It is stated that the out-pensioners of Chelsea Hospital are to be identified every six months, and "are to be considered on a nearly similar footing as when they were in the service." We shall be glad to know how this will affect those pensioners who have lost their legs, and who cannot be supposed to be on anything like the same footing as when they were in the service.—Punch.

A Churchwarden.—It is now two years since the horrors of fiscal war broke out in the once peaceful parish of Wholehog-cum-Applesauce. For two years have the affrighted parishioners had their souls and pockets torn by thoughts of mammon—for two years have they nightly fallen to sleep to groan and writhe beneath a nightmare sitting on their breasts in the horrid shape of a Churchwarden, grinning and hugging in his arms an iron-clasped account book! Neither sex nor age has escaped the evil influence of the time: old women wax older when they talk of Churchwarden Gripps; and the faces of little children become sharp and thin as sixpences when they stammer out his name. True it is, the parishioners have put him in the cage of Chancery; nevertheless, with a magnanimous philosophy, he does nothing but make mouths at them through the bars.—Punch's Complete Letter-writer.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1844.

Redactions-Exemplar.

THE ILLUSTRATED
LONDON NEWS

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR SC. A PARIS

No. 127.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1844. [Sixpence.

THE NAPOLEON OF PEACE.

Louis Philippe has formally announced his intention of visiting the Queen of England. The intention was known, but its performance was uncertain; Tahiti and Morocco—wars and rumours of wars—disputes—bitter feelings—and their expression in angry articles, which flew like poisoned arrows between Paris and London, created a state of things that rendered such a visit doubtful; but the clouds, if they have not quite disappeared, are at least dispersed. We hope the two nations are welcoming home again their, for a while, discarded faith in each other's good intentions, and that they have almost expended their anger in type and paper—a more harmless combination of the two materials than balls and cartridges. In conjunction, too, with the announcement we have alluded to, appears an account of the reception given by Louis Philippe to addresses from the societies established in England and America for the dissemination of the principles of peace. The reply of the King to these addresses is a noble one; it is worthy a wise ruler, and the impression it will make here will be the best herald he could send before him to make his welcome among us a hearty one. He pledges himself to that pacific policy, from which it is now more than madness for nations to depart. He does so strongly, and without reserve. In the face of such an excitement as that kept up by the war party in France, the declaration is bold, as well as sagacious. While the conjunction of circumstances fixes public attention on this monarch, it may not be out of place to draw a brief estimate of his career, his position, and his policy. The first has been eventful; the second is anxious; the last, hitherto, successful.

Louis Philippe is an able man. He is one of the very few monarchs of Europe who govern for themselves, mark out their own policy, and, though securing good ministers to manage the details, contrive to retain them in their position as instruments, rather than powers. Without consummate tact, judgment, and courage, he never could have so long sat firmly on his throne, founded as it is on the ruins and wrecks of three systems, which, in the course of his own life, he has seen rise and fall: he looks back from his elevated position on the Republic, the Empire, and the Legitimate Monarchy. From the Republic he learned how short-lived is the wild, unhealthy licence which the French baptised in blood, and called Freedom—and, stranger still, mistook for the sacred thing whose name they had thus taken in vain. The Republic of France taught Louis Philippe much—and he has remembered the lesson. It beheaded his father, and compelled himself to eat—and, it is said, to earn—the bread of an exile. From the Empire, too, though no sharer in its triumphs, he might gather much also; it was a system more brilliant than solid; talent and energies almost superhuman directed its machinery, but the talent was without feeling for the mass of mankind, and the energy the greatest when engaged in the work of destruction. The good of all was sacrificed, without scruple, to the personal aggrandisement of one; the true end of Government and policy was reversed, and the system fell with the extraordinary man who had raised it, leaving little behind but the memory of the blood and treasure that had been wasted without profit, and spent without lasting result. Then came the Monarchy, with its revival of legitimacy, and etiquette, and right divine; but the world was no longer the same as when these things had a life, and power and command over men; everything had changed—except the Bourbons. They were not pliant enough to yield in time to the inevitable, nor dexterous enough to turn events to their advantage; for discontent they could imagine no remedy but force, yet when the unhappy hour came when force was resorted to, the sword broke in their hands; ruin again overtook the race of St. Louis, and Charles X. died in exile, neglected by other nations and forgotten by the bulk of his own. The reins that had fallen from the weak hands of the elder representative of his family were then seized by Louis Philippe, and he is now, after fourteen years of active government, firmly seated on the throne, ruling ably, as we said before, if not always on principles that Englishmen would be likely to approve, or endure if they were applied to themselves; profiting by the errors of his predecessors, and the calamities of the past, the better to direct his efforts for the security of the future. It may be that his long and intimate knowledge of the world and of men, and of much that is the worst in both, has something hardened his heart, and given him a low estimate of human motives. It is also possible that the political excesses of the people, ere Napoleon crushed every semblance of liberty beneath the weight of a military organisation, and a knowledge of the bad effects of the mingled feebleness and desperation of the policy of Charles X., have rendered him a little too jealous and distrustful of free principles, and too ready to repress their progress by the "strong hand." But it must be remembered that he knows his subjects well, and the use they made of liberty when they gained it, was not beneficial either to themselves or their neighbours. Before we censure Louis Philippe too severely for his cautious régime, let us be sure that his people are fit for freedom. It is the remark of an acute author, "That whether the French walk or run upon the path of liberty, they always contrive to stumble upon despotism."

But, there is one trait in Louis Philippe's character, that, for Englishmen, and indeed for the whole world, ought to be a subject of congratulation. Like all men of clear judgment, and calm sense, he is not dazzled by the brilliancy of that phantom called military glory: he has gazed on it, and seen its empty vanity; he has shared its toils, and knows well the suffering and mischiefs it inflicts. He is, therefore, a man of peace. Those who know best what war actually is, are never the most anxious to plunge into it. Wellington and Soult are the two greatest of living warriors, and the cabinets in which they have powerful interest are the most pacific in their policy, the respective countries have seen for many years. M. Thiers was, and is, hot for war, probably because all he knows of it is from books. He was a journalist, and is now a man of letters as well as a statesman; but the "bookish theoric," we may take for granted, is all he knows of warfare:

> He never set a squadron in the field,
> Nor the division of a battle knows
> More than a spinster.

From the same ignorance, stimulated by vanity, "Young France" is all warlike, ready to quarrel with any nation, for any cause—the slighter perhaps the better; and Tahiti being perfectly useless as a possession, is, on that principle, better worth fighting for than the old "frontier of the Rhine." We can form but a slight notion in England of the extent to which the war-madness prevails among the young men of France; they connect with the idea of war that of political progress, and are at least persuaded that it would break up the existing order of things. Whether it would lead to a better condition or a worse, does not occur to them to consider.

That all this is folly and madness Louis Philippe sees clearly enough; and, luckily for the world, is sufficiently strong and sufficiently bold to stem the current instead of going with it. He does it skilfully, too; taking advantage of the policy of the last years of his predecessor, he has contrived to turn much of the unquiet, restless spirit of a large portion of the army against barbarous tribes, who give it constant occupation, while there is not any imminent danger of such a collision with the European powers springing from it as would bring on a war with any of them. Louis Philippe found Algiers occupied; he could not have given it up in the early part of his reign without danger to the stability of his authority. The occupation is a continual drain on the resources of France, to which it returns not a penny; but it furnishes bulletins and despatches, the chance of magnifying skirmishes into battles, now and then a standard or two, and recently the splendid trophy of an umbrella. A collision with a neighbouring people, as savage as the Arabs themselves, is but an excitement the more; and altogether Algeria may almost be considered the safety-valve for getting rid of some of that high pressure of the war excitement, which, in spite of this outlet, still rages uncomfortably high.

But when there is any risk of a collision with the great civilized powers, we are bound to say that the anxiety of the French Government to prevent a resort to the last fatal extremities, is quite equal to that of our own Ministry; though in France none know better than those at the head of affairs the unpopularity they will, in so doing, ensure to themselves. In England, the bulk of the nation would back up and support any minister in his exertions to maintain a peace; in France, if they had the power, they would depose him, in favour of a less scrupulous man, who would adopt the madness of the hour. Were the suffrage enjoyed as widely in France as in England, and an election for the Chamber occurred to-morrow, Europe, in six months, would be in a blaze!

CALCUTTA—ARRIVAL OF THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

On this subject, the journalists of France exhibit less reasoning powers than children, while it might be a question which of the two is the worse—their logic or their morality. Thus, the Siècle actually says that it may be very well for the philosopher to dilate on the blessings of peace; it is quite right that the priest should lift up his hands in prayer for its continuance; but statesmen and kings must not act from the motives that prompt the sage and the divine! A cold barren assent may be given to a principle, but no human means are to be used to secure to mankind the blessings of that principle put in action! Nothing can be worse than all this; it is to rave, not reason. But knowing that such language can be addressed to a whole people, not only without fear of offending them, but even with a tolerable security of having their applause, we may better estimate what must have been the labour of Louis Philippe; certainly, he has to deal with a generation that do err in their hearts, and that he has been compelled to use a degree of coercion in governing them that to us appears somewhat harsh and not a little distrustful, is rather a matter of regret than surprise.

But, nevertheless, he has preserved peace hitherto, and he has given a distinct pledge that he will preserve it, still; to do so will require continual efforts, the more meritorious that they have not the brilliant and noisy triumphs which wait on success in war; but they have their reward in the blessings they ensure to the present, and the still greater blessings they will provide for the future. Industry, arts, and commerce flourish beneath the shade of the olive-branch, while they are blasted by that of the laurel; it is not by the lightning flash of battle that the onward path of mankind can be illuminated; nations must be guided by the calmer and steadier rays of the light that cheers and dazzles not—the light from whose bloody glare Religion need not veil her eyes, or turn in horror away. As one of those who, having in their hands great earthly power, use it, in this respect, for good rather than evil, we would direct the approval of men to much of the past policy and to the whole of the late declaration of Louis Philippe, who has acquired and promises still to deserve, his title of the NAPOLEON OF PEACE.

CALCUTTA.—ARRIVAL OF THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The city of Calcutta, of which we present an accurate view, very recently taken, is the capital of Bengal, and the seat of the Supreme Government of British India. Presenting, as it does, a beautiful array of private dwellings, and a magnificent residence expressly built for the Governor-General de facto, during the administration of the Marquis of Wellesley, it is generally called "The City of Palaces;" and no one will venture to gainsay the appellation. The population consists of about 260,000 souls, chiefly Hindoos and Mahomedans; but there are a great number of other inhabitants of various European and Eastern nations. The English number about 3000, who are divided for the most part into merchants, trades-people, civil and military staff officers, lawyers, persons employed in the shipping trade, and others. The Eurasians, or East Indians, offspring of the English by Hindoo or Mahomedan mothers, are nearly 5000 in number; and there are, besides, 3000 or 4000 of the degenerate descendants of the early Portuguese conquerors and visitors of India.

As the seat of Government, and the chief commercial port in India, Calcutta is, of course, not wanting in any of the luxuries which make existence tolerable to the European. The style of life corresponds very much with that in use in England, with a difference in the article of clothing, rendered necessary by the intense heat of the climate: and the addition of some domestic appendages not ordinarily enjoyed by the middle classes in this country, such as carriages, horses, &c. The climate does not appear very materially to affect Europeans who are moderate in their habits; but there is no doubt that cholera, fevers, the liver complaint, and dysentery, are as common in the metropolis as in other parts of British India.

The view here given of Calcutta is taken from the water-gate of Fort William, and exhibits the face of the town, just as it strikes the visitor for the first time, on the vessel rounding a reach close to the fort. In our engraving, the steamer, with Sir H. Hardinge on board, on the 23rd of July last, has just left the reach astern. The domed edifice in the centre of the town is the Government House, and the column to the spectator's extreme right, beyond the ramparts, is the Ochterlony pillar—so called from its having been built to commemorate the public virtues of the late General Sir David Ochterlony. The rest of the edifices are the Supreme Court, the Town Hall, and a variety of private residences. Fort William, to the right, is garrisoned by one of the European regiments in her Majesty's service. As it commands the adjacent country, Calcutta enjoys sufficient protection to render separate walls, barriers, or other appliances to a fortified town, unnecessary.

The town of Calcutta, in its municipal government, corresponds very much with other cities under English rule. The protection of British laws is enjoyed there in full force. There are besides, police magistrates, with a large posse comitatus, commissioners of courts of request and insolvency; a coroner, and all the usual paraphernalia of a city government. Numerous associations exist for useful, charitable, or commercial purposes, and the natives enjoy as fully as the English all the protection and advantages derivable from a just and equitable system of rule.

In connexion with the mortality of Calcutta, it may be interesting to add, that at York, last week, Colonel Sykes read to the British Association a paper on the above subject. Amongst other curious facts he showed that the rate of mortality was higher amongst Hindoos than either Mahomedans or Europeans; and that amongst the latter the average was greater amongst Catholics than Protestants—a circumstance probably attributable to the general superiority in station and comforts of the latter. In the Indian army the mortality of single men was 3.77 compared with that of married men, which was but 2.74.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers contain long accounts of the review of the troops in garrison in Paris on Sunday last, and of the ceremony of receiving the colours and other trophies captured at Isly and Mogadore. The review took place in the Cour des Tuileries. At twelve o'clock all the troops had arrived on the ground assigned to them; the infantry in the Cour des Tuileries, and the cavalry and artillery in the Place du Carrousel. When they assembled the coup d'œil was very brilliant. The weather had been bad in the morning, but was comparatively fine during the review. The King arrived from St. Cloud at noon with the Queen, his Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours, who returned from Metz on Saturday, his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier, and her Royal Highness Madame Adelaide. The King's carriage was followed by five others, in which were the ladies of honour of the Queen, and the King's aides-de-camp. The King alighted at the gate of the Tuileries, called the Pont-Tournant, near the great basin, and was received by the Ministers. His Majesty immediately entered the tent of the son of the Emperor of Morocco, which had been put up over the great basin, and examined every part of it with much interest. The tent itself is not more than about forty feet in diameter, but it is surrounded with a circular enclosure, leaving a space between that and the tent. This enclosure reached nearly to the edge of the basin. At a little before one o'clock the King entered the court of the Tuileries on horseback, accompanied by the Dukes de Nemours and de Montpensier, Duke Bernard of Saxe Weimar, Marshal Soult, the Minister of Marine, Marshal Gerard, General Jacqueminot, and a numerous staff. His Majesty's presence was hailed with loud acclamations. The Queen, Madame Adelaide, and the Count de Paris, were seated in the balcony of the Pavillon de l'Horloge. The windows of the palace were filled with ladies who had been admitted by tickets. The colours and the other trophies, including the famous parasol, were placed under the eyes of the King, who contemplated them with an interest shared by all the spectators of this scene. They were carried by twenty-eight non-commissioned officers who had been engaged in campaigns in Africa, and been decorated with the order of the Legion of Honour. After the presentation of the trophies his Majesty passed down the line of the troops, and was received with loud cries of "Vive le Roi."

The colour-bearers and officers and non-commissioned officers who, according to previous arrangement, were to receive the decoration of the Legion of Honour, then entered the Tuileries; the superior officers, officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the cavalry, were dismounted, as were also the colour-bearers. Those who were to be decorated were placed in a single line, in the order of the numbers of their respective regiments, with the colours and standards behind them, and the bands and drums of the 2nd Light Infantry and 23rd of the Line behind the colour-bearers. When the decorations had been conferred, the standards, and the musicians and drummers, remained in front of his Majesty. The colours taken in Morocco, preceded by Marshal Soult and several general officers, were now carried between the ranks of the cavalry and infantry, the drums loudly beating and the trumpets playing. The non-commissioned officers who carried these colours then placed themselves at the right of the King, and Marshal Soult advancing, said, "Sire, I present to your Majesty the colours taken at the battle of Isly by the French army, and at Mogadore by the Prince de Joinville. I entreat your Majesty to receive them, and to permit them to be placed in the nave of the Chapel of the Invalides." The King replied, "I accept these colours in the name of France." The defiling of the various corps then commenced.

A procession was then formed, and the trophies were conveyed to the Invalides. At a quarter before four o'clock the procession arrived, and Lieutenant-General Petit received it at the head of his staff. At the command of General Sebastiani the detachment advanced towards General Petit and said:—

"General, I come in the name of the King, to place in your hands the trophies captured by our brave soldiers of the army of Africa, and by our intrepid seamen, at Tangier, Isly, and Mogadore." The General replied—"It is with a feeling of noble pride that I receive the flags which recall to my recollection the most glorious events of our history; and I am proud to see that our young soldiers are worthy of their elders of the grand army. Yes, France is ever the country of heroic legions, of great and sublime devotedness. It is by a succession of glorious victories that it has acquired the first place in the history of nations, from Tolbiac and Rocray to Jemappes, Wagram, Constantine, Isly, and Mogadore; and she will ever preserve that position. Soldiers, those trophies which you carry with you shall be placed beside those of Austerlitz, of Jena, and of Friedland—that is, beside the most glorious trophies of the empire. Let these great recollections be ever present in your mind, and let them recall to your remembrance what France expects from your constancy and your valour.—Long live the King."

This cry was unanimously repeated at several intervals. Thirty invalided non-commissioned officers then advanced towards the detachment which carried the colours, and received them from the latter. The religious ceremony of blessing the colours then took place, and lasted half an hour. The general officers and their staffs were present the whole time.

The Prince de Joinville arrived in Paris on Tuesday.

The Constitutionnel states that M. Guizot has been indisposed for some days with an affection of the larynx. We rejoice to learn, however, that his illness is not serious, and that it will not prevent him from accompanying the King of the French to England.

Count Charles Jacques Duchatel, father of the Minister of the Interior, died on Monday, at his estate of Mirabeau, in the south of France, in the 93rd year of his age. Count Duchatel had formed part of the Council of Five Hundred.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles of the 27th ult. brings news from Algiers of the 24th. A grand review of the troops quartered in the city and its environs, and of the five battalions of the National Guard, took place on the 22d. Marshal Bugeaud had invited the principal chiefs of the neighbouring tribes, and of those who lately made their submission, to be present at it, and all had accepted the invitation. But the review was scarcely over when the Marshal was informed that some of the tribes, availing themselves of the absence of their chiefs, had attacked Dellys, and massacred and plundered a number of persons belonging to a friendly tribe. The Marshal lost no time in adopting measures for the repression of this revolt, and an the same evening two steamers, laden with troops, sailed for Bugia. The next morning several companies of engineers and artillery, and everything necessary for an expedition, were embarked for the same point.

SPAIN.

We learn from Madrid, that official accounts have been published in that city of the re-establishment of peace between Spain and Morocco. The Madrid Gazette of the 25th ult. contains a royal decree, countersigned by the Minister of Finance, sanctioning the conversion of the Treasury Bonds, issued by virtue of the law of the 2nd of May, 1842, into titulos of the consolidated debt, Three per Cents., at 32 per cent. It was rumoured that Senor Mon intended to accept a project for a new contract which would supply him with funds to pay the interest of the Three per Cent. Stock during two years.

Some further arrests had taken place at Valencia, under the pretext of a connection with a conspiracy said to have been discovered in that province.

PORTUGAL.

Our letters from Lisbon of the 25th ult. intimate the approaching dissolution of the Cabral Ministry, which was unable to stem the torrent of unpopularity excited by the late decrees. It is even stated that the Queen has been in treaty with Viscount Sa da Bandeira about the formation of a new administration, and that the result is a coalition cabinet, composed in equal proportions of Chartists and Moderate Septembrists.

The late storm has produced the most terrible effects at Sabugal, in Beira. Hailstones, half a pound each in weight, fell in great quantities. Every roof in the town was destroyed, and every tree in the surrounding district, for a distance of two leagues, was shattered to pieces in a few minutes, and nothing but the bare trunks left. Every trace of garden and field vegetation was annihilated, the sheep, goats, and poultry killed, the windows, without exception, shivered, and the very window-frames broken. The inhabitants, driven from their roofless houses, have been obliged to construct huts in the adjacent fields. This in the midst of a burning summer, and in a climate which, although European, often presents tropical appearances. A storm of rain and wind accompanied the hailstones, and fearful flashes of lightning added to the horror of the scene.

GREECE.

King Otho opened the Legislative Session on the 20th ult., in a sensible and moderate speech, in which he spoke of the desire for a cordial union between the throne and the people. His Majesty also touched upon the necessity of economy, and stated that projects of law would be submitted, offering guarantees for the liberty of all. The King professed his love of his country, and said that to simplify the administration of the laws, and to modify them so as to put them in accordance with the state of the nation, would be one of the duties of the session.

The celebration of the anniversary of the revolution has passed off quietly.

THE UNITED STATES, CANADA, &C.

By the Hibernia, Captain Hyde, arrived at Liverpool, we have advices from New York to the 15th ult.; Boston, the 16th; and Halifax, to the 18th ult. The Great Western sailed from New York on the 14th ult. Though the dates brought by the Hibernia extend over a period of fourteen days, the papers do not possess an item of any interest. The papers are occupied, to the exclusion of almost everything else, with long articles on the elections, which possess no interest for English readers.

Another very extraordinary railway achievement was effected on the outward arrival of the Hibernia. Her news was carried to Montreal, the capital of Canada, over the Fitchburg Railway, at great speed, and the united result of sea and land performances is, that the distance from Liverpool to Montreal was accomplished in thirteen days three hours and a half.

In Canada, Sir Charles Metcalfe had fixed upon his new Cabinet, and had arrived in Montreal on the 3d ult. to swear the members in. The following are the names:—

President of the Council.—Mr. Viger.
Secretary.—Mr. Daly.
Attorney General for U. C.—Mr. Draper.
Attorney General for L. C.—Mr. Smith.
Solicitor General for U. C.—Mr. Sherwood.
Solicitor General for L. C.—Mr. Chabot
Commissioner of Crown Lands.—Mr. D. B. Papineau.
Receiver General. — Mr. William Morris.
Inspector General.—Mr. Merritt.

Messrs. L. H. Lafontaine and A. N. Morin have resigned their commissions as Queen's counsel.

The weather in Lower Canada has, it appears, been most unfavourable for the crops, and a niggardly harvest has been the consequence.

Further riots among the fire companies in Baltimore had taken place, and much damage done, though no lives, it is said, were lost. Slight disturbances had also taken place in Philadelphia.

Later dates had been received at New York from Hayti; hostilities had been resumed between the mulattoes and the blacks, and another revolution seemed impending.

Accounts had been received from authentic sources in Galveston, Texas, giving a deplorable account of the ravages of fever in that city. It swept through some families, prostrating every member, the children and servants not escaping.

The Jamaica Despatch states that letters from St. Juan Nicaragua give accounts of "an awful earthquake. The city of Nicaragua lies in ruins, only one house is to be seen. The churches and plantations in that quarter are also destroyed. No mention is made of any lives being lost." "The visitation (says the Despatch) must have taken place some time in the end of June." The British blockade of the port of St. Juan is still continued.

The stock market in New York had a downward tendency. Good business was doing in cotton.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA AND CHINA.

By the Overland India Mail we have received letters and papers from Bombay to the 27th August, from Calcutta to the 15th August, and from China to the 21st of June. The chief point of interest is the news from Calcutta relating to the arrival of Sir Henry Hardinge, the new Governor-General, and the departure of Lord Ellenborough. Sir H. Hardinge reached Calcutta in the evening of the 23rd of July, and was immediately sworn into his high office. His first act was to continue Mr. Bird as Governor of Bengal. On the next and subsequent days he held levees and durbars, and has thus far gained golden opinions from all parties, although there are some who appear to doubt his future proceedings, as being nearly connected with Lord Ellenborough. The latter noble lord embarked on the 1st of August on board the steamer Tenasserim, and immediately started for Suez.

The arrival in Bombay of Sir Henry Pottinger from China has been the signal of great rejoicings. He was welcomed with addresses, and with dinners, balls, &c. The Chamber of Commerce presented an address, to which his Excellency returned a most remarkable answer, in which the late proceedings and negotiations in China are reviewed.

Sir Henry Pottinger embarked at Bombay on the 27th of August, on his return to Europe.

The popularity of Sir Henry Hardinge with the military is likely to be increased, as it had been rumoured in India, and it was said on good authority, that he was empowered to raise new regiments, to add one captain to each of the actual corps, and to re-introduce, the punishment of flogging into the native army. This last measure appears to be considered imperative by the generality of the officers, especially since the occurrence of the several mutinies which have latterly disgraced the troops of Madras and Bengal.

The news from the Punjaub represents that country as a prey to anarchy and confusion, and the lowest intrigues of assassination and plunder by the chiefs. Heera Singh does not appear to be fixed in his power, and expectation was afloat of the great commotions agitating the Shiekhs in the month of October, at the time of the great Hindoo festival of the Dusserrah, when all the native states are in the practice of making war against their enemies.

Affghanistan has, of late, been considerably more tranquil than formerly; and the power of Dost Mahomed and his family begins to be established on a firm and substantial basis.

From Gwalior we learn that there has been a mutiny among the Jinsee troops against their chief, arising out of his tyrannical treatment of them. The uncle of the young Maharajah was expected to succeed to their command.

Our intelligence from Scinde extends from the 4th July to the 14th August. It is of a somewhat mixed complexion, but on the whole eminently satisfactory.

The succession to the throne of Holkar, at Indore, has been settled by the elevation to it of a son of Bhow Holkar, who had married a daughter of Hurree Rao Holkar. The young Maharajah has assumed the name of Tookajee Holkar, and promises well. He is described as a manly boy, and has conciliated the good-will of the people.

A splendid farewell entertainment was given at Calcutta to Lord Ellenborough, at which that noble lord made a speech somewhat in contradiction with his address upon assuming the reins of government. Upon that occasion his lordship dwelt upon the delights of peace and the advantages of extending social and commercial intercourse. In his last speech, however, he compliments the army in strong terms, and intimates that the empire can alone be preserved by that force. Lord Ellenborough expressed his congratulations upan the appointment of Sir Henry Hardinge, and paid a high compliment to that gallant general.

There was no commercial news of interest. The Calcutta money market is said to be in an unusually quiet state, and capital is abundant, with considerable difficulty of employment in safe channels.

CHINA.

We have intelligence by her Majesty's steamer Driver, which came into port on the 29th July, from Victoria, the 21st June. Admiral Sir T. Cochrane had returned from the north on the 2nd June. The visit of the French frigate Alcmene to Chusan and Shanghai had occasioned much excitement amongst the Chinese along the coast, so that it was considered eminently desirable that a strong naval force should be kept in the north for the protection of British life and property against the outbreaks of the mob. The American and French men-of-war Brandywine, St. Louis, Cleopatra, and Alcmene, had arrived almost simultaneously in the Chinese waters.

The Friend of China gives a summary of China events up to the above date. The Imperial Commissioner Keying had taken a friendly leave of Sir Henry Pottinger, at the same time being introduced to Governor Davis, who being able to converse fluently in the commissioner's native language, at once gained his confidence.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 21.

The Geyser sailed hence early yesterday morning for Malta, having on board Lord Ellenborough. The Berenice, from Bombay, arrived at Suez on the 17th inst., with the mails and 25 passengers, amongst whom is Sir Henry Pottinger, who proceeds this day to England by the Great Liverpool.

Lieut.-Col. Powell, of the 1st Bombay European Regiment, Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, died of dropsy, off Jedda, on the 13th inst., on board of the Berenice. This officer, who was about 54 years of age, had just retired from service.

MALTA, Sept. 25.

The Great Liverpool, with mails from India, arrived this morning after one of the most rapid passages she has ever performed. She passed the Geyser steam-frigate at eight A.M. on Monday, in lat. 34 35 N., long. 20 17 E. This vessel, with his Excellency Lord Ellenborough on board, has just moored in the great harbour.

THE AFFRAY AT TAHITI.

A letter from Tahiti, dated April 24, gives some interesting particulars of the affray between the French and the natives, of which but an imperfect account has hitherto appeared. The letter says:—

"The French war steamer Phaeton and the frigate Uranie, 64 guns, came to anchor in the harbour of Papeeti, the former, having the greater part of the wounded on board, last night, and the latter this day, bringing intelligence of a desperate engagement between 800 marines, soldiers, and artillery, of the French forces in the Pacific, and about 1,000 Tahitians. Both parties suffered severely, but the Tahitians remained masters of the field of battle.

"About five o'clock on the morning of the 18th, the French commenced landing, protected by the guns of the steamer and the frigate; and as there was some difficulty in this, it was past ten o'clock before they were in motion for the attack, with a number of field-pieces, and led on by Governor Bruat in person. An individual of the name of Henry, a son of a missionary here, and who is indebted to the natives of the island entirely for his subsistence, pointed out to the French a path by which they could reach a hill which commanded part of the encampment; and although a strong party with muskets could do little damage by being in possession of this spot, yet when a few field-pieces were stationed there the havoc was great. When the main body of the French saw that this spot had been gained, and which the Tahitians neglected to defend, the attack commenced, and the slaughter. The struggle that ensued was dreadful, the Tahitians fighting man to man with their spears against the bayonets of the French soldiers (for not above one-half of the Tahitians had fire-arms). Their despera*tion* and their mortal hatred of the French told volumes. Had they been armed with muskets, not a Frenchman would have been left to tell the tale; however, as it is, their noble efforts to carry the day has earned for them a character for nobleness of purpose, and no want of resolution to carry it into effect. When the least opportunity offered, the thundering broadsides of the Uranie, and long guns of the steamer, never ceased to assist in the fierce conflict.

"The French have suffered severely, at the very lowest, 100 men; while on the other side it is almost impossible to ascertain their loss, but as they only acted on the defensive throughout, it may reasonably be presumed that the loss on both sides is about equal.

"Offers of peace have been proposed by Governor Bruat to the Tahitians. The answer sent back was characteristic of the Tahitians—'Before any propositions would be considered, the French governor must restore the life of their murdered countrymen.' Numbers of natives who have been living here, and been quite passive heretofore, and those who have been bribed by the French, have gone up to the scene of the late action to search for their relatives who may have been killed, with the laudable intention of giving to their bodies at the least a decent interment. These, too, are now loud in their execrations of the French.

"Poor Pomare, the Queen of Tahiti, remains on board the Basilisk English man-of-war. In her letter to Admiral Thomas she says, 'I and my people have sworn before God that no power but England shall govern Tahiti while we live.'

"If France clings to Tahiti, nothing less than ten thousand lives will be the price of it, as it may be observed that all the inhabitants of the Leeward Islands have one feeling in common with those of Tahiti—detestation of the French; and now late events have increased it tenfold."

According to an account a day later, viz., April 25, the Tahitians only pretended to retreat. It was merely a manœuvre on the part of the natives to draw their enemies further into their power; and with regard to the natives having suffered such severe loss, it turns out that they have not lost above 80 men; while the loss on the part of the French is allowed to be at the very least 120. In fact, from the nature of the ground, the strong defences of the encampment, and their determined opposition, it could not have turned out otherwise. When the Tahitians retired they expected the enemy to pursue, instead of which they threw a little sand over the bodies of their unfortunate companions, piled up the bodies of their enemies, and in great haste made the best of their way to their ships. Many who were mortally wounded they took with them, but before they had reached the vessel these were no more.

COUNTRY NEWS.

GOODRICH COURT, HEREFORDSHIRE, containing, perhaps, the most unique collection of armoury in the kingdom, was lately honoured by a visit from their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, their Graces the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, Lady Augusta Somerset and the Baron Nieumann. They were shown through the magnificent apartments by Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick, the proprietor of this superb collection, and they seemed to be highly pleased with the spectacle.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE.—We understand the statue in honour of the illustrious warrior, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, will be erected in front of the Royal Exchange, Glassgow, next week.

ANOTHER GREAT WILL CAUSE.—The Consistorial Court of Exeter has for some time been occupied with a will cause, Bellew v. Bellew, in which a great amount of property is involved. The Chancellor Master has now given his decision in the case. He stated that though there were grounds of suspicion attaching to the conduct of the promoter of the suit, sufficient evidence had not been adduced to prove that the testatrix was not in a condition to make a will, nor was there anything in the will to show that it did not express the probable intentions of the testatrix. He should, therefore, admit the will to probate, but, considering the near relationship of the parties, he should not pronounce for costs.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.—Last Saturday night an inquest was held at the Bedford Hotel, Brighton, on the body of the Rev. Thomas Robinson Welch. Deceased was brother-in-law of the late Dr. Shuttleworth, Bishop of Chichester, and was chancellor of the diocese of Chichester. He was likewise curate of Burwash, Sussex, where he generally resided, but he had been staying with his wife at 4, Cavendish-place, Brighton. He left home at half-past nine o'clock on the previous evening, for the purpose of taking a walk. The first witness called was Mr. Frederick Power Phillips, M.A., of Christ Church, Oxford, who deposed that about half-past ten o'clock on Friday evening he was walking down the Parade, when he saw the deceased, who was an entire stranger, walking towards them. When within a few paces of meeting, deceased fell on the crossing. Witness raised him up, and judging that he was in a fit, carried him to the nearest chemist's, Mr. Pain, St. James's-street, and sent a policeman for a surgeon. Deceased died in a few minutes. Mr. Wilton, surgeon, deposed to finding deceased at Mr. Paine's shop, insensible. Witness attempted to administer a reviving draught, but deceased could not swallow it. Deceased died in half a minute, after two convulsive gasps, as witness judged, of spasmodic affection of the heart. The jury returned a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God."

A MAN KILLED BY A BULL.—A man, named Daniel Jones, a tenant of Mr. William Thomas, draper, Carmarthen, was tossed by a two-year-old bull, on a farm in Llanllawddog parish, on Wednesday. The animal threw him high into the air, and, as he fell, caught him on his horns, and again threw him. His death almost immediately ensued. The verdict returned by the coroner's jury was to the effect that Daniel Jones had met with his death, but how did not appear in evidence.

BURSTING OF A STEAM-BOILER AT SALFORD.—An alarming explosion took place at Islington-mill, Salford, on Wednesday morning, which resulted in blowing up a portion of the building, killing one man, and scalding two or three others. It was usual to slacken the fire under the boilers at night, and leave the fires in the care of the watchman, whose duty it was, at about half-past four o'clock each morning to "beat the fires," and raise the steam, so that the machinery might be set in motion at six o'clock when the workpeople arrived. The party whose duty it was to do this work was James Atkins, the watchman, and it is supposed that at the time the explosion took place he was rousing up the fire under the boiler in question. The people in the mill were completely astounded. Bricks, mortar, and broken pieces of beams were flying about in all directions. One large piece of timber was blown upon the top of the factory, which is seven stories high; the distance being upwards of forty yards from the seat of the explosion, whilst slate and bricks were blown into the streets a distance of two hundred yards. The watchman, Atkins, was found amidst some rubbish, with his left leg broken, and his face frightfully disfigured. He was alive, but insensible, and was being taken to the Manchester Infirmary, but died on his way there. Michael Tyman, the fireman, and a man named Tipping, who were also near the spot at the time, were found slightly injured.

Five Persons Drowned at Plymouth.—On Monday evening, as a party of five persons, consisting of Mr. Fowler, cabinet-maker, Plymouth, his wife, Mr. Knowles, Mrs. Morgan, and Miss Ryder, were returning from Cawsand in a small boat, they kept in too close on the land, off Mount Edgecumbe, when the boat got on a rock, was capsized, and all who were on board drowned. It was a dead calm, and the accident was seen from the Huntsman Cottage at Mount Edgecumbe, but no assistance could be rendered in time. Three of the bodies were picked up the same night, and the other two on the following morning. They left Plymouth with the intention of going on board the Queen to visit a friend, but there being no admission on board that ship the unfortunate party proceeded to Cawsand. They had no waterman with them, and must have been inexperienced in the track which boats ought to take.

POLICE.

A Melancholy Story.—Amongst the charges brought before Mr. Henry, at Lambeth-street on Monday, was one against a middle-aged female named Margaret Healey, for stealing a piece of ham of the value of 14d., from the shop window of Mr. James Jenkins, a cheesemonger, in the Mile End-road. The complainant, Mr. Jenkins, stated that about half-past ten o'clock on Saturday night, the prisoner came up to his shop window and took a piece of ham which was exhibited for sale, and walked leisurely away with it. Witness followed, and upon coming up with her asked her for the piece of ham she had taken, but she refused to give it up, and requested she might, in fact insisted, that she should be given into custody, and a policeman coming up at the time, he gave her in charge. At the station-house she persisted in keeping the ham and being detained on the charge. The accused, from whose address and manner it was evident she had seen better days, declared she had committed the act in order to insure a shelter for the night. She had, she said, been turned out of the workhouse of the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, about one o'clock on the Saturday, without a single farthing in her possession, and after wandering about, she scarcely knew where, and being without the means of procuring a morsel of bread or a shelter for the night, she had, in a moment of despair, determined to commit some act for which she might be taken into custody.—Mr. Jenkins here said he was perfectly convinced the article had not been taken with a felonious intention; and it was not, as he had before stated, his intention to give the accused into custody, had she not requested him to do so and kept the ham. He begged at once to withdraw the charge, and requested that the piece of ham might be given to the poor woman for her use.—Mr. Henry was of opinion that the taking was not felonious, and desired the accused to come out of the felon's bar. She did so, and, in reply to the questions of the magistrates stated, that when a girl she had been taken to Rome by a lady named Foster, who sent her to school there, and also apprenticed her to the dress making. While there, besides learning her trade, she had acquired a knowledge of the French and Italian languages, and also perfected herself in all matters to qualify her for the situation of lady's maid. She subsequently returned to England, and by advertisements procured the appointment of companion to families going abroad. Amongst those whom she had lived with and attended, were Mrs. Hume and Mrs. Chalenor (Irish ladies), closely connected with the Fitzwilliam family. She subsequently lived in the family of Lady Pulteney, in Piccadilly, for five years, and also in the service of Miss Baker, in Park-lane, for two years, both these places being in the parish of St. George's, Hanover-square. Nearly three weeks ago she actually went four days and four nights without a morsel of food of any kind, and during the time had frequently entreated the police to take her up, but all refused, saying that she was neither riotous nor drunk, and told her she must make application to the workhouse. She at length actually dropped in the street from exhaustion, and was carried from the place where she lay, in Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, to the workhouse of St. George's. There she was confined for a fortnight in the sick ward. On Friday last the parish doctor pronounced her to be sufficiently recovered to leave the sick ward, and on the same day a young lady, who she understood to be the daughter of the matron, came to her, and said she might go to the needle-room or leave the house altogether; and she replied that she would go to the needle-room, as she certainly had not sufficient strength to leave the house, and that she was without the slightest means of supporting herself. She accordingly went to the needle-room, as it was called, and on the following day was sent for to appear before the matron, and, on entering her apartment, she (the matron) asked if she was the person who had been brought into the house in such a distressed state? She replied she was the same; upon which the matron observed that she had been discharged by the doctor, and therefore she must go out of the house. She replied that she was really not in a fit state to be discharged, for that she was still very weak; and another thing, she had not a place to go to, or the means of procuring food or lodging, and hoped, therefore, she might be allowed to remain in the house a few days longer. The matron replied that she must not, and the wardswoman at this time moved her on to the porter's hall. She complained to the porter of the state she was in, and he took her to the office of the overseer, next door. She informed that officer of the circumstances of her case, and begged he would either permit her to remain in the workhouse, or pass her to the settlement of her late husband in Rutlandshire. His reply was, that he thought the parish had done very well for her, in keeping her for a fortnight. "I cried bitterly," said the poor woman, "and begged he would take my distressing case into his kind consideration, upon which he told me to sit down, and on my doing so, he sent for the porter, and reprimanded him for bringing such a case before him. The porter then took me out, and I left the house about one o'clock. I was then recommended to go before a magistrate, and made my way to Marlborough-street Police-court, but was told there that the magistrate was investigating a case which was likely to last for some time, and that I had better go to the parish officers. I left the place, and roamed about in a state of bewilderment, I scarcely knew where, until about half-past ten at night, when I formed the resolution of getting out of the street, and to the shelter of the station-house, and with that object solely in view, I took the piece of ham, as has been described." The magistrate, after some sensible remarks upon the anomalies and hardships of the Poor Law Bill, said he should make inquiry into the case, and in the meantime directed that a comfortable lodging should be procured for the poor woman.—[After all the boasted purity of our laws, and the alleged independence of all classes in England, it seems "passing strange" that the surest passport to shelter and protection should be the commission of crime. It is really disgraceful that workhouses should be closed to the distressed, and that the plea of poverty should bring down a reprimand from the very menials of such establishments. One may almost wonder that offenders are not more numerous, when it is proved that it is absolutely necessary to commit a crime before misery can be relieved.]

Caution to Window Smashers.—A woman, named Maria King, who frequently has amused herself by breaking windows, was brought up on a charge of a similar kind. She frisked into the bar and smiled upon Sir Peter Laurie, and it was quite evident that she expected merely a few days exemption from the trouble of supporting herself. Sir Peter Laurie: Pray, why did you do this mischief?—Prisoner (smirking): I'm sure I can't say.—Sir Peter Laurie: Well, you must go to prison for fourteen days.—Prisoner: Very well sir, I shall go (tossing her head).—Sir Peter Laurie: I wish it to be known, that in all cases of this description I consider it necessary to order that the smallest amount of diet, consistent with the preservation of life, should be administered. (Great laughter).—Prisoner: What do you mean by that, eh?—Sir Peter Laurie: I mean that you shan't get fat by breaking windows, that's all. (Laughter). The prisoner, who was thunderstruck at the idea of the abridgment of the comforts of her usual place of retirement, moved off in the custody of the policeman, sorrowful if not repentant.

The Poisoning Case.—Alfred Edwards, the young man charged with having administered poison to a young woman named Jane Gregory, which caused her death, and against whom a verdict of "Wilful Murder" had been returned at the coroner's inquest, was placed at the bar at Worship-street, before Mr. Broughton, on Wednesday, for final examination on the charge, and fully committed.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Fatal Accident on Westminster-bridge.—On Monday afternoon the following shocking accident, attended with loss of life, occurred on Westminster-bridge:—A young woman named Sarah Brett, the wife of a sawyer, residing near the old church, Woolwich, was crossing the bridge on the right hand side from the Westminster side, when she slipped or was pushed from off the footway into the carriage road by a crowd of persons passing at the instant, and reeling against the side of a loaded hay-cart coming in an opposite direction, fell underneath the off wheel, which passed over her head. So large a quantity of blood instantly gushed from her mouth that the front part of her dress was completely saturated with it. She was directly carried to Westminster Hospital, where Mr. Priest, the house-surgeon, attempted to bleed her in the neck, but life was extinct. She had only left Westminster Hospital about half an hour before the accident occurred, having come up to town with a female acquaintance to see a relative, a patient. She was slightly in liquor at the time. The driver was taken into custody.

A Child Killed by Fly Poison.—Mr. Wakley, M.P., held an inquest on Wednesday, at the Spanish Patriot, White Conduit-street, Clerkenwell, on the body of Joseph Coleman, aged three years and nine months, the child of Mr. Coleman, baker, Mount-row. Last Saturday Mrs. Coleman laid upon a table in the parlour, while she went to serve a customer, a small quantity of fly poison, which she had just purchased. During the mother's temporary absence the deceased returned from school, and drank two table-spoons-full of the poison, which had a saccharine flavour. As soon as the mother perceived it she called in medical help, but all was in vain, and the child died in great agony at half-past 12 o'clock the following day. Mr. James Pitt Dow, surgeon, attended the deceased, and was of opinion that the poison was coculus indicus, which was of a very deadly character. Verdict, "Accidental Death."

Loss of Life by Fire.—On Tuesday morning, about half-past eight o'clock, Ann Morris, between ten and eleven years of age, the daughter of respectable parents living at No. 5, York-terrace, Westminster-road, expired at Westminster Hospital, having on the previous evening been shockingly burnt and scorched by her clothes accidentally catching in flames while she was lighting a fire, at her parents' residence.

Mysterious Case of Drowning in the River Lea.—An inquest was held by Mr. Baker, on Tuesday at the Jolly Anglers, Lea Bridge, touching the death of Miss Ann Sayer, aged 20 years, who was drowned in the river Lea on the previous Thursday. The deceased, it appeared, had been thrown from a boat, rowed by a Mr. Newman. The facts will be gathered from the evidence given by that gentleman himself. He deposed that the evening in question, on his return from Tottenham-mills, he was coming down by the right bank, when three men in a boat came along, two of whom were rowing and one steering, and when nearly abreast of him he called out to them to starboard their helm, but instead of doing so it was put aport, by which they pulled right into the bow of his boat; he turned round towards them, and at that moment his boat gave a heavy lurch, and the deceased fell out of the boat. He (Mr. Newman) directly jumped in after her, and caught hold of her with his left hand while he swam with his right. Deceased then caught hold of his right arm, which stopped him, and he was compelled to let her go and take hold of her with his right arm, and in so doing she sunk beneath the surface of the water. He dived after her, and again caught her by her left arm, and swimming towards the boat, which was then nearly half filled with water, he got hold of her gunwale, and held on by his right, but with the whole of deceased's weight and his own the boat turned right over, bottom upwards. Deceased again slipped from his grasp, and he again dived down several feet and caught her a third time, and in rising struck against the boat, when he again lost his hold of her, but how it was he could not tell. He clung to the boat, and just recollected that some persons came and picked him up, but what was said or done afterwards he did not recollect. The inquiry was adjourned.

Loss of a Vessel, with all Hands, off Yarmouth.—A melancholy shipwreck occurred on Sunday afternoon off Yarmouth, about ten miles distant from the land. A large foreign schooner, with a white ball painted on her bows, was suddenly seen to capsize in a gale of wind and disappear, about a mile outside of the Cross Sands. She had signals of distress flying, and was apparently running for the land when the catastrophe happened, and it is feared that every soul on board met with a watery grave. There were several colliers passing through the roads at the time, and the masters bore down to the spot where the vessel had gone down, in the hopes of picking up some of the unfortunate crew, but none were to be seen.

Great Number of Sudden Deaths.—On Wednesday, Mr. Wakley held four inquests on persons who had died suddenly. The first was at the Calthorpe Arms, Gray's Inn-road, on the body of Mrs. Martha Smith, of Gough-street, who was found dead in her bed on Saturday morning. The second was held at the Windsor Castle, Windsor-street, Islington, on the body of Henry Willicome, a child, also found dead in bed. The third and fourth inquiries were at the Green Man, Ball's-pond; the first of them being on the body of Mr. J. J. Davis, aged 31, a manufacturing chemist, of Mott's-lane. He was out and well, in a gig with a friend, on Friday, and intended to take a second drive in the afternoon. The friend called on him for that purpose, and found him applying leeches for pain in the chest. The leeches were taken off, he complained of faintness, and was laid on a couch, when suddenly exclaiming to his wife, "Oh, my Cary." he turned on his face and died instantaneously. The other inquest was on the body of Mr. W. P. Collean, aged 44, paper-stainer, of 170, Goswell-street. On Sunday afternoon, after walking along the New-river, in the above vicinity, with his wife, he left her at a friend's, and entered the parlour in which the Jury were assembled. He called for some brandy and water, sipped it, and after joking a little got up to light a cigar. Whilst doing so he fell back in his chair, and in five minutes was a corpse. Verdict in each case, "Natural death."—On Wednesday morning about two o'clock, the wife of an elderly person, named Buckland, residing in Queen-street, Edgeware-road, was awoke by a noise as if her husband were struggling for breath. She gave an alarm, and Dr. R. E. Bateman, of Crawford-street, Bryanstone-square, was prompt in attendance, but before his arrival Mr. Buckland had expired.

English Reporters at Fault.—Among the many ridiculous blunders committed by the reporters for the London Press at Blair, with reference to the names and localities of that hitherto to them "terra incognita," none is more absurd than the anecdote which represents her Majesty looking on at a "sheep-shearing in September. The black-faced breed are unquestionably a hardy race, but we question their ability to lose their fleeces so near the end of autumn. We presume their informant had spoken simply of shearers, which is the Scottish term for reapers; but the former being exclusively used in the south country as applied to sheep, the mistake had thus arisen. To complete the absurdity, and also to expose the system, a paper of last week actually contains an engraving representing her Majesty and Prince Albert overlooking a body of sheep-shearers, and the latter patting a terrier—all agreeable to the newspaper paragraph.—Perth Courier, Sept. 26.—[We quote the above as it exposes attempts to impose on the public, made by certain imitators of our journal. We have uniformly set our faces against this system, and have never spared expense in sending the best artists to sketch the events on the spot of their occurrence.]

The Fine Arts Distributions.—The list of prizes drawn at the distributions at Covent-Garden Theatre, and at the Freemasons' Tavern, has just been issued. At Mr. Boys's distribution the number of tickets drawn, as per prospectus, was 5,729; in addition there were 3,605 added, making a total of 9,334. The amount of prizes drawn, as per prospectus (338 in number), was £4,216. In addition Mr Boys added 208, value £4,200; making a total of £8,416. Amongst the works drawn were the "Trial of Charles the First," value 500 guineas, and several at the value of 100 guineas. In the other lists were several of the "Duke of Wellington," "Sir Robert Peel," the "Canterbury Pilgrims," "Bolton Abbey," and various folios of engravings. At the Bowyer distribution several valuable prizes were also drawn, but the particular ones have not been detailed in the list.

The Royal Exchange.—The works at the Royal Exchange are being prosecuted with increased activity, and generally to a much later hour of the evening than previously, in order to be ready for her Majesty's reception. Some of the citizens have been indulging the hope that Louis Philippe may be present at the ceremony of the opening.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Reporter.)

On Tuesday, the 24th of September, the hundred and fifty-first annual meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans' Fund of the clergy connected with the three dioceses was commenced in the antique Cathedral of Gloucester, and continued daily until Friday evening.

Considerable opposition was raised to the continuance of the practice of holding these annual festivals, by the Rev. F. A. Close, of Cheltenham, who used every possible effort, both in and out of the pulpit, to cry down the ancient practice. Dr. Evans, however, the head master of the College School, one of the stewards to the Festival, published a reply to the objections of Mr. Close, and the result of his powerful arguments in favour of the performance of sacred music in ecclesiastical edifices was, that the practice is justifiable and praiseworthy. The proceedings were throughout, if we may judge from the numbers present, and the amount collected in behalf of the charity, superior to any which have preceded them in this city upon any former occasion.

The performance opened with full cathedral service. The whole of the spacious nave of the western part of this noble edifice was fitted up with great care and neatness. Immediately in front of the organ were fixed the seats for the orchestral performers, three hundred in number, amongst whom were Madame Caradori Allan, Miss B. A. Hawes, the Misses Williams, with Messrs. Hobbs, Machin, Manvers, Novello, and Weiss. A new débutante for public fame was introduced upon this occasion, a young lady of the name of Barrett, native of Gloucester, who is the daughter of a gentleman of the city, once celebrated for his fine voice and extensive musical attainments. The youthful aspirant is of the most prepossessing appearance; she possesses a voice of first-rate character, its quality and compass being equally fine, and she sang with great taste and feeling. One great recommendation of this festival, which we must notice before we proceed to detail the four days' performance, was its truly English character.

On the morning of the first day, "Esther" was performed; this was followed by the "Te Deum," composed, as our readers are aware, in celebration of the victory achieved at Dettingen; both by Handel, the giant of musical song. Boyce's anthem, "Blessed is He," and the inimitable duet, "Here shall soft Charity repair," were also most effectively sung. The sermon was then preached by the Rev. F. T. J. Bayly, from the 13th verse of the 5th chapter of Second Book of Chronicles. It was an able exposition of the divine origin of sacred music; of the recognition of it by the Church, both in the Prophetic, Jewish, and subsequent ages of the Church; and of its value in the present day, in exciting devotional feelings, and aiding the devotions of the true Christian. This was followed by a most eloquent appeal in behalf of the institution. The service was closed by the performance of Handel's Grand Coronation Anthem, given in the best style of the well-trained orchestra, listened to in profound silence by upwards of 1500 persons congregated upon the occasion. The amount collected at the doors, exclusively for the benefit of the charity, amounted to £163 18s. 4d.—upwards of £30 more than upon the first morning's meeting at Gloucester.

At the concert in the evening, held at the Shire Hall, and but thinly attended, "Acis and Galatea" formed the principal attraction. Miss Barrett made her first appearance in "Where the bee sucks," written by Dr. Arne. She was most flatteringly received; and her correct intonation, sweet voice, and engaging style, gained for her great applause. A select ball con-cluded the entertainment of the day.

On Wednesday, Handel's magnificent oratorio, "Samson," was introduced. The words selected are chiefly from the "Samson Agonistes" of Milton, arranged by Professor Taylor, and schemed as at the late Norwich festival.

The following was the order of the parts and performers:—

Samson	Mr. Hobbs	Micah	Miss M. B. Hawes
Manoah	Mr. Weiss	Israelitish Woman	Madame C. Allen
Harapha	Mr. Machin	Philistian Women	Miss A. Williams Miss E. Williams
Philistine	Mr. A. Novello

Novello, in the opening recitative, was rather flat. Miss A. Williams sang the song "Ye men of Gaza" with much power of expression, and dignity of style. Hobbs poured forth the moaning tones of Samson (blind and imprisoned as he is then represented to have been) with much natural feeling. His soliloquy "Without the walls of Gaza" was beautifully fine. Miss Hawes's song, "In God your father trust," was strikingly charming, and the chorus which followed was magnificent. In the hymn "Jehovah reigns," by voices only, the whole fell full half a note, and the manner in which it "dragged its slow length along," was truly miserable. Weiss sang nobly, and Machin and Hobbs decidedly maintained the reputation they have enjoyed for years. With reference to the band, the names of Cramer, Lindley, Harper, Card, and other leaders, aided by a well-drilled corps of musicians, guaranteed that all would be right in the instrumental department. In the middle of the third act the "Dead March in Saul" was splendidly given; and the song "Let the bright Seraphim," by Madame C. Allan, followed by the chorus it opens, left us nothing to desire. The whole lasted nearly five hours, and at the door £111 9s. 3½d. was collected.

In the evening, at the miscellaneous concert at the Shire-hall, the Sinfonia ("Jupiter") by Mozart, was well performed. A variety of pieces, admirably chosen, by Mozart, Calcott, Bishop, Benedict, Rossini, Mendelssohn, Donizetti, and other eminent composers, were sung. The whole went off admirably.

On Thursday the attendance was more numerous than on either of the preceding days, nearly every seat being occupied. Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and Handel's "Israel in Egypt," were severally given, in an equal style to that of the former day. In the evening the concert-room was well filled, and several favourite songs were sung and encored.

FRIDAY.

This morning Handel's oratorio of the "Messiah" was performed. The extreme beauty of the day, combined with the great attraction of this sublime oratorio, the chef-d'œuvre of all Handel's magnificent compositions, everywhere commands, invited to the Cathedral a multitude of auditors. Carriages, filled with the youth and beauty of this interesting locality, and with veteran souls deep in love with rich English harmony, drew up to the Cathedral doors, without intermission, from ten o'clock until past eleven—the hour of commencement. Thousands of anxious spectators crowded the green of the College, and the bells of the lofty tower pealed joyously upon the occasion.

The whole space allotted to the listeners was crowded. From the massive Norman pillars which support the roof of the nave to the magnificent western window, where a most commodious gallery, capable of holding upwards of 500 persons, was erected, the seats were filled, the majority of the audience being ladies. Never before, in our recollection, did the splendid composition go off so well. Caradori Allan, Miss Hawes, Machin, Manvers, and Weiss, did their utmost; and Miss Barrett, in "But thou didst not leave," proved her capability of tone, compass, and expression, equal to the most sanguine expectations of her friends. The "Hallelujah Chorus," justly styled the master-piece of Handel, was given by the "full-voiced choir" with judgment and power seldom equalled; and the concluding double chorus left us nothing to desire. The whole performances were well executed, and it is a pleasure to state that the proceeds of the collection at the doors this day exceeded any amount hitherto realised in this city. The sum collected amounted to £173 1s. 10d.

The arrangements made by the stewards were admirable throughout; every facility being afforded to parties visiting the Cathedral by an early opening of the doors, and no pains being spared towards the success of the festival.

Our Engraving represents the Cathedral, as it appeared on Friday morning, during the performance of Handel's "Messiah," and a more impressive scene can hardly be imagined. The subject, and the manner of the performance, the profound silence of the audience when listening to the solo songs, and the reverential rising of the whole mass as one person when the choral band sent forth its strength in praise of their God, created impressions which to be felt must have been witnessed.

In the foreground, to the right and left, are seen the massive Anglo-Norman pillars of the original Cathedral, constructed in the beginning of the twelfth century; while the roof, originally of wood, is an insertion of the early English style. In the distance, beyond the organ, is seen the tracery of the most gorgeous choir in England, terminated towards the east by the largest window in Europe. The contrast of the uniform flood of light thrown through the clerestories into this part of the Cathedral, with the alternations of light and shadow caused by the narrow slips of the nave lights, added greatly to the singularity and beauty of the sacred spectacle.

The celebration of the present festival is the 121st meeting of the choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford; and although, in magnitude, these ancient music meetings cannot rival the great musical gatherings of Birmingham, Manchester, &c., yet the place of their celebration, and the long associations connected with them, give them an interest and an effect to be looked for in vain in festivals of more recent growth. At first, about 150 years ago, the performances were confined to the instrumental and vocal efforts of the "three choirs," assisted by amateurs in the divine art; until, in the years 1723 or 1724, the attendance of the auditory became so great, in consequence of the growing excellence of the music, that measures were taken for an increase of the band by the hire of eminent professional performers; and, at the same time, on the recommendation of the celebrated Dr. Besse, author of the "Beauty of Holiness," collections were made at the Cathedral doors for the benefit of the widows and orphans of clergymen. This has continued to the present day; in fact, the original intention of the meetings, which was the encouragement and improvement of sacred music, is quite forgotten in the charitable purpose to which these festivals have applied. It is impossible in our space to give a detailed history of the origin and progressive increase of these interesting meetings, but we can hardly be said to exaggerate the benefits they have conferred on sacred musical science, when we state that indirectly we owe to them the "Messiah" of Handel, and the "Creation" of Haydn, allowed to be each in its style a masterpiece of sacred harmony. Perhaps the Cathedral never presented a more glorious spectacle than when it was fitted up for this last splendid and holy occasion.

> Oh! it was good to see and hear
> (For eye was charm'd as well as ear)
> The young—the fair—the minstrel throng,
>   The old, the reverend combin'd;
> In one great festival of song,
>   Devoted to th' Eternal mind,
> Which teaches us through sweet harmony,
> That best of virtues Charity.

In the Gloucestershire Chronicle, we find the following summary of the proceedings:—

"The following is a comparative statement of the collections for the charity during the present week, and in 1841;—

1844.	£	s.	d.	1841.	£	s.	d.
Tuesday..	£163	18	4	Tuesday..	£130	12	4
Wednesday	111	9	4	Wednesday	126	7	11
Thursday	79	19	0	Thursday	155	6	2
Friday ..	175	0	4	Friday ..	121	1	4
Total ..	£530	7	0	Total ..	£533	7	9

ANTI-RENT INSURRECTION IN ALBANY.—OUTRAGE ON THE SHERIFF.

The Heildeberg Mountains have lately been the scene of an anti-rent insurrection against the Van Renesslaer family and the legal authorities. The most outrageous portion of these proceedings is, however, a most brutal attack on the Sheriff of the county, on the 31st of August last.

It appears that on the previous day the Sheriff, Mr. Batterman, with three assistants, proceeded to the disaffected district, in a double waggon, for the purpose of advertising some sales of property under execution in the town of Bern. They proceeded without molestation till they reached the house of a Mr. Van Deuzen, on the top of the Heilderberg, where the Sheriff stopped to serve a declaration, but was ordered off the premises by Van Deuzen's three sons, two of whom mounted horses in their working dresses, which were only shirts and pantaloons, and with horns in their hands followed the Sheriff's waggon. The excitement now spread; horns were heard blowing in every direction, while at almost every house the women and girls enlivened the road by singing the poetical effusion generally known as the "Adventures of Big Bill Snyder." At length the Sheriff and his assistants, followed by a vast crowd, reached Renesslaerville, where they resolved to stop all night, when a committee waited on them and requested them to leave the village, as threats had been made that if the party were allowed to stop or harboured in the village, it would be burnt to the ground. The Sheriff, however, remained there for the night, but got very little sleep, as horses were kept running on the road, there was loud howling and horns were blown and stones were thrown during the entire night. In the morning, when the party woke, they found the yard and shed full of horses, and one of the barns full of men, who had stopped to watch if the Sheriff did not go off during the night.

Nevertheless, the Sheriff and his party proceeded on his road next morning, until they reached a point where the Indians were drawn up in double ranks across the road to the number of sixty-three, each armed with either a rifle or a musket, and two horse pistols with brass barrels about fourteen inches long, and all apparently of the same pattern; some of them had knives. The waggon was then stopped, and the sheriff having got out, touched the ground, sprung for the horses' heads, putting his hand in his pocket to pull out his pistol, but about fifteen of these desperadoes laid hold of him, and after a short struggle flung him to the ground, and horses and waggons being backed to the fence, and nearly upset, the harness taken to pieces, and the horses set loose, and guns fired at them.

Meanwhile, the assistants were seized, and put under strict guard; and the Sheriff himself was held down in a ditch, and pistols were pointed at his head, and he was threatened with death, unless he gave up his papers, to which he replied, "Shoot away; I never will give up while I am alive." The Indians then proceeded to tar and feather the Sheriff, but without making any impression on the indomitable temper of the Sheriff, who, on being asked by an Indian, who was holding a pistol at his head, what he would do to him if he was in his place, replied, "Shoot you, as quick as I would a black snake."

At length, the three assistants, having submitted to the orders of the Indians, by jumping up three times, and hallooing "Down with the Rent," lifted the Sheriff into the waggon, harnessed the horses, and conveyed him to Albany.

The Deputy-Sheriff has also been similarly assaulted: a body of men in disguise, and armed with knives, tomahawks, and fire-arms, came to his dwelling-house in the night—demanded his official papers, compelled him to surrender them, and then publicly burnt them in the village of Nassau. On another occasion, about eighty men in disguise, and armed, violently entered the Deputy-Sheriff's house, assaulted him, forced him from his house in the presence of his family, and tarred and feathered him.

ANTI-RENT INSURRECTION—ATTACK ON THE SHERIFF OF ALBANY.

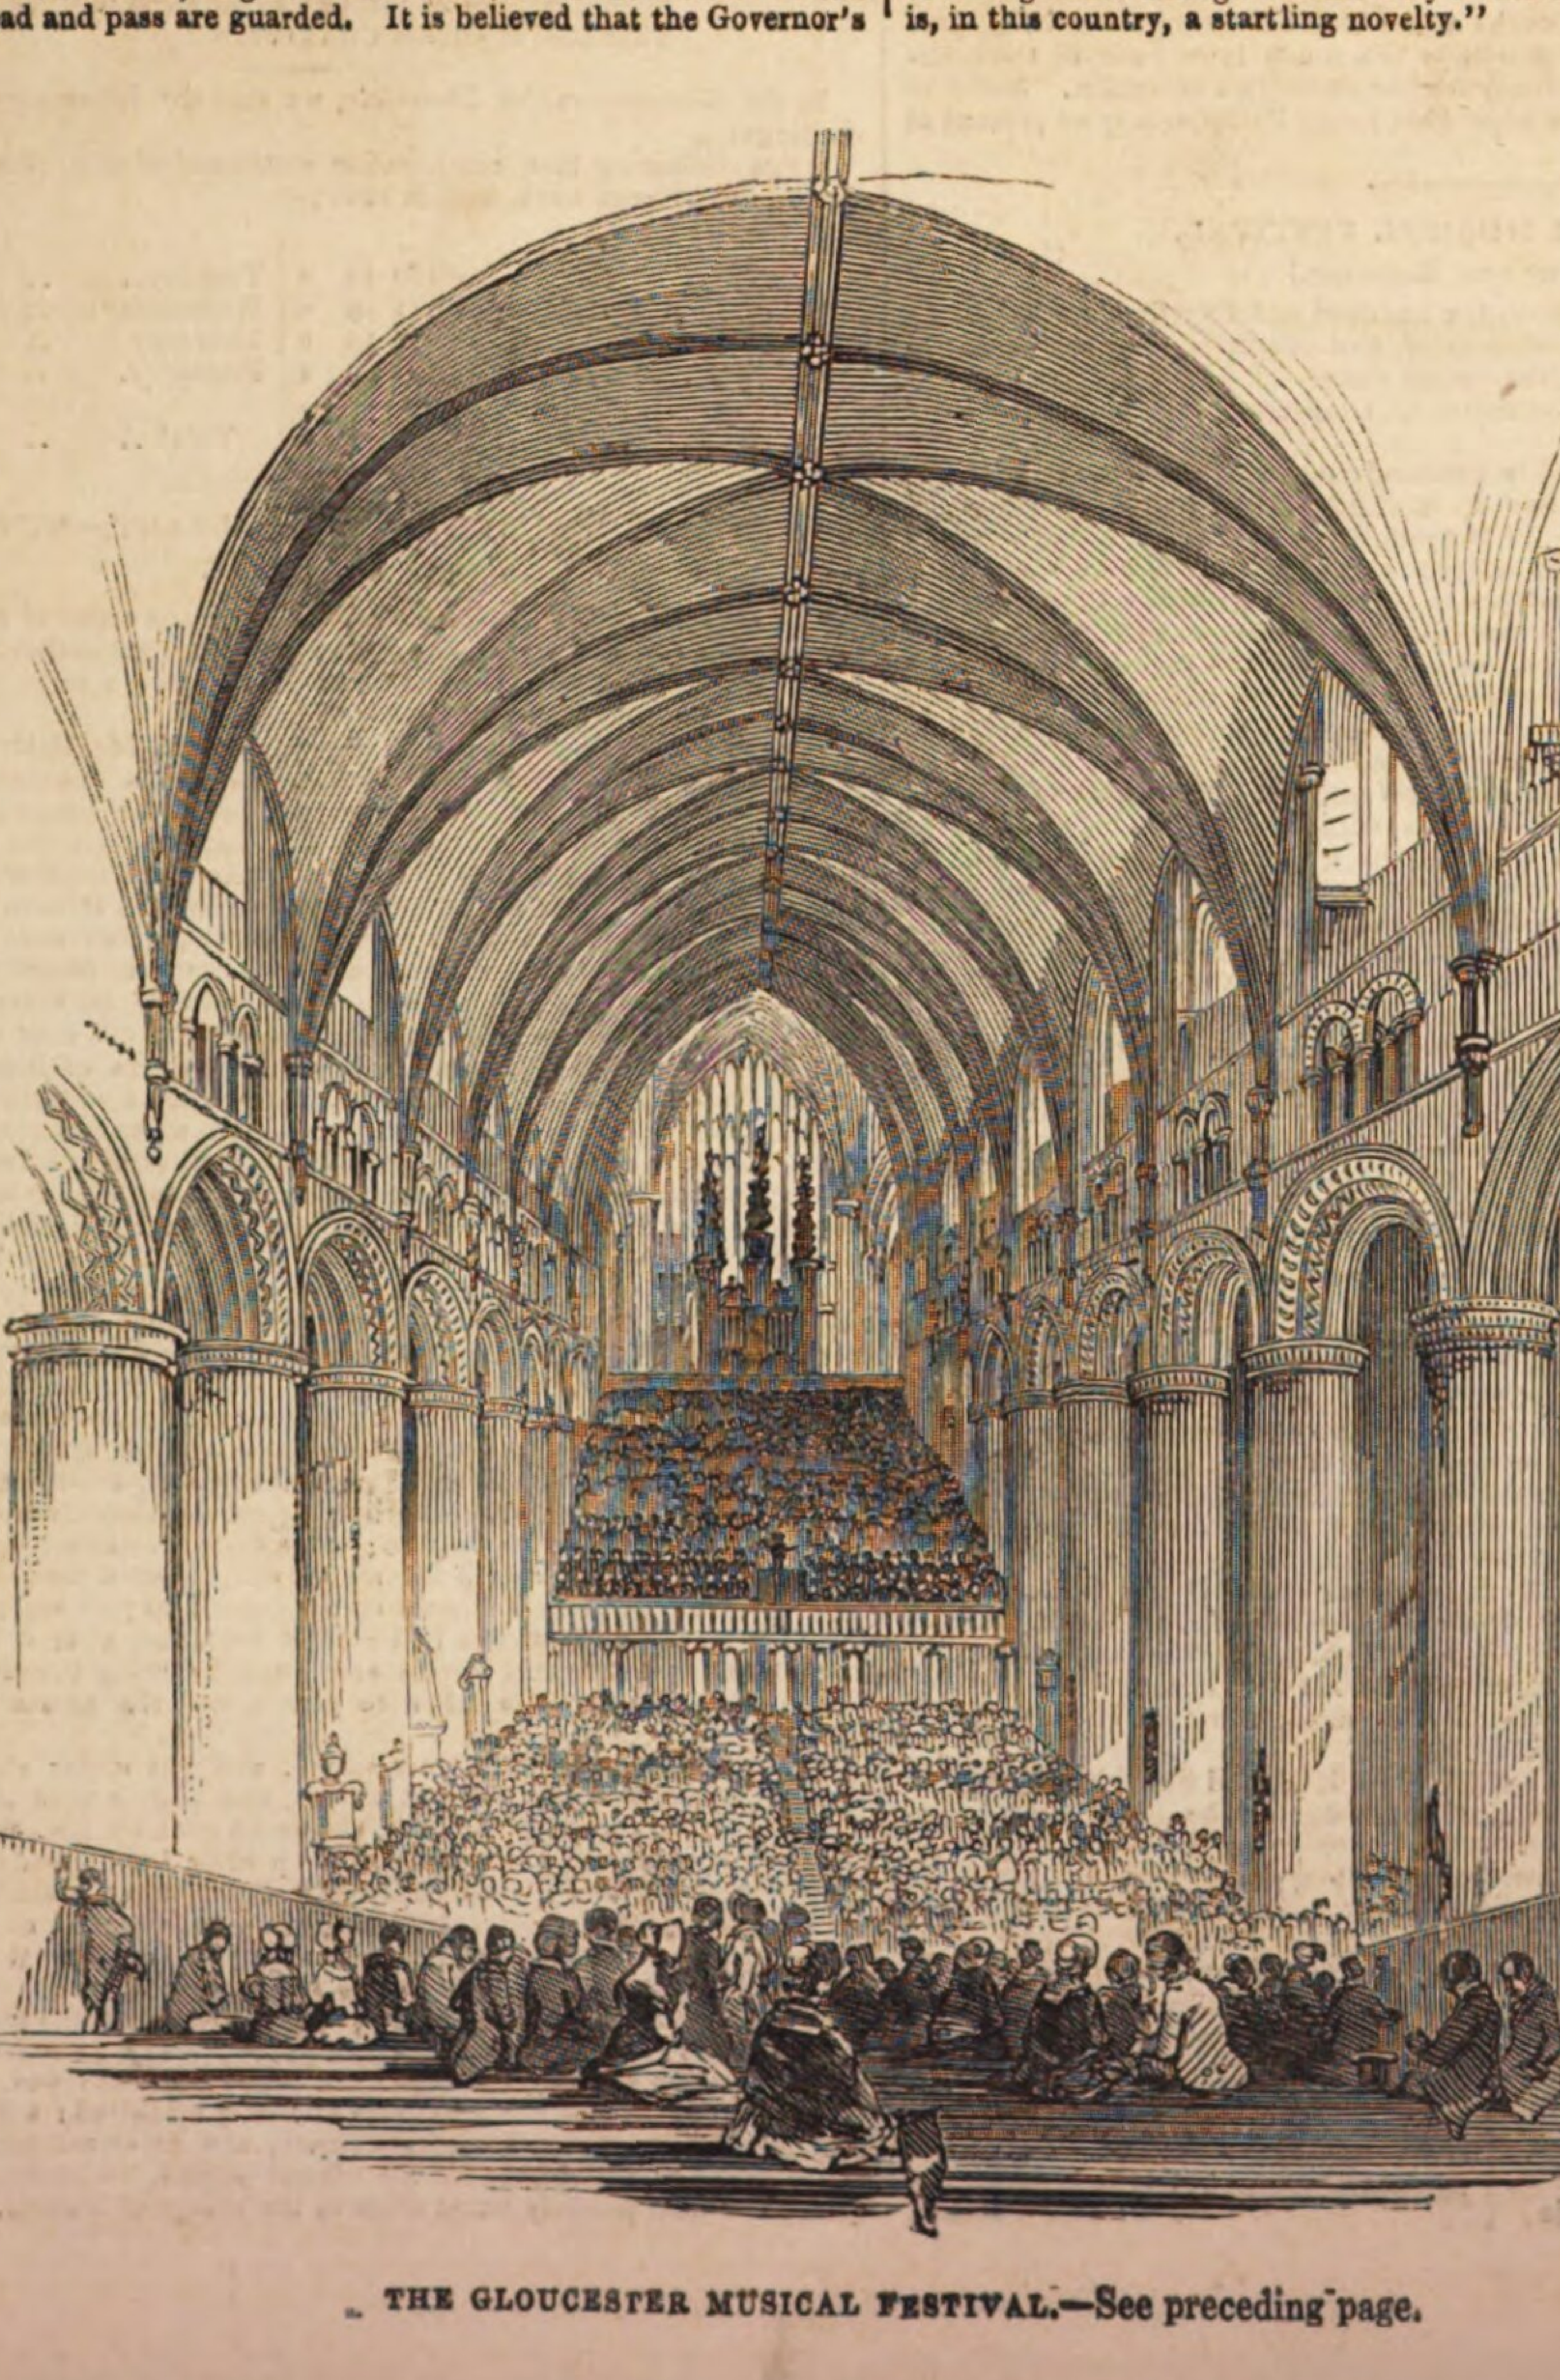
The Sheriff was, however, still determined to maintain his authority, and for that purpose had summoned a civil posse of 1000 men to attend him in a second expedition to the Heilderberg. On the other hand the farmers in that region are regularly drilled at stated times, to the number of many hundreds. The whole district is organised against the payment of rent, and are determined to fight to the last. Patrols of men, disguised as Indians, scour the mountains and valleys, and every road and pass are guarded. It is believed that the Governor's proclamation will have no effect. The insurrectionary spirit of these mountaineers is stimulated by the journals which circulate among them, and encourage them in resistance to the payment of rent and the execution of the laws.

Two new weekly papers have been recently established which support their views. What the end of this insurrection may be no one can tell. Most likely blood will flow before all is over.

We have just received the sketch for the annexed illustration, with the accompanying details, from our artist at New York, who adds that "the circumstance of a magistrate daring to do his duty in defiance of danger, and even of death, is, in this country, a startling novelty."



THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—See preceding page.

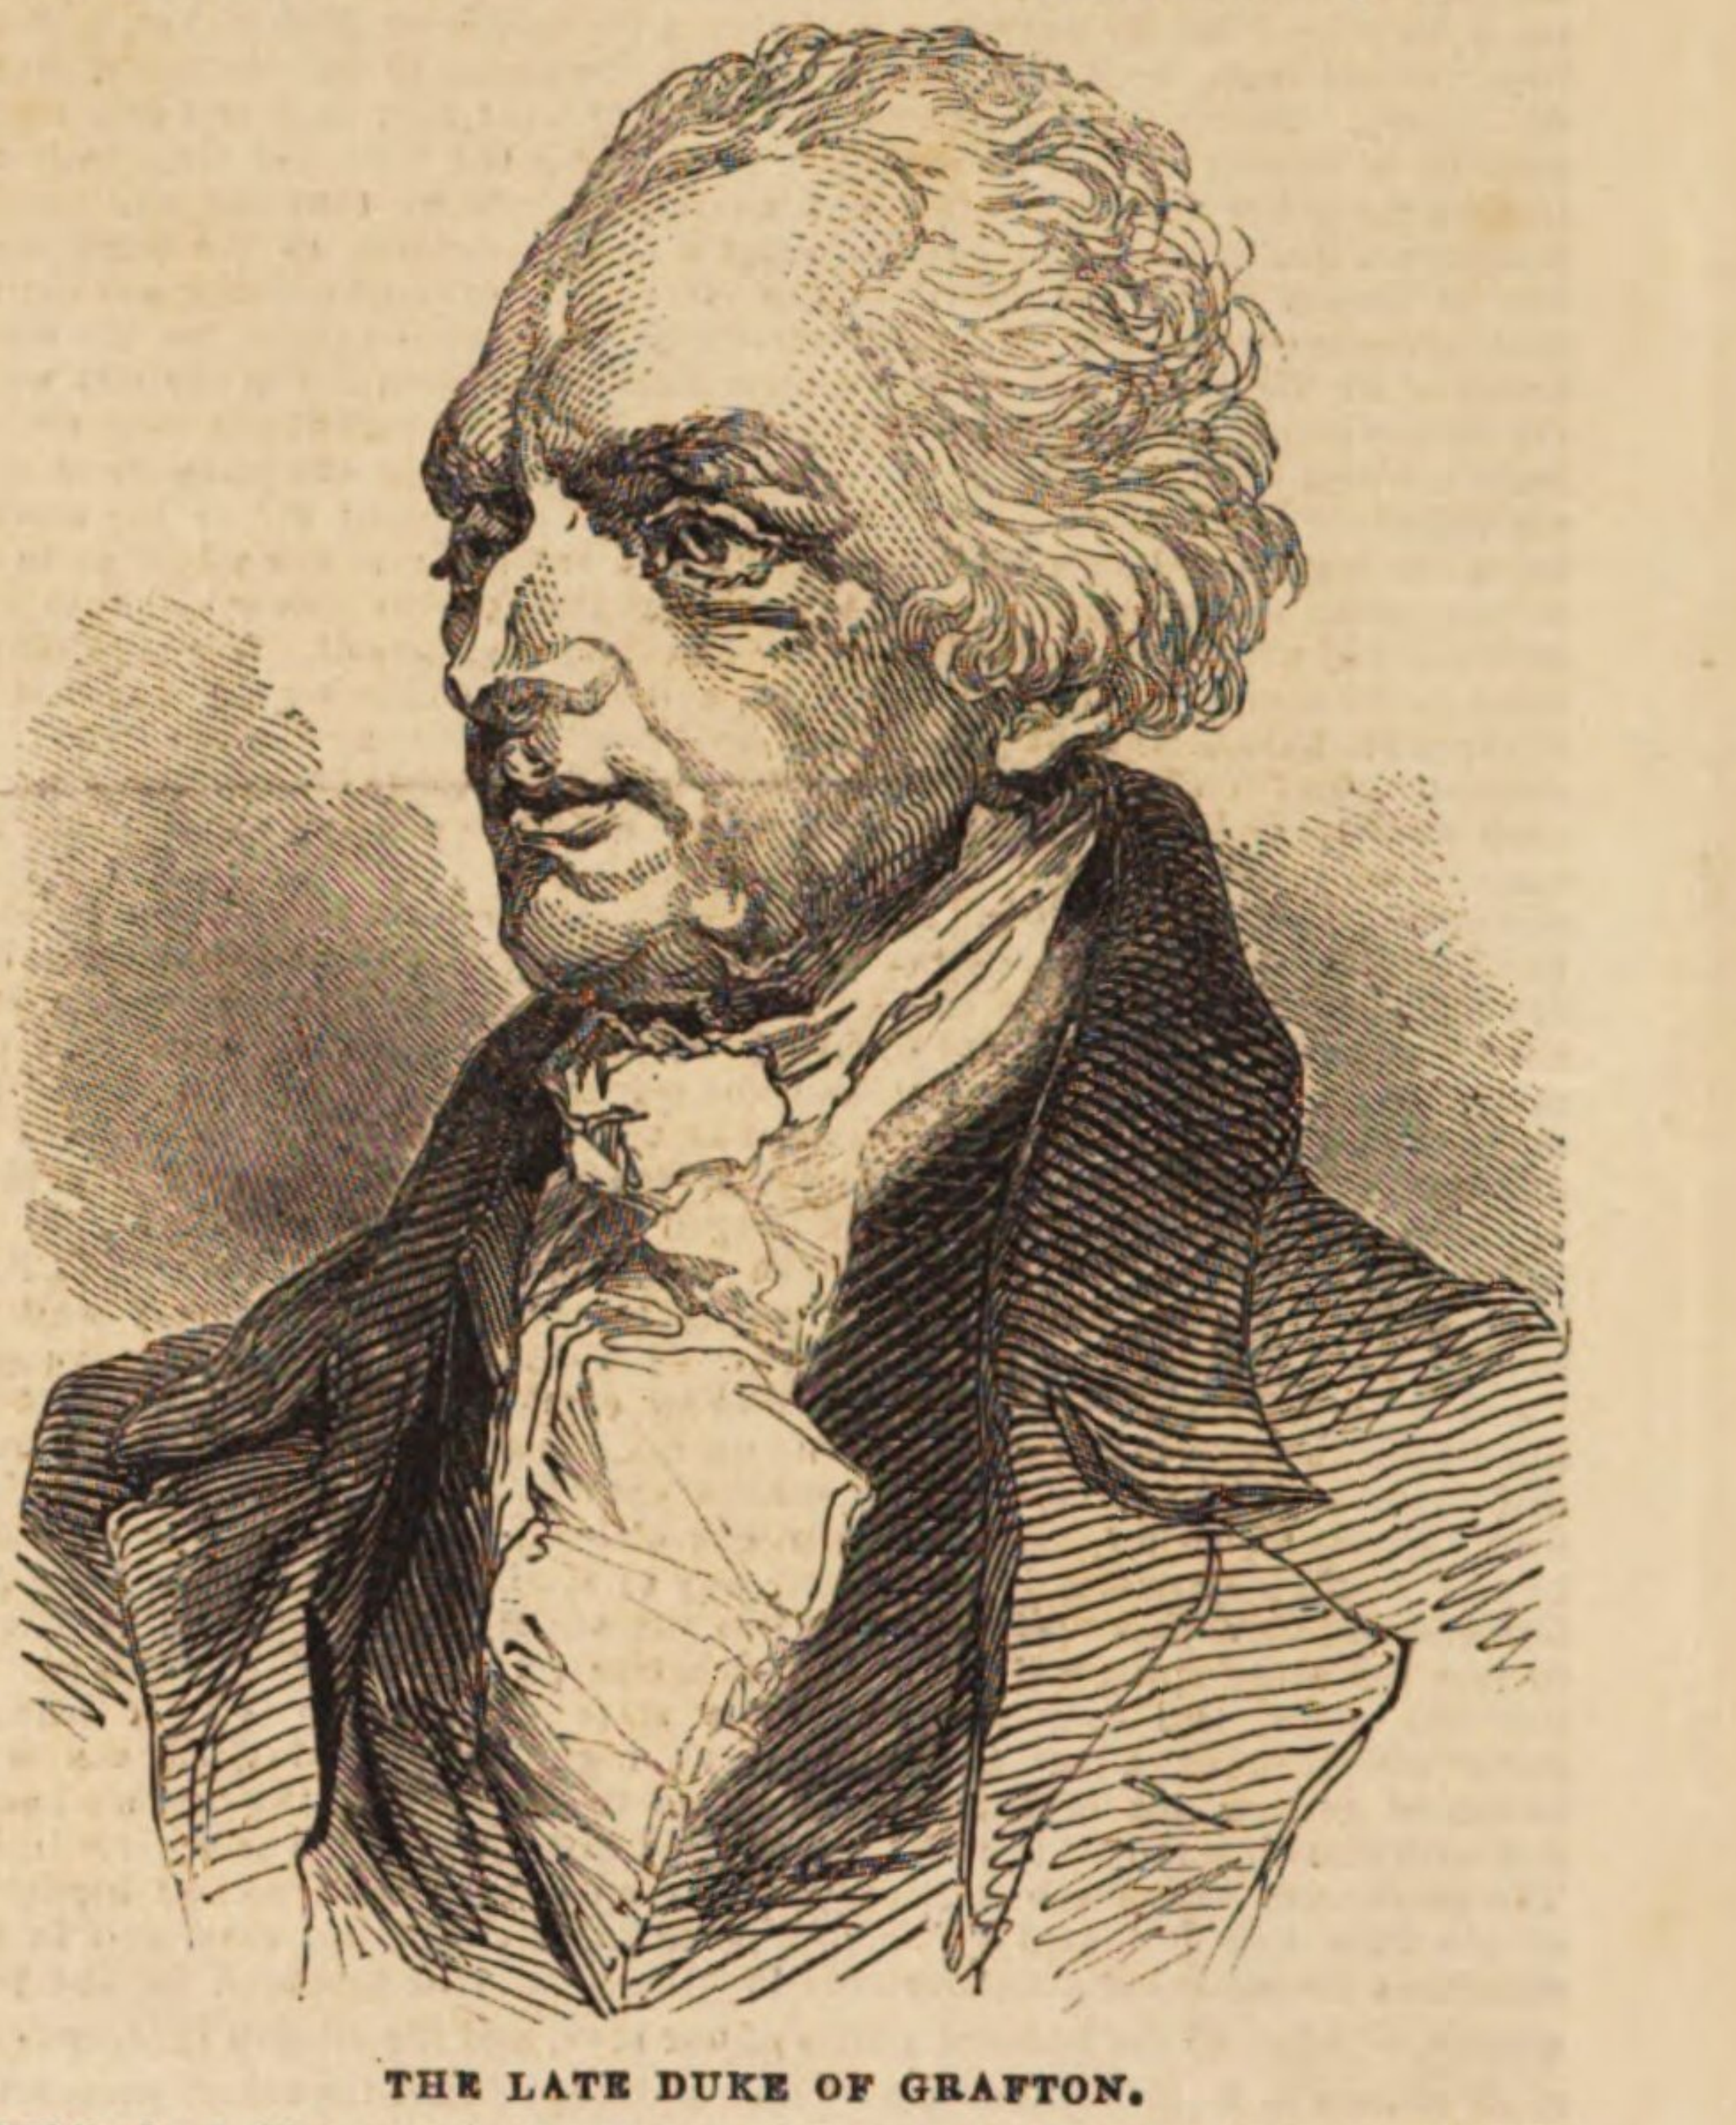
NEWSPAPER

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF GRAFTON.

The life of George Henry Fitzroy, fourth Duke of Grafton, terminated on Saturday evening last at Euston-hall, in Suffolk. For some years past he had lived in comparative retirement, and for a great many years had ceased to take any active part in public affairs. He was the eldest son of Augustus Henry, the third Duke of Grafton, the nobleman on whom Junius poured the vials of his wrath. The late Duke was born on the 14th of January, 1760, the last year of the reign of George II.: his Grace, therefore, may just be said to have lived to be the subject of five successive monarchs, and quitted this world in the 85th year of his age. The father of the Duke was in his day Chancellor of the University of Cambridge; and his heir, the young Earl of Euston, whose life and character now engage our attention, entered Trinity College at the above celebrated seat of learning. Here his lordship was the friend of the celebrated William Pitt at college; for a long time his warm partisan in the House of Commons; and for many years his colleague as the representative in parliament of their common alma mater. The year 1784 is, in the biography of Lord Euston, rendered remarkable by two important events—namely, his entrance upon the cares of married life, and the commencement of his career in the duties of a legislator and the business of a politician. He engaged in the latter at a time when party struggles were marked by circumstances of no ordinary interest. Lord John Townshend and Mr. Mansfield—afterwards Chief Justice—had represented the University for many years; but Mr. Fox's memorable India Bill proved fatal to their interests at Cambridge, for several of their constituents greatly disapproved of the measure. Mr. Pitt and Lord Euston were not the men to let such an opportunity escape them. At the general election in 1784, they offered themselves to the University. Against such opponents, the Mansfield and Townshend interest could not bear up, and the result of the contest was as follows:—The Right Hon. William Pitt, 351; the Earl of Euston, 299; Lord John Townshend, 278; James Mansfield, Esq., 181. It is, therefore, 60 years since the deceased duke took his seat for the first time as a member of the House of of Commons. Men born to ducal dignity and princely revenues are found, at least, as frequently as others, to be deficient in the intellectual aptitude, no less than in the requisite industry, for practical life. To this rule the subject of the present notice cannot be said to have formed any very striking or brilliant exception. He was a man of respectable talents, but of no very great attainments; the records of Parliament, therefore, contain fewer evidences of his ability as a legislator than of his zeal as a partisan, and his activity as a politician.

On the 16th of November, 1784, being then in the twenty-fifth year of his age, Lord Euston married the Lady Maria Charlotte Waldegrave, the second daughter of James, second Earl of Waldegrave, whose widow (mother of the Countess of Euston) married the Duke of Gloucester—an event which is considered to have had much influence in producing the Royal Marriage Act. By the union of her mother with the Duke of Gloucester, Lady Euston acquired a royal stepfather; but her husband, the subject of this notice, could boast of a royal lineage, at least an illegitimate descent, not only from a royal but a kingly ancestor; the first Duke of Grafton being one of the sons of Barbara Villiers, Duchess of Cleveland, one of the mistresses of Charles II.

To return to the political life of the noble Duke. For many years he adopted the views and supported the government of Mr. Pitt, but possibly he felt little inclination, and less necessity, to stand forth in Parliament as a very prominent advocate of either the one or the other. Mr. Pitt, while he had Lord Euston for a supporter, took more pleasure in obtaining his vote than in listening to his speeches; and for the steady devotion with which that vote was always forthcoming, Lord Euston received an amount of patronage that was generally considered a fair equivalent for all his political services. He was chosen a Knight of the Garter, appointed Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of Suffolk, and Vice-Admiral of the coast of Suffolk, Receiver-General of the profits of the seals in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and King's Gamekeeper at Newmarket. For some years he was Ranger of Hyde-park and St. James's-park. Besides these offices, conferred on himself by the Minister of the day, he was Hereditary Ranger of Whittlebury Forest, Recorder of Thetford, a trustee of the Hunterian Museum, President of the Ecectic Society of London, &c.



THE LATE DUKE OF GRAFTON.

While he held a seat in the House of Commons, it does not appear that he ever represented any other place than that which first returned him to Parliament. Yet, in 1790, Mr. Laurence Dundas stoutly contested the seat with him, but from that time till 1807, being a period of seventeen years, he remained in undisturbed possession of that much-envied distinction, "member for the University of Cambridge; and of course Mr. Pitt continued to be his colleague. When the death of that great man caused a vacancy, Lord Henry Petty (now the Marquis of Lansdowne), Lord Althorp (Earl Spencer), and Lord Palmerston, became candidates. Of these three, the first-named was returned by a large majority. At the general election in 1807, Lord Euston again encountered a formidable opposition presented by Lord Palmerston and Lord Henry Petty. On that occasion the numbers were—Earl of Euston, 324; Sir Vicary Gibbs, 312; Lord Palmerston, 310; and Lord Henry Petty, 265. Thus, during seven-and-twenty years, he sat for Cambridge, nor did his Parliamentary connexion with that University cease until he succeeded to the peerage, on the death of his father, the third Duke in 1811. It must not, however, be taken for granted, that during the whole of this time he gave himself up to the support of Mr. Pitt. On the contrary, in proportion as the conduct of the war against revolutionary France became more difficult, and the embarrassments of his quondam friend thickened around his head, Lord Euston appeared the more disposed to withdraw from him; and, long before the death of Mr. Pitt, Lord Euston became a Whig.

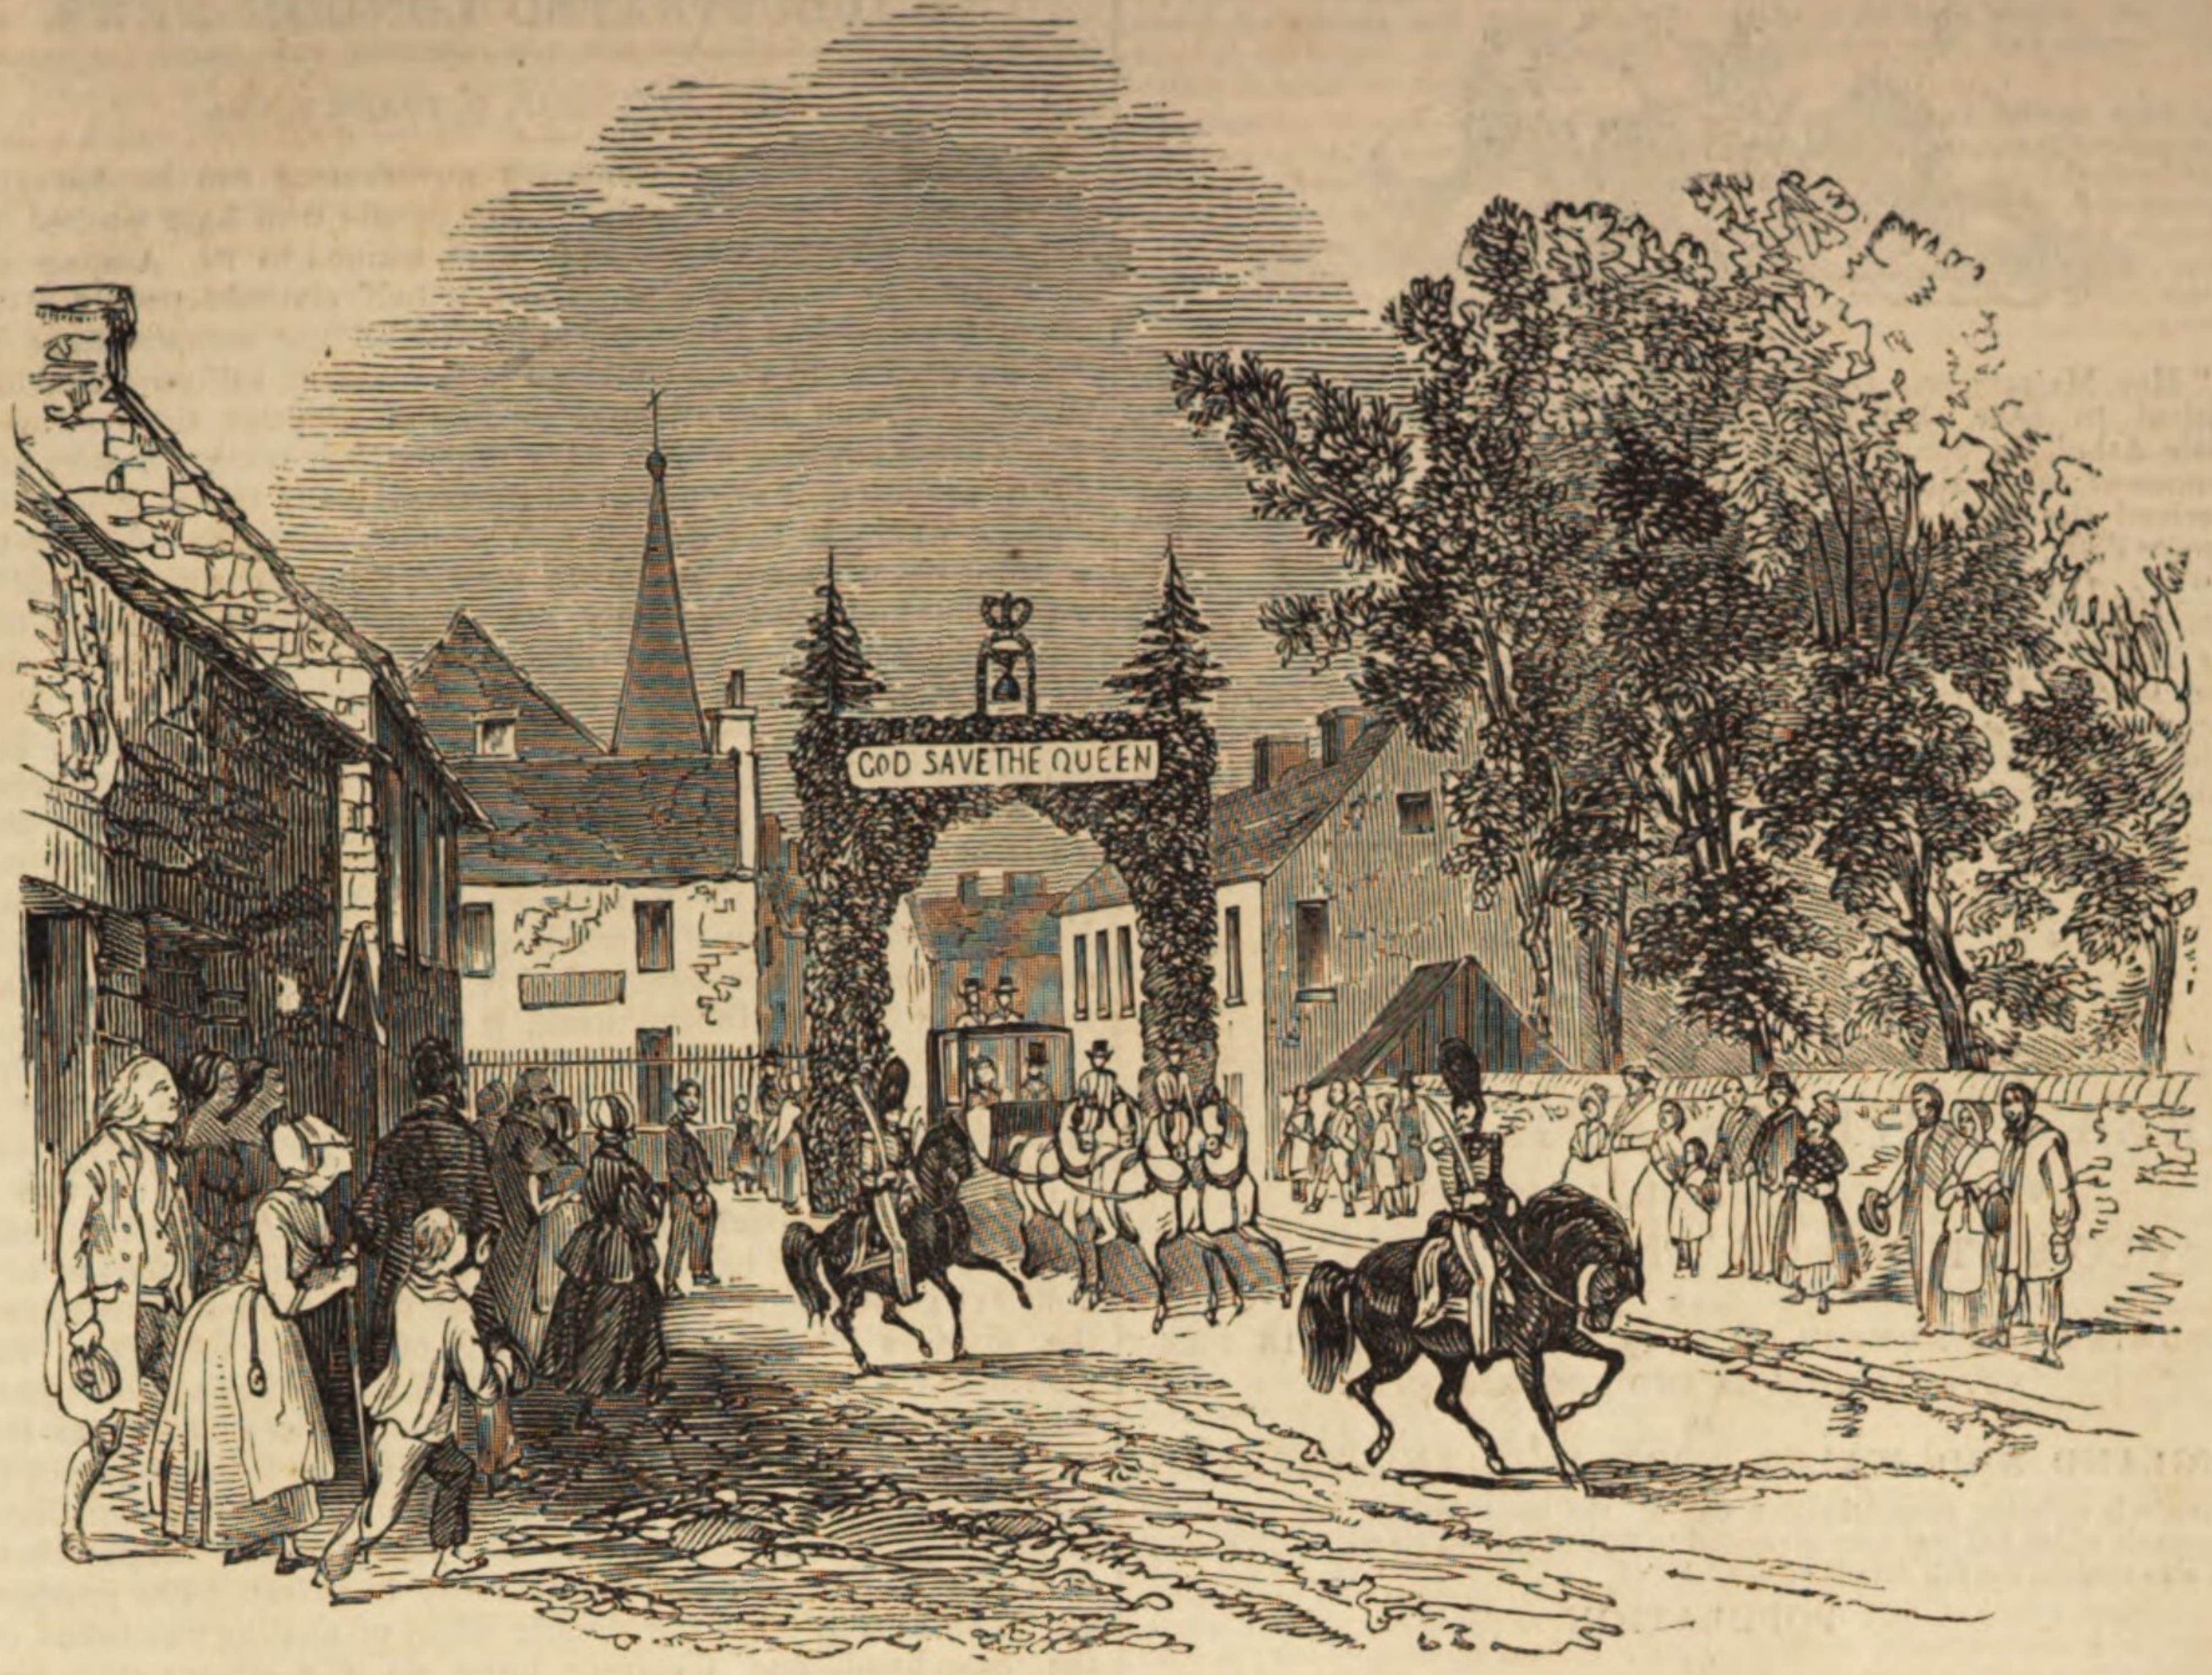
In 1808 he became a widower, and so continued to the end of his days. Lady Euston, therefore, never lived to be Duchess of Grafton, but her ladyship lived long enough to be the mother of eleven children, of whom six survive; one of these is Lord Charles Fitzroy, who has been many years in Parliament; and who, ever since the passing of the Reform Act, has sat for Bury St. Edmund's.

Generally speaking, the deceased peer was not more active in public life since his elevation to the peerage than he had previously been; to this, however, one exception arose, where the Bill of Pains and Penalties against the Queen of George IV. was presented to the House of Lords. On that occasion the Duke of Grafton stepped forth with unwonted energy and zeal; but this was pretty nearly the last occasion on which he took any prominent part in the business of Parliament. After a lengthened retirement of nearly twenty years, he has quietly sunk to rest, leaving behind him numerous descendants to perpetuate his honours and enjoy his wealth.—Abridged from the Times.

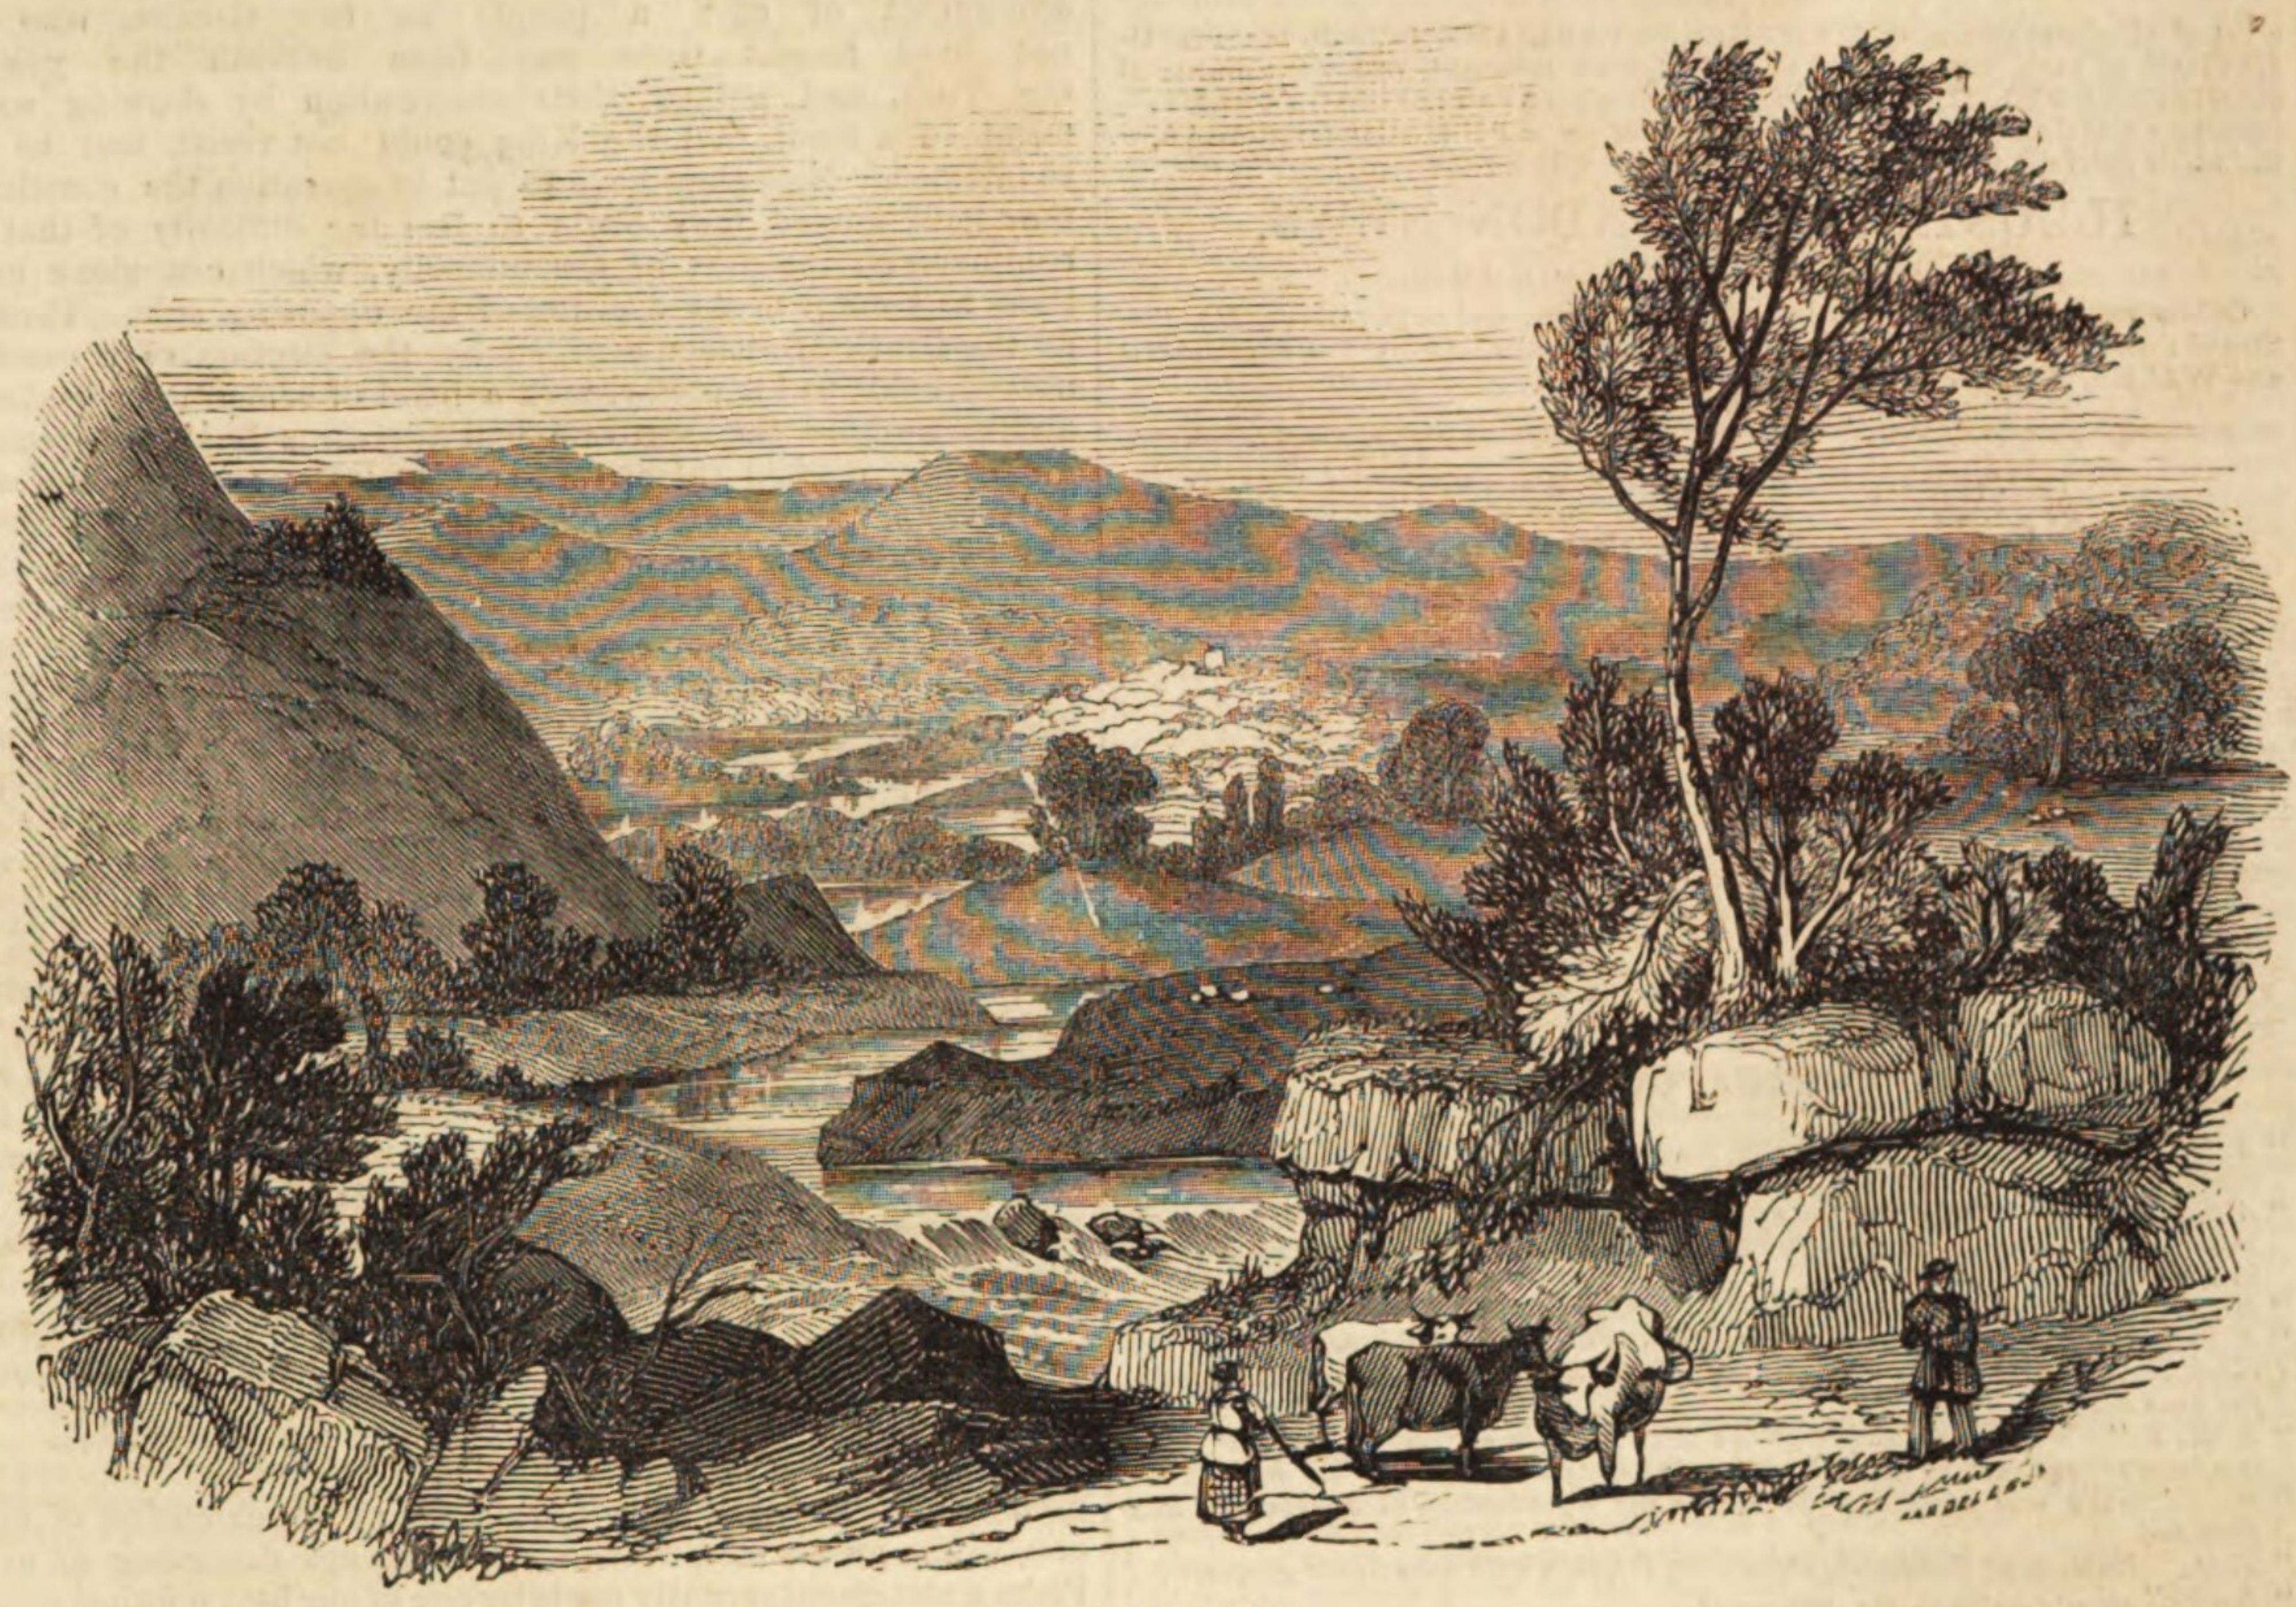
The dignities of the house of Grafton have devolved upon the Duke's eldest son, Henry, who has been up to this time styled by courtesy Earl of Euston, and who is now in the 54th year of his age. His lordship is Colonel of the West Suffolk Militia, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of that county. His lady, who is now become Duchess of Grafton, is daughter of the late Admiral Sir George Cranfield Berkeley, and was married to his lordship 32 years ago. The present Duke and Duchess of Grafton have several children.

The celebrity and good fortune of the late Duke of Grafton as one of the leading sportsmen of the turf, remain to be noticed. His Grace inherited this taste and success from his father, who, according to Nimrod, was a keen sportsman, and an excellent judge of racing; and his horses having been well and honestly ridden by South, he was among the few great winners amongst great men. The late Duke, upon the same authority, was a great winner, having inherited, with his domains, the virtues of old Prunella; but owed some of his success to his brother, Lord Henry Fitzroy, whose judgment in racing was equal to any man's. The late Duke won the Derby Stakes four times, and the Oaks eight; and "most of the good things at Newmarket," for a few years in succession: in the year 1825, his Grace won £13,000 from public stakes alone! "But," adds Nimrod, "we must do the Duke of Grafton the justice to say, that in his stable he has marched with the times, his horses having been always forward in their work, the grand desideratum in a training stable." His Grace also deserved success, for he was a nobleman of high character upon the turf.

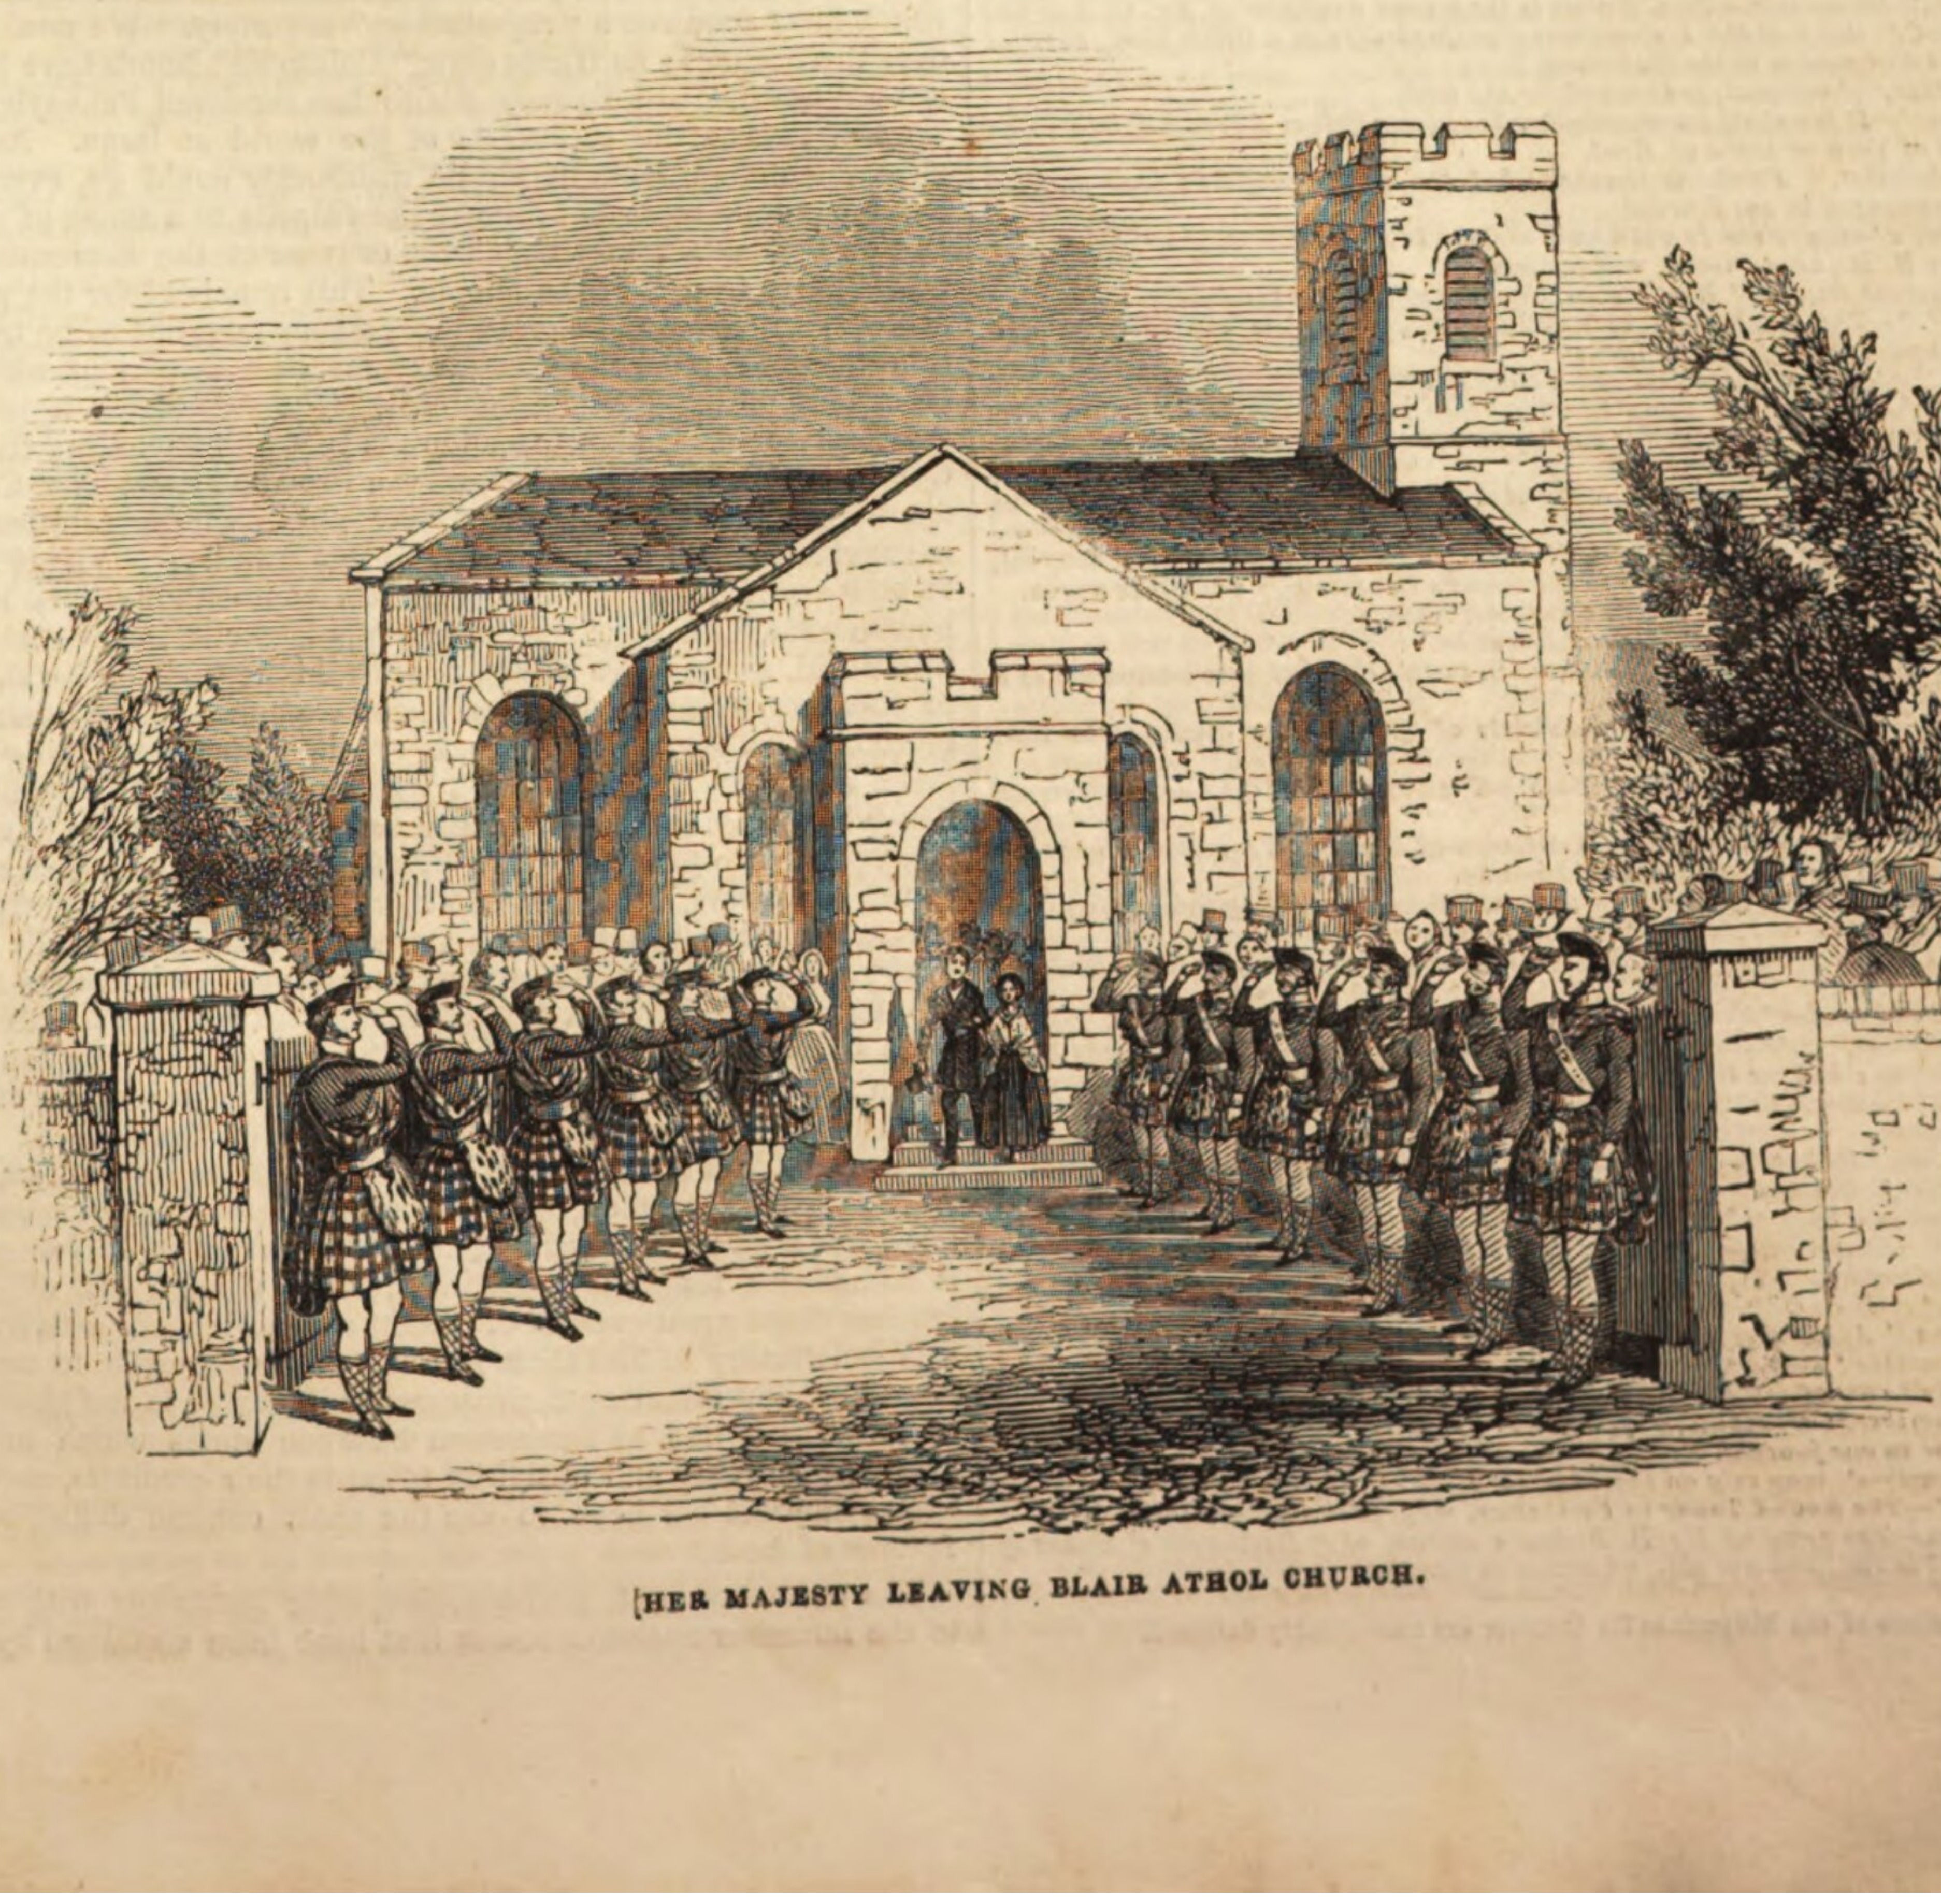
THE QUEEN'S SECOND VISIT TO SCOTLAND.



ENTRANCE TO COUPAR ANGUS.

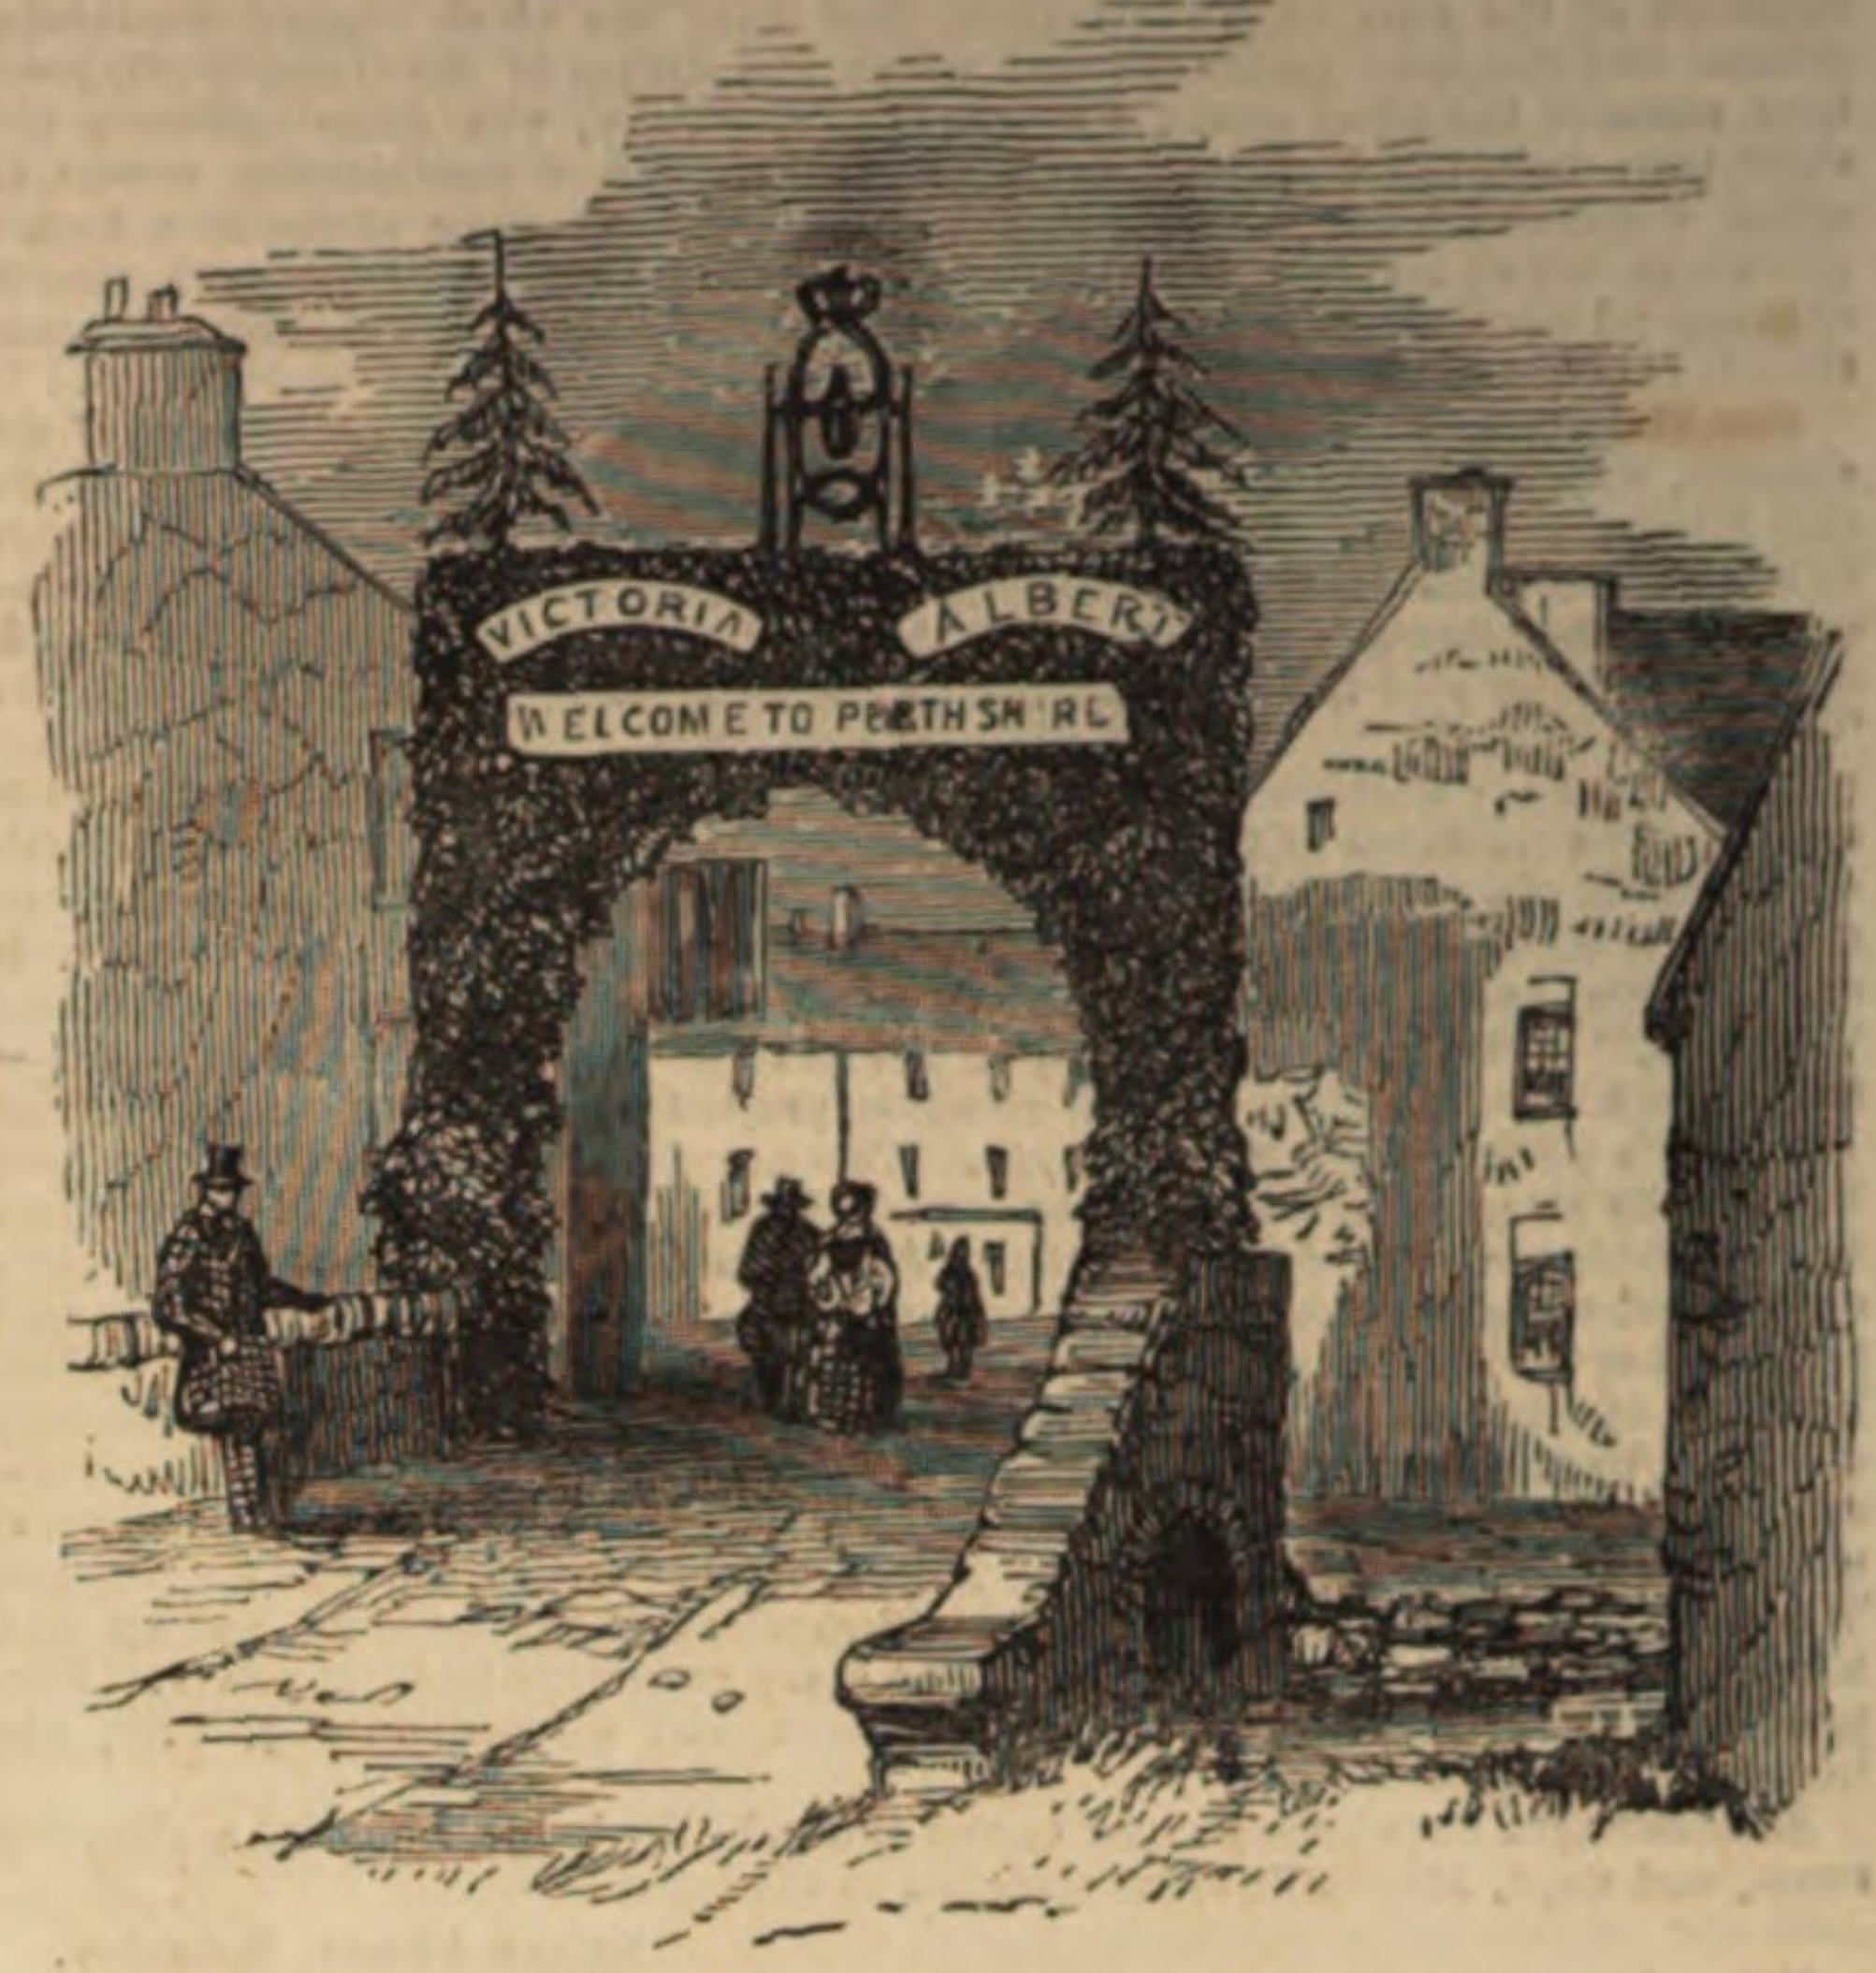


BLAIR ATHOL.



[HER MAJESTY LEAVING BLAIR ATHOL CHURCH.

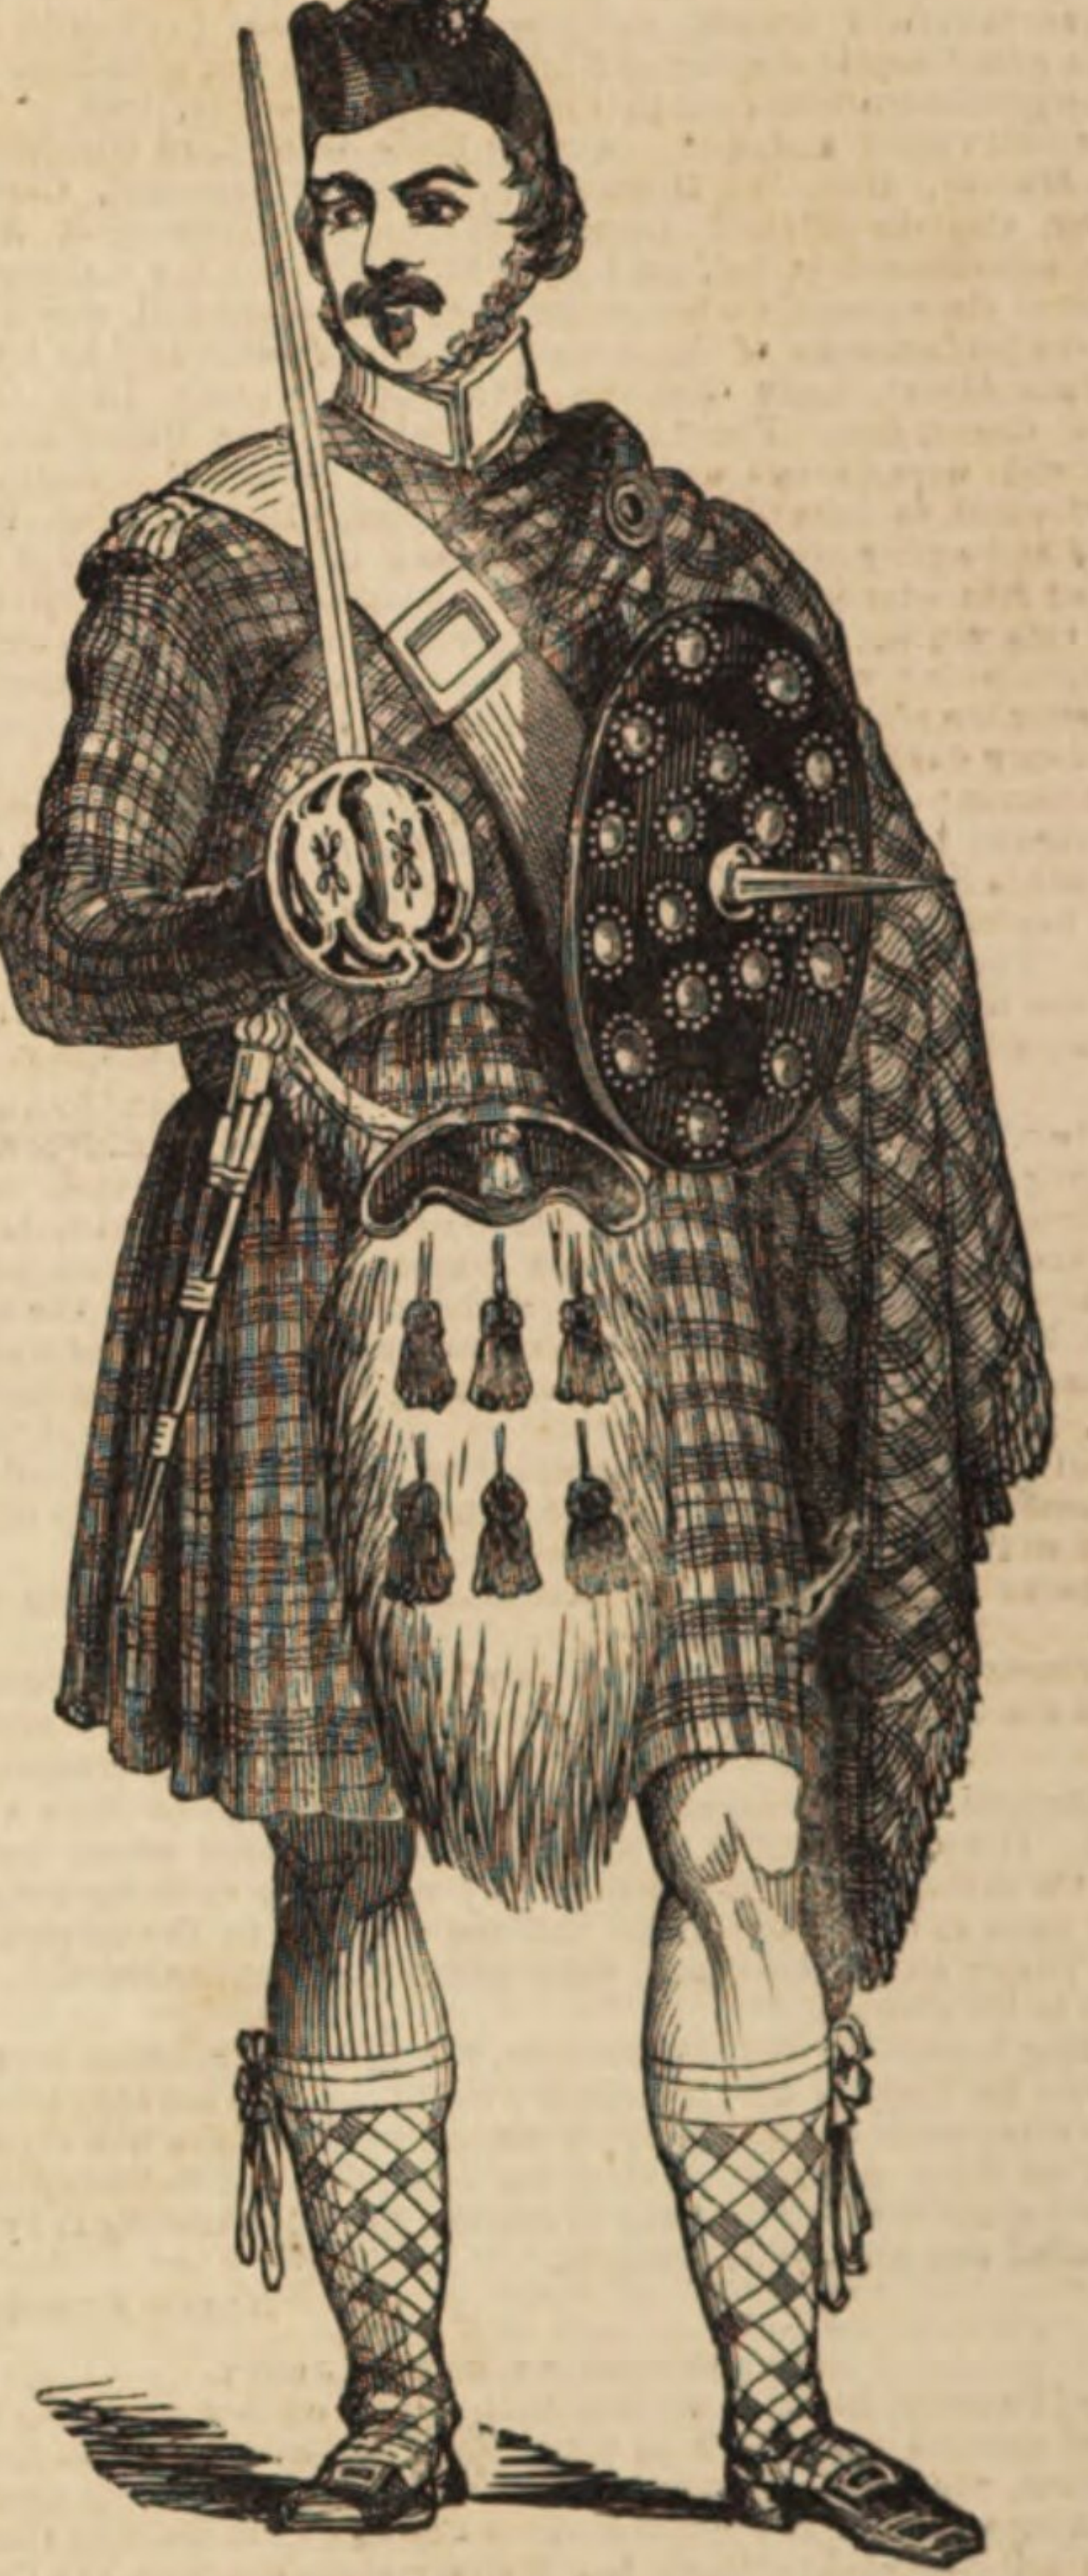
We this week complete our narrative of the incidents connected with Her Majesty's visit to Scotland. The subjoined account, taken from the most authentic sources, comprises a connected detail of every circumstance worth mentioning, connected with this, our gracious Queen's second visit to the "land o' cakes."



ARCH AT COUPAR ANGUS.

BLAIR ATHOL, Friday, Sept. 27

Yesterday morning after breakfast Her Majesty rode in the grounds. The Princess Royal was taken her usual ride.



PORTRAIT OF A HIGHLAND GUARDSMAN, AT BLAIR ATHOL.

In the afternoon, at about half-past 3 o'clock, Her Majesty left the castle to visit the pass of Killiecrankie and the grounds of Mr. Butler of Faskally. The Prince drove Her Majesty, and Lord Charles Wellesley and Lord Glenlyon accompanied them on horseback. They drove straight on to the entrance of Mr. Butler's grounds. Mr. Butler received Her Majesty, and presented her with a beautiful bouquet of flowers from the gardens around the house. Her Majesty alighted from the carriage, and walked through the grounds. This place of Mr. Butler's can have but few rivals amongst the seats of the Scottish gentry. The situation itself is romantic in the extreme. At a short distance from the eastern entrance of the pass of Killiecrankie, just were the bleak rugged mountains around and the deep ravine through which the stream of the Garry flows, combine some of the most grand features of the scenery, you come suddenly at a short turn from the high road down upon a rich vale of considerable extent, in which woodland, lawn, flowers, and the clear water running at the foot, form a picture in which art has assisted nature in producing almost the perfection of ornamental gardening. The natural beauty of the place is enhanced by the contrast it exhibits to the wild scenery in which it is embosomed.

ARCH AT COUPAR ANGUS.

Her Majesty paused several times to admire the surpassing beauty of the scenery, which was enhanced by the mellowness of the autumnal tints of the rich foliage of the birch trees and larches. Her Majesty alighted at the entrance to the pass of Killiecrankie, and having mounted her pony, which had been sent on before, rode down to the bottom of the pass, and remained for some time admiring the beauty of the scene formed by the clear rushing of the Garry over the "Sodger's Loup."

Lord and Lady Glenlyon, during the stay of her Majesty at the castle, have occupied the residence of Captain Macduff, his lordship's factor, a fine old stalwart Highland gentleman, who has served with distinction in the American war. Captain Macduff's house is a small, but picturesque cottage, within the grounds of the castle, and close to the chapel, in which lie the remains of the celebrated "Clavers." The stables belonging to the cottage unfortunately caught fire at two o'clock this morning. Much valuable property, and the whole of Captain Macduff's plate, have been destroyed. The progress of the flames might have been easily arrested at the first outburst; but Lord Glenlyon is one of those Scotch noblemen who still retain their rational notions of hospitality. His lordship would not allow the neighbourhood to be aroused, and assistance to be sent for, lest her Majesty might be alarmed; and so fastidious was he in his apprehensions of disturbing his illustrious guest, that he preferred seeing his property devoured by the flames rather than incur the risk of inconveniencing his Sovereign. Lord and Lady Glenlyon had scarcely time to clothe themselves, so great was the danger at one time that the fire would extend to the dwelling-house. The Queen's grooms, as soon as they were apprised of the accident, got up, and went off to the scene, where they rendered every assistance in their power. Fortunately, Lord Glenlyon's horses were saved, but a favourite dog, Crib, was burnt.

Four cottages have been burned to the ground, the lodge kitchen, a sleeping room, and Capt. Macduff's office attached to the latter.

BLAIR ATHOL, Saturday.

Yesterday afternoon the Queen and Prince Albert, attended by Lord C. Wellesley and Lord Glenlyon, rode down Glen Tilt to view the deer, and proceeded nearly ten miles before they came up with any of these extremely shy and noble animals of the forest. The Prince was unsuccessful in getting within range, and after prolonging their ride till nearly seven o'clock, the royal party returned to the castle.

In the evening an exhibition of the national dances took place before her Majesty in the Great Hall of the castle, which was fitted up and decorated in a very handsome manner for the occasion. The whole armoury of the castle, including 300 muskets, and a large number of pistols, bayonets, lochabar-axes, and claymores, were arranged in fanciful devices on the wall, and above these the banners were tastefully draped, and when the hall was brilliantly lighted up it formed a grand scenic display of Highland prowess and grandeur.

All the gentlemen who took part in the dances were attired in full Highland costume, with plaid and dirk. Among them were Lord Glenlyon, Hon. Capt. James Murray, Hon. W. Drummond, Capt. Drummond, Capt. Oswald of Dunniker, Captain M'Duff, Lieut. Smallkier of Kindroggan, &c. &c. The dancing commenced at half-past nine, at which hour her Majesty took her seat in a chair of state placed for her at the upper end of the hall, where she remained during the performance of the several dances, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Lady Glenlyon, Hon. Miss Murray, Lady Canning, Lady Caroline Cocks, &c. The "Highland fling," "The Hulaghan," and several national reels were danced, and also the "Fillie Callum," or sword dance, which was performed in beautiful style by the Hon. Capt. Murray, in which great dexterity and agility are required. in dancing in and among four swords, which are placed crosswise in the centre of the apartment. Her Majesty enjoyed the dances very much, and laughed heartily at some of the more extravagant and wild figures which were introduced for her amusement. The dancing concluded shortly after ten o'clock. There was a guard of honour of the Athol Highlanders in attendance during the ball.

It has become a very general desire in Dundee to have the splendid triumphal arch, designed by Mr. Leslie, in honour of the Queen, erected in stone, and we think there is little doubt that it will be done. Lord Panmure has made a magnificent beginning to the work by subscribing five hundred pounds towards the expense. The harbour trustees have held a special meeting to consider the matter, and they have also handsomely agreed to contribute five hundred pounds, and to bring up the foundation of the arch to the level of the quay.

BLAIR ATHOL, Sunday.

The church was again invaded at an early hour, but the object of a portion of the congregation, or rather audience, in attending divine service, was most palpably obvious; for when the carriage drove up to the church with Lady Glenlyon, Mrs. Drummond, and the Hon. Miss Murray, several persons left the church. Some, however, who came to stare, remained to pray, and the newly-married minister, Mr. Irvine, delivered an excellent sermon. His bride was also present, and came in for a large share of the staring which had been intended for her Majesty.

Lord Glenlyon's pew was also occupied by Lord Aberdeen. Lord Charles Wellesley, Lord Liverpool, Sir Jas. Clarke, Lady Canning, and Lady Caroline Cocks, remained at the castle in attendance upon her Majesty.

The Queen did not leave the precincts of the castle during the whole afternoon.

The Princess Royal did not accompany her Majesty in her promenade. The service of the Church was read before her Majesty in her private apartments.

BLAIR ATHOL, Monday.

The disappointment yesterday throughout the village of Blair Athol was unbounded. It was impossible to shake the implicit belief which had firmly fixed itself in the minds of the people that they would see their Sovereign once more amongst them at the village kirk. All the villagers in the neighbourhood, and even the people about the castle, were under the impression that her Majesty would go to the church.

According to another version, however, the Queen's absence from church was caused from her Majesty having caught a slight cold on Thursday afternoon, which was somewhat increased by the heavy shower to which she was exposed for more than half an hour while witnessing the otter hunt on Saturday morning, and thus it was considered inexpedient to run the risk of increasing it by sitting in an over-crowded and over-heated church.

BLAIR ATHOL, Tuesday.

DEPARTURE OF HER MAJESTY.

To-day (Tuesday) her Majesty left Blair Athol, on her return to England. A number of persons assembled to witness the departure, as also the planting of certain trees, which, as at Taymouth, her Majesty had kindly agreed to plant. The morning was fair, but rather cold—a strong breeze blowing from the south-east. At half-past eight o'clock, her Majesty came out from the Castle, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, and at once proceeded to plant two trees near the Castle. Prince Albert and the Princess also planted two each, after which the party then returned to the Castle. In a few minutes, however, her Majesty and the Prince again appeared, and after standing for a second or two, entered their travelling carriage, which was drawn up before the gate, and drove slowly off. At the outer gate her Majesty was received by a concourse of people, who renewed the shouts which had just died upon her ear. Lord Glenlyon rode alongside the Royal carriage, and two carriages followed; in one of which was the Princess Royal, with Lady Canning and Mademoiselle Charrier; and in another, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Charles Wellesley, and Sir Edward Bowater. The other members of the suite had left in the morning.

The Edinburgh Observer says "Her Majesty having so enjoyed her rustication in the Highlands, there seems to be but one opinion—that she will soon revisit Blair Castle. Indeed, it is confidently rumoured that a treaty has actually been concluded for its occupancy by royalty, occasionally, for three years.

Our engravings, this week, illustrate the Royal Progress of her Majesty and suite leaving the town of Coupar Angus: together with two of the festal arches erected to commemorate the interesting event: one represents an Arch in the town, and inscribed "Victoria and Albert"—"Welcome to Perthshire;" and the other the Arch at the entrance to Coupar, from Blair Athol, and inscribed Dieu et mon Droit"—"Treu und Fest."

To this succeeds a general view of the scenery of Blair Athol.

The next illustration shows the church of Blair Athol, with the Queen and Prince Albert leaving by the principal porch; the pathway being flanked by the Highland Guard.

Lastly, is a portrait of one of her Majesty's Guardsmen. The costume is very striking: the tartan green with a small red stripe, crossed by white belts; red and white hose; and dark blue cap.

LONDON MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—The theatre of this Institution was, on the evening of the 27th ult., the scene of a very successful oratorical début, before a London audience, on the part of Mr. James Raleigh Baxter, a young gentleman who undeertook to do battle with the Political Economists, on certain knotty points relating to the treatment of the labouring classes. The audience was large and respectable, and appeared to be much gratified.

THE CITY-ROAD IN FORMER DAYS.—The City-road was first opened in 1761. The London Chronicle of Saturday, June 27, says—"The New-road, which is to be called the City-road, from Old-street, across the fields to Islington, has been made in less than four months, and will be opened on Monday next." For many years this neighbourhood was very little frequented. A curious proof of this is given in a volume of the Newgate Calendar, which, relating the history of a man executed in 1770 for robbing the mail, says—"One Saturday evening he walked as far as Peerless-pool, in the City-road, and waited till such time as the postboy came by with the northern mail, when he stopped and robbed him."

A MAN TORN TO PIECES BY A HORSE.—A man named Murphy, on Monday, was killed by a horse, near Kill, county Waterford. The man was turning off the high road into the field, to make a short cut, though advised to turn back, or else he might be killed by a wild horse he should have to pass. Fatally for himself he trod the "forbidden ground." In four hours after his body was found torn to pieces. The horse's hoofs and mouth were encrusted with the blood of his victim.

"Her Majesty was so pleased with the Falls of Bruar, that she wished to have sketches of them. Mr. Landells, who is at Blair Athol, in connexion with the ILLUSTRATED NEWS, had the honour of submitting his drawings for her Majesty's inspection, and received the Royal command to execute two sketches, one of the Upper Falls, and one of the Lower."—Times, Sept. 27.

"Mr. Landells, a gentleman connected with the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, who is taking sketches for that periodical, has had the honour of submitting some of them for her Majesty's inspection. The Queen expressed herself highly pleased with the spirit and accuracy of the sketches, and has commissioned Mr. Landells to paint for her two views, one of the Upper and the other of the Lower Falls of Bruar."—Morning Herald, Sept. 25.

TO OUR READERS.

This day is published a SUPPLEMENT containing the SECOND, and concluding PART of

THE CENSUS
OF
GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND,
GIVING AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF THE
OCCUPATIONS OF THE INHABITANTS,
AND
SHOWING THE NUMBER OF EACH SEX EMPLOYED IN THE SEVERAL TRADES AND PROFESSIONS
IN ENGLAND AND WALES, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND,

respectively:—being unquestionably one of the most curious and important documents which has ever been presented to Parliament.—This SUPPLEMENT will also contain the full details of the

POPULATION
OF
EVERY COUNTY, BARONY, PARISH, TOWN, AND VILLAGE IN SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND; ALSO,

a list of all places returning MEMBERS to PARLIAMENT, with the POPULATION of each, the number of MEMBERS returned, and the number of REGISTERED ELECTORS; with numerous other STATISTICAL TABLES;—forming a useful and valuable work for reference to the PUBLIC in GENERAL,—the whole carefully arranged and compiled expressly for the

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,
PRICE SIXPENCE, POSTAGE FREE.

Orders received by all Booksellers and Newsmen, and at the Office, No. 198, Strand;—where Copies of the First Part, containing the CENSUS of ENGLAND and WALES, may still be had.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, October 6.—Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 7.—
TUESDAY, 8.—Dr. Kippis died, 1795.
WEDNESDAY, 9.—Dutch fleet defeated, 1797.
THURSDAY, 10.—Nottingham Castle burnt, 1831
FRIDAY, 11.—Old Michaelmas Day.
SATURDAY, 12.—Columbus discovered America, 1492.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending October 12.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
9 48	10 26	11 4	11 36	0 0	0 2	0 25	0 46	1 6	1 26	1 47	2 4

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A. W." should write to C. R. Smith, Esq., Secretary to the British Archæological Association, 5, Liverpool-street, City.

"A Subscriber."—There will be opened a carriage-road through the Thames Tunnel, as soon as the approaches are completed. See the ample description in No. 48 of our journal.

"B. J.," Adwick Hall, Doncaster.—The striker of the ball will be out.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement," Worcester, will find a brief, but intelligent, article on the mitre in the Penny Cyclopædia; we have not room for quotation.

"A. M. K."—We are not aware of the Rev. J. Todd's "Index Rerum" having been republished in this country. We have not room for the outline.

"W. C."—We will endeavour to obtain the information as to Oakham and Rutland.

"T. O.," Hale, near Sandwich, should try friction with horse-hair gloves.

*"Αλφα" should write to Mr. Weippert.*

"H. W. T.," Haslemere, will find the Atmospheric Railway described in No. 88 of our journal.

"H. C.," Gloucester.—Mrs. Butler is the second daughter of Mr. C. Kemble.

"P. P. C." will find the Instructions for Quadrilles in a little book, entitled "The Companion to the Ball-room."

"Amateur," Liverpool, is thanked for the hint.

"Alpha."—It is not yet known whether the young Prince Alfred will be created Duke of York or Duke of Kent.

"A Subscriber," Perth, is thanked; but the scenes proffered have already been engraved in our journal.

"Momus's" suggestion (a good one) arrived too late.

Lines by R. R., on a Prison, will not suit.

"A Constant Reader," Kensington, should apply to the Insurance-office.

"W. W."—The toll cannot be legally demanded, unless the carriage and horses pass through the turnpike.

"T. S.," Stamford, must take out a hawker's license.

"B. S."—We have not room to go further into the merits of Sholl's new American Beehive, which our correspondent avers is but a slight alteration of Dr. Howison's principle.

"F. M. C.," Tottenham Park.—Perhaps our correspondent will favour us with the loan of the engraved block.

"P."—Dunluce Castle will be found engraved in the "Mirror," No. 650, vol. XXIII.; in "Wright's Guide to the Giant's Causeway," and other works.

"The Bark Ada's Rudder:"—We have not room.

"Stellar Astronomy:"—Under consideration.

"R. M.," St. Columb.—M. Bochsa, when in this country, was unrivalled as a harpist.

"E. L."—Views of the disturbed districts of South Wales appeared in Nos. 70 and 80 of our journal.

"Aristides," Chelsea; "R. H.," Bath.—The Large Print is in a very forward state.

"Lieut. B.," Donaghadee.—The Art-Union of London, Trafalgar-square.

"A Subscriber."—The action would not lie.

"S. S."—The selling of fireworks, without a license, or letting them off in public places, is illegal, and punishable with forfeiture and fine.

"Leech."—The price of "Drexelius's Reflexions on Eternity" is 5s., foolscap 8vo.

"An Old Subscriber" should consult a solicitor as to the right of way.

"A Subscriber," Limerick.—The eldest son of an Earl is styled Right Hon. by courtesy; but the title is only properly applied to Privy Councillors.

"D. F.," Culloden Castle.—The manufactory for Jefferey's Marine Glue is at Limehouse.

"G. W. G.," Redgwell, is thanked for the sketch of the improved Ice-house.

"A Reader," Glasgow.—A good account of the loss of the Royal George will be found in a book entitled "Shipwrecks and Disasters at Sea."

"Hope," Camberwell, may probably obtain the information from the New York Directory.

"O. H.," "G. P. O."—The tale will not suit.

"Clericus," Aylesbury, should consult a treatise on the Law of Dilapidations.

"A Subscriber" may rely on Walker.

"Poverty" cannot recover the amount of the expenses.

"A Subscriber," Newtownbarry, should refer to the account of the Affghanistan war in our journal.

"A Subscriber" may rely on the Savings' Banks.

"J. R."—The Round Tower in Perthshire, may, probably, appear.

Erratum.—The price of Sir H. Bishop's edition of "Beethoven's Mount of Olives" is 12s., and not 30s., as stated in our last.

The notices of the Magazines for October are unavoidably deferred.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1844.

THE principle of a representative government can be brought into successful operation only among people who have worked it out slowly, who have been as it were trained to it. Among an uncivilised, or what is just as bad, a half civilised people, it is worse than useless to introduce it, with all the complications it has acquired amid races educated to the task of self-government. Granting that all men are alike capable of adopting the system—which some political writers have doubted—it is certain they are not fit to receive it at once in all its extent; and this is as true of nations where it has existed and been forgotten, as of those in which it never existed at all. In ancient Rome nearly every office was elective; in modern Italy, the political system excludes the people from all share in the Government, the only shadow of the elective system remaining in the government of the church. The Greeks of antiquity were a meeting and a voting people; but under the sway of the Ottoman they lost this, with nearly every other characteristic of their national greatness. It pleased the states of Europe to give Greece a king, and it has pleased the Greeks to add what the European powers forgot—a constitution. None can blame them if they felt the want of it, and the peaceful manner in which they established it won the approbation of all men. For the constitution itself, it was apparently unexceptionable. The Abbé Sieyes, who kept in his desk ready-made constitutions for every nation in the world, never drew the plan of a more perfect one. It guaranteed freedom of all kinds—of speech, of writing, of the person, of the press, of the suffrage: it was a constitution one could not help wishing to see at work, and working well. But neither men nor nations attain perfection at a bound; theories have to be carried out into practice by men, and the work is likely to borrow much of its character from the instrument. The severest trial an electing body has to undergo is the inevitable necessity of the submission of the minority to the majority. We have seen the philosophy of the losing side put to a grievous test, even in England, where time and custom have reconciled men both to reverses and victories, and taught them moderation in triumph, and equanimity in defeat. The prospect of "another time" has the double effect of abating exultation on the one hand, and inspiring hope on the other; the first does not become arrogant, nor the other sink into despair. But this quiet sort of feeling is far beyond the attainment of such a people as the Greeks, who have not long fought their way from beneath the yoke of the Turk, and gained their constitution by showing so determined a front, that the King could not resist, had he been so inclined. Now they have to put in operation the constitution they have gained, they begin to feel the difficulty of that self-command on the part of the minority, which can alone enable them to submit to the decision of the opposing side. Thus one of the Greek Ministers, enraged by the election of a candidate unfavourable to his policy, took a band of armed men, broke into a church where the sealed up balloting-urns had been deposited for safety, opened them, and scattered the votes to the winds. This was a "short and easy" mode of getting rid of a difficulty, at all events; but it is not exactly the proper way in which the elective principle is to be carried out. Suppose Sir R. Peel, at the last City of Lonnon election, had, with the aid of some of the A division, laid violent hands on sundry of the Whig polling books, and thrown them into the Thames, to the great embarrassment of the returning officer! Allowing for the difference between Athens and London, the act above described is the same in principle, if not in extent. In Spain things are not much better; the elections now going on are marked by every species of fraud; sometimes when it is known that not ten persons have voted during the day, the ballot boxes have produced between one and two hundred votes for the same period! It is needless to point out the trickery used in such cases. The ballot is about the worst mode of taking votes that could be devised for a people imperfectly schooled in what may be called the morale of politics; it presents most fatal facilities of being abused. We fear the framers of constitutions for these countries have founded their plans more on the idea of what ought to be, than on a knowledge of what actually exists; that they have drawn too much from books, and allowed too little for the imperfections of men.

THE establishment of a new principle, or the extension of an old one, in the affairs of Government, is always deserving of notice. From a statement recently made by one of our best political authorities, it appears that our Government is at last about to consider formally, the defalcations in pecuniary matters of some of those states which have acquired a "repudiating" notoriety. We need not go over their names; as Byron says, "Columbia's bonds have holders not unknown," and Sydney Smith has rendered Pennsylvania a word of fear to the capitalists of the world at large. As far as general condemnation of public dishonesty could go, everything had been done towards bringing the culprits to a sense of shame. But no official act had added the censure of the Government of this country to that of the people. This remained for the present Ministry to effect, and should the rumour turn out to be true, we think it will deserve the greatest credit for a display of what may be called politico-financial boldness. The step which it is stated the Government is about to adopt, is that of "excluding from the Court and Ministerial parties, all the Foreign Ministers or Charges d'Affaires whose Governments have not faithfully fulfilled their engagements with their creditors in this country." Virtue is said to be its own reward, and it is certain that dishonesty is its own punishment; but both reward and punishment, in the matters of this world, arrive more slowly than could be wished, for the sake of encouragement in one case, and example in the other; it is grievous even for a brief space, to see the wicked flourishing as the green bay tree. The complacency with which the funds of the English creditors of these repudiating and defalcating states have been appropriated to purposes—the beneficial results of which remain to the borrowers, while the capitalist has been, apparently, irrecoverably lost to the lenders—has added a sense of insult to the injury; for it is well known that the refusal to pay, does not, in all cases, proceed from a lack of means and resources. The public is a large, and not an organised body; it can feel a wrong, and it can remonstrate against it; but it cannot act with an effect at all proportioned to the bitterness with which it can feel. It has its journals, and a writer like Sydney Smith to give utterance to its indignation in them, but it has not an immediate foreign minister, nor a direct influence, either at Whitehall or St. James's. It is sometimes long ere a feeling general enough out of doors, reaches these great centres of official and diplomatic activity; still it is satisfactory to find them not entirely inaccessible to such impressions, and directing their immense influence to the good work of drawing a line of distinction between states which have behaved honourably and uprightly towards their creditors, and those whose conduct has been, to use the most concise definition, the reverse of both.

The public are not, perhaps, altogether blameless with respect to the immense national losses that have been sustained by a too easy faith in the soundness of foreign money speculations. At one period there was scarcely any scheme too absurd to ensure the creation of a company, directors, and shareholders. But foreign loans have been the great instruments by which Englishmen were divested of their spare capital. Loans to any state, and to almost any form of government, Imperial, Republican, Monarchial. Loans on all securities, and on no securities at all, and for any purpose the contractors might choose to allege—every representation found ready credence, and a yet more ready supply of the one thing needful. The result need not be told; it was read in a thousand forms of embarrassment and ruin, which were felt throughout the middle and commercial classes of England; and worse than the loss of what was perhaps only the superfluity of a large capital, was in many cases that of the careful savings of many years. All amounts, large and small, being alike swallowed up in the gurgite vasto of foreign speculation. It would be well, then, if the people of England—at least those who have anything to lose by such schemes—would pause a little before they let their property be thus absorbed in doubtful undertakings, or staked on the good faith of yet more doubtful states and governments. At the best there is always danger to the security of capital invested in a foreign country. The scarcely escaped risk of a war with France may perhaps lead many to ask what, in case of hostilities, would have become of English money embarked in the numerous French railways? Under another Napoleon—or what is more within the bounds of probability—a ruler having all his unscrupulous rapacity, without perhaps his commanding talents, we fear the result to the English shareholder would not even be doubtful.

But the readiness with which men can be deceived, furnishes no excuse for the want of principle that prompts the deceiver, and we are glad to see our Government marking its sense of financial knavery, by refusing political recognition to those states which have practised it. It is like the ban society places on the man convicted of dishonour; and a state possesses a power of self-restoration which is too often denied to an individual; a little effort will enable the state to pay its debts, and purchase its readmission, as honest and solvent, to the mart of national credit; of an exclusion, therefore, so easily removeable, they have little cause to complain.

To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.

Woolwich, October 1, 1844.

I beg to observe with regard to to your description of a method of raising heavy weights, in your paper of Saturday last, designated as Mr. Perigal's plan, and further alluded to as his discovery, that the method has been in constant practice here dur ng the last five-and-twenty years, which fact was known to Mr Perigal previous to the meeting of the Association at York. I request the favour of your insertion of this communication in your next publication.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
C. C. DANSEY,
Lieutenant-Colonel Royal Artillery.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE QUEEN'S RETURN FROM SCOTLAND.

Great preparations were made at Woolwich Dockyard on Thursday, for the reception of her Majesty and Prince Albert, on their return from Scotland. The Earl of Jersey, Master of the Horse, and General Wemyss and Colonel Bouverie, Equerries to her Majesty, were in attendance at the Dockyard at an early hour.

The Royal squadron arrived at Woolwich about half-past two o'clock, when her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal landed, under a royal salute, after rather a rough passage. Her Majesty was received on her landing by Sir George Cockburn and the officers of the Dockyard. After a short delay, the royal party proceeded to Windsor.

HER MAJESTY'S ARRIVAL AT WINDSOR.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Windsor, Thursday Evening.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert arrived at the Castle this afternoon, at four o'clock, in a travelling carriage and four, from Slough, having travelled from Paddington to that station in the state carriage of the Great Western Railway Company. Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal rode in the carriage with her illustrious parents.

Her Majesty was escorted to the castle by a detachment of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue).

The Viscountess Canning (Lady in Waiting), Lady Caroline Somers Cocks (Maid of Honour in Waiting), Mademoiselle Charrier (in attendance on the Princess Royal), Lord Charles Wellesley, Major-General Sir Edward Bowater, and the remainder of the royal suite followed her Majesty in two carriages and four.

Considering the extremely boisterous nature of the voyage from Dundee to Woolwich, her Majesty looked remarkably well. Prince Albert appeared pale and much fatigued. We understand his Royal Highness, as is usual whenever the Prince is at sea, suffered greatly from sickness during the voyage.

The Princess Royal, it is stated, has proved herself a much better sailor than her illustrious father.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice, have been taken out twice in the Home Park, during the day, for their usual airings.

The infant Prince Alfred, who is looking remarkably well, and thriving amazingly, was also taken out for an airing in the middle of the day, in the immediate vicinity of the castle.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the Duchess of Kent, will dine in private this evening.

Return of the Royal Children to Windsor.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Alice, accompanied by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, and attended by Lieutenant-Colonel the Honourable Charles Grey, Equerry to her Majesty, arrived at Windsor Castle at half-past five o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, from the Pavilion at Brighton. The royal party travelled from Brighton by a special train, to the New-cross station, and from the station proceeded to the Paddington terminus of the Great Western Railway.

Arrival of the Duke of Cambridge at Edinburgh.—The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by his son-in-law, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, and Baron Kneesebeck, arrived on Monday at Edinburgh, direct from Scone Palace, Perthshire, where his Royal Highness had been visiting the Earl of Mansfield.

The Duchess of Kent.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at Frogmore House on Wednesday evening, from Witley-court.

The Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, arrived at Apsley House, on Wednesday, from Walmer Castle. His grace is not expected to return to the castle until after his Majesty the King of the French shall have closed his approaching visit to the Queen.

The Duke and Duchess of St. Albans have arrived at Brighton from a visit to the Earl and Countess of Morley, in Devonshire.

Marriage in High Life.—Last Saturday was solemnised the marriage of Count François Caissotti de Roubion, eldest son of Count de Roubion, Chamberlain to his Majesty the King of Sardinia, and Caroline Sophia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Mr. Charles Baillie Hamilton, M.P., and the Lady Caroline Hamilton. The ceremony took place first at the Catholic Chapel in Warwick-street.

Lady Graham and family have arrived in Hill-street, from the Isle of Wight. Sir James Graham remains at Netherby.

Serious Illness of Lady Heytesbury.—We are sorry to hear that Lady Heytesbury, the lady of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, is seriously indisposed. Low fever and a tendency to heart disease are each stated as her ladyship's malady. The latest answer to inquiries at Dublin Castle was of a very unfavourable character. Prayers have been offered up at the Castle Chapel for the recovery of her ladyship.

Mr. G. Byng, M.P., it is asserted, has given the munificent sum of £10 000 to his niece, the Hon. Miss Byng, on the occasion of her marriage with Mr. Tufnell, M.P.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Election of Mr. Alderman Gibbs as Lord Mayor.—On Saturday last a Common Hall wast held at Guildhall to nominate two duly qualified Aldermen for the office of Lord Mayor. The two Aldermen next in rotation were Alderman Thomas Wood and Alderman Gibbs. The names of Alderman John Johnson and Sir G. Carroll were also submitted. The Common Sergeant declared that the choice of the Livery had fallen on Thomas Wood, Esq., and Michael Gibbs, Esq. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen subsequently selected Mr. Alderman Gibbs, who was therefore declared to be duly elected Lord Mayor for the year ensuing.

Portsoken Ward.—Official Declaration of the Poll.—On Monday afternoon, a wardmote of the ward of Portsoken, adjourned from Friday last, was resumed at the late workhouse, in the board room, Houndsditch, to receive the official declaration of the poll, upon the election of an Alderman, in the room of Alderman T. Johnson. Mr. D. Salomons arrived a few minutes before the Lord Mayor, accompanied by his friends. Mr. Sheriff Moon was not present. The Lord Mayor, preceded by the mace bearer and the sword of state, having taken the chair, announced the result of the poll to have been for Mr. D. Salomons, 168, for Mr. Sheriff Moon, 136, and declared Mr. David Salomons to have been duly elected Alderman of the ward. (Loud cheers.) Mr. D. Salomons then addressed the electors, and moved a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor. Mr. Hill seconded the motion, which was agreed to unanimously, with loud cheers. His lordship thanked the electors.

Parochial Meetings.—On Monday, according to annual custom, meetings took place in the various parishes in the metropolis for the purpose of nominating persons to fill the office of overseers for the year, passing the churchwardens' accounts, and on other parochial business. In St. George the Martyr, Southwark, a long discussion took place with respect to the payment of the rector's stipend, and for other purposes of the church. The churchwarden proposed a 3d. rate, which was met with an amendment for a 2½d. one. On a show of hands, there appeared for the 2½d. rate 48, against it 23—majority, 25. A poll was demanded, which was appointed to take place on Monday next.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—This splendid edifice, after having been closed for two months to Divine service, for the purpose, as was stated by the dean and chapter, of "cleaning and restoring the interior," was re-opened last Sunday morning for public worship. Both the morning and afternoon service were very numerously attended by a most respectable congregation. The interior certainly looks all the better for the scrubbing or whitewashing it has undergone, and the statues and monuments erected to those heroes who have distinguished themselves in their country's cause by land and sea are seen to more advantage now that they are divested of the thick coat of dust that had been allowed to accumulate. The service will now be continued daily, as usual, at ten o'clock A.M. and three P.M.

Wood Paving.—The Marylebone vestry have determined that the bottom of Oxford-street, which was first paved with wood, shall be repaved with granite. In this part the wood pavement has been completely worn out. It was laid down by contract at 2s. 2d. per yard for three years.

IRELAND.

O'CONNELL'S TRIUMPHAL PROGRESS TO HIS NATIVE MOUNTAINS.

The Irish papers abound with inflated accounts of O'Connell's progress from Dublin to Darrynane. One of these journals reports his journey in these terms—

"In Naas, Kildare, Monastereven, Maryborough, Mountrath, and Borrisinossory, the people decorated their houses with laurels and flowers, and threw triumphal arches across the road, whilst the abundant blessings they poured forth for their friend, advocate, and champion, testified the strength, and depth, and sincerity of their hearty zeal in the cause of fatherland, and the ardent readiness of their co-operation with him in all his undertakings for the national good."

At Limerick immense crowds assembled, many of the individuals carrying green boughs and garlands, while the air resounded with shouts and congratulations. Arrived at his hotel, he made a speech, in which, after chiding the mob for taking his horses from his carriage and drawing him, because he did not want them to make beasts of themselves, he said:—

"I am restored to you from gaol. (Deafening cheers.) With all their jury-packing they could not keep me there. (Immense cheering.) We have triumphed over them by the justice of our cause, and by the good conduct of the people, who, during my imprisonment, kept the peace and observed the law. Nothing could equal your conduct. I do not flatter you when I say that there is not such a people on the face of the earth. For your sakes I have endured a dungeon, and for you I would go to the scaffold. (Cheers.) There is another source of congratulation which you have. It is the adhesion of Smith O'Brien to our cause. Three cheers for Smith O'Brien. (This call was responded to by a deafening peal.) I'll tell you what is his advice and mine to you. There are schemes in operation among the lower ranks of the police, who want to betray you and to get your blood for money. (Hear, hear.) They are endeavouring to promote the worst and most noxious system that ever discovered itself in this country—I mean ribandism. (Hear, hear.) There is only one set of men I hate, and that is the ribandmen. (Hear, hear.) Nothing else could impede my course but something of this kind. Whatever project they may have, their object cannot be good, for if it were it would not need oaths and secrecy. (Hear, hear.) You may take my word for it, and I believe I never deceived you (loud cries of 'Never!'), that whatever fears the light cannot serve the cause of Ireland. We, your true friends, meet in the open day, and seek no concealment, and you will follow our advice, as you have ever done. (Loud cheers.) Our advice, then, is, when any reptile attempts to seduce you, bring him by the collar to the police, and I will engage you they will be very sorry to see their friend. (Hear and laughter.) I have more to tell you. Repeal is coming. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) Many of the Protestant gentry have adopted the federal system, and are coming over to our ranks. (Hear, hear.) We hail them as Irishmen and brothers. (Cheers.) Thus united and persevering in our peaceful and constitutional struggle, the day is not distant when we shall see a parliament in College Green, and Ireland what God and nature intended her—prosperous and contented, happy and free." (Loud and protracted cheering.)

At Roscrea and Nenagh O'Connell had previously addressed the Repealers in an excited strain.

The Repeal Association.—The weekly meeting on Monday was such a flat affair that it hardly deserves any notice. Some small contributions were handed in from various places, which were acknowledged by Mr. Maurice O'Connell. A letter was read from Mr. W. S. O'Brien, urging discretion, firmness, and perseverance, and suggesting several means likely to forward the Repeal cause. Mr. M. O'Connell read a financial statement, from which it appeared that Dublin, from its trades and wards, contributed since the 1st of January the sum of £4,525 19s. 10½d. to the Repeal rent. He argued from this that Dublin was "nobly doing its duty."—Mr. William John O'Connell, the London Repeal Warden, announced the weekly contribution from the great metropolis, and informed the meeting that London had subscribed no less than £1,830 3s. 3d. since the commencement of the present year.—Mr. W. O'Connell then talked in a very valiant style about the Repealers. If an invading army from Russia, he said, were to land in England, all her Majesty would have to do would be to send for him, and in an instant he would raise in London one hundred thousand fighting Repealers—all Irishmen—who would first take the weapons of the invaders from them, and then beat them with them. (Cheers.) His maxim was Repeal—honestly if possible—but, at all events, Repeal. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Maurice O'Connell rejected the notion of seeking for Repeal by any but honest and honourable means. It was directly contrary to the Liberator's principles, and to every maxim acted upon by the Repeal Association.—Mr. H. Grattan made a speech, and the meeting then adjourned till the following Monday. There was a sad falling off in the rent for the week, the amount being only £349 18s. 1½d.

The Alleged Plate Robbery by an Officer.—We have already stated the circumstances connected with a charge against Lieutenant Puddicombe, of the Royal Marines, for stealing a silver spoon and some silver forks, at a ball recently given by Mr. Augustus Warner. Lieutenant Puddicombe has been tried for the alleged offence before the assistant-barrister, at the Cork Quarter Sessions. The Court-house was densely filled, and the trial occupied the entire day. Mr. Puddicombe called no witnesses, but was ably defended by counsel. One of the witnesses for the prosecution, on cross-examination, admitted that others might have gone into the supper-room. There were two doors to the room. Another person might have gone up with Lieut. Puddicombe, but the witness did not see him. The evidence did not at all substantiate the charge, and the jury returned a verdict of acquittal, which was received with protracted cheering.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Nuremburgh Correspondent says there is no truth in the report that Bohemia is about to become part of the German Customs Union.

Letters from Stockholm announce the death of Charles John de Brohe, the long attached friend of the late King of Sweden.

The Universal German Gazette states that the prosecution against some of the officers of the Austrian navy, in relation to the affair of the sons of Admiral Bandiera, is proceeding actively, and that a merchant who procured a passport for the two brothers has been tried and sentenced to a long imprisonment.

Yesterday week was the nineteenth anniversary of the opening of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, which is the oldest of the existing railways and the first on which locomotive engines were employed.

A notice has just been issued by the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, the head master of Eton College, that after Easter next he will not admit any boy to the school who shall have completed his fourteenth year.

Professor Liebig, the distinguished chemist, will be entertained at a public dinner in Glasgow, about the 11th instant. The Earl of Eglintoun has agreed to preside.

The accounts from France respecting the vintage continue good, and in most of the districts the gathering had commenced with great success. From Nantes, St. Dizier, and Lunel, the advices are most encouraging. The letters from Rheims do not speak in high terms of the quality of champagne which will be produced in that district this year.

The King of Hanover returned to that city on the 25th ult. from Halle, where his Majesty had repaired to witness the Prussian military reviews. The King has just commanded that 1000 thalers are to be forwarded from his privy purse to Clausthal, in aid of the unfortunate sufferers by the calamitous fire which recently broke out in that place, the damage of which has been estimated at 300,000 thalers, and 3000 inhabitants rendered houseless.

The subscription for the Manchester Parks has now reached £21,000.

By recent arrivals from Senegal we learn that M. Ruart, who, accompanied by M. Raffenel, has been exploring the upper territories of Senagambia has fallen a victim to his exertions. He died at Saint Louis, after a few days' confinement, caused by a liver complaint contracted during his travels.

One day last week no fewer than eight thousand persons passed from Leeds and York to Hull, in three excursion trains! Not a single accident of any kind occurred.

Mr. Moylan, the barrister, in the Marylebone Revision Court, on Wednesday, decided in favour of the claim arising from a lodging only; the case adjudicated upon, which in principle decides all the others, was that of Thomas Smith, who claimed, out of a floor he occupies in No. 6, Great Carlisle-street, Lisson-grove.

On Tuesday last the act came into operation, compelling Railway Companies to run a third class train at least once a day, at a penny per mile for each passenger.

On the 19th ult., during a bull fight at Roa, in the province of Valladolid, a scaffolding, on which were about one thousand persons, gave way, and eight persons were killed, and about one hundred wounded.

It is now officially stated that the marriage contract between the Duke d' Aumale and the Princess de Salerno, has been signed. The young bride will receive 200 000 florins a year from the Court of Austria, as a member of the Imperial family, her mother being the sister of the Empress of Austria.

Letters from Rome announce the demise of Cardinal Silvestro Belli, who died at Jesi on the 11th ult. He was born on the 29th of December, 1781, in Anagni, where he pursued his studies, and, after fulfilling various offices for many years, he was raised to the rank of Cardinal by the reigning Pontiff, in the Consistory of the 14th of December, 1840. On the 24th of January, 1842, he was appointed Bishop of Jesi.

The Berlin journals of the 25th ult., give a long account of the public entry on that day of the King and Queen of Prussia. They were escorted to the Palace by the civil and military authorities, and the population as they passed uttered enthusiastic shouts of welcome.

The Paris Academy of Fine Arts awarded, on Sunday, the grand prizes of painting of 1844. The first prize was obtained by M. Félix Barias, of Paris, aged twenty-two; the second by M. Jelos Levepoen, of Angers, aged twenty-five. M. Barias was a conscript, and was obliged to join his regiment, but received leave of absence, in order to become a candidate for the grand prize. As this gives the right of exemption from the army, he will now be free.

The interesting ceremony of baptising a Jewess took place on Friday week, at St. Mary's Church, Cheltenham. The convert was Miss Wolfsberg. She was named Adela Sini Wolfsberg, and the sponsors were the Rev. J. R. and Mrs. Watson, C. T. Cooke, Esq., and Mr. and Mrs. Clifford. After the sacred rite had been performed, an elegant copy of the "Church Service" was presented to her by a lady—a friend of Israel.

POSTSCRIPT.

NOTTINGHAM RACES.

The races of the spirited town of Nottingham commenced on Thursday. Among the company on the stand were the Earl of Chesterfield, Lord Curzon, Sir Juckes Clifton, Sir William Massey Stanley, Captain Devereux, the officers of the 12th Lancers, and a great number of the county gentry. The following is the return of sport up to the time our account left the course:—

A Handicap Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each, p.p., was won by Mr. Whetnall's b g The Bird.

A Plate of £50, given by the noblemen and gentlemen of the county, was won by Mr. J. Gill's ch g Sands.

Match for 50 sovs., 10st each.—Mr. Maunsell's b g Cock Robin beat Mr. Munro's ch g Carbuncle.

Match for 50 sovs, 10st 12lb each.—Mr. T. Walker's br g Impetus beat Mr. J. Taylor's br g Cock Robin.

The Two Year Old Stakes of 20 sovs each, was won by Sir J. Gerard's bl c Pluto, beating Sweetmeat, Romulus, and filly by Hornsea.

The Chesterfield Handicap of 20 sovs each with 100 added by the Earl of Chesterfield, was won by Mr. Robinson's Morpeth, beating Aristotle, Utica, and Advice.

Visit of the King of the French.—It is now definitively known that his Majesty Louis Philippe intends to land at Portsmouth early on Wednesday next, and immediately afterwards to proceed by the South Western Railway to the Farnborough station, and from thence to Windsor Castle. The Earl of Jersey, Master of the Horse, has given directions for six of the royal carriages and four to be in attendance at the station to await his Majesty's arrival, and convey him to Windsor. Prince Albert, attended by most of the great officers of the household, will also be in waiting at the station, to welcome his Majesty on his arrival. The Duke of Wellington leaves town on Tuesday for Portsmouth, to be present to receive his Majesty on his arrival in this country. The Lord Chamberlain, Earl Delawarr, at the request of her Majesty, has issued invitations to the French Ambassador and Countess de St. Aulaire, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Jersey, the Earl of Liverpool, &c., to participate in the regal gaieties at the Castle during the visit of Louis Philippe. According to the cards, the party is to assemble on Wednesday next, and remain till Monday. There is to be a grand banquet in St. George's Hall on the 11th.

Marriage of Prince George of Cambridge.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 28th September states that the report of a matrimonial union between the Grand Duchess Olga and Prince George of Cambridge daily gains more consistence. This is regarded as the result of the journey of the Emperor of Russia to England, and as the commencement of a more intimate alliance between Russia and England.

Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthan and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar arrived in town on Thursday, from the Continent.

Sir Robert Peel has arrived in town from Brighton. The right hon. baronet, shortly after his arrival, gave audience to Count Nesselrode at his private residence in Whitehall-gardens. The count remained closeted for more than an hour with the Premier. Miss Peel, who has entirely recovered from her recent alarming illness, has come to town from Drayton Manor, and is going to Brighton to-day.

The Late Duke of Grafton.—The remains of this lamented nobleman will be interred on Tuesday next, at Euston Hall, Suffolk, the place of sepulture of all the ducal ancestors of his grace. The late Countess of Euston was interred at Grafton, Northamptonshire; but, by the express desire of his grace, the late duke's remains will repose among those of his noble ancestry.

Wreck of the Windsor Castle Steamer.—On Tuesday, the Windsor Castle, an iron steamer, plying between Edinburgh and Dundee, left the latter town at the same hour with her Majesty's yacht, having on board about 250 passengers, the greater part of whom had come from Edinburgh with the steamer that morning, in order to witness the embarkation of the Queen. The vessel proceeded safely to St. Andrew's Bay, and the sea was remarkably calm. Suddenly, however, she struck upon the Can Rock Beacon, a dangerous ledge of rocks, about a mile from shore. Immense confusion ensued. There were many ladies aboard, some of whom behaved with great courage. Happily the whole of the crew and passengers were saved by means of the ship's boat and some fishing vessels. The steamer went to pieces the next morning.

Another Curious Case of Poisoning at Stepney.—On Thursday Mr. W. Baker held an inquest at the Alfred's Head, Stepney, adjourned from Monday last, when the identity of deceased only was proved, relative to the death of Mr. S. Cornish, aged fifty-six, late steward of the Dee, Royal West-India Mail steam-packet. The inquiry taking place in the immediate vicinity of the Belaney catastrophe, and bearing a strong similarity to it, excited unusual interest. In order to give at once a clue to the proceeding, it may be necessary to state that deceased was a man much respected, and had been for many years in the mail-packet service. He died on board the Dee, on the 17th ultimo, after a short illness, and was interred in the Beaumont-square cemetery, Stepney. Rumour of suspicions of the cause of death, and at present involving the conduct of a female, a soi-disant niece, having been circulated, the Coroner ordered the body to be exhumed on Saturday last, and examined by Dr. Letheby, of the London Hospital, the chemist and physician employed in the Belaney case. That gentleman deposed to the fact of detecting arsenic in the intestines. He described that deceased had had general inflammation of the intestinal canal, produced by arsenic, and that general inflammation was the cause of death. It was not the result of dysentery or diarrhœa. The arsenic was not discovered by him in large quantities. Mr. Tatham, a surgeon, belonging to the Dee, stated that he had attended the deceased on the 17th ult. on board that vessel. He was suffering from dysentery, and was in a dangerous state. Witness at a second visit to deceased saw a female about twenty-six years of age with him. She represented herself as a widow, and the niece of the deceased. She said she had come to see her uncle about noon that day; that he had made a will, which she handed to witness, and which he perused. Deceased heard all this conversation. The will had been written and witnessed by two persons belonging to the vessel. Witness told the female he doubted whether the will was legal or not, and suggested the sending for a solicitor. Witness questioned deceased in the woman's presence in the following manner:—"Mr. Cornish, do you wish to make a will?" "I have made one." "Whom do you wish to leave your property to?" "I wish to leave all my property to my niece." "Who is your niece?" Deceased then put his hand on the female's shoulder, and said, "This is my niece, and I wish her to have all my property." Deceased then put his arms around her, drew her towards him, and embraced and kissed her as if she were his wife. A solicitor came, and the will was properly attested. Witness remained a few minutes longer, and did not see deceased again alive. He died the same night. He registered his death as from dysentery.—Susannah Ellis, of 4, Jenkins's-court, said she had known deceased for many years, and that about two years ago he came one morning to her house in a very excited state, requesting her husband to get his effects away from the person in question, who, he said, that morning had given him a cup of coffee in which he detected laudanum. Deceased then came to lodge with witness, and frequently told her that the female had repeatedly given him "that —— stuff (laudanum) to sleep him," which he added he supposed was done to get his money and papers, as he had lent her fifty pounds to go into business. The woman used to call deceased "uncle," but he told witness she was no relative of his. Whilst deceased lodged with witness he used often to visit the female, and return home in a stupified state, saying, in answer to questions, "That woman has been drugging my spirits." The inquiry was adjourned to Monday morning next.

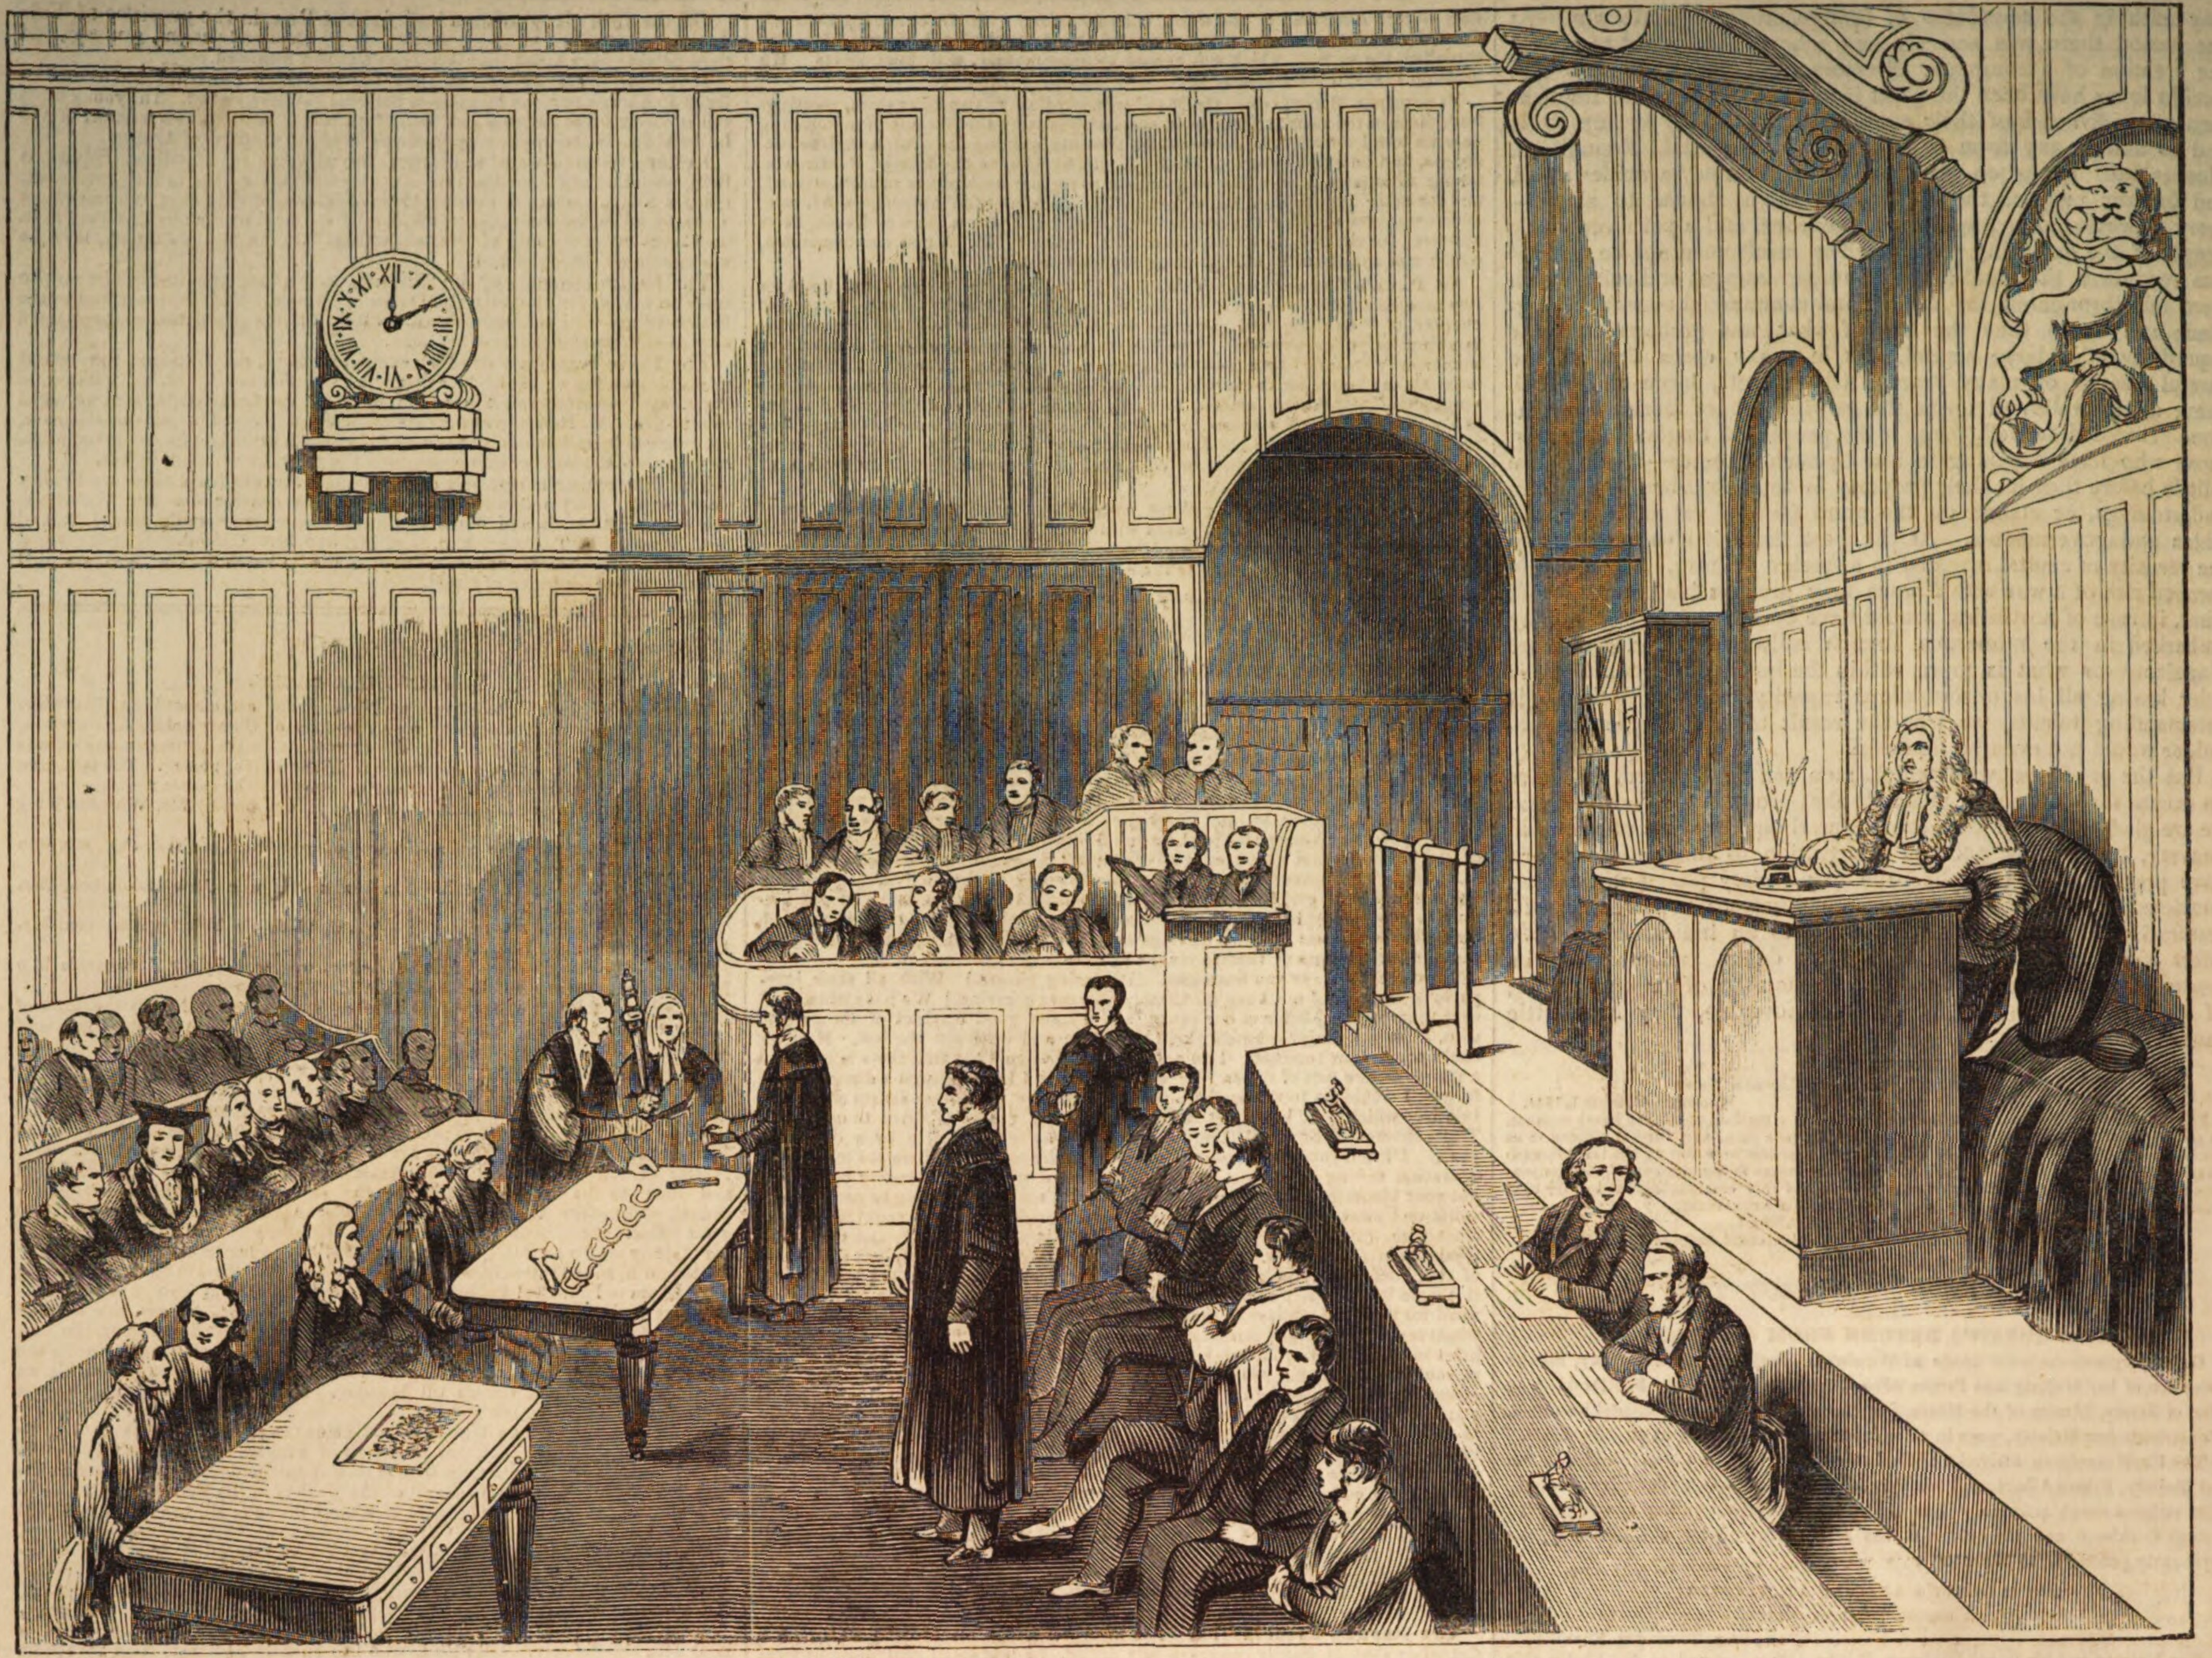
FOREIGN.

The Brussels papers of Tuesday deny the truth of the report that the King of the Belgians is about to revisit England. The British Queen steamer, belonging to the Belgian Government has been sold at Antwerp by public auction, to Mr. Vande Leemput for 170,500 francs, and the expenses for the vessel and its inventory.

The Evacuation of Mogadore.—Official information has been received that the French troops evacuated the island of Mogadore on the 16th ult.; and that on the 17th the French vessels off that port were to sail, with all the troops and stores.

Hong Kong, July 6.—A treaty of commerce has been concluded between the Celestial Empire and the United States, in substance the same as that with England.

Arrival from the United States.—The packet ship, Yorkshire, Capt. Bailey, has arrived at Liverpool with papers from New York to the 16th ult. They do not, however, contain an item of news, as the Hibernia and Great Western sailing, the one on the same day from Boston, and the other on the 14th from New York, leaves only an interval of one day, and that Sunday.



ANCIENT CEREMONY OF CHOPPING STICKS, AND COUNTING HORSE-SHOES AND HOB-NAILS, IN THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER, ON MONDAY LAST.

PRESENTATION OF THE NEW SHERIFFS OF LONDON, AT WESTMINSTER, &c.

On Monday afternoon, this important ceremony took place in the Court of Exchequer, at Westminster, before the Cursitor Baron, Mr. Bankes. The Corporation procession was formed at Guildhall, and having reached Blackfriars-bridge, the civic party, in their state barges, there took water, and arrived shortly before two o'clock at Westminster-bridge, whence they proceeded to the Court of Exchequer. Here they were received by the Cursitor Baron, and, having arranged themselves upon the tiers and benches, the ceremony proceeded. The procession included the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, Aldermen Thomas Wood, John Johnson, Musgrove, Challis; the newly-elected Sheriffs (Mr. Alderman Hunter and Mr. Alderman Sidney), and the late Sheriffs; the newly-elected Chamberlain; the Town-clerk, and other City officers.

The Recorder then presented the new Sheriffs to the court, and complimented them in the usual terms, as well as Mr. Alderman Musgrove, and Mr. Moon, the gentlemen who had just filled the offices of Sheriffs of London and of Middlesex.

The Cursitor Baron said he fully agreed with the learned Recorder, that this was no idle pageant, but that it was a solemn recognition on the part of the Sovereign to the authorities of the first city in the empire of their full rights and privileges, and on behalf of her Majesty that Court fully recognised the rights and privileges which were claimed at their hands. The Cursitor Baron then paid the Sheriffs elect and the late Sheriffs a high compliment for the manner in which they had been chosen by their fellow-citizens. On behalf of her Majesty, he begged again fully to recognise the rights and liberties of the citizens of London, and the Baron desired the officer to record the names of the Sheriffs elect.

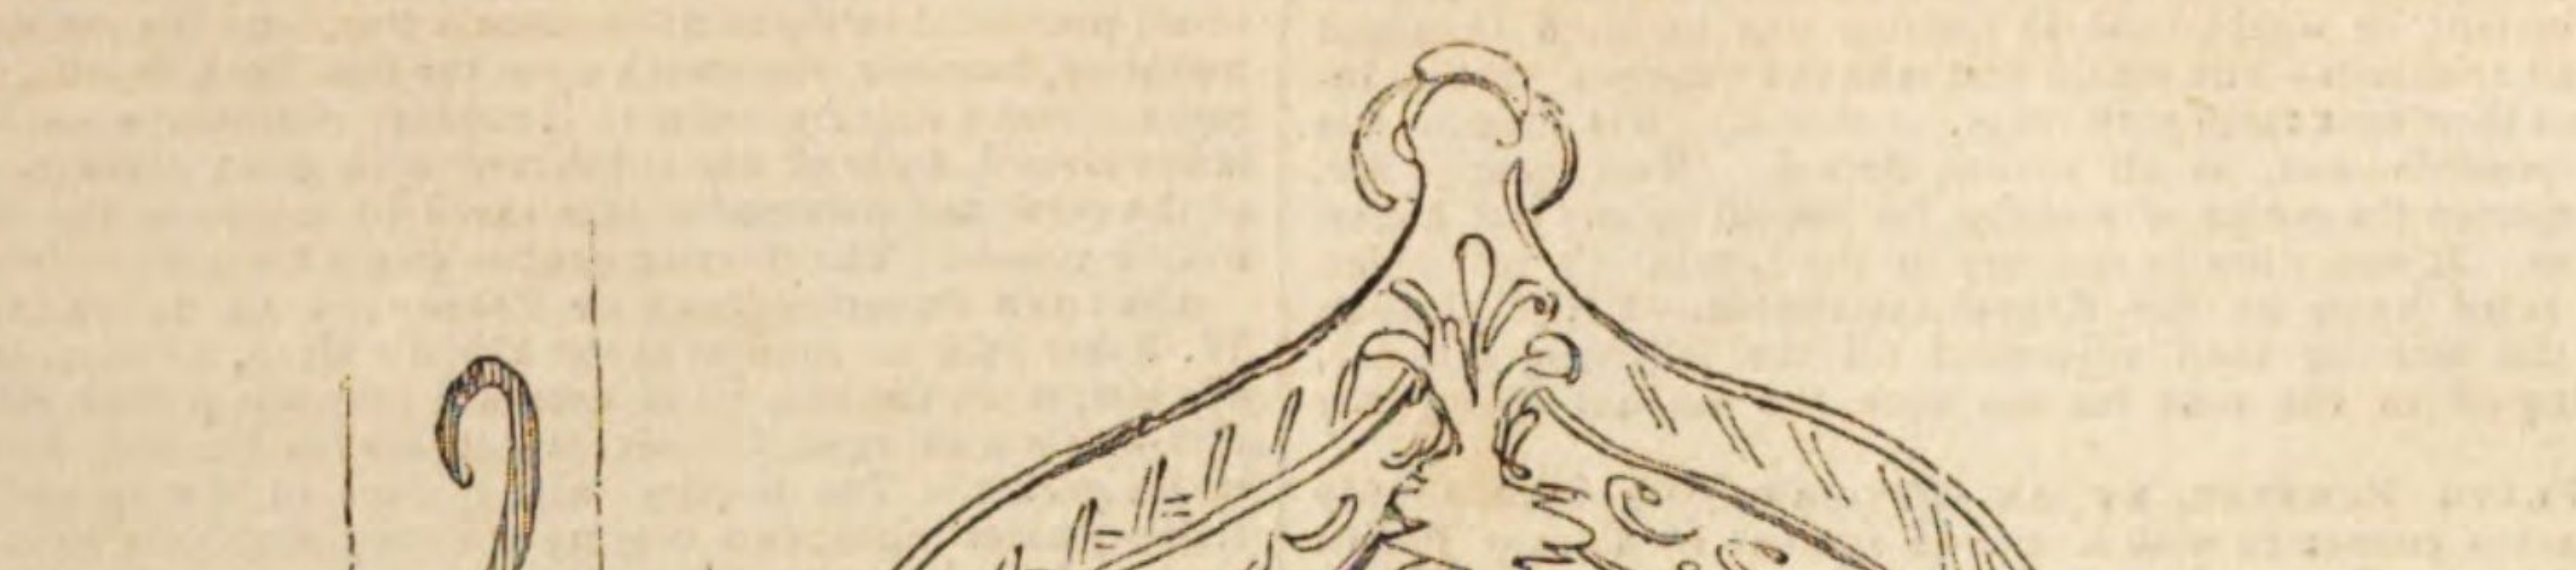
The various writs and appearances were then read by the Recorder and Clerk, and ordered by the Court to be recorded and filed; and the Sheriffs and senior Under-Sheriff took the usual oaths.

The Crier of the Court then stepped forward, and made the proclamation for the one who did homage for the Sheriffs of London, to "stand forth and do his duty;" when the senior Alderman below the chair (Wood) rose, and an officer of the Court handed to him a bill-hook; the officer then took a small bundle of sticks, which he held in both hands, whilst the Alderman struck it and cut it asunder. The bill-hook was then exchanged for a small hatchet, and a similar bundle of sticks cut in like manner. Similar proclamation was then made for the Sheriff of Middlesex; and the Alderman, having first counted certain horse-shoes placed upon a table, and declared their number, a tray was handed to him containing a number of hob-nails, which he also counted; and having been asked twice, and declared the number, the ceremony ended by the Recorder inviting to an entertainment, to be given by the new Sheriffs: the civic procession then returned by water.

This ceremony is, altogether, a very interesting one, characteristic as it is of the tenures of olden times; and it was witnessed on Monday by several spectators. The sticks provided for the occasion are about twice the length of an ordinary black lead pencil, and half the thickness. The bundle consists of about eight or ten sticks, tied together, at each end, with red tape; and so thin are the peeled twigs that a very slight blow suffices for their separation. The Usher of the Court, who presents the sticks, holds them at the time about a foot and a half above the table.

Possibly, many of the spectators on Monday were not aware of the importance of this ceremony; since the annual appearance of the paragraph on chopping sticks and counting horse-shoes and hobnails at Westminster, has raised many a laugh at the expense of the good citizens. The ceremony, however, relates to certain "tenures," and those not "jocular;" and that which vulgar error supposed to be an unmeaning farce, is solemn and impressive; nor have the Sheriffs the least connexion either with chopping of sticks or counting of hobnails. The senior Alderman, in fact, does suit and service for the tenants of a manor in Shropshire, by chopping the sticks in token of its having been customary for the tenants of that manor to supply their lord with fuel. The counting of the horse-shoes and nails is another suit and service of the owners of a forge in the parish of St. Clement, which formerly belonged to the City, and stood in the high road from the Temple to Westminster, but now no longer exists.

On Monday evening, the Sheriffs gave a grand banquet in honour of their inauguration, at the London Tavern. Alderman William Hunter, the senior Sheriff, presided, supported by his colleague, Mr. Alderman Sidney, the Lord Mayor, the Lord Mayor Elect (Alderman Gibbs), the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman of the East India Company, Lord J. Russell and W. Masterman, Esq., Members of Parliament for the city of London, several of the aldermen, including Alderman Salomons, besides the Recorder, and Chamberlain.

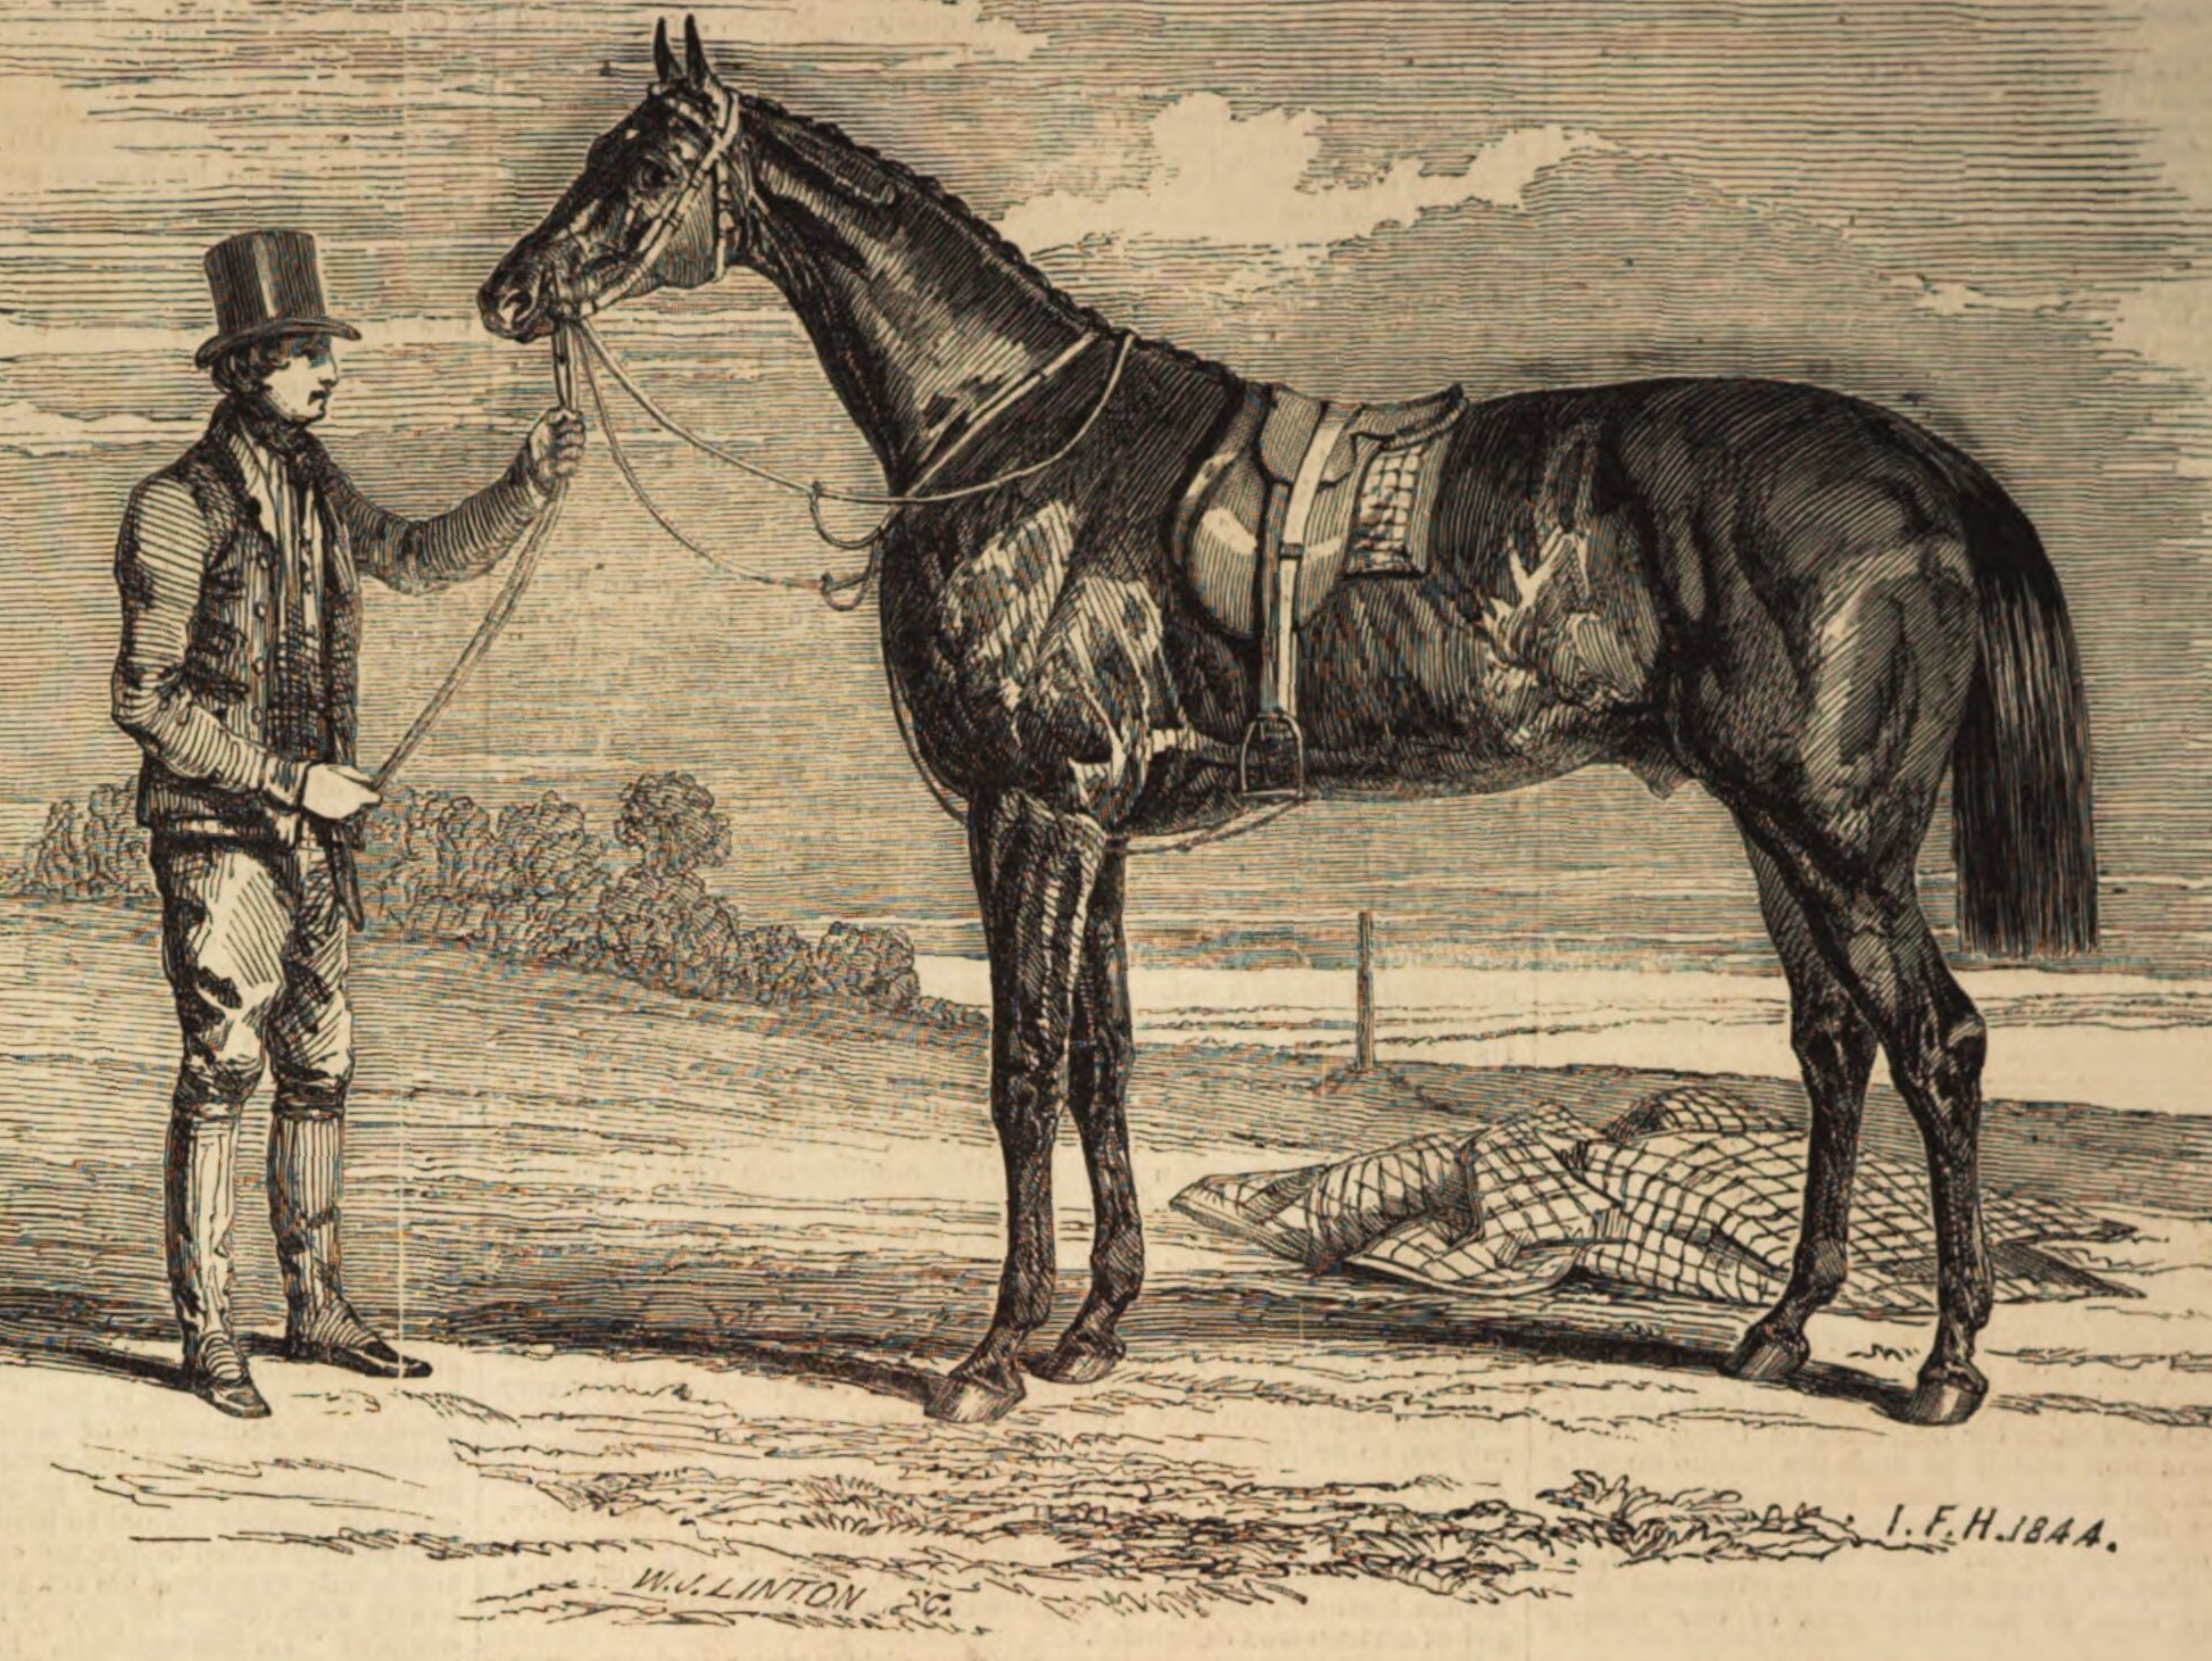


MADLLE. DUMILATRE, IN THE NEW BALLET OF "THE CORSAIR," AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

MADLLE. DUMILATRE, IN THE NEW BALLET OF "THE CORSAIR."

The production of this ballet, founded upon Lord Byron's poem of the same name, will be found noticed elsewhere, in the present sheet. The accompanying illustration represents the Cabinet of Seide, the opening scene of Act III., where the Turkish Pasha throws himself upon a couch, and Gulnare approaches him; confiding in the influence of her charms to obtain the pardon of her liberator, Conrad. He turns suddenly towards her, and is about to repulse her, but cannot resist her caresses. While at his feet, playing with the royal signet, she unperceivedly draws off the ring, and places it upon her own finger, as her eyes, meeting those of the Pasha, by their fascination, render him unconscious of her design. The Pasha's thought of vengeance, however, returns, but Gulnare implores mitigation of the fate of his victim, and, jealous and suspicious, Seide repels her endearments, and, with a resentful look, quits the apartment. But the signet ring, which the spell-bound Pasha has left in her hand, will open the doors of Conrad's dungeon:—

Never on a sleeper's dream
Did a brighter vision beam
Than the fairy form that flies
Before th' enchanted Corsair's eyes!
'Tis Music's motion—Poetry.
Ne'er combin'd the Graces Three
In one sweet form so well before—
We look—we listen and adore
Its silent magic; e'en dispute
If mortal sounds should not be mute
And leave it to itself the while
It fills all senses with its smile!



I. F. H. 1844.
W. J. LINTON SC.

"FOIGH-A-BALLAGH," THE WINNER OF THE GREAT ST. LEGER AND GRAND DUKE MICHAEL STAKES. DRAWN BY HERRING.

THE WINNER OF THE GREAT ST. LEGER.

Since our announcement of this characteristic portrait of Foigh-a-Ballagh, "the Champion of Ireland," and winner of the great St. Leger, at Doncaster, on the 17th ult., he has added to his reputation by winning the Grand Duke Michael Stakes, at Newmarket, on Tuesday last.

Foigh-a-Ballagh is the property of Mr. Irwin, who, in July 1842, purchased him of Mr. G. Knox, of Brownstown House, Kildare, by whom he was bred. He is a brown horse of fine temper, and good courage; when in action he goes rather wide behind. He stands fifteen hands three and a half inches high; he has a good head, well set on to a light neck; his shoulders lie well back; his back is straight, with arched loins and long quarters, the tail high set on; deep in the brisket; capital ribs, fore and hind; good arms, thighs, and hocks; full in the gaskins, smallish flat legs, and good open feet. His near hock is a good deal blemished from the dressing for a curb. With the exception of his fore legs, he is a horse of much power, and is very blood-looking.

The late William Arnull has been frequently heard to say, that winning or losing a race by half the length of his walking stick, made all the difference between a good and a bad jockey,—the one who lost, could'nt ride a bit, whilst the winner generally rode most beautifully. This remark is certainly applicable to the two last St. Legers.

When Marson won a very fine race on Nutwith, beating Frank Butler on Cotherstone (who, to speak impartially, must be classed amongst the best horsemen of his day), it was remarked that had William Scott been on Cotherstone, he could have won ten or twenty lengths. Marson was then spoken of as likely to be the best horseman in the north. He now has the misfortune to be put on one of the rankest curs that has shown for some time; and the present cry of the multitude is—had Templeman been on him, he could not have lost. What will the diappointed party say now? Templeman did ride the Cure, at Richmond, and got beaten in a similar way, but by an inferior horse to Foigh-a-Ballagh, it being, while running, 100 to 1 on him. Surely this is a satisfactory proof that Marson was not fairly used in the observations made on his riding for the Doncster St. Leger.

By the way, the Great St. Leger Dinner at Leeds, on Wednesday week, went off with great spirit. Nearly 100 enthusiastic sporting gentlemen sat down to a splendid entertainment at the Leeds Arms Inn, West-street, which was served up in admirable style by Mr. and Mrs. Denton. After the cloth was withdrawn some excellent songs and toasts were given.

PETERBOROUGH BRIDGE FAIR.

This is a scene of genuine old English interest, associated with the manners and customs of many centuries since. Fairs, are, indeed, but greater kinds of markets, granted before flourishing towns were established, and the necessaries of life, from the convenience of communication and the increase of provincial civility, could be procured in various places: to these, as to one universal mart, the people resorted periodically for goods and commodities of every kind, and supplied most of their wants for the ensuing year. The display of merchandise, and the conflux of customers, at these principal and almost only emporia of domestic commerce, were prodigious; and they were, therefore, often held in open and extensive plains.

PETERBOROUGH BRIDGE FAIR.

Peterborough has two yearly fairs: one of these, called "Brigge Fair," or "Bridge Fair," is kept over the bridge, on the Huntingdon side of the river Nene, on October 2, and following day. Our engraving represents the very animated scene, sketched from Mr. Lawrence's tower.

The fair is for horses and farming stock of all kinds; this portion occupying the foreground of the view; and the upper ground, on the other side of the road to Northampton, being appropriated to the pleasure fair, extending to the line of the river frontage, commencing at the bridge of entrance, which is built on wooden piles presented obliquely to the water. Here is a vast assemblage of booths, shows, and countless amusements for children of all growth, recalling Gay's pleasant lines:—

How pedlars' stalls with glitt'ring toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid,
Long silken laces hang upon the twine,
And rows of pins and amber bracelets shine.
Here the tight lass, knives, combs and scissors spies,
And looks on thimbles with desiring eyes.
The mountebank now treads the stage, and sells
His pills, his balsams, and his ague spells;
Now o'er and o'er the nimble tumbler springs,
And on the rope the vent'rous maiden swings;
Jack-pudding, in his parti-coloured jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at every packet;
Here raree shows are seen, and Punch's feats,
And pockets pick'd in crowds, and various cheats.

The meadow immediately beneath the town, on the Northamptonshire side of the river, is occupied by "the wood fair."

High above the motley scene, and cresting the city, is seen the massive cathedral of enriched Norman, or early English architecture. The sight of the vast pile carries us back to the origin of the fair, for the city itself possesses little historical interest, independent of the abbey or cathedral. This was originally a portion of the monastery, founded by Peada, son of Penda, King of Mercia, rebuilt about the year 970, for monks of the Benedictine order; and it continued to flourish till the dissolution by Henry VIII. Now, the bishops and monks of former times derived great profit from fairs: officers were placed at bridges and other avenues of access to fairs, to exact toll on all merchandise passing that way. Thus, the Conqueror instituted and gave, as a kind of revenue, St. Giles's Hill Fair to the Bishop of Winchester, with many and extraordinary privileges for enriching the see. Numerous foreign merchants frequented this fair; and several streets were formed in it, assigned to the sale of different commodities. The surrounding monasteries had shops or houses in the streets, used only at the fair; which they held under the bishop, and often let, by lease, for a term of years.

Hence, the fairs of Peterborough may formerly have contributed to the splendour of the abbey; for, at the dissolution, it was one of the most magnificent in the kingdom. Times are strangely changed, and manners changed with the times; but, despite the increased accommodation of the city, the fairs are annually held. The site of that, which we here illustrate, will, however, soon be traversed by a railway; but, we trust, the old English festival will lose none of its attractions by being held in another place.

THE THEATRICAL SEASON.

The opening of all the winter theatres, with the exception of the Princess's and unfortunate Covent Garden, during the past week, calls for a few remarks upon their prospects during the ensuing campaign: for, seldom has a season commenced with such energy in all quarters. We see, by the announcements, that opera and ballet will be the staple fare at Drury-lane: and the drama will be altogether excluded from its walls. This we regret; but, at the same time, cannot find fault with Mr. Bunn for the arrangement, provided he carries out the plans he has formed, in a manner, at least, deserving of success. He has entered upon the lesseeship of Drury-lane as a mere commercial speculation, and if he finds the public flock in greater numbers to music and spectacle than to the legitimate drama, he acts wisely in studying their taste; although we are willing to admit that it is not one of a high order. And indeed, after all, we question whether a fine play, or great actor, can be witnessed anywhere to less advantage than in the wide area of our leading "national" theatre.

The Haymarket is in every respect better suited to the representation of the drama: and there is not the slightest doubt that by following the same plans so successfully carried out last season, Mr. Webster will have equal reason to be satisfied with his arrangements, and the general working of his excellent company at the termination of the present one. His corps has, however, suffered a great loss in the secession of Mrs. Nisbett from public life: and it will be long before that lady's place is filled—a circumstance which we know materially affects the perfect representation of a new comedy now in the theatre.

The Lyceum at present promises nothing, which we may take as a sign that there is no necessity for change. But the management must not remain idle; it has now far more to contend against than it has had at any time since it so singularly turned the fortunes of the hitherto ill-fated English Opera-house into a run of continuous success; and if Mrs. Keeley would keep up the good name which her theatre has acquired, it is quite time that some novelties should be at least underlined in the bills, which have now remained nine weeks unaltered.

The Adelphi, up to the present, has produced no very remarkable effect, the opening piece having been quietly withdrawn after two nights; but with the powerful company collected under the direction of Madame Celeste, much ought to be done, and is expected. The public have been accustomed to regard the Adelphi as the peculiar house for startling novelty and effects not to be witnessed elsewhere; and this has so long been the prevalent notion, that it would be dangerous, if not fatal, to alter it. The Adelphi audience is the most peculiar one in London, and great tact is required to study its taste; the secret of which no one understood better than poor Yates.

The Princess's opens this evening with an entire change in its company, both in the operatic and dramatic department. The house is avowedly a favourite one with the public, and a good property; but the lessee will find it to his interest to go to a somewhat greater outlay than he has hitherto done, more especially with regard to his authors. Literary men can always accommodate their productions to the price they receive for them; and spangles and the paint brush will produce little in the long run, if they are looked upon otherwise than as mere accessories in working out the author's intentions.

The little Strand Theatre seems determined not to go to the wall in the general concurrence. Its manager deserves well of the public, both from his enterprise, and the honourable manner in which he provided a home for his brother and sister performers when all appeared hopeless.

Sadler's Wells has been going on prosperously with Shakspeare, and a fresh abode is about to be offered to the legitimate drama at the City of London theatre, which opens on Monday under the direction of Mrs. Walter Lacy. We conclude by wishing every success to all.

DRURY-LANE.

The season of this magnificent establishment commenced on Monday evening, with a house crowded to the very ceiling. "The Bohemian Girl," performed on this occasion for the eighty-first time, was the first piece, and calls for little remark beyond the circumstance of the old favourites being cordially greeted as they appeared, and the popular airs of Miss Rainforth and Harrison being as warmly encored as ever. The new ballet of "The Corsair" was, however, the great attraction—founded on Byron's poem of the same name. It was produced in a slightly different form, some six or seven years back, at the Italian Opera, but did not at that time achieve any extraordinary success. A musical drama on the same subject, by Mr. Frank Romer, termed "The Pacha's Bridal," was also brought out, about the same time, at the Lyceum. The ballet, which is in three acts, served to introduce Mdlle. Adèle Dumilâtre to the Drury-lane audience, in the character of Gulnare. This charming danseuse first appeared in England at the Italian Opera, in 1843, on the evening that Perrot met with his accident in the ballet "L'Aurore." She belongs to the ideal school; and her countenance is beautifully expressive of every emotion wished to be depicted. Her figure is somewhat attenuated—very far, however, from being unpleasantly so—and there is a combined grace and lightness in every movement which we have rarely seen equalled. She was supported by MM. Montessu and Desplaces, with Clara Webster, and a débutante, Mdlle. Delbés, who created a strong impression in her favour amongst the audience by her excellent dancing, more particularly in a new and effective Polka. The ballet itself, although splendidly got up, was a dull affair; and those portions of it not enlivened by the pas of the chief dancers were very heavy. The best "effects" were a vision scene, in which the body of Medora is seen on its bier, surrounded by girls strewing flowers (which, by the way, was somewhat equivocally received): and a brilliant tableaux at the conclusion, representing the attack on the palace by the pirates, and its conflagration; in the midst of which Conrad is seen on a burning rafter, supporting Gulnare. The remaining incidents were not of a very interesting character; and there was a great deal of unmeaning bustle throughout the acts. The applause was, however, general at the conclusion; and the call for Mdlle. Dumilâtre unanimous.

On Tuesday evening, Miss Delcy—a young lady who came out on these boards three or four years ago, and has since been pursuing her musical studies in Italy—re-appeared in the part of Cinderella, and, we regret to add, with but undecided success. She has yet much to learn and overcome, before she can aspire to the position of prima donna. In spite of the cheers from the audience, invariably indulgent to a débutante, the inefficiency of her voice, in several portions of the music, was too plainly apparent; and this was more particularly observable in the concluding "Non piu mesta." Miss Delcy was, however, called before the curtain, to acknowledge the applause of the house. The Prince was performed by Mr. D. King, a gentleman who has been singing during the "opera season" at the Surrey; and he evidently made an agreeable impression on the audience by his voice, which is a low tenor of good quality. Mr. S. Jones played the Baron with care, although the part was evidently above his capabilities; and Mr. Stretton was somewhat ponderous, both in his acting and singing, as Dandini; in fact, nothing in the opera was enthusiastically received, except a very pretty pas de caractere, by Miss Clara Webster and Madame Giubelli, in the ball-room scene—(a dull assembly, by the way,)—which was rapturously encored.

After the opera, a resuscitation, called the "serious pantomime" of "Obi, or Three Fingered Jack," took place, which fully bore out its claim to be looked upon as a very serious affair indeed. At first, the audience were lost in deep thought as to the intent of what they saw being enacted; then, they began to hiss; and lastly, got funny, which is the most dangerous state an audience can arrive at. Upon the fall of the curtain, the disapprobation was pretty generally expressed, so as to leave no doubt but that the exhumed pantomime would again retire to a very long home indeed.

HAYMARKET.

This agreeable theatre commenced its winter campaign on Monday, with Mrs. Centlivre's comedy of the "Busy Body," revived towards the end of the past season; the comic drama of "Used Up," and Mr. J. M. Morton's farce of "The Milliner's Holiday." It will be seen that there was here no novelty, but the house was, nevertheless, well filled. The favourites of the company were received with hearty applause; and the manner in which the pieces were played, proved that this excellent company has lost none of its spirit or power of co-operating towards one perfect end, during the recess.

On Wednesday evening the first novelty was produced, in a corrected revival of Sir J. Vanbrugh's comedy of "The Confederacy." This work has for many years been considered an unactable drama, chiefly on account of the indecency of its language, and the imperfect construction of its fifth act. It has, however, been carefully revised in passing through the hands of its present adapter, Mr. Bourcicault. Its impurities of dialogue have been expunged or so enveloped as to avoid intrusion on delicacy. In a former adaptation, the two city wives were transformed into wards, which was considered to injure the integrity of the plot: in the present adaptation, Vanbrugh's original forms have been retained—the modification chiefly existing in the method of expression; and the two money-lenders are kept on the scene until the end of the play, which is reconstructed to suit our modern feelings for stage effect. It was throughout admirably performed. Mrs. Glover's Mrs. Amlet was th most delicious piece of acting we have for some time witnessed; and Madame Vestris's Flippanta perfect. Farren and Strickland as the two usurers, Gripe and Moneytrap, also played excellently, and contrived, by their very superior acting, to throw a palpable contrast between the two characters, so nearly assimilated. Hall scarcely realized our notion of Dick; there was too much of the light comedy in his acting of the unmitigated scamp; but Charles Mathews, as his wily accomplice, was most effective. The other principal characters, the two wives, and Corinna, were cleverly sustained by Miss P. Horton, Mrs Edwin Yarnold, and Miss Julia Bennet, whose hoydenish, laughing girl of sixteen was delightful.

The comedy was received throughout with extreme applause, especially the scenes between Flippanta and Corinna, and Moneytrap's false restitution; and at the fall of the curtain the performance was announced for repetition, amidst loud and continued cheering. It may be considered a great success.

On Thursday evening a new farce was produced from the pen of Mr. Buckstone, termed "The Thimble Rig." Why it was so called we are at a loss to determine, for, with the exception of a very slight allusion to the exploded game, there was nothing particularly pertaining to it. A farce, containing a breakfast scene, might as well have been christened "The French Roll." The fun chiefly turned on the desperate efforts of Ginger (Mr. Buckstone) to keep the knowledge of a certain debt with which he is encumbered, from his wife (Mrs. W. Clifford), through the bottle companionship of a man put in possession of his house (Mr. Strickland). It was a mere stretch; but Mr. Buckstone's peculiarities of intonation sufficed to keep the audience on the grin; although, to our thinking, these peculiarities are carried too far. Strickland played the sheriff's man with characteristic drollery; and Mrs. Clifford looked unutterable things at Buckstone, as only Mrs. Clifford can look. The piece was announced for repetition amidst moderate applause.

LYCEUM.

In consequence of the secession of Misses Woolgar and Ellen Chaplin from this theatre to join the Adelphi corps, two new members of this company were introduced to the audience on Saturday—Miss Walcott (from the Theatre Royal, Manchester) and Miss Arden. The former lady appeared in a farce called "Out-generalled," which we had known in former days under the name of "Personation." She will, if we mistake not, prove a great acquisition to the theatre. Her figure and deportment are very elegant, her features highly attractive, and her voice pleasing and well-modulated. She assumed the part of an old housekeeper with great effect, and at the end of the piece was loudly called for, and literally pelted with bouquets. Miss Arden we recollect two years ago at the Olympic as a very pleasing singer and actress. Since then she has greatly improved in her style, and gives promise of becoming yet more finished. Another change also took place in the part of Princess Badroulbadour, in "Aladdin," hitherto performed by Miss Woolgar, but now represented by Miss Farebrother, who looked it admirably, and gave the lines allotted to her with great point and accuracy. The house has continued to be excellently attended, and Keeley's Sairey Gamp and his clever little wife's Aladdin continue to draw down shouts of laughter and applause.

ADELPHI.

The Adelphi has so long been one of the most popular of our winter theatres, that we were not surprised to see it filled with such a large audience as crowded within its walls on Saturday evening. There was also an additional curiosity to behold the improvements which had taken place in the interior of the house during the recess, as well as the débûts of several performers new to the theatre, and the re-appearance of one or two old members of the bygone celebrated "Adelphi Company" once more collected together; added to which, the circumstance of an entirely new management, and that a lady one, gave a fresh interest to the commencement of the season.

With respect to the improvements in the auditory, much good has been effected. The private boxes have all been altered, so as to command a perfect view of the stage from every part of the interior, as well as from the extremities of the dress circle—the line of view being taken from the portion of the stage technically known as the "grave trap" (from being used generally for the grave scene in "Hamlet"), instead of from the lamps. The slips have also been enlarged, and the front row of pit seats thrown considerably back from the rail of the orchestra; but the same inconvenience of the people standing in the passage between the two sets of boxes still continues, and this we believe is irremediable. The new curtain, painted by Mr. C. Marshall, struck us as rather too elaborate in its treatment to be effective. The drop-scene was much prettier, being a circular view of a castle combining various styles of architecture, with a cavalier saluting his "ladye-love" from the terrace, and a ruined bridge, &c.

The opening address—a very lively one, running over with the same kind of fun that sparkles in "Punch;" as well it might do being from the pen of Mr. Gilbert A'Beckett—was delivered by Mrs. Yates, who met with a long and enthusiastic reception. The curtain then rose for "God save the Queen," by the entire of the company, Mr. Webster, the lessee, occupying the centre of the group with Madame Celeste; and then, after an overture, the new piece of "Mother and Son" commenced. To call it new is, however, scarcely correct, since another version, differing slightly from the original French drama, "L'Eclat de Rire," was produced two seasons back under the name of "The Merchant and his Clerks." As the piece has been since withdrawn, it is scarcely worth while to relate the plot. The gem was O. Smith's Sweeny—a rakish billiard-playing clerk. There was the artist in every tone and gesture: and his devil-may-care idea of his own scampish recklessness was perfect. It was in every respect equal to his personation of Newman Noggs.

"The Belle of the Hotel" followed, in which Mrs. Fitzwilliam played with her usual vivacity and singular versatility. Then came the burlesque of "Norma," supported by the old favourites, Paul Bedford, Wright, and pretty Miss Woolgar; and the evening's programme concluded with the farce of "How to pay the Rent," which allowed Mr. Hudson the opportunity of appearing to great advantage in one of poor Power's characters. The orchestra was led by Mr. Mellon, from the Theatre Royal, Birmingham.

On Wednesday evening, after the revived drama, by Mr. Bernard, of "St. Mary's Eve," a very pleasant comic operetta was produced, under the name of "The Fox and the Goose"—a translation, if we mistake not, of a French vaudeville, "Le Panier Fleuri." The plot is this:—Angelique (Mrs Fitzwilliam) is the coquettish landlady of a cabaret, "The Fox and the Goose"—upon the Boulevards, if we are to judge from the view of the Chateau d'Eu in the background. She passes for a widow; and, amongst many others, has two great admirers, Robichon, a commissary of police (Mr. Paul Bedford); and Michel, an antiquated beau (Mr. S. Cowell); with both of whom it is to her interest to keep upon good terms, in order to obtain certain extensions of the hour for closing the tavern. In the interim of their visits, her husband, O'Donoughue (Mr. Hudson), a French-Hibernian Hussar, returns home, whence he had departed in a fit of jealousy, which had driven away all the old customers. Tired, however, of fighting, he wishes to raise £50 to procure a substitute, and this he ultimately accomplishes, by setting his wife's admirers to fight, and then getting a handsome bribe from each to kill the other. In a short time Michel, thinking his rival is disposed of, returns to sup with Angelique, but is alarmed by the signal of Robichon, who is labouring under the same delusion. Michel is accordingly shut up in a closet, but Robichon has scarcely taken his seat at the table when the husband comes back, upon which the commissary is also hidden in another lurking-place. A very ludicrous situation then takes place! somewhat similar, however, to one in "My Neighbour's Wife," which ends in a reconciliation of all parties, Angelique contriving, by her tact, to make her lovers pay pretty dearly for their pretensions. All the performers acquitted themselves admirably, especially Mr. S. Cowell, who has joined the company of this house from the Surrey. His personification of the old beau was excellent, and full of a quaint pleasant humour. The piece was interspersed by some music composed by M. Ambroise Thomas, and arranged by Mr. Reed, of the Haymarket Theatre. This was the least effective part of the piece, being a weak imitation of Adolphe Adam; but the audience applauded, and so we presume the end was answered, as the operatta was announced by Mr. Paul Bedford for repetition every evening, until further notice, amidst unmixed approbation.

STRAND.

Despite the powerful attractions set forth by its more important neighbours, this excellently-conducted little theatre came gallantly up to the mark on Monday evening, with two new pieces, performed after the still-attractive "Martin Chuzzlewit," which is, by the way, an excellent adaptation of the novel. The first of these—a transatlantic sketch, called "The Vermont Wool-dealer," served to introduce Mr. Marble, an American comedian, for the first time to a British audience, and with most undeniable success. Mr. Marble is not one of those ebony-faced, banjo-playing, carpet-trowsered niggers, with whom we have been lately brought into such frequent contact—but of the Sam Slick genus, or rather in the style of Mr. Hill, who played here a few years back in the "Yankee Pedlar," to whom he is fully equal in his delineation of American character. Roars of laughter followed every speech and remark he made, especially that respecting an old horse, which was "so broken up and weak, he was obliged to send for another animal to help him draw his last breath." He was vehemently called before the curtain at the conclusion of the sketch, and briefly expressed his acknowledgments to the audience for their hearty welcome. The second novelty was a burlesque upon Bellini's opera of "La Sonnambula," here converted into "La Slumbernambula," and allowing Mr. H. Hall to appear as the fair Ameaner. Its only fault was that it was rather long—the music being too elaborately carried out for a mere extravaganza. A sly allusion to the length of time taken to make up certain accounts produced a hearty burst of applause.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Macready, according to the last accounts from him, had decided to sail from New York, on his route to England, on the 1st of October. He was playing his principal characters in the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia. It is calculated that Mr. Macready has cleared about fifty or sixty thousand dollars in America.

English Theatricals in Paris.—Mr. Mitchell has formed an English company, who will appear at the Italian Opera, Paris, upon the termination of Louis Philippe's visit to her Majesty. The troop comprises Miss Helen Faucit, Mr. Macready, and Mr. Bartley. It is also reported that Rachel is studying the character of Lady Macbeth, so as to play it in English.

The Licenser of Plays under the Chamberlain, Mr. J. M. Kemble, has suspended the production of a translation, by Mr. Stirling, of "Les Sept Chateaux du Diable," in preparation at the Lyceum. As nearly all the other houses were at work upon a similar piece, and as they will probably meet with the same judgment, this intelligence has caused much uneasiness amongst the members of the Dramatic Authors' Society.

Vauxhall Gardens.—These gardens have been exceedingly well attended during the week. The short season is to close on Wednesday with a masquerade, and this will be the last opportunity for attending this once splendid place of resort, as the gardens are to be built upon.

LINES WRITTEN ON THE OCCASION OF HER MAJESTY'S RETURN FROM SCOTLAND.

Welcome, fair mistress of our loyal loves,
Welcome once more to Windsor's lordly groves;
With health refreshen'd by the mountain breath,
Inhal'd each morning from the purple heath.*
No lazy luxury of palace halls,
Was thine amidst the lonely waterfalls;
High on the dewy hills, or deep below,
In woody glens, where gentler waters flow,
Wert thou at dawning of the day's sweet prime,
List'ning the heath-cock's crow—the lark's first chime,
Marking the red deer bounding o'er the hill—
But ne'er forgetting as the Sovereign still,
To watch the interests of the State, and see
Thy absence hurt not its propriety!†
This is the way to keep thy people's love,
About their hills and valleys free to rove;
Not to immure thy pomp in haughty gloom,
As some have done, whose pride is in the tomb!

A Delicate Present.—Prince Joinville, on the conclusion of the Morocco treaty, presented to the Moorish general a very elegant pair of pistols, as a souvenir! This is very like soundly thrashing a man, and then giving him the stick.—Punch.

"Wanted a Governess."—Oh, these governesses! I am told there is some clever gentleman who has invented an arithmetical machine that will calculate any sum to a fraction. What a blessing would that man bestow upon really good society who should invent an instrument for teaching! I am sure, in these days, the thing might be done, and would pay admirably; for how much annoyance would be spared us—how much impertinence that we are daily exposed to from a class of individuals who can have no standing in society, and are, nevertheless, continually at one's elbow! The cook, the housemaid, the lady's-maid, all know their place, and behave themselves accordingly; but there is no teaching a governess that she is nothing more than a servant; a person hired for wages to polish the minds of your children just in the same manner as Molly polishes your rosewood and mahogany—and to be as careful of their morals as if, like the housekeeper, she was entrusted with so much precious china. Your maid dresses your hair with due humility, and takes your little bits of ill-temper with proper resignation; she knows these things are considered in her wages, and thus she may be an ornament to the sphere to which it has pleased Heaven to call her. But governesses! they are continually flying in the face of Providence! There is, too, an impertinence in their very meekness; at times, an insult in their silence. They move about you with the air of injured beings—an air that says to your very face—"We, too, are ladies, though you can't believe it." Ladies! as if the person who takes a salary is not, to all intents and purposes, a servant—at best, a better sort of menial servant.—Punch's Complete Letter-writer.

---

* Her Majesty had a bouquet of fresh-pulled heather placed in her bed room every morning at seven o'clock, together with a bottle of pure water from a spring in Glen Tilt, famed for its crystal purity.

† Her Majesty did not allow her romantic pleasures to interfere with her habits of business. She wrote almost every day to the Duchess of Kent and the Dowager Countess of Lyttelton, and was extremely punctual in attending to and signing such papers as were laid before her.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

OCTOBER.

This is the time for mute soliloquy,—
Heart-contemplation in a lonely wood,
Whose paths by many a fallen leaf bestrew'd
Lead you away, as to Eternity,
From all the noise and trouble of this life,
Soothing the soul with dreams of future bliss
Although where'er you turn each scene is rife
With Nature's quick decay!—But still from this,
We can imbibe by sympathy refin'd
A resignation to our own defeat,
By that arch-enemy, old Time, and find
A thrilling pleasure—a reflection sweet
That when his scythe is done—Himself at rest.—
Immortals we may be amongst the blest!

THE PARASOL OF THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO.

The parasol captured by Marshal Bugeaud from the son of the Emperor of Morocco, has arrived in Paris, and has been placed in the care of the Minister of War. It is of an amaranthine or purple colour, not exceeding in circumference an ordinary full-sized umbrella. It is covered with embroidery in silver, and edged with silver fringe and tassels. It is surmounted by a silver knob, similar to those on the canes of drum-majors. The stick is of hard wood, plated with silver, and the entire height is little, if anything, more than five feet. It is believed to be of Spanish manufacture.

A DISCOVERY ABOUT WILLIAM TELL.

A letter from Friburg speaks of a literary discovery connected with William Tell. The existence of this personage, which has hitherto appeared somewhat doubtful, has from this discovery become an historical fact. A copy of Latin verses, written immediately after the battle of Morgarten, has just been found, in which his name is mentioned in precise terms. It is there stated that Tell was one of the three warriors who took the oath of Gruthli in the commencement of the fourteenth century. His name replaces that of Walter Furst, erroneously mentioned by the chroniclers of the time. As to the famous story of the apple and the arrow, nothing is said of it in the poem.

ON THE NEW HALF-FARTHINGS.

Too small for any marketable shift,
  What purpose can there be for coins like these?
Hush, hush, good sir! thus charitable thrift
  May give a mite to him who wants a cheese.—Hood's Magazine.

IRON BRIDGE FOR THE NEVA.

Messrs. Bury, Curtes, and Kennedy, engineers of Liverpool, are constructing an iron bridge, by order of the Emperor of Russia, which is to cross the Neva, at St. Petersburgh. The extreme length of the bridge, will be no less than 1078 feet. The weight of iron alone will be nearly 8000 tons! independent of the lamps and superb balustrades with which it is the Emperor's intention to adorn it, and which together will probably weigh from 1000 to 2000 tons more. The weight of iron will thus exceed by nearly five-fold that consumed in the erection of the Menai Bridge. The cost of the iron alone will be upwards of £100,000.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

And must ye fade,
Ye Autumn leaves, so idly gay?
  From rifled glade
And forest, must ye steal away,
To wither in unseen decay?

  Sadly doth sigh
The very breeze, with murmur deep,
  That ye should die;
While gently, with reluctant sweep,
It wafts ye to your wintry sleep.

  In Spring's bright hours,
How hale and joyous have ye been;
  What time fair bowers
And solitary groves were seen,
Robed in your vest of glossy green!

  And ye appear
Those blithesome hours to recall
  To Fancy's ear;
Frail leaves, ye are not voiceless all
As meekly to the earth ye fall;

  Go, mortal, muse
On those sad emblems of decay
  Which Nature strews
Around—like withered hopes that aye
Shall fall upon Life's onward way.

  Gaze on yon sere
And mouldering leaves before thee lying;
  And ponder there,
How swiftly from thee time is flying,
How earth-born joys are ever dying!

T. Bodley.

ANECDOTE OF "THE DUKE."

We have heard that on a recent visit of a section of the Archæological Association to Dover, the Duke of Wellington, as constable of Dover Castle, refused to allow the learned members admission to that ancient and interesting fortress, to make sketches or memoranda. The duke has no sympathy with antiquarian or historical pursuits; witness his reply on being remonstrated with on the dangerous position of the National Records placed over the ammunition in the Tower; "He would take care that the gunpowder received no injury!"—Kent Herald.

ANOTHER "ILLUSTRIOUS STRANGER."

A somewhat interesting native of India, "Mohem Lal," arrived in London by the last overland mail. He is the same who travelled in Central Asia in disguise, with the late Sir Alexander Burnes, and subsequently published his journal in Calcutta. Since that period he has been devoted to British interests, and was greatly instrumental in effecting the deliverance of our prisoners in Affghanistan.

LITERAL CURIOSITY.

The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet:—"And I, even I, Artaxerxes the King, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily."

LIVING ON THE SEALS.

After Capt. Parry returned from his voyage of discovery, he was asked, at a dinner party where Lord Erskine, was present, what he and his crew had lived upon when they were frozen up in the polor sea. Parry said they lived upon the seals. "And very good living to," said Erskine, "if you keep them long enough."

THE LAND OF LIBERTY.

The following is a copy of the "business card" of some negro dealers at Mobile (Alabama). "J. H. Bondurant and Co. will constantly keep on hand a large and well selected lot of young negroes, of all descriptions, which they will sell low for cash. They will also receive and sell negroes on commission. They will occupy the house formerly occupied by J. E. Zuntz, No. 66, St. Michael-street, Mobile. J. H. Bondurant and J. E. Whitley, July, 1844."

SHAKSPEARE'S JUG AND CANE.

During the week of the Gloucester musical festival, there were exhibited the jug and cane of the immortal bard of Avon. The jug is of cream-coloured earthenware, and in shape it resembles a modern coffee pot. The height of it is nine inches and a half, and in the widest part it measures sixteen inches. Longitudinally it is divided into eight compartments, in each of which is represented the principal deities of the Grecian mythology, beautifully executed, and quite perfect. The cane is of the Malacca species, in beautiful preservation, the enamel being untouched. In length it is four feet seven and a half inches, four inches in circumference at the thickest part, and at the set-off for the hand, of ten inches: it is three and one-eighth inches round. There is no doubt of the genuineness of both these articles.

CHEAP BEER FROM POTATOES.

The Plesser Kreisblatt, a Silesian journal, gives circumstantial information how to prepare a wholesome and palatable potato beer, by which every family can supply itself therewith at very trifling expense. Twenty-five gallons of such beer are made from half a bushel of potatoes, 10 pounds of malt, half a pound of hops, and two quarts of yeast. The cost of one tun of such beer does not exceed two shillings and twopence, consequently the cost of a quart does not amount to a farthing.

AN INGENIOUS PLAN FOR PRE-PAYING LETTERS.

At the Waltham-Cross Post-office a clever expedient has been adopted for pre-paying letters. In the window of the office, in the place of a square of glass, a sheet of zinc is inserted, in which two longitudinal holes are cut—one for the receipt of letters and the other for pence. In the centre of the plate is a revolving handle, which acts upon some simple machinery within-side. Above the handle are these words—"Put your letter in and turn the handle up: put your penny in, then turn the handle over."

SUCCEDANEUM,

Used by dentists, is simply silver reduced to a very fine powder. This may be effected by the use of a fine file, and a simple sixpence may answer the desired purpose. A sufficient quantity of this powder to be placed in the palm of the hand, with a small drop of quicksilver, and worked together till it unites as a soft paste. In this soft state (the tooth being previously wiped dry) it must be immediately pressed into the cavity, which must be carefully filled, but the paste must not project beyond the edges of the tooth. The most tender tooth may be filled by degrees without hurting the nerve, if the process be repeated every day, until the cavity be filled. In the course of two or three hours, the paste becomes as hard as the tooth. If the decay is not entirely removed previous to filling the tooth, the succedaneum has the effect of discolouring the tooth, but where the decay is previously entirely removed, it not only arrests its further progress, by excluding the air, but it does not affect the colour of the tooth, and may preserve it for years.—From a Correspondent.

EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTY IN MANUFACTURES.

The French have recently made some very remarkable discoveries, by which they are enabled to make ornaments from "peat!" The peat is reduced by beating to a fine pulp, and is then placed under a press, to force out the humidity. In this state it may be converted into ornaments of every kind, such as are made in embossed leather. Rendered firm by a solution of alum, or other adhesive material, it forms flooring of a cheap and durable kind. Of billiard tables, too, there are various specimens; one rich and beautiful one has been produced in France, valued at 15,000f.

HINT TO BACHELORS.

When you "pop the question" to a lady, do it with a kind of laugh, as if you were joking. If she accepts you, very well: if she does not, you can say, "you were only in fun."

A ROYAL LETTER.

The letter A is in a fair way to be dubbed right Royal. Her Majesty's first christian name is Alexandrina, her husband's, Albert, and their four children are called Adelaide, Albert, Alice, and Alfred.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

With the exception of a walking match—or a pedestrian feat, as the paragraph perpetrators write—a little chicken cricket, and a few passages in the "rowing" line (the w mute and manifest, both pronouncings being proper to our purpose), the public has had a dull week of it. We mean the million: "the twice two thousand that the world was made for" have been deer-stalking, and pheasant-shooting at home, or gamboling or gambling on the Continent, according to their several tastes. Save, then, the turf, our public have been ill-provided for, in the matter of the recreative. In racing, a little of the practical, and a good deal of the theoretical, has been current, to the which we proceed to address our consideration. Towards the finale of last week, rumours were rife about the defalcation of one of the principal lottery speculators in the West end. This was the landlord of the Grand Hotel in Covent-garden. On Monday, however, he attended at Tattersall's, when he stated his readiness to pay the holders of all his prizes, "provided they undertook to hold him harmless from all actions that might be brought against him, by the process of qui tam, for the space of a year." Whether anything has come of the proposal or not, we cannot tell, but if the winners have executed any such indemnity for the sake of some present cash, we do not envy them their supplies. Neither can we conceive the landlord a very modest speculator who made the requisition. Suppose a person asked permission to light a cigar by his gas, and the answer was—"With pleasure, if you will execute a policy of insurance to protect my house and furniture against fire for the next twelvemonth;" would that have been an ordinary request? Yet he was bound to pay his sweeps without any reservation, while the cigar illuminating would be a matter of favour.

Of the racing at the First October Meeting at Newmarket, very much does not occur to us as worthy especial record. It was a very beggarly affair as regarded the "largesse"—£200 being the net amount contributed—£50 a-piece by the Club and the Town, and £100 by her most gracious Majesty. Surely the Jockey Club must be a most flourishing society, for its gains are great, and its expenditure small, which is the way to grow rich. It commenced on Tuesday, and ended on Thursday—the three days producing less sport, and infinitely less profit, than one at Goodwood. The best of the two-year-old stakes was the Hopeful—for which eight went—the Maid of Orleans winning very cleverly. This smart little lady was bought for an old song last year, and has put a pretty dollop of stakes into Mr. Gully's pocket, to say nothing of bets. Young John Day rode her, and in the course of his achievement met with the oddest accident possible in reference to his position with La Pucelle d'Orleans. Foig-a-Ballagh won the Grand Duke Michael—a net £1100—in a canter. This horse, had be been sound, would have been a forward runner for the Derby, but during Epsom races he was troubled with a curb about the size of General Tom Thumb. Red Deer was second—a case of deer-stalking—for of a truth Frank Butler gave him the stick in earnest. The rich Buckenham Produce Stakes Lord George Bentinck's Cowl won—a very promising fac simile of his famous sire, Bay Middleton. It boots not to tell how Pastoral won the St. Leger by a distance; All-round-my-Hat his Sweepstakes; and some other rip another: the meeting was a wretched as regarded the horse-flesh; and miserable enough to some of the visitors in the prospective of their own proper "possibles." On Tuesday, in the Second October, will come off the Ratan inquiry, in the which certain racing distinguées will undoubtedly come off—indifferently. That Ratan was dosed for the Derby is admitted—generally they believe he had a double potion. One Mr. Breme—called Braham "for short"—got up the "nobble," it is said, assisted by one Samuel Rogers, a jockey, who is non est inventus. Breme, on being found out, "split" to my Lord George Bentinck, and said (having previously sworn to the contrary in the House of Lords) that he was employed to make Ratan safe by Mr. So-and-so of the city and Messrs. So-and so of the West-end. No doubt it was a robbery, though its real character may never be separated from "the chaff." Rogers got £1665—that's certain; and Breme "a good stake;" but the contrivers had second best of it, the murder coming out before they could get in their money. The fact is, the professionals of the turf, as a body, have ever been a gang of thieves;—and yet the aristocracy of the earth have consorted, and do consort with them. Will ever a specific be discovered for this great scandal? The betting during the week was to the following effect, in reference to the two great issues now in the market.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The principal betting this afternoon was on the Cesarewitch, which, malgre the strong numerical display made below, is not likely to answer the purpose of the book-maker; the only horses at present in any real favour being the Duke of Portland's Souvenir filly, Lord Albemarle's The Brewer, Sir C. Monck's Glossy, and Mr Dixon's Jamal; these four, and Una, William le-Gros, Campanero, and Albion, were backed even against the field. We submit the closing averages:—

CESAREWITCH.

6 to 1 agst Souvenir filly (t)
11 to 1 —— Glossy
11 to 1 —— The Brewer
12 to 1 —— Jamal
15 to 1 —— Campanero

16 to 1 agst Una
18 to 1 —— Albion
18 to 1 —— Give-Him-a-Name
20 to 1 —— Marquise

20 to 1 agst Haitoe
20 to 1 —— The Bride
20 to 1 —— Pickpocket
20 to 1 —— Lightning

DERBY.

12 to 1 agst Alarm (t)
40 to 1 agst Chertsey
50 to 1 agst Alaric (t)

On Thursday there were not enough subscribers present to make "house," we therefore give the latest market prices at Newmaket.

CESAREWITCH.

4 to 1 agst Dawson's lot
7 to 1 —— Souvenir
11 to 1 —— Jamal
12 to 1 —— Glossy
14 to 1 —— The Brewer
15 to 1 —— Give-him-a-name

15 to 1 agst Vibration
16 to 1 —— Campanero
16 to 1 —— Pickpocket
20 to 1 —— Aristotle
20 to 1 —— Macquise
20 to 1 —— Una

20 to 1 agst Albion (t)
20 to 1 —— The Bride (t)
25 to 1 —— Haitoe (t)
25 to 1 —— Rowena (t)
25 to 1 —— Foigh-a Ballagh (taken)

DERBY.

5 to 1 agst Scott's lot (t)
5 to 1 —— John Day's lot
11 to 1 —— Alarm (t)
16 to 1 —— Kedger
18 to 1 —— Cobweb

30 to 1 agst Old England
33 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger
33 to 1 —— Fitz Allen
40 to 1 —— Alaric

66 to 1 agst Lord Milltown's two
100 to 1 —— Laird o' Cockpen (t)

OAKS.

8 to 1 agst Maid of Orleans.

NEWMARKET FIRST OCTOBER MEETING.—Tuesday.

The racing commenced at three o'clock with—

The Hopeful Stakes, of 40 sovs each.

Mr. Gully's The Maid of Orleans .. .. (J. Day, jun.) 1
Mr. Ford's Piccolina .. .. .. (Butler) 2

5 to 2 on The Maid, and 6 to 1 agst Piccolina. Won in a canter by a length.

The Grand Duke Michael Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. Irwin's Foigh-a-Ballagh .. .. (Bell) 1
Duke of Richmond's Red Deer .. .. (F. Butler) 2

4 to 1 on Foigh-a-ballagh. Won easily by two lengths.

The Buckenham Stakes of 300 sovs each.

Lord G. Bentinck's Cowl .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Wreford's c by Camel out of Monimia .. (J. Day, jun.) 2

Wednesday.

A meagre uninteresting day's sport commenced at half-past one, with a mere shadow of what was of old a very popular race at Newmarket, viz—

The St. Leger Stakes of 25 sovs each.

Duke of Richmond's Pastoral .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Dixon's Oliver Cromwell .. .. (S. Day) 2

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs each.

Lord G. Bentick's All-round-my-Hat, 3 yrs .. .. (Nat) 1
Lord Albermarle's Scarmentado, 2 yrs .. .. (Whitehouse) 2

£50 for three-year olds.

Mr. Newton's Ma Mie, 5 yrs .. .. .. (Stephenson) 1
Sir J. Hawley's Vibration, 5 yrs .. .. (F. Butler) 2

Thursday.

The Town Plate was won in a canter by Pastoral, beating Merope and Candidate. The same horse won the Queen's Plate by three lengths, beating Oliver Cromwell, Wee Pet, and Robinia.

The Rutland Stakes were won cleverly by the Duke of Bedford's Prologue, beating Tisiphane, the Estelle filly, and four others.

A Handicap Sweepstakes was won by the Laird of Cockpen, 8st. 7lbs., beating a filly by Slane, out of Seakale, and Petrona.

A Sweepstakes of £5 each ended in a dead heat between Alexandrina and Caractacus.

Matches.—Sir Diggory Diddle beat Mr. Walker's Cab horse, and his Piccolina beat Desperation, both easy.

The death of the Duke of Grafton disqualifies Lord Lonsdale's Zeal and Turquoise colts, and Mr. Charlton's Dublin colt, for the Derby; and the following fillies for the Oaks: Mr. Booth's New Year's Day, Mr. Payne's Rigolette, Lord Lonsdale's Sister to Canadian, and Mr. Worley's Sophy Dawes.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange, Friday.—Since Monday rather an extensive quantity of English wheat has reached the Pool from Lincolnshire; but as nearly the whole of it has gone direct into the millers' hands, the show of that grain here to day was small. For all descriptions the demand was rather active, at fully previous rates. The show of foreign wheat was by no means large, and a fair amount of business was doing in that article at full prices. The supply of barley was only moderate. The finest malting parcels were in request, at full currencies; but the inferior kinds were rather dull. Malt was a steady sale, but without any advance in prices. Oats were the turn dearer, owing to the short supply of Irish. Beans, peas, and flour as last quoted.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 7680; barley, 5570; oats, 2040 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 12,790 quarters. Foreign: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, — quarters. Flour, 3890 sacks. Malt, 2630 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 46s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto white, 42s to 50s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s. distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 29s to 33s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 56s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel. Town-made, 46s to 48s.

The Seed Market.—Owing to the want of winter fodder for the cattle, linseed and rapeseed have been in request at full prices. Canary has somewhat fluctuated in value, but other kinds of seeds have remained stationary.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 35s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £10 10s to £11 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 56s to 60s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 8d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 45s 9d; barley, 34s 5d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 37s 3d; beans, 36s 8d; peas, 33s.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 47s 9d; barley, 35s 0d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 35s 7d; beans, 37s 1d; peas, 33s 8d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 3s; oats, 6s; rye, 7s 6d; beans, 5s 6d peas, 9s 6d.

Tea.—Rather more business has been doing in this article during this week, and full prices have been realized in every instance. The stock in bond in London now consists of about 30,500,000lbs.

Sugar.—Only a moderate business has been transacted in the raw market since our last, yet prices may be considered about stationary. In refined goods a steady business has been doing: brown lumps at 73s to 73s 6d; and standard, 74s 6d to 75s

Coffee.—The market has been largely supplied with most descriptions of coffee. Only a moderate business has been transacted, and prices have undergone no change worthy of notice.

Coals.—Adair's, 18s; New Tanfield, 16s; Ord's Redheugh, 15s 9d; Old Pontop, 15s 9d Tanfield Moor, 16s 3d; Wylam, 17s 6d; Hilda, 21s 6d; Gosport, 21s 3d; Belmont, 21s 9d; Adelaide, 22s 9d; Lambton, 23s 6d; Stewart's, 23s 9d per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 12 to £4 10; useful do, £4 12s to £4 18s; fine upland do, £5 to £5 8s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 10s; oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s per load.

Hops.—From Kent and Sussex very large quantities of new hops continue to arrive almost daily, hence the show on offer is a good one. The demand, however, is by no means active, yet prices are supported. The duty is called £130,000. New hops:—Sussex pockets, £6 8s to £7 10s: Weald of Kent ditto, £6 18s to £7 10s; Mid Kent ditto, £8 to £10; Farnhams, £10 to £10 10s.

Wool.—The public sales have been in progress during the whole of the week, and at which full prices have been obtained. These sales will not be concluded for several days. Altogether about 20,000 bales will be offered.

Potatoes.—Although the supply of potatoes is large, the trade is steady, at from £2 15s to £5 per ton.

Smithfield.—In our market of to-day the supply of beasts offering was seasonably large, but of very inferior quality. The attendance of buyers being very small, the beef trade was exceedingly dull, at barely Monday's depressed currencies. There were on sale 35 beasts and 40 sheep, from Rotterdam, in very middling condition. The arrivals from Scotland, since our last, have embraced 110 Scots and 40 sheep. The supply of sheep was small, yet the mutton trade was unusually dull, at barely stationary prices. Calves were somewhat on the increase, compared with the supplies brought forward on some previous days and the rates had a downward tendency. In pigs very little was doing, at late rates. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 5s each, including their small calf.

Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality do., 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d: prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 3s 4d to 4s 8d; sucking calves, 18s to 34s; quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each; Beasts, 651; cows, 180; sheep and lambs, 6110; calves, 248; pigs, 380.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had very large supplies of each kind of meat offering to-day, owing to which the demand was heavy, on the following terms. Per 8lb., by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; ditto small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 2d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d.

Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English market continues to betray a tendency upward, and has been very firm during the week, Wednesday excepted. On the latter day a slight heaviness caused quotations to recede a point, but the following day's business placed them at an improvement of nearly one half per cent. upon the opening price of Monday. The present quiescent state of affairs, both foreign and domestic, leaves little room for speculation, and the purchases made are all investments. Bank Stock maintains its price, and Exchequer Bills are from without any improvement. India Stock has receded a point, but the transactions have been so few, that the quotation is almost nominal. The closing prices of the week are, Consols for money, 100½ ⅝; for Time, 100⅝ ¾; India Stock, 288½; Bank Stock for Account, 210; Exchequer Bills, 74 to 76.

The time having expired, according to the late Bank Act, for the publication of the amount of notes each country banker is authorised to issue, the total amount is now ascertained to be £8 686,167. The amount authorised to be issued by each banker or joint stock bank is founded on the average of the circulation of such bank or banking company for the twelve weeks preceding the 27th of April last.

According to the last return made of the issue of country banks and joint-stock banking companies, it is at present about £930 000 less than the act permits. It results, therefore, that at any period when it may be prudent or profitable, the circulation may be increased to the extent above mentioned.

There has been some animation in the Foreign Market during the week, caused by speculative business in Spanish and Mexican. Spanish, on Monday, improved to 24½ for the Actives. Three-per-Cents., 35⅜ to ½. Mexican also advanced to 37½ to ¾ for the Active Stock. These advances were maintained until Wednesday, when an attempt to realise soon made Spanish heavy at a decline of one quarter per cent. Mexican also receded, quoting 35⅛ to ⅜, ex-dividend, and the following day it was heavy at a point lower. Portuguese was firm, however, at 49 to 50. Spanish at the close of the week quoted Actives, 24; Three-per-Cents., 35½; Mexican, 35; Belgian, 103¾ to 104; Chilian, deferred, 53; Columbian, 14⅝; Portuguese, 50; Dutch Two-per-Cents. (ex-div.), 98; Two-and-a-Half-per-Cents. Ditto, 62⅝.

The Railway Market was firm at the beginning of the week, and business took rather an extensive range. It has since, however, been not quite so well supported, and transactions have been upon a more limited scale. The Direct Northern line has assumed a place among the quotations; but the supporters of the London and York line are still sanguine upon the success of their measure in Parliament. There are no remarkable features connected with any of the other competing lines. The closing prices of those lines in which business has been last transacted are—Birmingham and Gloucester, 104½; Chester and Holyhead, 7⅝; Eastern Counties, 13½; Great Western, 145; South Western, 76½ to 77; Portsmouth Direct, 1⅝; Birmingham, 218; Brighton, 46⅞; Croydon, 16¾; Lynn and Ely, 4; Midland Counties, 169; Dover, 40¾ ex div.; Trent Valley, 9⅛; Boulogne and Amiens, 2¾; Paris and Rouen, 38⅝; Paris and Or, 38¼; Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux, 1⅝; Kendal and Windermere, 3½; London and York, 3¾; Direct Northern, ¼ to ⅜ prem.

Saturday Morning.—The funds made a further improvement yesterday, and some extensive purchases were made in Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, at about 102⅞ to 103½. Consols closed at 100⅝ for money and ¾ ⅞ for time.

The Foreign Funds were very inactive. Dutch was firm at 62¾ for the Two-and-a-Half per Cents. Another conversion of the Five per Cents is announced.

The Railway Market remained at previous prices. The French lines, however, are looking up.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, Oct. 1.

BANKRUPTS.—C. K. NICHOLLS, Bridge-road, Battersea, banker.—H. HAYNES, Scole, Norfolk, innkeeper.—R. ROBINSON, Strand, coal-merchant.—E. ASHWELL, Yeldon, Bedfordshire, butcher.—M. MASLIN, Croydon, coal-merchant.—J. T. MAUND, Birmingham, laceman.—F. DEFLINNE, Manchester, check manufacturer.—R. J. WEBB Bath, wine-merchant.—R. WATSON and R. MORRIS, Liverpool, brokers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. and J. VALLANCE, Edinburgh, coal-merchants.—S. FRASER, Strathenmore, Rossshire, Grazier.—A. BRECK, Edinburgh, slater.—D. GILL, Crossmill and Glasgow, calico printer.—A. RENNIE, Glasgow, grocer.—D. MOIR, Devonside, near Tillicoultry, woollen manufacturer.

Friday, October 4.

WAR-OFFICE, Oct. 4.—4th Regiment of Dragoon Guards: Captain E. O. Wrench to be Captain, vice Eliot; Lieut. G. Rochfort to be Captain, vice Wrench; Cornet R. Souter to be Lieutenant, vice Rochfort; Ensign M. M'Creagh to be Cornet, vice Souter.

17th Foot: Ensign H. P. Onslow to be Ensign, vice Belton. 31st: Lieut. F. Spence to be Captain, vice Brevet Major Urmston; Ensign J. S. Gould to be Lieutenant, vice Spence; Ensign C. T. Cormick to be Lieutenant, vice Gould; E. W. Kingsley to be Ensign, vice Cormick. 38th: C. Clerke to be Ensign, vice Onslow. 43rd: Major-General the Hon. Sir H. R. Pakenham, K.C.B., to be Colonel, vice Lieut.-General Lord Keane, G.C.B. 49th: C. G. Richardson to be Ensign, vice M'Creagh. 57th: Ensign J. H. Chads to be Lieutenant, vice Morphett; Ensign R. T. S. Boughton to be Lieutenant, vice Pitt; J. Hassard to be Ensign, vice Chads; E. J. B. Brown to be Ensign, vice Boughton. 65th: Capt. C. E. Gold to be Major, vice Smith; Lieut. R. Newenham to be Captain, vice Gold; Ensign H. Scott to be Lieutenant, vice Newenham; S. Blake to be Ensign, vice Scott. 70th: Lieut. T. F. H. Alms to be Adjutant, vice Evatt. 77th: Ensign G. L. Rathborne to be Lieutenant, vice Morritt; G. R. Becher to be Ensign, vice Rathborne. 85th: Lieut. W. Todd to be Captain, vice O'Reilly; Ensign W. Ogilvy to be Lieutenant, vice Todd; R. P. Flood to be Ensign, vice Ogilvy.

Brevet.—Captain E. O. Wrench to be Major in the Army; Brevet-Major E. O. Wrench to be Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army.

Commission by the Lord-Lieutenant of Sussex.—C. Shirley, Esq., to be Deputy-Lieutenant.

BANKRUPTS.—L. D. SMITH, H. SMITH, and G. F. SMITH, Gutter lane, London, crape-manufacturer. A. TULLEY, Hackney, grocer. F. HOWARD, Tonbridge place, Hoxton, publisher. J. METCALF, Macclesfield, Chester, silk manufacturer. G. CROXTON, Manchester, china-dealer. G. ALEXANDER, Beaminster, Dorset, inkeeper.

BIRTHS.

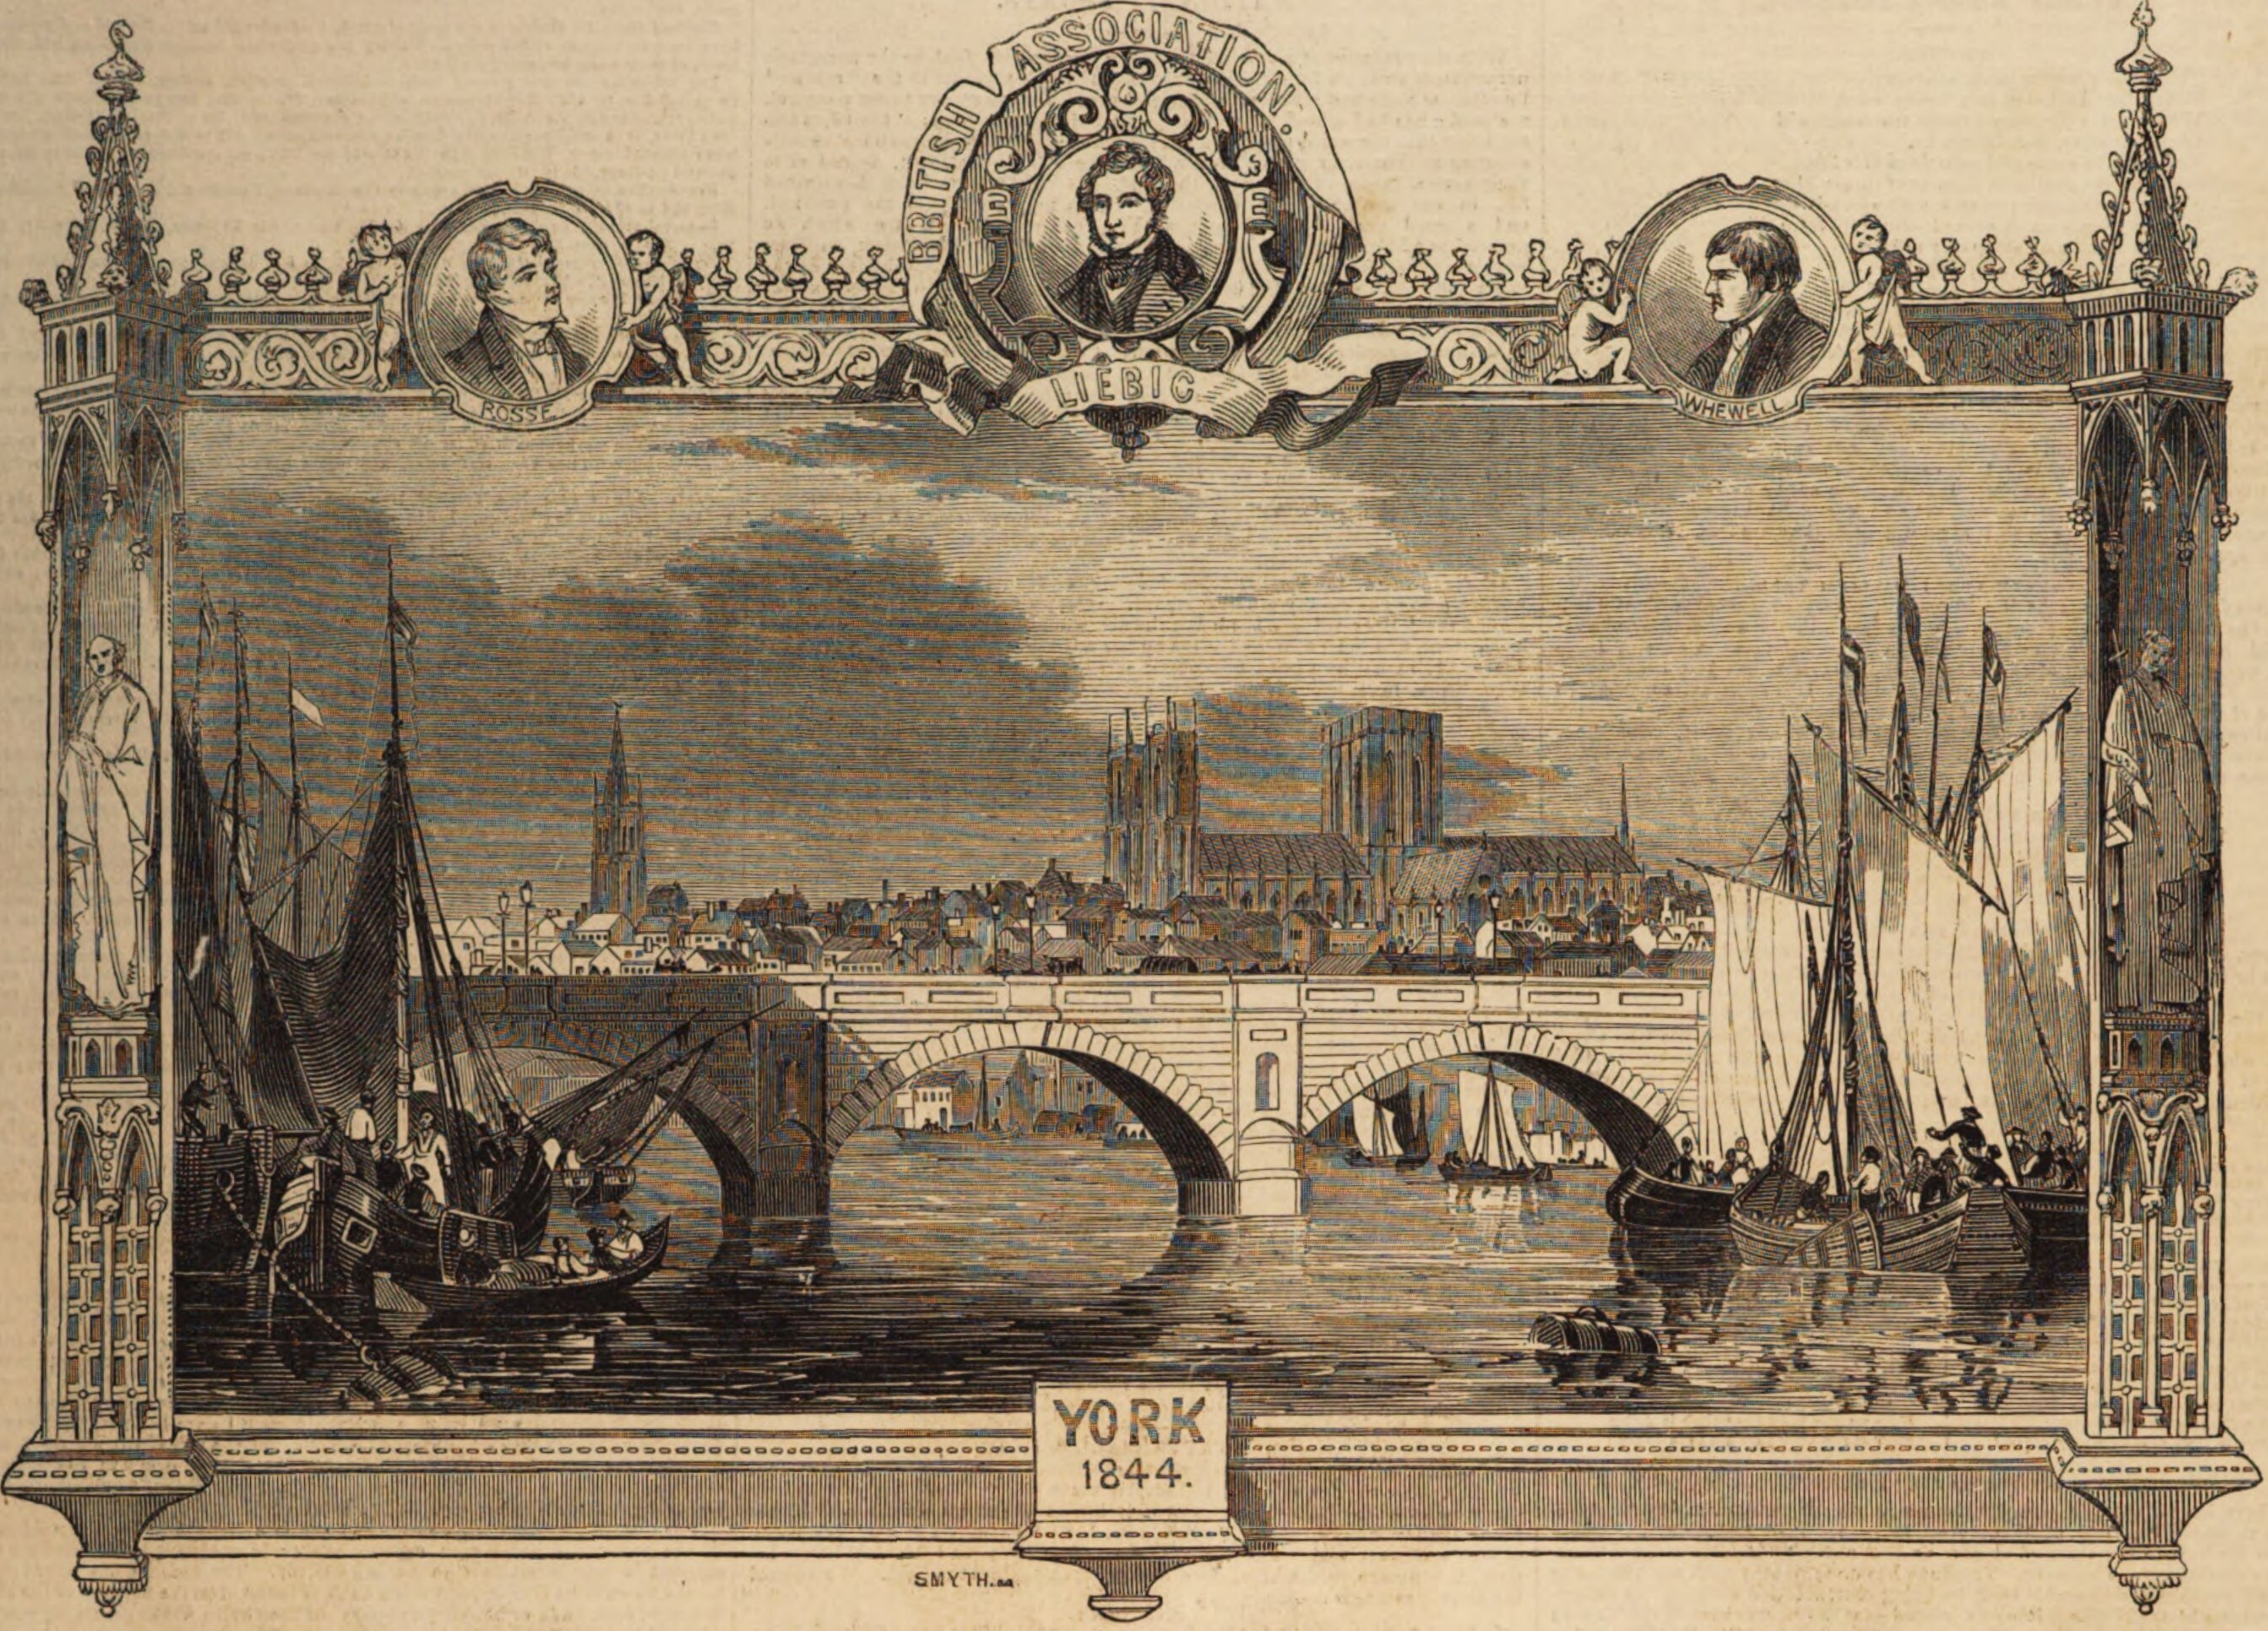
At Arlington-house, Turnham-green, Mrs. John Bull, of a daughter.——At Anglesea, Hants, the Hon. Mrs. R. C. Trench, of a daughter.——At Taliaris, Carmarthenshire, the lady of William Peel, Esq., of a daughter.——At New-street, Bishopsgate-street, the wife of Mr. C. H. Clarke, of a son.——In Hanover terrace, Mrs. Longman, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At St. George's, Hanover-square, Algernon William Bellingham, eldest son of Algernon Greville, Esq. (late Captain in the Rifle Brigade), to Margaret, youngest daughter of Alexander Petty, Esq.——At Holly-lodge, Loughborough, the Rev. J. Bowles, D.D., rector of Woodstock, and domestic chaplain to his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, to Ellen Mary, the youngest daughter of the late Sir William Walker, High Sheriff of Leicestershire.——At Newnham, Northamptonshire, Edward James, Esq., M.D., to Mary Elizabeth, only daughter of Thomas West, Esq. M.D., F.L.S., of Newnham.——At the Abbey, St. Alban's, the Rev. W. S. G. Wade, to Elizabeth, eldest daughter of S. Story, Esq., of St. Albans.

DEATHS.

At Earl's-terrace, Kensington, Francis Ludlow Holt, Esq., Q.C., and Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.——In Savill-row, Edward Walpole, Esq., in his 69th year.——Sarah, the relict of the Rev. Thomas Waters, D.D., late master of Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, aged 77.



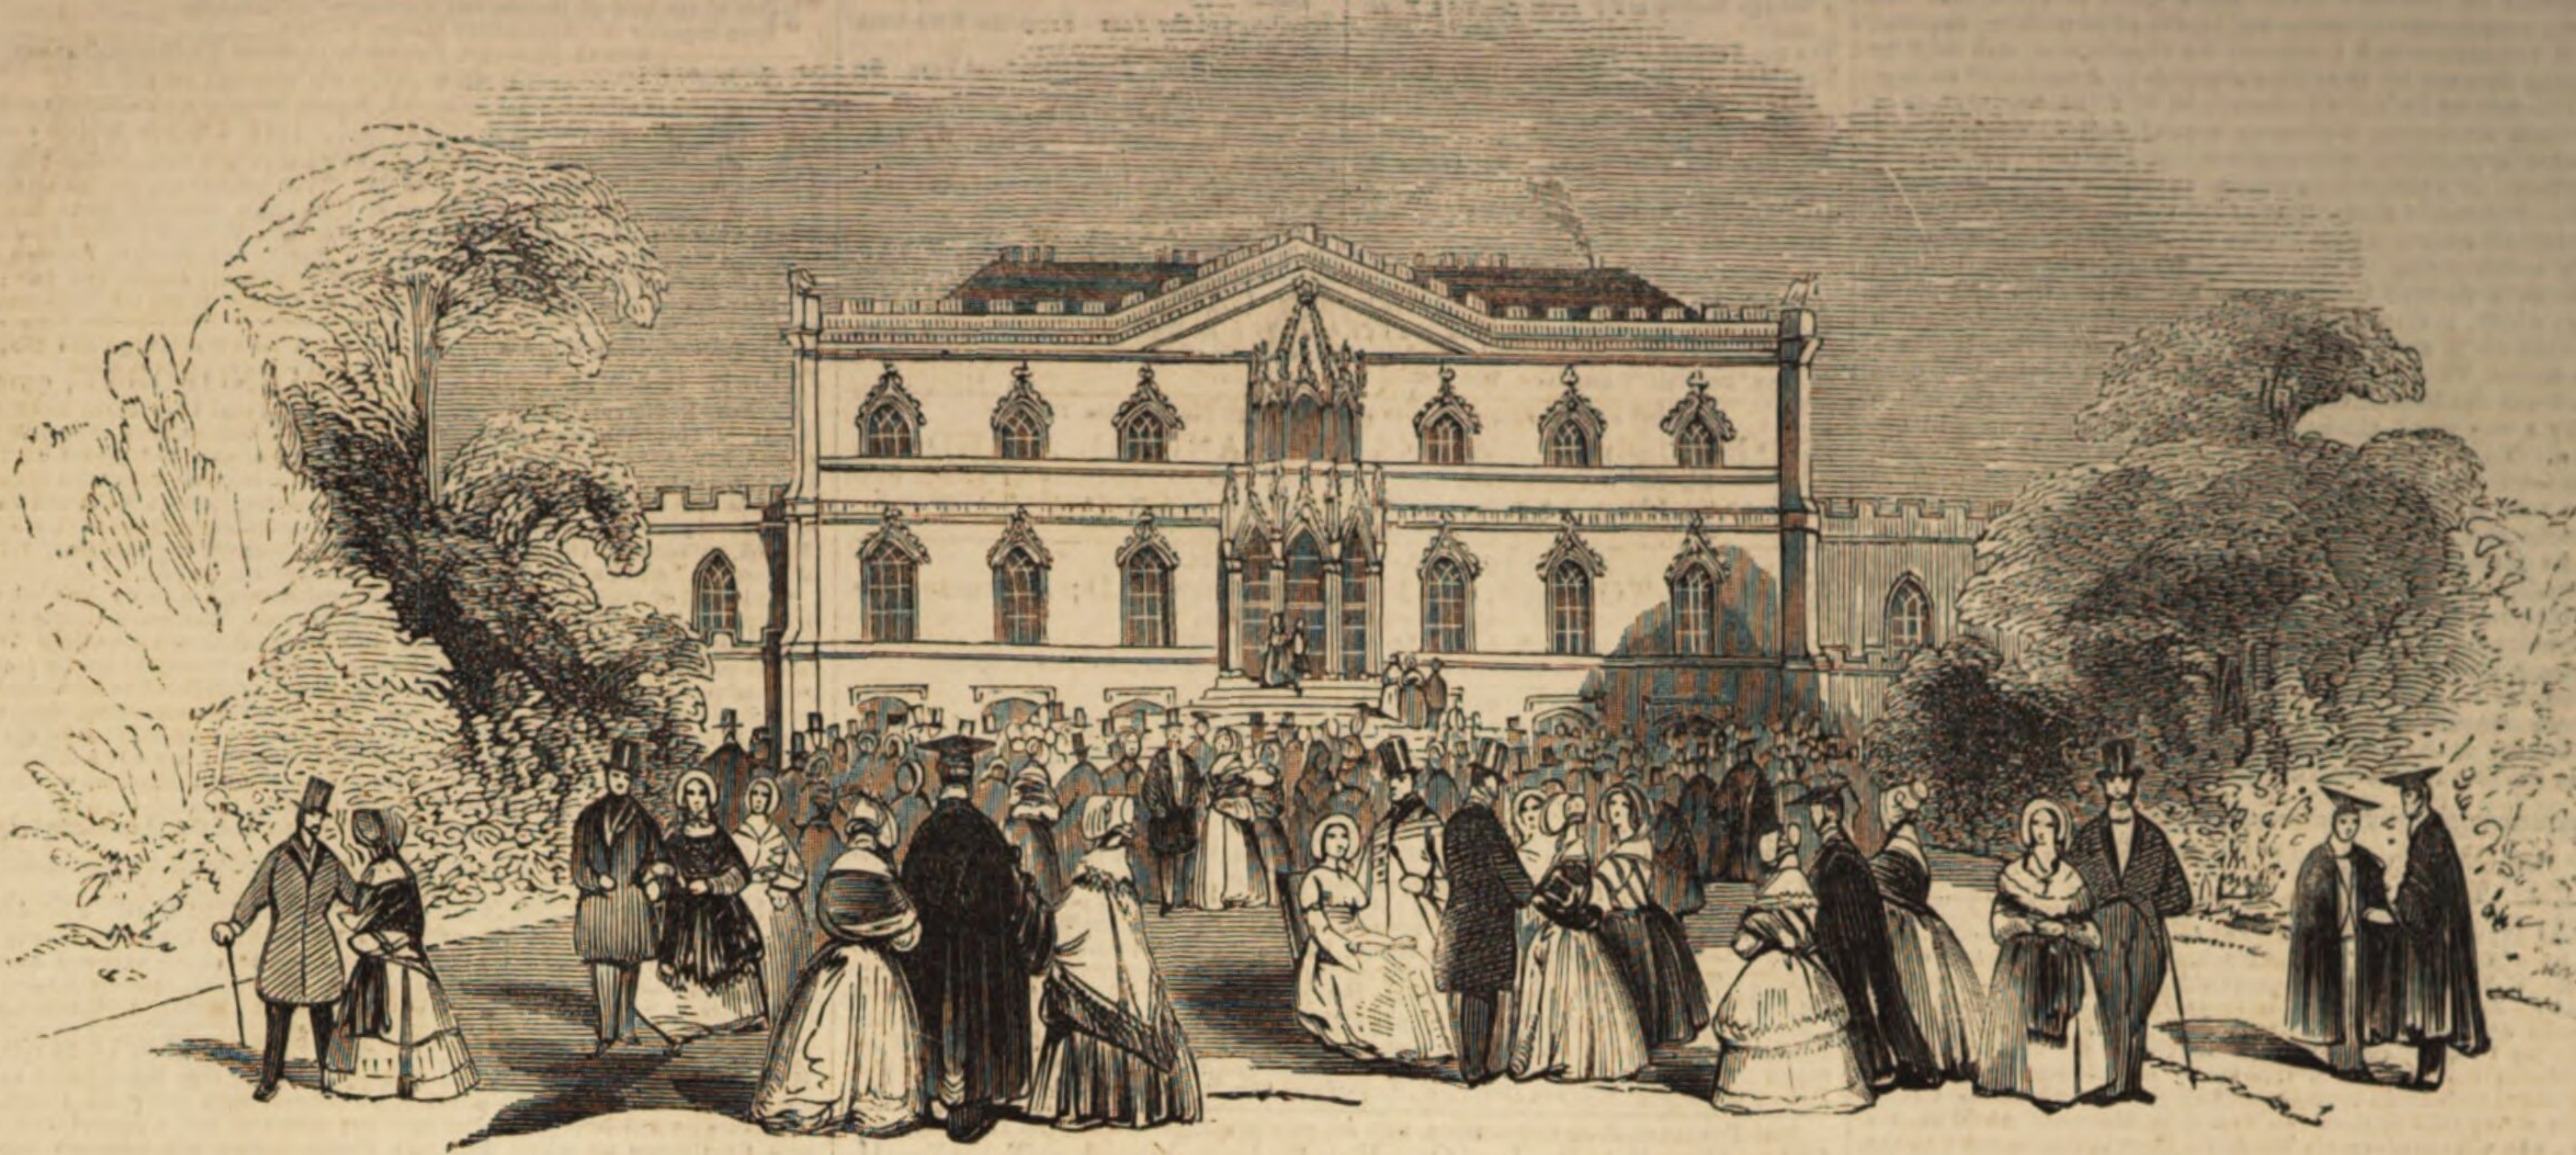
GREAT MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE AT YORK.

The meetings of the British Association have continued through the week with increasing interest and popularity. "Thirteen years since," said the Earl of Rosse, at the opening general meeting, "the Society, at its first meeting in York, was but an infant assembly, but it had now returned to its native place, full of health and vigour, having achieved great works in the intellectual and moral improvement of mankind, and having still higher prospects in view." In this estimate of their highly responsible but most gratifying position, the members and visitors seem generally to respond; and, as the pecuniary affairs of the institution are in a satisfactory condition, the good fellowship, the philanthropy, the patriotism of the sections has literally known no bounds. Even the statists, and their "dry-as-dust," but all-important papers have entered on a new life of smiles and welcome. In this propitious state of affairs it is not to be wondered at that the social instincts have been largely drawn upon to grace the "feast of reason," and give it "flow of soul." Dinners have abounded. His Grace the Archbishop of York has thrown open the hospitable doors of Bishopsthorpe to hungry but enlightened multitudes. The same glorious example has been followed by the Earl Fitzwilliam, at the Earl de Grey Rooms; and, as far as the unsparing hands of good old Yorkshire would permit, the very humblest visitor of the meeting has been made to feel that wisdom's ways are "ways of pleasantness," and that in "Eboracum," at least, "her paths are peace." We congratulate the Association and the city of York on these happy circumstances, and should have been glad to have hailed their auspicious union at greater length; but the overwhelming claims of other departments of our paper forbid enlargement.

The papers read being mostly of local or abstract interest, we shall, notwithstanding their vast intrinsic value, adhere to our usual mode of illustration, and give only the principal points of such papers as touched upon subjects interesting to all readers.

The sub section of ETHNOLOGY presents us with the first point of consideration. The members and friends of this division of the Association consist chiefly of the members of a society resently formed in London, called the Ethnological Society, whose object it is to enforce and enlarge the "proper study of mankind—MAN"—in all his races, varieties, and circumstances. In the metropolis, they succeeded in calling much attention to the great subject of their study; and we rejoice to learn that in their conjunction with the Association at York, they have also commanded a very large share of public consideration and esteem. At one of their meetings Mr. Schonburgh read an interesting paper on the aborigines of Guiana, accompanied wish a living illustration, in the person of a Macusi Indian, dressed in the costume of his tribe.—Professor Latham communicated his researches on the southern limits of the Esquimaux language.—The Rev. W. Richards read a paper on his conjectured Asiatic origin of the Polynesian tribes, founded on certain correspondencies between the Malayan and Polynesian languages.—But the paper which attracted most notice was one by Dr. Hodgkin, entitled, "The Dog as a Companion to Man;" or, in other words, an attempt to establish, by the analogy furnished in the variation of species in the dog tribe, the fact that the varieties of the human races are, in like manner, accidental, and not specific; and, consequently, that, whether black or white, red or olive, "God has made of one blood all that dwell upon earth." The paper, as might be expected, occasioned much discussion; and it has also been the subject, out of doors, of great consideration. The statements of the doctor may be summed up in the words of Cuvier, who says—"The domestic dog is the most complete, the most singular, and the most useful conquest that man has gained in the animal world. The whole species has become our property; each individual belongs entirely to his master, acquires his disposition, knows and defends his property, and remains attached to him until death; and all this, not through constraint or necessity, but purely by the influence of gratitude and real attachment. The swiftness, the strength, the sharp scent of the dog, have rendered him a powerful ally to man against the lower tribes; and were, perhaps, necessary for the establishment of the dominion of mankind over the animal creation. The dog is the only animal which has followed man over the whole earth." The position of the Ethnologists is another and wholly distinct matter. In the pursuit of their "theory of variation," some of them suppose the dog to be identical in species with the wolf; others, that old Reynard claims him as a cousin, at least; and others again, that dogs, both of high and low degrees, are simply so many translated jackals! Now, without going into the merits of the numberless arguments used by the partisans of this theory, we would simply direct attention to the circumstance that the Newfoundland, the water spaniel, and other water dogs, have their feet webbed, and are, in other respects, manifestly created for the special exigencies of an aquatic life; which is in no degree the case with the wolf, the fox, or the jackal. It follows, therefore, that as a webbed foot is an organisation contrived for an especial purpose, the advocates of the "variation theory" must necessarily involve themselves in the absurdity of maintaining the truth of the exploded nonsense once so prevalent on the subject of spontaneous generation, accidental creation, creations of habit, and the like. We are quite ready to allow that domestication produces great changes in animals; but such changes in animals are always confined to modifications of form, size, colour, &c.; they never amount to a creation of new organs, as must be the case if we admit the possibility of the unwebbed foot of a wolf becoming, in time, the webbed foot of a water-dog. Fowls have been bred into thousands of varieties; but they have always continued fowls. No! we cannot believe that by a change of temperature, or food, an African jackal could ever be improved into a Spanish pointer—much less a fox into a bull-dog. But this, although true, is perhaps, an extreme way of putting the case: let us then, come to the actual modus operandi of the affair. The shepherd's dog is taken to be the parent whence all varieties of dogs have descended; and this shepherd's dog is supposed to have had a wolf for his father, or a fox for his mother, or vice versâ, or exclusively, from one of them. This is peculiarly unfortunate; for we find that offspring, be they direct or mules in their affinity, invariably inherit the instincts of their progenitors. Wombwell's lion-tigers possess the noble bearing and sly malignity of their several parents. But the variationists tell us that the son of a wolf and a fox, both of them thieves, the stanch and incessant enemies of sheep, suddenly, fortuitously, oddly, and in total opposition to all the laws and analogies of nature, became, "lang syne," the friend of its parent's prey, and the honest, docile, faithful friend of man! At what period, let us ask, did this strange conversion take place? "Lang syne" is not an adequate answer. The shepherd's dog is mentioned in the book of Job, the oldest book in the world; and the bones of species are found in recent strata. When then, and how, we ask, did the change take place? The real truth is, that the varieties of the dog are created species; that different kinds of the same genus were originally made by God to suit different climates and circumstances, and to serve the various wants of man. Look at our gallery of canine portraits—the heads given by Mr. Pritchard, the great partisan of the theory, and relied on by the disputants of York—and tell us if this be not the true view of the case. The common origin of the human family—the descent of man from one pair—is a great truth, resting on wholly different foundations.

THE GREAT GLACIER OF LAUTERAAR.



BISHOPSTHORPE, THE SEAT OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

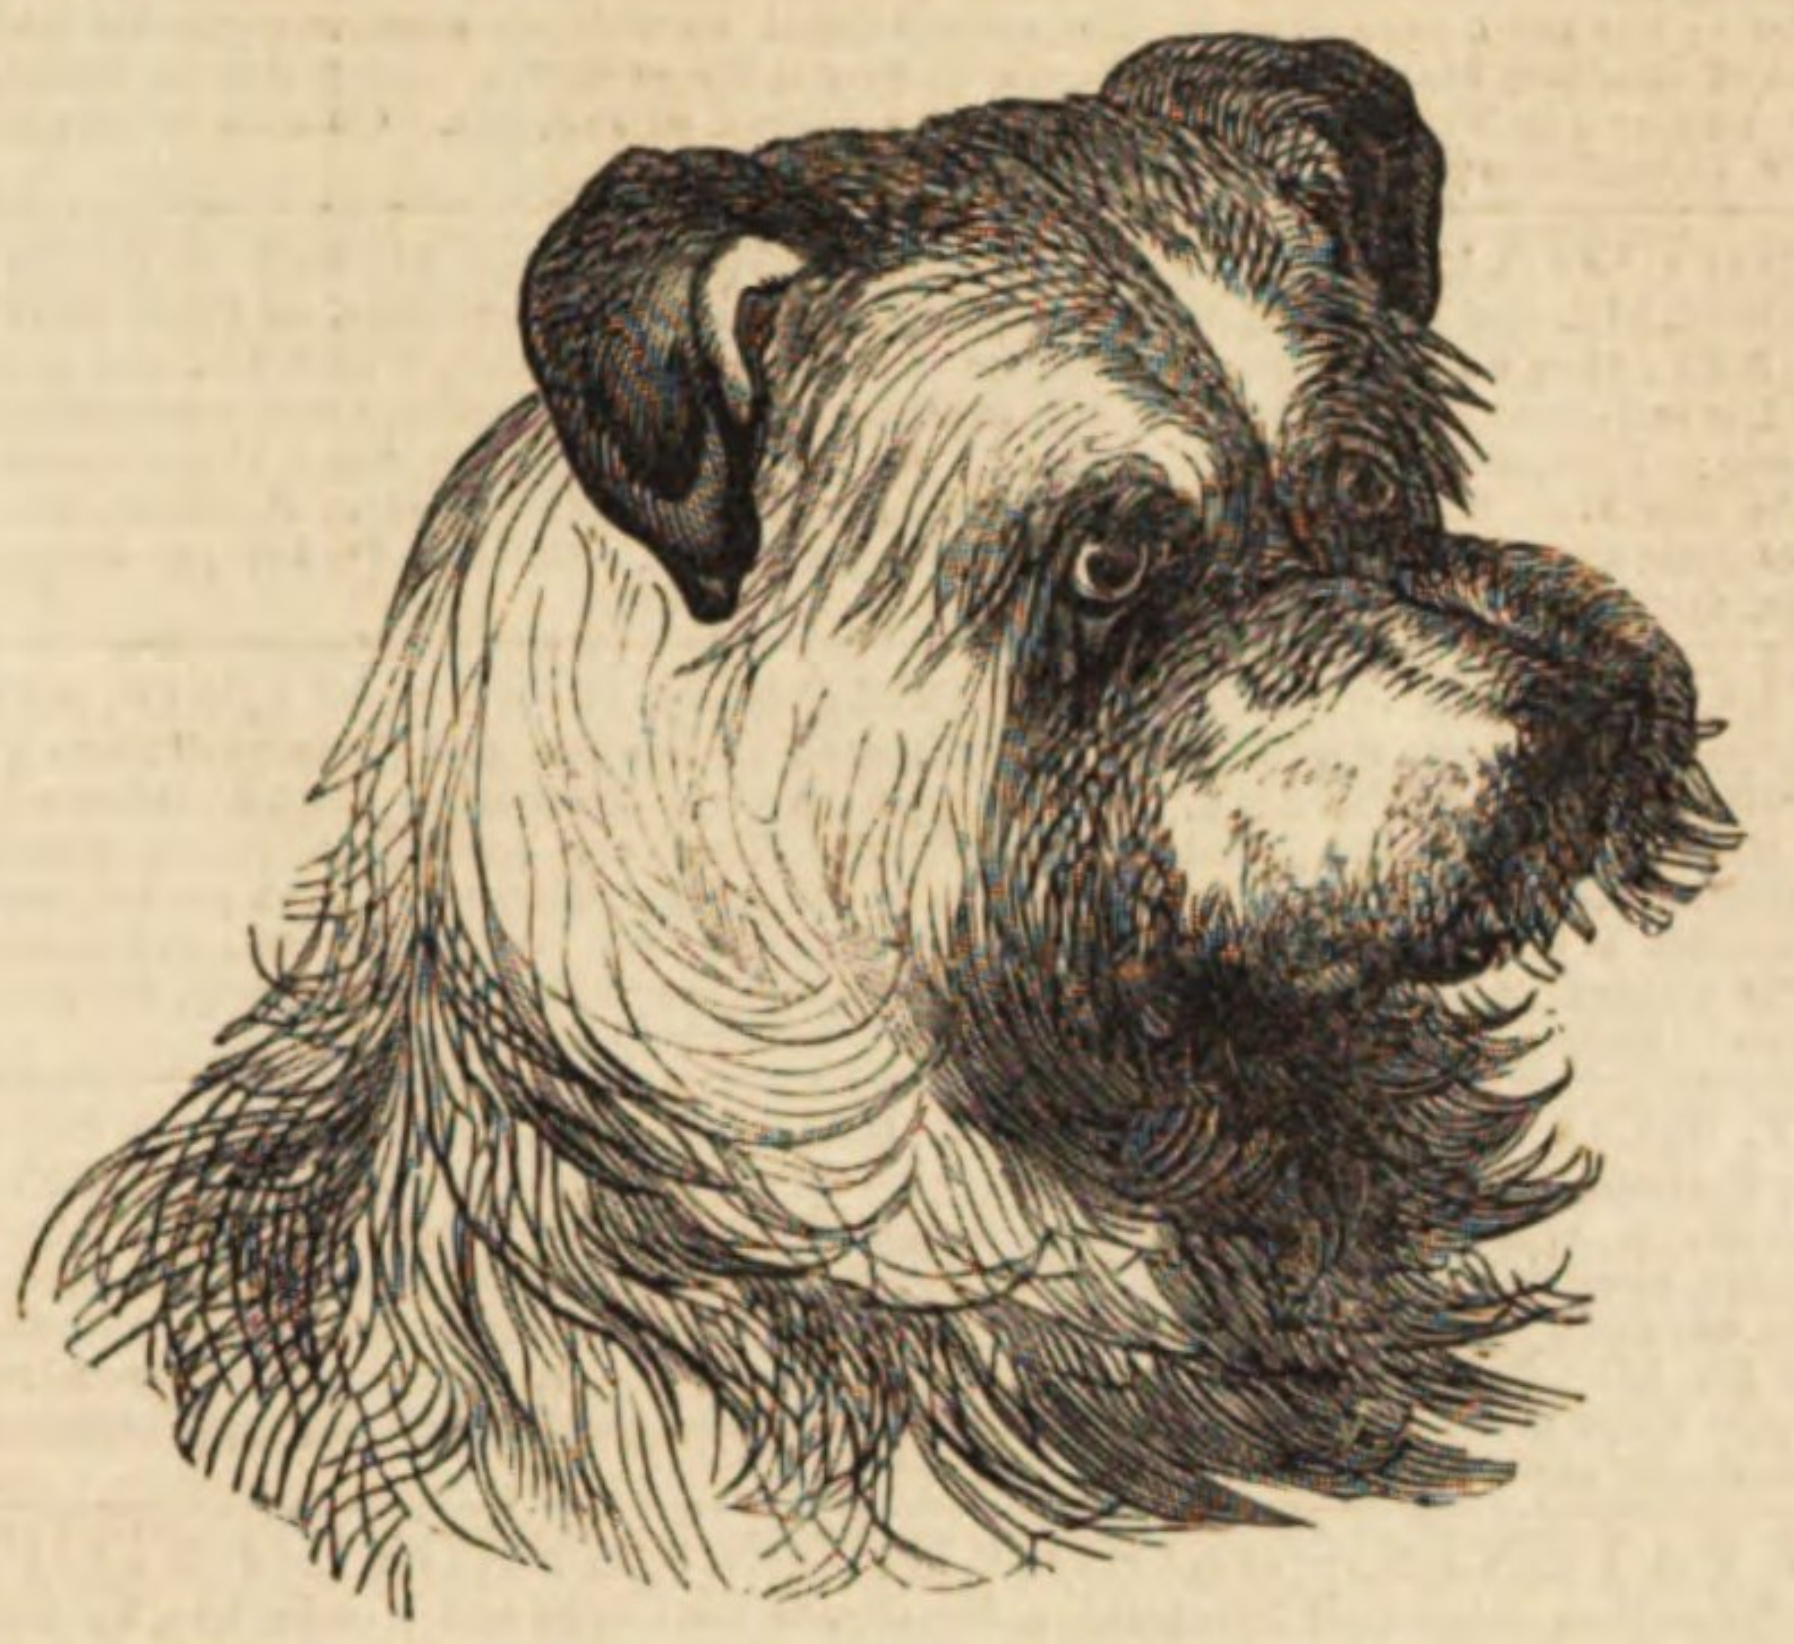
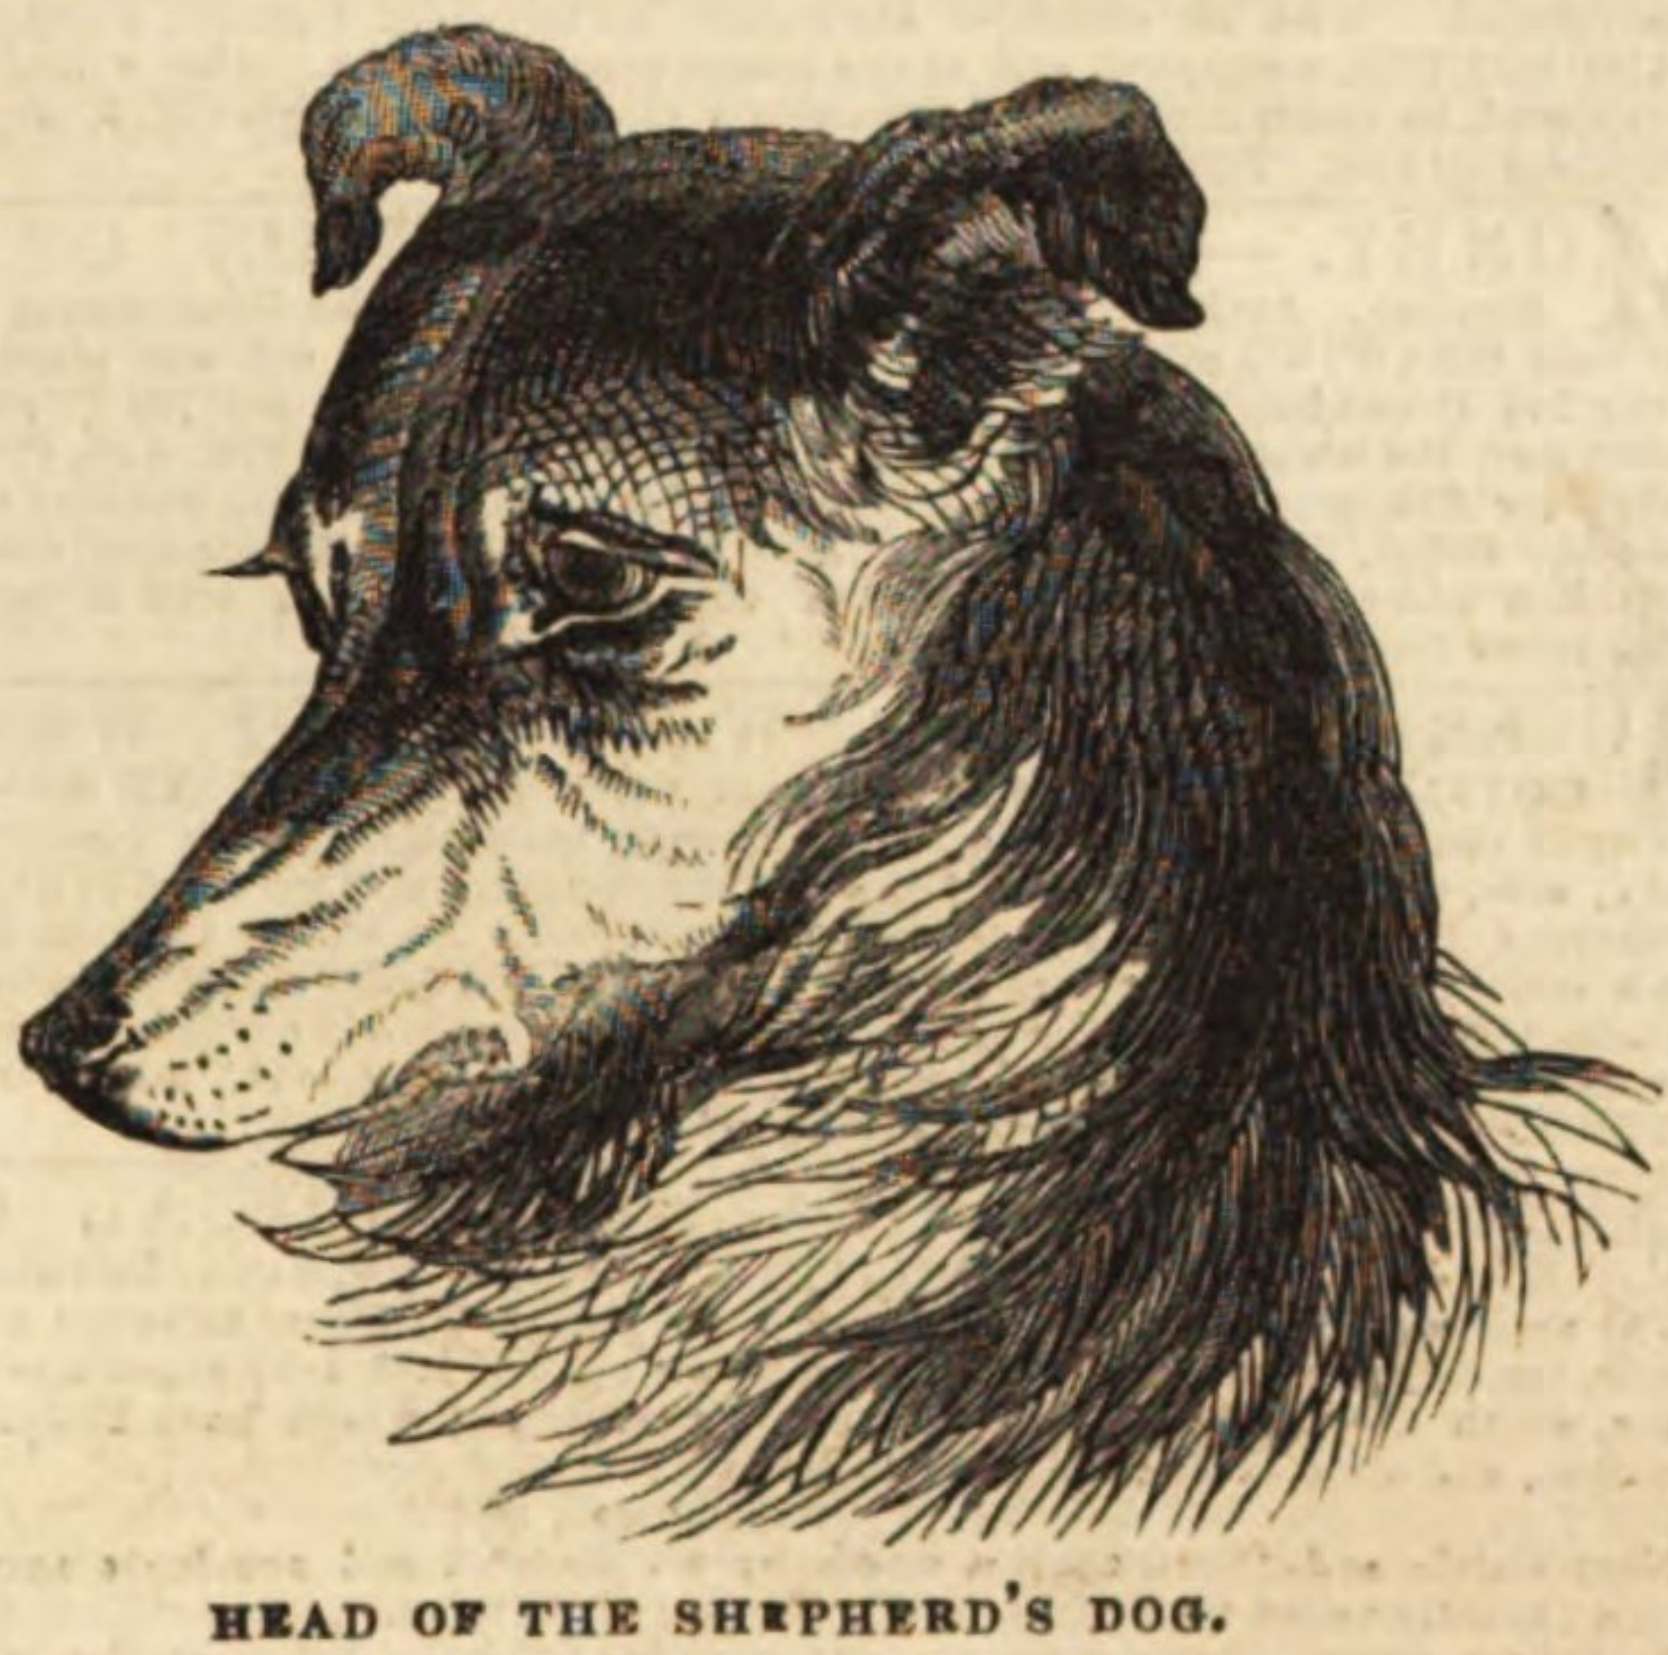
Another paper, which was received with great attention and deserved respect, was Professor Forbes' on Glaciers. His object was to establish the flexibility of glacier ice by direct experiments. This doctrine is considered, we believe, to be necessary to account for the motion of the glacier; but the general nature of the subject will be best understood from the following extract from the Professor's account of the phenomena of glaciers, and by a reference to our cut, which exhibits very clearly this general form and character.

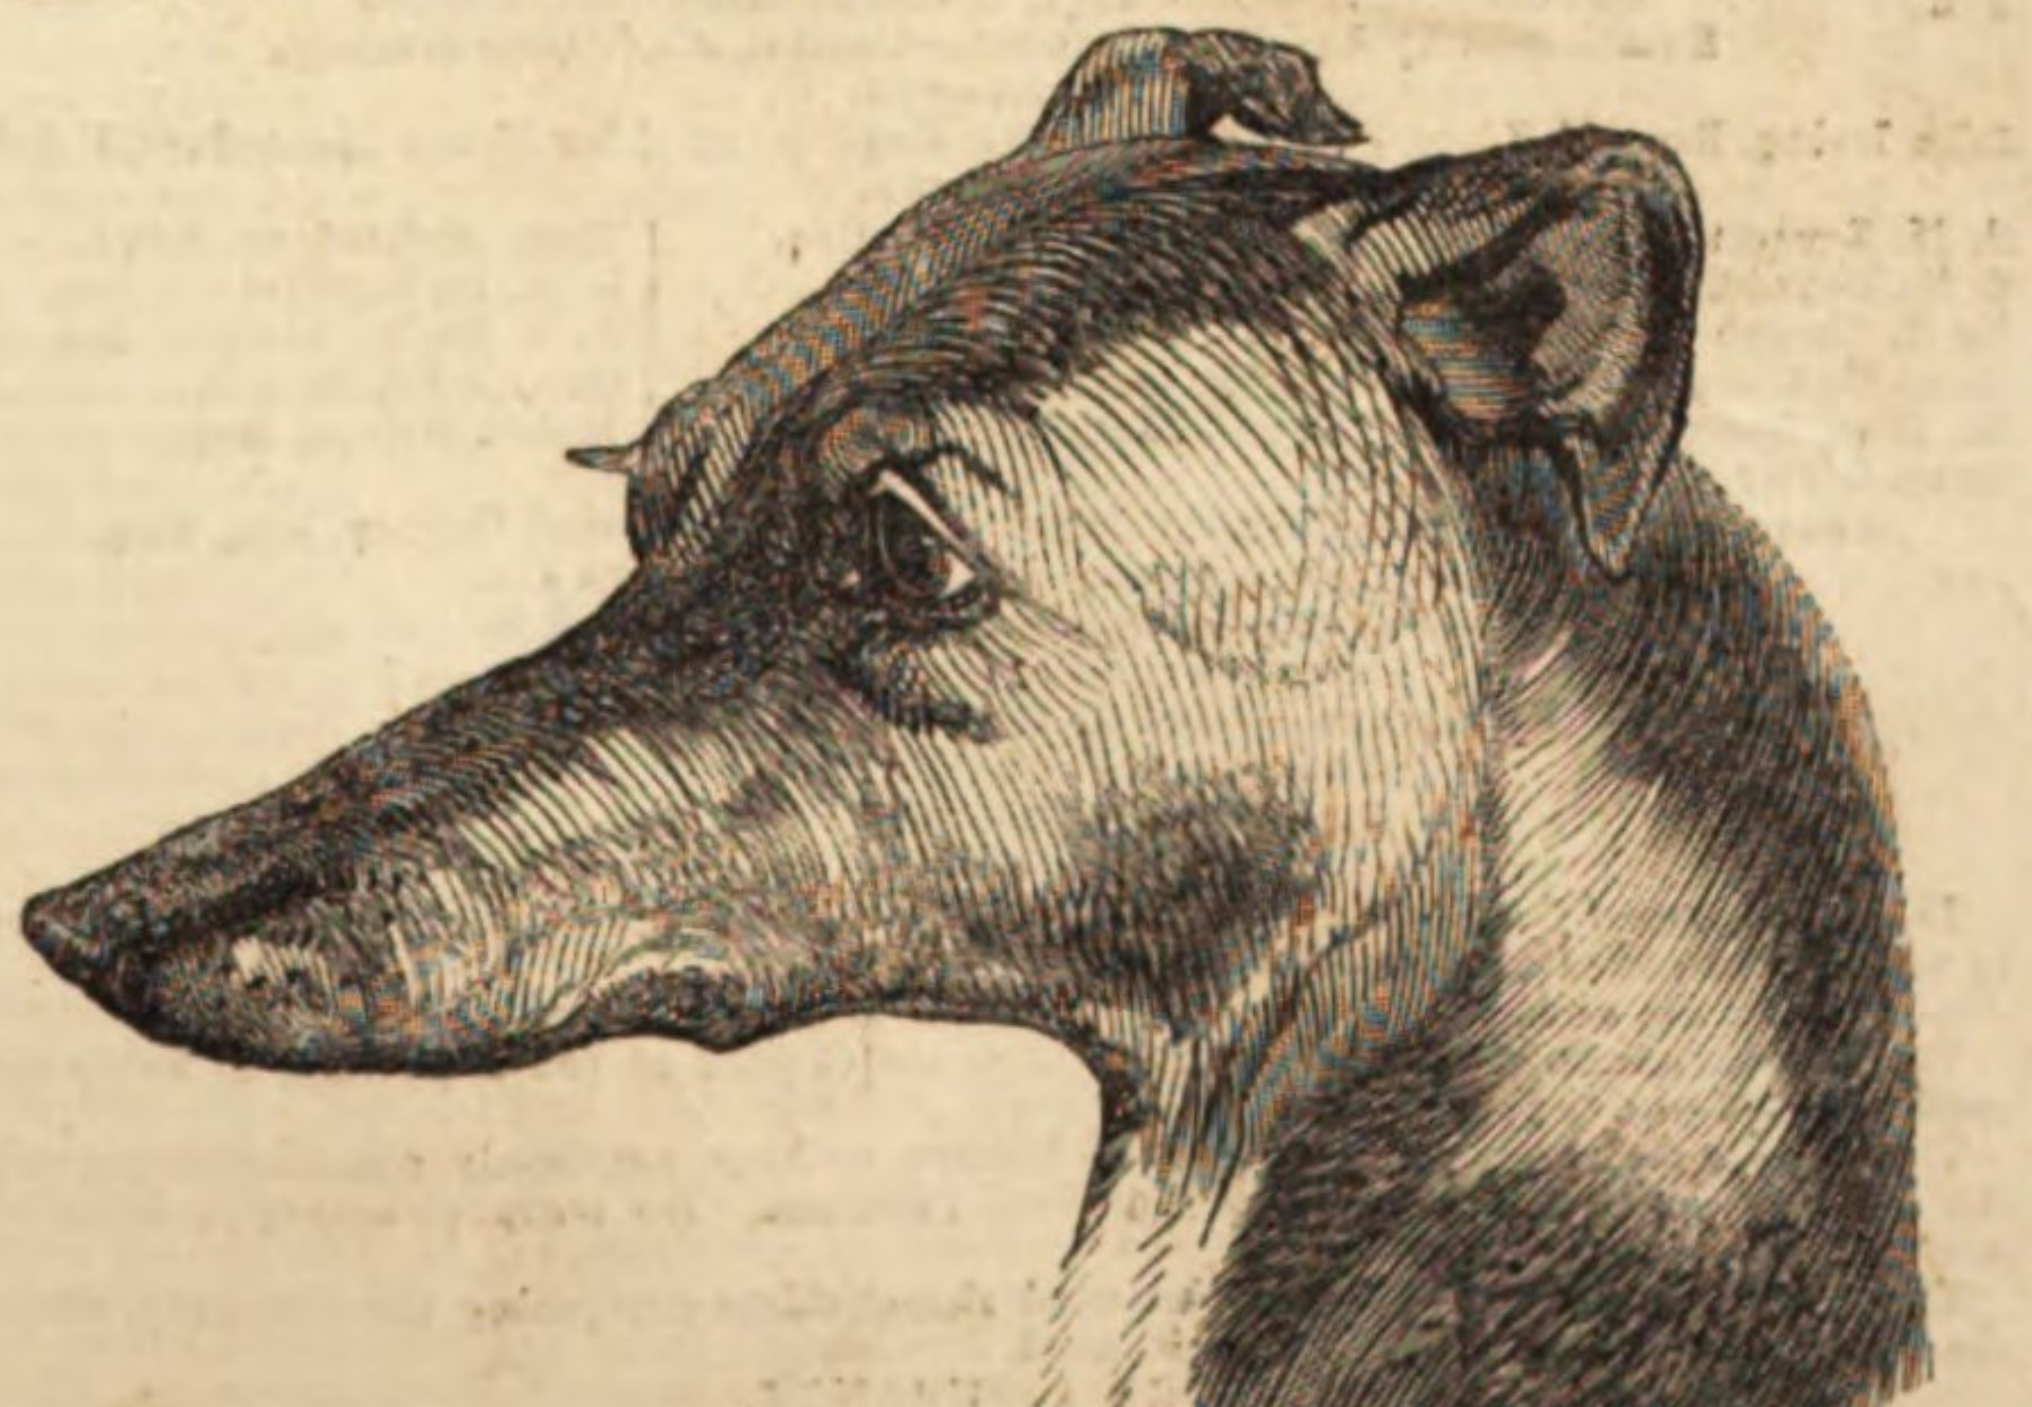
Professor Forbes says:—"The common form of glacier is a river of ice filling a valley, and pouring down its masses into other valleys yet lower. It is not a frozen ocean, but a frozen torrent. Its origin or fountain is in the ramification of the higher valleys and gorges, which descend amongst the mountains, perpetually snow-clad. But what gives to a glacier its most peculiar and characteristic feature is, that it does not belong exclusively or necessarily to the snowy region already mentioned. The snow disappears from its surface in summer, as



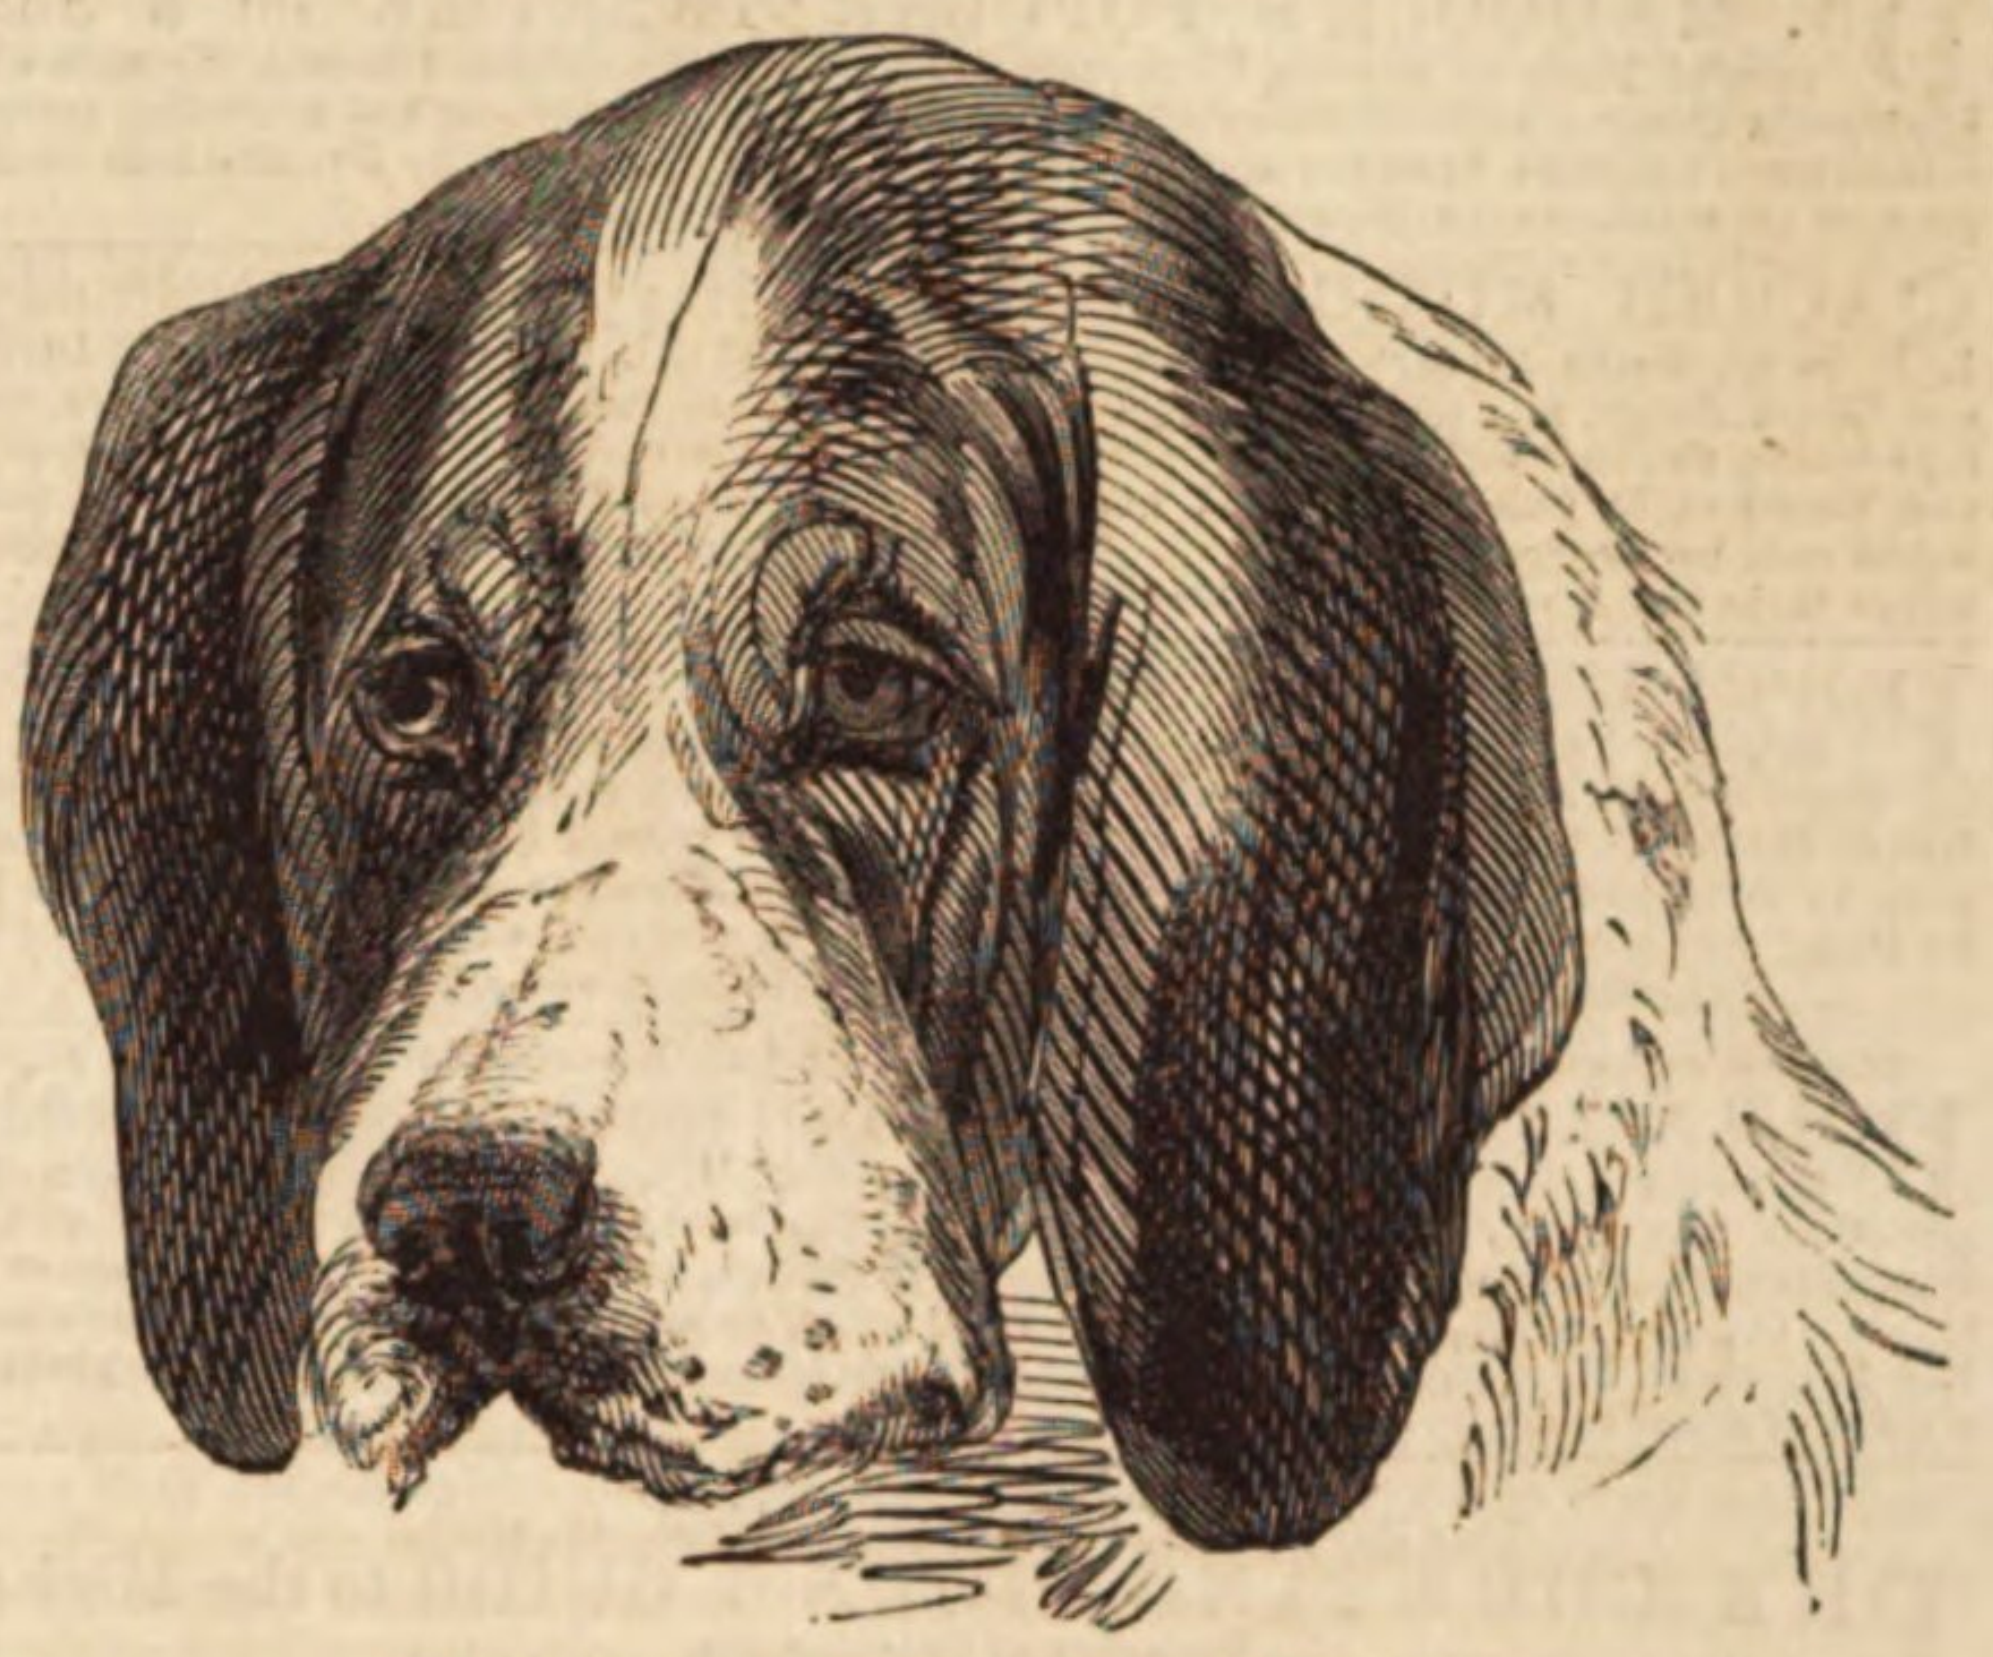
HEAD OF THE SCOTCH TERRIER.



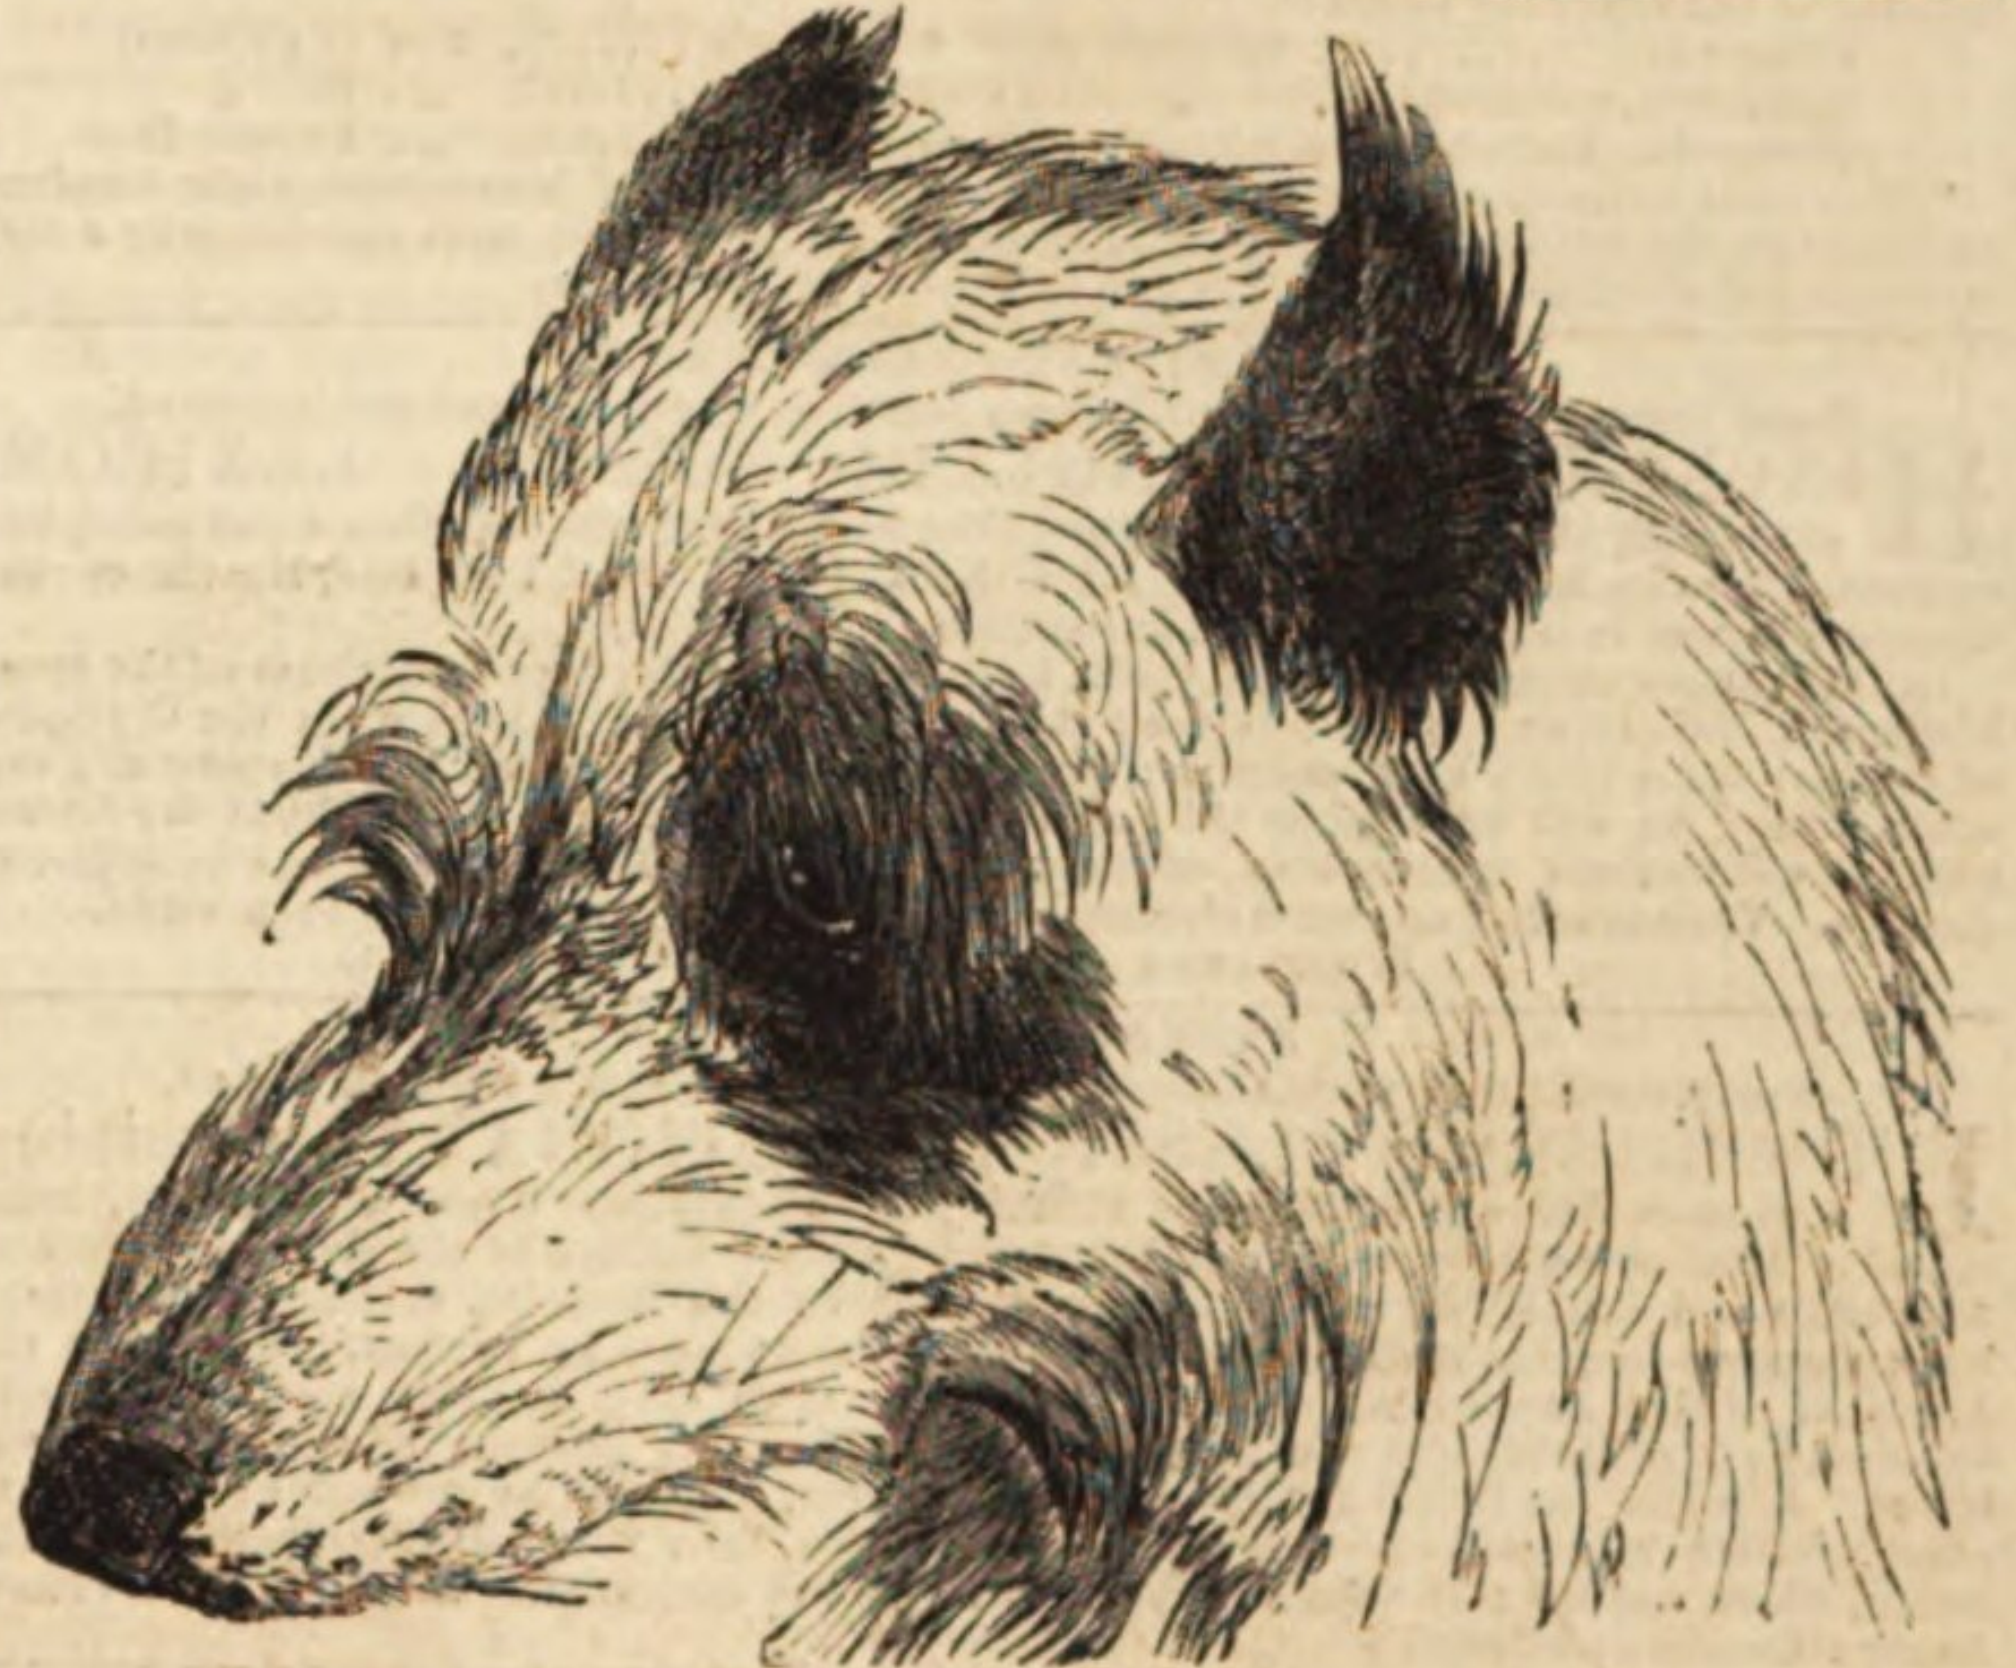
HEAD OF THE SHEPHERD'S DOG.



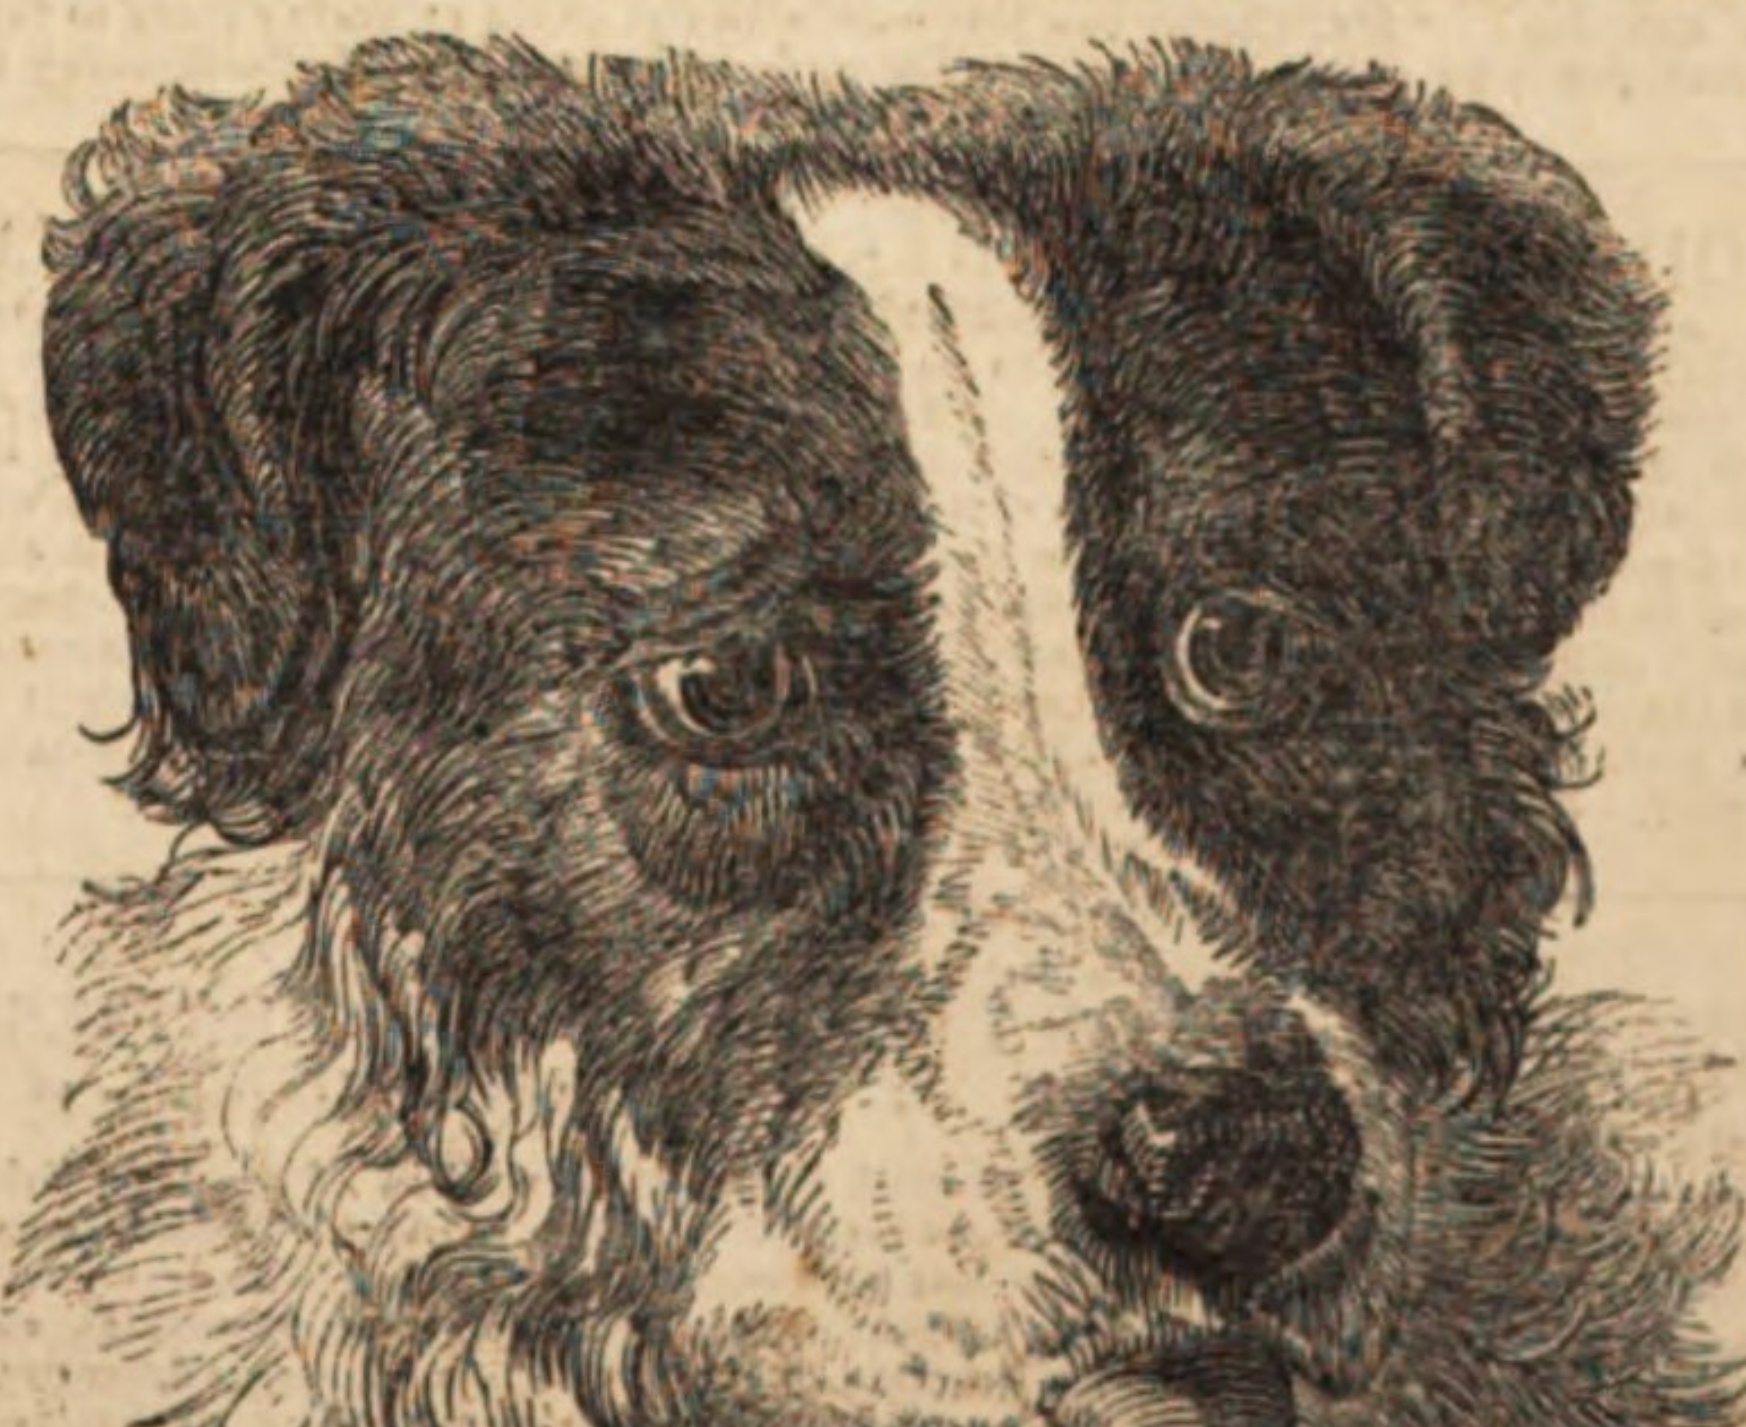
HEAD OF THE GREYHOUND.



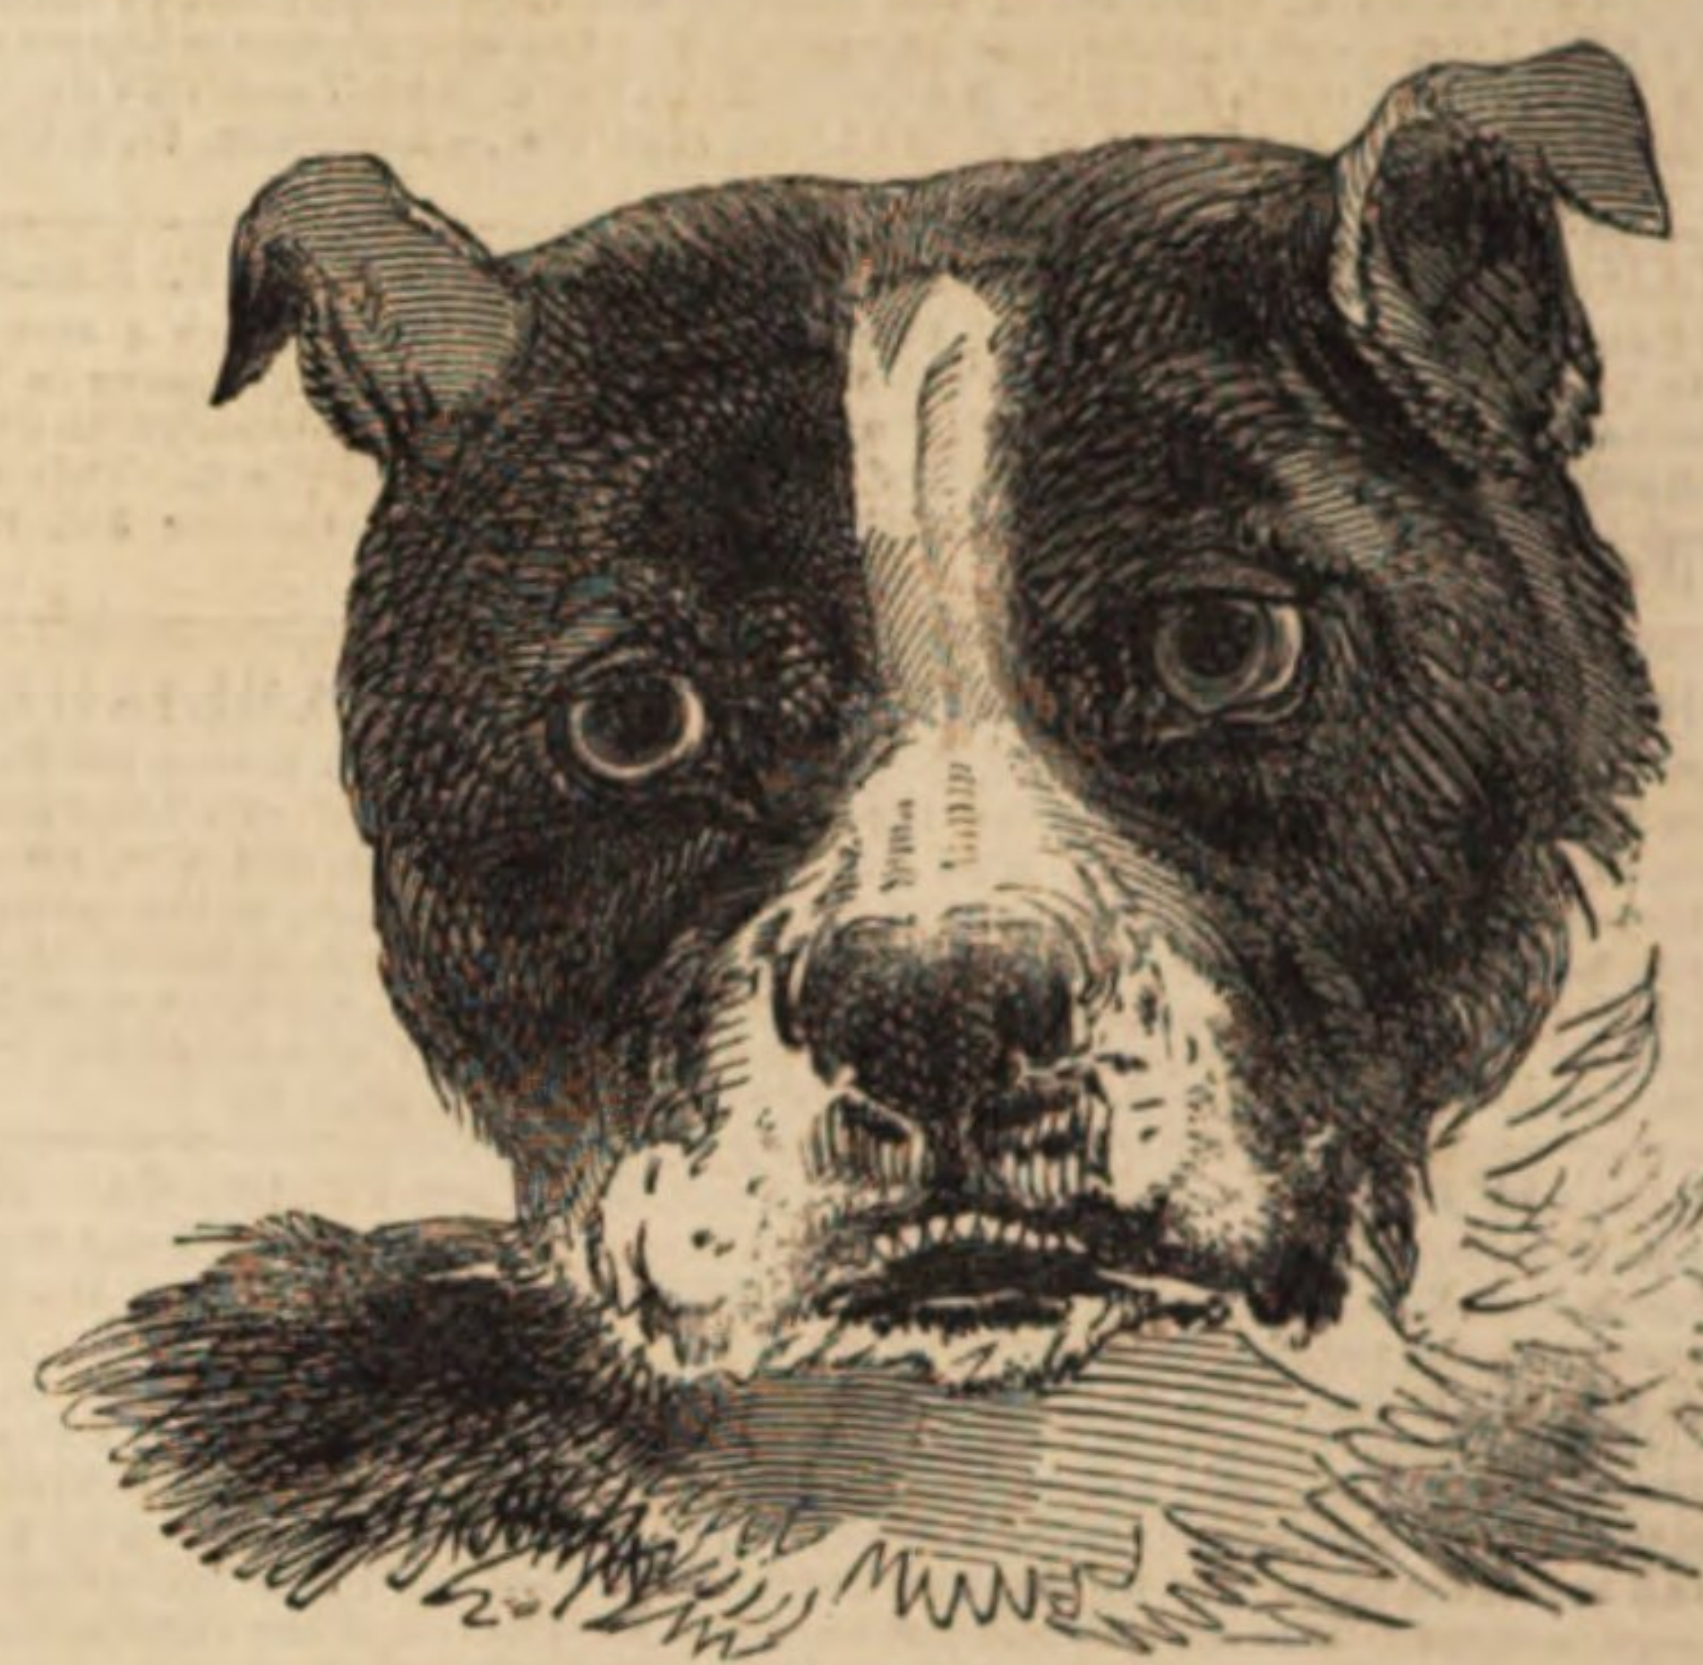
HEAD OF THE OLD ENGLISH HOUND.



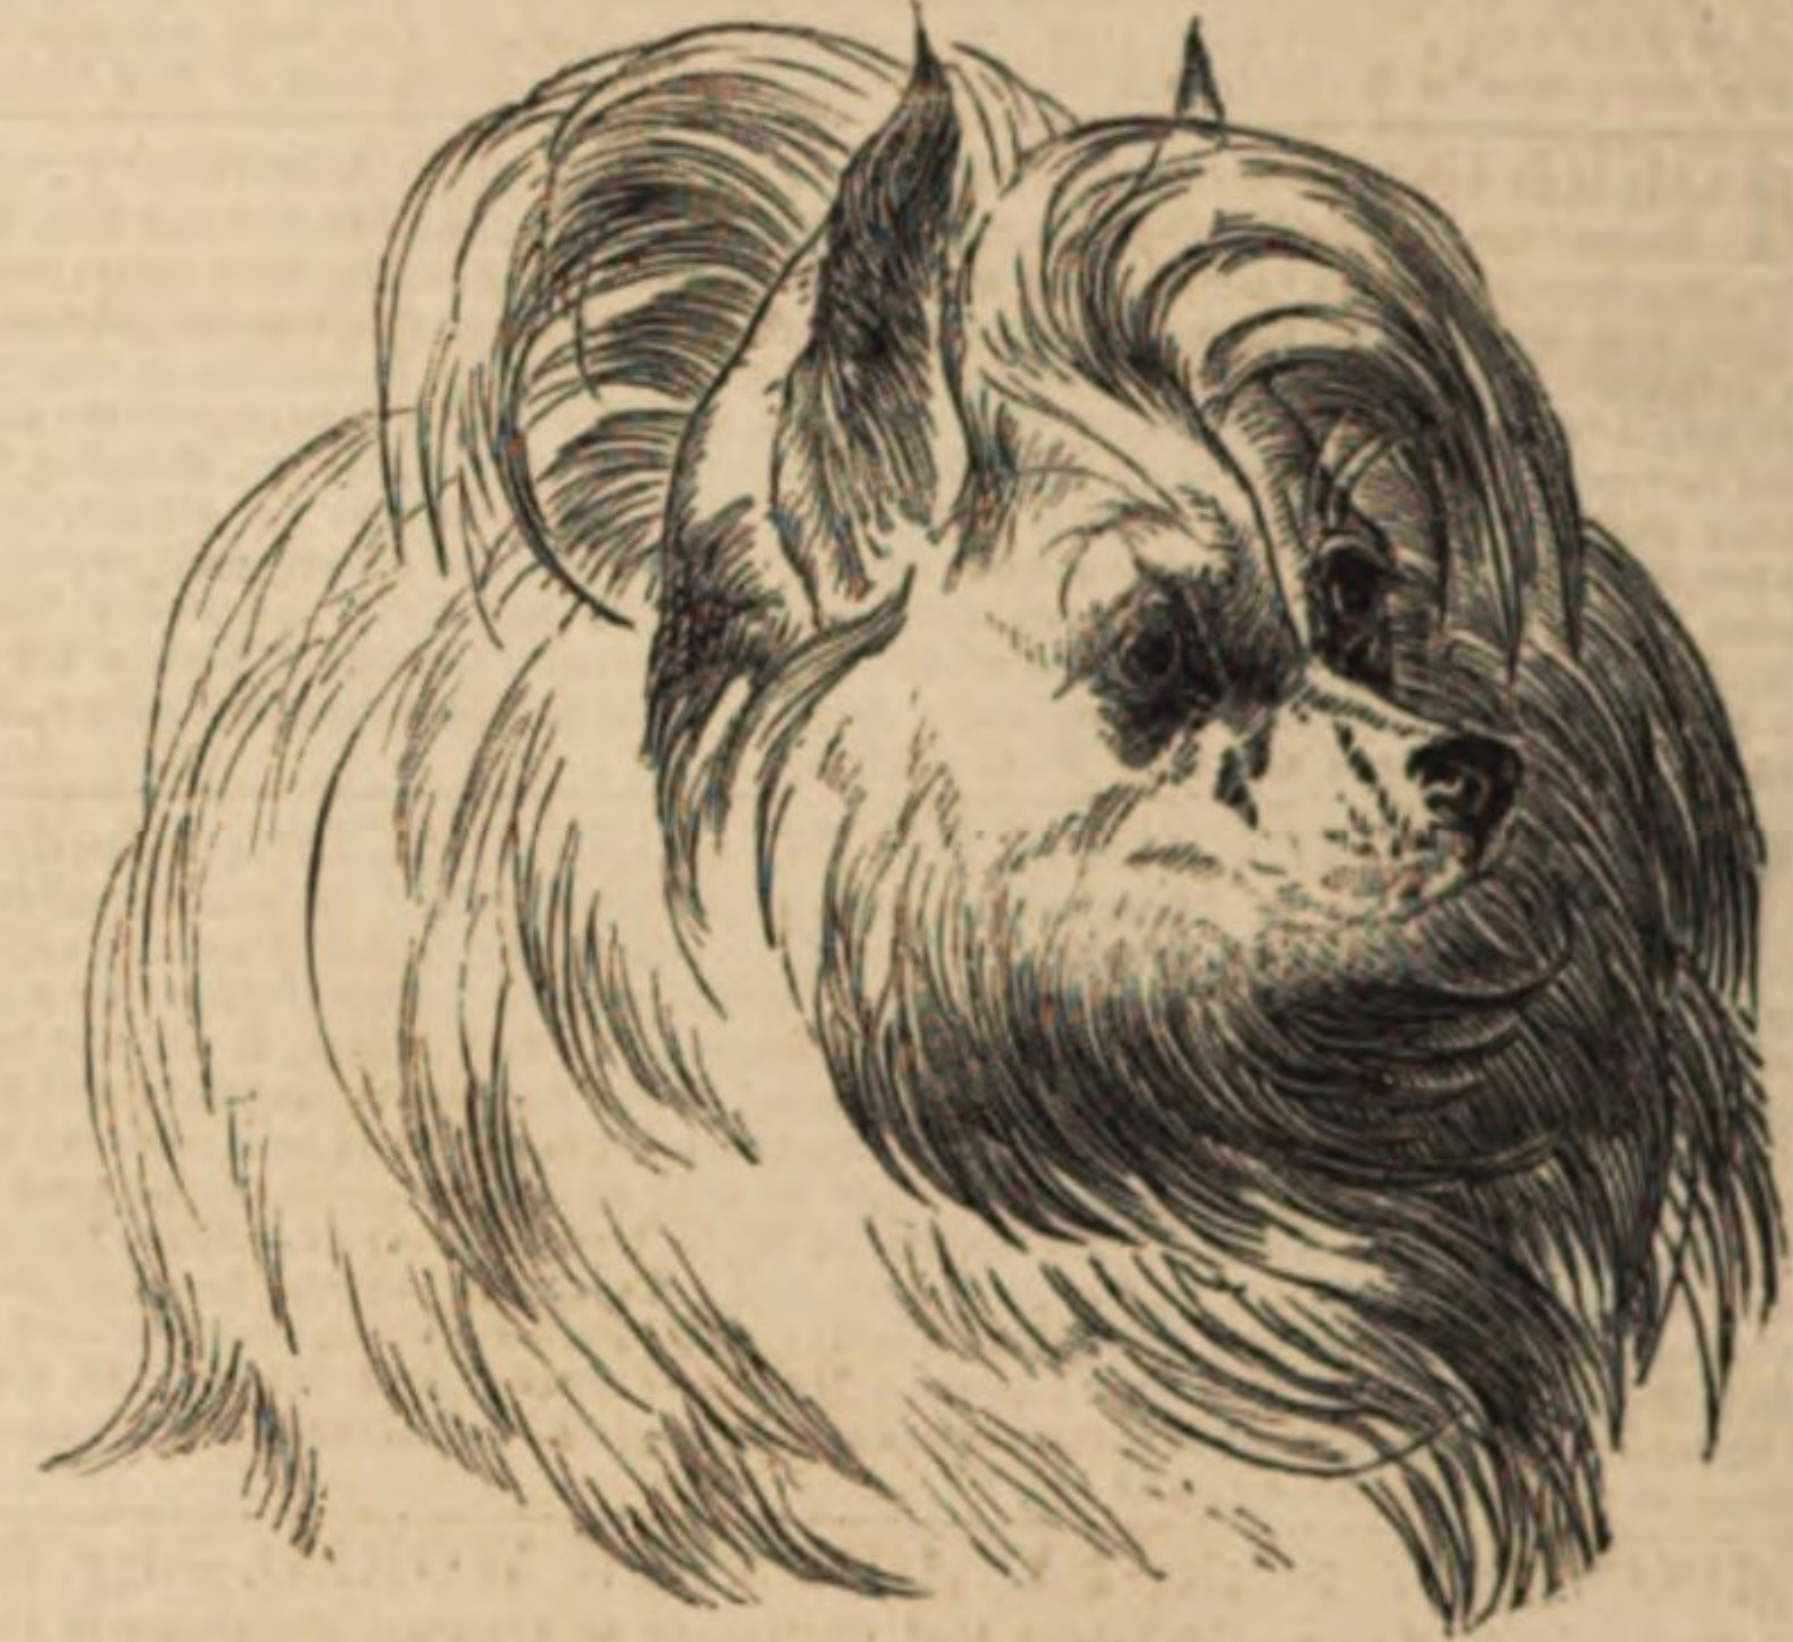
HEAD OF THE WOLF DOG.



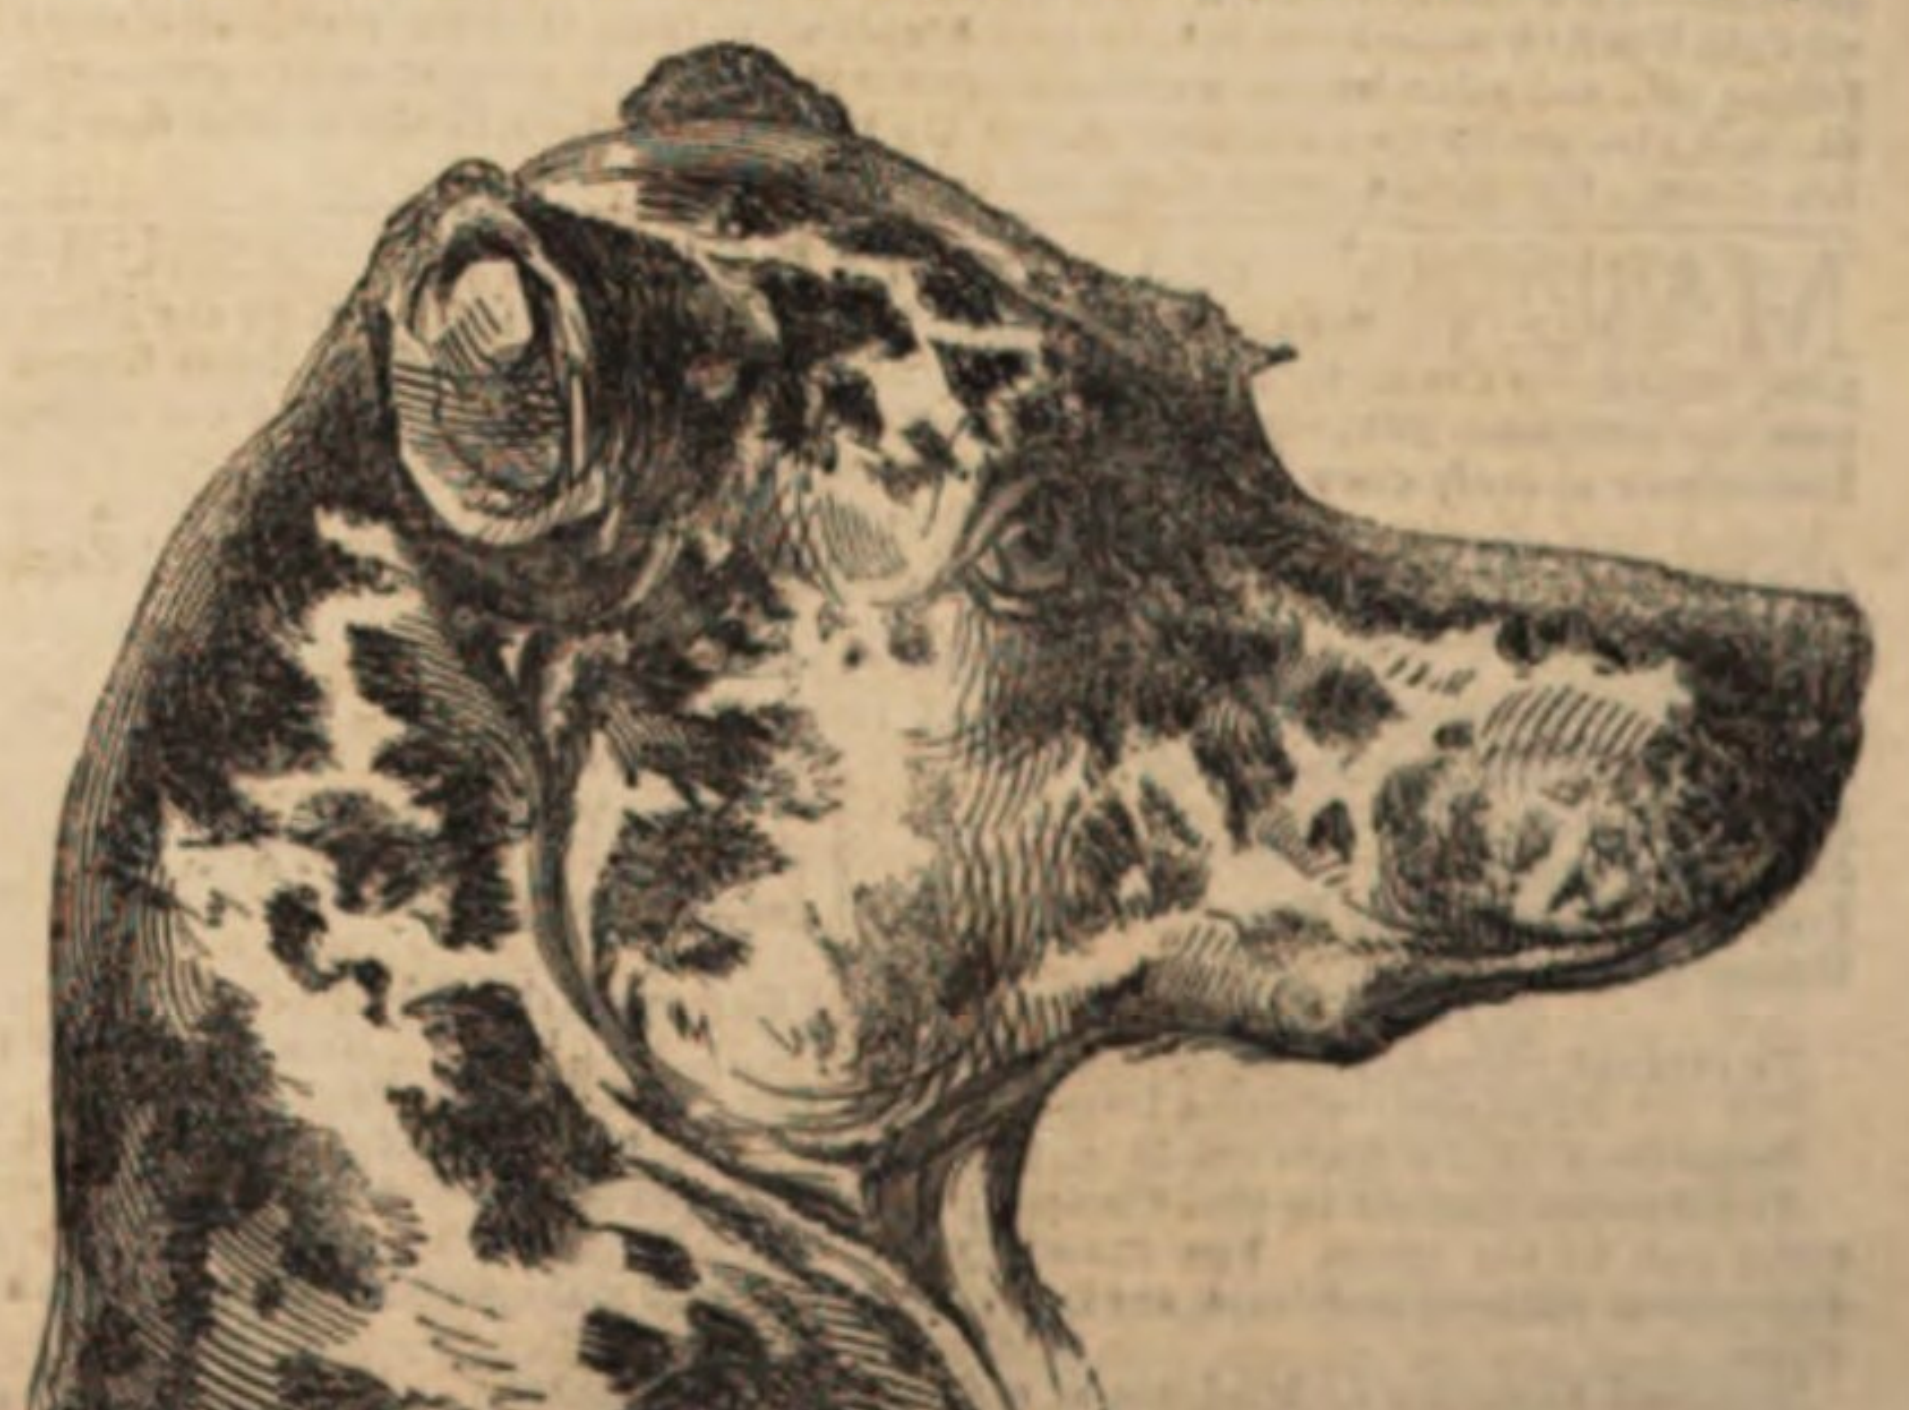
HEAD OF THE NEWFOUNDLAND DOG.



HEAD OF THE BULL DOG.



HEAD OF THE ICELAND DOG.



HEAD OF THE DALMATIAN DOG.

regularly as from that of the rocks which sustain its mass. It is the prolongation or outlet of the winter world above; its gelid mass is protruded into the midst of warm and pine-clad slopes and greenswards, and sometimes reaches even to the borders of cultivation. The very huts of the peasantry are sometimes invaded by this moving ice, and many persons now living have seen the full ears of corn touching the glacier, or gathered ripe cherries from the tree, with one foot standing on the ice. Thus much then, is plain, that the existence of the glacier in comparatively warm and sheltered situations, exposed to every influence which can insure and accelerate its liquifaction, can only be accounted for by supposing that the ice is pressed onwards by some secret spring, that its daily waste is renewed by its daily descent, and that the termination of the glacier, which presents a seeming barrier or crystal wall immovable, and having usually the same appearance and position, is, in fact, perpetually changing—a stationary form, of which the substance wastes—a thing permanent in the act of dissolution. The result of the heat of the valley in thawing the ice, is a stream of ice-cold turbid water, which issues from beneath its extremity, and which, by gradually undermining, works out a lofty cavern, from beneath which it rolls. This water is derived from various sources; in the first place, from the natural springs which, it may be conceived, rise from the earth beneath the ice, just as they would do in any other valley. This source remains, in a great measure, even in winter, when the glacier stream, though diminished, does not vanish. Secondly, from the heat of the earth in contact with the ice, which probably melts annually a very small thickness of its mass. This, too, will not depend upon the season. Thirdly, the fall of rain upon the whole area which the glacier valley drains—which acts, in the first place, by melting the superficial ice and snow; and the rain water, being thus reduced to the freezing point, washes through the cracks and fissures of the ice by innumerable streamlets, which unite beneath its mass, and swell the general stream. Fourthly, the waste of the glacier itself, due to the action of both sun and rain—a most important item, and which constitutes the main volume of most glacier streams, except in the depth of winter. It is on this account that the Rhine and other great rivers, derived from Alpine sources, have their greatest floods in July, and not in spring or autumn, as would be the case if they were alimented by rain water only. On the same account, the mountain torrents may be seen to swell visibly, and roar more loudly, as the hotter part of the day advances, to diminish towards evening, and in the morning to be smallest."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

UNEXAMPLED NOVELTY and Overflows to MAZEPPA and the MIRACLES of CARTER, at ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Re-engagement of Mr. Carter, the American Lion King for a few nights more.—Mr. Batty respectfully acquaints the Nobility and Public, from the immense sensation created by the lady entering the den of wild animals, Mr. Batty has prevailed upon her to enter the cage with Mr. Carter for Six Nights only. MONDAY, Oct. 5, and During the Week, at a Quarter to Seven—Lord Byron's MAZEPPA and the WILD HORSE, with all its original grand effects. Scenes of the Circle; concluding with the LION of the DESERT, or the French in Morocco. Abdallah, the Outcast Arab, Mr. Carter; who will introduce his Wonderful Feats in the Cage and on the Open Stage; Drive a Lion in Harness, and present to the public the greatest novelty ever witnessed in this country—introduce a Lady into the Cage among the Lion, Tigers, &c., to prove the tractability of his wild family, their subjugation, and obedience.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr W. D. Broadfoot.—Box-office open from Eleven till Five.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The PROTEOSCOPE, an original OPTICAL INSTRUMENT, unlimited in its appliances to Nature and Art, a highly valuable addition to LONGBOTTOM'S OPAQUE MICROSCOPE, the PHYSIOSCOPE, and the OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE. The PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATION of the PASSIONS, from COLLINS'S ODE, with Vocal and Instrumental Music, is the first subject exhibited by the PROTEOSCOPE, at a Quarter to Five o'clock in the Afternoon, and at a Quarter to Ten in the Evening. Dr. RYAN'S present daily Lecture is on POISONS and their ANTIDOTES, delivered at Half-past Three, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at a Quarter to Nine. Professor BACHHOFFNER Lectures on the alternate Evenings. The Lectures abound in interesting Experiments. The HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE, DIVING BELL and DIVER, &c. The Music is composed and conducted by T. WALLIS, Mus. Doc.—Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price.

GEOLOGICAL MINERALOGY.—Mr. J. TENNANT, F.G.S., will Commence a COURSE of LECTURES on MINERALOGY, with a view to facilitate the Study of GEOLOGY, and of the Application of Mineral Substances in the ARTS. The Lectures will be illustrated by an extensive Collection of Specimens, and will begin on WEDNESDAY MORNING the 9th of OCTOBER, at Nine o'Clock. They will be Continued on each Succeeding WEDNESDAY.—King's College, October 3rd, 1844 R. W. Jelf, D.D., Principal.

METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY—ESTABLISHED 1839. Offices, No. 1, Craven-street, Strand, London. Open from Eleven till Three o'clock daily. Loans are advanced by the Company on the security of two responsible housekeepers, in sums of £10 10s., £15, £20, £25, £30, £35, £40, £45, and £50, for periods of twenty-five weeks, at 2½ per cent., or of fifty weeks, at 5 per cent., at the option of the borrowers, to be repaid by weekly instalments. If the securities are approved by the directors at their weekly meeting, the loans are immediately advanced. Amounts exceeding £50 are advanced by special agreement with the directors. Forms of application, containing the rules and regulations, may be had at any hour of the day, price 2d.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, for Cash only, at RALPH and Co's, 54, Cheapside.—Ivory handled Table-knives, quality warranted, 11s. 6d. per dozen; a bold Bronze Fender, with steel bar, 15s.; a set of Six imperial Dish-covers, tops raised, in one piece, 17s.; new silver pattern ditto, in one entire piece, 45s. per set: pure British Plate Spoons or Forks—Tables, 16s.; Dessert, 11s.; Tea, 6s., per dozen; strong lacquered Cornice Poles, all brass, 1½ inches, 2 inches, and 2½ inches diameter, at 1s. 6d., 1s. 9d., and 2s. per foot; Bed-room Stoves, 4d. per inch; good Register Stoves, with double backs, &c., 2 feet 6 inches inches wide, 22s. 6d.; 3 feet wide, 27s.; strong Kitchen Range, with self-acting oven and boiler, wrought bars, &c., the best that can be made, 3 feet 6 inches wide, 100s.; 4 feet wide, 110s.; and all other articles, of the best manufacture, at equally low prices at RALPH and Co.'s, 54, Cheapside; two doors west of Bow Church.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be procured from this establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention cithey in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid or even sea-water. Black and Grey and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plads and Merinos of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for mourning, in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c. W. C. JAY and Co.

WOOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies, it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured by EDWARD L. WOOLLASTON, Dover. Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Messrs. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Messrs. Evans and Lercher, Bartholomew-close; Mr. Snelling, 30, Fenchurch-street; and retailed by Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Messrs. Ball, 81, New Bond-street; Messrs. Fortnum and Mason, 182, Picadilly; and by all respectable Patent Medicine Vendors, Druggists, and Italian Warehousemen, in packets, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 5s.

IMPORTANT to the FASHIONABLE WORLD.—By far the most influential of all the graces that contribute to personal adornment is the Hair. Its recovery, preservation, and improvement proportionably concern the elegantés of our fashionable circles, and any information which will ensure these desirable results will be hailed as an inestimable boon. The following extract from the letter of a respectable chemist in Bridlington, will be read with the highest interest:—"A lady, a customer of mine, has found great benefit from the use of your Balm. About six months ago her hair nearly all fell off. I recommended her to try your BALM of COLUMBIA, which she did. In the course of a few applications the hair ceased to fall off. Before she had used one 3s. 6d. bottle, it began to grow very profusely, and she has now a beautiful head of hair.—I am, gentlemen, yours, respectfully, WM. SMITH, Chemist and Druggist, Market-place, Bridlington. To Messrs. C. and A. Oldridge. March 13, 1844." C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA causes the hair to curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off; and a few bottles generally restore it again. It also prevents greyness. 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle; no other prices are genuine.—OLDRIDGE'S BALM.—1, Wellington street; the second house from the Strand.

MARINERS' and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, Empowered by Act of Parliament for Insurances on the Lives of Mariners, whether of the Royal or Mercantile Navy, Pilots, Members of the Coast Guard, Fishermen, or Boatmen, Military Men and Civilians proceeding to any part of the Globe, as also Individuals of every class in society, resident on shore.

TRUSTEES.

Admiral Sir Philip Henderson Durham, G.C.B.
Joseph Somes, Esq.
Vice-Admiral Sir William Hall Gage, G.C.H.

DIRECTORS.

The Right Hon. Captain Lord Viscount Ingestre, R.N., C.B., M.P.

Captain Thomas Dickinson, R.N.
Philip Baker, Esq.
Joseph Bishop, Esq.
Frederick Heisch, jun., Esq.
George Mann, Esq
Sir George Rich.
John Warrick, Esq.
Edmund Turner Watts, Esq.
John Wills, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England and Commercial Bank of London.
PHYSICIAN—Sir James Eglintoun Anderson, M.D., M.R.I.A., 11, New Burlington-street.
SURGEON—Charles Ildertou Croft, Esq., 22, Laurence Pountney-lane.
SOLICITOR—John Hayward, Esq., 2, Adelaide-place, London-bridge, and Dartford, Kent.

The Policies granted by this Company cover Voyages of every description and service in every part of the globe. The Premiums for Life Policies, with permission to go any and everywhere without forfeiture, are lower than have ever hitherto been taken for such general risks.

Deferred Annuities to Mariners at very moderate premiums.

The Premiums for all General Assurances are based upon a new adjusted Table of Mortality.

Ten per Cent. of the profits applied in making provision for destitute and disabled mariners.

JOHN DAWSON, Resident Manager.

Arthur-street East, London-bridge.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE for OCTOBER, price 1s. 6d. This monthly is an unique combination of Art and Literature. The designs are by KENNY MEADOWS, HINE, &c., &c. The contributions are unusually interesting.

CONTENTS:

- Rambles Round London. By Luke Roden, M.D.
- Musings of a Wanderer, No. I.
- A Village Sketch. By Miss Camilla Toulmin.
- The Sea-Serpent Chase.
- The Man of High Notions. By Laman Blanchard.
- Church yard Thoughts.
- Sonnet. By Mrs. Scott.
- The Philosophy of Shops. By Angus B. Reach.
- Mad Austin. By Augustine Wade.
- Song of a Flower Spirit.
- Adventures of a Scamp. Chap. VII The Swinestead Poll. Chap. VIII. The Swinestead Return, and our Return from Swinestead.
- Dwellings of the Poor. From the Note-book of an M.D.
- Boys of London. The Steam-boat Boy. By Mark Lemon.
- Fine Arts. Judgment of Paris.
- Addison and Holland House. By John Timbs.
- Musings of a Wanderer. Nos. II. and III.
- A Tale of the French Revolution.
- New Books, &c. &c

Office, 2, Crane-court, Fleet-street: and sold by all Booksellers.

ON LORD WHARNCLIFFE'S CATHOLIC BEQUEST BILL and other CATHOLIC MATTERS. By J. E. DEVEREUX. Part the First. Published by WALL, Richmond. Sold by LITTLE, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden; BATTERSBY, Dublin; WHEELOCK, Wexford.

Second edition, demy 8vo., 544 pages, with 50 illustrations, 18s. bds.

THE FOSSIL REMAINS of the ANIMAL KINGDOM. By EDWARD PIDGEON, Esq. Illustrated with 50 engravings. Formerly published as a supplementary volume to Griffith's translation of "Cuvier's Animal Kingdom."
WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria lane.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster row.; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

Second Edition, price 1s. 6d.,

CHEMISTRY MADE EASY for the USE of AGRICULTURISTS; by Rev. J. TOPHAM, M.A.—"A more useful—practically useful—Work than this, it would be impossible to place in the hands of a Farmer."—John Bull, Sept. 21st, 1844. WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane, London.

THE ELEMENTS of MUSIC; by C. DAWSON, price 3s. —"The exorbitant price hitherto charged for Elementary Musical Works has placed them beyond the reach of many, but here we have all that is useful or necessary in Burrowes's two expensive volumes, at one-fifth the price."—Christian Witness, Sept., 1844.
London: C. OLLIVIER, Bond street; LONGMAN and Co., Paternoster-row.

THE Musical Public will find a Large Stock of all kinds of VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, in good condition, at One-third of the Published Price (4d in the Shilling), at ROBINSON'S, 71, Wardour-street, Soho. They supply genuine editions of all New Music, and keep a choice selection of Songs, Duets, Glees, Polkas, Quadrilles, Waltzes, Overtures, &c.—Music bought, or taken in exchange.

Just Published, Price One Shilling, with superior Etchings on Steel, the First Part of

THE LOVE MATCH. A work of the most profoundly humorous character, designed to illustrate the various conflicting influences which sprang from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Todd.
By HENRY COCKTON, Author of "Valentine Vox," "Stanley Thorn," "The Sisters," &c.
London: WM. CLARK.

LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for OCTOBER, Price 1s., post free 1s. 6d., contains a superb extra Plate (Gratis), all the Paris Fashions, and an immense variety of new Winter Costumes, which cannot appear in any other work; 4 Plates, 70 Figures, 100 New Patterns of Walking and Children's Dresses, Bonnets, Cloaks, &c., with descriptions; Tales, Poetry, &c.
G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand.

Just published, price 5s. 6d., with cases and coloured plates,

DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a Successful Mode of treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic, Nervous and Spasmodic Coughs, and Affections of the Heart.—"Full of important and consoling facts."—Gazette. London: SIMPKIN and MARSHALL.—Gratuitous advice by Dr. Maddock to the poor, at his residence, 10, Hunter street, Brunswick square.

SACRED MUSIC by CLARE.—His popular Psalmody, in Six Books, 3s. each; Thirteen Beauties of HANDEL, 6s.; all Dr. WATTS'S Divine and Moral Songs, 6s.; and Dr. HAYE'S Sixteen Psalms and Hymns, for two, three, and four voices, 6s., and without words. One Hundred Psalms and Hymns, 4s.; One Hundred and Thirty-eight Chants, 4s.; and his very easy System of Chanting, 3s.—London, published only by Messrs. COCKS and Co., No. 20, Princes-street, Hanover-square, Musicsellers to her Majesty. To be had of all Musicsellers.

POPULAR MUSIC in the PIANO for OCTOBER. The only four Polkas that are really popular:—The Cerito Polka; original Opera Polka; the Court Polka; and the Drawing-Room Polka, as danced at all Balls, &c. Also, a New Grand Medley Divertimento, as played by her Majesty's private Band; a beautiful original Song by Pendleton; and the set of Favourite Autumnal Nosegay Quadrilles, composed by Le Duc. The whole for 1s., or 1s. 4d. post free, would cost in any other way 18s.
Published by DUNCOMBE, 10, Middle-row, Holborn, and all Booksellers.

Mitchell's Illustrated and Improved Work on the Ball Room.—Now ready, price 1s.,

POLKA LESSON BOOK, or Ball-room Guide.—In addition to a complete Cours de Polka, with beautiful representations and correct instructions how to execute the various figures. This work contains the figures of all the Quadrilles, Gallopades, Mazourkas, Polonaises, Polkas, and all those dances adopted at Court. Order Mitchell's Edition of any bookseller, or of the publisher, C. MITCHELL, Red Lion court, Fleet-street; who sends the work (post-free) on receipt of 1s., or postage stamps of equal value.

MR. TATE'S NEW WORKS.
This Day is published, in one vol. 12mo., 4s., cloth,

THE COUNTING-HOUSE GUIDE to the Higher Branches of Calculations.
By WILLIAM TATE, Author of the "Modern Cambist," "Commercial Arithmetic," &c.
Also, by the same Author,
PART II., Forming a SUPPLEMENT and KEY to the above, 6s., cloth.
London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, 18, Bishopsgate-street Within; LONGMAN and Co.; and all Booksellers.

In 16 volumes, with 814 Engravings,

CUVIER'S ANIMAL KINGDOM. Translated by E. GRIFFITH, F.A.S., and Others. The small remaining stock reduced to the following prices:—

Demy 8vo.	formerly £26	8	0	cloth	now	12	guineas.
Royal 8vo., coloured	„	51	12	0 „	„	25	„
Demy 4to., India proof..	„	52	16	0 „	„	24	pounds.

"This truly national work contains nine thousand pages of letter-press, eight hundred and fourteen engravings, is unique in its kind, and has undergone most satisfactorily a very severe ordeal of criticism." WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

THE CHEAPEST GREEK LEXICON.
Royal 12mo., price 10s. 6d. bound, second edition, much enlarged and improved,

HINCKS' GREEK-ENGLISH SCHOOL LEXICON, containing all the words that occur in the books used in most schools and collegiate courses. By the Rev. THOMAS D. HINCKES, LL.D., M.R.I.A., late Master of the Classical School in the Royal Belfast Institution.

In this edition several additional works have been included, especially those of the great historians, Herodotus and Thucydides; the Odyssey of Homer; Anacreon; the Olympics of Pindar: some Idyl's of Theocritus; the Nubes of Aristophanes; the Septuagint; and some others, as will be seen by the Index. These, in addition to the works in the former edition, will include illustrations of the language at different periods and in different dialects. Various other extensive alterations and improvements have also been made.
WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria lane.

BARKER'S L'EMPRIERE.
Complete Edition, with Anthon's Improvements, 8vo., price 16s. 6d. bound,

L'EMPRIERE'S CLASSICAL DICTIONARY, containing a copious Account of Persons, Places, and Remarkable Works of Art, &c., mentioned in Ancient Authors, with Appendixes, &c. Fourth Edition of the combined Work of ANTHON and BARKER; revised and augmented by the Rev. Dr. GILES. This Work has undergone frequent revision, and the great additions made by Professor Anthon, in the American edition, have been introduced: assistance from other eminent scholars was also obtained by Mr. Barker and subsequent Editors, and a vast quantity of matter thus collected. It is now the fullest Dictionary on the subject, it containing upwards of 1100 octavo pages, double columns.—London: WHITTAKER and Co.; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; Smith, Elder, and Co.; H. Washbourne; Houlston and Stoneman. Eton: E. P. Williams. Rugby: Combe and Crossley.

COLLIER'S NEW EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.
Just published, in 8 vols. 8vo., cloth lettered, price £4 16s., with a facsimile of the Portrait of Shakespeare in the first folio,

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE, comprising the Plays and Poems. The text formed from an entirely new collation of the old editions: with the various Readings, Notes, a Life of the Poet, and a History of the early English Stage. By J. PAYNE COLLIER, Esq. "Mr. Collier has formed his text from an entirely new collation of the old quartos, for which facilities hitherto out of any commentator's reach, were supplied by the liberality of the Duke of Devonshire and Lord Francis Egerton."—The Examiner. "Mr. Collier has just reason to feel proud at having given to the press what may justly be esteemed a classic edition of the immortal works."—Morning Herald.
WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria lane.

Fourth Year, foolscap 8vo., price 9s., cloth,

DODD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, and TITLED CLASSES of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND. Alphabetically arranged, and containing, in addition to the usual contents of a Peerage, the Junior Branches of the Nobility, Knights, Bishops, Judges, Privy Councillors, &c. By C. R. DODD, Esq., Author of "The Parliamentary Pocket Companion," &c. Since the last edition, the occurrence of 421 deaths, 203 new creations, 156 marriages, together with the mass of promotions attendant on the Chinese and Affghan wars, have rendered an entire revision of the work necessary from the first article to the last.—"The arrangement of this volume is complete; the care, diligence, and accuracy with which it has been executed fully realise the original and judicious plan of the work; it gives so much of genealogy as possesses historical interest, at the same time answering the purposes of a biographical dictionary, a family record, and an official register."—The Times.
WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria lane.

OLLENDORFF'S METHOD—LATIN.
Just published, 12mo., price 3s. cloth lettered,

FIRST LATIN GRAMMAR and EXERCISES on OLLENDORFF'S METHOD. By WILLIAM HENRY PINNOCK, of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

"This is an adaptation of the celebrated Ollendorff's method of teaching living languages to the dead ones, and a very slight inspection of Mr. Pinnock's Latin Grammar will be sufficient to show that the attempt has been successfully made. The first steps in the acquisition of Greek and Latin are to the youthful student so irksome, so painful, so uncertain, that a plan which facilitates his progress by simplifying his labour, is deserving of all encouragement. The pupil and the tutor are alike benefitted by its application. Mr. Pinnock has accomplished these important objects in the little volume before us; and we have his assurance that he has long employed the Ollendorff method with considerable advantage among his own pupils."—John Bull.
WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

MRS. TROLLOPE'S NEW NOVEL.
Just Ready, in 3 vols., post 8vo.,

YOUNG LOVE.
BY MRS. TROLLOPE.
Also, Just Published,

ARTHUR ARUNDEL; a Tale of the English Revolution.
By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Author of "Brambletye House," &c. 3 vols.
"One of the best of Horace Smith's works."—Chronicle.
"Even superior to 'Brambletye House.'"—Sun
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

A NEW POCKET BIOGRAPHY.
In a neat pocket volume, price 6s. bound, Eighth Edition, with additions and improvements,

A NEW BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY; containing a Brief Account of the most Eminent Persons and Remarkable Characters in Every Age and Nation. By STEPHEN JONES. "The present edition has received no less than 347 new articles relating to Celebrated Characters deceased since the seventh passed through the press."—Preface.—LONGMAN and Co.; T. Cadell; Hamilton and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; Harvey and Darton; Peacock and Mansfield; F. and J. Rivington; T. Tegg: Houlston and Stoneman; Souter and Law; R. Mackie; T. Allman; and W. Morrison. York: Wilson and Sons. Dublin: J. Cumming.

Just published, demy 4to., neatly bound in cloth, with Engravings and Diagrams, price 6s.

THE HAND-BOOK to the PIANOFORTE, comprising an Easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in General; the Art of Fingering, according to the modes of the best masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the Major and Minor Keys; and interspersed by Relaxations from Study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and selections from the Pianoforte Compositions of some of the most celebrated masters. Also, a Short and Easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint, and a New Vocabulary of Terms. By J. AUGUSTINE WADE, author of "The Dwelling of Fancy;" "Songs of the Flowers;" "The Two Houses of Grenada," an Opera; "The Prophecy," an Oratorio, &c., &c.

"It is said of men of genius that their productions are never founded upon utilitarian principles. No assertion can be more vague or false. The first principle of genius is perspicuity, the power of coudensing facts for the dissemination of knowledge. The book now before us is the most admirable instance we have ever met with of a man (acknowledged as a poet and a composer), condescending to construct a threshold to harmony. Mr. Wade has written the best first book we ever read. We regret having neither time nor space at this period to do justice to a work that we may fairly term a pilot balloon, for the author evidently means this to point out the way to the shortest and best route to a thorough knowledge of music. As he progresses we shall recur to the present publication, which we do look upon as the best of its class yet in print."—Sunday Times.
London: Published by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

POPE and PLANTE, Manufacturers of all the best descriptions of WINTER and COTTON HOSIERY, as to elasticity and durability, have introduced ELASTIC GAITERS for Ladies, peculiarly neat and convenient in their use, of materials and textures applicable for all seasons, suitable for home, the carriage' promenade, or equestrian wear. Can be forwarded in a letter.—4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall.

SILVER FLAT HORIZONTAL WATCHES, carefully finished, with engine-turned cases, jewelled in four holes, going barrel to continue the action of the watch while winding, are offered, price ten guineas each. These elegant little watches will be found to perform very correctly, and a printed undertaking is given with fixed terms on which they will always receive any attention required.—T. COX SAVORY, Watchmaker, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London. N.B. Secondhand watches purchased in exchange.

SOCIETY of DANCERS and TEACHERS of DANCING. —The Members of the Profession, Male and Female, Native and Foreign, on or off the Stage, are earnestly requested to Join this Charitable Society, formed for the Relief of Aged and Distressed Members. Donations will be thankfully received at the Society's Bankers, Messrs. Coutts, Strand, London. Candidates can enter their names, and obtain further particulars, at the Society's Office, 32, Gerrard-street, Soho.—Mr. T. W. Beckett has resigned the Secretaryship of the Society.

INVALIDS AND CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Chaises, Vis-a-Vis Waggons of various sizes, Phaetons, Barouches, and other designs of various qualities, at very reduced prices. Invalid Wheel-chairs of numerous designs, from the cheapest to the most expensive builds, second-hand as well as new, and can be had with Hoods of Leather, Macintosh, or Canvas, to be put up or down. Long Bed or Spinal Carriages. Self-acting Wheel chairs, affording any degree of exercise. On sale or hire at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.

CROSBY HALL VAULTS, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within. —CURRALL and SON beg to invite public notice to their STOCK of OLD BOTTLED WINES: they being desirous to secure that patronage which WINES of the first quality, at fair and remunerating profits, will maintain, respectfully submit the annexed list of cash prices:—Port, old bottled, 36s. and 42s.; Do., six years in bottle, 48s; Do., superior draught, 28s. and 33s.; Sherries, pale and brown, 36s.; Do., do., 42s. to 48s.; Bucellas, 32s.; Sherry (excellent dinner wine), 28s.; Marsala, 24s. per dozen. Bottles, 2s. 6d. per dozen; hampers, 1s. each.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

TRUE ECONOMY consists in purchasing, not the lowest-priced goods, but good and durable articles proportionably cheap.—The SHIRTS supplied by W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, Strand (established 20 years), are, for excellence and cheapness, unequalled. Long Cloth Shirts, Linen Fronts, &c., best make and warranted material, 6s. 6d. each, equal to those usually charged 8s. 6d.: and all Linen Shirts, 10s. 6d., usual price 12s 6d. Half-a-dozen sent carriage free to any part of the Kingdom, upon receipt of a post-office order for the amount. The dimensions required are the tight measure of the neck, chest, and wrist.

NEW PATENTS.—BROCKEDON'S IMPROVED STOPPERS.—This important Invention, a Substitute for Corks and Bungs, has, by new and Great Improvements, become a pure, imperishable, and perfect means of preserving, for any length of time, Wine, Beer, Spirits, &c. They are cheap and easily applied, and the appearance which they now have of fine Cork has removed the prejudice against their former dark colour. Also, DECANTER STOPPERS, to keep Wine which is in daily use in perfect condition.—C. MACINTOSH and Co., 19, Walbrook, London, and 22, York-street, Manchester.

PIANOFORTE WAREHOUSE—ONE HUNDRED PIANOFORTES FOR GENERAL INSPECTION—G. PEACHEY'S, 73, Bishopsgate-street Within, opposite the Marine Society, Manufacturer of improved PICCOLO PIANOFORTES; particularly adapted for singing, from the peculiarity of their size, also possessing great power and sweetness of tone, equal to instruments of much larger construction. With an extensive assortment of improved Cabinet, Cottage, and Square PIANOFORTES, warranted, and at the lowest possible prices. Also a large collection of secondhand, by various makers. Instruments taken in exchange.—N.B. Superior Instruments lent on hire. Packing-cases lent free of expense.

MONEY.—GRAND DISTRIBUTION OF £70,170 Sterling. Authorised by his Imperial Majesty and the Government of Austria.—The Next DRAWING of the IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN LOAN will take place at VIENNA, on the 2nd December, and be paid in British Money. There are 700 Prizes of £23,000, £5000, &c.; the lowest, £50. A few Tickets, £3 each; Shares, 12s., with Prospectus; six Tickets for £15, may be obtained of Messrs. A. J. STRAUS and Co., Bankers and Receivers-General, Office, 26, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London. Remittance can be made by Post-office order. Government Lists of the Drawing will be sent to each Purchaser. Office hours from Twelve till Three.

SUPERIOR WINTER WATERPROOF WRAPPERS, OUTSIDE GARMENTS of all kinds, SHOOTING JACKETS, &c.—An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials, for the present season, now ready; also, of BERDOE'S well-known and much-approved VENTILATING FROCK, for all seasons, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. As winter approaches, attention is again invited to the Advertiser's VENTILATING WATERPROOF, which renders any garment thoroughly impervious to rain: this fact is established beyond all contradiction, by more than six years' extensive and most successful trial.—W. BERDOE, TAILOR, WATERPROOFER, &c., 69, CORNHILL (North side).

FARMERS' AND GRAZIERS' MUTUAL CATTLE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION. Offices, 366, STRAND, LONDON.

The especial object of this Association is to give to Farmers, Graziers and Owners of Cattle, the best means of protecting themselves against losses by those diseases and accidents, which they can neither foresee nor controul, but which have hitherto been most injurious, and often ruinous to thousands.

PREMIUMS.

Neat Cattle and Cows, against death by all diseases and accidents save pleuro pneumonia (usually called the "Epidemic"), 30s. per £100 value.

Including pleuro pneumonia, 20s. per cent. additional; being at the rate of 50s. per £100 value.

Pleura pneumonia will not be taken alone at this latter rate.

Prospectuses and every information may be obtained at the Office, if by letters, post paid, addressed to WILLIAM SHAW, Esq., 366, Strand, London; or the Agents in the Country.

HENRY FLOWER, Secretary.

ALLIANCE BRITISH and FOREIGN LIFE and FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 1, Bartholomew-lane, London.
Established by Act of Parliament.—Capital, £5,000,000 Sterling.

PRESIDENTS.

John Irving, Esq., M.P.
Samuel Gurney, Esq.
Sir Moses Montefiore, F.R.S.

DIRECTORS.

G. H. Barnett, Esq.
E. N. Buxton, Esq.
Sir R. Campbell, Bart.
Hon. W. Cowper, M.P.
Rt. Hon. George R. Dawson.
Edward Fletcher, Esq.
William Gladstone, Esq.
Charles Gibbes, Esq.
John Irving, jun., Esq.
Louis Lucas, Esq.
Thos. Masterman, Esq.
Thos. Richardson, Esq.
L. N. De Rothschild, Esq.
A. N. De Rothschild, Esq.
Oswald Smith, Esq.
Melvil Wilson, Esq.

AUDITORS.—Sir George Carroll; James Cook, Esq.; Samuel Gurney, jun., Esq.
BANKERS.—Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co.
ACTUARY.—Benjamin Gompertz, Esq., F.R.S.
SECRETARY.—Andrew Hamilton, Esq.
PHYSICIAN.—John R. Hume, M.D., Curzon-street.
SOLICITOR.—John M. Pearce, Esq.
SURVEYOR.—Thomas Allason, Esq.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

The Premiums of the Company for the greater duration of life are lower than those charged by most of the old established offices.

Assurances are undertaken abroad, as well as at home.

The assured participate in the profits, which are divided at the expiration of every successive period of five years.

The assured may proceed to any part of Europe, without previously communicating with the Directors, or the payment of an additional Premium. No entrance money or other fee is charged.

The large capital, and nearly one thousand shareholders composing the Company, render the security it offers to the public undoubted.

FIRE ASSURANCE.

Fire Assurances are accepted at home at the usual rates. The Company prosecute both Fire and Life Assurances abroad, on reasonable terms. The Receipts for the Renewal Premiums due at Michaelmas are ready for delivery at the Office in town, and at the Agencies throughout the country.

A. HAMILTON, Secretary.

EARLY CLOSING OF SHOPS. — A great Public Meeting will be Held at EXETER HALL, on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, the 9th Instant. The Right Honble. the Lord Mayor will take the Chair, at Eight o'Clock precisely. Tickets for Ladies' reserved seats to be had of Messrs. Nisbet and Co., Berners'-street, and of Messrs. Aylott and Jones, Paternoster row.

POLKA MANTELETS.—BAILEY and CO. beg to announce to the visitors of St. Paul's that their Show Rooms are open to the public, with every novelty in Satin and Watered Mantelets; French Cloth Mantles; Peignoir's Pelisses; and all sizes in Young Ladies' Cardinals.—Observe—BAILEY and Co., Albion House, 77, St. Paul's Church-yard, London.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden square. Private Lessons at all hours to ladies and gentlemen wishing privacy and expedition. An evening academy on Mondays and Fridays. A juvenile academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Lessons in the Polka and Valse a Deux Temps every day. Terms may be had on application as above. The rooms may be engaged by private parties.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dressmaking in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and executing in the most finished style, in SIX LESSONS for ONE GUINEA. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers wanted.

SPORTSMEN should see DOUDNEY and SON'S celebrated Shooting Jackets, 10s. 6d. and 21s., at 49 Lombard-street. Superfine Dress Coats, 38s. and 47s. 6d.; Frock Coats, silk facings, 42s. and 50s.; Codringtons, every make and shape, 12s. 6d. and 21s.; Doeskin and all the New Pattern Trousers, 10s. 6d. and 21s.; Army Cloth Blue Spanish Cloaks, 9½ yards round, 50s.; Suit of Livery, 63s.; Boys' Cloaks, 7s. 6d. and 15s.—DOUDNEY and SON, 49, Lombard-street.—Established 1784.

UMBRELLAS.—Silk Umbrellas, from 6s. each; Ladies' best silk ditto, 12s. to 16s.; Gentlemen's ditto, ditto, 12s. to 26s.; German steel rib large size silk ditto, 12s.; best ditto, with ivory handles, 16s. to 20s.; gingham umbrellas, from 2s. 6d. The Trade and Country Dealers supplied with Silks, Ginghams, and all kind of Materials, Oil Silk, &c.—E. ALLEN, 198, OXFORD-STREET, Two doors West of Orchard-street, and 14, BURLINGTON ARCADE.—All Letters punctually attended to. Any article exchanged, if not approved of.

PATENT PARAGON CAMPHINE LAMPS.—The great fault which was last year found with the Vesta from its great smoke and emission of black smuts, is happily entirely obviated in the Paragon—which surpasses in brilliancy and whiteness of light anything hitherto seen, giving the light of 16 wax candles at the cost of one halfpenny per hour. The largest stock in London to select from, at C. Watson's Warehouses, 41 & 42, Barbican, and 16, Norton Folgate. The Spirit, analyzed and recommended by Dr. Ure, is delivered by C. Watson's carts, at 4s. per gallon, in screw cans.

IMPROVED CAMPHINE LAMPS; also ENGLISH'S PATENT CAMPHINE.—Public attention is respectfully solicited to E. LEWIS'S OIL and ITALIAN WAREHOUSE, 42, High-street, Marylebone, where may be obtained the new Lamps with every recent improvement, by which they are rendered perfect and superior to anything before seen. A trial allowed before purchasing. Lewis's Patent Wax Candles 11d. per lb.; Price's Composite, 10½d. per lb.; Kempton's Moulds, 8d. per lb. These Candles are warranted to burn without snuffing.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY (7 years old), equal to the finest Cognac Brandy, and recommended by the Faculty, in preference to every other spirit, in consequence of its purity and wholesome qualities. Genuine sealed bottles, 3s. 6d. each (observe Messrs. Kinahan's name and address on the seal and label), may be obtained from the most respectable Wine and Spirit Merchants in Town and Country.—The "LL WHISKY" will be forwarded to any part of the kingdom, in cask or bottle, from KINAHAN and Co.'s Stores, 25, King William-street, Strand, London.—N.B. The trade supplied on liberal terms.

COVENTRY and HOLLIER beg to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that they have, during the past season, greatly improved their PIANOFORTES, which, for brilliancy of tone, combined with the utmost delicacy and durability of touch, they flatter themselves are unrivalled. C. and H. solicit an inspection of their Stock, consisting of Bijou, Semi-cottage, and Cottage-cabinet PIANOFORTES in a great variety of patterns, and with all their latest improvements, particularly the light repeating touch so much sought for by the profession. Second-hand Instruments on Sale at considerably reduced prices.—71, Dean-street, Soho.

DAWSON'S AUXILIAR, a delightful and economical Restorer of the Hair when Bald or Grey, however extreme. It peculiarly removes all causes of decline, thoroughly eradicates dandriff, makes harsh, stubborn hair yielding and graceful, and supersedes the use of dyes, which are all destructive. It is indispensable in every family who consider the hair a personal ornament.—Sold at 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. per bottle, by Barclay, 95, Farringdon-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Prout, 229, Strand; Butler, St. Paul's; and most Chemists, Perfumers, &c.—Caution.—Particularly ask for Dawson's, and observe the signature, "R. DAWSON," on the wrapper. The Genuine are not sold at any house in Holborn.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by immediately depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than the ordinary process of cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious, as it deposits nothing but Pure Silver. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon street, London; and by Messrs. Joseph Rodgers and Sons, 6, Norfolk-street, Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each; and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations; the Genuine are all Signed on the wrapper, by I. D. Cogan and R. Gillo.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.—THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting, Paper-hanging, and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.—Under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H. R. H. Prince Albert, the Royal Family, and Nobility.—A fragrant White Powder prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the Teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

Caution.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus:—A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed on each Box.

⁂ All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits ! ! !

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced, for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive even in name, beyond a very limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. Rowland and Son, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials (solely imported by them) renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s per bottle.—⁂ All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS ! ! !

SELF-MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.

No longer let those who are dwellers afar,
Themselves from the Warehouse of Moses debar.
By adopting our plan, which has never a failure,
Ev'ry gentleman now may become his own Tailor!

E. MOSES and SON are desirous of directing especial attention to their plan of "Self-Measurement," The extreme simplicity and the minute exactness of this admirable plan are such as cannot fail to answer the purpose designed. No failure in point of fit can arise from its use; or, should anything of the kind occur, the proprietors will hold themselves responsible. Thousands are thus enabled to avail themselves of the choice Clothing of MOSES and SON, without any inconvenience arising from distance, &c. A Book with a wood-cut and full directions may be obtained on application (gratis) and free of postage. Residents in the country cannot do better than avail themselves of so favourable an opportunity of purchasing at the greatest Tailoring Establishment in the Kingdom.

READY-MADE.	£	s.	d.
Shooting Coats, in every variety, from	0	10	0
Velveteen do., 7 pockets	0	18	6
Tweed Taglionis	0	8	6
Ditto, silk facings, collar and cuffs	0	16	0
Cashmarette Coats, in every shape, handsomely trimmed, from	1	1	0
An immense stock of Blouses	0	3	6
Summer Vests	0	2	6
Cashmarette and Persian do., in every variety from 3s. to	0	8	6
Black Satin Vests	0	6	6
Cloth do.	0	4	6
Cloth Trousers	0	9	0
Single-milled Doe do., from	0	11	0
A great variety of Summer do.	0	7	0
Dress Coat, edged	1	0	0
Frock do. do.	1	4	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s.	d
Sporting Coats in the most approved style	0	13	6
Velveteen do., 7 Pockets	1	3	0
Tweed Coats trimmed with silk	0	16	0
Cahmere fine Saxony do.	1	3	0
Cashmarette, new and improved article, warranted waterproof, trimmed with silk, collar, cuffs, &c.	1	18	0
Quilting Vests 7s. each, or 3 for	1	0	0
Cashmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	9	0
Trousers adapted for the season	0	9	6
Mill'd Victoria and plain Doe do	0	17	0
Best quality West of England	1	3	0
Super Black do. do.	0	16	0
Best Black dress do	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Do. do. best manufactured	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Do. do., best manufactured	3	3	0

Mourning to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion with any other house; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing should (to prevent disappointments, &c.) call at, or send to, 154 Minories; or 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this establishment from Friday at sunset until Monday morning.

COUNTRY PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, &c.—ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD executed in the best style, and with the greatest despatch, by F. SMYTH, Designer and Engraver. Address, 268, Strand.

DR. G. A. MANTELL has removed from Clapham-common to No. 19, Chester square, Pimlico, and may be consulted at Home, every Morning, from Half-past Nine till Twelve.

COMMERCIAL and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE ANNUITY, FAMILY ENDOWMENT, and LOAN ASSOCIATION. Offices 112 and 113, Cheapside, London. H. G. WARD, Esq., M.P., Chairman.

LIVES ASSURED on every known system. LOANS GRANTED, repayable by instalments. ANNUITIES, immediate and deferred. ENDOWMENTS for Children, payable at 14 or 21.

⁂ The remaining Shares will continue on Sale until the 25th December next.
Interest allowed on the paid-up capital, 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly.
Applications for Shares and Prospectuses to be made to Offices, 112 and 113, Cheapside. FREDERIC LAWRANCE, Resident Secretary.

FEARFUL COLLIERY EXPLOSION, AND LOSS OF NINETY-FIVE LIVES.

We have the painful task of furnishing the particulars of an awful explosion which took place at Haswell Colliery, near Sunderland, last Saturday afternoon, about three o'clock. The accident is attributed to various causes; but as we give a full account of the evidence taken at the Coroner's inquest, where the facts were elicited in an authentic shape, we abstain from noticing the various reports contained in the versions which have reached us. Of the chief melancholy fact, the loss of nearly a hundred lives, there is, unhappily, no doubt.

Haswell Collery is situate in the very centre of the great Durham coal-field, about seven miles from the city of Durham, and nine from Sunderland. It is the property of Messrs. Clark, Taylor, Plumer, and other wealthy coal owners connected with the district. It is 150 fathoms deep, and the workings are in the well-known Hutton Seam. The character of the mine in respect of ventilation has always stood high. During the pitmen's strike a few of the off-hand men were employed as hewer's, and a few new men introduced; but since the termination of the strike none but experienced workmen have been employed under ground, the others being employed at bank. Not a soul has been left to tell the mournful tale of how the accident occurred, the whole of the men employed in the working having been swept into eternity without a moment's warning. Four men, who were at the bottom of the shaft, escaped, by the fire having burned itself out before it reached them.

THE INQUEST ON THE BODIES.

The inquest was held on Monday, at Haswell, before T. C. Maynard, Esq. The first witness examined was Cornelius Brown, under-hewer at Shotton Colliery: On Saturday last, with other men, I went down the pit at Haswell, having heard that an accident had happened, at half-past four o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Scott, another person, went down with me; and we found, about 300 yards from the shaft, that an explosion had taken place, as a number of tubs were upset, and a horse and rolly driver were found dead. We proceeded a certain way, and, on reaching the "Meadows," we found a boy lying dead. We went up the Meadows branch for about 250 yards, when we found the air so bad from choke-damp that we were compelled to return. We came down to the end of that branch, and Scott returned into it again, and I went up the Brockley Whins way to within fifty yards of the station at the sidings, where the air was so bad that I could proceed no further. I was then satisfied there could be no person in the pit alive. Seeing that nothing could be done to save life, we immediately began to put in air-stoppers, and had to wait till a fresh current of air was got in. After getting the air in, we proceeded on to the Flatts station, in about three hours after, where we found fourteen dead bodies, which we laid aside. We took ninety-five dead bodies out altogether. The explosion took place in the ninth headway course of the Meadows way. I saw that a jud had been drawn there by the deputy-overman. A jud is part of a pillar of coal left to support the roof after the working, and is afterwards removed; and I think the removal of the jud had caused the explosion, as the effects of the fire were more visible there than in any other place. Three men had been working there, and were found dead. Did not find their Davy lamps. Saw nothing which indicated the cause of the explosion. The deputy, Williamson, had been in the act of taking the jud away, and was found within twenty yards of the place, dead. He had been at work at the jud when the explosion took place. The gas, in some cases, is found in considerable quantity, sometimes suddenly, on the removal of the coal. That part of the mine was worked by Davy lamps. There was not a candle used there. It was not considered a dangerous pit; but, indeed, one of the safest in the trade. Had known it from its commencement, and up to the 14th of August was in it for about three months, almost daily. Have not been in the pit since that time, till after the explosion. I am of opinion the ventilation had been good up to the time of the explosion. In my opinion this explosion would not have taken place if a Davy lamp had not been injured. At the jud some stone had fallen from the roof caused by its removal. The lamp might be injured by the fall of stone, and that was probably the way in which the accident occurred.

This witness was cross-examined by Mr. Roberts, commonly called the "Pitman's Attorney-General. He said it was not unusual for a Davy lamp to be injured by a fall of stone. In some cases the fall gives notice, and the lamp can be got out of the way. Never saw such an occurrence, but have heard of one or two, and in those instances there were explosions. Between forty and fifty dead bodies were found at no great distance from the jud, the rest were in different parts of the working. Had seen explosions several times during the last twenty years, but never one so great as this.

By the Coroner: The explosion extended over the north-west and east portions of the pit. He made two attempts to get into the pit, but the after damp was so strong that considerable delay ensued. Out of the ninety-five lives that were lost, fifteen of the bodies only were burnt. There was a communication between the "distance" and that part of the pit where the explosion took place. After the explosion the ventilation was interrupted by the air stoppings having been blown down. By air stoppings I mean barriers placed to throw the air into the workings for ventilation. Should think there had not been a large explosion of gas.

Cross-examined by Mr. Marshall, solicitor, who appeared on behalf of the owners of the colliery: Fifteen were killed by fire, and the remainder by after-damp. It was possible for the mine to be safe previous to the fall of the stone at the jud where the explosion took place. A quantity of gas sufficient to cause an explosion might escape in a short time.

James Scott is under-viewer at Haswell colliery. About three o'clock on Saturday afternoon I was in the colliery-office, when one of the off-putters came and said he believed the pit had fired. I went as quickly as possible down the pit, and along the North Rolly way, about thirty yards, leading into the "Little Pit." I tried the air with a candle, and found it good. I then got a safety lamp, and went along further, and I found the air good all the way to the mouth of the Stone Drift. At this point I found a great deficiency in the quantity of air, and the current was not in a right direction. On proceeding along the Stone Drift, the two main hole drifts at the end were blown down; also the air crossings beside it. The fresh air, which ought to have gone along the main line, was escaping at these two places. Along the main way, from the mouth of the Stone Drift, I came to a set of rollies with empty tubs on them. The horse at the end of the rollies was dead, and its driver, a boy. I proceeded on with the overman, John Miller, whom I met, about sixty yards, and came to a set of rollies in a siding laden with tubs. The horse at the out-bye end of the rollies was dead, and also the drivers. We went forward other fifty yards, and at the Meadows' way-end we found another body dead. For want of air at that point we were obliged to return. We went back about 300 yards, where there was more air, and we considered the best thing we could do was to get in the stoppings, to carry the air forward. From what I saw, I was quite convinced that all the men in the pit when the explosion took place were dead. Left Miller there to forward these operations, and went myself to the Meadows' way-end, and preserved up to the Meadows' flat, when I found two men and a horse dead. The air was again so bad I was obliged to return to the Meadows' way end. When I got there, Mr. Brown, the first witness, came up. We stood awhile, and then returned to the flat, and got about 100 yards further up then before, when we found it necessary to return to the Meadows' way-end again. We then determined to get all the air stoppings in as soon as possible, to clear the whole pit of the after damp. Mr. Brown went with some men into the first stopping of the Brockly whin's flat, and I went on into the stone drift, where the other men were putting in stoppings. I then went to the Meadows' flat again, and got 50 yards further than I did previously, when I was forced again to return. Went to the men at the stoppings, and an hour after, with Mr. Brydon and others, went into the broken mothergate flat, and up four pillars, where 18 or 19 men were found. The remainder of my time was spent in getting out the dead bodies. The stoppings were put in, and the air-way improved, so that I could then in the second and third headway courses perceives the slightest indication of gas. In the mothergate flat the gas was bad.

Cross-examined by Mr. Roberts: Went down the pit at seven in the morning. The air was then good. Deputies examine the pit at different times, and when they observe danger they inform the inspector, but do not know in this case whether any information was given. About noon on Sunday a lamp was found about four yards from the edge of the fall of the stones at the jud. The lamp was entire, except that it wanted the plug at the bottom, where the oil was put in, which was out. The lamp was standing against a prop, and there was a little oil in it. The wick was loose in the pipe. If the explosion was caused by the plug being out, the gas would have had to ascend the tube containing the wick, but that, though possible, is not probable. The explosion must have taken place from a defective or injured lamp. The nearest candle would be 396 yards distant from the jud. I never in my experience knew of the current of air, in moving from one place to another, force the flame through the gauze. Have dams put in, but do not think, if they had been put it, they would have stopped the explosion. Was never asked by the men to put dams in. Did not consider it necessary to have the stoppings stronger than they were. It is not allowed to remove the oil from one lamp to another. The men are not allowed to do anything to the lamps, except in the presence of an officer, at the proper place.

Joseph Fairless, inspector of Haswell pit: As soon as I heard of the accident I went down the pit. It would be a little after seven o'clock on Saturday evening. I examined every part of the mine between that time and Sunday morning, particularly that part where the dead bodies were found. From the examination I made, I think the accident happened in the ninth headway, in the Meadow's flat. The deputy had been drawing a jud there. I know that, because his axe was close by where the stone had fallen, at the place the props were taken away. Some of the props were lying on the horned tram, which was standing about six or eight yards from where the stone had fallen. I found three bodies there. They appeared to be burnt; but I cannot say whether they died from the burns, or after-damp. There were no indications in any other part of the mine of an explosion having taken place. Found nothing else there but the bodies. I am of opinion the stone had fallen before the explosion took place. My reason for thinking so is, that the props had been taken out and the men were away from it a little. I have been inspector of that pit about two years and four months, and during that time it was considered a safe pit. If the men thought there was any danger it was their duty to report it to me; they had orders from the master to do so. Never had any notice during the time I have been there of there being danger. Never knew of an accumulation of gas in the waste. I had inspected the pit between two and three o'clock in the morning of Saturday, before the men went to work. I never saw her in better trim than she was in at that time. The current of fresh air was strong; there was no indication of gas. I considered it then to be perfectly safe. We consider it safe to work the whole coal with candle, but the broken is worked with Davy lamps, as a precaution against danger from gas coming off by accident.

John Miller: I am overman at Haswell Little Pit. Since the explosion I have minutely examined every part of the pit, and I believe it arose at the ninth headway's course, near the jud. The jud had been drawn, and a "blower" might have come off, or if anything happened to any of the lamps, the same results would arise. The bent Davy lamp produced was found by Thomas Wardell. It is in the same state now as when found.

By Mr. Roberts: Fifteen men in that district had safety lamps at the time of the explosion. I cannot tell whether they have all been found or not. I found six. There were four men at the bottom of the shaft who escaped—Raine, Hindmarch, Harrison, and Thompson.

The coroner intimated that there must be an adjournment, for further evidence, and the proceedings were therefore suspended till Tuesday.

LIST OF THE SUFFERERS.

Thomas Briggs, left a wife; John Briggs, son of the above, and son; John Whitfield and son; William and George Elsden, brothers, young men; Henry Mather, young man; Joseph Gibson and three sons; William Favish, left a widow; William Joblin, left a widow; Ralph Surtees, young man; John and William Surtees, brothers, cousins to the above, both young men; Robert Williamson, young man; John Williamson, deputy, brother to the above, left a wife and six children—pregnant with the seventh; Wanless Thompson, left a wife and large family; John Noble, left a wife and four children; George Hall and son, left wife; — Hall, a boy; William Routledge, young man—this young man's father was burnt to death upon the same colliery a short time since; Daniel Leman, cousin to the above, left a wife and one child; Henry Weightman, left a wife and one child; William Weightman, boy, son or nephew to the above; John Currie, left a wife and family; William Dixon and son, left a wife and family; John Pettley, young man; William and John Dixon, brothers, young men; John Curley, left a wife and one child; Elliott Richardson and son, left a wife and family; Michael Thurlwell, young man; Christopher, John, and Stephen Teesdale, brothers—their father fell down the same pit and was killed; Robert Carr, left a wife and one child; Robert Rosecamp, left a wife and four children; William Rosecamp, brother to the above, left a widow; James Maughan, young man; Thomas Bottoms, boy; Joseph Wolfe, left a wife and one child, and Peter Wolfe, brothers; four brothers of the name of Drydon, and Edward Nicholson, brought up in the same family, young men, lately from Walker; R. Douglas, left a wife and four children; John Brown, young man; Mark Davidson, young man; John Brown, young man; George Dawson, left a wife and six children; Thomas Moody; Hans Ward, left a wife and five children—pregnant with the sixth; William Barras, left a wife and four children, also his son, a boy, whom he took down the pit for the first time to look at it; George Bell, left a wife, and Jonathan Bell, brothers; William Taylor; William Davidson, left a wife and three children; Michael, Matthew, and Henry Clough, brothers, under sixteen years of age; James Sanderson, left a wife and two children; William and John Harrison, brothers; John Sanderson, left a wife; James and Thomas Turnbull, brothers, young men; John and Thomas Willis, brothers, young men; John Willis, a boy; Peter Robinson, young man; George Richardson, left a wife and one child; Joseph Moffit, left a wife—Richardson and Moffit married two sisters; John Ferry, left a wife and five children; George Ferry, son of the above; George Heslop, young man; John Parkinson, young man; Robert and Thomas Nicholson, brothers, boys; two boys of the name of Gilroy, brothers; William Nichol, young man; William Dobson, left a wife; James Richardson, left a wife and four children; James Leyland, left a wife and two children; James Robson, a boy; and Robert Hogg, a young man.

SECOND DAY—TUESDAY.

The coroner and jury re-assembled this morning at ten o'clock precisely, pursuant to adjournment, and immediately proceeded with the examination of witnesses. The room was again crowded, and the most intense interest prevailed.

On the opening of the court, Mr. Marshall stated that the owners were anxious for the fullest inquiry, and he was authorised to say that if the jury wished the pit to be examined by disinterested professional men, they would render every possible facility, and also leave it entirely to the coroner and jury to select the viewers for making such examination.

The evidence was then proceeded with as follows.—

Robert Beaney. I am a miner at Haswell, and worked in that part of the mine where so many of my fellow-creatures have suffered—the broken part, which is called Brockley Whins. On the morning of the accident I worked there, being engaged in taking out a pillar, and left at ten o'clock. Several persons were taken out dead from the place at which I had been working. The state of the ventilation was then perfectly good. I have worked seven years and a half in the colliery. In the little pit the whole coal is worked with candles, and the broken with Davy lamps. I consider it safe to work the whole coal with candles. I always regarded the Haswell pit as one of the safest in the trade. On leaving my work I met about fifty men leaving their work. None of them expressed to me any apprehension of danger. A deputy examines the pit before every fresh shift of men enters it. It is the duty of the deputies to see that every part of the pit is in a safe state, and where it is necessary to put in timber for the safety of the men, it is their duty to do it. George Hill, one of the persons killed by this accident, was in my place a little before I came away, examining it. I cannot speak as to the cause of the explosion. In my opinion no blame attaches to any person for this occurrence. I have heard men working in the whole part of the coal complain of having too much pit. When working in narrow places, I have on some occasions asked the deputy to leave the brattice back a little, which had the effect of throwing less air into the part in which I was at work. The current of air there was too strong.

By Mr. Clough: In my opinion there was enough air going into the part where I was working, to carry off any inflammable gas that might be made there. A person is appointed to examine the Davy lamps every morning, and to lock them before they are used. Every lamp I have seen on the colliery has had a lock. I have often seen boys of 12 or 13 have lamps; such boys assist in getting the tubs up and clean the tramways. It would not be so safe for them to have candles. These boys carry the lamps about with them. There is greater danger from lamps being carried about than hung up. In my opinion it is necessary for boys to have a light, and there is less danger from a lamp than a candle. I have seen way-cleaners put a candle or lamp up in one place, leave it there, and work till they were in the dark. I never heard any complaints from the men employed at Haswell that the boys were entrusted with lamps. I have heard them complain since the strike of three men being employed in the waste, who were not practical men, and they observed that, if danger occurred, these men would not be aware of it. They did not say they apprehended danger from these men working there. If they apprehended danger, it was their duty to make complaint to the master wasteman. It is the duty of hewers, if they had any complaints, to communicate them to the viewer, under viewer, deputy, or the overman. I do not know of any man who would not make a report to Mr. Foster from fear of losing his work. There would be no danger if old pitmen were working with the strangers. The safety of the pit and the lives of the men depends very much on the waste being kept clear. The responsibility of keeping it clear rests with the master wasteman. I have confidence in his judgment, for he is an experienced man. It is the duty of the master wasteman to go about from one to another of the men working in the waste.

By the Coroner: I consider the explosion has been the result of accident.

Joseph Short lives at Haswell, and is a pitman, and has been employed eight years and a half in this pit. Was last at work on Saturday morning, and came up about half-past eight o'clock. Was working the Brockley Whins course, and had worked there six weeks previously. Had worked in the third wide board at the Brockley Whins flat. The state of the ventilation previously, and up to the time he left, was as good as it could be. Had not the slightest apprehension of danger from any cause. Worked with a candle in the whole part. There had not been the slightest indication on the candle of inflammable air. Has been down the pit since, about half-past four o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Had been in the broken at the Meadows Flat. The distance from there to the place where candles are used is some hundred yards. There was no danger in working that part of the pit where he was with candles. Had not worked in the broken since the strike. Has not been quite so far as the Meadows Way-end since the explosion, and cannot say were it commenced. Considers the Davy lamp a perfect safeguard, if the indications it gives are attended to. Would rather prefer the Davy lamp to any other. Has carried his lamp from place to place through a strong current of air, and has never seen the flame forced through the gauze by the current. When he was down the pit he saw no indications where the explosion commenced. Has always found the ventilation good in those parts of the pit where has worked. Has never heard during the eight and a half years he has worked in the pit any complaints made by others that the ventilation was bad. It was one of the safest pits he was ever in; but has been in other pits where as little gas was given off as in Haswell pit, but he has never found any.

Thomas Joplin was called, and deposed: I have been two years and a half employed at Haswell Colliery. On Saturday I left the little pit at three o'clock, twenty minutes or half an hour before the explosion. I had been working at the third board on the rise side of the Brockley Whins Flat, and had done so during the last month. When I left work the ventilation was good, and I had no fear of any explosion. On coming from my work I went across the Brockley Whins Flat, along the waggon-way, direct to the shaft. I took my lighted candle with me, and if there had been any inflammable gas, it would have been indicated by the candle. I did not see any such indication. Up to the shaft the ventilation was good. In coming out I met the current of air at the Meadows' way-end. The current was strong. I worked about a year and a half in the Meadows Flat, and from my knowledge of the place, I think the current of air on Saturday, when I left work, sufficient for the ventilation of the pit. Never heard complaints of the ventilation of any part.

Wm. Farish: Lives at Haswell Colliery, and has worked nearly three years at the colliery. Was at work on Saturday, and left at ten o'clock in the morning, and worked in the ninth headway, and two bodies were found in the same spot where he had been previously working. These persons followed him to work in the same jud. This is in the same place where Williamson was taking down the jud, and at the very same place where he had been working. When he left the place the ventilation was good. The air was usually good, and there was no deficiency. The pit, he thought, was one of the best-ventilated pits he ever knew, and he is upwards of fifty-three years old, and has been a pitman about forty-four years. Has not been at the place since the explosion. When he left there was no appearance of gas. In his opinion, the late explosion was purely accidental, and not caused by negligence. As far as he can judge, nothing could have prevented it.

By Mr. Marshall: Has worked in his life for nine collieries, and never saw one better ventilated. Lost a son by the explosion.

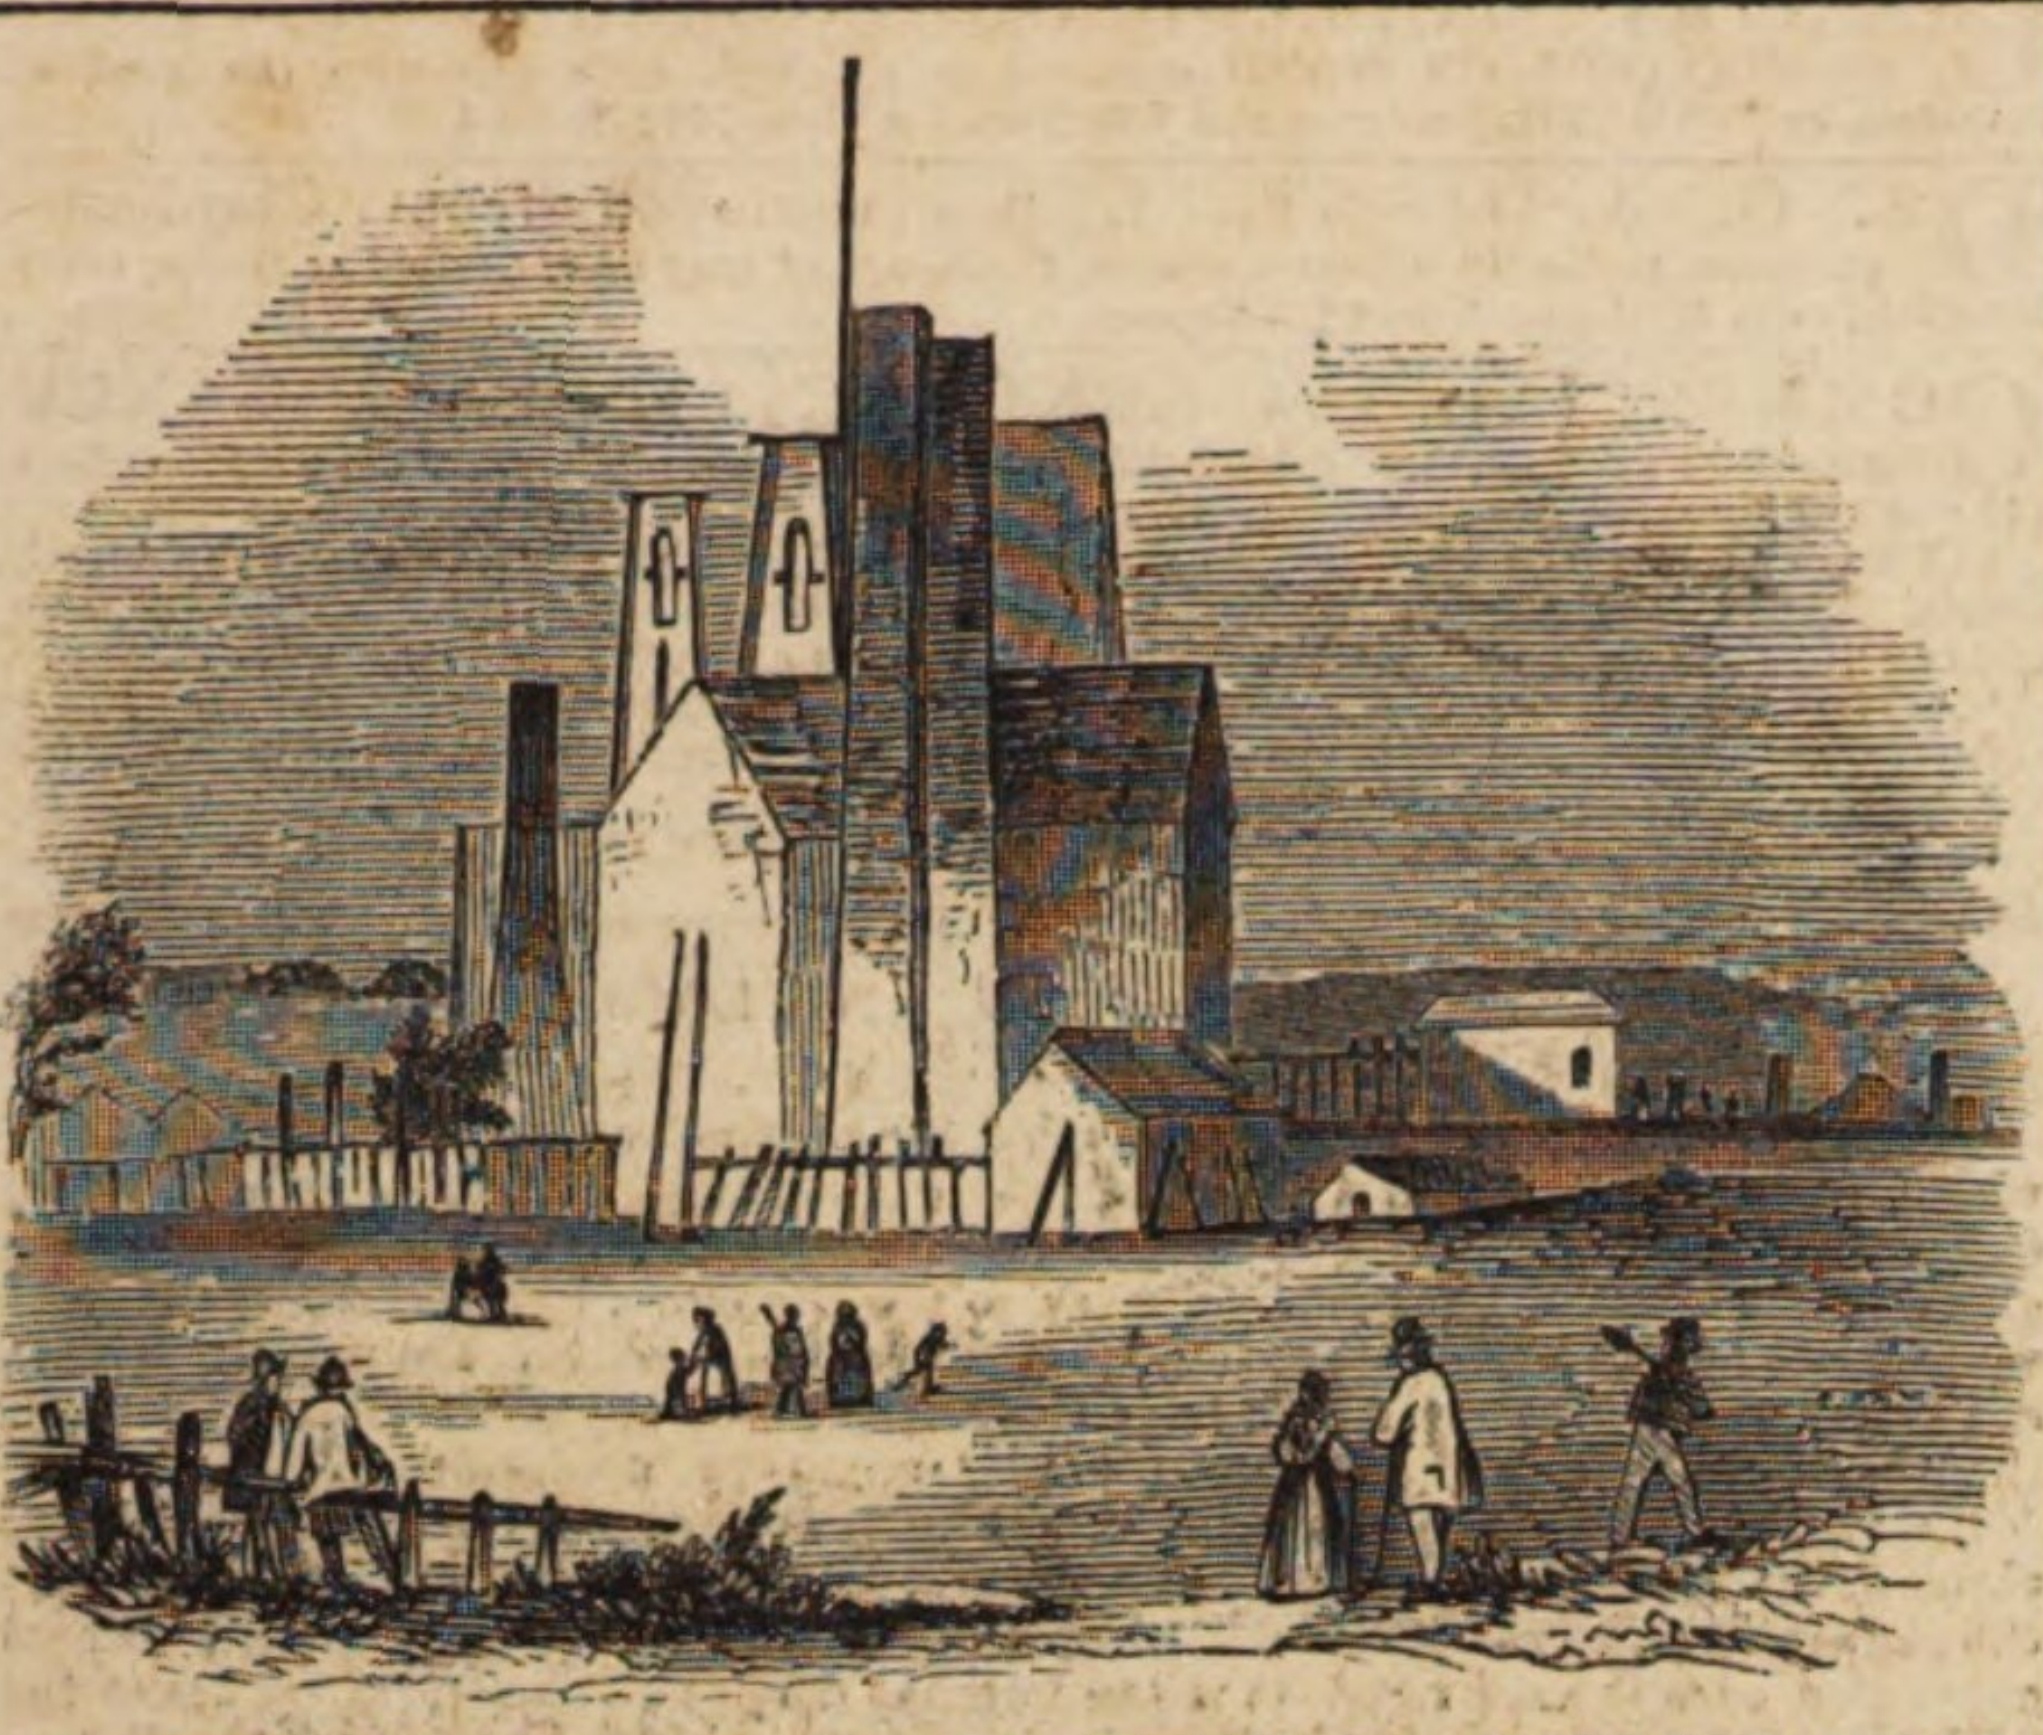
By the Coroner: Does not believe the explosion took place for want of ventilation.

By Mr. Marshall: When they were at work on Saturday morning, they heard a noise like thunder in the goaf, and had never before heard such a noise; we thought it was above where we were working, and we left the place, and when it ceased we returned. The goaf is the place where all the coal has been removed. At that time the Davy lamps did not indicate the presence of gas. The same noise was heard shortly after again when they went in; it was not so loud as the first noise. They told one of the chargemen of the occurrence, and he said it was caused by the falling of one of the old boards, and that they saw themselves. The person to whom they told this was John Williamson, the deputy, who was killed.

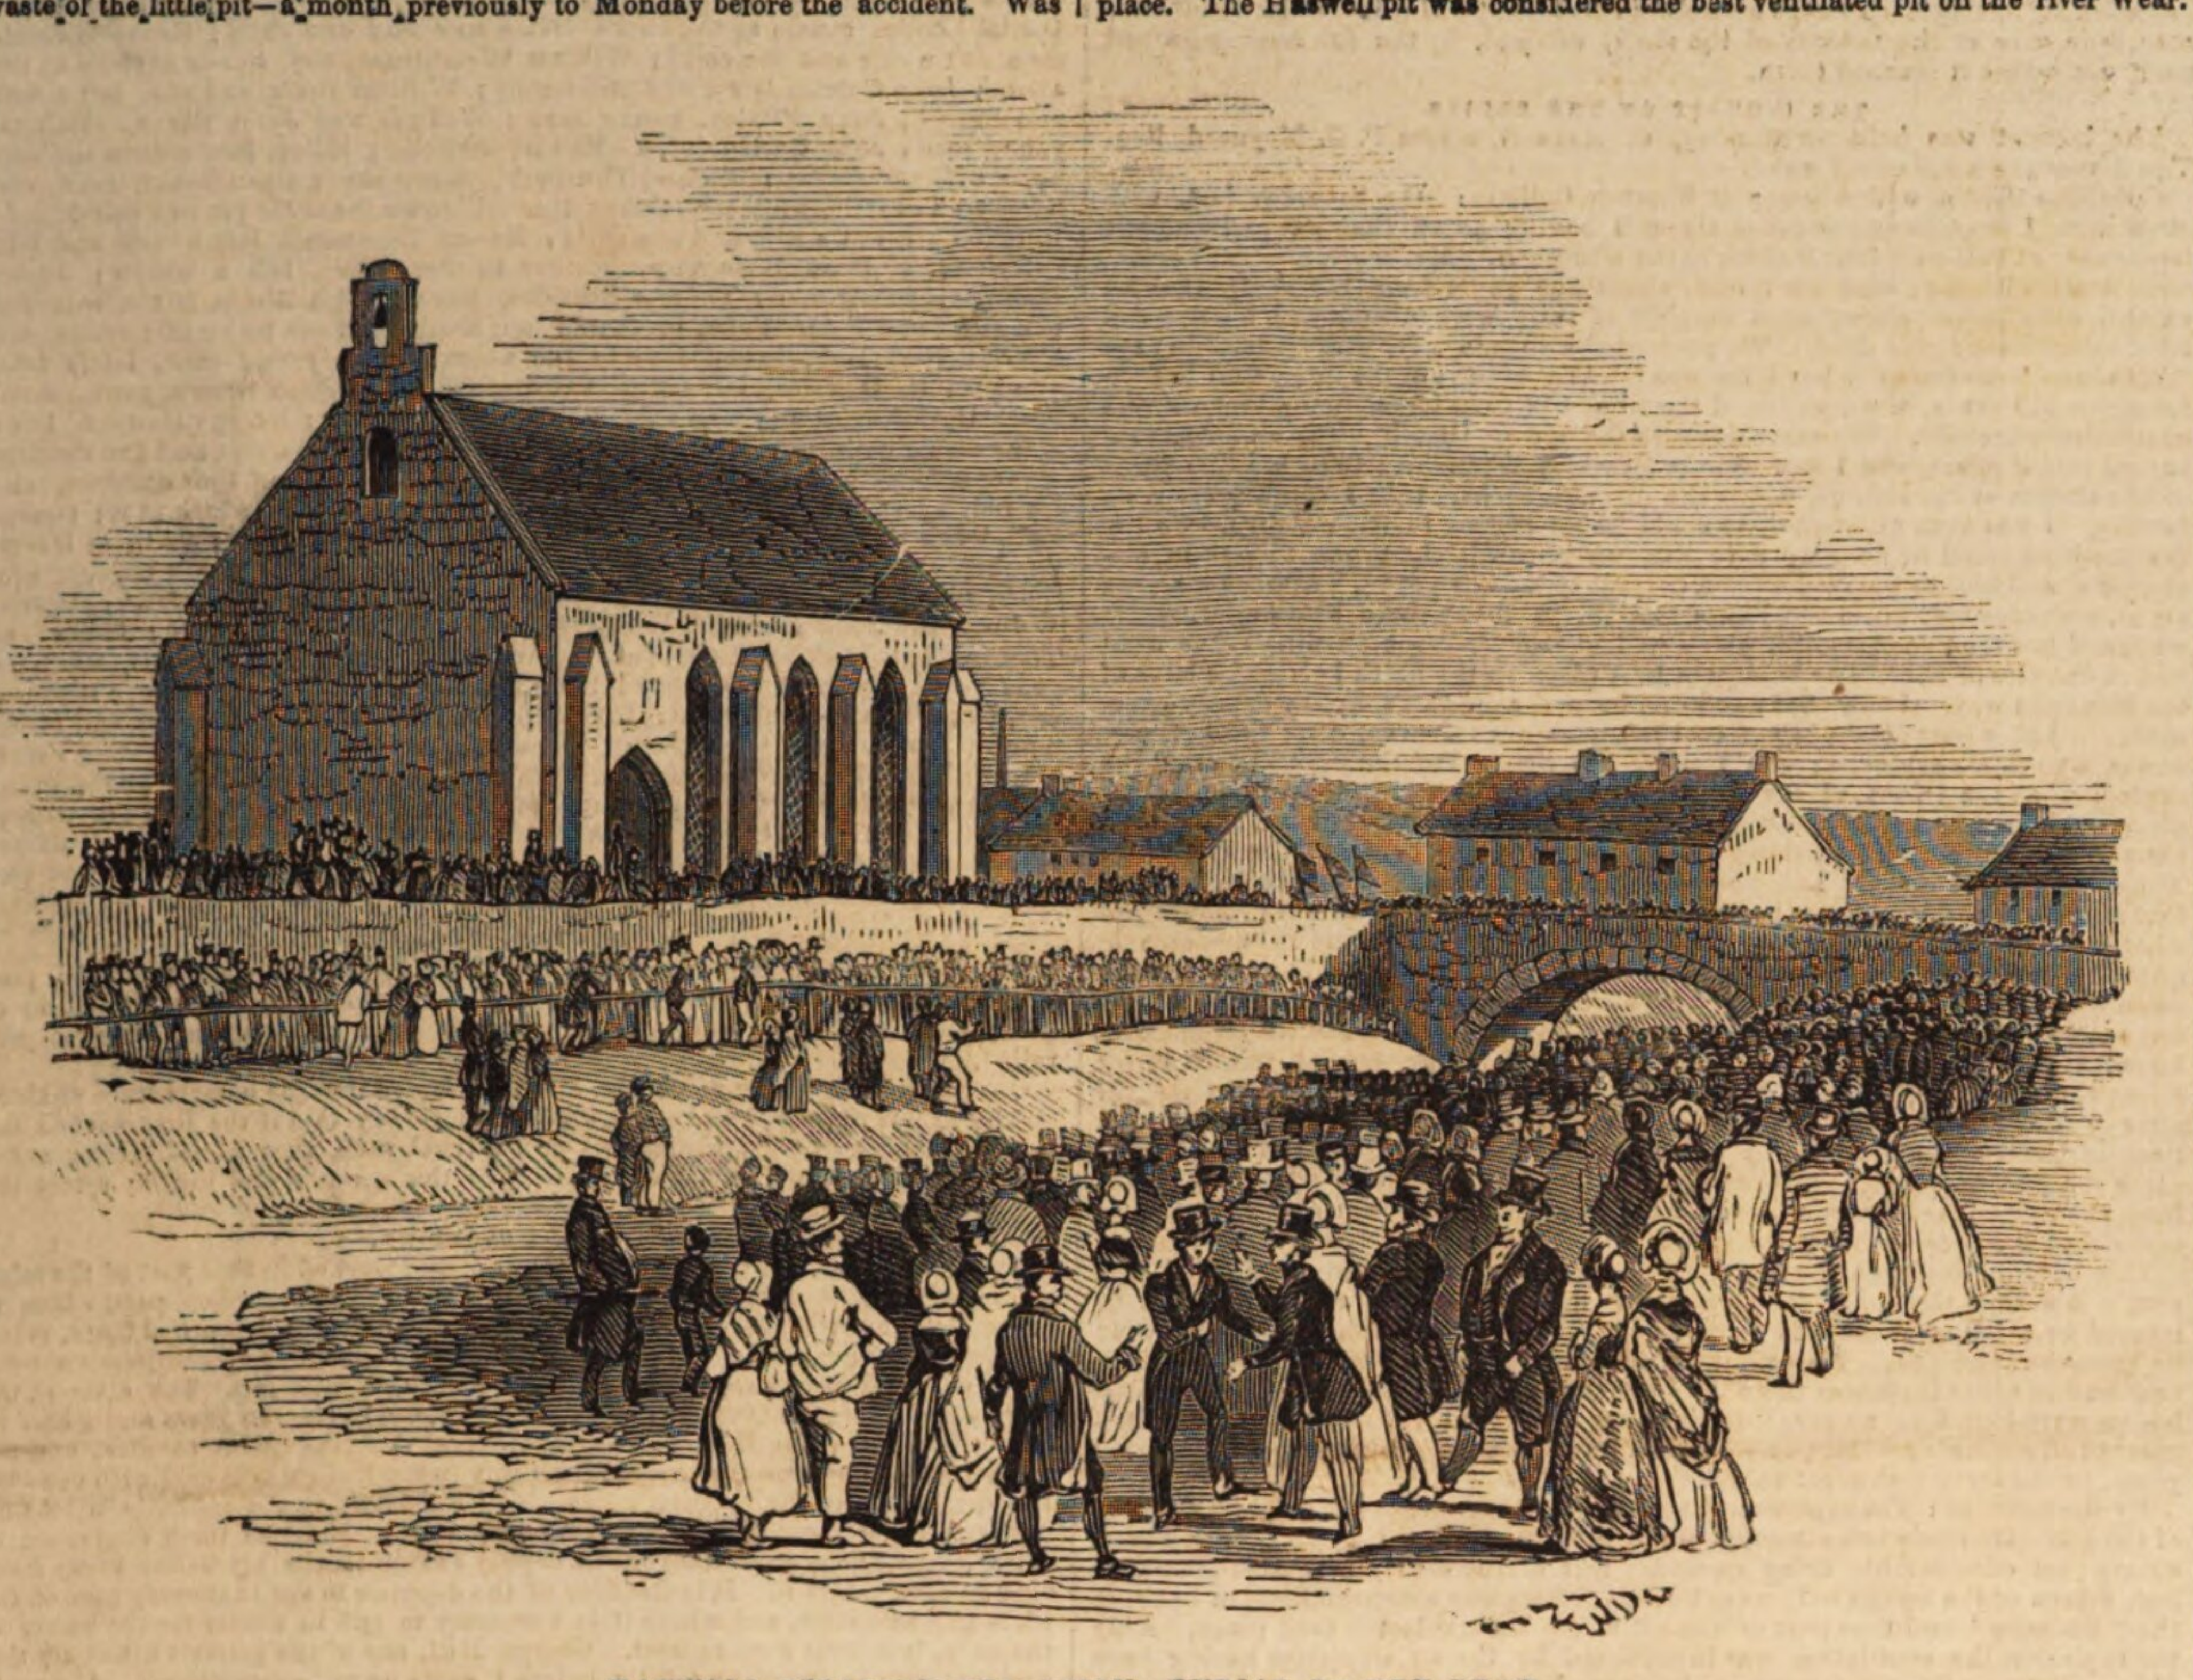
Ralph Errington: Has been employed nearly eight years in Haswell Colliery, and worked with last witness, and left at ten o'clock on Saturday morning, when the ventilation was as good as possible. Can form no opinion as to the cause of the explosion, and cannot tell whether it was the result of accident or negligence. Nothing could have been done, in his opinion, by anticipation, to have prevented the accident. Where they were working the current of the air was so strong that they could scarcely keep their lamps burning.

By Mr. Roberts: If there had been a current of air going through the place where the accident occurred it would not have happened. Where he was working is the place where the accident is generally supposed to have commenced. The evidence of this witness was generally a corroboration of that previously given.

Thomas Scott: Lives at Haswell, and has been a pitman twenty-three years, eighteen of which he has been a hewer. He has been seven years and a half at Haswell pit, and has worked in the waste six years and a half. Was at work in the waste on Friday night, and left at two A.M. on Saturday. Was not at work at that time in the little pit. For a month previously had been working in the waste of the little pit—a month previously to Monday before the accident. Was through the whole of the waste during that time. The ventilation was always very good. No men have been working in that waste since he was in. Has been a little way into the waste since the explosion took place, and it was in a good state to-day at twelve o'clock. Could see no indications where the explosion took place. The Haswell pit was considered the best ventilated pit on the river Wear.



HASWELL COLLIERY—THE SCENE OF THE LATE AWFUL EXPLOSION.



HASWELL COLLIERY EXPLOSION—BURIAL OF THE DEAD.

Has worked in all parts of the pit, and never found any want of ventilation. Has frequently heard the men complain that there was too great a current of air in all parts of the pit. The three strange workmen in the waste are under the charge of three experienced pitmen, to whom they are only assistants, and in no way responsible for the work done; the experienced pitmen are alone responsible, and if anything happens, they are accountable. The men that are with them have to take charge of both them and their Davy lamps. It was possible enough for the explosion to have taken place if there had been a current of air into every part of the pit. If a heavier body of gas came off than there was air to overpower, an explosion might be the result, and it is his opinion that was the case in this accident. It was possible for a sufficient quantity of gas to have come off from the removal of the jud as would cause the explosion. He has never seen any gas in the course of six years and a half in Haswell waste. He has known in the Charlie pit, at Lambton, the air as clear as in a bell, and in half an hour the Davy lamps were rolling full of gas. Considers the Davy lamp very secure—as secure, or more so, than any other that he knows anything about. Is very certain every care is taken that is possible in the air courses in the waste.

Mr. E. Fenwick Boyd: I am check viewer for the owner of the royalty of Haswell Colliery. Since the explosion I have been very frequently down the pit, and carefully examined the Meadows' flat. I found a very good air travelling, and marks on the whole side of the timber, the effects of the explosion, all in one direction. The stoppings and crossings were blown down in a contrary direction from the working places. There had been large falls of stone from the roof. I consider the explosion had taken place near the highest headways course of that flat, and near to the face of the working places. I also examined a few of the boards in the Brockley Whin's flat, and found the blast had gone in that direction, but the fire had not been so strong. I am in the habit of visiting 25 collieries, and I only know of one so well ventilated as Haswell—in the quantity of air, and general attention to direction of that air. On examining the temperature, I found it at the surface 46. and at the bottom of the pit (which is 160 fathoms deep), 53: at the face of the workings, close by where the bodies were found, 58. In one instance I recollect the temperature being reduced; the air was returned upon the furnace cooler than when it went in. I can only state that the explosion must have been occasioned by a lighted candle or lamp coming in contact with an explosive mixture.

After some other immaterial evidence, the inquest was adjourned till the next day (Wednesday).

THIRD DAY—WEDNESDAY.

The inquest was resumed this morning. The whole day was consumed in taking the evidence of Robert Thompson, master waterman of the pit, which went to corroborate that given on the previous day. His testimony went to show that nothing more could have been done to prevent the accident. After some discussion it was agreed to adjourn the inquest till Wednesday in next week; and in the meantime the jury begged the coroner to request Mr. Nicholas Wood and Mr. George Hunter to examine the mine and report their opinion to the jury.

ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS.

Haswell colliery is one of the most extensive in the county of Durham. It employs upwards of three hundred men and boys, and it is celebrated for the very superior quality of its coal.

The pit, though essentially one, is divided into separate workings, called respectively the Big-pit and the Little-pit. The explosion took place in the latter. The number of men and boys usually employed in this part is about one hundred, and when the explosion took place there were ninety-nine down—ninety-five of whom have perished. The other four would also, without doubt, have suffered, had not the course of the explosive current been intercepted by some waggons laden with coals, in what is called a "rolley" way—a railway used for the purpose of conveying the coals to the bottom of the shaft to be drawn to the bank. The four men who escaped were at the end of these waggons nearer to the shaft. They saw the flame approaching, having the appearance of forked lightning, when it fortunately struck the waggons referred to. The horse attached to them was killed, and thrown completely over in the form of a somerset, falling on his back.

About fifty of the unfortunate sufferers were interred on Monday, and the remainder on Tuesday afternoon. The funerals were very decently conducted, and the spectacle was a most touching and melancholy scene. The neighbourhood may truly be said to be the scene "of lamentation and mourning and woe," as the calamity has entered the abodes of almost every inhabitant in the district, and some families have been bereaved of their only earthly support and protectors.

Our engravings represent the colliery, the scene of the awful catastrophe; and South Hetton Church, where the greater number of the dead were buried, in trenches on Monday afternoon:

In far Golcond, or Oman's sea,
The seeker for vain luxury
May lose his life, and Pity shed
A few cold tear-drops o'er his bed;
But here, where hundreds for our good,
Are undermining life for food,
Most hardly earn'd, how should we weep
To see at one ungenerous sweep
So many beings snatch'd by Fate—
So many too, left desolate!
How many ties were broken there,
How many hopes chang'd to despair!
Oh! this is subject for true grief,
Which ev'n in tears can't find relief!
 And then, the solemn cavalcade—
The melancholy long parade,
That through the churchyard slowly wends,
With widows, orphans, sisters, friends,
Fathers and mothers, all in tears
Weeping o'er untimely biers:
This is a sight to wound the sense
Of heart with Pity's least pretence.
W.

GREAT MASS MEETING AT PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

The people of Rhode Island, it will be remembered, being discontented with the limited suffrage under the charter of Charles II., from time to time, petitioned for its extension: this was granted, but with so slow or niggard a hand, that they, at length, met in mass, remodeled the constitution on the universal suffrage principle, declared the existing government null, elected their own officers, and, with one Dorr at their head, marched to enforce the will of the people. But they were too late: the government was prepared for them; Dorr was taken, tried, and sentenced to hard labour for life, in the prison of the State. Hence the sympathising movement of delegates from various States, termed "the Great Mass Meeting for Democracy and Dorr."

This extraordinary and exciting assemblage took place on Wednesday, the 4th ult., at Providence. It was, indeed, a vast gathering: a steam-boat, chartered from New York, conveyed, at least 800 citizens to Providence: a band of music was on board, and the steamer was decorated with banners inscribed with democratic mottoes, and an excellent portrait of Governor Dorr; and loud and frequent were the salutes of the steam-boat bells at the wharves, &c., as the vessel of "troubled spirits" progressed.

The "Tenth Ward Roarer" which was placed on the bow of the boat saluted the crowds that were assembled on the wharves and piers, which were returned with the hearty cheers of the assemblages. The boat was crammed to overflowing, and such a scramble for berths, mattresses and settees was never seen, except on board a North River steam-boat, when the fare was "fifty cents and found." The night on the sound was beautiful and clear, the moon shone silvery bright, and as the boat struggled through the waters with her hundred souls, she seemed a thing of life breathing and snorting through the ocean brine. After a pleasant run with a light breeze from the north east, she approached Providence at about nine o'clock in the morning, and arrived at the wharf at ten, under the salute of artillery, martial music, and the cheers of the dense assemblage.

A procession was then formed, headed by the Chief Marshal, and a cavalcade of 50 horsemen, and numbering "1268 ladies" in a body; "Revolutionary soldiers in carriages, 28; delegations and bands of music, &c. They proceeded through the principal streets of the city, accompanied by banners and devices, and numbering in procession 5731. The portrait of Governor Dorr, in an elegant frame, was carried at the head of the New York delegation; and this picture, the ladies, and the revolutionary soldiers, were the great points of interest in the procession.

Among the banners we noticed the following, carried by the ladies, which fully evince their spirited feeling on this occasion:—"We are Rhode Island women—friends of Liberty, Freedom, and equal and just laws;" "If this be treason, make the most of it," &c. In the male part of the procession were the following, among others: "T. W. Dorr—I will not compromise the people's rights;" "Oh, Rhode Island woe—Whiggery has done this."

The procession passed in full view of the state prison, where Dorr is confined. From thence they proceeded to the Pickney Farms, the place selected for the vast assemblage to convene, which is about a mile northwest of the city, on the hill at the rear of the prison. The spot selected for the speakers was in a valley, forming an amphitheatrical view from each side, covering a space of about ten acres, which was filled with spectators, including several hundred ladies, who occupied the centre of the vast assemblage, with Mike Walsh in their midst, directly in front of the speaker's stand. A platform was erected at the foot of the valley, on which a band of music was stationed to enliven the scene. The utmost order prevailed—not a drop of intoxicating liquor was sold on the ground, nor was a person present who appeared to be labouring under its effects.

The meeting was organized by the selection of General Thomas F. Carpenter, as President, and thirty-one Vice Presidents, being one from each town in the State, and five Secretaries. The President called upon the Rev. Elder Wakeman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cumberland, to address the throne of Grace, which he did in language which is a curious specimen of electioneering piety.

A voice in the crowd here cried out, "I move we now proceed, forthwith, to liberate Thomas W. Dorr from the State Prison," which was followed by cries of "no, no"—"order, order." The band of music then struck up the national air of "Hail Columbia," concluding with "Yankee Doodle."

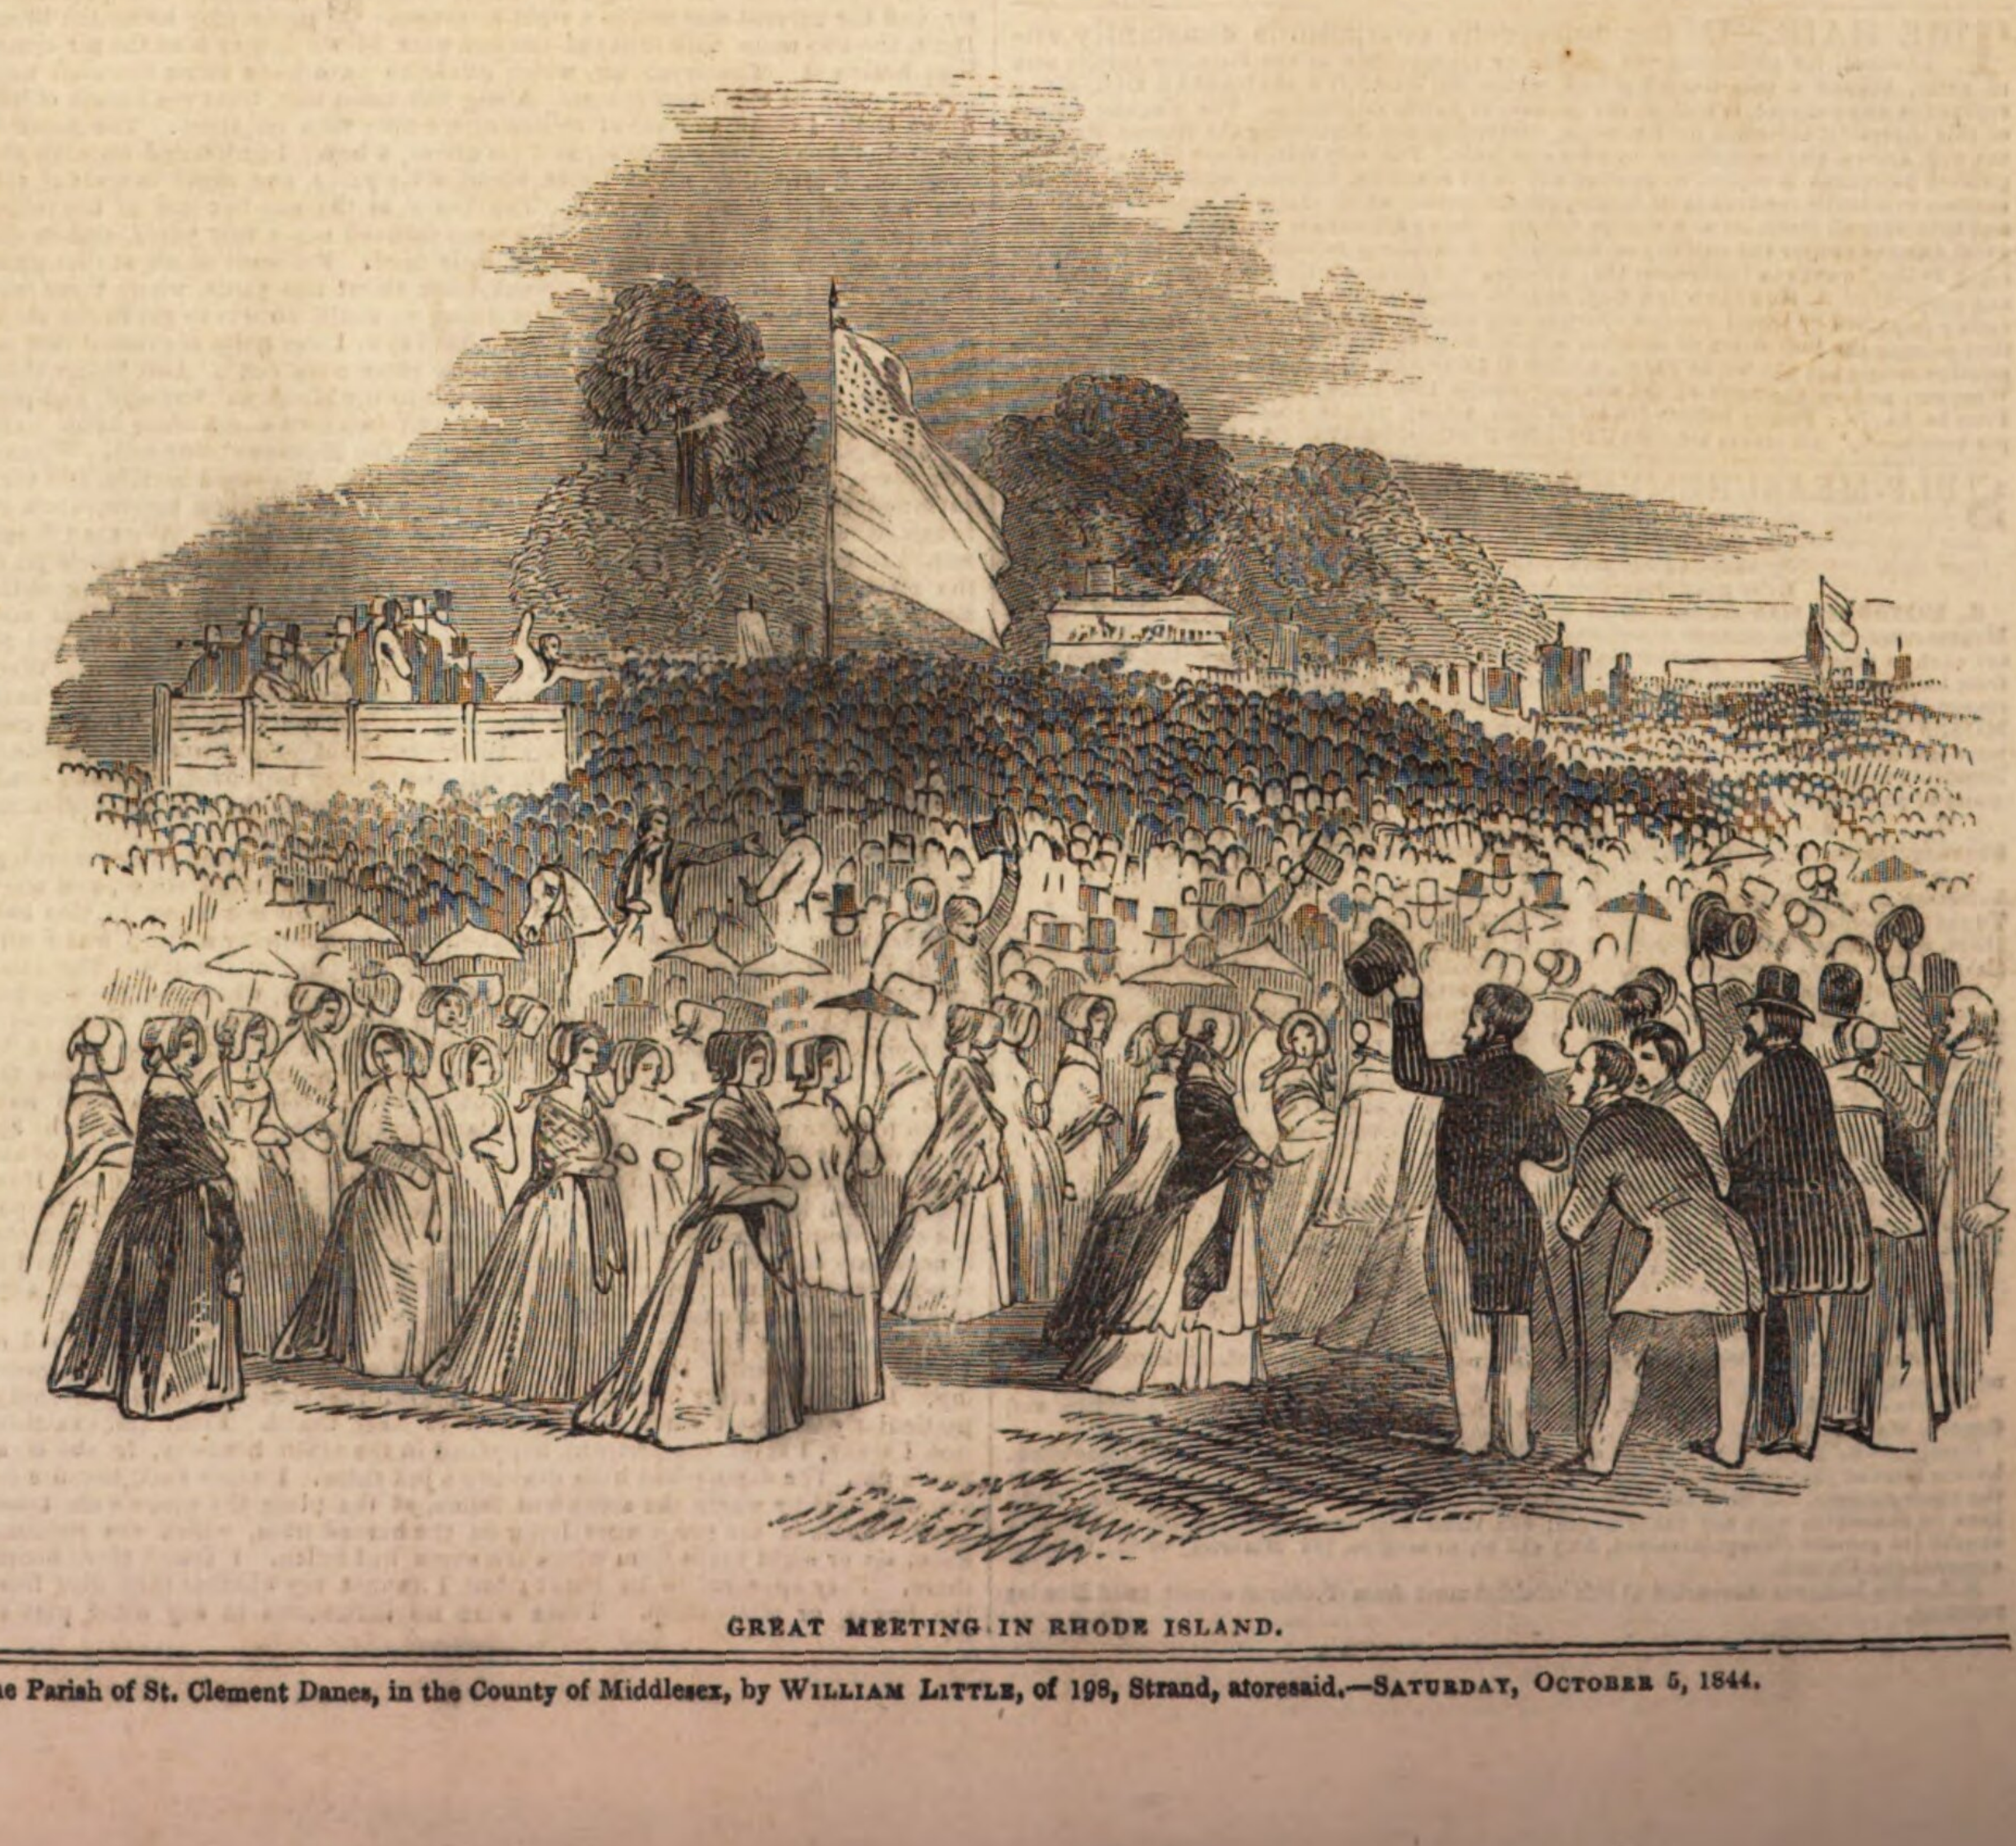
The meeting was then addressed by the President, after which the assemblage became so extensive that other speakers took the stand occupied by the music at the foot of the valley, and the report says, "addressed the lower five acres of the audience."

The resolutions were next read, embodying the views of the suffrage party, and the sovereignty of the people, a protest against Governor Dorr's imprisonment; against the election of Henry Clay. Another resolution sympathised with O'Connell; and another in favour of Polk and Dallas, and their principles. Indeed, the object of the meeting was a little for Dorr, but a great deal for the Democratic Presidential candidates, Polk and Dallas.

We have not space to enumerate the speakers. Letters were read, approving of its objects, from Gen. Jackson, James Buchanan, Martin Van Buren, Colonel Johnson, Silas Wright, &c.

In the yard of the prison where Dorr was confined, several companies of soldiers were secreted, as well as in the armories at the upper part of the city. Several pieces of artillery were stationed in front of the prison; and one of the soldiers who had the charge of them, replied to a question of a New Yorker by the presentation of a six-barrel pistol to his breast, with directions to make himself scarce or risk the consequences. Crowds of persons were scattered about the prison during the day, and from one of the cells, supposed to be that of Governor Dorr, a white handkerchief, marked with stripes and stars with a piece of charcoal, was every now and then thrust forth, as if to satisfy the spectators that the inmate was rejoicing in spirit, although his body was entombed in a dungeon.

Perhaps, after all, the greatest attractions of the day were the ladies' white banner, on which they had worked—"If this be treason, make the most of it;" and the speakers at the various hustings ringing the changes during the day.



GREAT MEETING IN RHODE ISLAND.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, October 5, 1844.

THE ILLUSTRATED
LONDON NEWS.

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR, SC. A PARIS.

No. 128.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1844. [Sixpence.

THE KING OF THE FRENCH AT WINDSOR.

WINDSOR has been the place, and Louis Philippe the person, which have been combined, for the past week, in all conversations. There is generally some one topic or occurrence which absorbs all the attention a busy people can give to the events of the hour; other subjects are alluded to, but it is the great one only that is discussed; and thus, though the everlasting tide of events, which "knows no retiring ebb, but flows right on," throws to the surface its usual number of casualties, public and private, we pass them by with slight notice and slighter comment; they may be quite as great in themselves, in their future consequences perhaps more important; but some of them are removed from us by distance, and consequences are things evoked only by time. Although, then, the news from Tahiti is not such as to remove all uneasiness, and though the materials for some stormy debates are being wafted from India in the vessel that brings Lord Ellenborough, we hope the best as to the first; and, on the principle that it is useless to meet evils half way, postpone consideration of the latter; and with little talk about either, turn to the Royal Castle of Windsor, where the Queen of England is entertaining, as a guest, the King of the French.

This visit the French Opposition Journals are converting into a national grievance. If so much political importance is attached to it, we, as Englishmen, ought to look upon it in the light of a national triumph. Yet we are content to take it for what it really is—a courteous return of the compliment paid by her Majesty to Louis Philippe last year, in accepting the hospitality of the Chateau d'Eu. Our brethren of the French press persist in seeing all sorts of plots and schemes for the degradation of France, and the aggrandisement of England in the banquets and concerts and receptions given in honour of the King. His answer to the worthy mayor and counsellors of Portsmouth will, no doubt, be construed into "another insult" to France, as the papers have already designated the resolution of the Duke of Wellington to receive the Monarch on his landing, forgetting, or possibly not knowing, that Lord Lieutenant of Hampshire, it was on the part of the Duke a mere act of official duty—and official duty, even to its minutiæ, the Duke of Wellington was never known to neglect. When her Majesty went to France, we never dreamed that the excursion was part of a diplomatic web of policy, the terminating knots of which were to be tied amid the uncorking of Champagne bottles in the forest fêtes of Eu.

But the French do not make so quiet and simple an estimate of the value of royal movements; the power of the crown is great, and under Louis Philippe does not seem likely to be lessened; he is besides said to be a man that acts but little from impulse, and much from calculation, so that in attributing to his journey a purpose wholly political, the French may be more readily excused than we should be, if we attached the same motive to every one of the now ordinary progresses of the Queen. But for the obstinacy and perverted ingenuity with which the organs of the Opposition persist in seeing in every little act a determination to injure and insult the French people, they are wholly unjustifiable. The wish to do so does not exist among us, and, as a consequence, our acts do not deserve so perverted an interpretation.

ARRIVAL OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH, AT PORTSMOUTH, ON TUESDAY LAST.

It is absurd to suppose that sovereigns are always statists, that they never drop their official dignity, or relax into human beings, receiving and returning those kindly offices of courtesy and hospitality which spring from feeling, and are not dictated by policy. Is there nothing in the past history of Louis Philippe that can account, and naturally account, for a wish to visit in his old age the country that afforded him an asylum in his struggles with the destiny that surrounded his youth? Let us cast a rapid glance over his career; it is one which shows that the highest earthly rank is not exempt from human vicissitudes, or from the operation of "time and chance which happens unto all."

Louis Philippe is the son of the too famous Duke of Orleans, who lent the aid of his fortune, which was immense, and his talents, of which the same could not be said, to the revolutionary party of France in all the agitations that preceded the total destruction of the monarchy. To fall in with the levelling temper of the times, he first threw off his rank, and styled himself simply Citizen Egalité; with at least equal readiness he threw off that which is better and higher than rank and title; he must have divested himself of feeling and affection ere he could have voted for the death of Louis XVI. When the revolution was degenerating into anarchy, and, like Saturn, was devouring its own children, his extreme opinions did not save him from the penalty attached to the crime of being wealthy and nobly born, and he fell beneath the guillotine, the least pitied perhaps of all the victims of that horrible epoch. His son was born in 1773, and the worst of all these scenes were acted during the first twenty years of his life. We pass over his education by Madame de Genlis—preferred by his father on account of her talents, to a tutor—and take him up at that part of his history when he was earning a name among men as an officer in the army of the Republic, which was engaged on the frontiers against the invading force of Austria. He served his first campaign, in 1792, under Dumouriez; he had for a short time been attached to the force under the command of General Kellerman, and was present with his younger brother, the Duke de Montpensier, at the battle of Valmy. But it was at the battle of Gemappes, under Dumouriez, that he first distinguished himself. The action was fought on the 6th of November, 1792, and to the young Duke de Chartres, the title of the eldest sons of the House of Orleans, was entrusted the command of the right wing of the French army. The attack on the strong position occupied by the Austrian centre was at first successful, but the advancing force was afterwards checked, and the check became a repulse; it was in the rallying his broken troops, forming the several battalions into one large one, inspiring the mass with confidence, and leading them on to a complete victory, that Louis Philippe displayed the bravery, cool presence of mind, and power of combination which are the first qualities of a commander. He again signalised himself at Anderlacht, on the 14th of November; at Tirlemont, on the 19th; and on the 27th, at Varroux. But his connection with the French Republic was not destined to be a long one; the battle of Nerwinde, fought in March, 1793, was unfavourable to the French army; the formidable Committee of Public Safety had grown powerful, cruel, and suspicious, and punished with death those generals who chanced to be unsuccessful. Thirteen days after the battle, Dumouriez and the Duke de Chartres both received orders to repair to Paris and account for their defeat. The mandate was equivalent to a sentence of death, and to avoid it, there was no expedient but flight. The general and the prince therefore mounted their horses and set off for the frontiers. The evasion was suspected—for, like all the generals of the Republic, Dumouriez was surrounded with spies—they were pursued and all but overtaken, and a volley of balls sent after them by the men they had so recently commanded was the parting salute which the French army gave its officers. It passed them by more harmless in its effect than its intention, and the fugitives proceeded directly to Mons, the head quarters of the Austrian army. Here Louis Philippe was pressed to accept a commission in the Austrian service, but, with a very proper spirit, he refused, in any capacity, to bear arms against his country. From henceforth his life, for many years, was that of a poor exile. He went to Switzerland, and, under the assumed name of Chabaud, obtained, after a strict examination of his ability, the appointment of mathematical teacher in the College of Reichenau. He had been here for eight months, when the news of his father's dreadful fate compelled him to seek change of scene. He went to Hamburg, and from thence travelled on foot, with nothing but a knapsack and a staff, through great part of the north of Europe—visiting Sweden, Norway, Lapland, and the North Cape—and, during his pilgrimage, meditating, probably, the fallen fortune of his house, but scarcely dreaming of its future elevation. It was in consequence of a negotiation opened with him by the French Directory, that he embarked for the United States. He again returned to Europe, and fixed his residence in England, with his two brothers, the Duke of Montpensier and Count Beaujolais. They were reconciled to Louis XVIII., and the elder branch of the family, from whom they had been estranged; were received at Court, and lived in good society, quietly, and without ostentation. Thus years passed away, till the death of his two brothers induced Louis Philippe to leave England for awhile. He proceeded to Sicily, and there met the Princess Amelia, daughter of the King of Naples, whom he married in 1809; and the union being one into which considerations of state and ambition did not enter, it has proved a happy one. He resided at Palermo, with his bride, till the fall of Napoleon, when he returned to Paris, watching, but not joining in, the policy of the Government. When the return of Napoleon from Elba drove Louis XVIII. from his throne, the Duke of Orleans did all in his power to keep the soldiers of the Army of the North faithful to the King, but could not succeed against the enthusiasm wakened by the very name of the Emperor. He therefore left France, and returned to his former residence, at Twickenham. Shortly came the battle of Waterloo, and the restoration of the Bourbons. The Duke of Orleans returned to France, but only to be coldly received at Court; the King mistrusted him; but the species of persecution to which he was subjected by the Monarch increased his popularity with the people. Louis died, and the fatal policy pursued by Charles X. filled up the measure of popular indignation. The Revolution of July, 1830, burst like a thunderclap on Europe; and in the dissolution of the Government that followed, the Duke of Orleans was nominated "Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom," a dignity which he soon converted into that of "King of the French," with more power, and more ability to use it, than any King of the Bourbon race has possessed since the days of Louis XIV.

And this Monarch, after so many changes, is again in England, not as an exiled man, but as a crowned head, the guest of royalty, received with all the pomp, pride, and circumstance that attend on kingly state. May he not wish, on the verge of life, to see once more the land that must be to him linked with so many recollections? We cannot see anything in the visit that is not graceful and natural. The supposition that Louis Philippe would engage in a deliberate conspiracy against the honour and interests of his country is too absurd to obtain credit from any one but the conductors of the French Opposition press, for whom nothing seems too absurd when England or the English are in question.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Our news from France this week is but scanty. The Paris papers, like those on this side of the Channel, are chiefly filled with incidents connected with the departure of the King for England. His Majesty has made his visit to our Queen the occasion for an act of clemency, and has ordered the liberation of a number of political prisoners. The Moniteur publishes their names, amounting in all to nearly 60. They are for the most part obscure persons, implicated in the insurrection of the 12th and 13th of May, 1839, in Paris; in the Republican plot of Marseilles; the expedition of Louis Napoleon to Boulogne; and the attempt of Quenisset against the lives of the Dukes of Orleans and Aumale. The most remarkable among them are—Hubert, Bouffet, Montauban, Orsi, Bataille, Bechet, Becker, Dourille, Dupoty, Hendrick, Herbulet, Dubourdieu, Bonnefond, Elie, Forestier, Ornano, Lombard, Bourdisson, Louis Dufour, &c.

Arrangements have been made in Paris to procure the most speedy transmission of news from Louis Philippe, and, in his Majesty's absence, the Duke de Nemours was to transact official business with the Ministers.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles of the 3d inst. brings news from Algeria of the 29th ult. The Duke d'Aumale arrived at Bona on the 18th ult. The Prince having been complimented by the Mayor of that town, replied:—

"I am very grateful to you for the flattering sentiments you express towards me and my family. The King has long demonstrated the lively interest he takes in the future welfare of Algeria; he proved it by actions as well as words, and will be happy to hear that his intentions are so well appreciated. Called by his will to the command of this noble province, I have endeavoured to study all its wants. Those of the district and town of Bona are well known to me, and you may rest persuaded that your interests will not have a more zealous advocate than me."

The Duke de Glucksberg has left Paris for Madrid, whence he is to proceed to the kingdom of Morocco. He was the bearer of the treaty of peace between that power and France, ratified by the French Government. The King had appointed the Duke de Glucksberg officer of the Legion of Honour.

M. Lenain, former member of the National Convention and Counsellor of the Court of Cassation until 1814, when he resigned his functions, not to take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the Bourbons, died a few days ago in the 87th year of his age, at Clery, where he had resided since his retirement from public life.

One of the papers before us publishes a letter from Cadiz of the 25th ult., mentioning the complete evacuation of the island of Mogadore by the French, and the arrival at Cadiz of the garrison and the remainder of the squadron. The Moorish envoy sent from Tangier, in the Cuvier, to inform his countrymen of the conclusion of peace, was unable to meet in the town a single inhabitant to whom he could communicate that pleasing intelligence. Ever since the bombardment, Kabyle marauders daily entered Mogadore, to search for booty among its ruins. On the 12th, these plunderers accidentally set fire to a mine, which had been opened under one of the forts, commanding the channel between the island and town, and the battery situate at the gate of the Marine. The latter was blown up by the Moors; but the fuse leading to the powder-magazine under the fort having been extinguished, no explosion took place. On the 12th, the French garrison was awoke by the report of an explosion which completely destroyed that fort. The Emperor of Morocco had accepted the mediation of France for the adjustment of his differences with Denmark and Sweden, and it was believed that he would renounce the tribute paid to him by those two powers in virtue of ancient treaties.

The Journal des Débats has an admirable article in answer to the splenetic and absurd effusions of some of the revolutionary journals on the subject of the visit of the King to England. It says:—"The Queen of Great Britain is preparing to give the King of the French a reception worthy of him and of England. The nation unites in feeling with the Sovereign, and is preparing festivities for the officers of the French navy, as the Court is preparing a similar honour for the King. We should have imagined that such a spontaneous manifestation would have been regarded as a proof of good feeling and of sincere cordiality. It appears that we were simpletons to think so, and that England is perfidious. We should have thought that those preparations were to do us honour; it appears that the purpose is to insult us. It is France which has been sacrificed to prepare the King's journey; it is, again, France which will be insulted during the King's stay in the country of an ally. What, then, is that grand affront which England intends us? She sends the Duke of Wellington to meet the King! This is the insult offered to France, and to the revolution of July? This is, in truth, to display a strange knowledge of the dignity of one's country! Assuredly we cannot efface history. We cannot prevent this name from being mixed with the most painful, as well as with the most glorious, period of our annals. But is France, then, so feeble—is she so small, that she cannot look those men in the face whom she formerly engaged on the field of battle! When the first Lieutenant of the Emperor proceeded to assist at the coronation of Queen Victoria, did England perceive an insult in his presence? Did she attribute as a crime to the veteran of all the wars of the Empire the recollections which attach to his name and to his illustrious reputation? Has nothing occurred during thirty years? And is the Revolution of 1830, which has replaced us in the first rank amongst free nations, nothing? England sends her most illustrious citizens to meet the Sovereign of France. This is termed an insult to the Revolution of July: we consider it as an act of homage paid to it. It is precisely because England sees beyond the King, or rather, sees in the King the nation over which he reigns, and the revolution from which he sprung, that the reception is given to him which does honour to the British nation."

"Richard in Palestine," a new opera in three acts, was performed for the first time at the Académie Royale de Musique of Paris on last Monday night. It appears to have met with but moderate success, although its mise en scène is pronounced very splendid. The libretto, which is by M. P. Foucher, is founded on Sir Walter Scott's novel. The music is by M. A. Adam.

SPAIN.

The latest Madrid letters state that the Count Fontao has been appointed by the Queen as President of the Senate, and the Duke de Gor and General Espeleta Vice-Presidents.

The Madrid Gazette contains a royal decree ordering the establishment of a telegraphic line between Madrid and Irun.

There is now political news, but reports were very prevalent of an approaching change of ministry.

PORTUGAL.

Our letters from Lisbon of the 1st instant, announce the opening of the Cortes on the previous day. The Minister Cabral presented a report to both Chambers, explanatory of the exercise of the extraordinary powers conferred on the Government. The Duke de Palmella presided over the Chamber of Peers. Senhor Rodriquez Magalhaes appeared in the Deputies as a leader of the opposition. The Government, on a division in the Peers, had a majority of five. The majority in the Chamber of Deputies is supposed to have fallen off, but is still considerable. The report of the Minister was referred to a committee, and a bill of indemnity was demanded for the Government.

The tobacco, soap, and gunpowder contracts had been let most advantageously for 1,521 contos, with the condition annexed of a loan of 1,000,000 sterling to Government, at five per cent. and at par, to be reduced within twenty-three years.

On the 24th ult., a decree was published, instituting a tribunal for the trial of persons charged with slave-trading, and found on board captured slavers, at Angola.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Royal Mail Company's steamer the Severn has arrived from the West Indies—The dates of the papers brought by this conveyance are—Demerara, of the 2d; Trinidad and Antigua, the 3rd; Barbadoes, the 4th; St. Lucia, the 5th; St. Kitt's, the 6th; and Jamaica, St. Vincent's, and Dominica, the 7th ult. There is little in the papers worth notice, except an account of the shock of an earthquake on the 30th of August, which was felt severely in Demerara, Barbadoes, and Trinidad, but no damage was the result. It seems to be expected, that as the shock proceeded from the interior of Guiana, the full effects will have been experienced in the neighbourhood of Caraccas, and hence the next accounts from these localities are looked for with some interest.

The Jamaica papers report a very favourable account of the weather, and the prospects of the crops equally so. Coolie immigration, it is supposed, will not be favourably regarded by the new House of Assembly, to follow on the general election which was going on, but to African immigration it is said there does not exist any strong objection.

The commercial intelligence by this mail is exceedingly meagre. The accounts respecting the prospect of the ensuing sugar crop, are more than usually favourable, if nothing afterwards occur to disturb it.

PERU.

News has been received of another revolution in Peru, which took place on the 17th of July. The government was entirely changed. Vivanco's authority was no longer acknowledged, but that of Elias, a civilian, and a man of the people in some measure. Elias is a man of large property, and supported Vivanco's cause, in the hope and expectation of procuring for the country some cessation from the constant round of revolutions which have continued to distract it. The movement has proved very popular, and much enthusiasm has been displayed by the whole population.

FURTHER NEWS FROM TAHITI.

ANOTHER INSULT TO THE BRITISH FLAG.—The Arachne, which has arrived at Falmouth from Sydney, whence she sailed on the 6th of June, brings an account of a serious outrage committed on the British flag at Tahiti, on the 4th of April, by the French commodore, Bruat, in command at that island.

It appears that the Hazard, Commander Bell, on her passage from the Sandwich Islands to Sydney, received instructions from Admiral Thomas, of her Majesty's ship Dublin, lying at the former port, to touch at Tahiti, with despatches for the acting British Consul there. At the same time, Captain Bell was specially charged by the Admiral not to recognise the French authority in the execution of this mission. Accordingly, on the date above-mentioned, the Hazard arrived off Tahiti, and having despatched a boat and four hands, under command of Lieutenant Rose, to her Majesty's ship Basilisk, lying at anchor in the roadstead, they were interrupted in their passage thither by a large armed barge belonging to one of the French frigates, the officer on board of which stated that he had orders to take the British boat and crew to his commodore. This act Lieutenant Rose protested against, when, the French being about to use force, Lieutenant Rose at once surrendered his sword, and stated that he considered himself their prisoner. They were then taken alongside the French frigate and detained some hours, after which they were released and allowed to go on shore, the French Admiral afterwards sending an apology to Commander Bell, of the Hazard, for the interruption. On Lieutenant Rose's return to the Hazard she immediately sailed for Sydney, and it is said that Lieutenant Rose has come home expressly with despatches to the Admiralty, detailing the affair.

Mrs. Pritchard (the lady of Mr. Consul Pritchard) and her three daughters have arrived in London. They came home on board the barque Cape Breton, Capt. Caerr, which left Valparaiso on the 11th of June, and arrived at Cork on the 3d of October, bringing Government despatches from the master of the Basilisk, on board of which Queen Pomaré has taken refuge, and from Admiral Thomas on the South American station. Mrs. Pritchard and her daughters reached Bristol on Saturday, and London the same evening. They are under the roof of the Rev. James Sherman, minister of Surrey Chapel. Mrs. Pritchard left Tahiti towards the end of April, and arrived at Valparaiso on the 1st of June, staying there 10 days. The day before leaving Tahiti, she went on board the Basilisk, and had an interview with Queen Pomaré. Her Majesty had been very unwell, but was then recovering. She is accompanied on board the Basilisk by her husband and three children (who are eight, six, and two years of age respectively), and also by her mother, aunt, and household servants. She is totally without money or provisions, the French Governor Bruat having strictly prohibited all communications from the shore. The commander of the Basilisk, however, allowed the ketch's boat to visit the shore, and bring off supplies of provisions deposited there for the purpose. The information which Mrs. Pritchard brings of the state of the island is distressing. She confirms the details given of the battle of Mahaena. The Tahitians protest that so long as a single Frenchman remains upon the island they will fight. The number of natives who have been induced to side with the French is very small, not exceeding twenty; while, as a counterpoise, a much greater number of French soldiers had passed over with their arms to the ranks of the Tahitians. The mass of the natives were in their mountain fastnesses, with plenty of provisions; and the fort which was abandoned by the French after the battle of Mahaena, was held, as before, by the advance post of the native forces. When Mrs. Pritchard left the island, nearly all the missionaries had gone. The only persons connected with the mission who were actually on the island at Mrs. Pritchard's departure were believed to be the Rev. Messrs. Moore and Darling, Mr. Buchanan, schoolmaster, and Mr. Smee, printer. The people having nearly all retired to the mountains, congregations of 1500 or 1600 souls were reduced to less than twenty persons each.

The Presse contains the following account of the affair between the French and the natives of Tahiti, of which we have already given an account:—"The natives assembled about twelve miles from the town occupied by our troops, constructed redoubts, mounted them with seven cannon, and manned them with the bravest of the population. Five hundred French landed, and attacked these works, which for three long hours resisted the most determined assaults. At last four sailors, exasperated by the fall of about fifty of their messmates, two officers, and two élèves, rushed on sword in hand with irresistible fury. Having gained possession of the redoubts, they found the dead bodies of 270 natives, and two English deserters, who had joined them. The natives, disheartened by a defeat so complete, dispersed in all directions. Our loss has been 52 men put hors de combat, and 25 killed. The two officers died on the ground. One of the élèves (Colindre) received a ball in the arm; the other (Debris) had his thigh broken, a ball in the fleshy part of one of his arms, and another on his breast. There are no other fears of him than that he must lose his leg."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

This being the day to which Parliament was prorogued, both houses met, for the purpose of further proroguing them till December. Shortly after one o'clock the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, and the Earl of Dalhousie, dressed as Lords Commissioners, took their seats below the throne, and Mr. Pulman, the Deputy Usher of the Black Rod, was ordered by their lordships to summon the House of Commons, to hear her Majesty's commission for the further prorogation of parliament read.

Mr. Pulman then retired from the house to summon the Commons, and in a few minutes Mr. Ley, the junior table clerk, together with several other officers of the House of Commons, appeared at the bar.

The commission for the further prorogation of parliament was then read by the clerk at the table, at the conclusion of which,

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in the name of her Majesty, declared the parliament prorogued to Thursday, the 12th of December.

The whole proceeding did not occupy their lordships ten minutes.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

A BANKRUPT REMANDED FOR ALLEGED FRAUD.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, on Tuesday, the case of Mr. Wetenhall, the stock-broker, was adjudicated upon. The bankrupt, described as a stockbroker, carrying on business in Throgmorton-street, appeared before the Court on his adjourned last examination. His debts are stated to be £887, and his liabilities, connected with stock transactions, £2459. He was opposed on behalf of several creditors, and the grounds of complaint were unsatisfactory accounts and the improper application of monies invested in Dutch stock in his own and in the names of a Mr. Banner, as trustees for Lady Hayes. The amount of cash invested in Dutch stock was £1959, the greater part of which was ultimately lost in speculations entered into between Banner and the Bankrupt. Mr. Commissioner Evans refused to allow the bankrupt to pass his last examination, and adjourned the case sine die, remarking that it was one of gross fraud. Unless better accounts were furnished, he could never hope to pass.

THE GAMBLING-HOUSE CASES.—On Tuesday, at the Middlesex sessions, some anxiety was excited to know the decision of the court on the appeals made to convictions for gambling. Tho first appeal was that of "John Harlowe, against a conviction of E. H. Maltby, Esq.," for gambling in the house No. 16, Leicester-street, which excited so much interest about six or seven months ago. Mr. Bodkin and Mr. Montague Chambers appeared for the respondents, and Mr. Clarkson for the appellants. Mr. Bodkin, after raising several technical objections as to the jurisdiction of the court, proceeded to state the facts of the case as follows:—The appellant, John Harlowe, kept a cigar-shop at the house No. 16, Leicester-street, being part of a house of which he was proprietor, and the upper part of which was used as a common gaming-house, and with which and his shop a private door opened. Although he was not proved to have been gaming in the upper part of the house, or taking part in any of the transactions going on there, yet he was seen coming out of it in his shirt-sleeves, continually, shortly before the police broke in; and he (Mr. Bodkin) thought that, under such circumstances, the conviction was good. The learned counsel then called Mr. Inspector Baker, of the C division of police, who detailed all the facts of the caption, which must be fresh in the memory of our readers, and was subjected to a searching cross-examination by Mr. Clarkson. A map of the premises having been produced in court, the Assistant-Judge, after a consultation with the Bench, considered that the fact of the existence of a direct communication between the two houses had not been sufficiently proved, and decided that the conviction should be quashed. The convictions of Wm. Cauty and Jos. Everett, for keeping a gambling-house at 16, Jermyn-street, were also quashed, the court considering that the evidence did not support them.

A LUNATIC THIEF.—At the Middlesex Sessions, on Wednesday, Charles Augustus Cook was indicted for having stolen two baskets and a quantity of pears, the property of W. Attwood. The case was clearly proved against the prisoner, who cross-examined the witnesses with much readiness and acuteness, and then entered into a rambling story in his defence. The jury found him guilty.—Mr. Russell, one of the visiting justices of the New Prison, said he had made inquiries into this case, and found that the prisoner had been confined in a lunatic asylum, from which he had escaped.—The Prisoner: Oh, yes, I have been put into an asylum, but I am not mad.—The Judge (Mr. Sergeant Adams) said he thought the best plan would be to pass a sentence of imprisonment upon him, and then it probably would be ascertained whether he were sane or not.—The Prisoner: Oh! you had far better transport me—send me out of the country. I had better go out of it. D—n the country, I don't want to stop in it.—The Judge: We think it may be the greater charity to you to send you to prison here, where you will be taken care of.—The Prisoner: No; you had much better send me away.—The Judge: We think otherwise. We think we may do you more service, and have you more comfortably taken care of.—The Prisoner: The fact then is this,—you are as mad as I am. But I am not mad; no, not I. You ought to be here instead of me; I have seen much greater rogues than I am in this court to-day. Send me out of the country. It is highly inconvenient for me to stop in it to be treated as I have been. For the last two years I have been made to spend the greater part of my time in prisons or in lunatic asylums; but, mind, I am not mad; no more mad than you are; and that is the way I have been treated; but it is very unpleasant, as well as inconvenient.—The Judge: No doubt it is, and therefore we will imprison you once more, in order that you may be cured, if possible.—The father of the prisoner here stepped forward, and stated that his son's mind was not right, and expressed a hope that he might be sent to Hanwell.—The Judge said that would be done, if, upon examination, he were found to be as he feared he was. The sentence of the Court was, that he be imprisoned for six months.—The Prisoner: Thank you. It's all very well; but you had better send me out of the country. D—n the country, I don't want to stop in it. Ah! the Queen—why, what is it? Vivat Regina!—the name ought to be Regina Tyranna,—that's what it should be.

INCENDIARY FIRE NEAR SOUTHAMPTON.—On Sunday evening a destructive fire broke out at North Stotham, four miles from Southampton, supposed to be an incendiary one. It burned down the greater part of an extensive homestead, the property of Mr. Priddle, consisting of several stacks of corn, barns, granaries, and other outbuildings. The loss is very considerable.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

THE LATE DUKE OF KENT AND HER PRESENT MAJESTY.

An American writer gives the following anecdote connected with the last moments of the Duke of Kent. When his Royal Highness felt that he was approaching the termination of his earthly career, he desired the infant princess (her present Majesty) to be placed before him while he sat up in bed. In this position he offered up a most affecting prayer over her, the last part of which was to this effect, if not in this very language, that "If ever this child should be Queen of England, she might rule in the fear of God." Having uttered these words, he said, "Take the child away!" And this was the last time he ever beheld her.

PRESERVATION OF PLANTS IN WINTER.

A most beautiful and easily-attained show of evergreens in winter may be had by a very simple plan. If geranium branches be taken from healthy and luxuriant trees just before the winter sets in, cut as for slips, and immersed in soap and water, they will, after drooping for a few days, shed their leaves, put forth fresh ones, and continue in the finest vigour all the winter. By placing a number of bottles, thus filled, in flower-baskets, with moss to conceal the bottles, a show of evergreens is easily insured for a whole season. They require no fresh water.

A CURIOUS MARRIAGE FEE.

At Northwich, in Cheshire, a singular custom prevails, which is held by the charter of that church, to the senior scholar of the Grammar School, namely, that he is to receive marriage fees to the same amount as the clerk, or in lieu thereof the bride's garter.

THE COMET.

Sir James South calculates that on the 17th instant, the comet will be distant from the earth about 44 millions of miles, whilst from the sun on the same day it will be distant 138 millions of miles. The comet of 1585 came 10 millions of miles nearer to the earth than the present one. Sir James South adds that a noble friend of his in the north of England saw the comet with the naked eye on Saturday last, and he is the only individual in Great Britain who has so seen it.

DISCOVERY OF ANCIENT RELICS IN SCOTLAND.

There were recently discovered in excavating at Wardie for the line of the Granton Railway, a Spanish silver and copper coin of Philip II., with a quantity of human and animal bones. They were found at a depth of a former level of the shore of shells and sand. Their appearance affords a presumption that at the destruction of the Invincible Armada in 1588, Spanish subjects and money were on the shores of the Frith of Forth.

THE LORD MAYOR ELECT.

A gentleman who knows Mr. Alderman Gibbs well, being asked what sort of a Lord Mayor he thought he would make, answered, "An unaccountable one."—Times.

A BARBAROUS AGE.

In the year 1517 a proclamation was issued, that women should not meet together to babble and talk, and that all men should keep their wives in their houses.—HUME's England.

A NEW IRON LIFE-BOAT.

An ingenious mechanic at Havre has constructed an iron life-boat, which is said to be perfectly available for its purpose. It is of cast-iron sheets, is twenty six feet three inches in length, and five feet three inches in breadth. The reservoir of air is divided into three compartments, perfectly distinct from each other, so that any accident happening to one of them would not destroy its buoyancy. Self-acting valves let in or out such quantites of air as may be required to preserve its equilibrium, according to the weight with which it may be charged, and, by means of a water-proof cloth, being so arranged as not to confine the motions of the rowers, excludes the possibility of its being swamped by shipping water.

A CLEVER MANŒUVRE.

The other day, a witty native of the Emerald Isle presented himself at the railway station in Liverpool, and engaged a pig truck for Manchester by a merchandise train. Contrary to the custom of his countrymen, he did not higgle about the charge, and the contract was, therefore, quickly closed. The train was on the eve of starting; there was not a moment to lose, and not half a one was lost. Paddy filled his truck in a crack with Irish reapers! "Stop! stop! you Irish blackguard!" exclaimed the clerk. "Don't you wish we may stop?" replied Pat, with a chuckle, as the whistle shrieked and the train shot a-head. Stopping was out of the question; and Paddy and his party performed their trip at threepence a piece, or a third of a farthing per mile.

A LAWYER'S GRIEF.

"The Sergeant always conversed with me freely. I met him upon our staircase after the long vacation, and he addressed me thus:—'My dear friend, you will be shocked to hear what a loss I have sustained since I saw you.' I expressed great concern that anything should have happened which he had so much cause to lament. Oh, he said, he never had so much cause or grief, or suffered such a calamity. Before I could express another word, he said, 'I have lost poor dear Mrs. Hill.' And then pausing for some time, during which I felt greatly and painfully on his account, he at last broke silence, saying, 'I don't know though that the loss was so great; for she had all her property, Mr. Attorney, to her separate use.'"—Twiss's Life of Eldon.

THE HIMALAYAN CEDAR.

Its botanical range extends from seven thousand to twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea; and in its most congenial locality attains a great height, and a circumference of above thirty feet. When young it closely resembles the real cedar, but never sends forth spreading branches. So durable is its timber, that some used in the building of one of the wooden bridges over the Jailum, was found little decayed after exposure to the weather for above four hundred years.—Thornton's Gazetteer of India.

THE POLKA DANCE.

This dance, which has become so famous, is of recent Bohemian origin. A peasant girl, servant to a citizen in Elbekosteletz, a town three hours distant from Prague, was on a Sunday dancing for her pastime, at the same time accompanying her steps with an air of her own fancy. The schoolmaster and organist, Joseph Neruda, having observed her movements, composed an air adapted thereto. The dance was afterwards, for the first time, performed in public at Elbekosteletz; from thence it was introduced into Prague, where it obtained the name of Polka, thence migrated to Paris, where it acquired much celebrity, and finally extended itself to London, New York, and all the great towns on this and the other side of the Atlantic. The girl, the inventor of this far-famed dance, is now married in her native country.

AN UNGRAMMATICAL PARLIAMENT.

Lord Malmesbury's father was an eminent scholar, the author of "Hermes," and other well-known treatises on literary and philosophical subjects. But the scholar was also a man of active public life. Entering into Parliament, he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury in 1763, and Secretary and Comptroller of the Queen's Household some years after. A bon-mot of one of the Townsends is recorded on his taking his seat. "Who is the new member?" asked Townsend. "A Mr. Harris, who has written on grammar and harmony." "Then what brings him here, where he will hear neither?"

ADVANTAGES OF SAVINGS.

A calculation has lately been made by the actuary of a savings' bank, by which if the labourer could be prevailed on to save two shillings a week from the age of twenty to thirty, he would be enabled, with a trifling assistance, to purchase an annuity of ten shillings a week after he arrived at the age of sixty.—Savings' Bank Circular.

INAUGURATION OF THE STATUE OF WELLINGTON AT GLASGOW.

The ceremony of the inauguration of the statue of the Duke of Wellington at the Royal Exchange, Glasgow, took place on Tuesday, and excited very considerable interest. Colonel Fleming pronounced an eloquent eulogium on the illustrious hero, in which he dwelt upon his glories in the field, but remarked that they were eclipsed by his cultivation of the arts of peace. "Wellington," said the speaker, "was a warrior, but he was so only to become a pacificator: he shed the blood of men, but it was only to stop the shedding of human blood; he has borne aloft the sword of conquest, but it was only to plant in its stead the emblems of mercy. He has conquered not only others but himself; he has subdued the thirst for glory, 'the last infirmity of noble minds,' by the love of peace, the first grace of the Christian character." The likeness has been declared by his Grace's brother, Lord Cowley, to be perfect. The hero is dressed in the full uniform of a field-marshal, with his different orders, the whole being most life-like, and beautifully executed.

AN AMERICAN COMPLIMENT.

An American paper, with the euphonious title of the Wetumpka Whig, speaking of Mr. Polk, calls him the "liar, coward, poltroon, inflated toad, demagogue, and posthumous bantling of Tennessee Locofocoism."

A KINDRED FEELING.

At a meeting of the Pennsylvanian Repudiators, the following resolution was put amidst loud cheers:—"Resolved,—That the freedom of the State be presented to Michael Gibbs, Esq., the Lord Mayor of London, in a handsome money-box, as a token of heartfelt admiration of his conduct as churchwarden, for twenty-one years, of the parish of St. Stephen's, Walbrook."—Punch.

AN AMERICAN MAN OF ALL WORK.

A sign over a cobbler's shop, in the village of Hecolton, in New Wales (America), has on it the following words:—"Pryce Dyer, cobbler, daler in Bocer, bacon and ginger bred; egs laid every morning and very good Pradis—in the sumer gentlemen and lady can have good tae and crumpets and strawberry and crame—with skim milk because I can't get no crame.—N.B. shuse and boots mended very well."

THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

Louis Philippe is the eighth monarch of France who has received this distinguished order, it having been held at various times by Francis I., Henry II., Charles IX., Henry III., Henry IV., Louis XVIII., and Charles X. The following reigning sovereigns and foreign princes are among the existing extra Knights Companions of the Order:—The Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, the King of Hanover, the King of the Belgians, the King of Saxony, the King of Wurtemberg, the reigning Duke of Saxe Meiningen, and the Prince of Leiningen. The last investiture of a reigning Sovereign at Windsor took place on the occasion of the King of Prussia's visit to this country, in January, 1842, when his Majesty was elected a Knight Companion, in virtue of his lineal descent from George I.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Accidental Death of a Young Lady.—On Saturday afternoon an inquest was held before John Charsley, Esq., at the Tap, at the railway station, Slough, on the body of Miss Jane Buckstone, a young lady 29 years of age, the niece of the late John Travers, Esq., who met with her death by falling from one of the windows of the Royal Hotel. It appeared from the evidence that Miss Buckstone had arrived at the hotel on the previous evening, in company with her sister and her aunt, from Bath; that she was in the habit of sleeping with her window open, in consequence of a difficulty she experienced in breathing; that she was never known to walk in her sleep, and that the whole must have been the result of accident. The deceased lived some hours after being taken into the hotel but was unable to give any account of the occurrence. The jury returned a verdict, "That the deceased came by her death in consequence of a fall from a window; but whether that fall was the result of accident or not, does not appear.

Fatal Accident.—An account has been received at the Customs-house of the death of a gentleman named Taylor, holding a high situation in the Controller-General's office in that establishment, and who had been about thirty-five years in the service of the Crown, having commenced his duties at the early age of sixteen. It appears that the body of the unfortunate gentleman was found in the river, somewhere near Barking-reach, on Sunday last; and, as the whole of his apparel was found on the bank, it is supposed that he was bathing, and that being seized with the cramp, or getting too far out of his depth, he was drowned. He had been to Gravesend for the purpose of seeing his son, who is an officer on board an East Indiaman leaving for Ceylon.

Abduction and Suicide.—Our readers will probably remember that in the spring of this year an account appeared in all the newspapers of the abduction of a young lady named Jane Page, from the boarding-school of Miss Kimberley, at Warwick, and the subsequent apprehension of the parties at an hotel in the Isle of Man. The young lady, who is the daughter of a highly respectable farmer, at Stretton, was only about thirteen years of age; while George Gardner, the young man with whom she decamped, was some years above twenty, and, like the girl whom he enticed from school, was also most respectably connected. On their return from the Isle of Man, Gardner, after a lengthened examination, was committed to take his trial for the felony at the last Warwick Spring Assizes, but in consequence of the intimacy which had existed between the families, and from other causes a compromise was effected, Gardner pleaded "Guilty," and the Judge passed upon him a mere nominal punishment. He was ordered to enter into his own recognizance in the sum of £600 towards Mr. Page and his family. Nothing more was heard of Gardner by the public until the latter end of last week, when it suddenly transpired that he had poisoned himself in the house of Mr. Page, during that gentleman's absence. An inquest has been held at the Royal Oak, Dunsmore, when Mrs. Page was examined. Her evidence will explain the circumstances under which the suicide was committed. She deposed that when apprized of Gardner being in the house, after her husband had gone out, she went up stairs, and asked him how he could think of coming there. He replied he did not know what possessed him. He said he had but one eighteen pence in the world; that he had been to America, and could not get work anywhere. Witness went up stairs again after deceased had finished his coffee, when he asked for a razor to shave with. Witness left the room, and forgot to give him one. Did not at that time see any phial, or smell any particular smell; and deceased appeared as well and as rational as usual. The phial now produced she had never seen before, but certainly did smell something in the room when called up like that now proceeding from the bottle. When her husband came home, she informed him that Gardner lay dead in the house. She did not send for a surgeon, because she was afraid. The Jury found a verdict of felo-de-se; and at the same time declared themselves unanimously of opinion, that the conduct of Mrs. Page towards the deceased during the time he was in a dying state was most unfeeling and unchristian.

A Juvenile Incendiary.—At the Battle Petty Sessions on Tuesday, a boy, named William Ralph, only nine years of age, was charged with having, on the 1st of October, set fire to a faggot stack, the property of Mr. Thomas Stapley, of Ashburnham. The evidence was quite conclusive that the fire was the act of the boy, and that it extended and consumed three other stacks. The boy had confessed to several persons that he set the stack on fire, because he thought that if the faggots were destroyed, his master would have another stack built on the spot, and that he should get a job. Mr. Stapley valued the stack at £5, in which amount and costs the bench fined the delinquent, who, in default of payment, was committed to the House of Correction at Lewes for two months' hard labour.

Serious Railway Accident, and Loss of Life.—A very serious accident took place on Tuesday morning, on the line of the Brandling Junction Railway, by which one of the passengers was killed, and fifteen others more or less injured. The accident arose from the collision of two engines, one of them attached to a carriage full of passengers on its way from Shields to Newcastle, or rather Gateshead, where the line terminates. The train left the Shields station exactly at five o'clock, and consisted of an engine with the tender first, and one passenger carriage, filled with butchers, on their way to attend the Newcastle cattle-market. About two miles from Shields, an engine was observed coming in an opposite direction, but at so short a distance, owing to the curvature of the line at this place, that a collision appeared inevitable. The engine-men at once reversed the engines, and then leaped off, and immediately afterwards they came into violent collision. Most of the butchers were stunned by the shock, all of them being thrown with considerable force against the partitions of the carriage. The next moment they found themselves careering away towards Shields. At once apprehensive of danger, some of the passengers began to leap from the carriage, and it was soon ascertained that the engine was under no control. Fortunately, on reaching the station, a train of four or five empty carriages was standing on the line, against which the engine drove the carriage before it with tremendous force, carrying all forward to the back part of the station, where a strong balk of timber is placed as a stopper, over which some of the carriages were driven, whilst the whole were crushed together in one confused mass of broken fragments. John Brown, who lost his life, was in the division of the carriage next the engine, and his head was crushed to atoms by the revolution of the wheels, and his body was otherwise much bruised, he being jammed in between the engine and one portion of the carriage. Amongst the sufferers are Mr. William Wetherell, Mr. Young, Mr. Gamble, Mr. T. Gallon, Mr. Douthwaite (nephew of George Douthwaite), Mr. Burrell (seriously injured), and many others.

Fatal Accident at the Vauxhall Masquerade.—On Thursday morning William Preece, one of the lamplighters employed at Vauxhall-gardens, was brought into Westminster Hospital in a very dreadfully injured state, from having while at work fallen through a trap-door on a stage at a very considerable height from the ground, which had been heedlessly left unfastened. The unfortunate man survived in excruciating agony until half-past five, when he expired; his spine was found to be extensively fractured. He has left a widow and several young children totally unprovided for.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—Friday.—The arrivals of English wheat, this week, have been only moderate; hence, the show of samples of that grain here, to-day, was comparatively small. The demand, however, was inactive, yet previous rates were supported. In foreign wheat only a retail business was doing, at about Monday's quotations. Fine malting barley was a ready sale, but no advance was noticed in prices. Superfine season-made malt goes off as it comes to hand, on quite as good terms; but other kinds, as well as beans and peas, were inactive, at late rates.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 3610; barley, 3630; oats, 100 quarters. Irish: wheat, —barley, —; oats, 20,190 quarters. Foreign: wheat, —; barley, 1520; oats, 370 quarters. Flour, 3170 sacks. Malt, 3550 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 48s; ditto white, 46s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto white, 42s to 50s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding barley, 27s to 28s. distilling ditto, 31s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 59s to 60s brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 29s to 31s; old ditto, 38s to 40s; grey peas 31s to 33s; maple, 29s to 33s; white, 35s to 38s; boilers, 38s to 39s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 56s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 56s; white, 56s to 61s. In Bond.—Barley, 23s to 24s; oats, brew, 17s to 19s; ditto feed, 14s to 17s; beans, 24s to 28s; peas, 28s to 29s per quarter. Flour, America, 24s to 25s; Baltic, 24s to 25s per barrel. Town made, 46s to 48s.

The Seed Market.—Linseed and rapeseed have been in demand at full prices. In other kinds of seeds next to nothing has been doing.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 50s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 35s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £10 10s to £11 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 56s to 60s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 46s 1d; barley, 33s 9d; oats, 20s 6d; rye, 37s 5d beans, 36s 8d; peas, 33s 5d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 47s 1d; barley, 35s 1d; oats, 20s 5d; rye 35s 9d; beans, 37s 3d; peas, 33s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 3s; oats, 6s; rye, 7s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 9s 6d.

Tea.—Fine qualities of both black and green teas are in steady inquiry at full prices, while a fair business is doing in other kinds at late rates.

Sugar.—In this article the sales have been full average ones this week, but no improvement can be noticed in the quotations.

Coffee.—All kinds of coffee, particularly Ceylon, which has fallen, for good ordinary, to 54s per cwt., have met a very dull inquiry, at barely previous currencies.

Cocoa.—West India is wanted, and full prices are realized. Fine red Trinidad is worth 45s to 47s per cwt.

Rice.—This article is in active request at higher prices. Low duty white Bengal has sold at 10s 6d middling, 11s; and good 11s 6d to 12s per cwt.

Indigo.—The quarterly sales have been in progress since Tuesday. The biddings have proved very heavy, and prices have declined for all qualities from 3d to 4d per lb.

Fruit.—A fair arrival of new currants has taken place, and sold at 47s to 49s per cwt. for Patras. New Valentia raisins have met eager purchasers at 44s per cwt.

Coals.—Adairs', 17s; Bell's Hartley, 15s; Holywell Main, 19s; Ord's Redheugh, 16s; Old Pontop, 15s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 19s; Wylam, 17s 6d; Hilda, 21s; Killingworth, 20s 9d per ton.

Oils.—Linseed oil has commanded a ready sale at full prices. In other oils a good business was doing.

Tallow.—P. Y. C. has met a dull sale, and must be quoted a trifle lower. The home-make is small, and prices are improving.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5; fine upland ditto, £5 to £5 5s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 10s; Oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 13s per load.

Hops.—Although the supply of new hops on offer is large, a decided improvement must be noticed in the demand for fine colony samples, the quotations of which have advanced from 2s to 3s per cwt. In other qualities, as well as in yearling and old hops, a fair business is doing, at late rates. There is very little doing in the duty, which is still called £130,000. 1844's: Kent pockets, £7 8s to £8 10s; Choice ditto, £9 9s to £11 11s; Sussex pockets, £7 2s to £7 12s.—1843's: Weald of Kent pockets, £6 8s to £6 18s; East Kent ditto, £7 7s to £10 10s; Mid Kent bags, £7 7s to £8 5s.

Wool.—The public sales of the present week have passed off well, but, in some instances, the rates have been somewhat easier. Privately, very little is doing.

Potatoes.—Although the supplies of potatoes are on the increase, the demand is steady, at from £3 to £5 per ton.

Provisions.—The demand for both Irish and foreign butter is very animated, at an advance of from 1s to 2s per cwt. Fine Friezland has sold at 98s to 102s; and fine Holstein, 88s to 92s per cwt. Carlows, landed, have produced 80s to 88s; and on board, 78s to 84s per cwt. The bacon market has ruled active, and full prices have been realised. Other kinds of provisions are quite as dear.

Smithfield.—There was on sale, in our market of to-day, only a moderate supply of beasts, the time of year considered, owing to which, the beef trade was comparatively steady, at about Monday's quotations. Of foreign beasts, we had 70, and of sheep, 50 head offering, from Holland. The quality was, on the whole, fair. The arrivals from Scotland embraced 190 horned and polled Scots. The numbers of sheep were small, yet the inquiry for that description of stock was inactive, at late rates. Although the supply of calves was small, the veal trade was heavy, at previous currencies. In pigs, rather more business was doing and prices were well supported. Milch cows sold slowly, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality do. 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d: prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; sucking calves, 18s to 33s; quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each; Beasts, 601; cows, 170; sheep, 5260; calves, 241; pigs, 370.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had a very dull trade here to-day, yet prices were generally supported. Per 8lb., by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; ditto small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 4d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d.

Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

It is gratifying to announce that the value of money has, within the last few days, shown a tendency to increase. Among the most influential discount brokers a further rise in the rate is regarded as more than probable. There can be little doubt that the amount of capital, required to carry out the railways for which acts of Parliament were granted last session, will have a temporary effect upon the money market, and ultimately upon the value of Consols, &c. The present high price of the latter, renders the market very susceptible; and in the event of money increasing in value, a gradual decline will result. In corroboration of this view, it may be remarked that, notwithstanding the low price of money at present, the English market on Monday was flat, with a very limited amount of transactions, and those principally sales. The Government broker, however, taking his purchase on Tuesday, supported, but did not improve the market; but on Wednesday it advanced a fraction, the arrival of the King of the French, and the absence of any depressing cause, being the only assignable reasons. This improvement did not continue on Thursday, and prices towards the close of the week were flat, with a dull market, both buyers and sellers being apparently disposed to cease operations until after the dividends which will be paid to the public on and after Monday next. The closing quotations of the week are, Consols 100½ to ⅝ for money and time; Bank Stock for Account, 209½; India Stock, 289; Exchequer Bills, 75 to 77.

The most trifling reaction in the English House always affects, to an increased extent, the transactions of the Foreign Market; consequently, Mexican and Spanish Stock were both flat at the commencement of the week. The remittance of 42,809 dollars by the Severn, on account of the Mexican dividend, was considered so small, that the trifling increase in the quotations was immediately retarded, there being nothing to encourage purchasers, or even speculators, to take the stock. Portuguese has, however, made a considerable advance, and quoted on Tuesday 50½. The small amount of the foreign debt, and the reduction of expences made by the present Finance Minister, is regarded as favourable to the continuance of regularity in paying the dividends and adjusting satisfactorily the different descriptions of debts at present unprovided for. Spanish at the close of the week was flat, quoting only 23¼ to ⅜ for the Actives; Three per Cents., 34 to ½; Portuguese was done at 51. Brazilian Bonds quote 85½; Columbian, 14; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. are 62¾.

The Railway Market was buoyant at the commencement of the week, but became rather flatter as it advanced. This has arisen in a great measure from the diminished amount of business transacted on the new lines. The Boulogne and Amiens line has made an advance; and Dovers have participated in the rise, although not to the same extent. South Western continue flat, while the rival line is rather advancing in favour. The closing prices are, South Western, 73½; Croydon, 15⅞; Rainet Valley, 4½; Dublin and Cashel, 13½; Great Western, 145; Manchester and Leeds, 119; Midland Counties, 111; Dovers, 40½; London and York, 3⅝; Trent Valley, 9¼; Boulogne and Amiens, 3⅞; Paris and Orleans, 31½; Paris and Rouen, 39.

Saturday Morning.—The English market was good yesterday, the surplus revenue affording satisfaction. Consols closed at 100⅝ to ¾ for money, and ⅞ for time. The Foreign market scarcely varied; Colombian and Peruvian, however, were rather flat. The adjunction of the Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux Railway gave an impetus to the shares, which closed at 4. Business in the other lines was rather dull.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

WAR OFFICE, October 8.—6th Dragoons: Capt. the Hon. H. Crichton to be Major, vice Wollaston; Lieut. H. J. Denny to be Captain, vice Crichton; Cornet W. Martyn Powell to be Lieutenant, vice Denny. 13th Light Dragoons: F. W. Hervey to be Cornet, vice Whitehead.

3d Foot: Ensign W. Howard to be Lieutenant, vice Handfield. 7th: Lieut. A. Fraser to be Captain, vice Talbot; Cornet F. J. G. Whitehead to be Lieutenant, vice Fraser. 30th: F. A. Edwardes to be Ensign, vice Molyneux. 31st: Major J. Byrne to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Van Cortlandt; Brevet Major G. Baldwin to be Major, vice Byrne; Lieut. R. G. Eager to be Captain, vice Baldwin; Ensign J. Brenchley to be Lieutenant, vice Eager; H. C. Smith to be Ensign, vice Brenchley. 34th: Lieut. T. Bourke to be Adjutant, vice Talbot. 43d; Ensign C. B. Molyneux to be Ensign, vice Howard. 63d: Lieut. J. Thorp to be paymaster, vice R. Lane. 72nd: Ensign A. D. Thellusson to be Lieutenant, vice Corbett W. H. D. Fitz Gerald to be Ensign, vice Thellusson. 75th: Lieut. E. Ricard to be Captain vice Simeon; Ensign C. Machen to be Lieutenant, vice Ricard; V. J. Watson to be Ensign, vice Machen.

Commissariat.—Deputy-Assist. Commissary-General T. Graham to be Assistant-Commissary-General: Commisariat C. H. A. Oriel to be Deputy-Assist. Commissary-General.

Errata in the Gazettes of June 14, and July 23.—3d West India Regiment: For Ensign A. M'Taggart, to be Lieutenant, vice Glen; read, Ensign A. M'Taggart to be Lieutenant, vice Reynolds. For Ensign F. J. Cox to be Lieutenant, vice Reynolds; read Ensign F. J. Cox to be Lieutenant, vice Glen.

BANKRUPTS.—A. PELLISSIER, Bentinck-terrace, Regent's Park, lodging housekeeper. F. H. WEST, High-street, Shoreditch, victualler. N. WANOSTROCHT, Blackheath-hill, boarding-housekeeper. E. MIGMAIDEN, Liverpool, wine dealer. N. ROSKELL, Liverpool, merchant. J. J. BREZ, Chester, tailor. J. PRIOR and H. BRADY, Kingston-upon-Hull, brush-manufacturers. J. TRISTRAM, Two Mile-houses, Nottingham, beer-housekeeper. T. W. BUTTERWORTH, Hulme, Lancashire, draper. S. A. FLEETHAM, Hartlepool, Durham, grocer. A. AKEHURST, East Malling, Kent, baker. D. PUGSLEY, Great Distaff-lane, warehouseman. J. DANCASTER, Brighton, painter.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. COLSTON, Greenock, physician. J. SCOTT, Perth, ironmonger. T. SINCLAIR and CO., Eskside, Musselburgh, hair manufacturers. TAIT and CO., Leith, fleshers. R. TULLOH, Fort George, merchant.

Friday, Oct. 11.

HORSE GUARDS, Oct. 2.—The Queen has been pleased, on the recommendation of Field Marshal the Commander-in-Chief to appoint Brevet Major John Henry Cooke to be one of her Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, vice Kincaid.

WAR OFFICE, October 11.—4th Foot: Capt. G. T. Hume to be Captain, vice C. S. Teale; Lieut. R. Hawkes to be Captain, vice Hume; Ensign J. Hallowes to be Lieutenant, vice Hawkes; G. H. Twemlow to be Ensign, vice Hallowes. 22d: Brevet Lieut.-Col. R. Croker to be Captain, vice W. S. Kelly; Lieut. E. Dunbar to be Captain, vice Croker; Ensign W. H. Budd to be Lieutenant, vice Dunbar; W. T. De Wilton to be Ensign, vice Budd. 53rd: Lieut. W. Howard to be Lieutenant, vice Thorp. 89th: Ensign W. Duff to be Lieutenant, vice Romer; C. H. E. Holloway to be Ensign, vice Duff.

Brevet.—Capt. G. T. Hume to be Major in the Army.

The Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury having certified to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, in pursuance of the Act, 10th Geo. IV., c. 27, sec. 1, that the actual surplus revenue of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, beyond the actual expenditure thereof, for the year ended the 5th day of July, 1844, amounted to the sum of one million seven hundred and seventy thousand and eighty pounds, nine shillings, and eightpence.

The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt hereby give notice, that the sum of four hundred and forty-two thousand five hundred and twenty pounds, two shillings, and fivepence (being one-fourth part of the said surplus of one million seven hundred and seventy thousand and eighty pounds, nine shillings, and eightpence) will be applied, under the provisions of the said Act, between the 12th day of October, 1844, and the 5th day of January, 1845, to the following purposes, viz.:—

To be applied to the purchase of Stock	£42,520	2	5
To be applied to the purchase of Exchequer Bills, made out in pursuance of the act of 57th Geo. III., cap. 48	400,000	0	0
	£442,520	2	5
Add interest receivable on account of Donations and Bequests, to be applied to the purchase of Stock	999	10	9
	£443,519	13	2

National Debt Office, Oct. 7, 1844. S. Higham, Comptroller General.

BANKRUPTS.—J. F. CORK and J. L. DE CARLE, New Bond-street, coach builders. T. G. MARTIN, Cold Harbour-lane, Camberwell, wine merchant. H. ROWE, Charles-street, Hatton-garden, merchant. J. COULSON, Great Clacton, Essex, innkeeper. C. JAMES, Grand Junction-terrace, Edgware-road, Paddington, oilman. C. PENSAM, Cheltenham, dressmaker. J. WHITEHEAD, Ainsworth, Lancashire, brewer. A. WARREN, Parliament-street, Westminster, confectioner.

BIRTHS.

At East Brent, Somersetshire, the Hon. Mrs. William Towry Law, of a daughter.——In Grosvenor-square, Lady Winnington, of a daughter.——At the residence of Robert F. Reynolds, Esq., Upton, the widow of the late William Storrs Fry, Esq., of a daughter.——At Portobello, Lady Colville, of a son, which survived only a few minutes.

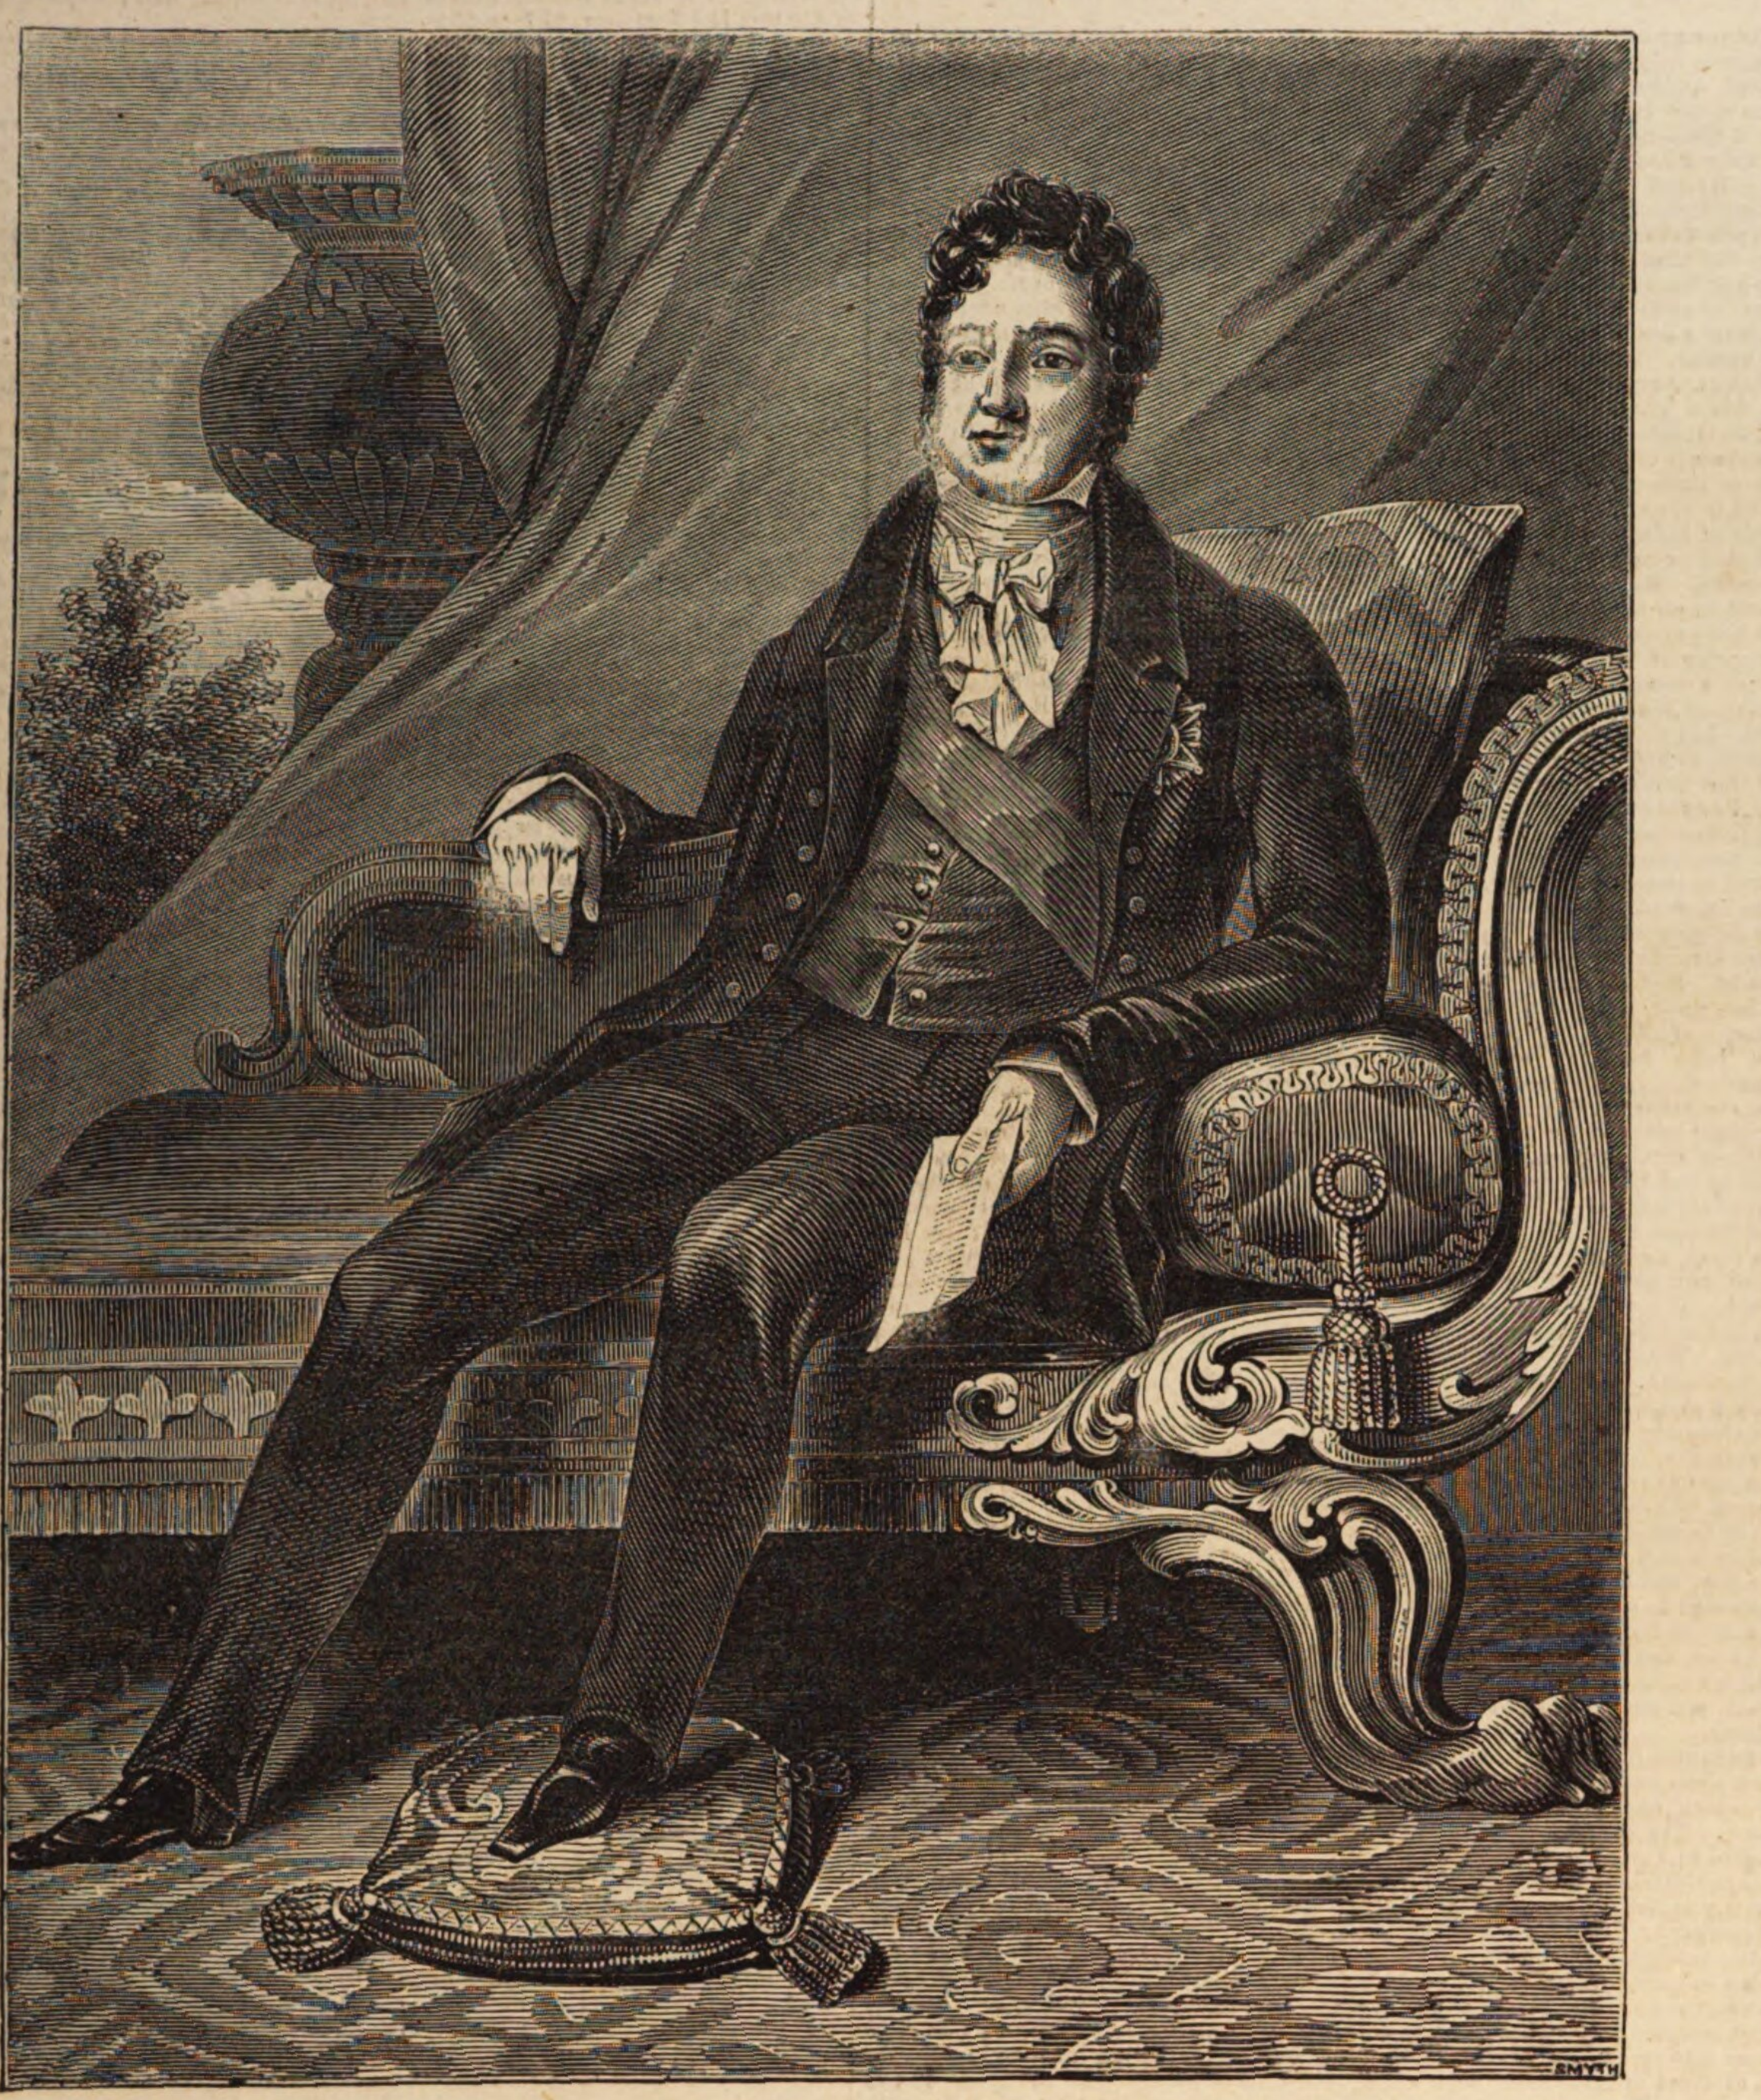
MARRIAGES.

At Clapham Church, Thomas Gabriel, jun., Esq., to Mary Dutton, only child of Charles Pearson, Esq., the City Solicitor.——At Westerham, Albert, fourth son of Sir John Henry Pelly, Bart., to Barbara Ellen, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Streatfeild.——At St. George's, Hanover-square, William Robert Anketell Esq., to the youngest daughter of Mr. and Lady Selina Ker.——At St. George's, Hanover-square, H. Ashton, Esq., to Mademoiselle Clement de la Bretagne, niece to the late Marshal Jourdan.——At Potton, Mr. Sibthorpe, of Witham, Essex, to Jane, eldest daughter of Mr. M. Masters, of the former place.

DEATHS.

Suddenly, at Titness-park, Sunning-hill, Harriet, widow of the late Jacob Ricardo, Esq.——At Upminster-hall, Essex, Champion Edward Branfill, Esq., late Captain in the 3rd, or King's Own Dragoons, and for many years Deputy-Lieutenant, and a magistrate of the county.——At Zante, Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Tennent.——At Cheltenham, Joseph Overbury, Esq., a magistrate of the county, aged 64.——At Southborough, Kent, Eliza, widow of the late Major Gavin Young, Judge-Advocate-General of the Bengal Army.

VISIT OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH TO QUEEN VICTORIA.



HIS MAJESTY KING LOUIS PHILIPPE.

This important event has already excited very considerable interest and expectation, to gratify which, we have been fortunate enough to secure such authorised aid as will enable us to illustrate the principal scenes of the Royal Visit with strict attention to fidelity of detail and circumstance, and due regard to artistical execution. The Landing of Louis Philippe at Portsmouth, and his Majesty's Reception by our Gracious Queen at Windsor Castle, are the leading incidents of this week's illustrations; but, in our next journal, we shall resume this graphic record, with several more pictures of the magnificent hospitalities at Windsor, and of the most attractive characteristics of this deeply interesting visit.

We now proceed with a copious account of the several incidents, commencing with

THE EMBARKATION AT TREPORT.

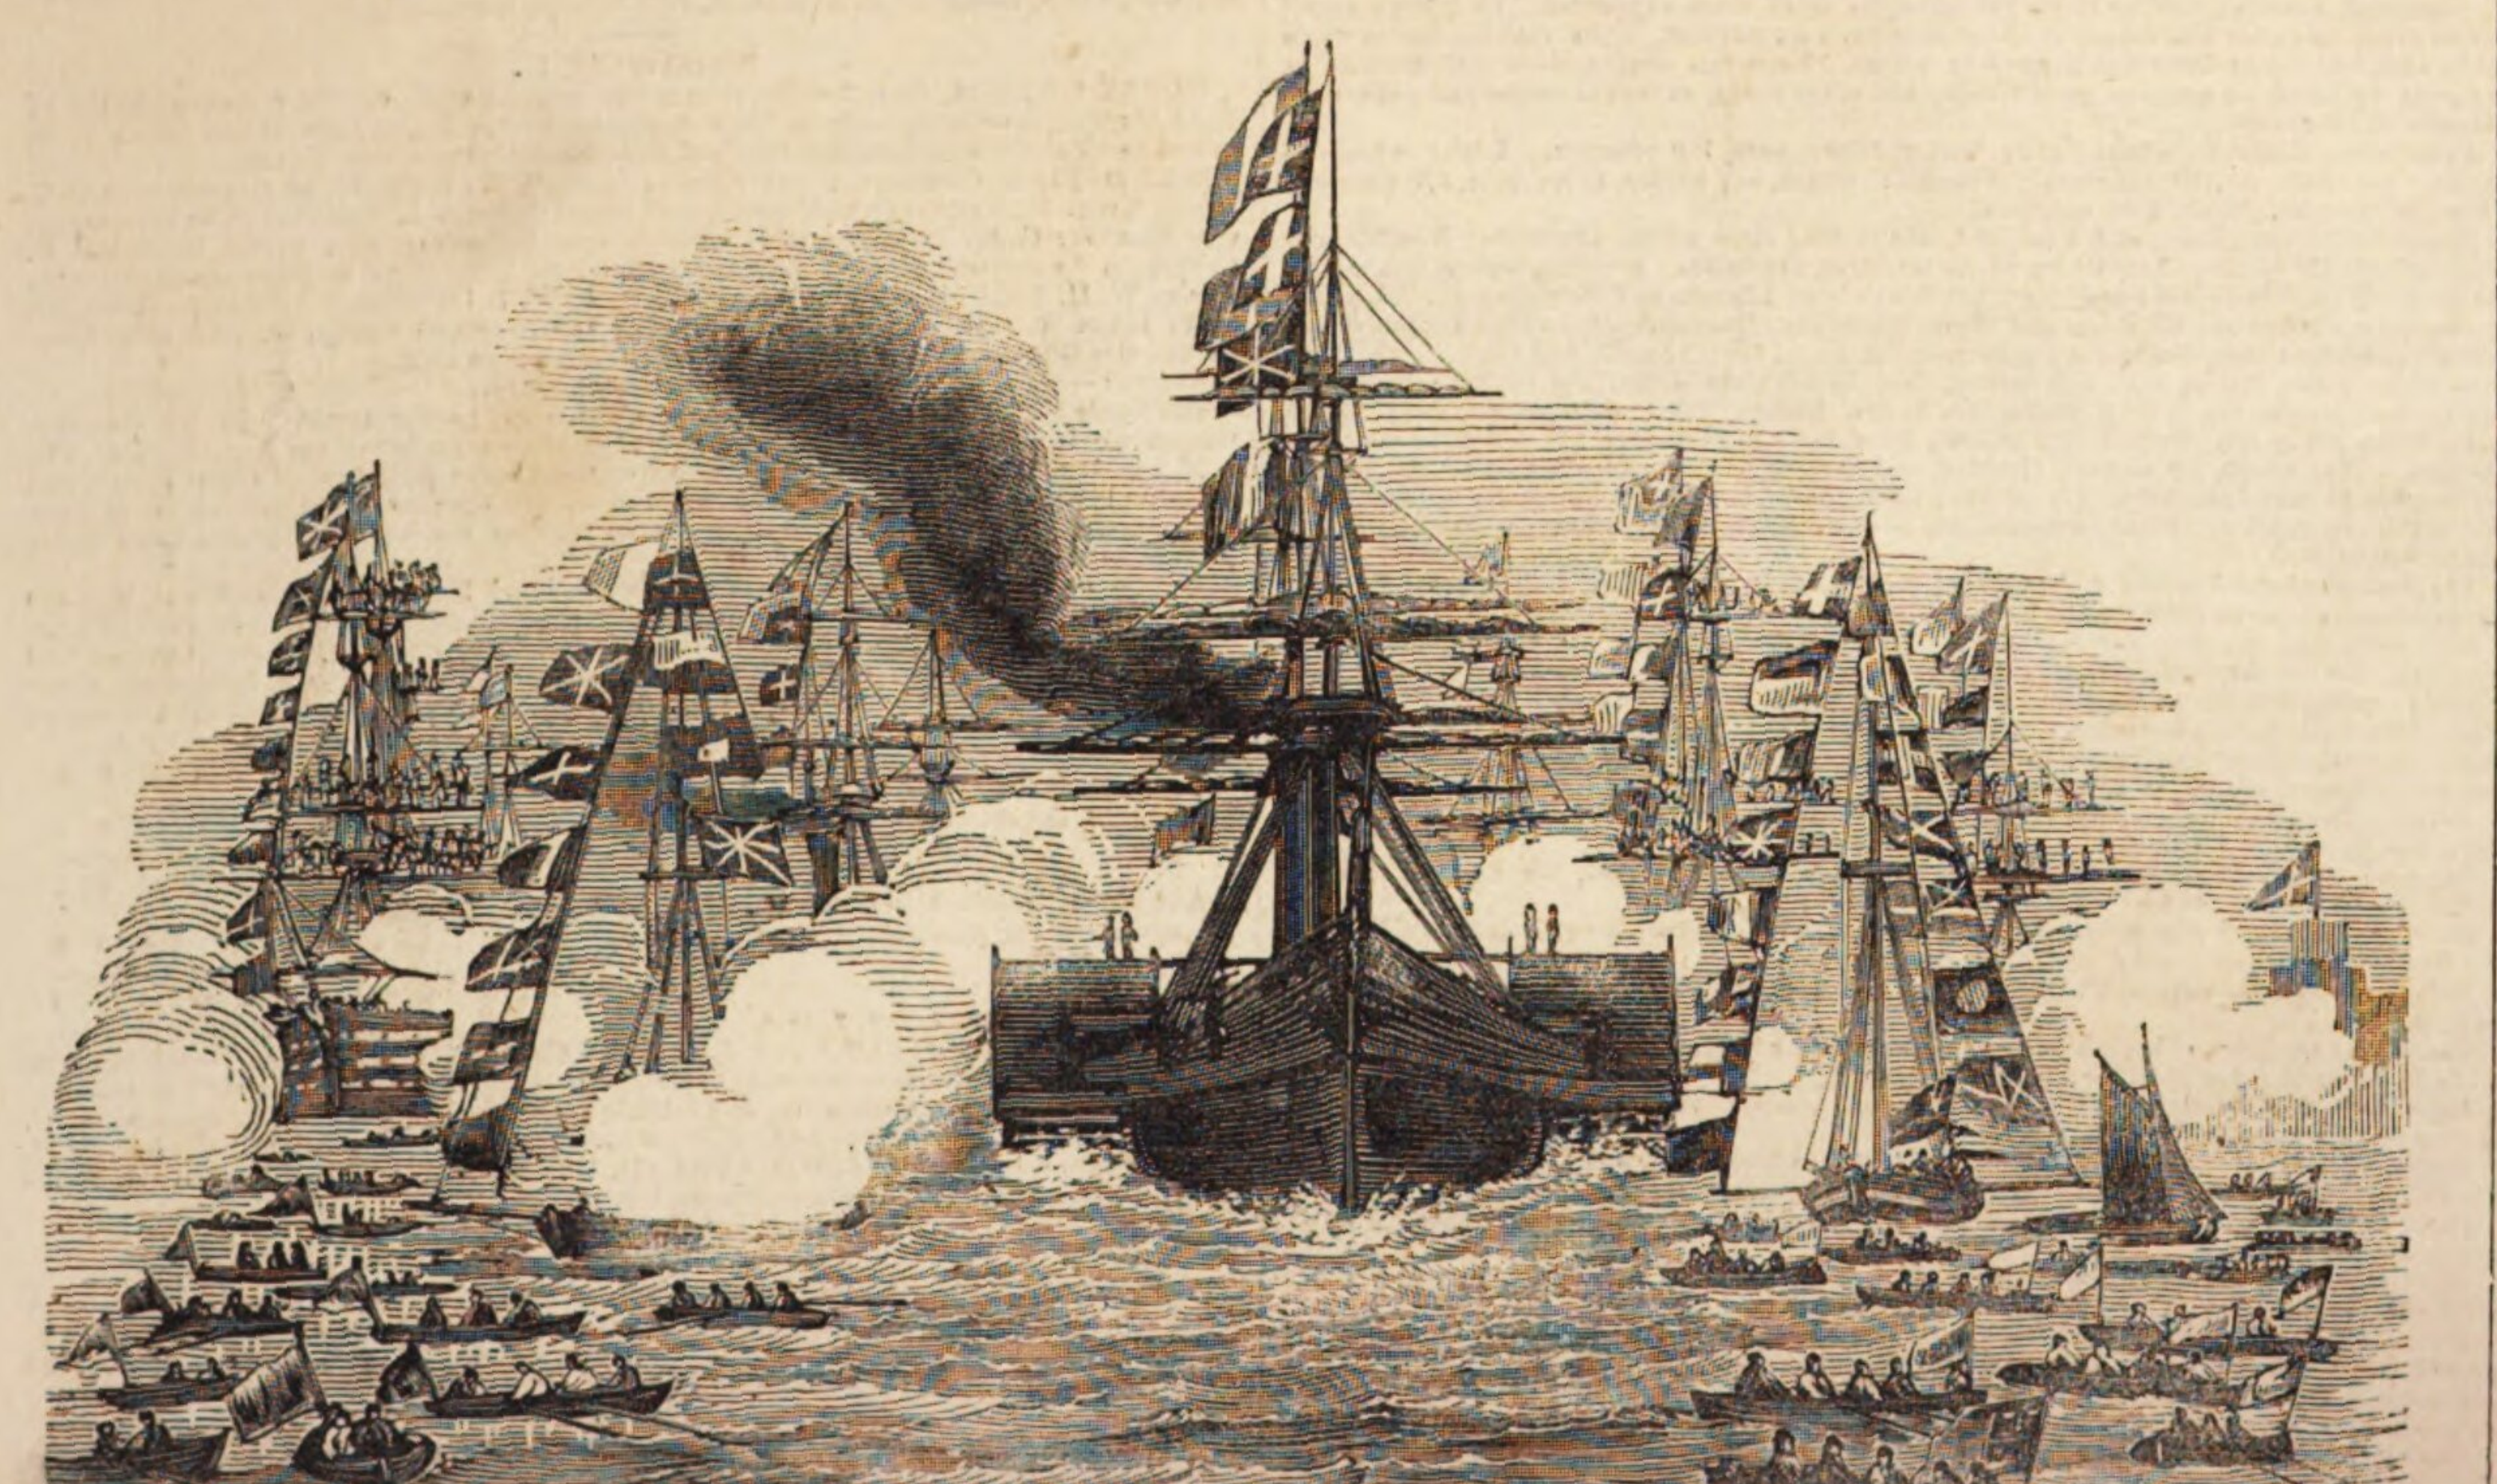
On Monday evening his Majesty and suite reached the picturesque town of Treport. As it was known that the King could not arrive before nightfall, all the houses were illuminated, while the wives and daughters of the fishermen, to a very considerable number, lined the way from the quay to the border strand, where lay the royal gig, each holding a flaming torch; the effect was most striking from its cheerful and primitive simplicity. About six o'clock, three carriages dashed down, amidst cries of "Vive le Roi," and from these descended the King, wrapped in a travelling cloak, his son the Duke of Montpensier, M. Guizot, and other distinguished personages. The King led the way to the admiral's gig, bowing with marked courtesy to his fair guard of torch-bearers. The gig dashed through a heavy swell over the bar, riding gallantly; soon afterwards the officers of the different ships went on board a tender steamer, and followed the gig at a respectful distance. The Gomer, waiting for the King, was anchored at about two miles from the shore. Immediately upon the approach of the canot, as it is called, a sudden illumination took place of the most striking effect; blue lights were shown from the deck and from the yards, so that the vessel seemed enveloped in a sheet of flame. Rocket after rocket was then shot up, and replied to by the Caiman and the Elau. The fleet did not weigh anchor for a full hour afterwards, when the Gomer, which lay nearest the shore, sailed past and took the lead. Her appearance was lovely; the light from the range of cabin windows was intense enough to look like an illumination, while three lights of great brilliancy were attached to the stern: she seemed a moving illuminated castle. During the King's embarkation, the marine band played away merrily; and the sound over the waters, coming with the effect of the light upon the waves, the rockets in the air, the cheering of the sailors, and the shouts of "Vive le Roi" from the shore, formed a most beautiful and affecting scene.

THE ARRIVAL AT PORTSMOUTH.

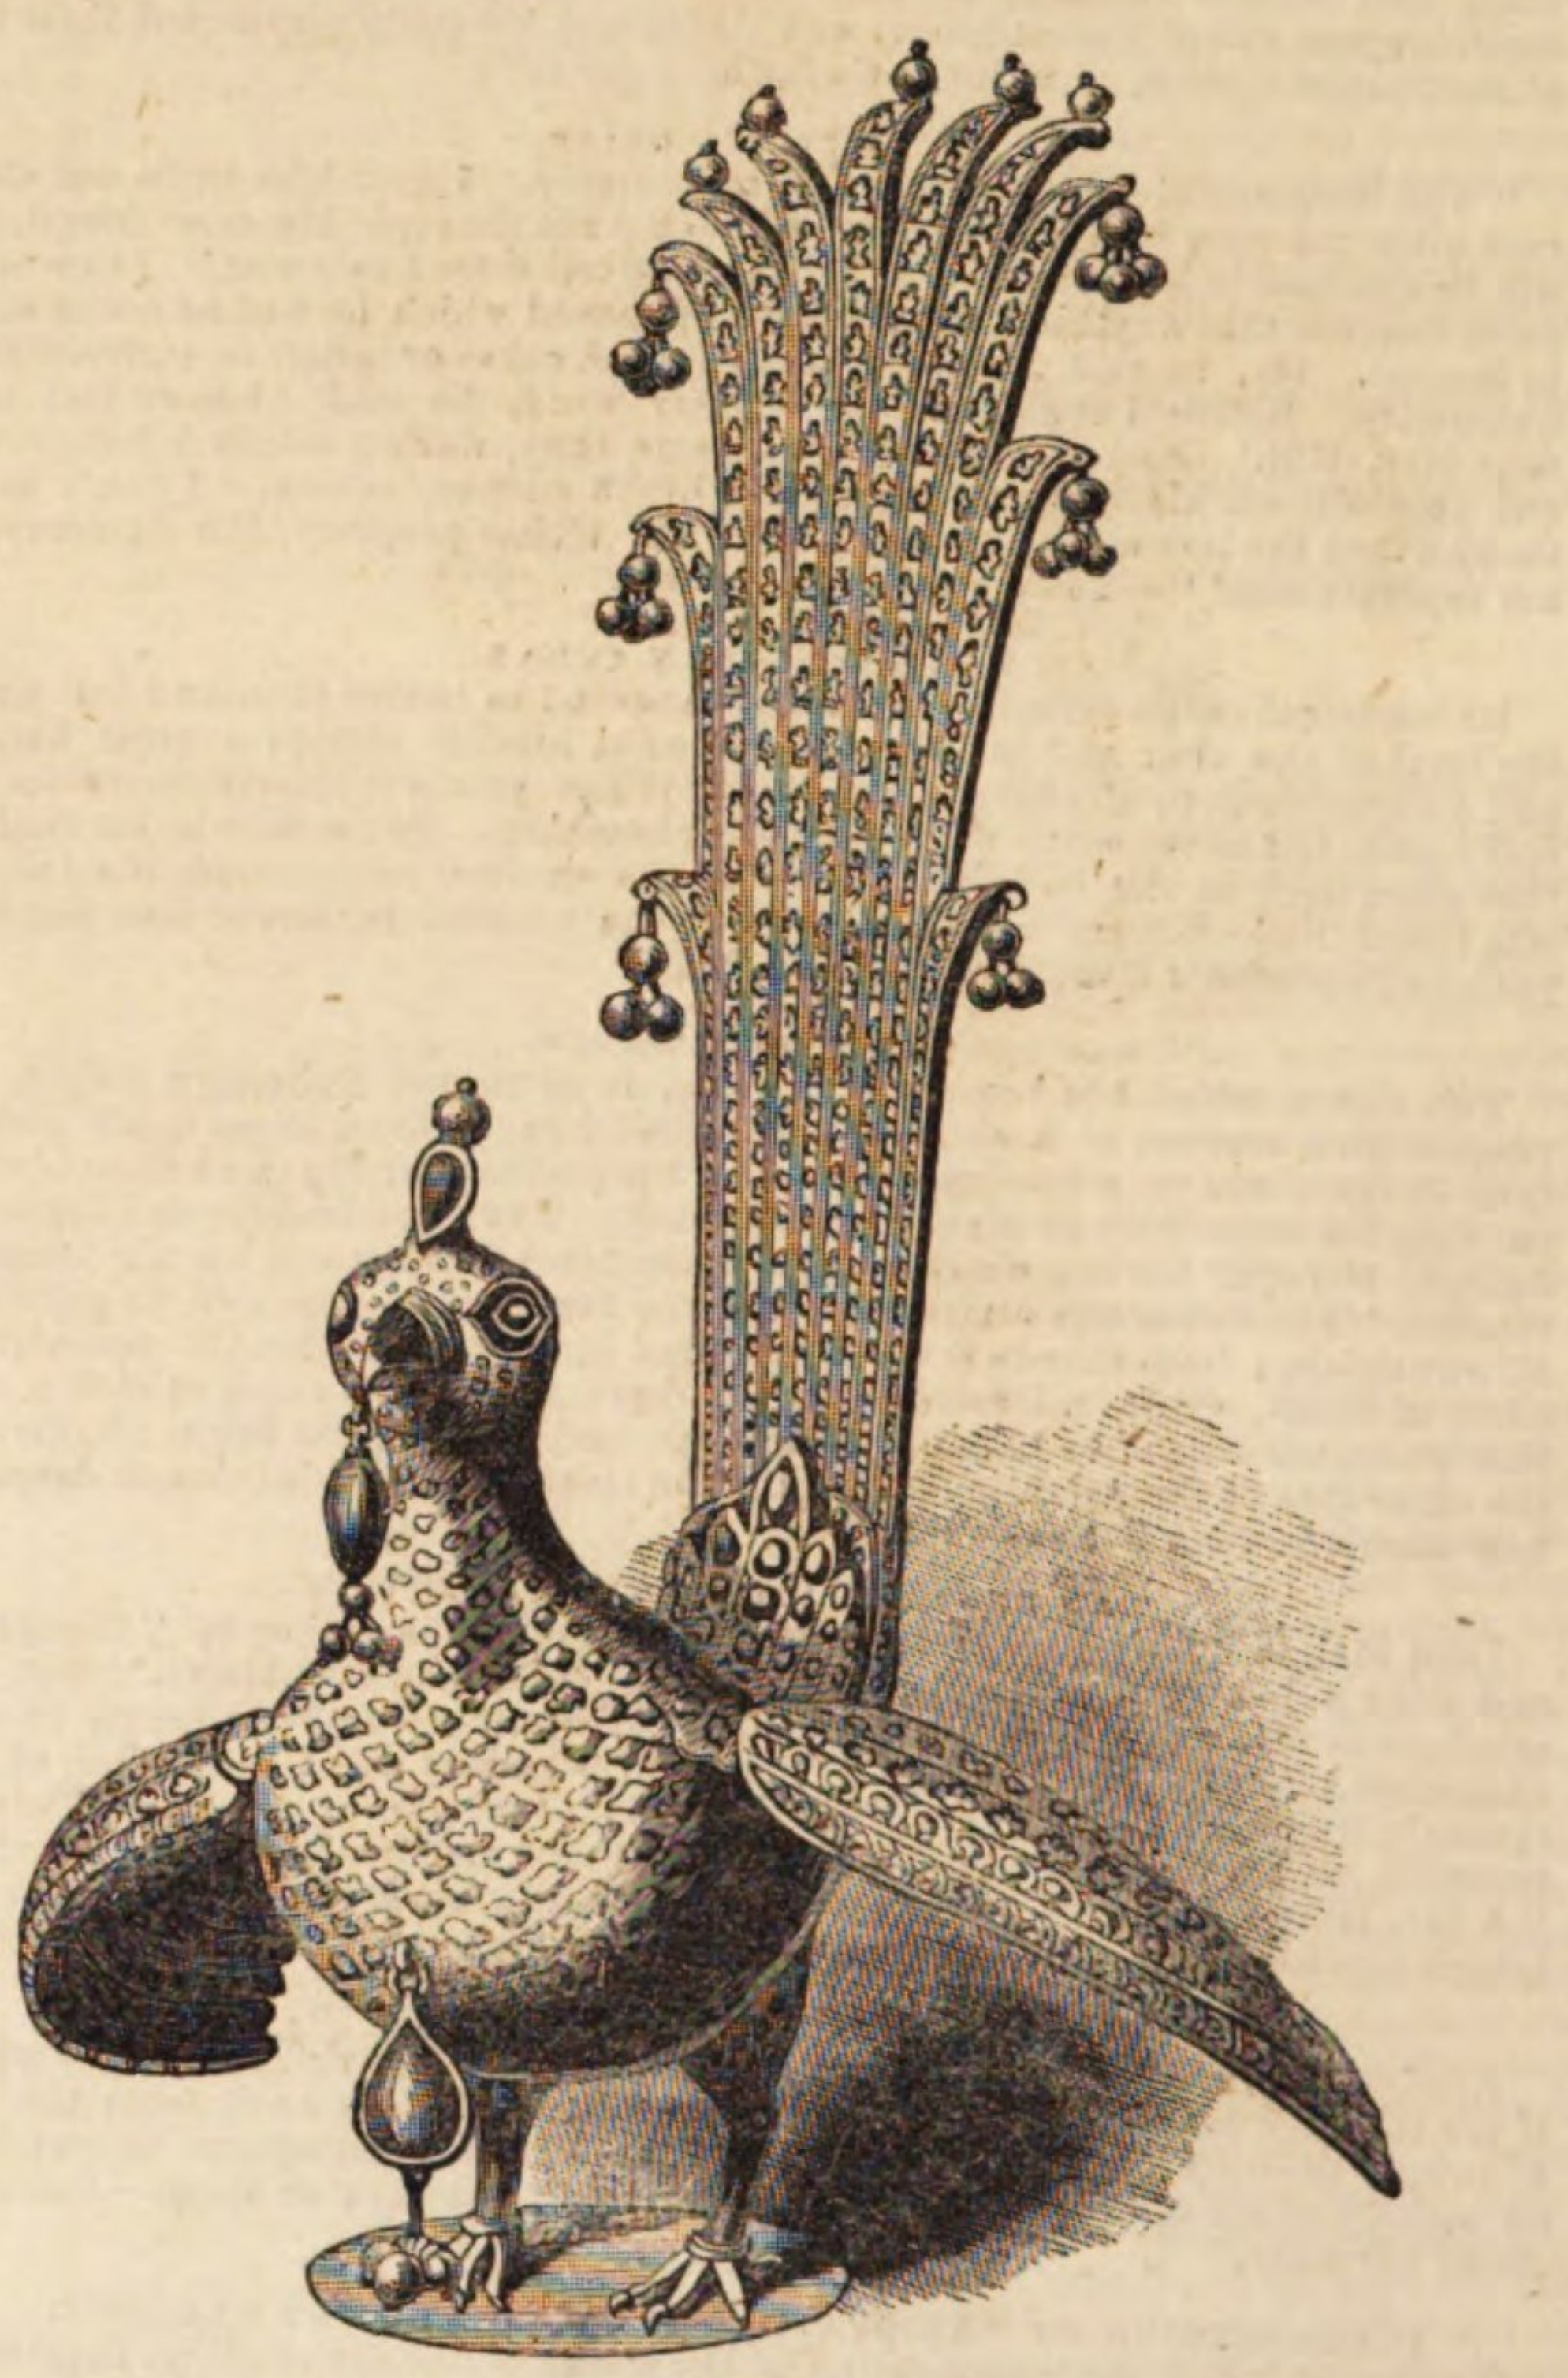
On Tuesday morning, the guns of the Queen, 110 gun-ship, at Spithead, began to boom in the distance, announcing the coming in sight of the squadron of the eagerly expected Sovereign. This occurred at a quarter to eight, and King Louis Philippe might have arrived much earlier. The wind and the weather were so fine and favourable that he neared our shores at seven o'clock, but knowing that his Royal Highness Prince Albert would not reach Portsmouth until nine or ten o'clock, the steam squadron was ordered to stand out to sea once more. The firing of the Queen brought out the three regiments of the Line and the division of the Royal Marines from their quarters, with their bands playing and colours flying, whilst the whole population thronged the beach. This general movement, combined with the display of flags streaming in every direction in the town, and covering the yachts and ships of war in the port, presented a scene of animation beyond all power of description. Every moment this scene increased in interest. The French squadron came on slowly and majestically, each ship of war saluting as it advanced, and each battery in turn taking up the salute: the climax, however, was when the armed steamers entered the harbour; then the cheers of the population on the shores, and of the sailors who manned the yards, struggled in intensity of sound with the reports of the cannon fired by the batteries, by the Excellent, and by the Victory (Nelson's renowned ship), moored within the harbour. Whilst the French steam squadron was coming to the moorings which Admiral Lasusse, its commander, had fixed upon a few days previously, the troops took up their position. They were disposed in two lines, each three deep, from the Royal Dock-yard to the railroad terminus. At the inner and outer gates of the railroad station at Gosport, and in other favourable spots along the line of the royal progress, tasteful triumphal arches of laurel and other evergreens, with complimentary mottos, had been erected. From the moment she anchored, the Gomer, which bore his Majesty, was an object of rivited and eager attention: round her crowded every disposable boat or small craft about the port, whilst the most distant spectators examined her with their telescopes. Nor was this steam-frigate unworthy of their curiosity. She presented an aspect at the same time imposing and interesting. Her form is admirable, the wide expanse of her spotless deck, her masts, yards, and rigging show she has been the pet handiwork of the French shipwrights, and that she is the favourite of her captain and crew, who manœuvred her in silence, and with a most seamanlike celerity and ease. Below she has all the character of a floating palace—the drawing-rooms are as convenient as they are magnificent; that in which the King received his visitors has its sides lined with crimson velvet, whilst in every direction you behold tables of the rarest woods, and luxurious causeuses and sofas lined with yellow satin. (One of the engravings represents this magnificent steam-ship.)

On the deck could be easily discovered, on one side, the French Marines in their peculiarly picturesque uniforms, with their officers, and the band of the Prince de Joinville at their head; the aides-de-camp of the King, Generals Athalin, de Rumigny; the Colonel Count de Chabannes; Captain Thierre attending the young Prince; the physician, Dr. Fouquier; the surgeon of the King, M. Pasquier; his secretary, Baron Fain; the Commissary-General of Havre, &c., all in splendid uniforms of bright and of different colours, were constantly seen crossing and re-crossing, ascending as descending in the execution of orders. Amidst these moving groups were conspicuous the slight and elegant figure of the admiral in command, M. Lasusse; the burly giant form a Admiral Mackau, with his aides-de-camp Capt. Pelion and Page, standing behind him; nor was the more diminutive figure of the great Minister of France, M. Guizot, the least anxiously observed. The personage, who, however, perhaps attracted the greatest admiration was his Royal Highness the young Duke de Montpensier, above the middle height, with a noble countenance. This youthful Prince (nineteen years of age) combines a handsome appearance and a manly bearing with a gracefulness of the most striking appearance.

By the time the Gomer had reached the Victoria-pier (a place of embarkation for the smaller steam-boats to places in the neighbourhood, and which is situate near the old Semaphore at the bottom of the High-street), the Mayor and corporation were assembled for the purpose of going on board to present their address. The pier was crowded with ladies and gentlemen, and the corporate officers were in their robes, so that the place formed a pleasing object when seen from the river. Admiralty barges, with boatmen from the dockyard, were in waiting off the pier, in which the corporation embarked to proceed to the Gomer, which stopped opposite the pier in order to allow them to go on board. About six o'clock in the morning, Mr. Louis Vandenbergh, jun., the Consul at Portsmouth, went off in a steamer, accompanied by M. Le Comte D'Harcourt, Commander of the King's sailing yacht La Reine Amelie, to announce to his Majesty the fact that the address of the corporation would be presented to him on board the Gomer, and not after he had landed, as the jurisdiction of the corporation expires at the Royal Clarence-yard. His Majesty, in compliance with this suggestion, stopped before the Victoria-pier.



THE GOMER STEAMER COMING INTO PORTSMOUTH HARBOUR.



TIPPO SAIB'S PEACOCK.

The corporation were shown into the saloon of the Gomer, a beautiful chamber, decorated with yellow damask, where they were most graciously received by the King. M. Guizot was there, as was also the Duke de Montpensier, Admiral Lasusse, Admiral de Mackau, and the chief members of the King's suite.

The Recorder, Mr. Rawlinson, then read the following address:—

"TO HIS MAJESTY LOUIS PHILIPPE, KING OF THE FRENCH.

"We, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Portsmouth, the loyal and affectionate subjects of our Most Gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria, desirous of expressing the sentiments by which we are actuated on the auspicious occasion of your Majesty's visit to England, and availing ourselves of the opportunity afforded to us by your Majesty's arrival within the limits of the port and borough of Portsmouth, beg leave to offer to your Majesty, with unfeigned sincerity and earnestness, the respects and congratulations of this ancient municipality.

"Regarding your Majesty's arrival as an honour conferred on our locality, we hail it the more especially as a highly important national event, from its tendency to promote those kindly feelings of mutual respect which should ever subsist between two such powerful and influential countries as France and Great Britain.

"Solicitous to welcome the illustrious guest of our beloved Queen with every demonstration becoming so great and memorable an occasion, permit us to assure your Majesty of the lively interest we take in your Majesty's health and welfare, and in the joyful celebration of your royal visit.

"We rejoice in the new era it is calculated to form in the history of the two countries, and in the hope it affords of a more enlarged and general intercourse between them, which, under the blessing of Divine Providence, shall contribute to their mutual welfare, to the preservation of the peace of Europe, and to the advantage of every part of the habitable globe."

His Majesty received the address most graciously, and immediately delivered in English the following reply:—

"Mr. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses,—

"Gentlemen,—It affords me particular pleasure to know that her Most Gracious Majesty your Queen has permitted you to present me with an address on my arrival on your hospitable shores. I have not forgotten the many kindnesses I received from your countrymen during my residence among you many years since. During that period I was frequently pained considerably at the existence of differences and feuds between our countries. I assure you, gentlemen, I shall endeavour at all times to prevent a repetition of those feelings and conduct, believing, as I do, most sincerely, that the happiness and prosperity of a nation depend quite as much on the peace of those nations by which she is surrounded as on quiet within her own dominions. I was peculiarly gratified at being honoured with the presence of your beloved Queen in France during the last year, and it is a source of pleasure to be able to accept the kind invitation then given me to again visit those shores where I had been so generously treated many year since. I hope, under the blessings of Divine Providence, that those kindly feelings will be long cherished between our nations, and tend to promote the happiness and prosperity of mankind."

NEWSPAPER ONE PENNY

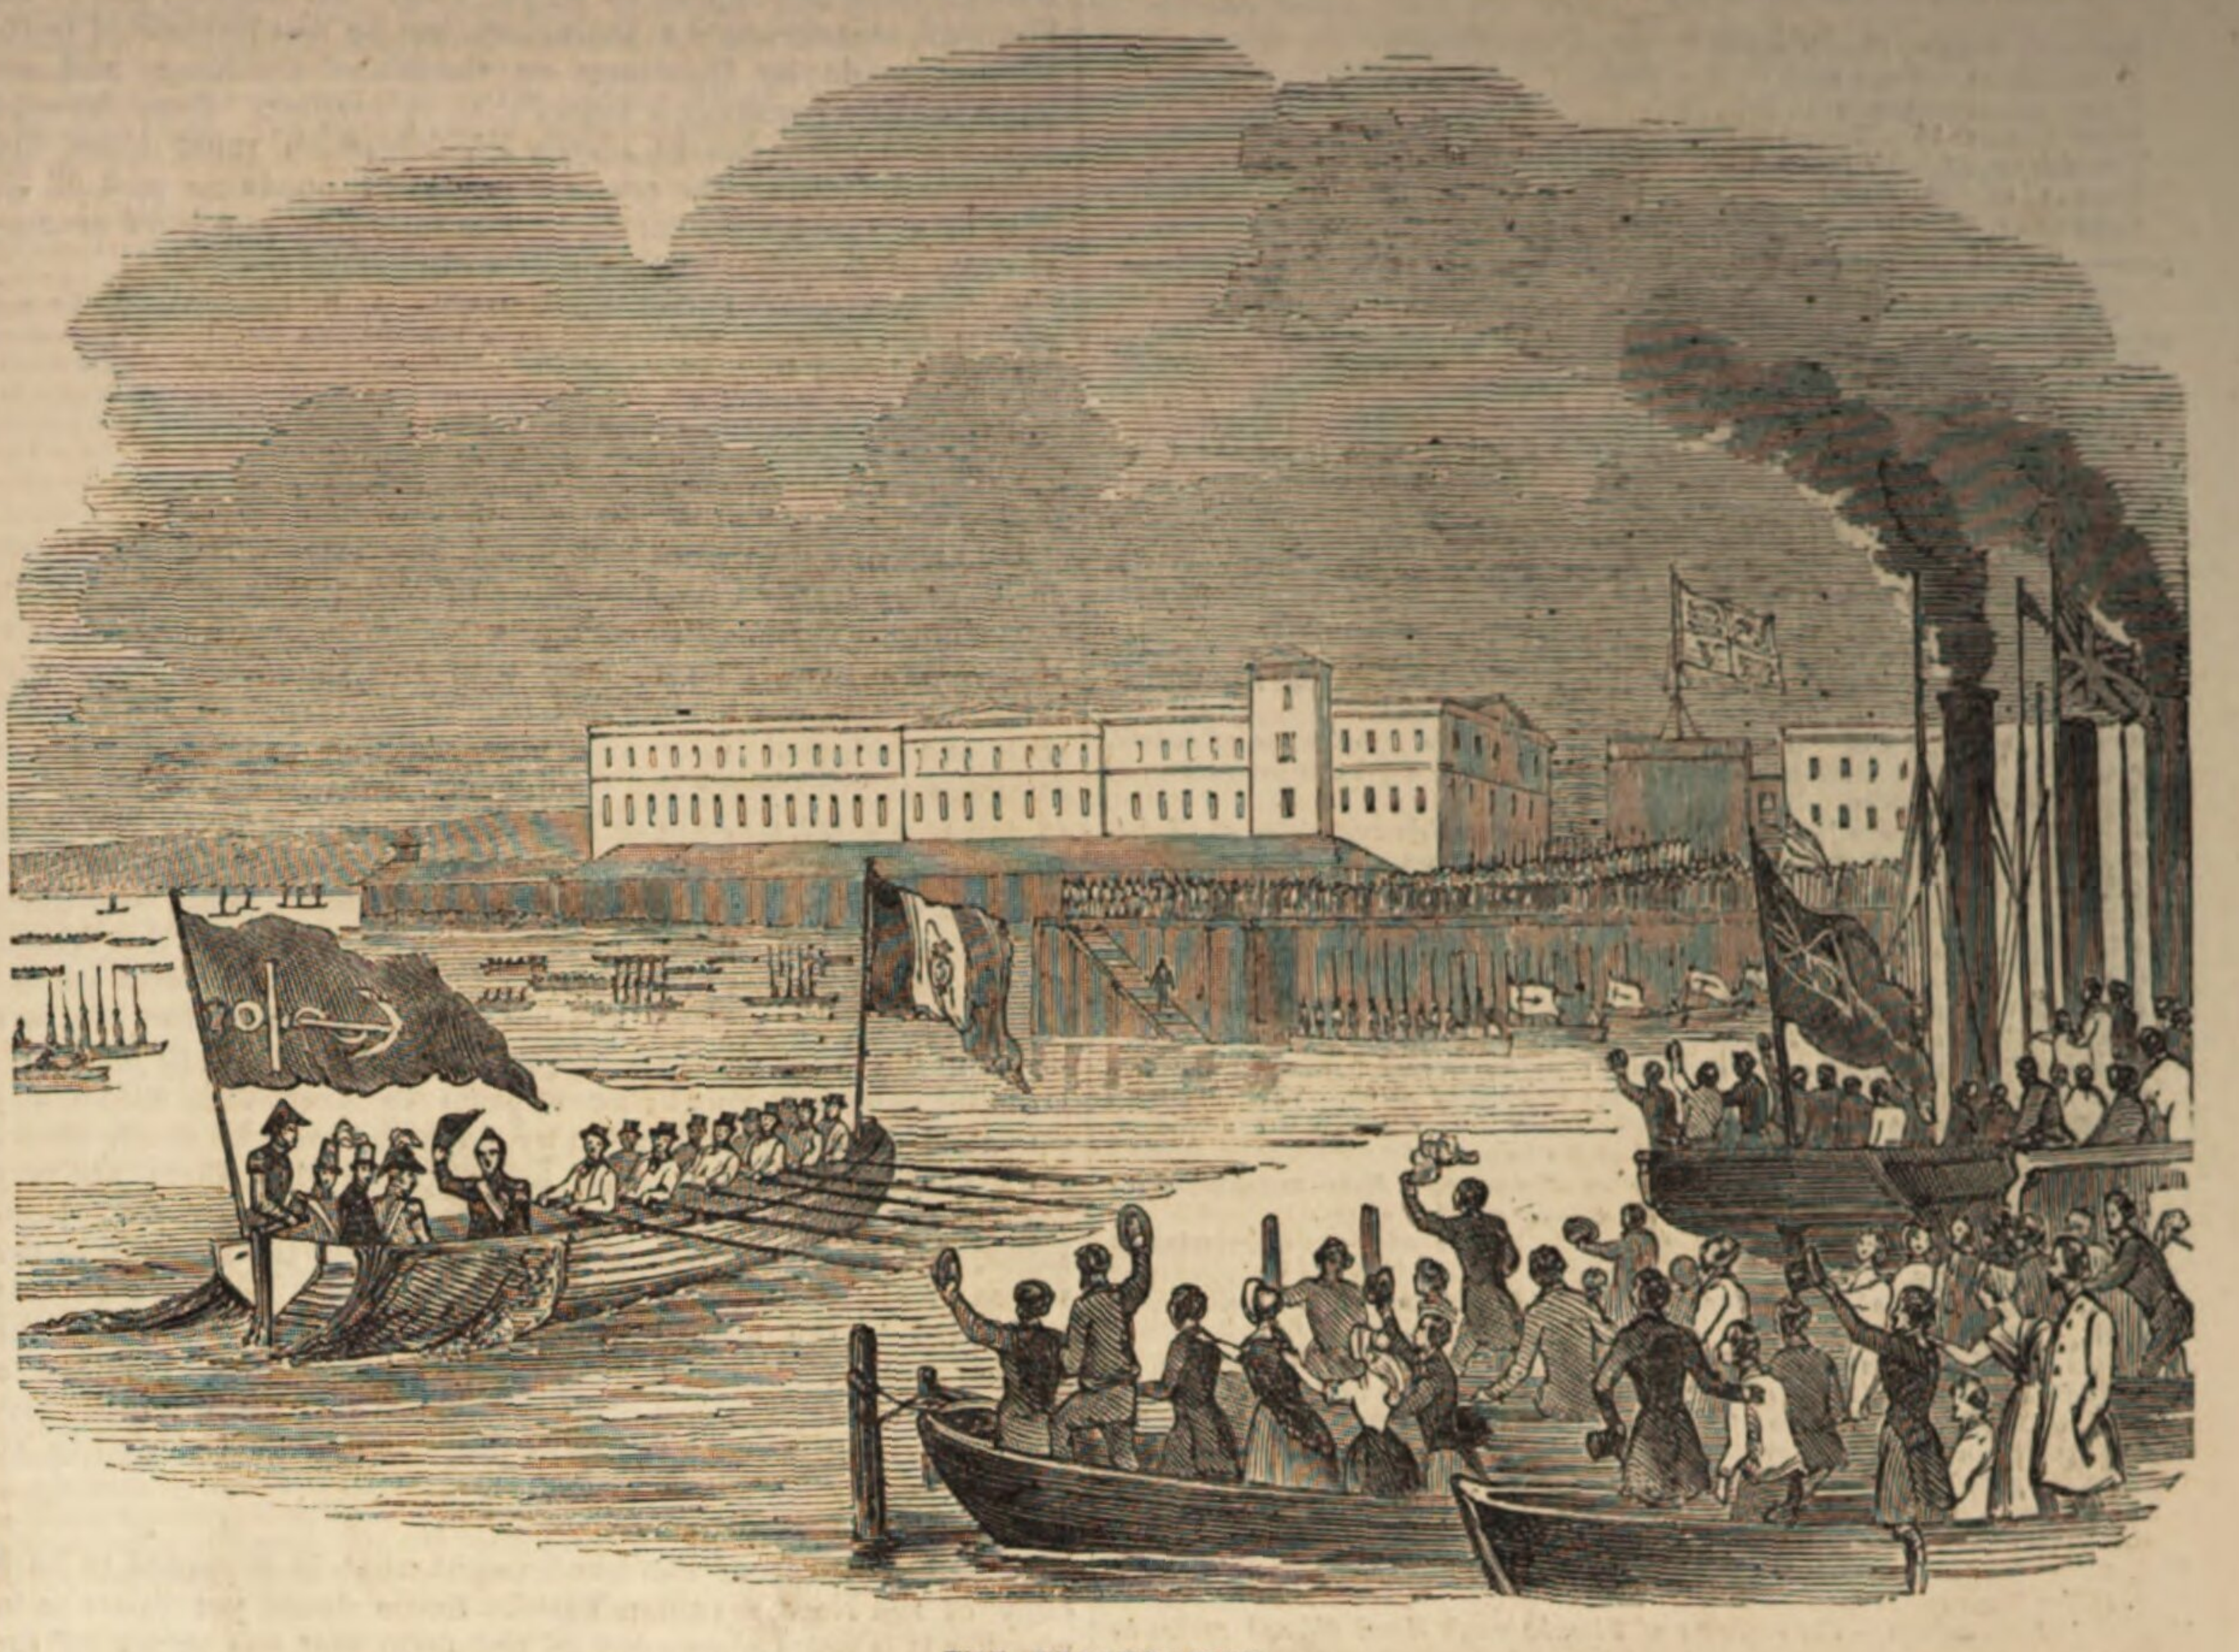
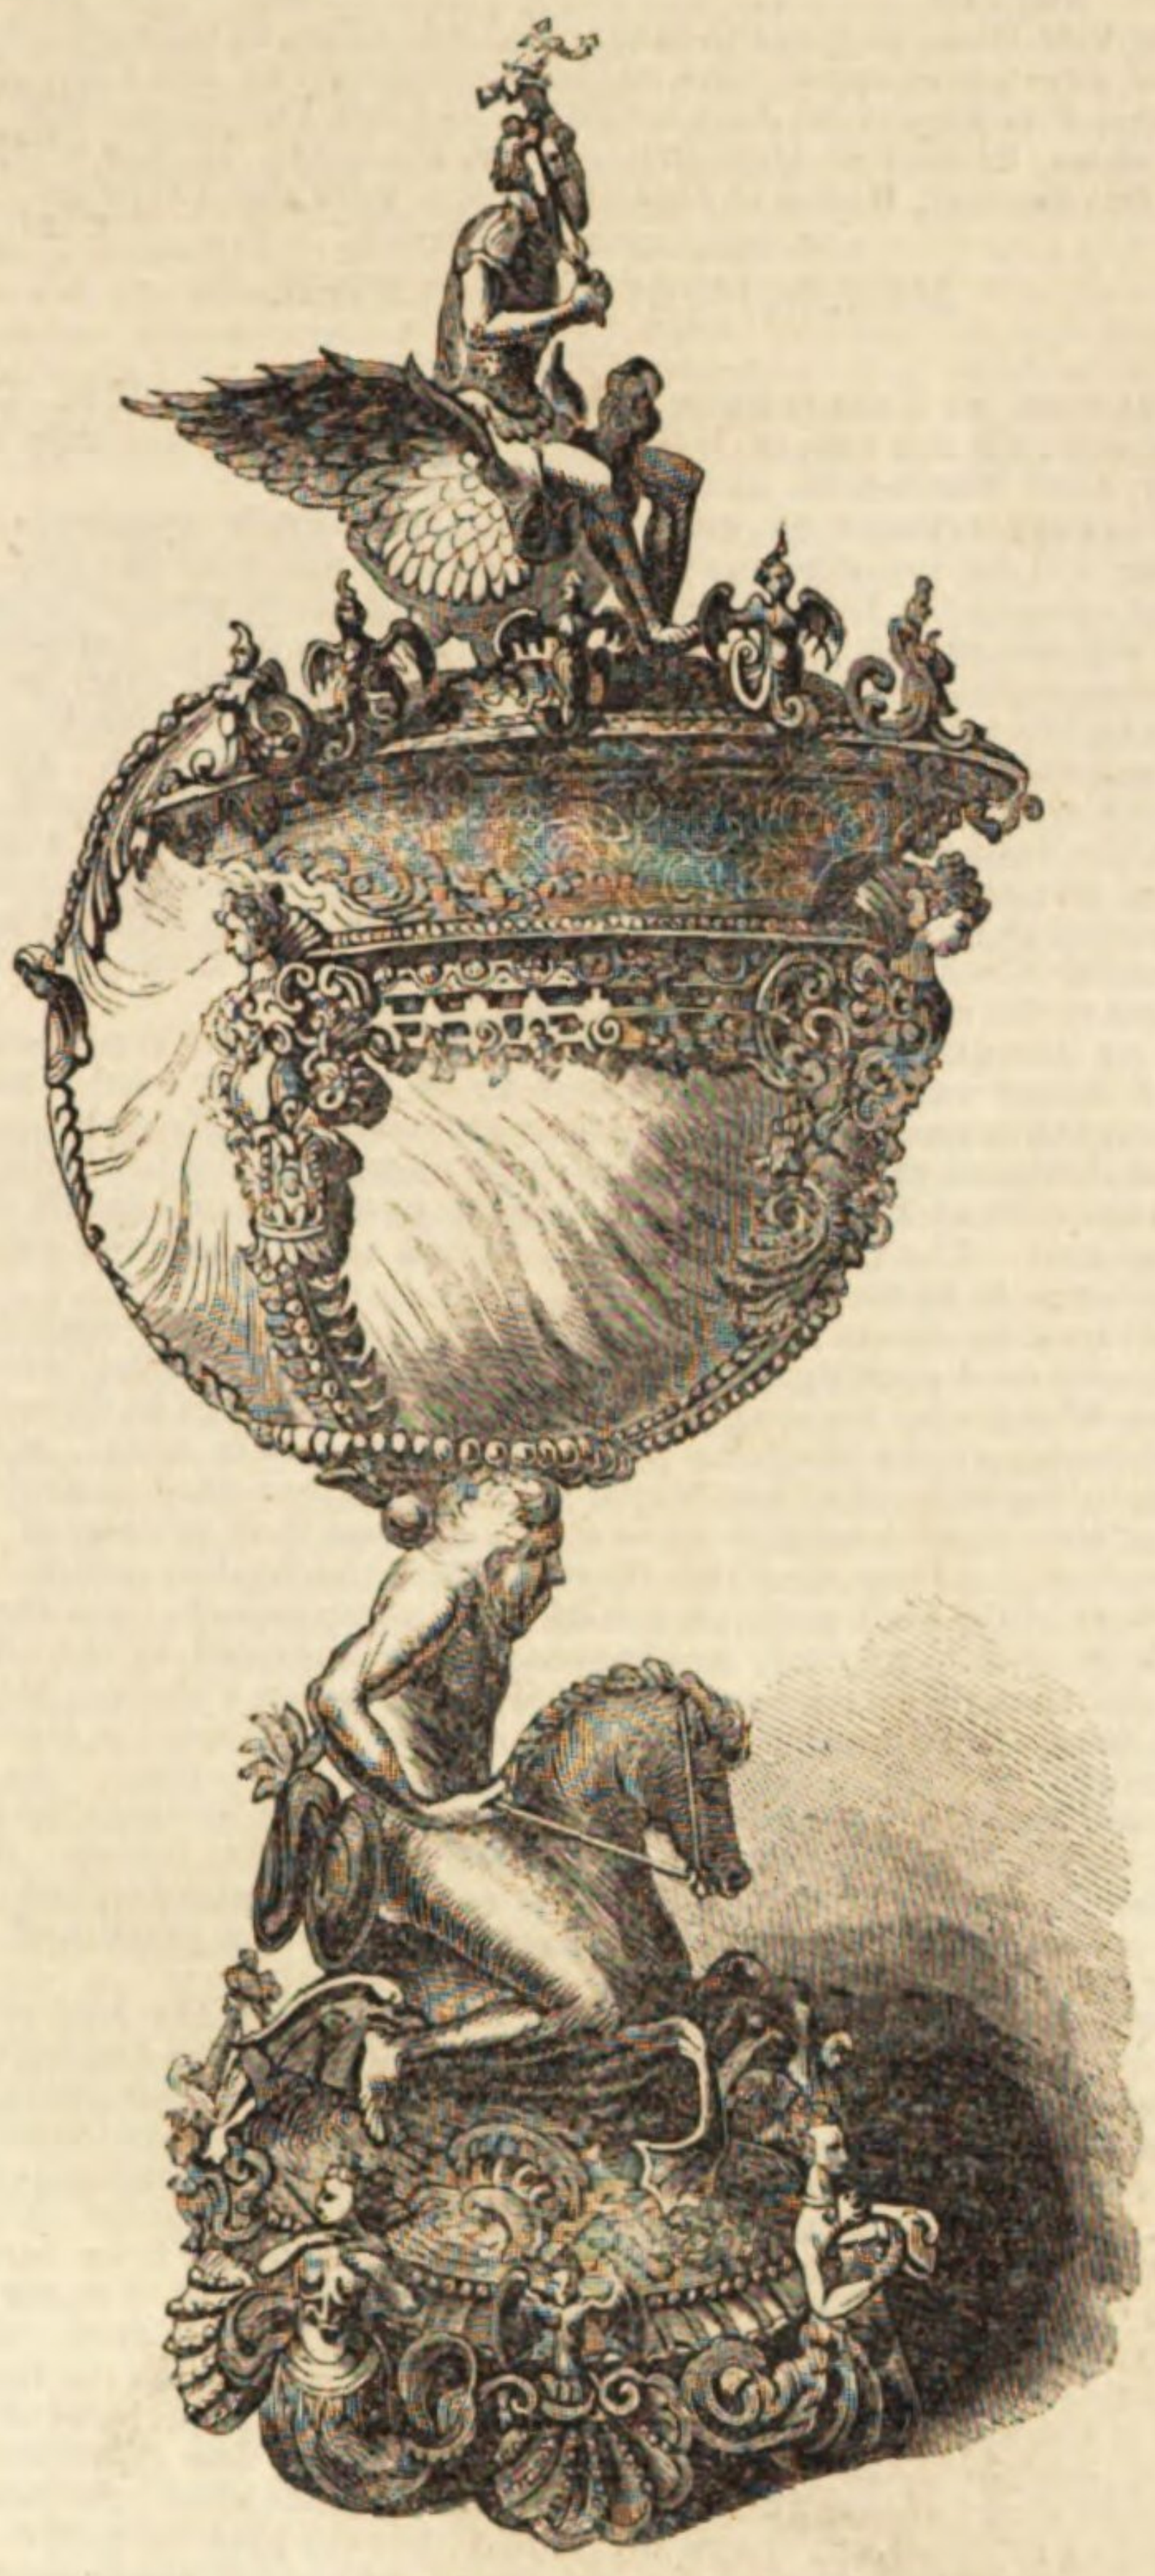
His Majesty spoke with very great impressiveness, particularly in that part of his brief address in which he inculcated the necessity and the desireableness of peace. His Majesty then conversed for some time with the Recorder and other members of the corporation. M. Guizot and other members of the suite did the same. Among the little incidents which occurred, were one or two which marked the affability of the King, and his desire to put the members of the corporation entirely at their ease. The Recorder is a very tall man, and his head now and then touched the beams under the roof of the deck. The King laughed, and, as if apologising for the want of height between decks, said, "We did not allow for your wig." Alderman Ellyett, one of those present, asked to have the honour of shaking hands with the King, on which his Majesty said, "I should like to shake hands with you all. I should like to knew your names." His Majesty then asked the names of the Mayor and the Recorder, with both of whom he conversed for a short time. He shook hands with every member of the corporation, and to some of them who were slow in getting off their white gloves, he said, "Oh, never mind your gloves, gentlemen." Altogether, their reception by the King seems to have been most gratifying to the corporation. He exhibited the most marked desire to please. In the course of conversation with members of the corporation, his Majesty alluded feelingly to his former visit to Portsmouth, many years ago. He remarked that this was not the first time he had been in Portsmouth. He remembered the "Point," the "Sallyport," the Fountain Hotel; and added, that he also remembered the Dockyard well, though it was then called the Naval College. When asked by the Recorder to favour the corporation with a copy of the reply he had made to the address, his Majesty said with much feeling, "I have no copy. My words are from my heart." He also, in the course of his conversation with the Recorder, observed, that when he was last in England he used to visit with much interest the law courts. The King remembered Southsea Castle. When his Majesty was last here, it appears, he embarked here on board the Mercury frigate, Captain Rogers, to proceed to the Mediterranean. The conversation being over, the corporation took their leave of his Majesty, and retired. They re-entered their boats, and followed in the wake of the Gomer up the harbour.

Louis Philippe had descended to the saloon to receive the corporation, having previously been on deck, where he repeatedly acknowledged the cheers of the people on the shore, and in the different craft around. After the corporation had retired, his Majesty again returned on deck, and the Gomer proceeded up the harbour, past the Round Tower (where the Royal standard was flying), the Sallyport (so celebrated in Marryat's novels and Dibdin's songs), and the floating bridge, which attracted his Majesty's attention. All these places were crowded with people, who cheered vociferously as the King passed. Further up the harbour her Majesty's ship Victory, 110, commanded by Captain Mowbray, saluted the royal steamer with 21 guns. The Victory (Nelson's Victory) was gaily dressed, and her yards were manned. The shore on either side (Point beach and Gosport beach) were crowded with people, and the windows of the houses along shore were also filled with faces. At the gun-wharf, a little further on, the royal standard was hoisted. On Cold-harbour, which is on the right as you approach the dockyard, a great number of persons had collected, as also on the left, at Cold Harbour, where, too, the royal standard was hoisted on the flagstaff. As this point commanded a fine view of the landing-place, it was particularly selected by spectators. On the right, a little further on, the Gomer came nearly opposite the Dockyard, where the royal standard was hoisted. Further on lay the Excellent, 74, Captain Sir Thomas Hastings, which saluted the Gomer as she came up to take her moorings.



THE DEBARKATION.



THE NAUTILUS CUP.

Here his Majesty awaited the arrival of Prince Albert, who was expected at the Royal Victualling-yard by a special train from Farnborough.

Nearly an hour elapsed after the King's steamer took up her moorings before the Prince arrived. The officers of the port, Admiral Hyde Parker, Sir Charles Rowley, and others, went off in their boats to the Gomer to pay their respects to the King. Soon after their return a distant salute, and the National Anthem played by the band, announced that Prince Albert was coming. At 25 minutes past 10, his Royal Highness, who had left Farnborough in a special train at 37 minutes past 8 o'clock, and arrived at the terminus at 20 minutes past 10 o'clock, entered the yard, accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, and walked briskly down the stairs whence he was to embark. A barge with Prince Albert's flag, the Royal arms quartered with the Prince's, was waiting alongside, into which the Prince stepped, loudly cheered by the spectators, who thronged in the boats that covered the harbour. Immediately behind the Prince was the Duke of Wellington, and, as he descended the steps, a cry was raised of "A cheer for the Duke," to which a deafening response was given. The Duke wore his Field Marshal's uniform; but the Prince was dressed in plain clothes (black), with a white hat and crape band. The Duke having followed the Prince into the boat, they went off rapidly to the Gomer, amidst the cheers of the multitude that surrounded them on all sides.

The harbour at this time, and until the final departure of the royal party, was a scene of animation not often witnessed. The shores were lined with people. The fortifications in the distance, and the roads where they were elevated, also showed dense masses of human beings; the surface of the water was one mass of floating life, every boat crammed with people; the craft moored in different parts of the harbour or tacking about were dressed in the gayest and most brilliant colours, the larger vessels having their yards manned. The French steamers were also gaily adorned with flags and ensigns, the Tricolour alternating with the Union Jack and the Royal Standard.

Upon stepping on deck the Prince was received by his Majesty in the most affectionate manner, the King embracing and shaking hands very cordially with his Royal Highness.

His Majesty also shook hands with the Duke of Wellington, and in a few moments, together with the Prince and the Duke, entered the royal barge, which returned to the stairs with the French national flag flying from the stem, in the place of the royal standard of England.

(The large engraving in our front page, represents this most interesting scene, or rather, spectacle.)

The royal barge was succeeded by the admiralty barge, conveying the Lords of the Admiralty, and steered by Lieut. Prevost.

The Port-Admiral's barge and that of the Admiral-Superintendent followed in succession. The passage of the boats across the harbour being the signal for loud and reiterated cheering from the crews of the various small craft afloat and from the crowds assembled on the shores of the harbour.

His Royal Highness was received on board the yacht by a guard of honour of the French Marines, the yards of the steamer being manned, and the band playing the English National Anthem.

The royal and distinguished party moved towards the gangway in order to descend to the boat which was to convey them on shore; and here a friendly contest prevailed for a moment between the King of the French and Prince Albert, as to which should have the pleasure of giving precedence to the other. The Prince, however, was persevering enough to gain his point, and so the King was the first to descend the gangway, followed by Prince Albert, the Duke de Montpensier, and the Duke of Wellington.

The return of the royal party towards the Clarence-yard was the signal for renewed cheering, shouting, and salutes. From the time the barge left the sides of the Gomer till she came alongside the stairs, the same excitement continued. The King of the French repeatedly acknowledged the cheers of the spectators, taking off his hat, and bowing. He wore the uniform of a Lieutenant-General, blue with red facings, and he also wore a blue ribbon.

His Majesty looked remarkably well and animated. He had evidently suffered nothing from his voyage. Arrived at the stairs, the Prince preceded the King, by his desire, and, as he passed on from the top, bowed to the people. The King stepped quickly up the stairs, bowing also to the spectators, and when he reached the top, he turned round and bowed repeatedly on all sides, laying his hand on his heart. The Duke of Wellington, M. Guizot, and the other distinguished persons accompanying the King, followed, and the party walked up the yard to the point where the carriages were placed. The King and Prince Albert entered one carriage, which immediately afterwards drove off, the band playing the National Anthem. The other carriages followed, and in a few minutes after, they reached the railway station, which had been decorated by Capt. Burney with flags, kindly lent by the Admiralty for the purpose, and also with some evergreens. Here a limited number of persons were admitted to witness the departure. Colonel Henderson and Mr. Chaplin, directors, were present to receive the King.

(One of the engravings on this page shows his Majesty and suite landing, and the other illustration, the royal party at the railway station.)

The train started from Gosport with the King, Prince Albert, and the distinguished personages who accompanied them, at eleven o'clock, and arrived at Farnborough station at half-past twelve o'clock, where carriages were in waiting, in which they immediately went off at a rapid pace towards Windsor.

The following is a list of the distinguished individuals accompanying his Majesty and the Duke de Montpensier to this country:—

His Excellency M. Guizot, Ministre des Affaires Etrangeres, attended by M. Herbet, Secretary of Legation, and M. Hennequin, Private Secretary to his Excellency.

His Excellency Admiral Le Baron Mackau, Minister of Marine and Colonies, attended by Le Capitaine Pellion, R.N., and Le Capitaine Page, R.N., Aides-de-camp to his Exccellency.

Le Baron Fain, Chef du Cabinet du Roi.

Dr. Fouquier, M.D., physician in attendance on his Majesty; and M. Pasquier, surgeon in ordinary to the King.

Le General Baron Athalin, le General Comte de Rumigny, Colonel Comte de Chabannes, and Colonel Comte Dumas, are the aides-de-camp in attendance on the King.

Vice-Admiral le Baron Lasusse has the command of the squadron.

We must not omit to state that his Majesty appeared in high spirits, and seemed much gratified at the enthusiastic reception with which he was every where greeted.

THE ARRIVAL AND RECEPTION OF LOUIS PHILIPPE AT WINDSOR.

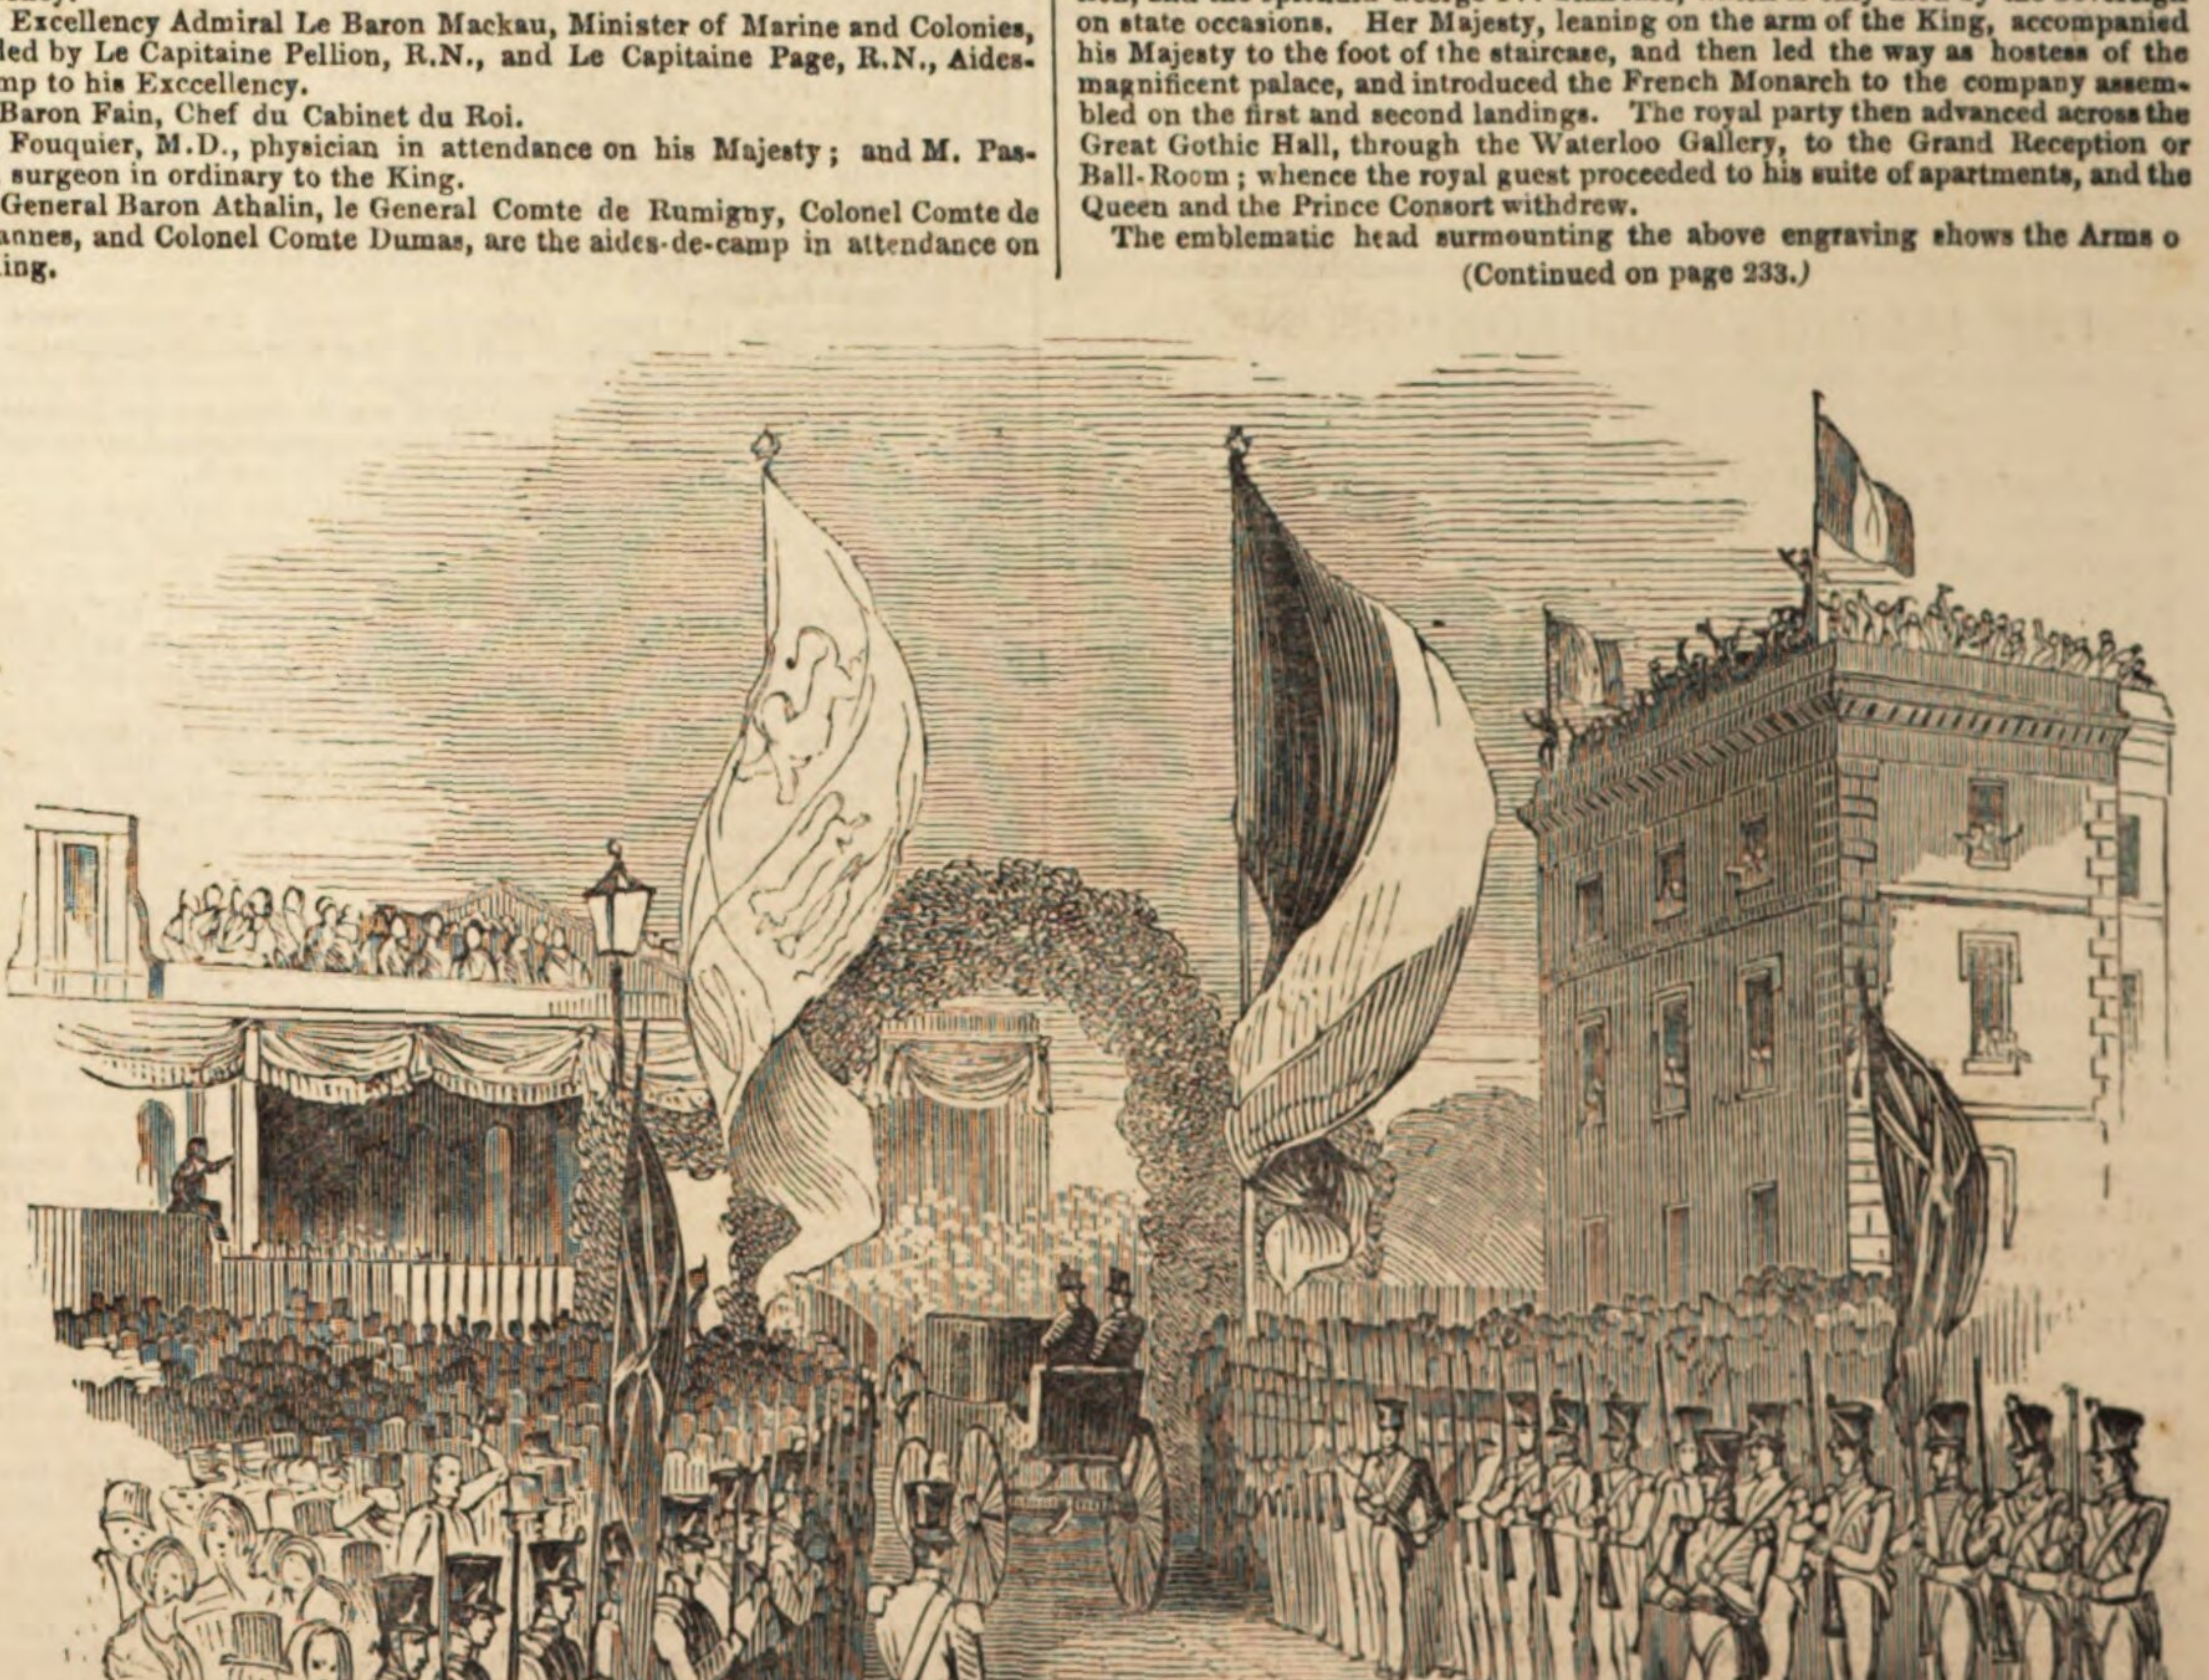
Soon after two o'clock, on Tuesday, the guns in the park announced the King and the Prince Consort to have nearly finished their journey, the vista from the principal vestiibule of Windsor Castle, up to the summit of the Long Walk, enabling the attendants within the royal abode to apprise her Majesty of the approach of her royal guest at such a convenient time as would obviate the awkwardness of a prolonged attendance at the entrance of her castle, where the duties of hospitality, no less than the affectionate respect entertained by the Queen for Louis Philippe, prompted our beloved monarch to await and welcome the King's arrival. Her Majesty, however, was so anxious not to suffer the opportune moment for receiving her august visitor to escape, that she descended into the grand vestibule fronting George the Fourth's gate, at which the cortége was to enter, some minutes before the carriages drove up. This was a most interesting moment, and cannot be paralleled by any occurrence that took place on her Majesty's visit to Chateau d'Eu, where the King and Queen of the French, together with their family, drove down to Treport in the ample char-à-banc to receive and convey the Queen and Prince to the chateau. During the short interval that elapsed, Queen Victoria, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, and attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, the Lady in Waiting, and by Sir Robert Peel, the Earl of Liverpool, Earl Delawarr, the Hon. George Anson, and some other of the principal officers of the household, awaited the King's arrival. Her Majesty was evidently in high spirits, and conversed affably with her attendants, her countenance beaming with satisfaction and excitement at the interesting meeting which awaited her.

At a quarter past two o'clock, the escort swept rapidly round the quadrangle and formed in front, whilst the first carriage, containing the King, Prince Albert, the Duke de Montpensier, and M. Guizot, drove under the portico. At this moment Queen Victoria advanced to the threshold, and in the most cordial manner extended her arms, whilst Louis Phillippe and the Prince descended from the carriage. Their Majesties embraced most affectionately at the moment of meeting, and the three principal personages advanced into the vestibule, the French Monarch bestowing his cordial smiles and greetings upon Sir R. Peel, the Earl of Liverpool, the Hon. George Anson, and others of the Royal household with whom he was familiarly acquainted. The Duke de Montpensier and Admiral de Mackau escorted the Duchess of Kent, and the royal party, followed by the Ministers and suites of both the Monarchs, proceeded at once to the grand staircase.

The large engraving represents the most impressive scene of the royal reception, and the splendid George IV. Staircase, which is only used by the Sovereign on state occasions. Her Majesty, leaning on the arm of the King, accompanied his Majesty to the foot of the staircase, and then led the way as hostess of the magnificent palace, and introduced the French Monarch to the company assembled on the first and second landings. The royal party then advanced across the Great Gothic Hall, through the Waterloo Gallery, to the Grand Reception or Ball-Room; whence the royal guest proceeded to his suite of apartments, and the Queen and the Prince Consort withdrew.

The emblematic head surmounting the above engraving shows the Arms o

(Continued on page 233.)



KING LOUIS PHILIPPE ENTERING THE RAILWAY STATION.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, October 13.—Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 14.—Peace with Vienna, 1809.
Tuesday, 15.—Kosciusko died, 1817.
Wednesday, 16.—Houses of Parliament burnt, 1834.
Thursday, 17.—Sir Philip Sydney died, 1586.
Friday, 18.—St. Luke.
Saturday, 19.—Dean Swift died, 1745.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending October 19.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.
3 7	3 28	3 50	4 11	4 33	4 57	5 22	5 47	6 14	6 43	7 16	7 53

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Penzance.—"King's Interest Tables" is a sound work; the price about 15s.

"A Sufferer."—We would gladly, if we could, inform our correspondent of the probability of recovering the amount of his claims on the repudiating States of America.

"R. B.," Bewdley, and "A Constant Reader."—The great press of intelligence has, of late, compelled our printer to employ a greater proportion of small type than usual.

"A Constant Subscriber."—Vol. V. of our journal will be completed at Christmas. The Giant's Causeway has already been engraved in other works too often to be inserted in our journal.

"J. F. M.," Turner-street, East.—The eldest son of her Majesty and Prince Albert was born Bishop of Osnaburg, and shortly after created Prince of Wales.

"E. H. P."—The Governors of Christ's Hospital are the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and twelve Common Councilmen, who are chosen by the rest of the Common Council out of their own body; noblemen and gentlemen are also Governors, who become benefactors to the amount of £400. The Governors mostly present each one boy annually, provided any children are admitted. A list of the presentations may be had at the hospital.

"W. J. D."—Mr. Carlyle's "Lectures on Heroes and Hero-worship" were delivered by him in 1840; but, we do not know at what place.

"J. B.," Clapton.—The sketch, if engraved, shall be with the acknowledgement of the name.

"G. H."—The account of the Harvest Home did not reach us in time.

"F. B.," Ireland.—£100,000 per annum.

"Felix."—The lines on St. George and the Dragon are much too long.

"F. A. H. S."—The Census of England and Wales, in a Supplement to No. 76 of our journal, may be had, by order, of any news-agent.

"J. O."—It is a popular error to suppose there to be an Act of Parliament prohibiting the use, &c., of an air-gun: it has always been considered as a toy, unless in a very few cases, where it has been the instrument of private and cowardly revenge.

"A. B."—We cannot settle the moustaches question!

"B. H."—Pon cannot spell Pun.

"T. C.," Bridlington.—The sketches of Flamborough Head did not arrive in time.

"G. D."—The lines on the Royal Visit and the Debarkation will not suit.

"J. P. A.," Stourport.—Not at present.

"Amicus Veritatis" is thanked; we were aware of the piracy.

"Belfastiensis" will be entitled to the Large Print. The price of the View of London in 1842 is 1s. The law referred to applies to Ireland.

"A Lover of Chess."—His suggestion shall be taken into consideration.

"M. E.," Liverpool.—Mr. Palmer's process of Glyphography is patented; the patentee's address is 13, Newgate-street.

"D. D." is thanked; but the sketch is incomplete.

"J. S.," Rochester, informs us that, "Since the accession of the House of Brunswick, none of the younger branches of the Royal Family have been created Peers till they have attained the age of 21. Indeed, the father of her present Majesty was 32 years of age when he was created Duke of Kent." The Yeomanry Fête at Hatfield was engraved in our journal last year.

"One Interested."—We know nothing of the London Friendly Union.

"J. M.," Welwyn.—The Large Print is in a state of forwardness. The remittance will serve.

"S. C.," Shrewsbury.—The name of the great Italian painter is Raphael, or Raffaello Sanzio.

"J. E. E.," Brighton, is thanked for the paragraph from the Scottish paper, exposing the silly blunder.

"J. L."—The lines are ineligible.

"J. C."—We believe the residence of the Countess Guiccioli to be in Paris.

"E. K.," Tunstall, will find several Guides to, or Pictures of, London in the booksellers' shops; but few of them are accurate.

"C. C. H.," Coleford, will be entitled to the Large Print.

"L. S.," Knaresbro'.—The duty on French brandy is 22s. 6d. per gallon; therefore, the charge of 4s. 1d. upon one pint is incorrect.

"A Belfast Subscriber," and "Moonshine," Manchester.—We were in error: the harvest moon was at full on the 26th of September last.

"Henry," Truro.—Ravizotti's "Italian Dictionary and Grammar."

"T. H., R.N."—We have not room for the long letter on Spots on the Sun, &c.

"Alpha" should send his own name, when the address of Mr. I. E. L. will be forwarded to him.

"Vectis," Ryde.—Were the prices of books and music affixed to our notices, each would be subject to advertisement duty.

"J. D. F." must excuse our non-insertion of his note.

"Sophia," Southsea.—Major Calder Campbell, the author of several poems of merit, is a resident of the metropolis.

"An Inquirer" should write to the commanding officer of the regiment.

"A Subscriber" informs us that 2s. is demanded from each person for the inspection of Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, and that the charge is inserted in a printed table hung up in the hall; yet our correspondent does not infer that Sir S. R. Meyrick derives an income from such a source.

"Comus."—Hansard's Book of Archery is the best work, but is expensive. A small practical treatise, by Waring, may be purchased of the dealers in archery implements. Walker's Treatise is one of the best works on chess.

"W. W.," Nottingham.—There is no St. Giles's-street in London. There are upwards of 80 churches in the metropolis.

"J. G. S.," King's Lynn, cannot recover a debt contracted in the year 1835, unless proof can be given that it has been already applied for since that date.

"An Inquirer," Huddersfield.—A good air-pump may be purchased for £5 5s. Our subscriber will be entitled to the Large Print.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1844.

Our domestic political intelligence of the week is completely void of interest. The heads of the Ministry have been joining in the festivities of Windsor; the heads of the people, as we suppose we ought to call the members of the Legislature, are scattered abroad, one to his farm, another to his merchandise. O'Connell is quiescent as far as agitation is concerned; for he is hunting among the Kerry hills, instead of haranguing at the Conciliation Hall, which, in his absence, presents that void space which, in theatres of another kind, too plainly tells that the "star" has left its usual sphere. In another point, however, the comparison will not hold good: the emptiness of the benches in the Hall on Burgh Quay causes no diminution in the funds; the rent of last Monday is stated to have been £600. The steadiness of this contribution, which now seems to keep at a tolerably regular average, indicates the existence of two things worthy the consideration of our rulers,—a uniformity and continuance of the feeling in which the fund originates, and a completeness in the organisation by which it is collected and managed. Some weeks will elapse before any of the usual signs of life will be visible in this quarter.

The death of Lady Heytesbury, which took place at the Castle of Dublin on Sunday last, has thrown a gloom over the Irish metropolis. The "Castle" is, in little, the same to Ireland as the Court is to London; and an event that must of course close it to any kind of official display, or vice-regal hospitality, cannot but be considered as a public misfortune, independent of the sorrow that must be felt by all parties for the affliction that has fallen on the family of the Lord-Lieutenant so soon after his installation as the representative of the Sovereign.

One of the last acts of Louis Philippe, before leaving his own shores for this country, has been one of the best of his reign. The good effect it has had in France, cannot be altogether concealed even by the efforts of the war journals. An amnesty appeared in the Moniteur of Tuesday, setting at liberty fifty-nine political prisoners, sentenced to various terms of confinement. There is an impression in England that the greater number of them were persons connected more or less directly with the press, but this does not appear to be the case. M. Dupoty, one of the liberated, was certainly a journalist, but he was implicated in the attempt made by Quenisset on the life of the King, and was punished as a conspirator rather than as a writer. Even the most determined advocates of liberty of discussion must allow that aiding and abetting the crime of assassination, is no part of the duty of a "public instructor." The following is a brief account of some of the other prisoners now discharged:—

Boufet, Montauban, J. Orsi, M. E. Dataille, J. B. Lombard, M. Ornano, and Theodore Forrestier were implicated in Prince Louis Napoleon's descent on Boulogne; Joseph Bechet was convicted of selling the Moniteur Republicain; Felix Becker and three others were condemned as belonging to a secret society; N. Raymond was condemned for what is known as the Marseilles plot; J. M. Bourdon and seventeen others were implicated in the troubles at Paris of the 12th and 13th of May, 1839; and J André and five more were condemned for some excesses committed during the troubles in the west.

On perusing the names here given, one more will doubtless recur to every reader with something of regret that it is not to be found among them. Prince Louis Napoleon is still a prisoner at Ham. We have no sympathy with the vanity that made him think his name was a sufficient title to the throne of France, nor with the mingled folly and madness that prompted his two attempts at Strasbourg and Boulogne. But it is not in the nature of the magic influence once exercised by the name of Napoleon to be hereditary, and time has worn its political power down to a "dream of a dream, and shadow of a shade." What we have, we think with justice, called the madness and folly of the Prince, also render him less to be feared: two such utter failures are not likely to inspire a third attempt. Imprisonment for life is a dreadful doom for a young, and as the Prince is said to be, a gallant and generous spirit; he appears to have been sufficiently punished for the past, nor do we think he need be much feared for the future. Neither can it be forgotten that there are very reasonable grounds for suspecting that in the descent on Boulogne, the Prince was less the chief mover in the affair than the victim of cleverer heads than his own; that, in short, he was trapped into the absurd undertaking by the intrigues of the French police. We wish the Prince could have been included in the present amnesty; but because it is not so, we will not the less give our approbation to the spirit that has extended pardon to so many others.

The last packet from Rio has brought what is supposed to be a copy of the New Brazilian Tariff. Some doubt yet exists as to whether it is not a mere copy of the form that was struck off for private circulation among the resident merchants at Rio, in order to collect their opinions with respect to it. Our treaty with the Brazils expires next month, when this new Tariff, whatever may be its provisions, will come into operation. It occupies fifty-three folio pages, and its principle is that of levying specific duties, that of levying them ad valorem being, it is said, totally abandoned. A low range of duty will be levied on all imported articles considered of the first necessity, while on those considered of a higher quality and higher price, the duty will be heavier. A great drawback on the working efficacy of the Tariff, is the fact that "the valuations are to be arbitrarily made by the officers of the Custom House, and it is concluded, that in many cases this will run the duty up to not less than fifty per cent."

The French and Spaniards are both fanatically possessed in favour of an intricate and oppressive custom-house system, seeming to think that commerce was intended to support the officers of these establishments, not that the custom-house officials should merely be the servants of commerce. It is feared, that if the present tariff is passed, the greater part of the trade of Brazil will be driven into the hands of the contrabandists. This perverse attachment to high duties has already ruined the trade of Spain—is injuring that of France, and has destroyed the wine trade of Portugal. All this is lamentable; but while there is a chance that the scale of duties may be modified before it is brought into operation, we are unwilling to treat a commercial blunder in a valuable customer to the manufacturers of this country, as a fait accompli.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE REVENUE.

We have great gratification in stating that the accounts of the Revenue for the quarter ending on the 10th of October (Thursday) present a very large increase, particularly in the Customs, probably owing to the augmented importations under the new Tariff.

The following is a summary of the accounts:—The total revenue for the year just concluded amounts to £50,741,622, for the quarter to £14,372,353. The net increase upon the year is £1,395,349, upon the quarter, £520,944. The great head of increase is in the Customs; this head exhibits the enormous amount of £1,723,165 increase upon the year; £473,347 upon the quarter. The Excise presents also its increase upon the year, £173,898. The Stamps give, upon the year, an increase of £69,129. The year's increase upon the Property Tax (notwithstanding repayments) is £106,413. The increase upon the Post Office is, for the year, £82,000—making a total increase of £2,162,105. This increase is, however, reduced by a decrease under three or four heads, to the amount of £950,941. Nearly the whole of this decrease—viz., £948,004, however, is to be found under the head of Miscellaneous Revenue.

Notwithstanding this casual deduction, however, the net increase of the revenue is nearly £1,400,000; and but for the casual deduction would, with the repayments, amount to £2,390,264.

We congratulate the country upon these results, because the increase of the Revenue affords a certain proof of the improvement in our commerce and trade, and an indication of the augmented resources of the people.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, it is confidently reported, will go to Portsmouth with the King of the French, on his return to France, and witness the embarkation of his Majesty. The Queen, it is said, will remain one night at the official residence of Sir Charles Rowley, the commander-in-chief.

Presents to her Majesty.—The ponies ridden by her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal, during their sojourn at Blair Athol, have arrived at the Royal Mews, Windsor, with the other ponies of her Majesty, having been handsomely presented to their royal riders by Lord Glenlyon. Five roe deer have also been brought from Scotland, presents from the same nobleman.

Present from Louis Philippe to her Majesty.—The album which King Louis Philippe proposed to offer to Queen Victoria, in commemoration of her visit to the Chateau d'Eu, is finished; and his Majesty has brought it over with him to be presented at Windsor. It is of unusually large size, being 32 inches by 24, and proportionably thick. It contains thirty-two drawings, by the first French artists, representing the different apartments of the Chateau d'Eu, and scenes and events connected with her Britannic Majesty's visit. To prevent friction, the drawings are let in, and, as it were, framed by thick sheets of Bristol paper. It is splendidly bound in scarlet morocco, by Ginain, bearing the arms of England, within a rich border of the most delicate tooling. The case or box, in which it is enclosed, is covered with rich purple velvet, on which is also impressed the Queen's arms.

The Dukedom of Dorset.—It is said that her Majesty is about to raise the Earl Delawarr to the first rank in the peerage, by reviving in his person the extinct Dukedom of Dorset—the countess being, with the exception of the Countess Amherst, the only surviving representative of John Frederick, third duke, as sister of George, fourth duke, whose melancholy death, by a fall from his horse, occurred on the 14th of February, 1815.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, attended by Lady Georgiana Bathurst and the Hon. Captain Liddell, has been honouring the Duke and Duchess of Bedford with her company at Woburn Abbey.

The Vacant Blue Riband.—The blue riband placed at the disposal of the Premier, by the recent death of the Duke of Grafton, occasions the eighth vacancy that has occurred in the list of Knights of the Most Noble Order of the Garter since the accession of the present Ministry to office. Few similar instances of so large an amount of patronage have fallen into the hands of the First Minister of the Crown within so short a period of time are to be met with in the annals of the Order.

The Duke of Devonshire's party, at Chatsworth, separated on Tuesday, when the noble duke left that princely seat for Bolton Abbey, Yorkshire. His grace intends to receive a select circle at that ancient seat, expressly for the excellent shooting that estate affords.

Count Nesselrode took his departure from London, on Saturday morning, for Hamburg.

We hear that the preliminaries have been arranged for a matrimonial alliance between the Hon. Captain Boyle, second daughter of the Earl of Cork, and Miss Georgiana Robarts, daughter of the well-known banker of that name. The ceremony will take place during the present month.

The Earl and Countess of Lincoln have arrived in town.

Lord Palmerston arrived at Berlin, on the 1st instant, from Dresden.

Mr. Baillie Cochrane, M.P., is about to lead to the hymeneal altar the eldest daughter of Mr. and Lady Elizabeth Drummond, and grand-daughter to the Duke of Rutland.

Elevation of Lord Stanley to the House of Peers.—The Gazette of Tuesday contains the notification of Lord Stanley's elevation to the peerage, under the title of Baron Stanley, of Bickerstaffe.

The Hon. Miss Sybella Mary Harris, fourth daughter of the late gallant Lord Harris, died on Sunday, at Southborough, near Tonbridge, in her 49th year.

Miss Peel.—Miss Peel is still residing in Eastern-terrace, Brighton. We are happy to say that Miss Peel is now in improved health.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, and several of the Cabinet Ministers, left town on Thursday afternoon by a special train from the terminus of the Great Western Railway for Windsor Castle, on a visit to her Majesty.

Sir George Clerk has arrived in town from Scotland.

We are sorry to hear that the Hon. C. A. Murray is still confined to his room at the Pavilion, Brighton, by severe indisposition.

Sir Henry Pottinger has arrived in town from China.

Death of Lady Heytesbury.—The account of the state of health o Lady Heytesbury published by us last week will have left little hope of her ladyship's recovery, and we regret to say her demise took place on Sunday afternoon, at twenty minutes before four o'clock, at the Vice-regal Lodge, Dublin. The lamented baroness had arrived but a short time in Ireland, when she was attacked by the fatal illness, under the effects of which she laboured so long and painfully. In immediate attendance on her last moments were—his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant; his brother, the Hon. E. H. A'Court, M.P. for Tamworth, Captain in the Navy; her son, the Hon. W. H. Ashe A'Court Holmes, M.P. for the Isle of Wight; the Hon. Miss A'Court, daughter; and Mrs. Pennett, sister to the late baroness. Her ladyship was in her 60th year, and second daughter of the Hon. William Henry Bouverie, and granddaughter of the Earl of Radnor. She was married to his Excellency on the 3rd of October, 1808. She has left two surviving children. Her ladyship was assiduously attended during her illness by Sir Henry H. Marsh, Bart., and Dr. J. Graves, the physician in ordinary to the household, and Dr. George Hatchell.

Death of the Marquis of Donegal.—The noble marquis expired on Saturday morning last, at Ormeau, near Belfast, after a protracted illness. His lordship, George Augustus Chichester, Marquis of Donegal, Viscount of Chichester, and Baron Belfast (Viscount Fisherwick, in England), lieutenant of the county Donegal, Knight of St. Patrick, &c., was born in 1769, and was consequently in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He is succeeded in his title and estates by his eldest son, the Earl of Belfast, lieutenant of the county Antrim.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

ELECTION OF VICE-CHANCELLOR OF OXFORD.

On Tuesday morning at one o'clock the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University, preceded by the Esquire and Yeoman Bedels, and attended by nearly all the heads of Colleges and halls, and a large number of other doctors in divinity, law, and medicine, went in procession from the Clarendon to the theatre, when, having taken their seats, the Chancellor's letter, nominating Dr. Symons, Warden of Wadham College, to be Vice-Chancellor for the year ensuing, was read by the Senior Proctor, and submitted to the approbation of the house.

Some members having called out "non-placet," the Vice-Chancellor stated that he had the Chancellor's permission to take a scrutiny, which immediately commenced, at the end of which the numbers were as follow:—

Placets	882
Non-placets	183
Majority		699

The new Vice-Chancellor was then admitted into office, on taking the customary oaths, and after a very appropriate address, nominated as Pro Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Wynter, President of St. John's College, and late Vice-Chancellor.

Dr. Hawkins, Provost of Oriel College; Dr. Plumptre, Master of University College; Dr. Radford, Rector of Lincoln College, were also sworn in.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Prorogation of Parliament.—Parliament was prorogued on Thursday, by Commission, till the 12th of December. The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, and the Earl of Dalhousie.

Her Majesty's Visit to the City.—It is generally supposed that the 23rd instant will be the day on which her Majesty will visit the City, on the occasion of opening the Royal Exchange. The number of persons to be invited to dinner will not exceed 1300. The collation is to be cold. According to the present arrangements, it is intended that her Majesty should enter at the west end of the building. It is impossible to finish every part of the works; the portions left unfinished will, therefore, be covered with crimson cloth. As the time is too short for the statue of her Majesty to be finished, it is arranged that the model shall be fixed up for the occasion, and it is now undergoing a process of enamelling, to make it appear like marble. The large commemoration medal, to be presented to her Majesty, the royal family, and others, will not be ready; but the smaller silver medal, of the size of half-a-crown, is already finished, and will be given to the company who are invited.

Court of Aldermen.—A Court of Aldermen was held on Wednesday, when Mr. Sheriff Sidney was sworn in as alderman of Billinsgate ward. Some conversation ensued in consequence of the non-attendance of Mr. Salomons, to be sworn in as alderman of Portsoken ward; and ultimately the Lord Mayor postponed the question of Mr. Salomons appearing to take upon himself the office till Tuesday next. The Court unanimously agreed to an address of congratulation and welcome to Louis Philippe.

Late Hours of Business in the Metropolis.—A very numerous and respectably-attended meeting, called by the Metropolitan Drapers' Association, was held on Wednesday night at Exeter Hall, to adopt means to discourage the practice of keeping open shops in the metropolis to a late hour. Mr. Sheriff Sidney was in the chair, the Lord Mayor having been prevented from attending. Resolutions were agreed to expressive of the opinion that protracted hours of business were unnecessary, and that they sacrificed the health, morals, and spiritual interests of the assistants. A donation of twenty guineas from Mr. Hitchcock, of St. Paul's Churchyard, was announced, accompanied by the intimation that that gentleman's establishment now closes at seven o'clock. Mr. Hitchcock, it appears, has stated that in his large establishment, since the introduction of the shorter hours, the greatest improvement had taken place. So cheerful and assiduous were his young men, that he could actually carry on his business with fewer assistants than when they were jaded by excessive labour. A resolution was also passed pledging the meeting to adopt all necessary steps to abridge the hours of business in shops, and to discountenance the practice of evening shopping.

Royal Mail Steam Packet Company.—Thursday last the half-yearly general meeting of the proprietors of this Company was held at the London Tavern; Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. for Huntingdon, in the chair. The report read by the Secretary stated that the expectations formerly held out by the Directors have been fully realized, and that the concern is in every respect steadily and surely improving. The surplus of the half-year had considerably exceeded that of the former. Since the last meeting the debt of the Company had been further reduced £20,000; and the Directors intend to pay off the loan of £50,000 the 4th of February, being now the remaining balance of the Company's debt. The only matter affecting insurance that had occurred during the year was the recent circumstance of the Tay striking upon Covador Reef. The ship, however, being but slightly damaged, the casuality is likely to prove less injurious to the Company than might at first have been anticipated. After some reference to the future repairing of ships, &c., the report stated that the plan of packet routes, which had now been fifteen months in operation, had given great satisfaction, both to her Majesty's Government and to the Colonies—the ships arriving at and departing from all the numerous places comprehended in the scheme with the utmost regularity. The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, having recently required that the mails to and fro between Jamaica, Santa Martha, Carthagena, Chagues, and St. Juan de Nicaragua, shall be conveyed by steam instead of a sailing vessel, will involve the necessity for building a new steam-ship. It appeared that the total receipts were, £174,927 16s. 8d. Deducting the disbursements, a balance of £66,157 14s. 9d. remained. After some discussion, the report was agreed to.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The week ending on Saturday last, the 5th inst., was one of the most salubrious of the present year, and the number of deaths is accordingly considerably below the average at this season. The total number, from all causes, in a population of 1,915,104 was last week only 901—a decrease of 29 upon the average of the last five autumns. There is still, however, a larger proportion than ordinary of deaths from epidemic diseases, the number under this head last week being 287, while the average of the last five autumns is not higher than 191. In sporadic diseases and in those affecting the lungs, there is a perceptible decrease, and it is principally by smallpox that the increased mortality from epidemics is occasioned. The number of deaths recorded under this head last week is 51, while the average is only 17.

Reduction in the Price of Bread.—A reduction of a halfpenny, and in some instances of a penny, in the price of the four-pound loaf, was made by several bakers on Wednesday. The prices at which the seconds, or household, bread is sold at in the metropolis vary considerably. It is strange that the best bread can be obtained in Gravesend at 6½d. to 7d. per 4lb loaf—20 per cent. less than in London.

Extensive Fire in the Borough Market.—A fire of a very alarming character broke out on Monday night, behind the London-road, Southwark, on which was erected a number of shops, occupied by various tradesmen, and known as St. George's Market. The fire first took place in the stalls of Mr. Barrett, a butcher, and the buildings were totally destroyed. About a dozen other buildings, in the whole one hundred feet long by thirty-five feet wide, and used as butchers' stalls, and miscellaneous tradesmen's sheds in the market, were also destroyed, with the contents. The buildings were insured, but the contents were not insured.

A memorial recently agreed to at a meeting at Gateshead, was transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with a view to obtaining the pardon of Frost, Williams, and Jones; but Mr. Phillips replied, on behalf of Sir James Graham, that the right hon. baronet expressed his regret that there was no sufficient ground to justify him, consistently with his public duty, in advising her Majesty to comply with its prayer.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Monument to Dr. Dalton.—At a recent meeting of the inhabitants of Manchester the following resolution was come to:—"That it is desirable that a simple and suitable memorial should be placed in the cemetery at Ardwick, over the mortal remains of this illustrious philosopher and exemplary Christian; and that it is most desirable to found a professorship of chemistry in some public institution in Manchester, to be named the 'Daltonian Professorship,' one object of which shall be to illustrate the atomic theory and the discoveries of Dalton, in connection with other branches of physical science."

Munificent Legacy.—The late James Heyworth, Esq., of Everton, has bequeathed a legacy of £10,000 to his principal clerk, as a testimony of the value which he placed on that gentleman's faithful services for a number of years.

Sudden Death of Lady Hayter at Brighton—On Tuesday evening a jury was empanelled at Brighton to inquire into the circumstances attending the death of Lady Hayter, wife of Sir George Hayter. Her ladyship had been staying for the last fortnight in Brighton, and on Sunday afternoon she went to see her niece, in the Montpelier-road, with the intention of spending the remainder of the day with her. Soon after she arrived at the residence of her niece, she was taken in a fit, and in less than four hours she was a corpse. Medical aid was called in, but it was of no avail. Her ladyship was sixty-six years of age. She had been in a delicate state of health, but not to say ill. The jury being satisfied that she died from natural causes, returned a verdict to that effect.

State of Trade at Manchester.—There was a very good demand for yarn on Tuesday; and, as the market was very bare of stock, rather higher prices were in many cases obtained, and purchasers were desirous of making contracts for future delivery. The goods market, also, was very firm, and full prices were paid for nearly all descriptions of cloth.—The Rochdale Flannel Market was very dull on Monday, the demand very limited, and prices rather wavering. There is the same inactivity in the wool market, but prices remain firm.

James Cockburn Belaney.—Letters have been received from the Home Office, expressive of the regret of Sir James Graham at the outrages that have been committed against the person and property of Mr. Belaney since his return to North Sunderland. The Government has joined in offering a reward of £100 for the apprehension and conviction of the offenders who set fire to his dwelling-house on the evening of the 18th ult., and her Majesty's gracious pardon to any accomplice informant. An inspector of police has been sent down to inquire into the nature and particulars of the recent outrage. He has been actively engaged, and has laid informations against Mr. George Gray Bell, the late clerk of the firm of Robson and Skelly, and three other persons of the names of Steavenson, Brown, and Galligar, as principals at the incendiary fire of the 10th ult. The Rev. Dixon Clark, of Betford, a magistrate for the district, after hearing a part of the evidence collected by the inspector, granted warrants for the immediate apprehension of the parties. A warrant was also granted to search the dwelling house of Mr. Bell, for property belonging to Mr. Belaney, which he is charged with having improperly taken away.

The Accident at Haswell Colliery.—On Wednesday the inquest on the bodies of those who fell victims to the late explosion was resumed, and, after a very long and minute examination of witnesses, the inquiry was once more adjourned to Friday (yesterday). Professors Faraday and Lyall have been sent down by the Government to assist in the inquiry. Both these scientific gentlemen have arranged to go down the Haswell pit to inspect the workings. On Tuesday night a meeting was held at the Lecture-room, Nelson-street, Newcastle, to devise means for alleviating the distress of those families whom the recent awful occurrence had left destitute. Some excellent appeals were made in behalf of the destitute families of the sufferers, and a committee was formed to organize a subscription for them.

Incendiarism in Lincolnshire.—An incendiary fire occurred at Sudbrook, near Ancaster, on Sunday morning last; a stack of straw, the property of Charles Allix, Esq., of Willoughby Hall, was entirely consumed.

Serious Fire near Gravesend.—On Wednesday night a fire of a very alarming character, broke out at the premises belonging to Mr. Mace, farmer, in Parry-street, about one mile and a half this side of Gravesend. That part in which the fire commenced was the homestead, in which stood a vast number of ricks of great value. The flames next extended to several other stacks, also to a large building, upwards of 100 feet long by 50 wide, and filled with grain; then to a number of pea ricks, and from thence to the piggeries. The flames, by a quarter past ten, were ascending into the air several hundred feet, and large flakes of fire were wafted into the stables and cart-houses, all of which were blazing away in a manner truly awful. The progress of the fire was subdued after some time, but the value of the property consumed amounts to some thousands of pounds.

Fatal Accident with Fire-arms.—A dreadful event occurred in the parish of English Bicknor, Gloucestershire, on Tuesday last. Lieut.-Col. Charles Davies, of Bicknor Court, was shooting near that place, and, in the act of getting over a hedge, his gun, becoming entangled in the briars, went off and lodged the contents of both barrels in his right side. He immediately fell, and, on the keeper (who was accompanying him) coming to his side, and attempting to raise him, exclaimed, "It is of no use, I am a dead man!" He then prayed earnestly for mercy on his soul, and on the souls of his relations. The keeper ran to the village for assistance, but before he could return the unfortunate gentleman had breathed his last. Deceased had been for forty years in the service of the Hon. East India Company's Bombay establishment.

IRELAND.

The Repeal Association.—The Hon. Hely Hutchinson was the chairman of the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday. The whole proceedings were flat and uninteresting. Mr. Maurice O'Connell informed the meeting that the "Liberator" was in the enjoyment of strong health and buoyant spirits. He intended writing to the Association this week, and on Monday next, he (Mr. M. O'Connell) hoped to have a long letter to read to them from his father. (Cheers.) The hon. member then proceeded to acknowledge subscriptions, and to pay handsome compliments, as he went along, to all who had been so charitably disposed as to send them a donation.—Mr. O'Neil Daunt, who has not for some time made his appearance in the hall, next acknowledged a sum of £50 from the county Clare. (Great cheering.)—Mr. William Charles O'Connell, the London "Inspector-General," or chief of all the Repeal tax gatherers, next came forward, and gave an account of his stewardship.—Mr. Maurice O'Connell, after handing in subscriptions from Liverpool and Manchester, proceeded to give an account of a meeting of Repeal wardens which he had convened on the previous afternoon (Sunday). They were determined (he added) to have a warden and collector for every street in Dublin. There were eight hundred streets in the city, and by very moderate exertions, they calculated that they could raise £200 weekly within these precincts.—Mr. O'Neil Daunt dwelt at great length upon the subject of Repeal.—Mr. Grattan followed, in a long speech.—The amount of rent was upwards of £600.

Health of Mr. O'Connell.—A letter from Darrynane, describes Mr. O'Connell as in the enjoyment of excellent health, and as occupied during the greater part of the day hunting with his celebrated beagles.

Attempt at Murder in Tipperary.—A letter from Roscrea states that the driver of Mr. Latouche, residing near Wal town, was fired at on Sunday night, and wounded mortally.

POLICE.

Crime and Distress.—Two cases have occurred this week which exhibit in a lamentable point of view the effects of poverty. The first took place at Queen-square Police-office on Tuesday, when Sarah Baker, a miserable-looking woman, who appeared to be upwards of seventy years of age, was charged with stealing a half-quartern loaf from the shop of Mrs. Wallace, a baker, 5, Camera-street, Chelsea. The son of the prosecutrix stated that he was sitting in the parlour that morning, when he saw the prisoner enter the shop, and take a half-quartern loaf from the counter, with which she walked out. He followed, and finding the bread under her shawl, gave her into custody. Prisoner, in reply to the charge, said that she was very sorry, but that starvation had induced her to do it. She had lately been at work in some market gardens, but there being nothing now for her to do in that way, she had become much distressed; she added, that she was ready to faint away from hunger. A friend of the shopkeeper's said that she had been frequently before robbed, and could ill afford it, as she was a widow with a large family; she did not wish to press for any very severe punishment on the prisoner. Mr. Bond said that being hungry was no excuse in this country for theft; if people were distressed they could always go to their workhouse, where they could get relief. If everybody were allowed to go into a shop and help themselves, tradesmen would soon be ruined. He must commit the prisoner for trial.—Committed accordingly.—The second case, which was heard before the Magistrates at Bromley, on Monday, exhibited another instance of the commission of crime to insure temporary shelter in a prison. Such cases as these afford matter for serious reflection. In the latter instance the accused was a wretched-looking fellow, named Joseph Tyrrell, who was charged with stealing two pounds of bread, value 3½d., the property of Mr. White, a baker, at Bromley.—The complainant deposed that the prisoner walked into his shop, and asked for a half-quartern loaf. He handed him one across the counter, and the prisoner immediately seized it, and began to devour it. He tried to take it away from him, but it was of no use, and the prisoner told him that he had no money to pay him for the bread, and he might do what he pleased with him.—The master of the Bromley union workhouse said that the prisoner was admitted into the establishment on Sunday night, as a casual pauper, and his supper was given to him. He refused to get up until half-past seven o'clock in the morning, and, as he then declared he would not do any work, he was turned out of the house.—The prisoner, in answer to the charge, said that he had committed the offence in order that he might be sent to prison. He was suffering under disease, and was anxious to be sent to gaol, where he should have an opportunity of being cured.—The Bench said they did not think a charge of felony could be supported. It was clear, however, that the prisoner had brought himself within the provisions of the Vagrant Act, and they should, therefore, commit him for one month to the House of Correction. It will be remarked that the offence in both cases was that of stealing bread to appease the cravings of hunger.

The American Gouging System.—At Lambeth-street police-office, Wednesday, William Duval, an American sailor on board the Prince Oscar, an English vessel at present lying in the London Docks, was charged with the ferocious act of "gouging" or forcing one of the eyes of his captain (Lawson) from its socket, and inflicting other injuries upon him. It was proved in evidence that on the preceding afternoon the prisoner was directed to superintend the topsail sheets of the vessel, and, in doing so, some words took place between him and the chief mate. The prisoner then went towards the captain, who was on deck, and demanded his wages for some days which were due to him. The captain told him that if he did not conduct himself in a proper manner, he must either go below or on shore. The prisoner became more impudent, upon which Capt. Lawson laid hold of him to put him out of the vessel, and a struggle ensued, during which the prisoner made use of the most violent exclamations, and, amongst other things, said, "Only let me get once clear, and I'll do for you." The prisoner managed to overpower the captain, and got on the top of him, when getting the end of his thumb under the eye, he forced it from the socket. Captain Lawson instantly shrieked, and exclaimed, "Oh, he's got my eye out!" and two of the men on board, who had seen their captain's eye resting upon his cheek, became so sick that some moments elapsed before they could go to his assistance, and secure the prisoner. Captain Lawson, with much presence of mind, replaced his eye in the socket, but, in addition to this injury, it was found he had sprained his ancle. He was removed to the London Hospital, where every attention was paid to him. A certificate was put in, stating that Captain Lawson was not in a fit state to attend to give his evidence, or leave the hospital at present, and it was stated that there were but faint hopes entertained of restoring the sight of his eye. The prisoner, in reply to the charge, carelessly replied, that he was in such a state of mind at the time as to be unable to control his passion, and unconscious of what he did. He was remanded to a future day, when Captain Lawson will be able to attend and prosecute him.

Claim against Louis Philippe.—At Marylebone police-office, on Wednesday, a tall athletic Frenchman was introduced to the sitting magistrate (Mr. Rawlinson), who inquired the nature of his business. The applicant (who carried in his hand a great number of papers, some of which were printed): I have to take the liberty, sir, of requesting that you, as a magistrate, will use your best endeavours to get one of my papers presented to her most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, in order that it may by her be brought under the notice of King Louis Philippe.—It will be remembered that about a fortnight ago the applicant attended at one of the city police-courts, for the purpose of obtaining a warrant for the detention of the King, immediately upon his setting foot in England; and it need scarcely be added that the wished-for warrant was not granted. The applicant gave a paper into the hands of the magistrate, which Mr. Rawlinson promised to read. The Frenchman, who seemed highly elated at the magistrate condescending to peruse his appeal to her Majesty in his behalf, bowed respectfully, and then quitted the court. The paper contained a voluminous statement, printed in English and French, in which the writer sets forth certain pecuniary claims on his Majesty the King of the French, for services rendered by him (the applicant) in maintaining and supporting a large number of the most active partisans of the great Revolution of July 1830. The applicant, in very energetic language, mixed with no slight share of bombast, entreats her Majesty to use her influence with her royal guest to induce him to recognise his claim. The applicant is the same person who, between nine and ten years ago, was brought before the then sitting magistrates, Messrs. Shutt and Hoskins, charged with having caused a mob to assemble in the vicinity of the residence of the French Ambassador, Manchester-square. Upon that occasion the applicant, who was then a vendor of blacking, was mounted upon a donkey caparisoned in a most grotesque manner; and had a quantity of blacking for sale, which, according to bills put forth by him, was manufactured from the bones and blood of the satellites of the hypocrite King Louis Philippe, who had been killed fighting against the Republicans of Lyons. He was then discharged by the magistrates, upon his promising not to cause an obstruction in the streets again.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

There is now an engineer at Bale who is making estimates for constructing a railroad from that city to Olten, traversing the mountains of the Jura, and having branches at Zurich, Lucerne, and Soleure.

A day or two ago 100 shares in the Thames Tunnel upon which £50 each had been paid, amounting, to £5000, were sold to an extensive shareholder at the exceedingly low price of six shillings per £50 share, realising only £30, and £4970 less than had been paid for them. The sale was a bona fide one, the shares having been put up by the executors of a deceased gentleman.

The Oporto papers announce the assassination of a Judge on the 17th ult., at Cruz, in the district of Paredes. He was shot in the back as he entered his house at nightfall, and died on the spot. The murderer escaped.

The manufactures of cambrics and lawns, formerly so flourishing in the rural districts between Valenciennes and Cambray, is declining from day to day. The linen manufactures are almost superseded everywhere by those of cotton. At the commencement of the Restoration 350,000 pieces of cambric were manufactured every year. At present not more than 90,000 pieces are manufactured, the value of which is about 3,960,000 francs.

The whole of the tribes of that part of the coast of Arabia, under Osman Pasha, the Turkish Governor, have revolted against the Porte. A force of between 3000 and 4000 has been sent against them.

Mr. Gordon, the English Consul at Havre, died on Saturday, in that town, of an illness which had confined him to his bed for some days.

Accounts have been received of the murder of the captain and two of the crew of the French merchant vessel l'Indien, by the natives of one of the islands in the Gulf of Bengal. The captain and two men had left the vessel in a boat, to take soundings of the coast, and not returning, they were sought for by the rest of the crew, who found them lying murdered on the shore, and stripped of their clothing.

A farmer in Leicestershire found a wasp's nest the other day on the roof of his house, and he put it, wasps and all, into a sack, intending to throw the whole into a pond. Some thieves stole the sack from the door of the farmhouse, and, on their opening it to inspect their booty, the wasps flew out, settling on them and amply punishing them for the theft.

Recent accounts from Rio announce an attempt at suicide by M. de Scantz, Consul General and Chargé d' Affaires of Sweden at the Brazilian Court, but the dose of arsenic by which he had hoped to effect his purpose was, it appears, too strong, and did not effect the intended object. The cause of his desperate act was said to be his dismissal from his post. He is said to have been much beloved by the ex-King of Sweden.

The Liverpool papers say that the practicability of connecting the opposite shores of the Mersey by a stupendous chain bridge is under consideration.

We learn from Naples, 27th ult., that great preparations are making there for the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke d'Aumale, who is expected at Naples about the end of this month.

The New Hamburg Gazette gives a Berlin letter of the 27th ult., containing a strange report that pardon has been offered to Tsech, who attempted to assassinate the King of Prussia, on condition of his transporting himself to one of the British penal colonies, where the English government has promised to keep him.

Joseph Capper, the well-known Chartist blacksmith, of Tunstall, Staffordshire, convicted of sedition at the special commission in 1842, was released from the county gaol on Monday last, after undergoing his term of two years' imprisonment.

An approaching eruption of Mount Vesuvius is feared, from the crater being full of burning lava, and the surrounding springs quite dry.

It appears by a letter from Vienna, that the Emperor of Austria has positively ordered the suppression of lotteries in his states from the 1st of January next.

The long-pending law suits between Sir Richard Dobson, Knt., and Mr. Sutton, on the one side, and the watermen of Greenwich on the other, relative to the pier at Greenwich, have been finally decided by Sir John Bailey, Bart., to whom they were referred at Maidstone assizes in March last, in favour of the watermen.

Several of the papers this week have given an account of the death of the infidel preacher and writer, the Rev. Robert Taylor, which is stated to have taken place at Tours in France last month. He had renounced, or professed to have renounced, his deistical principles. Mr. Taylor was for some time in a declining state of health. He was 52 years of age. He had written several works, and has left, it is said, a mass of manuscript on the subject of revealed religion.

Some excitement has been caused at Mayence in consequence of the approaching trial of the young Prince of Leiningen for striking the wife of a toll-keeper of a drawbridge. The Prince, who had crossed the river in a boat, refused to pay the toll, and the blow was struck during an altercation that ensued. The Prince is a member of a former reigning family in Germany, is related to several royal families, and also closely allied to the royal family of England.

The railroad from Nuremberg to Bamberg was opened on the 1st inst.

A letter from Gibraltar, dated October 2, states that a Spanish war schooner, having refused to show her colours, was on the previous day fired into and sunk, while making for Algesiras. The crew were saved.

The day for the laying of the first stone of the Birkenhead Docks is now definitively fixed, we understand, for Wednesday, the 23d instant, when Sir Philip De M. G. Egerton, M.P. for South Cheshire, will officiate on the occasion.

A Brussels paper, speaking of the refusal of the Belgian Government to confirm the sale of the British Queen, says that the second attempt to sell it does not prove favourable; it is thought that it will be given up to the Navy Board to be taken to pieces.

Lord Ashley is making a tour through Lancashire to inquire into the operation of the Factory Act. Last Monday he visited several of the establishments in Bolton.

Jocosot, the Sauk chief, who was presented to Queen Victoria, and her royal court, a few weeks since, died of consumption on the 3rd of September, in Cleveland, Ohio, far from home and relatives, but kindly provided for by a benevolent family residing in Cleveland. He was 35 years of age. There is every reason to believe that he died of consumption, brought on by the dissipations of civilised life.

Murder of an Englishman at Calais.—A sad event has placed all Calais in movement. The Commissaire of Police for Passports, M. Sullier, had been drinking on Sunday night with a Mr. Thorne, an English surgeon, at which time they were apparently on very friendly terms; when, about one o'clock in the morning, they went to the commissioner's office together, for what reason is not known, when a dispute arose, and the commissaire stabbed the other to the heart with a poignard, which, after some search, was discovered in the office. Mr. Thorne fell on the floor, and died instantly. He was a quiet man, who has resided at Calais several years, and has left a widow and several children. M. Sullier was a man not much liked in the town from his habit of drinking, and in consequence he showed at times some rudeness of manners. There is a report that M. Sullier owed Mr. Thorne money lost at cards. However, all is uncertain, and probably will ever remain so, no one having been present at the dispute. M. Sullier spoke English remarkably well, and had formerly been an actor. The murderer was given into the custody of the gens d'armes, who detained him at his own house till the arrival of the Procureur du Roi from Bologne. An investigation has been made of the affair by the Procureur du Roi, at the Town-hall (the body of the deceased being in the apartment, according to the law in France), before the Mayor and the second Commissary of Police. This investigation was private, and lasted till half-past ten o'clock at night, when it would appear there was thought to be sufficient circumstantial evidence against M. Sullier, as he was sent off under a guard to the prison of Boulogne, and from thence he will be transferred to St. Omer, and tried in the course of next month. M. Sullier has not admitted his guilt, but, during the investigation, constantly alleged that he had no recollection of any of the acts imputed to him. Dr. Thorn has left a widow and three children, objects of great commiseration.

On Thursday week, died at Etwall-hall, Major-General Cotton, in his 67th year. He entered the army at the age of 19, in 1797, as ensign of the 5th Foot.

Death of Admiral Sir John Poo Beresford, Bart., K.C.B. and G.C.H.—This distinguished flag-officer expired on Wednesday, at the Hall, Bedale, Yorkshire, after a protracted illness. The deceased Admiral Sir John Poo Beresford, Bart., was born in 1769, and was illegitimate son of George first Marquis of Waterford, and brother of Viscount Beresford. Sir John at an early age entered the navy, as the date of his entry is in the year 1782.

Lectures on the Ear.—Mr. Curtis, in recently commencing his autumnal course of lectures on the ear at the Royal Dispensary, Dean-street, Soho, discussed the improvements and discoveries recently introduced in aural surgery, and described what, in a recent visit to Paris, he had become acquainted with. Amongst other illustrations of the science of aural surgery the lecturer exhibited the nerves of the ear, and showed their minute ramifications by means of Cary's double achromatic microscope. He then went more minutely into the curative processes of various diseases of the organs of hearing, describing the nature and application of ligatures, the forceps, &c.; and showed how Herpes, and other cutaneous affections of the auricle, are removed by the anthracokali, and in what manner Tinnitus Aurium is made to yield to the internal administration of Arnica Montana and Imperatoria Ostruthium, combined with the valerianate of zinc and the citrate and lactate of iron. The lecturer also described the uses of Gruber's speculum, a lamp for viewing the meatus and membrane of the tympanum, and the use of the cephaloscope to judge of the normal and abnormal sounds in the organ of hearing. He concluded by adverting to the mode of treating the deaf and dumb; and advocated a system in which endeavours should be made to develop the latent sense of hearing in patients, instead of supplying a substitute for such sense, and thereby confirming deafness, instead of curing it.

Masquerade at Vauxhall Gardens.—There was a masquerade at these gardens on Wednesday evening, and the conductors of the entertainment had evidently used their best endeavours to satisfy their guests. Masquerades in England are generally rather dull affairs, however, and the amusement must depend more upon the patrons themselves than upon those who project them. Those present seemed to feel this, and consequently vast exertions were made to induce mirth; it was, however, of rather a boisterous description. There was no lack of characters, some of which were well supported, and upon the whole, the entertainment passed off satisfactorily for all parties.

The London Docks.—Great progress is being made in the works and improvements at this great commercial establishment. The splendid new warehouse in course of erection, facing the wool-warehouse and abutting on the west quay, on the site where the superintendent's office and baggage-warehouse originally stood, is rapidly advancing towards completion. That portion of the new warehouse facing the wool-warehouse is already finished and roofed, it not being intended to carry that part higher than the warehouse on the opposite side. The portion alluded to stands on the site of the range of shops which formerly stood between the outer and inner gates, being emporiums for nautical instruments, ship-tackle, &c., well known to commercial men and persons having business at that place of traffic. The other portion of the warehouse is of great extent and strength, consisting of several floors, for the housing of tea, &c. Spacious vaults have also been made underneath this warehouse.

POSTSCRIPT.

Reception of Louis Philippe.—A letter from Portsmouth, dated Thursday evening, says—"This morning, a few minutes before twelve o'clock, the French war-steamer Elan came into harbour from Treport, which she left on Wednesday evening, with despatches from her Majesty the Queen of the French to her royal consort. This was the vessel that was despatched by his Majesty Louis Philippe immediately after his arrival on Tuesday, with letters to the Queen. It appears that they were to announce his having reached the shores of England in safety, and the enthusiastic reception he had met with from the British people. The accounts brought by the Elan state that nothing could equal the delight of the Queen upon perusing his Majesty's letters, and that she expressed her gratification in the most unmeasured terms at the flattering manner in which his Majesty had been received. The despatches brought by the Elan were immediately forwarded to his Majesty at Windsor.

Address to the King of the French.—The Court of Common Council has agreed to an address of congratulation to Louis Philippe. It is similar to that voted by the Court of Aldermen, and both addresses will probably be presented to his Majesty together.

The Queen Dowager.—We are sorry to hear that her Majesty's health will not admit of her enjoying the festivities at Windsor Castle during the visit of Louis Philippe.

The King of Saxony.—A letter from Leipsic, dated Sept. 29, says—"His Majesty the King of Saxony, before his journey to England, made purchases of a Jewish jeweller to the amount of 30,000 dollars for presents. On distributing them it appeared that most of the stones were false, for which reason the return of all the presents is requested."

The French Officers at Portsmouth.—The officers of the French squadron were entertained at dinner, on Wednesday, by Major-General Sir Hercules and Lady Pakenham. The dinner-party consisted of Vice-Admiral Baron la Susse, Baron de Laronciere, and Capitaine Goubin, of his Majesty's ship Gomer; Capitaine Count d'Harcourt, of his Majesty's ship La Reine Amelie; le Duc d'Harcourt, Capitaine Comte de Valmont, Capitaine Dieudonné, of his Majesty's ship Caiman; Capitaine Bouet, of his Majesty's ship Pluton; Capitaine d'Estremont de Maneroix, of H. M.'s ship Favori; the Earl of Yarborough, Rear-Admiral Hyde Parker; Capt. Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, of her Majesty's Royal yacht; Colonel Sir James Schoedde, 55th Regt.; Hon. Sir Francis and Lady Stapleton, Lady Louisa Noel, &c. &c. Major-Gen. and Lady Pakenham also issued cards of invitation to an evening party to the whole of the naval and military officers in command, and to the principal people in the neighbourhood. Among those present were the Earl and Countess of Orkney, the Vice-Chancellor of England, Hon. Captain and Mrs. Byng, &c. &c. The band of the Royal Marines played during the evening. A handsome supper was served.

Death of the Dean of Carlisle.—We have to announce the demise of the Rev. Dr. Hodgson, Dean of Carlisle, at his mansion in Lower Grosvenor-street, on Thursday morning, after a protracted illness. The late dean was also rector of the wealthy parish of St. George, Hanover-square, which living he had held for forty years, and the net revenue of which is of the annual value of £1550. The deanery is worth about £1600 a year.

Mrs. Synge, the sister of Sir W. Follett, the Attorney-General, died on Thursday, at her residence in Saville-row.

News of Dr. Wolff.—Dr. Wolff writes from Bokhara, dated July 25:—"The Ameer has returned from Kohhan, and presented me with a dress of honour, a horse, and one hundred tomauns, and I hope to set out in a few days for Persia."

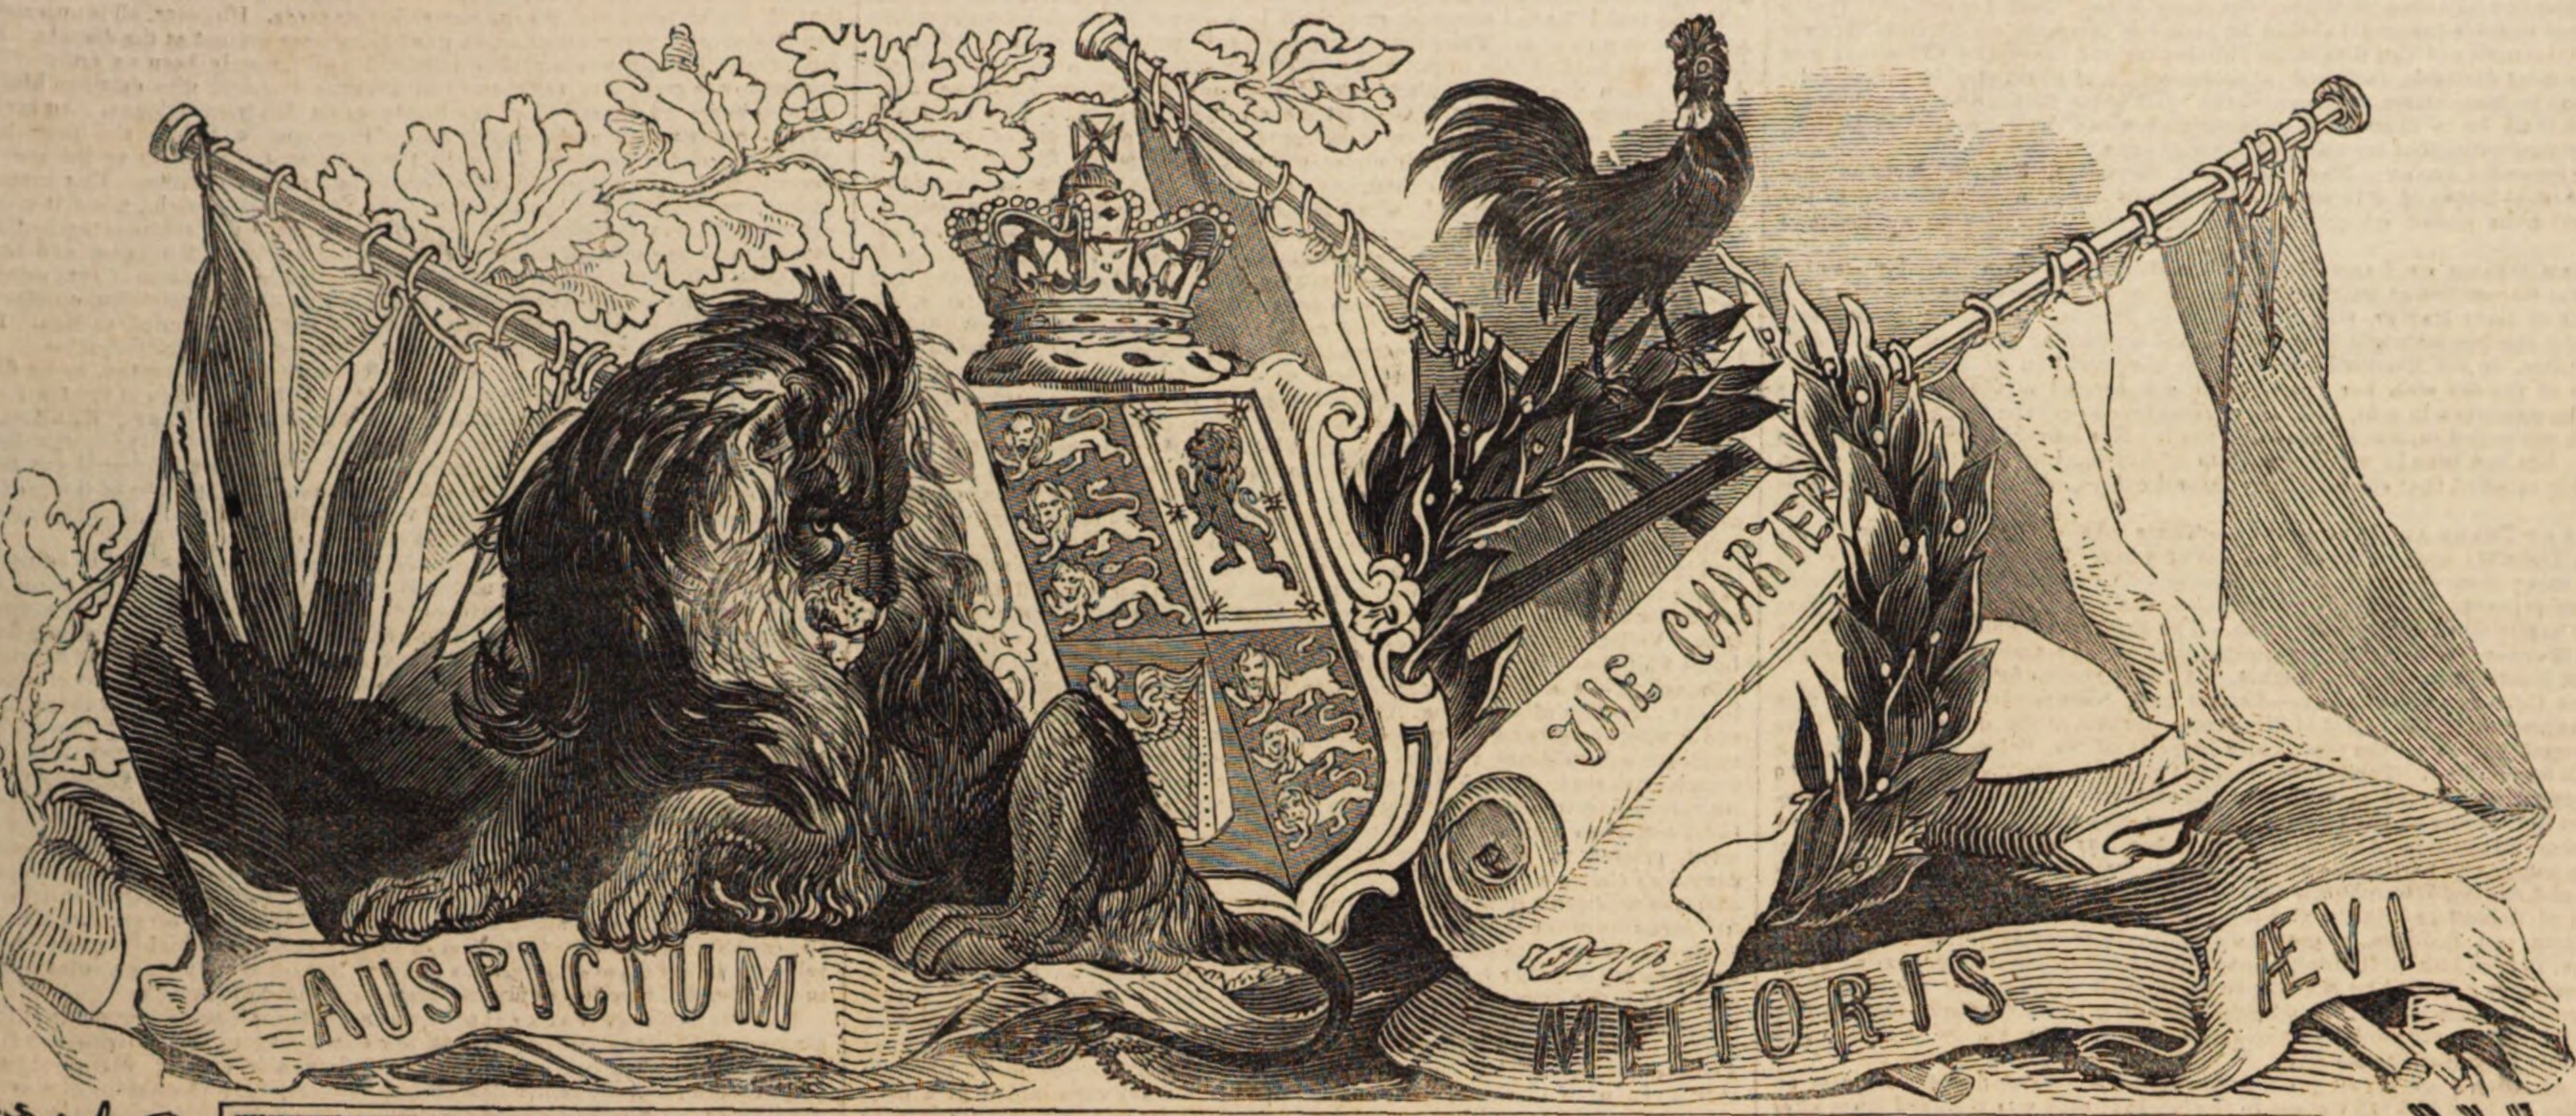
Seamens' Hospital Society.—Yesterday (Friday) the subscribers to this institution assembled at the office, King William-street, City, for the purpose of receiving the quarterly statements regarding patients, finances, &c. At two o'clock John Labouchere, Esq., took the chair, when the report was read, which stated that the total number of patients admitted from the 1st of July to the 30th of September had been 761, several of whom had been discharged since, much relieved, leaving the number at present on board 161. Deducting the expenditure for the period, a balance of £240 remained. The total number of the relieved since the commencement amounts to 48,126.

Fire at Tottenham.—On Thursday a fire was discovered on the farm of Mr. Frederick Antenbring, Farmwood's-green, Tottenham, Middlesex. After the fire had raged for two hours, the fireman succeeded in reducing it, but not until the brewhouse, granary, cottage, cart-sheds, calf-pens, stacks of hay, beans, farming implements, &c., had been consumed. The stabling, dwelling-house, and other out-places on the opposite side of the yard were with the utmost difficulty saved.

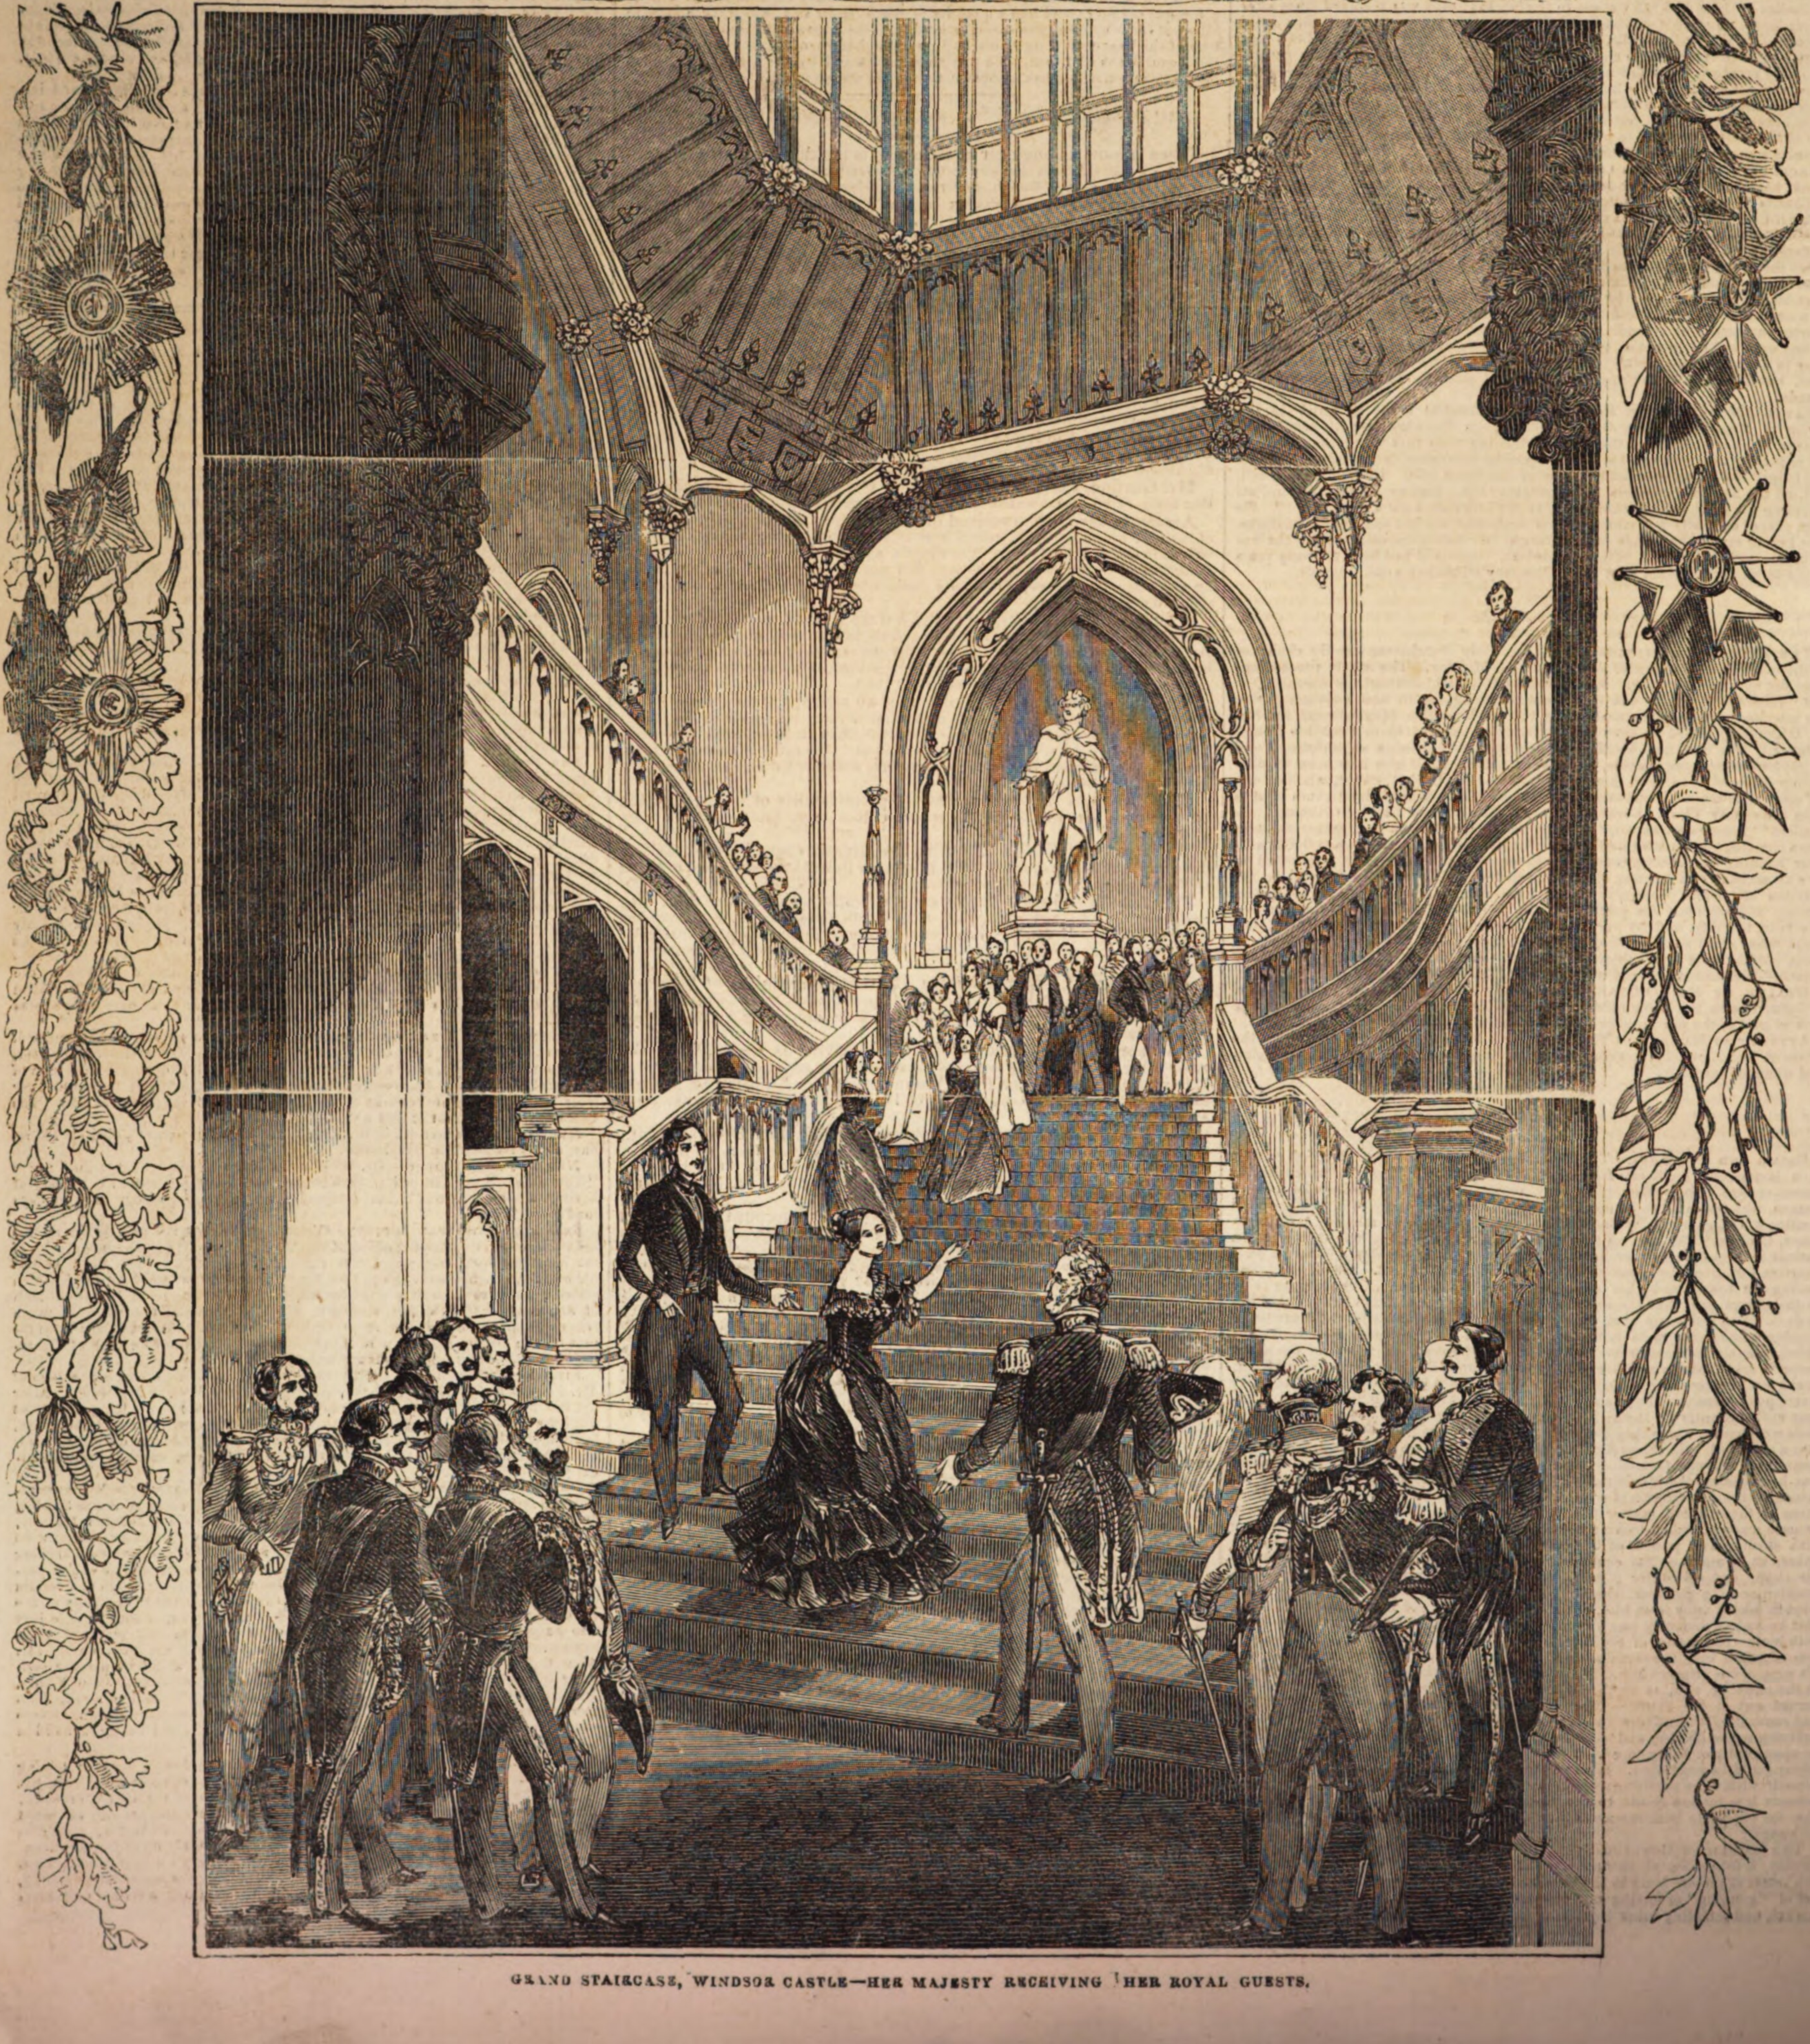
The Accident on the Brandling Junction Railway.—We have received a report of an inquest which was held on Wednesday at South Shields, on the body of John Brown, who was killed on the Brandling Junction Railway, under circumstances stated in another part of our paper. Evidence was adduced of a similar nature to the facts there mentioned, and the jury gave the following verdict:—"That the deceased was killed by the Nelson locomotive engine propelling a carriage, in which was the said John Brown, to and against certain other carriages, thereby causing his death, the engine being the property of the Brandling Railway Company. Deodand on the engine, £300." The jury also expressed a strong opinion that the accident was the result of gross negligence and mismanagement of the agents of the company. Mr. Allport, the superintendent of the railway, produced a list of persons seriously injured:—John Brown and Joseph Burrell (since dead), John Young, William Weatherill, George Gamble, Thomas Batey, William Greenwell, John Dorthwaite, John Tindall, John Wilkinson, guard, and Anthony Brown. There were other persons slightly injured. Greenwell, Gamble, and Young, are still in a precarious state.

Seven Lives Lost at Plymouth.—On Wednesday, a boat containing eleven persons was swamped while sailing over the ridge of rocks which stretches from Drake's Island to Mount Edgcumbe, and seven of them were drowned. The names of the unfortunate persons are—Thomas Mayne, seaman on board her Majesty's ship Resistance; —Cummings, ditto; — Holberton, ditto; —Thomas, ditto; — Liscombe, ditto; Atwill, waterman, plying at Mutton Cove and Amelia Smart, wife of a seaman on board her Majesty's ship Rhadamanthus. —An inquest was held at Devonport on the body of the unfortunate woman, whose body has been brought ashore, and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death by drowning."

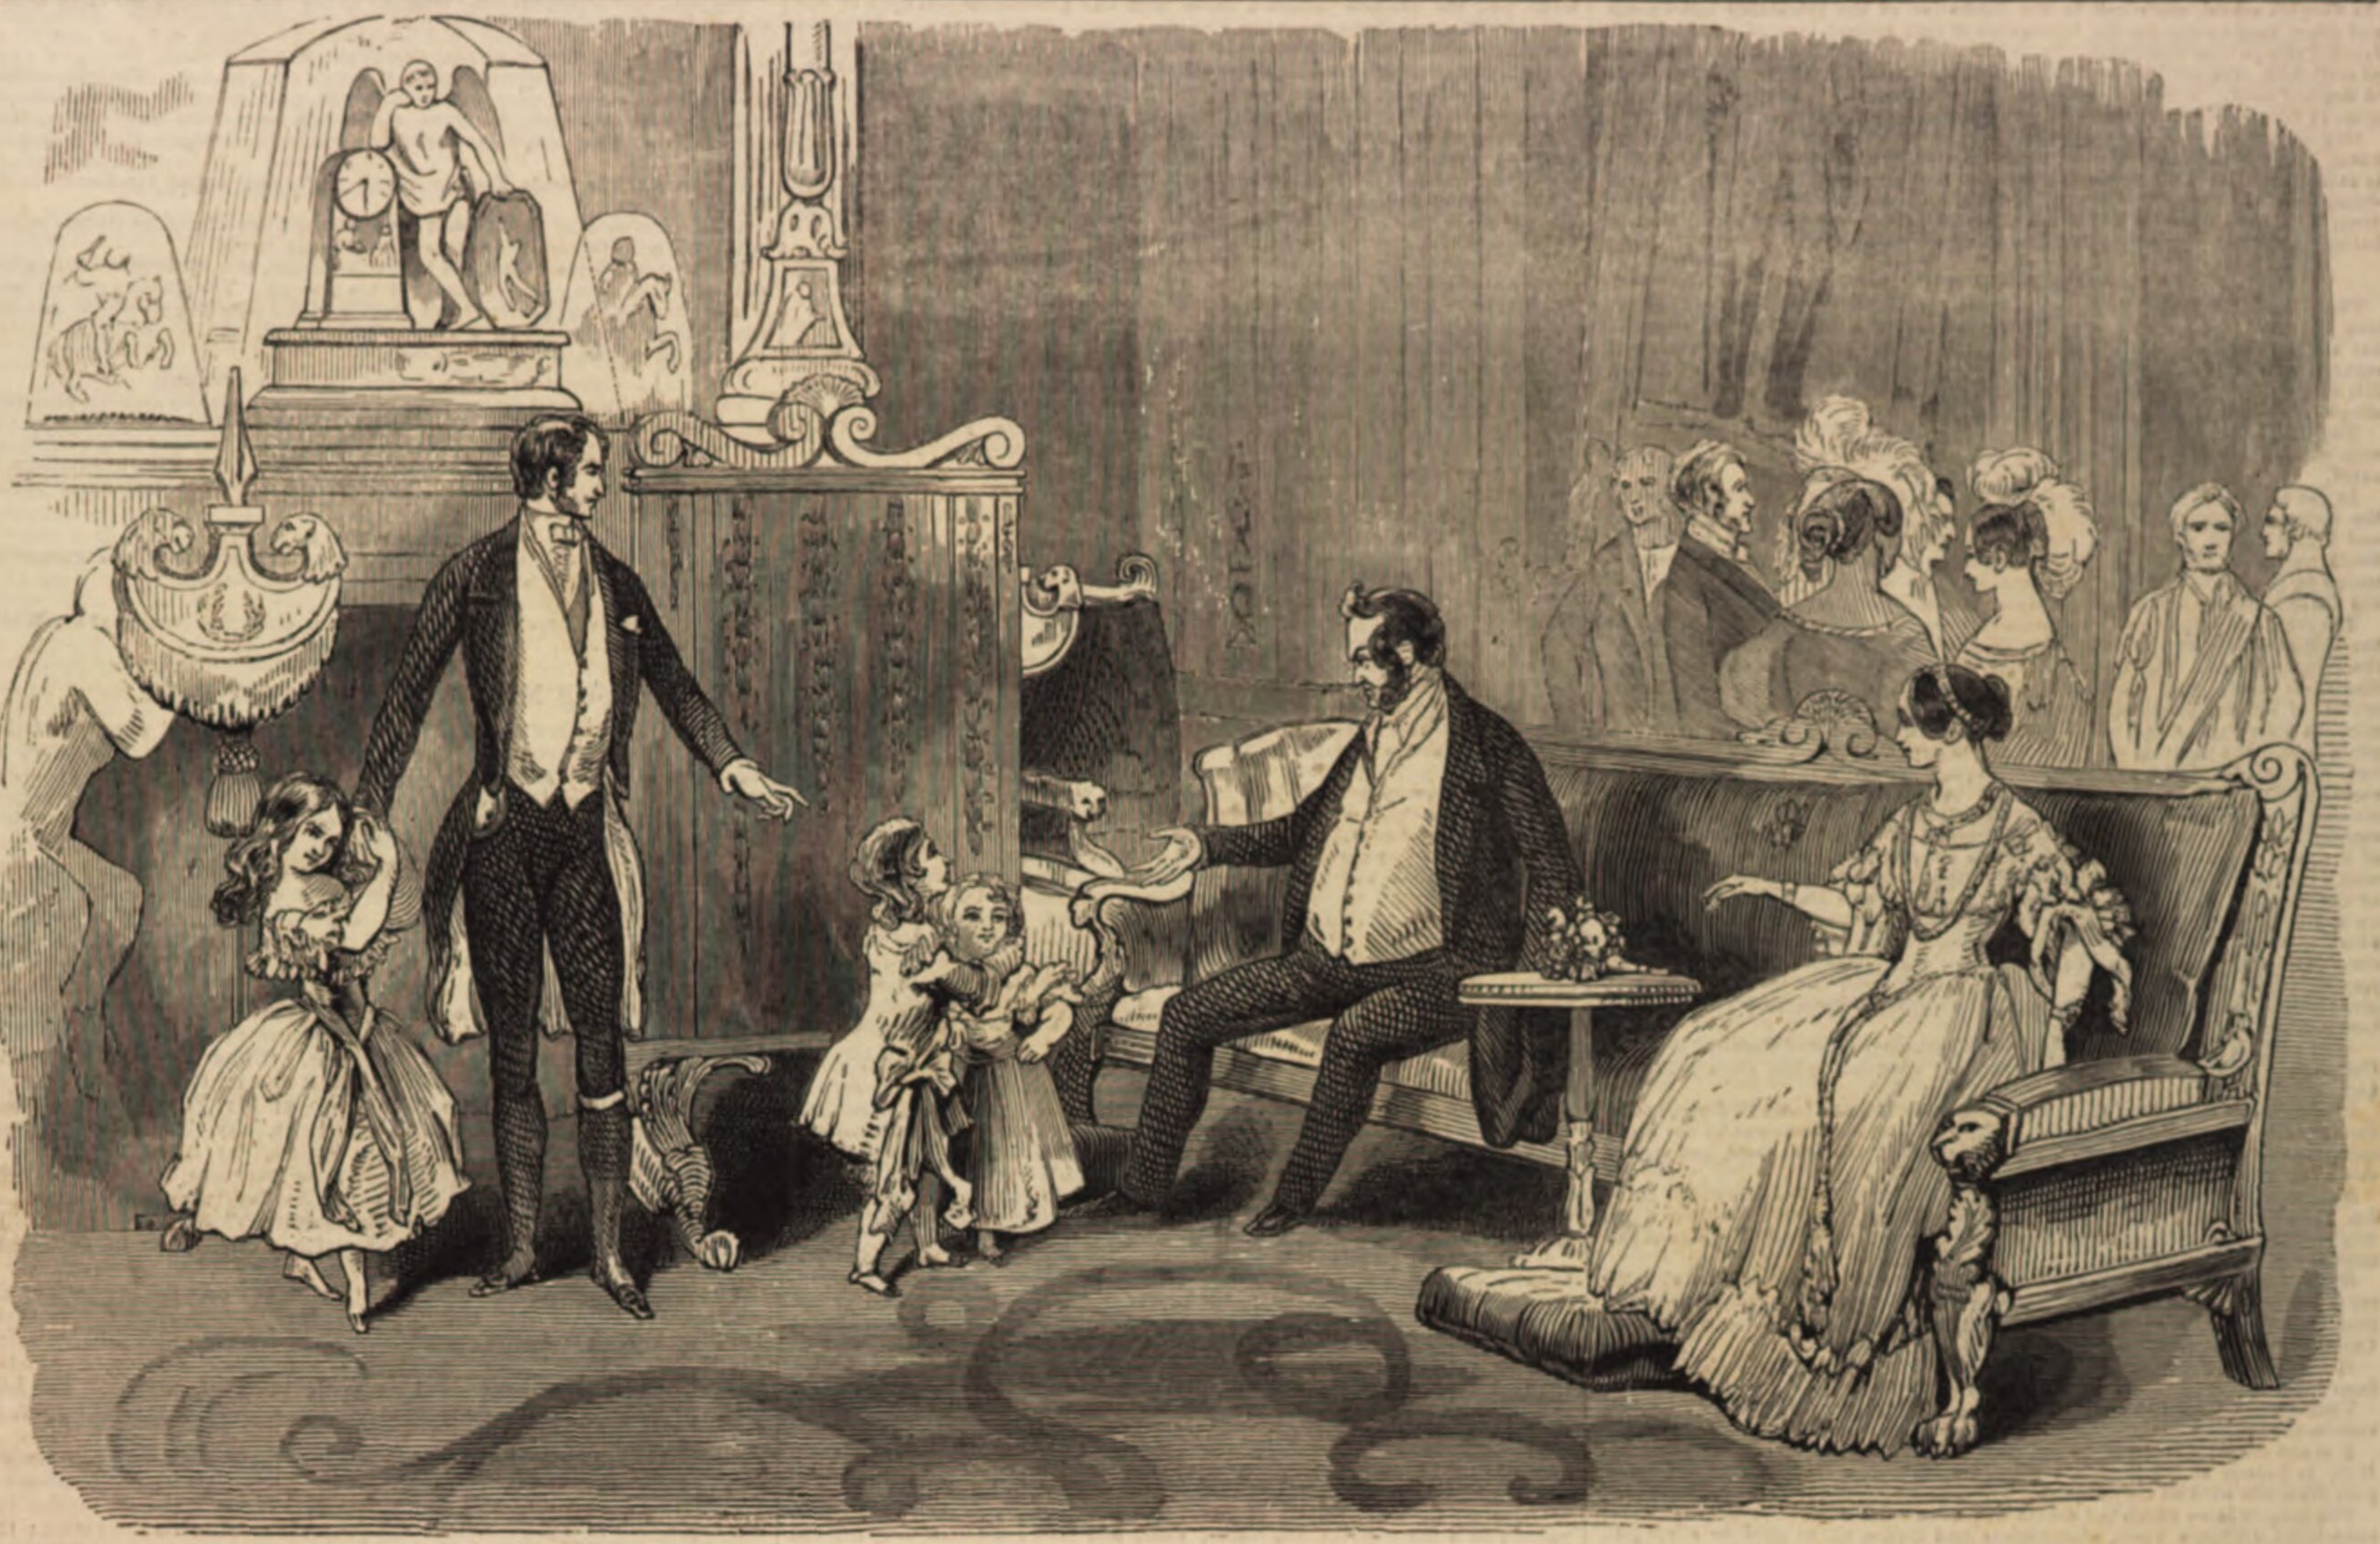
VISIT OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH TO QUEEN VICTORIA.



THE CHARTER
AUSPICIUM
MELIORIS
ÆVI



GRAND STAIRCASE, WINDSOR CASTLE—HER MAJESTY RECEIVING HER ROYAL GUESTS.



THE CRIMSON DRAWING-ROOM:—INTRODUCTION OF LOUIS PHILIPPE TO THE INFANT ROYAL FAMILY.

(Continued from page 229.)

England and the Insignia of France (the latter copied from "the Charter,") entwined with bay and laurel; together with the crest of France, the black cock, and the motto of St. Michael.

Shortly after, the Queen and Prince Albert, the King of the French, the Duchess of Kent, and the Duke de Montpensier entered the White Room, where a déjeûner was served to the august circle. The other distinguished visitors and the members of the royal suite were conducted to the Oak Room and the Equerries Rooms, where a déjeûner was served.

Dinner was served at seven o'clock in the dining-room. The table was tastefully decorated with epergnes of silver gilt filled with artificial flowers, also with vases and other ornaments, and was lighted by gold candelabras with wax lights. George IV.'s magnificent wine-cooler was placed in the centre window of this apartment.

The next of our engravings shows the Grand Corridor, with the royal party proceeding to the banquet. The entire corridor occupies the southern and eastern inner sides of the great quadrangle of the castle, and its entire extent is 500 feet; it communicates with the several private apartments, and at the angle is a beautiful staircase exclusively used by her Majesty. The corridor is cased with oak, richly carved in the perpendicular style of architecture; the walls are nearly covered with paintings, numbering 100 by Canaletti; and 120 by Zuccarelli; upon the floor are ranged superb candelabras and cabinets, and upon plinths and pedestals five marble busts of distinguished literary characters of the last century, and bronzes of eminent Frenchmen. There are throughout the entire corridor upwards of 200 ebony chairs and stools.

The company included his Majesty Louis Philippe, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier, Lady Charlotte Dundas, Countess Wratislaw, the Count and Countess de St. Aulaire, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Exeter, the Earl of Liverpool, Earl Delawarr, the Earl of Jersey, the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir Robert Peel, M. Guizot, Admiral de Mackau, Count de Jarnac, General Athalin, General Rumigni, Colonel Dumas, Count de Chabannes, M. Jarnac, Baron de Fain, M. Fauquier, M. Pasquier, an aide-de-camp to the Duke de Montpensier; Viscount Sydney, Lord in Waiting on the King; and Lord Charles Wellesley (Clerk-Marshal), Equerry in Waiting on the King.

The band of the Royal Horse Guards attended during dinner. Her Majesty's private band afterwards attended at the castle.

The wish of her Majesty, as well as that of Louis Philippe, has been to treat this visit purely as one of a private nature, and consequently the same quiet manner of receiving her guests was adopted as was observed last year. The range of rooms set apart for Louis Philippe are situated in the north wing of the castle, looking immediately upon the manœuvring ground of the Home-park, below the slopes. The suite is that which was recently occupied by his Imperial Majesty of Russia, and is only very slightly altered from the disposition which it received for the Czar's reception. The anti-room, the drawing-room, the private council-room, the library, are all fitted up alike in crimson silk, with the royal insignia embossed in the pattern. The King's bedroom is the blue and silver chamber, which was furnished under the direction of her Majesty Queen Adelaide, whose cypher is embossed or wrought on the pattern of the beautiful blue silk hangings which adorn the walls. The four corner pillars of the bed are each surmounted by a helmet, and the fauteuils and canapé are in the style of furniture in vogue during the time of the Regent D'Orleans. The pictures which adorn the walls of this most unique and splendid suite are mostly masterpieces. The principal drawing-room is hung with the chefs-d'œuvre of Rubens, of whom it is well known the superiority of the Windsor collection has enabled her Majesty to become a most competent judge and admirer. Honthorst, Kneller, Holbein, Zucharelli, and some also of the secondary painters of the Flemish school, contribute to the decoration of the remaining apartments and afford ample scope for the indulgence of that refined love of art for which Louis Philippe is so celebrated. In one of the rooms is placed the splendid vase of malachite, presented by the Emperor of Russia, and which is matchless both in size and form. This beautiful work of art is flanked by two tazzas of Berlin spar, of fine proportions, presented to her Majesty by the King of Prussia.

THE GRAND CORRIDOR:—THE QUEEN AND THE ROYAL VISITORS PASSING TO THE BANQUET.

One of the engravings, at page 233, shows the crimson or principal drawing-room, which is only used upon state occasions. The furniture of this apartment is extremely costly; the screens, chairs, &c., being of carved oak, gilt, and the draperies of satin embossed velvet. Two of the most interesting pictures are Hoppner's portrait of his Royal Highness the late Duke of Keut; and Winterhalter's portrait of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.

THE ROYAL PARTY AT WINDSOR.

The King of the French, who experienced not the slightest fatigue after his long and rapid journey, rose, according to custom, at an early hour on Wednesday morning, and walked for some time on the Slopes, enjoying the magnificent scenery, with which his previous residence in England has rendered him familiar. His Majesty breakfasted in his private apartment, and was visited immediately afterwards by the Queen and Prince Albert.

The King spent some time in viewing the magnificent collection of paintings with which the walls of the principal state apartments are so profusely decorated.

In the afternoon, at three o'clock, his Majesty the King of the French entered the Grand Quadrangle from the Queen's Entrance, accompanied by her Majesty and Prince Albert, and passed through George the Fourth's Gateway, on the South-terrace of the Castle. Their Majesties and his Royal Highness promenaded on the South and East Terraces, followed by a party including some of the visitors and the ladies and gentlemen in waiting of the royal suite.

The royal and august party re-entered the Castle, and afterwards quitting it by the Norman-gate, walked down to St. George's Chapel, whch their Majesties and the Prince entered. The Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor received the illustrious visitors, and attended them during their inspection of the different objects of interest within the sacred edifice. Louis Philippe stopped for some minutes before the choir, evidently admiring the splendid carvings, the altar-piece (which is a painting of "The Last Supper," by West) the knights' banners and stalls, and the general picturesque appearance of this portion of the sacred edifice. He proceeded under the organ-loft into the nave; and after visiting the Beaufort, Lincoln, Aldworth, Rutland, and May chapels, and the cenotaph to the memory of the late Princess Charlotte at the north-west corner of the nave, went up the north aisle to the chapter room, which is ornamented with a full-length portrait of Edward III., the founder of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. The King is represented in his robes of state, holding a sword, on which are displayed the crowns of England and France. The two-handed sword of Edward III., which hangs on one side of his portrait, excited the especial attention and curiosity of Louis Philippe and his son, the Duke de Montpensier. This singular weapon, which is nearly seven feet in length, and of great weight, was taken down by the King's special desire, and placed in the hands of his Majesty.

After viewing St. George's Chapel, the august party entered Cardinal Wolsey's Chapel, and afterwards took their departure, attended by the Dean to the entrance.

Passing round the base of the Round Tower, his Majesty Louis Philippe, having the Queen on his arm, accompanied by Prince Albert, and followed by the Royal suites, entered the precincts of the Castle, near St. George's Gate, and walked down the Home-park to the Dairy.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Charlotte Dundas, Lady in Waiting, and Colonel Sir George Couper, Comptroller of her Royal Highness's Household, received their Majesties and his Royal Highness at the entrance to Frogmore-house.

His Majesty and the Queen and Prince Albert remained near an hour with the royal Duchess, and then left, followed by the different ladies and gentlemen of their respective suites; the illustrious party returning in pony carriages to the Castle at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock.

His Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier returned to the Castle to dinner from town.

Viscount and Viscountess Canning and Lady Peel arrived at the Castle on a visit to the Queen.

A grand dinner was given in the evening at seven o'clock, in St. George's Hall, in honour of her Majesty's august visitor. The magnificent service of gold plate was used on the occasion.

The long table on which the dinner was served was covered with magnificent candelabra, épergnes, vases, wine-coolers, and dishes, all of gold or silver gilt. In the centre of the table were épergnes and candelabra, placed alternately; several of the former, of a circular form, being filled with artificial flowers. A row of candelabra, with wax lights, were placed on each side, and beyond these, at both sides of the table, were numerous vases, wine-coolers, and dishes, of the most elegant forms and designs.

At each end of the hall were elevated sideboards of equal dimensions, containing a choice selection from the numerous and valuable articles of plate in the royal treasury, remarkable for their excellence of workmanship, antiquity, or historical interest.

Flaxman's celebrated "Shield of Achilles," "The Armada Urn," and some ancient sconces were displayed on the west sideboard; and a large shield sculptured in high relief, with the representation of a battle, and the "Neptune Epergne," richly embellished with marine emblems, and surmounted with a statue of the Marine Deity, were on the east sideboard. Numerous tankards, vases, shields, and bulb cups, richly chased, were tastefully arranged on a background of crimson, and were very brilliantly illuminated with candelabra and sconces of silver gilt, bearing wax lights.

Two of the most superb articles of vertu in the Royal Collection are engraved at pages 228 and 229.

The Nautilus Shell.—This exquisite work of art is believed, upon good authority, to be the work of Benvenuto Cellini. The height of the cup is twenty inches. The breadth of light on the face of the shell is admirably supported by the richness of the general details, which are themselves made more gorgeous by the contrast.

The "Precious" Peacock, so much admired in her Majesty's buffets, formed, originally, the crowning embellishment, or finial, of Tippoo Sahib's throne. The jewels consist of diamonds, emeralds, rubies, and pearls—the ruby pendant from the head being one of the largest and finest known. The height from the feet to the top of the tail is seventeen inches. The estimated value of the whole is £30,000.

The Queen was seated at the north side of the table, between his Majesty Louis Philippe and his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier. Opposite were seated Prince Albert between the Countess St. Aulaire and Lady Charlotte Dundas.

The Prince of Wales' Epergne, crowned with his Royal Highness's Plume, was placed at this part of the table, between the other epergnes of great beauty sculptured in gold at the base with "Dancing Fauns." These epergnes had on either side the "Hesperides" candelabra.

M. Guizot, the Earl of Aberdeen, his Excellency Count de St. Aulaire, the Countess of Gainsborough, the Duke of Wellington, had also seats in the vicinity of the royal circle.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent sat by the side of the King of the French.

The following had the honour of dining with the Queen:

The Count and Countess St. Aulaire, Prince Castelcicala, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Lyndhurst, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke of Wellington, Marquis of Exeter, Lady Charlotte Dundas, Earl of Liverpool, Earl and Countess Delawarr and Lady Mary West, Earl of Jersey, Earl of Aberdeen, Earl Jermyn, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, Viscount and Viscountess Canning, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, Sir James and Lady Graham, Sir George Murray, Sir W. Freemantle and Miss Hervey, Sir Henry Wheatley, Sir George Couper, Lady Isabella Wemyss, Sir Charles Rowley, the Provost of Eton and the Hon. Mrs. Hodgson, the Hon. and Rev. R. Stopford, Mr. George E. Anson, Hon. Miss Lyttelton, Monsieur Guizot, Admiral de Mackau, Count de Jarnac, General Athalin, General Rumigny, Col. Dumas, Count de Chabannes, M. Thiery, Baron de Fain, M. Farquier, M. Pasquier, M. Herbet, M. Hennequin, Le Capitaine Page, Le Capitaine Pellion, Viscount Sydney, Lord C. Wellesley, and the Hon. Captain Duncombe.

The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards was stationed in a gallery at the west end of the hall during dinner, and performed several pieces.

After dinner her Majesty's private band, with numerous additions of the most eminent performers, attended, under the direction of Mr. Anderson.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Windsor, Thursday Evening.

The char-à-banc, the magnificent gift presented to her Majesty by the King of the French, was used, for the first time since its arrival at Windsor from Paris, this morning.

Arrangements having been made last evening for his Majesty, accompanied by the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, &c., to proceed to Twickenham, Hampton Court, Bushy and Claremont, this morning, in the char-à-banc, this splendid equipage, with four horses, arrived in the quadrangle from the Royal Mews shortly after nine o'clock.

At twenty minutes before eleven o'clock, her Majesty and the King of the French, the Queen leaning on the arm of her royal guest, descended the grand staircase, followed by Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, the Duc de Montpensier, and several other distinguished guests and royal attendants, to the Quadrangle, where the char-à-banc was in waiting. The Queen was handed to the front seat of the carriage by the King, who took his seat by her side, on the left of her Majesty.

The Duke de Montpensier handed the Duchess of Kent into the second seat, and placed himself on the left of her Royal Highness. On the third row were his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Countess of Gainsborough, the Lady in Waiting upon the Queen; and on the hindermost seat were Admiral Mackau and General Baron Athalin.

Lord Charles Wellesley and Colonel Bouverie were in attendance on horseback.

The royal party proceeded to Sunbury Common, where relays of horses had been sent, and thence to Twickenham, Hampton, &c., on to Claremont to luncheon, which had been early this morning despatched from the castle.

Her Majesty and illustrious guests returned to the castle from Claremont through Chertsey, to which place relays of horses had also been sent this morning shortly before six o'clock. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent alighted at Frogmore House, on the return of the royal party passing by the mansion to the palace.

Upon the approach of the royal carriage the illustrious party were received with enthusiastic cheering, which continued throughout the whole line up to the gates leading to the castle. The King of the French (who looked remarkably well), and her Majesty returned those loyal and affectionate greetings in the most marked and urbane manner. The King appeared warmly to appreciate the gratifying cheers which saluted him on every side.

The grand banquet will take place this evening, and also to-morrow and Saturday, in St. George's Hall.

On Sunday the dinner will be served in the grand dining-room.

His Majesty and his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier, with their respective suites, will attend high mass, at the Roman Catholic Chapel, at Clewer, on Sunday next. The service will be performed by the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson.

In consequence of the lateness of the season, and the extremely unfavourable state of the ground, it is now extremely problematical if a review will take place in the Great Park during his Majesty's visit.

The grand banquet to be given by her Majesty, in honour of the auspicious occasion, which will take place at seven o'clock in the evening, in the Hall of St. George, will be of the greatest magnificence and regal splendour. The banqueting table, the elevated sideboards, and the side-tables, will be profusely decorated with the most gorgeous specimens of the gold plate, selected from the royal treasury, agreeably to the suggestions, and in accordance with the refined taste of his Royal Highness Prince Albert. Covers will be laid for upwards of one hundred royal and illustrious guests.

Windsor, Friday Evening.

ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY FROM THE CORPORATION OF WINDSOR.

This morning, at nine o'clock, the members of the Corporation, with the Rev. Isaac Gossett, the vicar, in full canonicals, assembled in the Council Chamber, at the Town Hall, for the purpose of proceeding in procession to the Castle, to present the following address, which had been agreed to at a numerous meeting of the Aldermen and Town Council on the preceding day:—

"To his Majesty, Louis Philippe, King of the French.

"The humble address of the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of New Windsor, in the county of Berks, in council assembled.

"May it please your Majesty,

"We, her Britannic Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the ancient borough of New Windsor, most respectfully beg leave to tender your Majesty the expression of our sincere and hearty congratulations on the safe arrival of your Majesty on the shores of England, on your visit to our gracious Monarch at the long favoured seat of the sovereigns of this country.

"The presence of your Majesty at the Castle of Windsor must at any time have formed a subject of lively congratulation, as tending more firmly to cement in the bonds of friendship the justly popular monarchs of two of the most powerful nations on the face of the globe. But we have now so recently witnessed the splendid and hospitable reception awarded to the Queen of England by your Majesty and all the members of your illustrious family, and the joyous enthusiasm which pervaded the entire French people on the occasion of her Majesty's visit at your palace on the shores of Normandy, that we are especially delighted your Majesty should now be inclined to experience amongst us the renewal of that cordial and affectionate welcome, the echoes of those fervent greetings, and the universal expression of loyal devetion and attachment with which her Majesty was invariably cheered during her sojourn at the Chateau, and in the beautiful environs of Eu.

"We are sensible, Sire, that to the wisdom and vigour of your Majesty's councils, and to your increasing endeavours to promote the truest interests of the powerful and generous nation which Providence has committed to your care, may be greatly attributed the reigning tranquility of Europe; and we venture to augur, that by encouraging a friendly and personal intercourse between your Majesty and the Sovereign of Great Britain, your Majesty adopts the surest means, not only of strengthening the happy and stable alliance between the two countries, but of encouraging the governments of surrounding kingdoms in the maintenance of their present amicable relations with each other.

"May your Majesty be long spared, in unison with our gracious Sovereign, to cultivate the arts of peace. May your Majesty's constant and zealous exertions to advance the general welfare of mankind be crowned by the dutiful and loyal attachment of all classes of the gallant and enlightened people whose destinies are placed under the wise and paternal government of your Majesty. And may the two mighty empires of Great Britain and France be so indissolubly connected by the relations of amity and concord, as to ensure and perpetuate to both, and the world at large, the blessings of uninterrupted peace and repose.

The civic procession left the hall at half-past nine, preceeded by the macebearer, who, with the whole of the members of the corporation, was in his full official robes. Upon their arrival at the Castle, they were taken to the Queen's drawing (or Zuccarelli) room, there to wait the pleasure of the King. After waiting for a few minutes, the mayor, vicar, and town councillors were ushered into the presence of his Majesty, in the King's drawing-room, where his Majesty (who was surrounded by the Duke de Montpensier, Admiral Mackau, General Rumigny, Count Dumas, General Baron Athalin, Count de Chabannes, Colonel Thiery, Baron Fain, and several others in the suite of the King) received them in the most gracious and affable manner. The address, after having been read by the town clerk in an extremely emphatic and feeling manner, was handed by him to the mayor, who presented it to his Majesty, by whom it was received very graciously. The King made an extremely suitable and appropriate extemporaneous reply to the address.

Thirty of the Yeomen of the Queen's Guard also arrived at Windsor this morning, their services having been commanded by the Queen this afternoon, at the Palace. They were accompanied by the Earl of Beverley, Captain; Sir Samuel Hancock, and Thomas Seymour Sadler, Esq., Exons; and Jonathan Ellerthorpe, Esq., Clerk of the Cheque and Secretary.

VISIT TO THE DUCHESS OF KENT.

Her Majesty, accompanied by the King of the French, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, left the Castle this day at noon, in an open pony carriage and four, and proceeded across the Home Park, to Frogmore House, to pay a morning visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Three other pony carriages and four, containing Prince Albert, the Duc de Montpensier, M. Guizot, Admiral Mackau, and several others of the illustrious guests, followed the Queen and the King of the French.

The royal and distinguished party, after alighting for a short time at the mansion, again entered the carriages, driving along the Frogmore road, and entering the Home Park at the iron gates opposite the Long Walk. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent returned to the Castle to luncheon, in the carriage with the Queen and his Majesty Louis Philippe.

Her Majesty and her august visitors lunched at half-past one o'clock, in consequence of the Investiture having been appointed to take place at half-past two.

INVESTITURE OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

This afternoon, at two o'clock, a guard of honour, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Moncreiff, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, marched into the Quadrangle, and took up its station beneath the window of the Guard Chamber, and directly opposite to the Grand Entrance to the State Apartments.

The following members of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms were stationed as a guard of honour at the door of the King of the French's apartments:—T. G. Wright, A. Perkins, H. L. Ewart, and E. C. Murray, Esquires. The remainder of the Honourable Corps were stationed in the Blue Chamber, forming a double line through which the Knights proceeded to the Throne-room, in which were stationed G. Platt and G. Denne, Esqrs., two of the Gentlemen at Arms.

The Queen, being seated on a chair of state, and the Knights Companions having taken their respective places at the table, the Chancellor of the Order, the Bishop of Oxford, signified, by her Majesty's command, the Sovereign's royal will and pleasure, that Louis Philippe, the King of the French, should be elected into the Most Noble Order.

The Knight Companions then proceeded to the election, and the suffrages having been collected by the Chancellor, were by the Lord Bishop presented to the Sovereign, who commanded his lordship to declare that his Majesty Louis Philippe, King of the French, had been elected a Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

The King of the French was then conducted from an adjoining apartment into the Chapter-room by their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge, preceded by Garter King of Arms, Sir Charles Young, bearing the ensigns of the Order upon a crimson velvet cushion, and by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Sir Augustus Clifford. Upon entering the Chapter-room, his Majesty was received by the Sovereign and the Knights Companions, standing, and placed in a chair of state on the right hand of the Sovereign. Her Majesty then announced to the King of the French that his Majesty had been duly elected a Knight of the Most Noble Order.

Garter, upon his knee, then presented the garter to her Majesty. The Sovereign, who was assisted by Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge, buckled it on the left knee of the King, the Chancellor pronouncing the usual admonition.

Garter next presented, in like manner, the Ribband and George, when her Majesty, assisted as before, placed these ensigns over the left shoulder of the King, the Chancellor pronouncing the admonition. The Sovereign then gave the accolade to the King of the French, when his Majesty received the congratulations of the Knights Companions present.

The Chapter being ended, Garter, by her Majesty's command, again called over the Knights Companions, who with the Officers of the Order, then retired from the presence of the Sovereign with the usual reverences.

Her Majesty, on retiring from the chapter-room, took the arm of the King of the French (paying his Majesty the highest compliment ever conferred upon a newly-created Knight of the Order), and proceeded with the King to the door of his apartment, and there left his Majesty, proceeding thence, attended by the lady, maids of honour, &c. in waiting, to her own room on the south side of the palace.

Before, and at the conclusion of the investiture, the band of the Scots Fusilier Guards, stationed in the Quadrangle, played several favourite airs from the compositions of Rossini, Beethoven, Auber, &c.

CARRIAGE AIRING THIS AFTERNOON.

Between 4 and 5 o'clock this afternoon, her Majesty, accompanied by the King of the French, left the Quadrangle in a pony carriage and four by George IV.'s gateway, crossing the Frogmore road (which was crowded at this point by an immense number of persons who had arrived in Windsor during the day, and by whom their Majesties were received with loud acclamations) into the Long Walk, through which they drove into the Great Park.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, the Duc de Montpensier, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, and several of her Majesty's visitors and royal suite were on horseback.

In the second carriage were their Royal Highnesses the Duchesses of Kent and Cambridge.

Several other carriages and four, filled with her Majesty's distinguished guests, followed.

The royal and illustrious party returned to the Castle through the Long Walk, after being absent for about an hour.

THE ROYAL BANQUET, MUSIC, ETC.

Covers were laid this evening, in St. George's Hall, for 130. The banquetting table was ornamented, if possible, in a still more gorgeous and magnificent manner, with gold plate, epergnes, candelabra, vases, wine coolers, &c., than upon the two former occasions of the banquet in St. George's Hall during his Majesty's visit.

The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards performed during the dinner in the Western Gallery.

At the conclusion of the banquet the Queen and her illustrious visitors retired to the Waterloo Gallery where tea and coffee were served.

Her Majesty's private band, led by Mr. Anderson, was stationed in the gallery and performed during the remainder of the evening. The Queen's private band of musicians was strengthened this evening by the following members, amongst others, of the Philharmonic Society:—Messrs. W. and T. Blagrove, Loder, Thomas, Griesbach, Howell, and Lucas.

VISIT OF HIS MAJESTY TO ETON COLLEGE.

The King, at the royal dinner-party at the Castle, yesterday evening, expressed a very warm desire to the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, the Head Master of Eton, who was one of her Majesty's guests, to pay that ancient seat of learning a visit before his departure from Windsor. The honour of a visit from the French Sovereign to Eton College, will, it is expected, be conferred upon the authorities in the course of to-morrow.

DEPARTURE OF HIS MAJESTY.

It is stated that the King will leave Windsor on Monday next for Portsmouth, and be accompanied by her Majesty and the Prince Consort.

The Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms dined this evening at the White Hart Hotel.

THE MAGAZINES FOR OCTOBER.

The New Monthly Magazine contains a paper entitled "Africa in France; or the Beard and the Pipe," a sort of feu d'Esprit at "La Jeune France" and the rage for smoking; although we suspect there to be more smoke than fire in the article itself. The next paper, "The Last of the Contrabbandieri," is a pleasant Italian romance; and "The Lover's Rock," by Mrs. Romer, is of the Spanish school. Mrs. Trollope continues "The Robertses on their Travels;" Laman Blanchard has a smart sketch "On Considering Oneself Horsewhipped;" and "Peter Priggins," a piece of quiet humour, entitled "Kitty Dangerous," perhaps, is the gem of the number.

Bentley's Miscellany is, altogether, a lively number. In the "Scattergood Papers" are some piquant glances at the "Shakspeare" mania, and "Fancy Fair." "The Rainbow of Reality," and The Monthly Muff" are not to be mistaken. "The Inn at Henley-in-Arden, and the Shakspearian enthusiast and matter-of-fact damper are admirable. Leech's illustration, too, of Mr. Fogg's Shakspearian dream is clever. "Miss Jiffkinn's Benefit," by Charles Whitehead, is pleasant enough; but "Smoking Robin," by Abraham Elder, is weak and pointless. Miss Costello, we perceive, has commenced "Sketches of Legendary Cities," with Chester, which we accept as a sort of make-weight to the "airy nothings" of the number. In weaving fact with fiction, Miss Costello is one of the most accomplished writers of her day.

Tait has a sterling number. The attempted parallel, or rather the contrast, of Burns and Byron, is, however, a sad failure. William Howitt's sketch from the Swedish, "The Carpenter and the Capuchin Monk," is better stuff. "A Teacher's Journal" relates, somewhat too barely, the sufferings of that much-to-be-pitied class. "The Life of Lord Eldon" furnishes the staple for a capital review paper, in "Tait's" usual style.

Blackwood contains but eight papers, three of which are review essays; the pegs being "The Life of the First Earl of Malmesbury," "Thierry's History of the Gauls," and "Finlay's Greece under the Romans." The lighter articles are scarcely worth characterising; the conclusion of "The Witchfinder" is, however, intensely interesting. The continuation of the papers, "On the Poems and Ballads of Schiller," will be gladly welcomed; but, despite of much excellent writing, the number is unattractive.

The United Service Magazine opens with a second notice of "France and Morocco," full of well-timed details. The next article, on "The Banners and National Colours of Poland," is attractively anecdotic of national customs, &c. "The Notices from Kafirland" are continued with considerable spirit; and "The Naval Chaplain's Note-book," and "Sketches from a Soldier's Life," are in the smart, sketchy line. The "Letters on the Affghanistan Campaign, in 1842," form a valuable circumstantial contribution towards one of "the little wars of a great people." Perhaps the most important paper in the number is "A Memorial of the Mandarin Shu, in relation to the War with England, and the State of China," derived from the indefatigable Mr. Gutzlaff, who states that it contains a fair exposition of the views of a small but liberally-minded party in China; and that Old Shu is one of the few who can read the "far-off future."

Hood's Magazine right heartily merits the affix of "Comic Miscellany." We are glad to see the continuation of the Editor's domestic novel, "Our Family." The humorous spirit is admirably kept up throughout the "Sketches and Stories," be their localities Paris, Calais, Vittoria, or Rio. Here is a specimen of the Editor's novel:—"Ah, a child of nature," said Uncle Rumbold; "well, I like her all the better; and if she has a sister disengaged in the same capacity, I'll hire her on the spot. The true old breed of English servants is almost worn out, nearly extinct in England, like the bustard and the cock-of-the-wood—partly their fault, and partly our own—by always setting them either too high or too low—over our heads or under our heels—either pampered like pet monkeys, or snubbed like born slaves—never treated according to the light of nature. For instance, there's the tender passion. It's notorious that nine-tenths of the poor girls in Bedlam went crazy from suppressed sweethearts; and yet, forsooth, no followers are to be allowed; so that, unless Molly falls in love with my lord, and John nourishes a flame for my lady, as he often does, by the way, they might as well have no human hearts in their bosoms. Whereas, servants have passions and feelings as well as ourselves," &c.

Ainsworth's Magazine opens with the Editor's promised "Revelations of London," a silly title, to say the best of it. The chapters are, "The Elixir of Life," and "The Ruined House in the Vauxhall-road." In the first is introduced Dr. Lambe, the celebrated alchemist and necromancer on old London-bridge. There is an abundance of spirited description in both chapters, and provided the editor does not get too deep in the necromantic business (in managing which he is not very successful), and deals judiciously with the horrible, all may go on well for the reader's amusement. The prologue, by the way, is of the date 1599, and the tale itself 1830. The machinery of the transition we have not room to explain. The illustrations, by Phiz, are much in advance of his usual productions: the alchemist's chamber sparkles with artistic brilliancy. Of the remaining papers, a chapter of Theatrical Reminiscences, by Drinkwater Meadows, is the most striking. It really smells of the lamps and orange-peel, and savours of the piquancy of the green-room.

Fraser has a lively number throughout. The opening paper, "An Election to the Long Parliament," though documentary, and thickly annotated, is a most entertaining picture of old English manners. "The State Murder," is a stirring tale, adapted and abridged from George Sand's charming novel, "Le Sécrétaire Intime," which is not defaced by any of those faults usually so offensive to English tastes. "Some Account of a Poet's Friend" is a charming letter from Oxford, relating the friendship of the poet Gray with a clergyman, Mr. Nichols, of Blundeston. "Bull and Nongtongpaw" maintains, in a lively vein, that "all that is not English must be French." "The Classics of the Table" discusses sweet cider, perry, liqueurs, wines, and anti-fashionable beer. A paper by Morgan Rattler, "On Matters Musical, and of the Italian Opera," is a very piquant affair, advocating the advance of the English musical taste: the summary of the late opera season is laudatory, yet discriminating. Titmarsh has contributed some very pleasant glimpses of Ghent and Bruges. In a paper, "Courses of English Reading," is shown a deep acquaintance with our literature, though with a leaning to "old books," affirming that "the old book is easier than the new." The "Apology for Art Unions" is a good piece of plain-speaking.

The Polytechnic Review and Magazine has for its main subjects the Warner Invention, and a speculative paper on the production of Earthquakes by the Electric Fluid. The summing up of Captain Warner's merits is very oracular—"We are convinced that he has a heated imagination, and that he is led to believe that he possesses powers which have not been granted to man."

The New Edinburgh Review (No. 1) is a sort of hybrid between the review and magazine, of no startling merit, if we except a paper entitled "The Edinburgh Reviewers," whence we quote the following, explanatory of the ORIGIN OF THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

The mode of the Reviewers raising their first perch, seems to have been nearly as follows. Mr. Francis Jeffrey, the son of a respectable attorney, late a student at Oxford, and then an advocate at the Scottish bar, was living high and dry in Buccleugh-place. Here he was invaded by the Rev. Sydney Smith, a curate on Salisbury Plain, and led captain of a young squire of his parish, with whom he had made a descent upon Edinburgh through failure of reaching a German university. At Jeffrey's lodgings he met Brougham and Murray (late lord advocate). Society was in dreadful commotion, through the effervescence of the French Revolution, and on political subjects all of them held opinions too liberal for the dynasty of Dundas, then sole monarch of Scotland. Mr. Smith proposed they should start a Review, with the motto—

"We cultivate literature upon a little oatmeal."

"But this," says she, "was too near the truth to be admitted, and we took our present grave one from Publius Syrus, of whom none of us had, I am sure, read a line, and so began what has since turned out a very important and able Journal."

About this period a cluster of young men of first-rate talent at Edinburgh, met at the Speculative Society, to discuss metaphysical questions. Who some of them were will be seen from the following entry in Welsh's "Life of Brown:"—"January 7, 1797. Present, Erskine, president; Brougham, Birkbeck, Reddie, Leyden; afterwards Jeffrey, Horner, and Smith joined." In this year Lord Brougham distinguished himself by an able mathematical paper inserted in the "Philosophical Transactions."

All that the age is now chiefly proud of, that which has become the common faith—religious freedom and equality—commercial freedom—the abolition of the Slave Trade—the responsibility of rulers—parliamentary, church, legal, fiscal, and university reform—international peace—popular instruction,—and the general elevation of the people in diet, taste, and intelligence—were preluded, and perseveringly advocated through adverse and favourable times, in sunshine and cloud, by the Edinburgh reviewers. They have not been impeccable; they have sometimes neglected merit, or treated it unjustly; occasionally they have given to party what was meant for mankind, but we look to general bearing and its results. Among their misdeeds we would not severely visit them for their demeanour towards the Lake Poets; that they were too severe they have conceded, but that they were unjust is not so manifest. What men of metal, of manly sense and feeling, sitting in critical judgment with a duty to discharge, could pass over unscourged mere babyisms fit only for a nursery; a sickly, maudlin sentimentality or German mysticism. They might admire the poetical soul of Southey or Wordsworth, as one may the ability of Thomas Carlyle, but mere affectation obtruded as nature, or even genius, called for the rod.

The Illuminated Magazine is a Number of varied attractions. The opening paper describes, though somewhat too minutely, the regimen, &c., of the Model Prison at Pentonville: still, the article is one of considerable importance and interest. It is succeeded by Miss Toulmin's "Village Sketch,"—a piquant sketch of hiring a servant. "The Man of High Notions" is a pleasant exposé of that social excrescence, by Laman Blanchard. "The Philosophy of Shops," by Angus B. Reach, is a concentration of the tricks of "a nation of shopkeepers." Mr. Wade's sketch of Mad Austin is full of touching melancholy. Mark Lemon's sketch of the Steam-boat Call-boy is smartly observant. The large illustration is a superb engraving on wood, by Linton, of Ruben's "Judgment of Paris," lately added to the collection in the National Gallery. The other engravings are good, especially those accompanying the paper entitled "Addison and Holland House."

The Love Match. By Henry Cockton. No. 1. This new tale, of the Shilling school, promises abundant amusement in the eccentricities which develope themselves in the "tender passion." The story opens with a general and his family located in a fine old hall—the amour of his daughter with a groom—the declaration—the engagement, &c.

THE THEATRES.

No important novelty has been produced during the past week at Drury-lane. Miss Delcy appeared on Tuesday as Zerlina in "Fra Diavolo," but created no very great sensation amongst the audience; and another resuscitated ballet of action, "The Deserter of Naples," came off at half-price. Mr. Bunn must bestir himself: we always get uncomfortable about his management when we see "Gustavus," "Der Freyschutz," and "Fra Diavolo," appearing in the bills; and he must be aware that the "national establishment" cannot rest upon the shoulders—or rather, the legs—of Mademoiselle Dumilâtre alone.

The Adelphi has also revived the worn-out "Foreign Affairs," (a translation of "Les Premieres Armes de Richelieu;") and an old farce or two. This is not as it should be, in a house so famous for its novelties. Madame Celeste is a most talented lady, and a clever actress; but still, "toujours perdrix" must tire.

The Lyceum remains as per last; all hands being employed in bringing out the translation of "Les Sept Chateaux du Diable," for which the license arrived after we had gone to press last week.

The Strand is nightly filled with merry folks, laughing until their sides are sore, at Mr. Marble's irresistible American comicalities. Meanwhile, Don Cæsar de Bazan will soon be theatrically ubiquitous. We think, in all conscience, that the Dramatic Authors' Society ought to present an address to King Louis Philippe, now he is amongst us, especially after the peaceable spirit of his reply to the mayor of Portsmouth. Had a war with England been determined upon, and all communication stopped, what would have become of that intelligent and hard-working body of literary gentlemen?

The bill of the Haymarket has also remained unchanged during this week: "The Confederacy," "The Thimble Rig," and "The Milliner's Holiday," having drawn good houses Mr. Webster, we hear, will bring forward four new pieces on Monday evening at his two establishments. Two of these are translations of "Don Cæsar de Bazan: himself playing the hero at the Adelphi, and Mr. Charles Mathews at the Haymarket. At the former theatre, a burlesque will also be produced, if sufficiently forward, called "Telemachus," in which Mr. Wright will play the fair heroine. A burlesque on the same subject was, if we mistake not, performed at the Olympic during the Vestris management.

The legitimate drama is still thriving, as it deserves to do, at Sadler's Wells: "The Bridal" having been excellently performed, and to famous houses, the greater part of the week, with some musical afterpiece.

Poor Covent-garden remains mournfully desolate, and the speculations as to its ultimate fate are as vague as ever. There was a talk, a month or two back, of some Promenade Concerts on a grand scale about to be established therein, but nothing more appears to have transpired. The only performances now pertaining to it take place outside; and these are a number of "ballets of action" by the boys of the neighbourhood, who climb about its pallisades in vast numbers, or skirmish upon the barricades of upturned pavement and excavated mould in Bow-street.

PRINCESS'.

This elegant house opened for the season on last Saturday night, with Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor." Although out-generalled by Mr. Bunn with regard to Madame Thillon, Mr. Maddox may congratulate himself on having been so lucky as to secure the services of Mdlle. Nau, who, if she possess not all the fascination of our fair countrywoman, is, nevertheless, a very charming vocalist. Her voice is somewhat thin, particularly in the upper register; but her style is very finished, though somewhat cold. It was quite evident that she felt the awkwardness of her position: to succeed a most popular singer, and adequately atone for her loss, was an arduous undertaking; but Mdlle. Nau has triumphed over all her difficulties, and was completely successful. The finale to the first act was sung with great spirit and power, and at the fall of the curtain the applause was immense. It was quite evident, though, that her triumph was not anticipated to be so great, as only one prepared compliment—one solitary bouquet—was thrown at her feet. Allen is improved much in his singing, and is really now becoming an actor.

The rest of the cast is not worth mentioning. A ballet divertissement, entitled "The Slave Market," introduced some new dancers of extraordinary agility, if not grace. The Roussets' tours de force are wonderful: Madlle. Caroline Rousset's pirouette can be compared to nothing but the spinning of a top. The whole concluded with a most laughable farce, called "Taking the Pledge," a title which, no doubt, was intended to mislead people's anticipations: it is, we understand, from the pen of Mr. Oxberry, and was received with roars of laughter. The house was well attended; and, altogether, the lessee seems to have commenced the season most auspiciously.

On Tuesday evening, the first of the translations of the French piece, "Don Cæsar de Bazan," which has created such a furore in Paris, was produced here, and with most undeniable success. We say the "first," because we are informed that an adaptation of the same piece is now at nearly every theatre in London, in a state of active preparation, the Adelphi and the Haymarket following next. We question, however, whether so perfect a representative of the hero will be found anywhere as Mr. James Wallack, who re-appeared on the London boards on Tuesday in this drama. The part is of that species familiar to the French dramatists as a "Lemaitre part," or one peculiarly adapted to that great actor—the creator of "Robert Macaire;" and we have no one now upon the stage who can fill that line so well as Mr. Wallack. "Don Cæsar" then is of this class; or rather a copy from Victor Hugo's "Ruy Blas." The plot is somewhat too intricate and lengthy to be detailed in our columns, but we will give a sketch of it. Don Cæsar de Bazan is a reckless gentlemanly adventurer, of great descent and small means, at present at Madrid. In rescuing a page from the threatened vengeance of an armourer, his master, the Don, involves himself in a duel with the Captain of the Guard, and shoots his adversary. For this he is condemned to death, such being the punishment for duelling in the Holy Week. Meanwhile, the King of Spain, Charles II., has been captivated by a street ballad-singer, Maritana; and in order that she may be introduced at court, to further his designs, gets his favourite minister, Don José, to prevail on Don Cæsar to marry her, that she may become a countess, for which office his sentence will be changed from hanging to being shot. Don Cæsar consents. The marriage takes place, and the bride is immediately removed, whilst the hero is led forth to execution. A discharge of musketry is heard without, announcing the execution, and the first act ends. In the second act, during a brilliant court fête, a pilgrim claims admittance to the presence of Don José; he throws off his robe, and appears as Don Cæsar! The grateful armourer's page had withdrawn the bullets from the muskets, and his death was merely a feint. This somewhat disconcerts Don José's plans; for he himself is in love with the Queen; and although he had Don Cæsar's pardon in his pocket at the time of the execution, never gave it, wishing to get him out of the way, that the King's love for Maritana might meet with no obstacle, and a cause might then be given for rousing the Queen's jealousy. Don Cæsar has never seen his bride; and on requesting an interview, an aged female is substituted for her, which so annoys our hero, that he is on the point of signing his declaration to abandon, her and leave Madrid for ever, when the real Countess de Bazan is announced. This disarranges all Don Jose's plans; and a fine dramatic situation terminates the second act. In the third, the King has gained admittance to the apartments of the Countess; and whilst pouring forth his protestations, Don Cæsar enters the room by the window "because," as he coolly observes, "the door was shut." His Majesty, not choosing to be recognised, declares that he himself is Don Cæsar de Bazan; upon which the Don replies, "If so, I am King Charles." An interesting equivoque then ensues; and at last, Don Cæsar informs the King of Don Jose's treachery with respect to the Queen; furthermore adding, after a little malicious delight at his Majesty's jealous agony, that he has slain him. Everything is thus cleared up. Maritana and Don Cæsar become, in reality, espoused; and the King rewards him with the Governorship of Grenada, in preference to Seville, from the proximity of the latter place to the Court, which would interfere with his peace of mind respecting the royal attentions to his wife.

It is impossible to speak in too high terms of the acting of Mr. Wallack as Don Cæsar. His reckless nonchalance in the midst of the most imminent danger, and proud bearing, kept up amidst his impoverished means, were inimitably portrayed, and drew down the loudest applause from a crowded house. Mrs. Stirling's Maritana was a graceful and natural piece of acting; and Miss Marshall, as the Page, who was far more concerned in the action of the piece than we have related, proved herself an actress of no small pretensions—delivering her speeches with much sense and appropriate emphasis.

The piece has been admirably put upon the stage in every particular, both as regards scenery, dresses, and general "getting up;" although there is still some room for improvement in the last act. It was perfectly successful, and Mr. Wallack announced it for repetition amidst continuous cheering. The adaptation is the joint production of Messrs. Lemon and A'Beckett.

During the recess, the house has been thoroughly cleansed and redecorated, and now appears in all its pristine beauty. The arches, also, over the gallery and boxes, have been thrown open, which materially improves the ventilation.

CITY OF LONDON.

The experiment of Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps, carried out with such undeniable success at Sadler's Wells, of endeavouring to infuse a healthier tone into the tastes of the audiences assembling at the minor theatres, and supplanting the wretched trash hitherto performed there, by sterling plays, has apparently led to the occupation of this house, by Mrs. Walter Lacy, who opened it on Monday evening, for the first time, under her direction. If such was the laudable object in view, it is to be regretted that some comedy was not chosen for the inauguration, better adapted to the powers of the company than "The School for Scandal," a play requiring the highest dramatic talent for its cast that it is possible to get together. In all candour, we regret that we cannot speak well of this performance; although it was certainly well received by the audience, who showed a judgment and discrimination in their applause which could scarcely have been looked for amongst those so long habituated to the worst species of dramatic representation. The fair lessee played Lady Teazle excellently well; and Mr. James Browne's Charles Surface was equally good; to the other performers we cannot assign more than moderate praise. After the comedy, Mdlle. Louise, whom our readers may remember dancing, during the past season, at the Opera; and Mdlle. Adèle (advertised as from the San Carlo, at Naples); appeared in a Spanish "Pas de de Caractere"—a species of double Cachuca—and with such good effect, that they elicited an enthusiastic encore; and the entertainments concluded with Mr. Gilbert A'Beckett's version of the now popular "Aladdin," which lost none of its attraction by being transported to the "far East," as the applause bestowed by "Young Shoreditch" on its dialogue and other drolleries testified. We were glad to see Miss Ellen Daly—an excellent burlesque actress, by the way—so well received, as the Princess Badroulbadour; on the part of some of the other performers, a little more attention to metre—the absence of which is death to an extravaganza—would have been an advantage. Mr. Stilt played the Magician's Slave, but, being a speaking character, had not the same scope for pantomimic display as his brother Kasrac at the Lyceum; Mr. James Brown was the Abanazar; and Mr. Wild the Aladdin. We must not omit to mention a very dashing and effective Polka, introduced in the second act, by an admirably trained corps de ballet. It is decidedly the most picturesque in costume that has yet been produced. Previous to the National Anthem being sung by the company, an excellent address, written by Mr. Albert Smith, was delivered by Mrs. Walter Lacy, and loudly cheered by the audience.

NEW MUSIC.

The Hand-Book to the Pianoforte; comprising an easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in general. By J. Augustine Wade. Whittaker and Co.

This work sets out with the most praiseworthy of all intentions, namely: utility. To accomplish this desirable object, the most rigid perspicuity has been adopted by the author, and in the first twenty pages, we have no hesitation in saying that there is more knowledge of the art of music communicated than by all the ponderous tomes of Albretseberger, Choron, Marpurg, &c. As a manual to the pianoforte it is a short and simple guide—including most essential matters hitherto neglected: such as touch, feeling, brilliancy, &c. The diligent study of the scales is judiciously requested, for without a thorough digital fluency with them no one can hope to be a fine performer. This part of the work may seem a little too severe to some, particularly to young students, but they may rest assured it is the basis of all future success, and we therefore rejoice to see that Mr. Wade has devoted his attention more to a solid foundation than to a flighty superstructure, He has not given many extracts from other composers' works, knowing, perhaps, that a grammar is a tiresome book, and that "the shorter and sweeter, the better;" but the charming Polonaise of Mozart, which we do not recollect to have seen before, and which contains all styles of musical expression, is in itself a study for ever. In the second part harmony and its elements are reduced to the smallest possible terms, and rendered intelligible to the dullest capacity. Even the quickest intelligence prefers a short and lucid exposition of any thing or circumstance, to a dull, prolix, round-about communication; we therefore recommend all to turn from the mysteries of Logier and other German writers on music, to the open simplicities of the present little volume, and to forget the ungraceful puerilities of Jousse, &c., in their works on the pianoforte, by justly and patiently considering the advices of the present livraison.

Blest Island of Beauty, Britannia the Free. National Song. Written by J. W. Lake, Esq.; Composed by E. J. Westrop. E. Ransford.

Three verses of unequivocal, but, at the same time, common-place effect. The melody and treatment of the first bar reminds us strongly of one of Benedict's songs.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

In the way of public disporting al fresco, there is nothing for it during the month of October save a little currant-jelly-work with "the long dogs," and the wind-up of the racing season in the south. Coursing has commenced on a small scale, and racing is still current after a befitting fashion. During the present week turf operations in the metropolis have been, however, merely theoretical—that is to say, we have been laying wagers, which the coming se'nnight is to determine. May the Fates be propitious! On Monday the Newmarket Second October Meeting commences, under auspices of unusual promise. The first day has a list of twelve races, and the second will bring to an issue two of the most important events of the autumn—the Cesarewitch Handicap and the Clearwell—the best of the two-year-old stakes. The former of these will probably turn out one of the most profitable speculations of the season to the book-makers? Nearly, if not absolutely, thirty horses have been publicly backed for it, at prices that can scarce fail amply to repay the bettors round. At the head of the odds since first the race came into the market has been the Duke of Portland's filly by Beiram, out of Souvenir. She is a four-year-old, and will carry 6st. 2lbs., no doubt a flattering weight. But your bad ones rarely win under any circumstances; and we should be very sorry to stand on her against such a field as will come to the post on Tuesday. Latterly, they have made Jamal, another bad four-year-old, with 6st. 7lbs., up the second favourite—a position formerly occupied by the Brewer, who has since gone to 50 to 1. Glossy, about whom a great deal of business was done at 12 to 1, is a four-year-old, a winner, and in at 5st. 11lbs. Were we to be asked our opinion, we should say that here is a nomination that ought to find friends. Sir C. Monk has found out the way of winning a great handicap, and link in with the backing. Lightning, a three-year-old, carrying 6st., with some running to boast of, has been freely done at the same odds. Of the other market horses, we should say that Foigh-a-Ballagh penalty and all, is a formidable nag; and Vibration, if Ma Mie was in her form last week at Newmarket, a still more dangerous customer. At weight for age, over the Ditch-inn course, she ran the best mare in the south to a head; and with 8st. up (13lbs less) she must be very forward at the finish, if that performance be a criterion of her quality. Give-him-a-Name we have no opinion of; neither had the handicapper, who put 6st. 12lbs., on a six-year old. Scalteen is well in—is a fine horse, and ought to race fast with 7st. 10lbs. on his back; but is not quite good enough for Newmarket. The Emperor, according to public running, cannot lose with 7st. 13lbs. to carry, although it is a dollop more than he had on at Ascot. His performance there for the cup this year was a crack one, beating Coranna, and the second for the Derby—Ionian. We'll back the Emperor against any other of the 20 to 1 division.

The Clearwell numbers among its nominations a host of Derby and Oaks nags, and, unless we are much out in our judgment, it will give us a good winter favourite for one, if not both, of the Epsom events. At present Alarm is all the rage for the Derby, and he has no previous engagement. But the Clearwell may give us a line for his pretension. The Newmarket folks cry up Colonel Peel's Cobweb colt to the skies. At Goodwood he was obviously unfit: how they came to send him there is the wonder. Should he win, up he goes to 7 or 8 to 1 for the rest of the interval between autumn and spring. It is not convenient, however, to extend this preliminary speculation. Let all who love racing upon any account pass a part, if not the whole of the coming week, on the borders of Cambridgeshire. If they be fond of sport, they shall have a feast of it: if their taste incline to business, they will lack neither wares nor customers.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—The near approach of the day of running has brought few new favourites into play for the Cesarewitch, and occasioned some change in the past rank. Thus, without in the slightest degree affecting the position of the Souvenir filly, Jamal has advanced to 8 to 1; and the places so recently occupied by Glossy and The Brewer (placed on the retired list) were filled up by Lightning and Foigh-a-Ballagh, who were in great force. The Emperor also came into play, but was not in much favour at the close. The other horses comprised in our list were not in much estimation.

CESAREWITCH.

7 to 1 agst Souvenir
8 to 1 — Jamal
17 to 1 — Lightning
17 to 1 — Foigh-a-Ballagh
17 to 1 — Give-him-a-name
17 to 1 — Vibration
20 to 1 agst Glossy (t)
20 to 1 — Una
20 to 1 — Pickpocket
20 to 1 — The Emperor
25 to 1 — Marquise (t)
25 to 1 — The Bride (t)
25 to — Campanero
24 to 1 — Haitoe
25 to 1 — Rowena
30 to 1 — Albion (t)
30 to 1 — Plantagenet
30 to 1 — Scalteen.

DERBY.

5 to 1 agst J. Day's lot
16 to 1 — Kedger
25 to 1 — Newsmonger
25 to 1 agst Minikin c
25 to 1 — Old England
33 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger
66 to 1 — Young Eclipse

Thursday.—The Cesarewitch betting this afternoon was distinguished by two or three movements of some consequence. In the first place, Jamal, who it is said, has not been out so often as a full preparation requires, went back to 12 to 1; in the next, Glossy, who on Monday was an outsider, came again, and after a close fight with Foigh-a-Ballagh, obtained the second place. The Souvenir filly, meanwhile, improving slightly on the last quotation; and Lightning rising a couple of points, with a strong party. Besides this lot, a good deal of money was laid out on Vibration, Una, and Give-him-a-Name; and a few "fivers" on the Emperor, Scalteen, and some other third-rate favourites. Nothing of consequence was done on the Derby.

CESAREWITCH.

10 to 1 agst Lord G. Bentinck's lot
9 to 2 — Dawson's lot
6 to 1 — Souvenir filly
11 to 1 — Glossy (t)
12 to 1 agst Jamal
12 to 1 — Foigh-a-Ballagh (taken)
12 to 1 — Lightning
16 to 1 — Una (t)
16 to 1 — Give-Him-a-Name
16 to 1 — Vibration (t)
25 to 1 agst The Emperor (t)
25 to 1 — Marquise
25 to 1 — Scalteen
30 to 1 — Mania (t)
30 to 1 — Johnny (t)

DERBY.

10 to 1 agst Alarm (t)
30 to 1 agst FitzAllen (t)

Alaric died on Sunday last.

Stamford Races, Wednesday.—3-yr-old Sweepstakes of 20 sovs, was won by Lord Exeter's Pergularia. The Burghley Stakes of 25 sovs was won by Mr, Wesley's Counsellor, beating 4 others. £50 given by the Marquis of Exeter was won by Sir G. Heathcote's c by Glaucus. The Doncaster Cup, added to a sweeps of 5 sovs each, for half-bred horses, was won in two heats by Mr. Standwell's Milicent, beating three others.

Knutsford Races, Wednesday.—Sweeps of 5 sovs each, and 20 added, was won by Mr. Standish's Susan. The Knutsford Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each, was won by Mr. Collett's Coranna. The Cavalry Cup of 30 gs, with 20 added, was won in two heats by Mr. Brooke's gr h, beating three others.

Chesterfield Races.—These races have been postponed till the 16th and 17th inst.

FAREWELL DINNER TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH, AT CALCUTTA.

In the resumé of the news received by the Overland India Mail in our journal of last week, we briefly chronicled this event. We are now enabled to present to our readers three authentic illustrations of the festive spectacle, from large lithographs drawn for the Calcutta Englishman.

This "more than usually interesting entertainment" (to quote the Calcutta Englishman) given by the military of the Presidency to Lord Ellenborough, took place on Monday, the 29th of July, in the Town Hall of the "city of palaces." The exterior of this handsome edifice was decorated for the occasion, as shown in our first engraving. Above the crowning balustrade of the two wings was inscribed, "ELLENBOROUGH," "FAREWELL!" and that of the centre was surmounted by a device inscribed with "Maharajpore, 29th Dec., 1843, Punniar." In front of the entire building was constructed with evergreen a sort of castellated design, from the battlements and turrets of which waved several gay flags; and the structure was elsewhere decorated with shields, spears, &c. The entrance to the portico was through a low pointed arch. The troops were drawn up at the portico to receive Lord Ellenborough, who arrived shortly before eight o'clock; and upon his Lordship reaching the entrance, the whole body of officers descended to meet and welcome him—the soldiers cheered him, and the welcome was re-echoed by the crowds of native spectators who had assembled round the building.

Between two and three hundred of the officers stationed in and near Calcutta sat down with his Lordship to dinner in the hall. This vast apartment, as our illustration shows, was most superbly decorated. The effect of the rich draperies the canopy over the cross tables, surmounted with the British colours, and the shields inscribed with the names of our Indian victories, were truly magnificent.

The following is a copy of the Bill of fare:—

Potages.

Mock Turtle .. .. Printannier.

2 Poissons.

Becktie sauce hollandaise .. .. Saumon Bouilli

34 Grosses Pieces.

4 Selle de Mouton.
10 Dinde Roti sauce aux truffes.
4 Langues de Bœuf a l'écarlate.
4 Bœuf a la mode.
4 Pâté Chaud de Venaison.
4 Longes de Bœuf Roti.
10 Jambon Glacé.
4 Chapon Roti.
4 Gigot de Mouton Bouilli à l' Anglaise, &
2 Pâtés en Croute.
4 Haunches of Venison.

54 Entrees.

4 Supréme de Volaille sauce aux truffes.
4 Vol au vent garni de ris de Veaux à la Toulouse.
2 Canard Braisé sauce aux olives.
4 Fricandeaux Piequé sauce aux Champignons.
4 Filets de Pigeons à la Maréchale.
4 Epigramme d'Agneau à l'oseille.
2 Croquettes fines de Volaille.
2 Filets de Bœuf piqué sauce Poivrade.
4 Poulets Santé à la Française.
4 Cotelette de Mouton Grillée demie Glacé
2 Poularde Braisée au petit deuil.
18 Entrées Petit Pâtés aux huitres.

110 Legumes.

25 Asperges.
25 Petits Pois.
25 Carrottes au jus.
25 Pommes de Terre.

2me Service.

6 Rotis différent.
8 Moules de Gelée.
4 Aspics de Volaille.
6 Tartes aux Fruits.
6 Puddings.
26 Salade Italienne.
34 Moules Blanc Manger.
2 Pâtés froid en Croute.
25 Petits flans.
26 Entremets de Patisseries.

26 Petites Patisseries.

The following is the order in which the Toasts were given:—

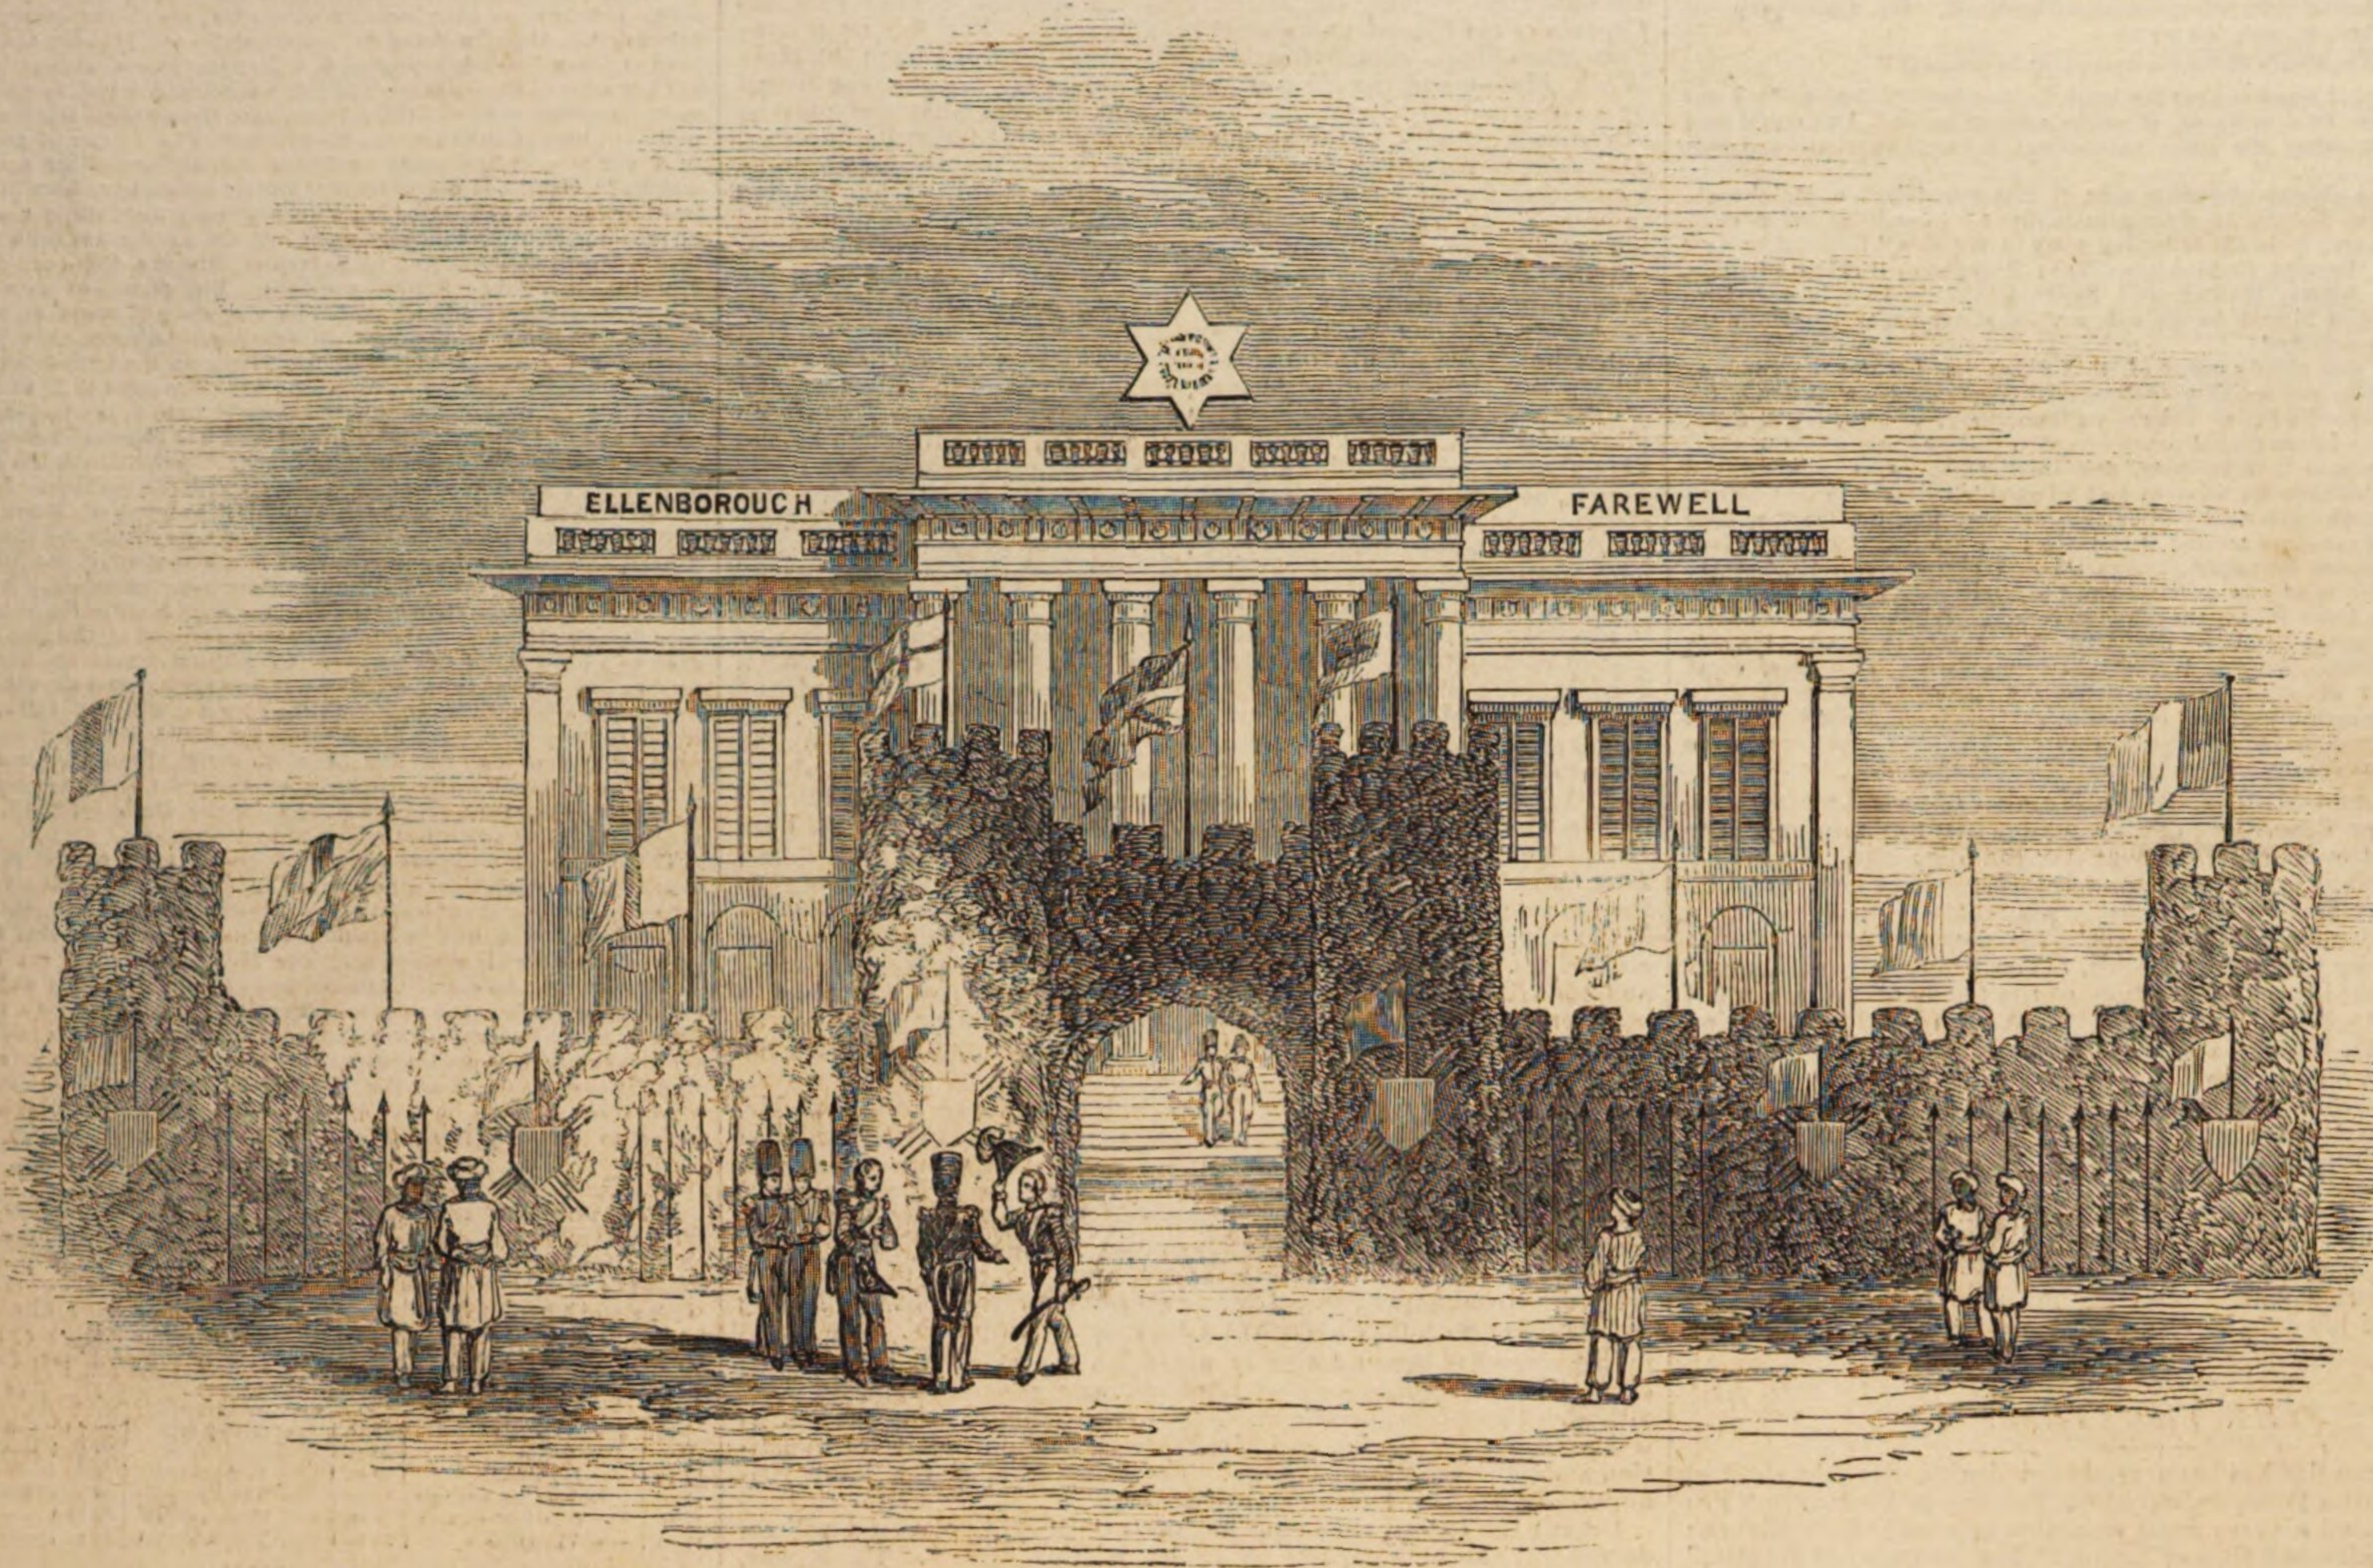
1. "Queen Victoria," by General Cooper.

Air—"God save the Queen." The National Anthem was then sung with great taste by Madame Cailly.

2. "Our Guest, Lord Ellenborough," by General Cooper.

Air—"Lord Ellenborough's March," performed by the bands of the 10th, the Artillery Band, and that of the Governor-General, together.

FAREWELL DINNER TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH, AT CALCUTTA.



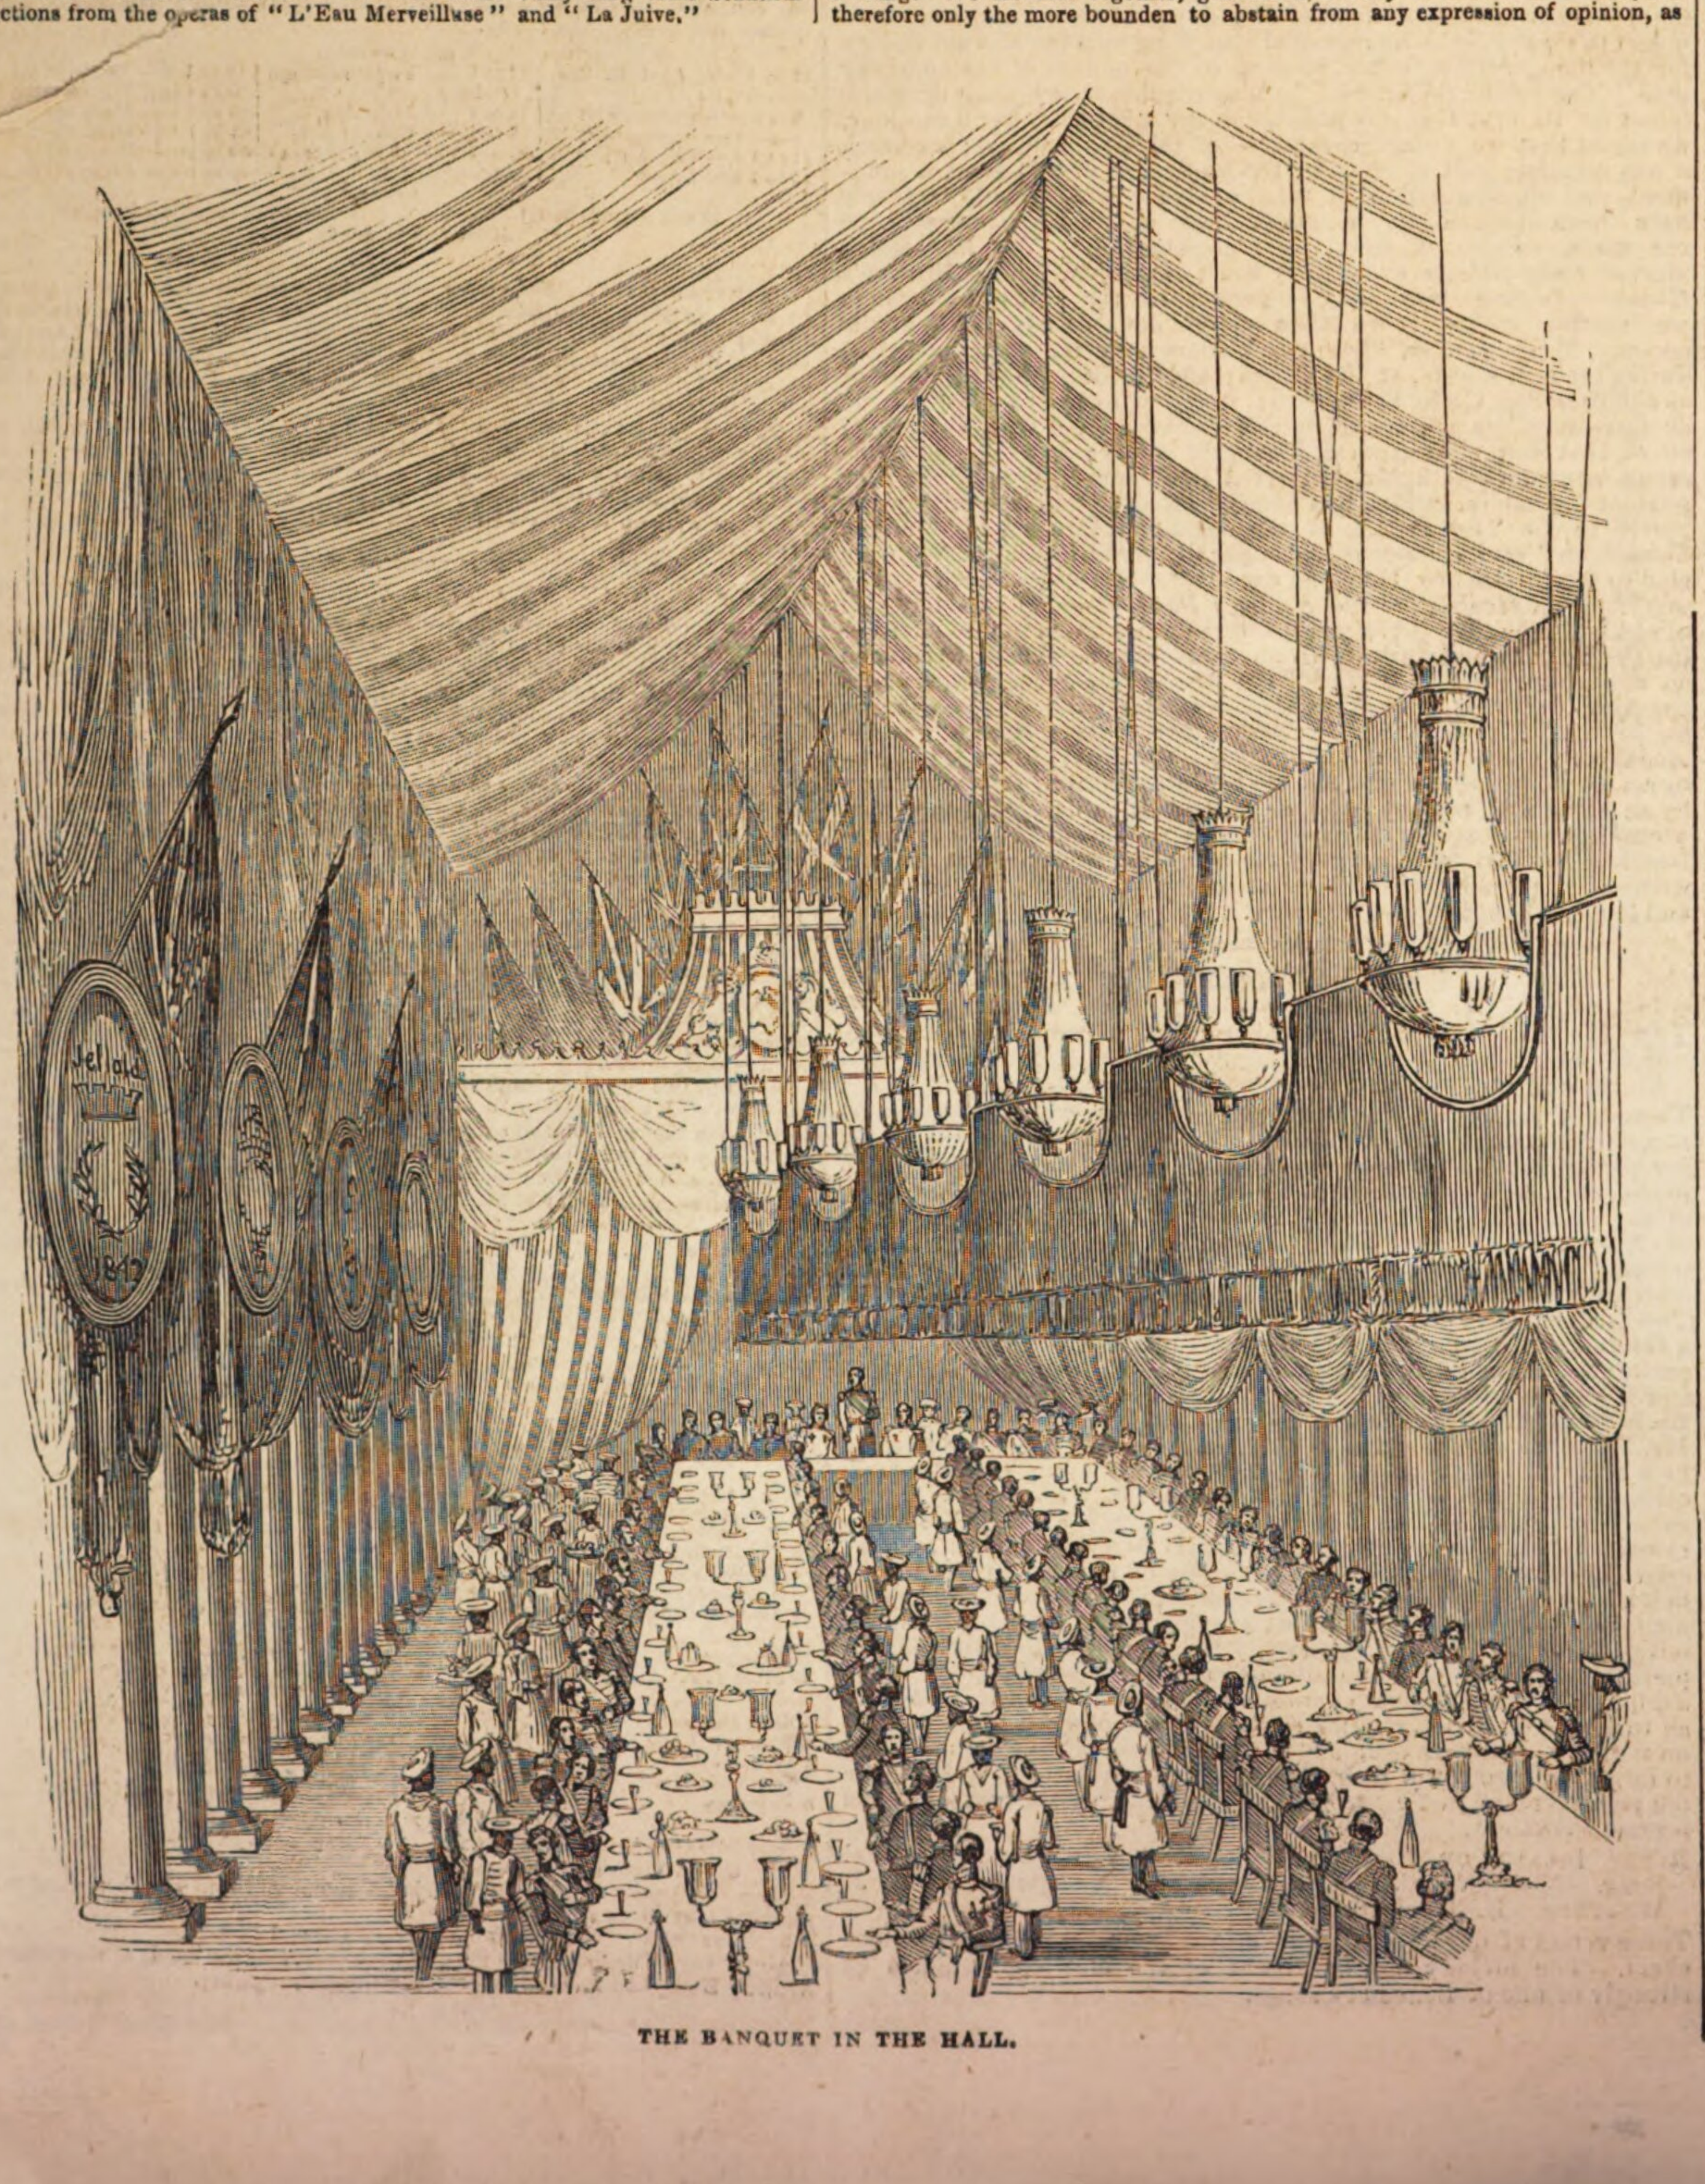
THE TOWN HALL, CALCUTTA.

Aria—From "Les Diamons de la Couronne," by Madame Cailly.
3. "Sir Henry Hardinge," by Colonel Burlton.
Air—"He was famed for deeds of arms."
4. "The Duke of Wellington," by Captain Champneys.
Air—"The British Grenadiers."
5. "Sir Hugh Gough," by Brigadier Frith.

In the interval between the latter toasts Madame Cailly sang some beautiful selections from the operas of "L'Eau Merveillase" and "La Juive."

The speeches were marked with characteristic brevity and pertinence to the subject. The following is a brief account of them, in the order in which they were given, beginning with that of General Cooper, who proposed the health of Lord Ellenborough.

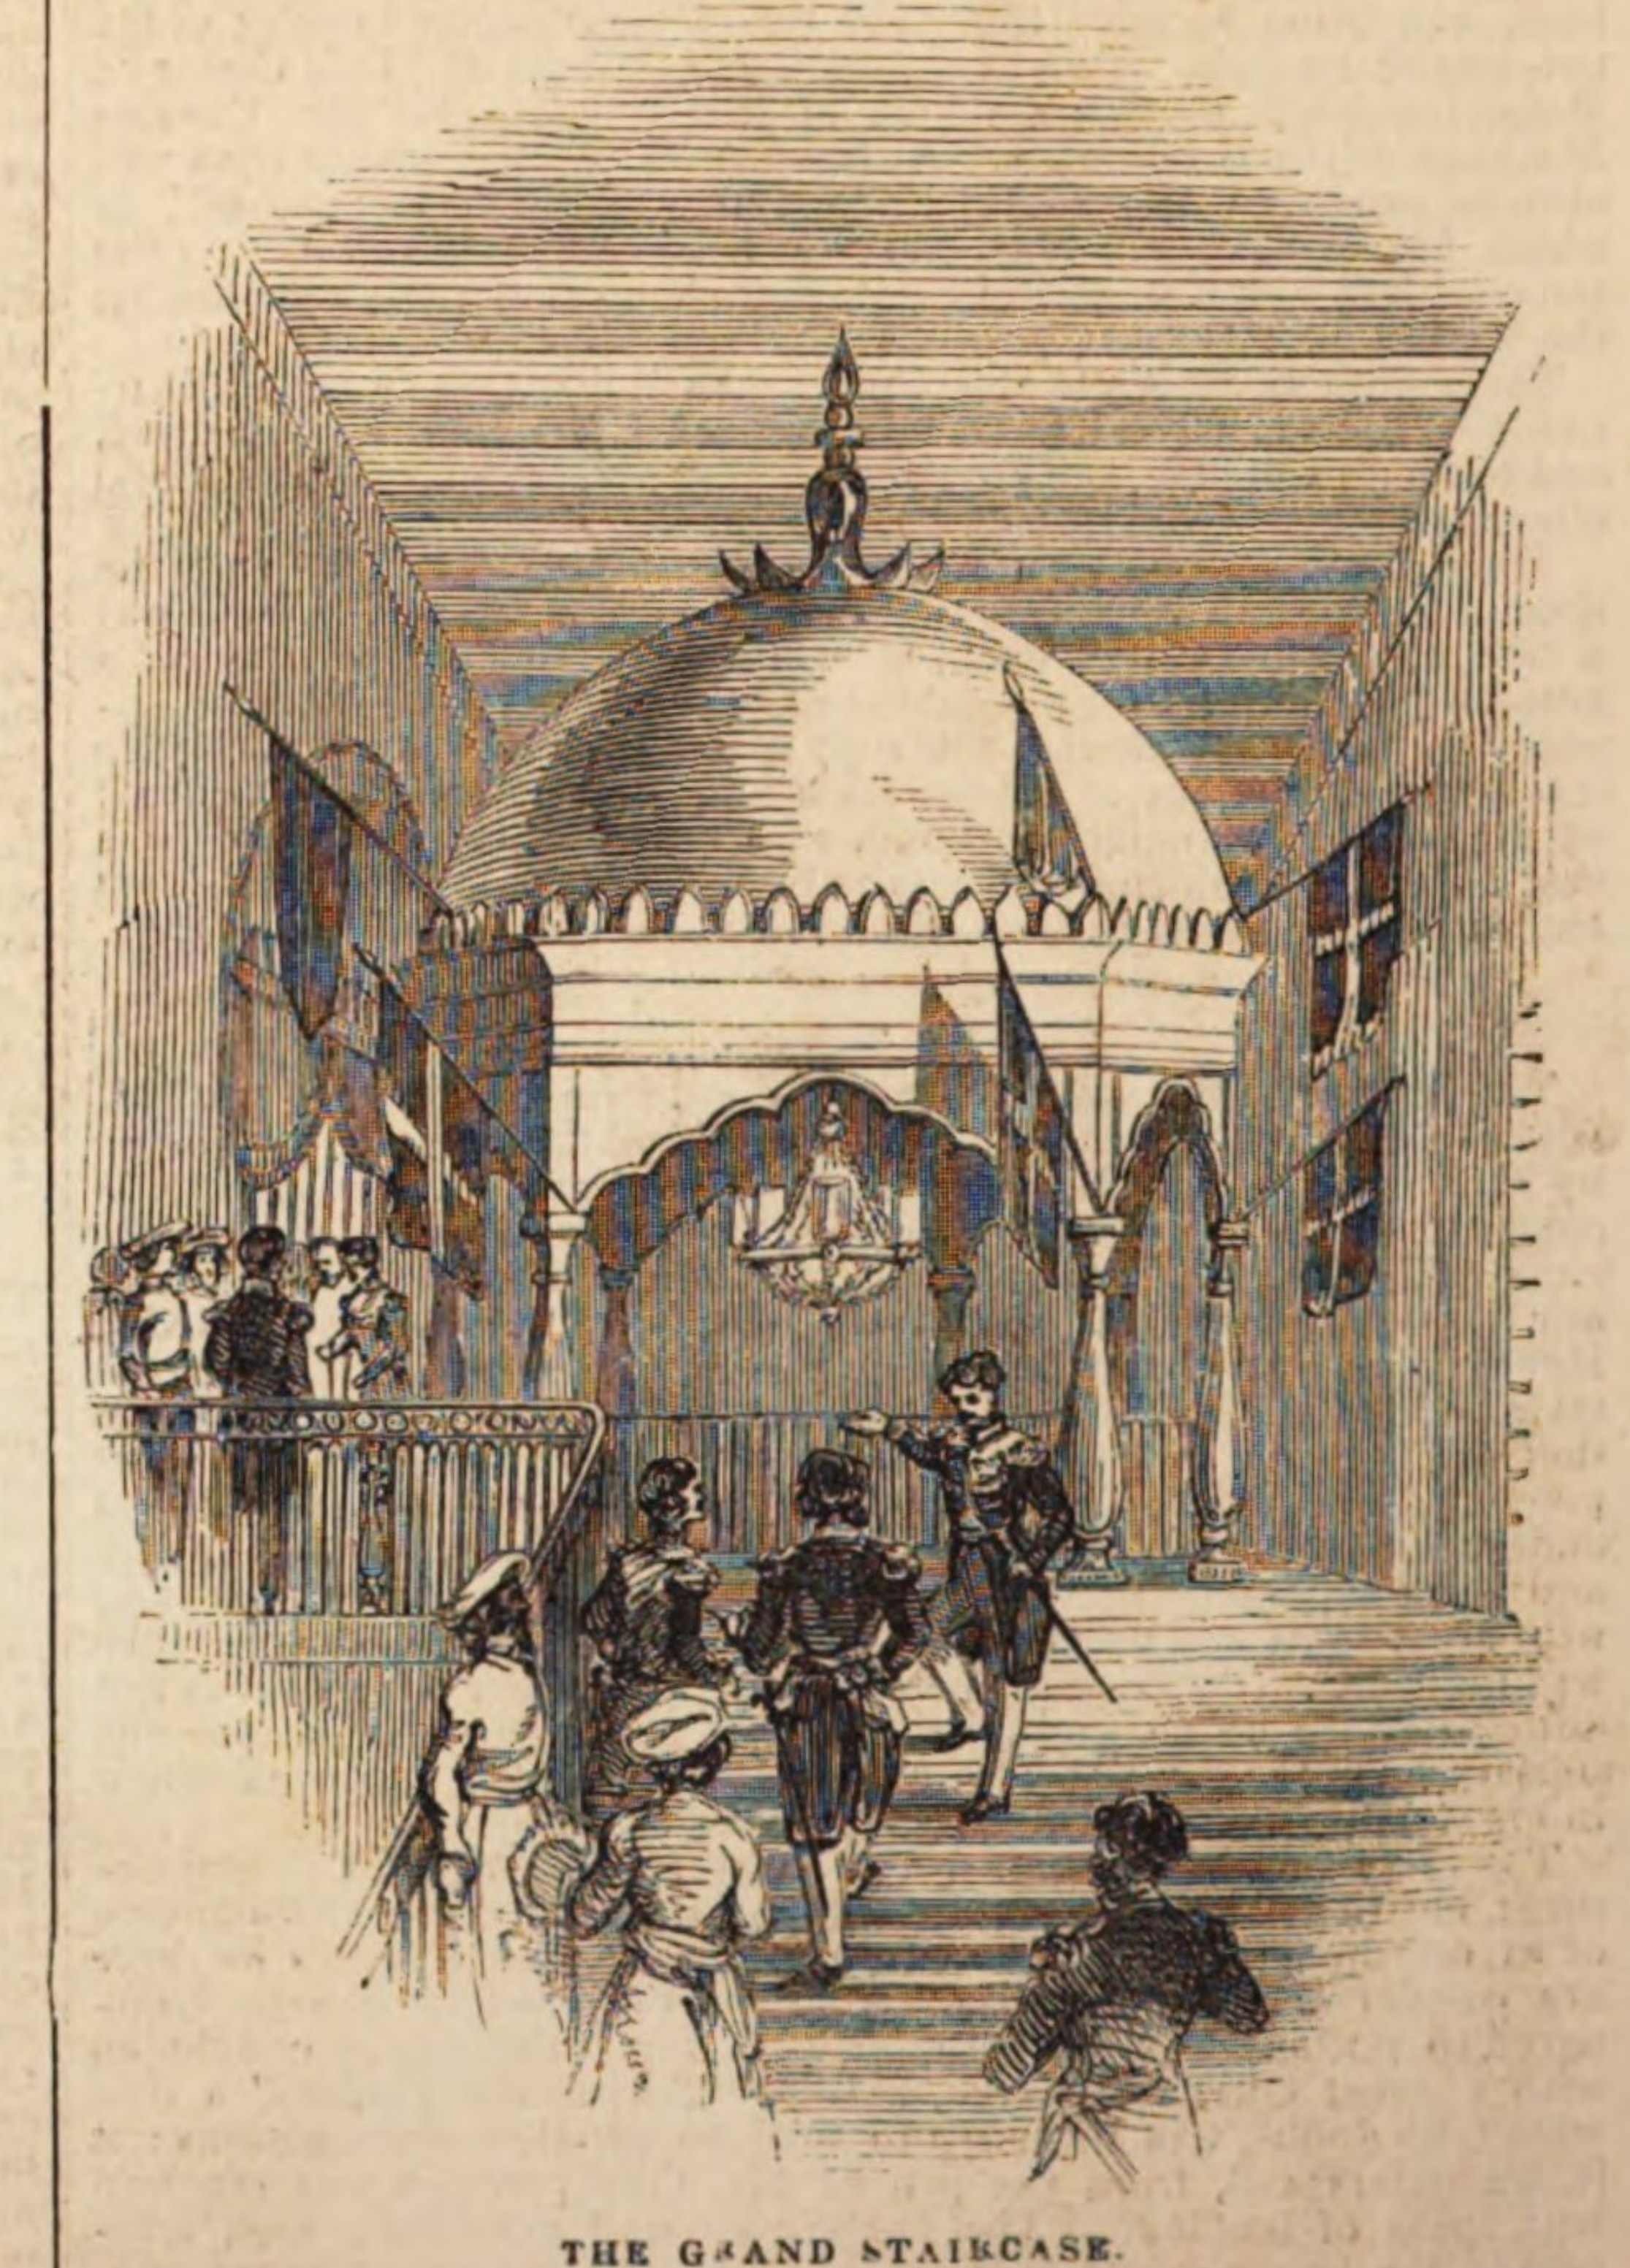
"Gentlemen, I rise to give the health of Lord Ellenborough, and in our name to return to his lordship our warmest thanks for the honor of his company this evening. We are met together, gentlemen, a body of officers it is true, but therefore only the more bounden to abstain from any expression of opinion, as to the merits or demerits of events of a political character. His lordship is now amongst us as a private gentleman, and this circumstance only renders the opportunity the more gratifying to our feelings, of evincing our sense of the many friendly attentions and the kindness he has constantly shown us. Gentlemen, let us drink Lord Ellenborough's health. (Drunk with enthusiastic cheering.)



THE BANQUET IN THE HALL.

After a slight pause, his lordship rose to return thanks, and was received with deafening applause. His lordship having thanked the company, and specially referred to the brilliant achievements of the British army in India, added that "It was an object of satisfaction to him that in his successor, the present Governor-general of India, the army would find one who would ever uphold their interests. He was a good soldier himself, and would appreciate a good soldier. He would add that his gallant friend Sir Henry Hardinge had the entire support of one of the greatest men of the age, the Duke of Wellington. Possessing qualifications, too, of no ordinary calibre, there was room to hope and expect that measures would be carried out calculated to benefit the country at large. Sir Henry Hardinge is well fitted for the post to which he has succeeded; and superadds to the general qualifications necessary for a Governor-General, an extensive knowledge of military finance, which he (Lord E.) could never have hoped to have acquired. These statements inspire the liveliest hopes that his endeavours will be directed to the soldier's comfort and welfare, dictated by feelings of appreciation of the soldier's worth."

Captain Champneys, in proposing the health of the Duke of Wellington, observed:—



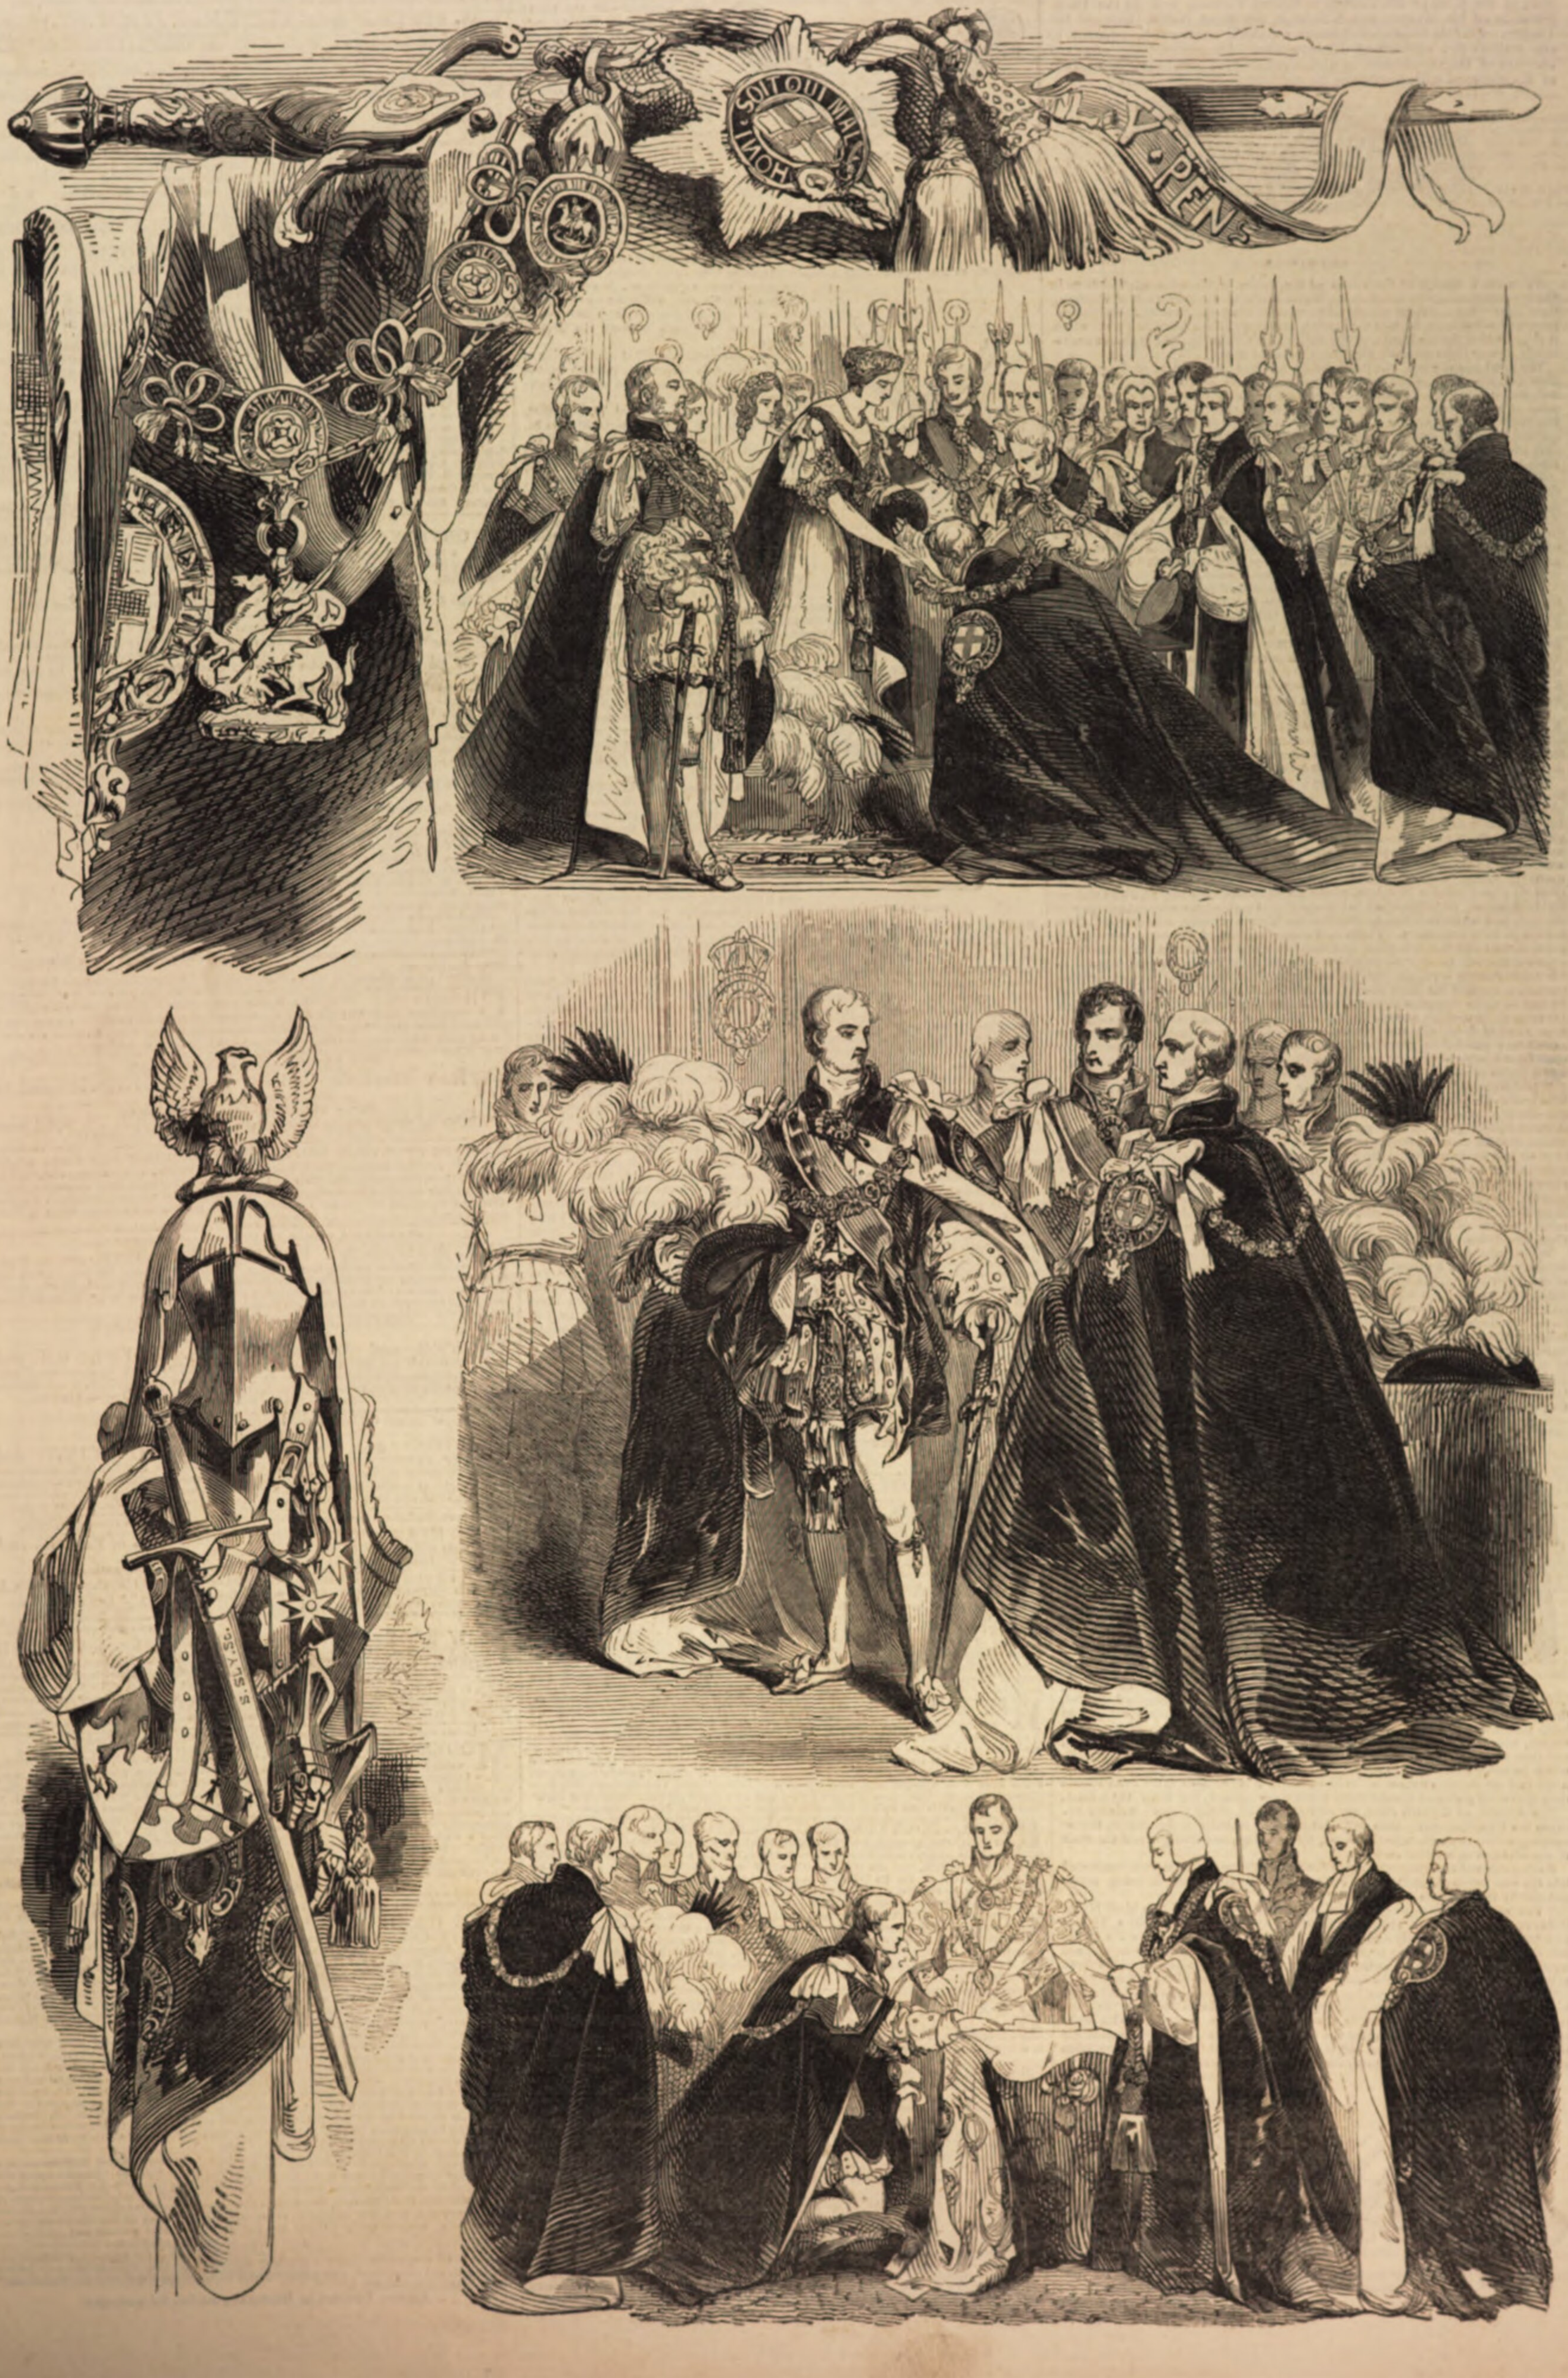
THE GRAND STAIRCASE.

"I have a toast to propose—a bumper toast! It is one which needs no lengthened preface; for the illustrious statesman whose health I shall now give is known and revered by every British soldier (cheers). He is the acknowledged friend of our noble guest, and of the Indian army (cheers). His time-honoured name is already emblazoned in the pages of history. Gentlemen, Great Britain knows and acknowledges the worth of him whose health I am about to propose: but highly as he undoubtedly is estimated, it will only be hereafter, when the difficulty is felt of replacing him, that his full meed of universal admiration as a soldier and a statesman will be accorded. Gentlemen, may that day be long distant, and let us drink, with due honours, the health of—His Grace the Duke of Wellington, the personal friend of our distinguished guest" (great cheering).

The party broke up at about half-past eleven o'clock, when Lord Ellenborough took his departure, accompanied by the officers to the door of his carriage, and cheered as upon his arrival.

The third illustration shows the grand staircase of the Hall, decorated with flags, &c.

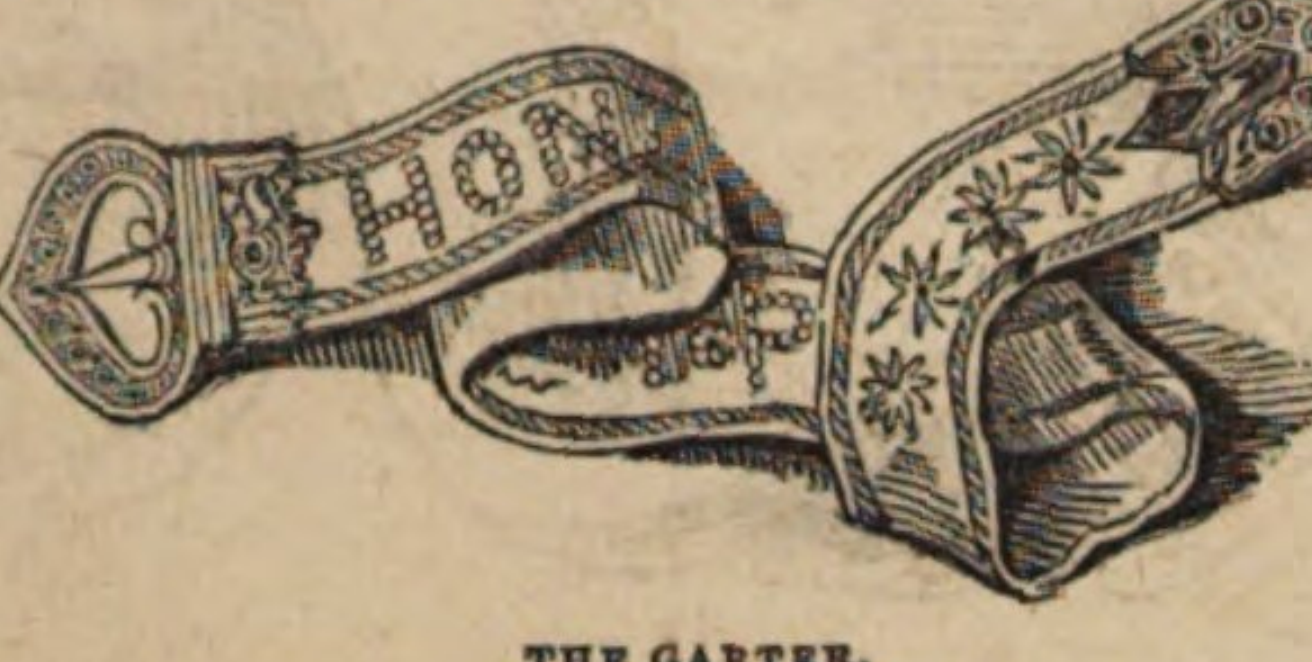
CEREMONY OF INVESTITURE OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.



HONI SOIT QUI MAL
Y PENSE

THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

[One of the splendid ceremonies by which will be signalized the visit of the King of the French to Queen Victoria will be the Inauguration of his Majesty as a Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. Of this magnificent scene we shall, next week, present to our readers two authorised Illustrations. Meanwhile, the annexed account of the ceremonial of this most ancient and illustrious Order of Knighthood will, doubtless, be acceptable to our readers.]



THE GARTER.

To write a history of the Order of the Garter in the space allotted to us in these columns would be a task in no degree less difficult than that of confining the "Iliad" in a nutshell. A portly folio of some 800 pages records its institution, laws, and ceremonies, by that industrious antiquary, Elias Ashmole; from which it appears that the institution of the Order is enveloped in some degree of uncertainty, two or three origins having been assigned to it.

The most popular one, and that even to this day, is the story of the garter of Joan Countess of Salisbury having casually fallen off as she danced at a state ball, and which King Edward the Third took up from the ground; whereupon some of his nobles and courtiers smiling, as at an amorous action, and he, observing their sportive humour, turned it off with the reply, in French, "Honi soit qui mal y pense;" adding, in disdain of their laughter, that, in a short time, they should see that garter advanced so high in honour and estimation, as to account themselves happy to wear it.

The whole of this story is very apocryphal, and cannot stand the test of the slightest examination. No writer of the period when this order was instituted mentions it, and it was first made current by a foreigner, Polydore Virgil, in his English History; and he vaguely points out the lady-heroine of this popular invention, by calling her "either the Queen, or the King's mistress." More modern historians, having this clue, set their wits to work, and, in a short time, gave us her name, and "a full, true, and particular account" of the whole transaction, that was far too good not to become popular.

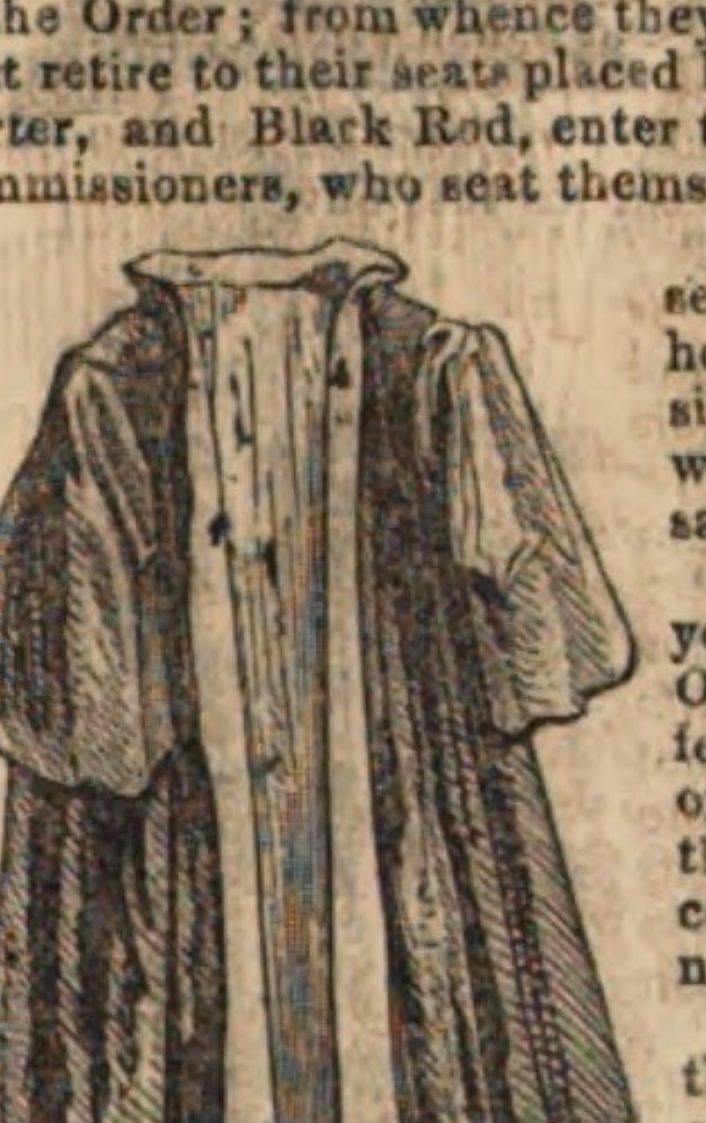
But, alas for Romance! when ponderous matter-of-fact writers grapple with these pleasing inventions. Listen to Dr. Heylin, who wrote a Cosmography that would delight the Dutch critic who judged of books by weight or size. "This," saith the worthy doctor, "I take to be a vain and idle romance, derogatory both to the founder and the Order, first published by Polydore Virgil, a stranger to the affairs of England, and by him taken upon no better ground than the vulgar tradition of the common people; too trifling a foundation to so great a building, common report being so infamous an historian, that wise men neither report after it, nor give credit to anything they receive from it."

The other story is, that the Queen dropped a blue garter upon leaving the King, which he picked up, the attendant lords being too dignified to do so; adding that he would cause the best in the land to reverence it. And some think the motto of the garter was the Queen's answer, when the King asked her, what men would conjecture of her, upon losing her garter in such a manner.

The real origin appears to have been this. Edward the Third being engaged in the war to recover his possessions in France, wisely considered it a prudent plan in that age of chivalry, to restore the Round Table of King Arthur, so celebrated in old romance, as the focus of gallant warriors. For this purpose, he proclaimed feasts and tournaments at Windsor, to which gathered all the beauty and valour of the country, and stranger knights from other lands, who, in accordance with the military mania of the age, were everlastingly rambling from castle to castle, and never so happy as when fighting at the barriers there erected; they flocked to Windsor, where the table was duly placed, two hundred feet in diameter, perfectly round to prevent disputes about precedency in those who sat at it, and where each knight dieted at the King's expense, who devoted £100 a-week to its maintenance. Philip de Valois, the King of France, perceiving the great success of Edward's plan, and that the knights from Italy and Germany repaired thither, fearing the desertion of those upon whom he must depend in his forth-coming struggle, set up an opposition Round Table, with fighting enough to content the most martial of men; and then Edward perceiving that he had no claim upon the service of the strange knights he entertained, who took his side, or that of his enemy, in the ensuing wars, resolved upon fixing in a firm bond of friendship and honour, those whom he thought fit to make his associates; and having given forth his own garter for the signal of a battle that sped fortunately, he gave it as a symbol of unity to the honourable fraternity, and a badge of concord amongst its members.

"And whereas," says Ashmole, "King Edward the Third had set on foot a title to the kingdom of France, and in right thereof assumes its arms, he from the colour of them, caused the Garter of the Order to be made blue, and the circumscription gold. And it may, without any straining, be inferred from the motto, that he retorted shame and defiance upon him that should dare to think ill of so just an enterprise as he had undertaken for the recovery of his lawful right to that crown; and that the magnanimity of those knights whom he had chosen into this Order was such as would enable them to maintain that quarrel against all who durst think ill of it." Consonant to this is the conjecture of Harpsfield, "That this apothegm was designed to put the knights companions in mind, not to admit anything in the actions of their lives, or among their thoughts, unbecoming themselves and their honour."

The ceremony of the Installation of a knight into this Most Noble Order is thus conducted. Upon a vacancy by death, or otherwise, a chapter of the members of the Order is held, the Sovereign presiding, and the person to be elected nominated and accepted; a day is appointed for their installation in St. George's Chapel at Windsor. On this occasion, the Knights Commissioners appointed to install the elected knights, together with those not named in the commission, being completely robed in the habit of the Order, meet in the Dean of Windsor's apartments, where they are joined by the Knights elect, and the various officers of the Order; from whence they are conducted to the chapel, where the Knights elect retire to their seats placed behind the altar, and the three officers, Registrar, Garter, and Black Rod, enter the Chapter-house, and after them the Knights Commissioners, who seat themselves according to their seniority.



SURCOAT.

The Commission having been read, Garter is sent to conduct the Knight elect to the Chapter-house door, where he is received by the Commissioners, and is then first invested with the Surcoat, which is of crimson velvet, the Registrar at the same time reading this admonition:—

"Take this robe of crimson to the increase of your honour, and in token or sign of the Noble Order you have received, wherewith you being defended, may be bold, not only to fight, but also to offer yourself to shed your blood for Christ's faith, the liberties of the Church, and the just and necessary defence of them that are oppressed and needy."

The Garter presents the crimson velvet girdle to the Commissioners, who buckle it over the surcoat, then the hanger and sword, which they also gird on.

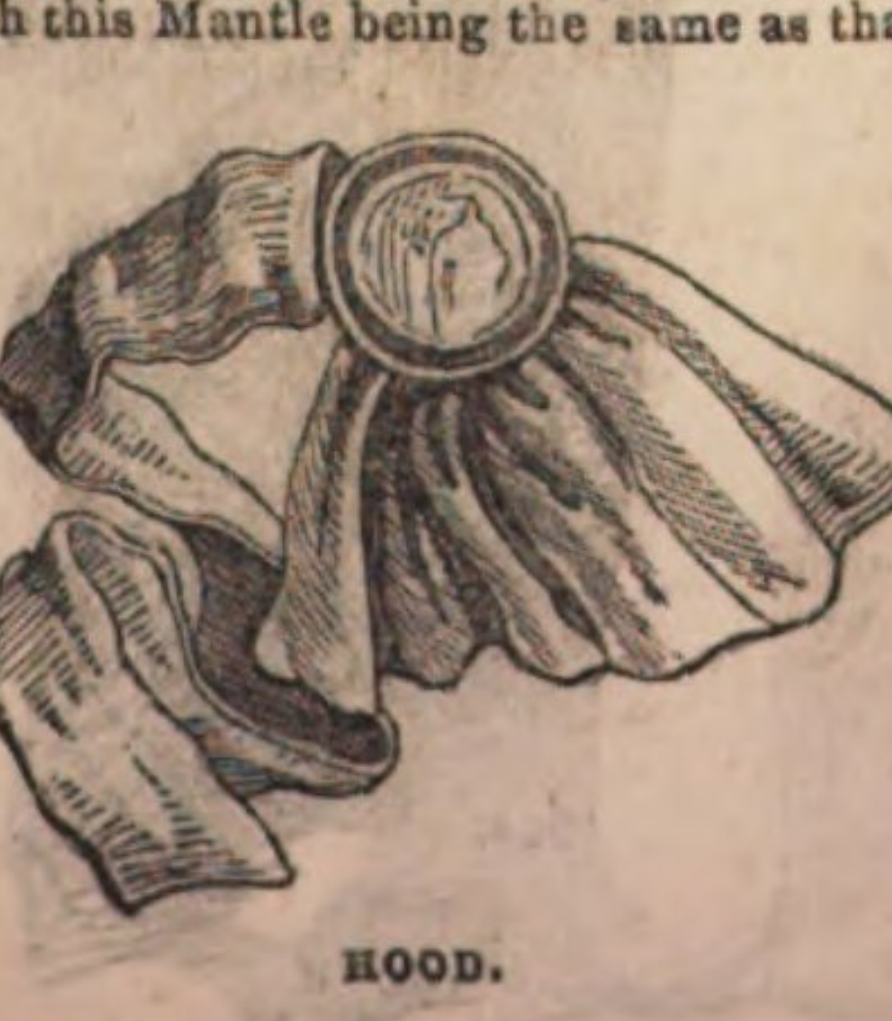
The Knight elect is now left in the Chapter-house, the other Knights proceeding to the Chapel, to offer up the hatchments of the deceased Knight, that is, the group composed of his shield, sword, helmet, and banner, which had been placed over the stall assigned to him in the Chapel. This is performed by Garter, who advances to the middle of the choir, where he makes his reverence, and then repairs to the hatchment of the deceased Knight, taking up the banner, which he holds nearly rolled up, and which is attended by the two other Kings-at-Arms and the Commissioners to the altar, where it is delivered to the two Canons; then the sword is carried and delivered in the same manner; and lastly, the helmet.

The Knight, or Knights elect, are now conducted to the Chapel, walking between the Commissioners, each with his cap and feathers in his hand; Garter carrying before them the Mantle, Hood, Great Collar, and George, and the Book of the Statutes on a velvet cushion.

Having entered the chair, and made the usual reverences, he is then conducted into the seat below his stall, where he takes the following oath, it being administered by the Registrar of the Garter:—

"You being chosen to be one of the honourable company of this Most Noble Order of the Garter, shall promise and swear by the Holy Evangelists, by you here touched, that wittingly and willingly you shall not break any statute of the said Order, or any articles in them contained, the same being agreeable, and not repugnant to the laws of Almighty God, and the laws of this realm, as far forth as to you belongeth and appertaineth, so help your God and his holy word."

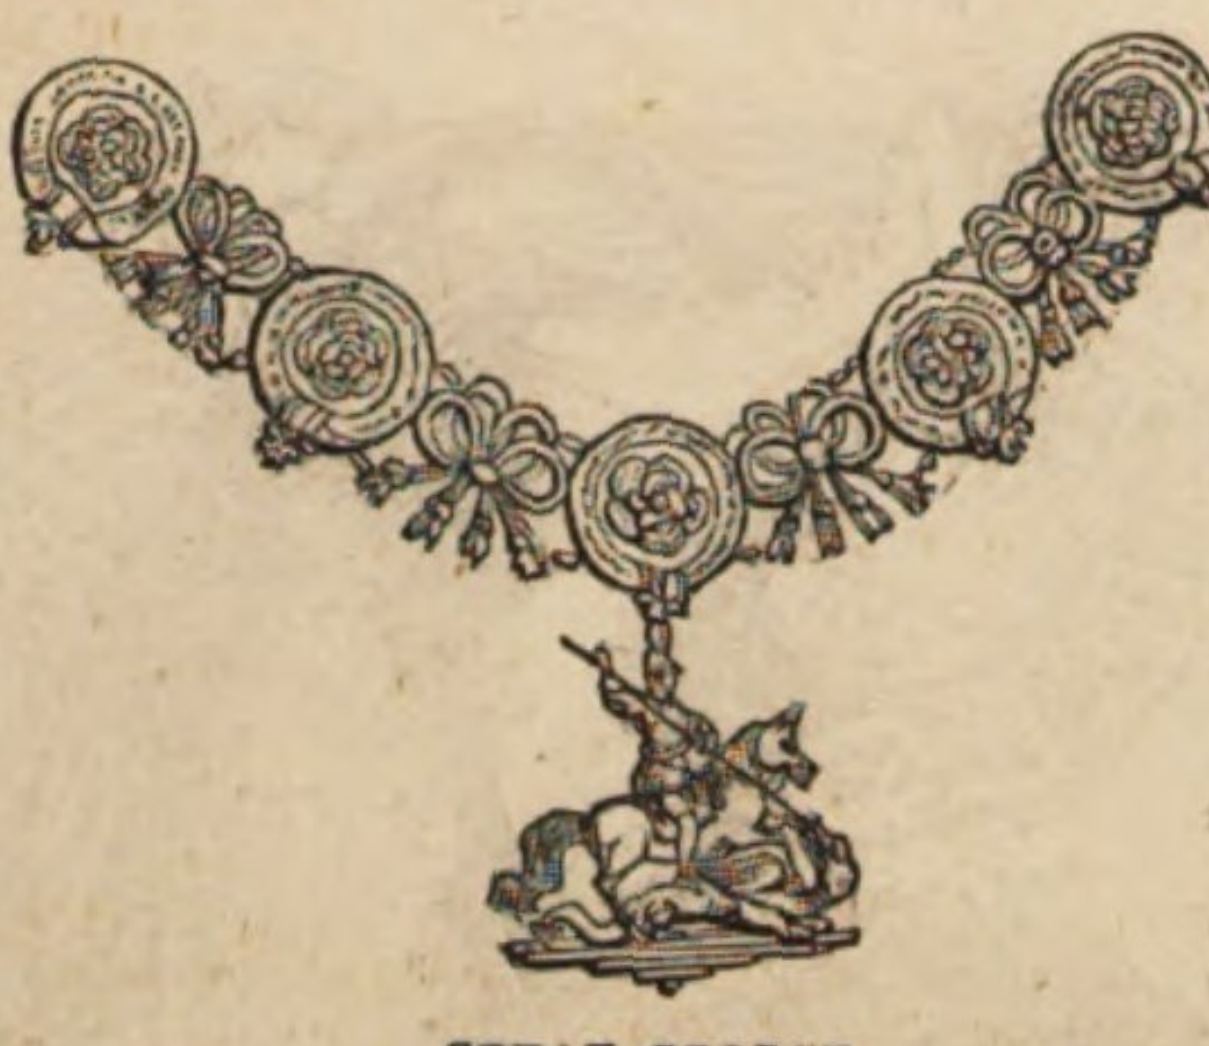
Then the Knight elect enters his own stall, the Senior Commissioner going before him, and the Junior Commissioner following. The Knight is then invested with the Mantle of the Order, made of blue velvet, and lined with white satin, having upon the left shoulder the badge of the order, being the arms of the George, its patron saint, within the Garter; the admonition upon investiture with this Mantle being the same as that used upon receiving the Surcoat.



HOOD.

Garter then presents the Hood to the Commissioners, who puts it over the Knight's shoulder, bringing the band, or tippet attached, across the breast, and tucking it beneath the girdle on the left side. This Hood was anciently the covering for the head; the long band was attached for the purpose of allowing the wearer to cast off the Hood at pleasure; so that it hung behind his back, and was kept from falling by this security. The Hood now used is a mere relic of this article of dress, being too small to be useful, and retained only as part of the ceremonial of investiture.

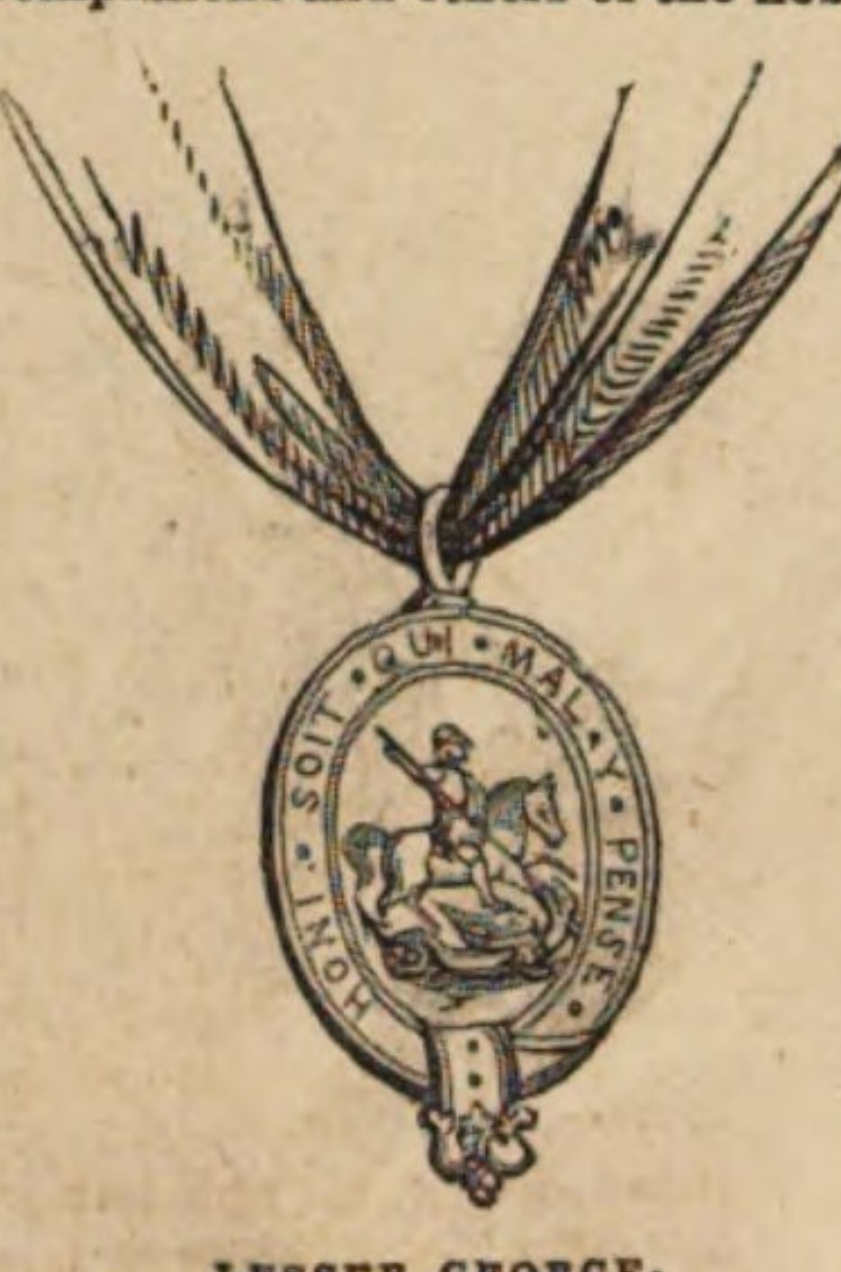
The Great Collar and George is then presented, which is fastened over the Mantle and Hood, the Registrar reading the admonition:—



GREAT GEORGE.

"Wear this Collar about thy neck, adorned with the image of the Blessed Martyr and Soldier of Christ, St. George, by whose imitation, provoked, thou mayst so overpass both prosperous and adverse encounters, that, having stoutly vanquished thine enemies, both of body and soul, thou mayest not only receive the praise of this transient combat, but be crowned with the palm of eternal victory."

There is also the Lesser George, worn by Knights of this Order, which was first brought into use by Henry the Eighth, in order to make a distinction between the Knights Companions and others of the nobility who wore large gold chains, the ordinary insignia of their knighthood. It consists of a figure of St. George, encircled by the Garter, and is appended to a blue riband, being worn round the neck beneath the Greater George.



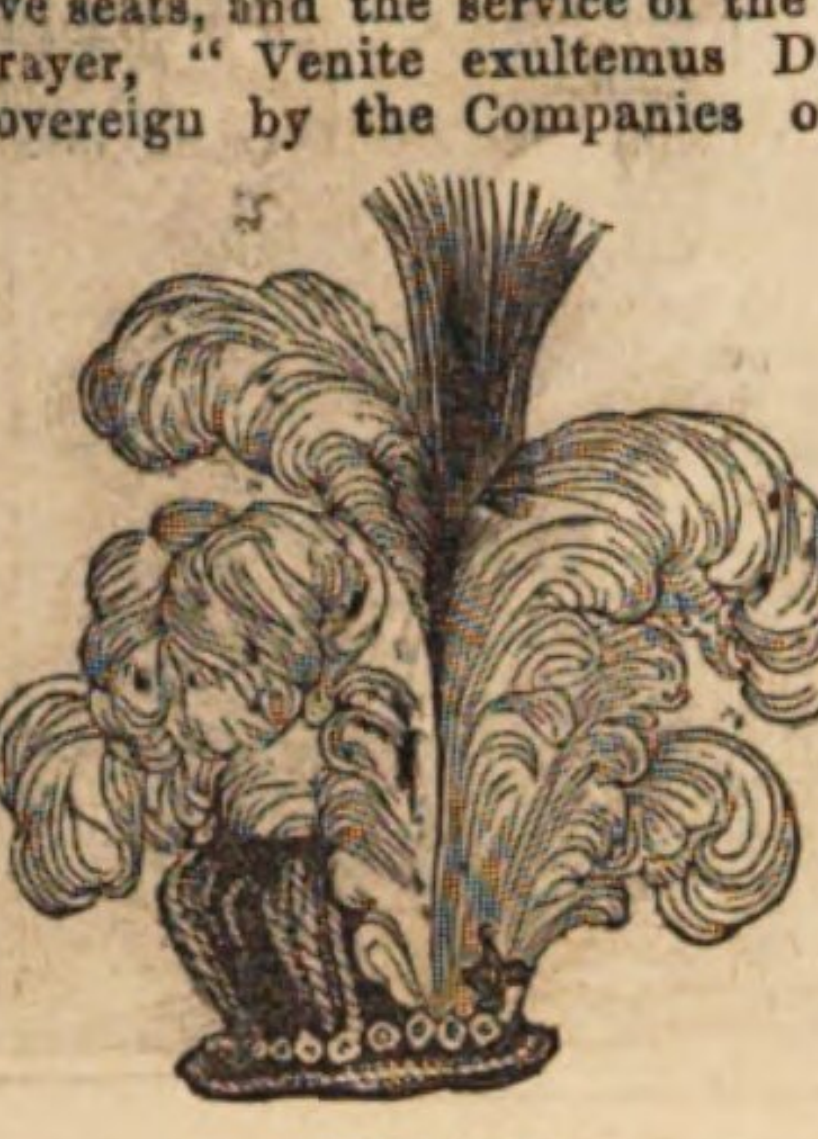
HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE

LESSER GEORGE.

The Garter is now buckled upon the leg of the Knight, this important portion of the ceremony being accompanied by the following words:—

"To the honour of God Omnipotent, and in memorial of the Blessed Martyr St. George, tie about thy leg, for thy renown, this Noble Garter. Wear it as the symbol of the most illustrious Order, never to be forgotten or laid aside; that, thereby, thou mayest be admonished to be courageous; and having undertaken a just war, into which only thou shalt be engaged, thou mayest stand firm, valiantly fight, and successfully conquer."

Garter then presents the statute-book, which the second Commissioner delivers to the elect Knight; and then placing the Cap and Feathers on his head, they seat him in his stall, and retire to their respective seats, and the service of the chapel begins. It commences with the Lord's Prayer, "Venite exultemus Domino," the 21st Psalm, a prayer for the Sovereign by the Companies of the Order, &c. &c. After which the Provincial Kings-at-Arms make their reverences, and go to the newly-elected Knight; he comes from his seat, and goes with them toward the altar, making their reverence at the first step; and coming to the rails he offers gold and silver in the basin held by the prebends, and thus concludes the ceremony of the full installation of a knight.



THE CAP.

From the chapel they, in general, retire to St. George's Hall, or the Guard Chamber, where a banquet is prepared for the newly-elected Knights. On this occasion, when dinner is served up, at the second course, Garter, with all the Officers-at-Arms following him, proceeds from the lower end of the room to the place where the Knights sit, where he pronounces Largesse (in honour of the beneficence of the Knights), the junior Knight, if there be more than one that day installed, standing up uncovered. He then proclaims the Knight's style, or titles aloud; all the Officers-of-Arms together cry Largesse; and then, making their obeisances, the Heralds retire.

On the installation of the Earl of Chesterfield, the Duke of Beaufort, and others, on the St. George's Day (April 23) 1805, his Majesty George the Third and all his family attended, the ceremonies were particularly splendid and imposing. A banquet was held in St. George's Hall, at which his Majesty presided; and afterward the ball-room of the Castle was thrown open, having been decorated with the richest furniture, and lighted by three silver chandeliers each weighing two hundred weight; together with twenty-six silver sconces. The floor was painted in water colours; the centrepiece consisted of the Star and Order of the Garter on each side, at equi-distances were the letters G. R., and at each extremity of the room were trumpets, French horns, and other appropriate devices, the whole being surrounded by emblems of the Union, &c.

A curious feature of the ceremony on this day was the public banquet in the Castle-yard, where eighteen tables had been set out in a triangular form, with provisions of all kinds, and nine hogsheads of ale were placed on three large tables or benches. During the time the dinner was getting ready for the populace, all the gates leading into the Castle-yard were closed, and sentinels, both horse as well as foot, were stationed without to keep the unruly in awe, and prevent them from approaching too near the entrance. The crowd was very great, and the impatience of the multitude was at last appeased by the gates being thrown open by a detachment of the Coldstream Guards, about twenty minutes past eight o'clock in the evening, when they poured in like an overwhelming torrent, and bore down every thing before them. The newspapers of the day declare that the scene of confusion that ensued exceeds all description, every one being more anxious to plunder than to eat; they carried off that which came soonest to hand, whilst the less robust were frequently robbed of their prey in retreating to a place of safety. From the windows of the Queen's apartments, the King and Princes of the Blood surveyed the scene.

The engravings upon the preceding page illustrate the principal scenes of the Investiture of a Knight of this most ancient Order:—1. The Sovereign investing the newly-elected Knight with the Collar of the Order. 2. A Group of Knights, in full costume. 3. A newly-elected Knight receiving the Admonition of the Order. The emblematic Border is composed of the Badges of the Order, the Knight's Trophy, &c.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—In consequence of the immense success of Madlle. ADELE DUMILATRE in M. Albert's grand Ballet of THE CORSAIR, it will be played every evening of the engagement of this celebrated Danseuse.—On MONDAY, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL and THE CORSAIR.—On TUESDAY, GUSTAVUS THE THIRD; or, The Masked Ball.—On WEDNESDAY, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL and THE CORSAIR. On THURSDAY, THE BRIDES OF VENICE and THE CORSAIR.—Private and Family Boxes, Stalls Tickets and Places may be had, on application to JOHN PARSONS, Box Book-keeper.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE of ARTS continues open every evening with its unequalled rotation of entertainments.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Continued success and overflowing houses.—MONDAY, October 14, and DURING THE WEEK, at Seven o'Clock, Lord Byron's ever-attractive spectacle of MAZEPPA and the WILD HORSE, with all its original splendid effects. Entire change of the Scenes of the Circle. Feats of Horsemanship; concluding with, first time for twelve years, the popular spectacle of the BLOOD-RED KNIGHT, or the Warriors of Palestine.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot. Box-office open daily, from Eleven till Five.—Lessons in the art of Riding daily.

HER MAJESTY'S GUEST, LOUIS PHILIPPE, King of the French, in the UNIFORM of a NATIONAL GUARD, worn by himself. The NATIONAL GROUP, in honour of the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Duke of Wellington, consisting of 18 Figures. R. COBDEN, Esq., from Life. TOM THUMB, as Napoleon.—"This Exhibition, in its present state, is one of the very best sights in the Metropolis, and abounds with such a variety of objects, that it is a matter of surprise how so many things could have been brought together."—The Times.—Admittance, One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence. Open from Eleven till Five, and from Seven till Ten. Concert at Eight. Madame TUSSAUD and SONS, Exhibition Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The PROTEOSCOPE, an original OPTICAL INSTRUMENT, unlimited in its appliances to Nature and Art, a highly valuable addition to LONGBOTTOM'S OPAQUE MICROSCOPE, the PHYSIOSCOPE, and the OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE. The PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATION of the PASSIONS, from COLLINS'S ODE, with Vocal and Instrumental Music, is the first subject exhibited by the PROTEOSCOPE, at a Quarter to Five o'clock in the Afternoon, and at a Quarter to Ten in the Evening. Dr. RYAN'S present daily Lecture is on POISONS and their ANTIDOTES, delivered at Half-past Three, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at a Quarter to Nine. Professor BACHHOFFNER Lectures on the alternate Evenings. The Lectures abound in interesting Experiments. The HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE, DIVING BELL and DIVER, &c. The Music is composed and conducted by T. WALLIS, Mus. Doc.—Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price.

READ the following TESTIMONIAL in favour of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which is sufficient to convince the most prejudiced person that they are all that is required to conquer disease, and consequently, prolong life.

To T. ROBERTS and Co.

Sirs,—I beg to hand you the following testimonial, which I have just received from Mr. Williams, Union-street, Nottingham. Yours, obediently,

G. BATTERS, Chapel-bar, Nottingham.

Sir,—Printing is a great blessing to mankind, for now I am enabled to make known, through you, a perfect Cure, by taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, of extremely bad Indigestion, a Bilious disorder, and Sick Headache, which I have been subjected to for years; and money enough has been paid to physicians and surgeons, which now would have been a little fortune to me. I wish every fellow-creature clearly to understand that I was wonderfully relieved by taking one box of PARR'S LIFE PILLS. Accident threw a testimonial in my way of a miraculous cure of a bilious attack and sick headache. The second box enabled me to go about my business with spirit and alacrity; and by taking two or three more boxes, I am happy to add my humble testimony of a perfect cure of that dreadful disorder—bilious and sick headache, which rendered me, before I took PARR'S LIFE PILLS, unfit for business. Considering the loss of time and pain, persons would find that one box of PARR'S LIFE PILLS is worth, instead of 1s. 1½d., as many guineas. May all persons make trial of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, is the sincere wish of

Yours, thankfully, M. WILLIAMS, Union-street, Nottingham.

To Mr. G. Batters.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS are sold by all respectable Medicine Vendors. See the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS," in White Letters on a Red Ground, on the Government Stamp.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE for OCTOBER, price 1s. 6d. This monthly is an unique combination of Art and Literature. The designs are by KENNY MEADOWS, HINE, &c., &c. The contributions are unusually interesting.

CONTENTS:

Rambles Round London. By Luke Roden, M.D.
Musings of a Wanderer, No. I.
A Village Sketch. By Miss Camilla Toulmin.
The Sea-Serpent Chase.
The Man of High Notions. By Laman Blanchard.
Church-yard Thoughts.
Sonnet. By Mrs. Scott.
The Philosophy of Shops. By Angus B. Reach.
Mad Austin. By Augustine Wade.
Song of a Flower Spirit.
Adventures of a Scamp. Chap. VII. The Swinestead Poll. Chap. VIII. The Swinestead Return, and our Return from Swinestead.
Dwellings of the Poor. From the Note-book of an M.D.
Boys of London. The Steam-boat Boy. By Mark Lemon.
Fine Arts. Judgment of Paris.
Addison and Holland House. By John Timbs.
Musings of a Wanderer. Nos. II. and III.
A Tale of the French Revolution.
New Books, &c. &c.

Office, 2, Crane-court, Fleet-street: and sold by all Booksellers.

BY COMMAND.
UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

THE SPORTING REVIEW for OCTOBER, 1844, is beautifully embellished with TWO SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS, by WALLIS and COOK.

CONTENTS.

Doncaster Races. By Craven.
Memoir of Charles Gordon Lennox.
Notitia Venatica. By R. T. Vyner, Esq.
Sporting Letter from the late Earl of Kintore to the late C. J. Apperley, Esq., (Nimrod).
My Uncle's Advice on Sporting Matters. By Actæon.
The Pleasures of Partridge Shooting. By Ornither.
Are the Teeth a Fallible or Infallible Criterion of the Age of the Horse? By J. Sewell, Veterinary Surgeon.
Leatherlungs the "Leg." By the Editor.
Nimrod's Analysis of "the Diary of a Huntsman." By Thomas Smith, Esq., late Master of the Craven.
Sporting Excursions. By Toho.
Wild Fowl Shooting from a punt in Fresh-water.
Review of the Past Coursing Season.
A Week at Cowes. By Lord William Lennox.
Public Amusements of the Metropolis.
Monthly Miscellany.
State of the Odds, &c.
Turf Register,—Ludlow, Winchester, Newmarket July Meeting, Worcester, Mansfield, Lea Bridge, Southampton, Ipswich, Liverpool, July Meeting, Bromyard, Hatcham Park, Bridgnorth, Dudley and Tipton, Yarmouth, Tewkesbury and Gloucestershire, Lancaster, Romford, Wenlock, Guildford, Goodwood.

London: Sporting Review Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand. May be had of all Booksellers.

THE NEW
MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLEE, for OCTOBER, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate Patronage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, is beautifully Illustrated with highly-finished Portraits of the Nobility, and contains an exquisite Engraving of LORD BYRON'S MAID OF ATHENS, and
TWO COLOURED PLATES OF THE FASHIONS, finished in the First Style, as they arrive from Paris.

CONTENTS.

Florence; or Woman's Friendship. By Miss Aguilar.
The Old Man's Song. By Charles Swain, Esq.
Stanzas for Music. By David Lester Richardson.
The Child's Inquiry. By George Bayley.
The Chaperon's Complaint. By Mrs. Abdy.
The Daughter of Pericles. By N. Mitchell, Esq., Author of "The Traduced," &c.
The Fairy and the Maiden. By Miss M. H. Acton.
The "New Relation." By Miss M. S. Watson.
Songs of the Mountain. By W. G. J. Barker, Esq.
My Picture Gallery; No. 10. By Major Calder Campbell.
The Ball at Highwood. By Mrs. Ponsonby.
The Lover's Message. By Mrs. F. B. Scott.
Sketches of German Literature. By Miss M. A. Youatt.
Silent Love. By Charles H. Hitchings, Esq.
The Living and the Dead. By Miss Munroe.
The Weird Sister. By Giles Glover.
Mother, Come Back to Me. By Mrs. Edward Thomas.
Thoughts of the Princess Constance de Salm.
The Maker and the Wearer.
Hope. By Ellen S. M.
A Tale of All-hallow E'en. By Miss E. Youatt, Author of "The Price of Fame," &c.
The Wandering Minstrel. By Rose Acton.
The Point of Honour. By Camilla Toulmin.
The Rustic Lover. By Marie F.
The Bereavement of Constance (Mother of Prince Arthur). By Florence.
Literature.
Music.
Fine Arts.
Amusements of the Month.
Fashions for October.
Description of the Plates.
To Correspondents.

"This Magazine should find its way into every drawing-room in the kingdom."—The News.

"In every respect well worthy the distinguished patronage conferred on the work."—Exeter Gazette.

"This elegant and amusing periodical deserves well the patronage of the female sex."—Newcastle Courant.

May be had, by order, of all Booksellers.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

CHEMISTRY MADE EASY for the USE of AGRICULTURISTS, by J. TOPHAM, M.A. Second edition, price 1s. 6d.—"A more useful, practically useful work than this, it would be impossible to place in the hands of a farmer."—John Bull, 21st September, 1844.—WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S. &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster row; CARVALLIO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

NO. 88 of "THE BUILDER," published this day, price 3d., contains numerous highly valuable and interesting articles, among which will be found some on Chimneys—The Uses and Treatment of Timber—Most Important Cases under the New Metropolitan Building-Act—10 Illustrations of Aghadoe Cathedral; Tenders, Notices of Contracts, and all the professional News relating to Building.—Office, 2, York-street, Covent-garden; and of all Booksellers.

Just published, price 5s. 6d., with cases and coloured plates,

DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a Successful Mode of treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic, Nervous and Spasmodic Coughs, and Affections of the Heart.—"Full of important and consoling facts."—Gazette. London: SIMPKIN and MARSHALL.—Gratuitous advice by Dr. Maddock to the poor, at his residence, 10, Hunter-street, Brunswick-square.

CORRECTED TO THE LATEST ORTHOGRAPHY.
Thick 8vo., price 12s. bound,

BOYER and DELETANVILLE'S FRENCH and ENGLISH and ENGLISH and FRENCH DICTIONARY, with numerous additions, corrections, and improvements. By D. BOILEAU and A. PICQUOT. A new Edition, revised, and the Orthography corrected to the latest decision of the French Academy.
London: Printed for the Proprietors.

CHEAP PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY.
Square 12mo., 4s. 6d. bound and lettered,

FULTON and KNIGHT'S PRONOUNCING and EXPLANATORY DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, greatly improved; the pronunciation ascertained by a new and simple notation. To which are prefixed, the principles of English pronunciation, and the elements of reading; with copious lists of Greek, Latin, and Scripture proper names, &c.—WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

Price 5s. cloth, fscp. 8vo., with a Portrait after Holbein, and an Illuminated Title,

THE STAR of the COURT; or the Queen of England and Maid of Honour (Anne Boleyn). By Miss BUNBURY.

Price 7s. cloth, 10s. 6d. Morocco, fscp. 8vo., with 20 Engravings,

POINTS and PICKINGS of INFORMATION about CHINA and the CHINESE. By the Author of "Soldiers and Sailors," "Paul Preston," &c.
London: GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, St. Paul's Churchyard.

19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.

NEW BOOKS SENT for PERUSAL, by RAILROAD and STEAM-VESSELS, to all parts of the Coast and Kingdom, from BULL'S ENGLISH and FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London. Terms, Gratis, and post-free, on application. An unlimited supply of New Books is furnished to the Library, which, as soon as the first demand has subsided, may be purchased by the subscribers, if desired, at half-price. The DUPLICATE CATALOGUE of such Works at present on Sale is now Ready, and may be had Gratis, and Post-free, on application.

In one thick volume, a New Edition, being the Ninth, much enlarged, price 16s.,

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE: a Popular Treatise, exhibiting the Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases; with a Collection of approved Prescriptions, Management of Children, Doses of Medicine, &c., forming a comprehensive Guide for the Clergy, Families, and Invalids. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D., &c.—"It is evidently the result of great professional talent, experience, and judgment; the author everywhere appears conscientious, and candid. One object is prominently evident—a sincere desire to benefit his suffering fellow creatures. To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is only to manifest a proper regard for their welfare."—Literary Journal, Feb., 1843.—"It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London Weekly Review.
SIMPKIN and Co., Paternoster-row; HATCHARDS, 187, Piccadilly; and TEGG, 73, Cheapside. Sold by all Booksellers.

Just published, demy 4to., neatly bound in cloth, with Engravings and Diagrams, price 6s.

THE HAND-BOOK to the PIANOFORTE, comprising an Easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in General; the Art of Fingering, according to the modes of the best masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the Major and Minor Keys; and interspersed by Relaxations from Study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and selections from the Pianoforte Compositions of some of the most celebrated masters. Also, a Short and Easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint, and a New Vocabulary of Terms. By J. AUGUSTINE WADE, author of "The Dwelling of Fancy;" "Songs of the Flowers;" "The Two Houses of Grenada," an Opera; "The Prophecy," an Oratorio, &c., &c.

"It is said of men of genius that their productions are never founded upon utilitarian principles. No assertion can be more vague or false. The first principle of genius is perspicuity, the power of condensing facts for the dissemination of knowledge. The book now before us is the most admirable instance we have ever met with of a man (acknowledged as a poet and a composer), condescending to construct a threshold to harmony. Mr. Wade has written the best first book we ever read. We regret having neither time nor space at this period to do justice to a work that we may fairly term a pilot balloon, for the author evidently means this to point out the way to the shortest and best route to a thorough knowledge of music. As he progresses we shall recur to the present publication, which we do look upon as the best of its class yet in print."—Sunday Times.

"An ingenious and tasteful work, comprehending a large amount of information in a comparatively small space. Mr. Wade commences with an essay on 'The Genius of the Pianoforte,' claiming for that instrument a superiority over the Harp, the Guitar, and, in some respects, the Organ itself. He next traces the history of mechanical improvement in the construction of the instrument, and adds some pertinent advice to intending purchasers. He proceeds to give an easy rudimental introduction to the study of the Pianoforte, interspersed with exercises, partly original, and partly selected from popular melodies and the works of celebrated masters. Finally, he gives 'an easy introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint,' and a new and copious vocabulary of musical terms. The volume seems to us calculated to be very useful; and it is certainly ORNAMENTAL also, being handsomely printed and bound, and embellished with a striking portrait of the celebrated PIANIST, Franz Liszt."—The Watchman, October 9.

London: Published by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

POLKA LESSON BOOK, or Ball-room Guide.—Illustrated Price 1s, a complete Cours de Polka, with beautiful representations and correct instructions how to execute the various figures. This work contains the figures of all the Quadrilles, Gallopades, Mazourkas, Polonaises, Polkas, and all those dances adopted at Court.—Order Mitchell's Edition of any bookseller, or of the publisher, C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street; who sends the work (post-free) on receipt of 1s., or 12 Stamps.

THE NEW LIST of FELLOWS of the COLLEGE of SURGEONS.—No. II. of the MEDICAL TIMES (new Vol.) Ready This Day, contains the New List of Fellows, with an Editorial Article on the New Bill; new Lectures and Papers by Pinel, on Mental Diseases; Guthrie, F.R.S., on important points of Surgery; Dr. Rigby, on Midwifery; Dr. Costello, on Lithotrity; Dr. Corrigan, on select points of Medicine; Segalas, on Urinary Maladies; with a vast number of Original Papers, of great interest and value. Price 5d.; stamped, 6d.; or £1 5s. (in advance) per annum.

J. A. CARFRAE, Medical Times Office.

The Eighteenth Edition, considerably augmented, and corrected to the present time, 4s. 6d. bound, Illustrated by Maps and Plates,

GEOGRAPHY and HISTORY. By a LADY. For the Use of her own Children.—"Many omissions have been supplied, and much new matter inserted."—Advertisement to Eighteenth Edition.—LONGMAN and Co.; J. M. Richardson; Hamilton and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; Sherwood and Co.; Duncan and Malcolm; F. and J. Rivington; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; Houlston and Stoneman; S. Hodgson; Harvey and Darton; J. Jackson; C. Dolman; J. S. Hodson; and Souter and Law.

LEES' EDITION OF COMSTOCK'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

New edition, 18mo., price now 4s. 6d. bound, with 224 Illustrations,

A SYSTEM OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, in which the elements of that science are familiarly explained and adapted to the comprehension of young persons, with appropriate questions on each page for the examination of scholars. By JOHN L. COMSTOCK, M.D. Carefully revised, with Additions, by GEORGE LEES, A.M., &c. This work has been much used by medical students, chemists, architects, and others, who are compelled in their various pursuits to have some knowledge of the subjects of which it treats.

London: WHITTAKER and Co.; and SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.

FLUGEL'S GERMAN AND ENGLISH DICTIONARIES,

Adapted to the English Student.

FLUGEL'S COMPLETE DICTIONARY of the GERMAN and ENGLISH LANGUAGES, English-German and German-English. A new edition with great additions and improvements, particularly adapting it to the English student. By C. A. FEILING, Professor HEIMANN, and J. OXENFORD. In two thick volumes, large 8vo., 36s.

2. FLUGEL ABRIDGED. For younger Students, Travellers, &c. By C. A. FEILING and J. OXENFORD. 12mo., 9s. bound.

London: WHITTAKER and Co., DULAU and Co., and D. NUTT.

THE CHEAPEST GEOGRAPHY FOR CHILDREN.

With ten well-engraved maps, price 9d.,

WHITTAKER'S IMPROVED EDITION of PINNOCK'S CATECHISM of GEOGRAPHY, greatly enlarged and remodelled by G. H. SMITH, Esq., and illustrated by 10 Maps. Price 9d., sewed.—"Considering the number and excelleece of its illustrations, and the quantity of information conveyed in it, this is certainly the cheapest school book we know of. It is admirably arranged by one evidently profoundly acquainted with his subject, and has been remodelled to the scientific view now taken of the subject."—Monthly Magazine.—The CATECHISM, on the Original Plan (corrected to the present time), and illustrated with Nine Maps can also be had, price 9d.

WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria lane.

THE PIANISTA for JUVENILES, or Bijou for Beginners on the Pianoforte. No. I., price 4d. or 6d., post free, a choice selection of favourite, easy, and pleasing pieces, songs, &c., arranged in the most familiar style for young performers, by JAMES McEWEN. No. I. contains Seven Pieces:—The Nursery Dance, A Juvenile Passeul, Prince of Wales' New Polka, Pity the Sorrows of a Poor Old Man, Lilla's a Lady, Swiss Fortune-teller, and All round the Maypole. Also,

THE PIANO for OCTOBER, price 1s. or 1s. 4d. post free, Contains the only four really popular Polkas:—the Cerito Polka, Original Opera Polka, Court Polka, and the Drawing-room Polka, as danced at all the balls, &c. A beautiful original Song by Pendleton, Le Duc's Popular Autumnal Nosegay Quadrilles, and a new Medley Divertimento; the whole for 1s.; would cost singly 18s.

Published by DUNCOMBE, 10, Middle-row, Holborn; sold also by all Booksellers.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

On the 21st of October will be published, Vol. I., with fine Portrait, in 8vo, (to be comprised in about three vols.), to range with the Wellington Despatches, of

THE DESPATCHES and LETTERS of ADMIRAL LORD NELSON. Edited by Sir HARRIS NICOLAS, G.C.M.G. Although numerous Lives of the great naval hero have been written, no attempt has yet been made to collect his Despatches and Letters, and thus to render him, in a great degree, his own biographer. The value of such documents is shown by the publication of the Despatches of the Duke of Wellington, to which this work will be a fitting companion. Important as are the illustrations of naval history, which this collection will afford, during the most glorious period in its annals, the chief interest, for the public in general, will consist in the lights which it will throw on the private character of Nelson, without the glitter of biographical encomium, or the mistaken zeal of biographical suppressions.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE AUTHOR'S EDITIONS.

OLLENDORFF'S METHOD OF LEARNING to READ, WRITE, and SPEAK a LANGUAGE in six months.

1. ADAPTED to the FRENCH. Written expressly for the English Student. By H. G. OLLENDORFF. 8vo., price 16s. cloth.

2. ADAPTED to the GERMAN. Written expressly for the English Student. By H. G. OLLENDORFF. In two parts, price 16s. each, cloth. The parts sold separately.

3. KEYS to both FRENCH and GERMAN SYSTEMS, prepared by the Author. Price 7s. each, cloth lettered.

⁂ It is necessary for those who desire to avail themselves of the present method, to notice that these are the only English editions sanctioned by Mr. Ollendorff, and he deems any other totally inadequate for the purposes of English instruction, and for the elucidation of the method so strongly recommended by Captain Basil Hall and other eminent writers. They should be ordered with the publishers' name, and, to prevent errors, every copy of the author's edition is signed by himself.

London: WHITTAKER and Co., and DULAU and Co., and to be had of any Bookseller.

TO LADIES.—GRAFFTEY'S DEPILATORY, price 4s. 6d., is warranted to remove superfluous Hair on the face, neck, or arms, without risk of injury. The directions are simple, and lead to certain success. Small packets, for post, price 2s. 8d. free, may be obtained at S. Grafftey's Perfumery, Comb, and Brush Warehouse, 26, Warwick-street, Regent-street, where may also be obtained the only certain Dye for the Hair, viz., Grafftey's Pompeian Dye, price 5s. 6d., and the celebrated Balma Pompeiana, price 2s. 6d. Order "Grafftey's."

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

A BRONZED SPEAR and SCROLL FENDER for 15s.— RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are now offering an extensive assortment of Elegant Bronzed Fenders at prices, if compared with quality, 30 per cent. under any other house. Ornamental Iron Fenders, 3 feet, 4s. 6d; 3 feet 6 inches, 5s. 3d.; chamber fireirons, 1s. 9d. per set; parlour ditto, 3s. 6d.; superior ditto, from 6s. 6d. their stock also consists of London-made dish covers, superior table cutlery pure nickel silver spoons, forks, &c. Baths in great variety, and Furnishing Ironmongery of every description, every article of which is marked at such prices that will fully convince purchasers at their Warehouse of the great advantages resulting from cash payments. Their Illustrated Catalogue of prices may be had gratis, or sent post free to any part of the kingdom.—Established 1818.

WOOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies, it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured by EDWARD L. WOOLLASTON, Dover. Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Messrs. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Messrs. Evans and Lercher, Bartholomew-close; Mr. Snelling, 30, Fenchurch-street; and retailed by Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Messrs. Ball, 81, New Bond-street; Messrs. Fortnum and Mason, 182, Picadilly; and by all respectable Patent Medicine Vendors, Druggists, and Italian Warehousemen, in packets, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 5s.

ROYAL BIRMINGHAM AND MIDLAND COUNTIES ART-UNION.
PATRONS.
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN, and His Royal Highness Prince ALBERT.
Subscriptions—ONE GUINEA.

At the time of payment the subscriber will receive (in addition to a chance in the ballot, which will take place on or about Christmas next) the pair of superb Line Engravings by Edward Goodall, Esq., after paintings by D. Roberts, Esq., R.A., entitled "St. Paul's Cathedral—The Civic Procession on Lord Mayor's Day," and "Westminster Abbey and Bridge—The Debarkation on Lord Mayor's Day."

Prints may be had of the following Agents in London:—Messrs. Dimes and Elam, 91, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury; Mr. M'Lean, carver and gilder, Fleet-street; Mr. Paternoster, 13, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy square; Messrs. Windsor and Newton, 38, Rathbone place, Oxford-street; Mr. W. Wade, 86, Leadenhall street; Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill; Mr. Hugh Cunningham, 193, Strand; Mr. Jos. Green, 14, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital; Mr. Jas. Henry Moltino, 20, Pall-mall; Mr. T. Watkins, 16, Clark's-place, High-street, Islington; Mr. H. C. Lewis, 15, Gower-street North; Messrs. Roney, Rathbone-place; Mr David Thomas White, 28, Maddox-street, Hanover-square.

INTERESTING TO LADIES.

To Messrs. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London.

Percy-place, Landport, Portsmouth, April 4th, 1844.

Gentlemen,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you of the benefit I have derived from the use of your admirable Macassar Oil. About six months ago I found my hair getting daily more weak and thin, and much discoloured from a practice I had adopted of wetting it continually; fearing that I should lose it entirely, and hearing of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil, I have for some time past constantly used it, and the result is, that my hair is now perfectly restored and much improved in appearance and colour, having become thick, dark, and glossy; it also curls freely without the use of paper, which it never did before. To all my friends I have warmly recommended your Macassar Oil as an excellent restorative and preservative for the hair. As I have an objection to see my name in print, I beg you will not publish it; but you are at liberty to show this letter, or make any other use you please of it, and refer applicants to me, if necessary, in proof of the efficacy of your Macassar Oil. Your obedient servant, * * * * * * * * * * *

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL preserves and reproduces the Hair; prevents it from falling off or turning Grey; changes Grey Hair to its Original Colour; frees it from Scurf and Dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.

Ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL." All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS.

AS MONTHLY NURSE, or otherwise.—A LADY of the highest respectability, accustomed to sickness, and who has brought up a family of her own, begs to offer her services in the above situation, either in Town or Country. The most respectable references can be given.—Address, A. B., care of Mr. WOLF, 96, Hatton Garden.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, BEAUFORT-STREET, KING'S-ROAD, CHELSEA.—CHINA PIGS.—Some pure China Pigs just received direct from China: also some COCHIN CHINA FOWL. A great variety of Ornamental Water Fowl, Call Ducks for domesticating and attracting Wild Fowl, Black Swans, &c.; and at Messrs. BAKER'S, No. 3, Half-moon-passage, Gracechurch-street.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.— MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dress-making in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and executing in the most finished style, in SIX LESSONS for ONE GUINEA. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers wanted.

BARRELLED OYSTERS, of the very best quality, closely packed, from 4s. 6d. to 6s. per barrel, at a moment's notice, and forwarded to all parts of the Kingdom, by H. ADAMSON, FISHMONGER, 333, OXFORD-STREET (established upwards of 40 years), being one door from Griffin's, Green Man and Still universal Coach and Booking Office.

N.B.—Country orders for Fish most carefully attended to.

ASK for the "POTOSIAN LIQUID SILVER," 1s. per bottle; or four in one, 3s. The only lasting preparation for resilvering WORN-OUT PLATED ARTICLES, and rendering them quite equal to new, by depositing a layer of pure silver upon the surface. The cost a few pence, the effect instant, and the operation so simple that it may be performed by a child.—SMITH and Co., sole proprietors, opposite Norfolk-street, Strand, where specimens and the operation may be seen. Sold also by SUTTON and Co., Bow Church-yard.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented and effectually removed in Youth and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, or full particulars, on receiving a postage stamp.

H. WALKER'S NEEDLES (by authority, the "Queen's Own,") have large eyes, easily threaded, (even by blind persons), and improved point, temper, and finish. Each paper is labelled with a likeness of her Majesty, or his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in relief, on coloured grounds. Every quality of Needles, Fish Hooks, Hooks and Eyes, Steel Pens, &c., for shipping. These Needles or Pens for the home trade are sent free, by post, to any respectable dealer, on receipt of 13 penny stamps for every 1s. value.—H. WALKER, Manufacturer to the Queen, 1, (late 20), Maiden-lane, Wood-street, London.

CABBURN'S OIL for RHEUMATISM, &c.—Twenty Thou-sand Persons, and upwards, have received benefit, from the infant to the very aged adult, from CABBURN'S Oil, an extraordinary Balsamic preparation for the cure of Rheumatism, Gout, Spinal Affections, Weakness, &c. It is positively under the immediate sanction and recommendation of the Faculty, as may be seen by important testimonies in Bradshaw's Railway Guides. Sold in bottles, 2s. 8d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., at Mr. CABBURN'S Dispensary, King's Cross, London, and by all respectable vendors in the kingdom.—Ask for CABBURN'S Oil for the cure of Rheumatism, &c.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly-appreciated appendage of the British toilet has for nearly a century past maintained unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the Skin, together with the valuable properties of a Preserver and Sustainer of the Complexion of the most congenial nature, removing every trace of Sallowness and Discoloration, and promoting the Transparency and Brightness of the Skin which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion.—"ROBT. SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

BRITISH LINE of STEAM NAVIGATION between ENGLAND and CONSTANTINOPLE and the LEVANT.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's steam-ship BRAGANZA, of 1000 tons, and 300-horse power, will start from Southampton on the 25th of October inst., for ATHENS, Smyrna, and Constantinople, calling at Gibraltar and Malta, returning to England by the same route about the 10th of November. The vessel has been newly fitted up expressly for the Levant trade, and has very superior passenger accommodation. For further particulars apply at the Company's Offices, 51, St. Mary-axe, London, and 57, High street, Southampton; also at 33, Regent-circus.

MONEY. — GRAND DISTRIBUTION OF £70,170 Sterling. Authorised by his Imperial Majesty and the Government of Austria.—The Next DRAWING of the IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN LOAN will take place at VIENNA, on the 2nd December, and be paid in British Money. There are 700 Prizes of £23,000, £5000, &c.; the lowest, £50. A few Tickets, £3 each; Shares, 12s., with Prospectus; six, Tickets for £15, may be obtained of Messrs. A. J. STRAUS and Co., Bankers and Receivers General, Office, 26, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London. Remittance can be made by Post-office order. Government Lists of the Drawing will be sent to each Purchaser. Office hours from Twelve till Three.

DANCING, CALISTHENICS, AND ORTHOPEDICAL EXERCISES.—Mrs. FREDERICK FINNEY (late Miss Kenward) respectfully informs the nobility and gentry that she has returned from Paris with the newest collection of Continental Dances, as taught and composed expressly for her by M. Coralli, Premier Artiste, Académie Royale. Ladies who do not approve of dancing, can, for the improvement of their figures, receive lessons on the Calisthenics and Orthopedical Exercises, and also be prepared for presentation at Court. Mrs. Finney's Academy will be held at the Hanover-square Rooms, in November, on Mondays and Thursdays, and at her own house on Wednesdays.—Schools and Private Families attended.—For terms, address Mrs. Frederick Finney, Tottenham-green.

THE ORTHOCHRONOGRAPH.—A Patent Instrument to determine the Correct Performance of Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, wherever the observer may be situated. Manufactured by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty. Its simplicity, portability, and the ease with which results are obtained, will enable the most inexperienced person to ascertain mean time to a correctness not hitherto obtained but by those experienced in the use of astronomical instruments. The adjustment of the Orthochronograph for use may be effected in two minutes on its removal from the case. It was introduced by Dr. Robinson, astronomer, at the late meeting of the British Association, and met with universal approbation. Price £4 10s. An extensive and superior stock of Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks.—WEBSTER and SON, 74, Cornhill, London.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn-out Plated Articles, by immediately depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than the ordinary process of cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious, as it deposits nothing but Pure Silver. It has been highly approved by Dr Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, London; and by Messrs. JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-street, Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each; and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations; the Genuine are all Signed on the wrapper, by I. D. COGAN and R. GILLO.

TEETH.—Mastication and Articulation Improved and Guaranteed.—Messrs. DAVIS, Surgeon-Dentists, 123, Pall-mall, opposite the Haymarket, and 104, Fleet-street (entrance, New Bridge-street,) continue to restore DECAYED TEETH, however painful, with celebrated mineral hermasticon, instantly Curing Toothache, rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. Messrs. D. call the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public to their newly-discovered Silicious Teeth, under the patronage of the Royal Family, guaranteed never to discolour, break or decay, being of surpassing beauty, and fixed without springs or wires, without extracting the old stumps, or giving any pain. A single tooth, 5s.; a set, £5; filling decayed teeth, 2s. 6d. Three months' trial given. Loose Teeth fastened. Scurvy in the Gums effectually cured. Teeth repaired and misfits remodelled, equal to new.—N.B. Removed from 21, Fleet-street.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.— THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting, Paper-hanging, and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

LONDON and BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—NOTICE.— On and after the 1st of OCTOBER next, a TRAIN for the CONVEYANCE of THIRD CLASS PASSENGERS, at a PENNY PER PASSENGER PER MILE, will LEAVE the EUSTON STATION DAILY (SUNDAYS INCLUDED), at Seven in the Morning, arriving at Three o'Clock in the Afternoon in Birmingham, where a Third Class Train will be in readiness to carry Passengers forward to Liverpool, Manchester, &c., by the Grand Junction Railway, at the same price. The RETURN TRAIN will leave BIRMINGHAM DAILY at Half-past Two in the Afternoon, and bring on the Passengers by the Third Class Train from the Grand Junction Railway, arriving in London at a Quarter before Ten o'Clock. By Order, (Signed) R. CREED, Secretary.

Euston Station, 18th September, 1844.

LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.— NOTICE.—REDUCTION OF FARES AND TOLLS.—On and after Tuesday the 1st October, a Reduction will be made in the Fares of Passengers, and in the charges on Carriages, Horses, and Goods, conveyed over this railway.

The passengers fares will be:—

1st Class, by the 10 A.M. down and 1h. 30m. P.M. up Trains (not conveying Second Class Passengers) for the whole distance between London and Birmingham	30s each.
1st Class, by all other Trains	27s —
2nd Class, by all other Trains	18s —
3rd Class, by one daily Train up and down (at the rate of 1d. per mile) ..	9s. 5d.

and in proportion for intermediate distances.

Further particulars may be obtained on application. By order,
Office, Euston Station, Sept. 22, 1844. R. CREED, Secretary.

NOTE.—The time of departure of the last up Train from Birmingham will, from the 1st October, be changed from Half-past Five to Six o'clock, P.M.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN and COMPLEXION. This Royally Patronized and universally adopted Specific is composed chiefly of extracts from the most rare flowers and herbs of an eastern clime, and perfectly free from all mineral admixture. It exerts the most soothing, gentle, cooling, and purifying action on the skin; and most effectually dissipates all Redness, Tan, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the Cheek, and the softness and delicacy it induces on the Hands, Arms and Neck, render it indispensable to every toilet. It affords immediate relief in cases of Sunburn, Stings of Insects, or incidental Inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

CAUTION.—Many Shopkeepers vend the most spurious trash under the title of "Genuine" Kalydor, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR" are on the Wrapper; and A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, engraved (by Authority) on the Government Stamp affixed on each bottle. ⁂ All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!

COD LIVER OIL.—The following recent and well testified case of cure, will establish the value of Cod Liver Oil, as a remedial agent in the cure of Gout, Rheumatism, Scrofula, &c.

To MESSRS. JONES, and CO.

Sept. 1844.

Gentlemen,—If my case is of any value to you I beg you will make the best use of it, as I have suffered too much from Gout and Rheumatism not to have the strongest sympathy for all who may be similarly afflicted. I purchased only one bottle of your Cod Liver Oil, and after a few applications was completely cured. I could say much in praise of this miraculous remedy, and shall be happy to reply to all enquiries.

I am, Gentlemen, your thankful and obedient servant,
HENRY W. PITMAN.

Moore's Sporting Gallery, St. Martin's-lane London.

CAUTION.—Messrs. JONES and Co. having been appointed as the sole mercantile Agents for this remedy by the only manufacturer, an eminent chemist and practitioner, residing on the Continent, they beg to state that every bottle sent from their establishment will be contained in a wrapper, bearing a fac-simile of their signature, and that the outside wrapper will be further protected by the stamp and address, "JONES and Co., 201, Strand, London."

Wholesale Agents: BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street; E. EDWARDS, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; SUTTON and Co., Bow Churchyard. Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

SIX POUNDS of TEA, whether Black or Green, for 17s.; and small bright Gunpowder, in 12lb. boxes, at 4s. 6d. per lb.—EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY'S OFFICES, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

JONES' £4 4s SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

PECUNIARY ADVANCES may be made immediately, to persons of respectability, eldest sons, parties entitled to life interests under settlements, or officers in the army, by a gentleman who has several large sums to invest in such amounts as may be required. Address HERBERT JOHNSTONE, Esq., 28, Gilbert-street, Grosvenor-square.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to ladies and gentlemen wishing privacy and expedition. An evening academy on Mondays and Fridays. A juvenile academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Lessons in the Polka and Valse a Deux Temps every day. Terms may be had on application as above. The rooms may be engaged by private parties.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING is entirely free from any unpleasant smell; gives a lasting polish, equal to patent leather; causes boots and shoes to be much more durable and soft, and alleviates the pain arising from corns and tender feet.—Sold in bottles, at 1s., 1s. 6d.; and paste, in tins, at 6d.—London: 48, St. James's-street. Edinburgh: Duncan and Co., 59, Princes-street. Liverpool: T. C. Parsons, 28, Bold-street.

IMPROVED CAMPHINE LAMPS; also ENGLISH'S PATENT CAMPHINE.—Public attention is respectfully solicited to E. LEWIS'S OIL and ITALIAN WAREHOUSE, 42, High-street, Marylebone, where may be obtained the new Lamps with every recent improvement, by which they are rendered perfect and superior to anything before seen. A trial allowed before purchasing. Lewis's Patent Wax Candles 11d. per lb.; Price's Composite, 10½d. per lb.; Kempton's Moulds, 8d. per lb. These Candles are warranted to burn without snuffing.

SILVER FLAT HORIZONTAL WATCHES, carefully finished, with engine-turned cases, jewelled in four holes, going barrel to continue the action of the watch while winding, are offered, price three and a half guineas each. These elegant little watches will be found to perform very correctly, and a printed undertaking is given with fixed terms on which they will always receive any attention required.—T. COX SAVORY, Watchmaker, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London. N.B. Secondhand watches purchased in exchange.

CROSBY HALL VAULTS, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within. —CURRALL and SON beg to invite public notice to their STOCK of OLD BOTTLED WINES: they being desirous to secure that patronage which WINES of the first quality, at fair and remunerating profits, will maintain, respectfully submit the annexed list of cash prices:—Port, old bottled, 36s. and 42s.; Do., six years in bottle, 48s.; Do., superior draught, 28s. and 33s.; Sherries, pale and brown, 36s.; Do., do., 42s. to 48s.; Bucellas, 32s.; Sherry (excellent dinner wine), 28s.; Marsala, 24s. per dozen. Bottles, 2s. 6d. per dozen; hampers, 1s. each. ⁂ Marsala, per Quarter Pipe, £11 11s.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

SUPERIOR WINTER WATERPROOF WRAPPERS, OUTSIDE GARMENTS of all kinds, SHOOTING JACKETS, &c.—An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials, for the present season, now ready; also, of BERDOE'S well-known and much-approved VENTILATING FROCK, for all seasons, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. As winter approaches, attention is again invited to the Advertiser's VENTILATING WATERPROOF, which renders any garment thoroughly impervious to rain: this fact is established beyond all contradiction, by more than six years' extensive and most successful trial.—W. BERDOE, TAILOR, WATERPROOFER, &c., 69, CORNHILL (North side).

METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY—ESTABLISHED 1839. Offices, No. 1, Craven-street, Strand, London. Open from Eleven till Three o'clock daily. Loans are advanced by the Company on the security of two responsible housekeepers, in sums of £10 10s., £15, £20, £25, £30, £35, £40, £45, and £50, for periods of twenty-five weeks, at 2½ per cent., or of fifty weeks, at 5 per cent., at the option of the borrowers, to be repaid by weekly instalments. If the securities are approved by the directors at their weekly meeting, the loans are immediately advanced. Amounts exceeding £50 are advanced by special agreement with the directors. Forms of application, containing the rules and regulations, may be had at any hour of the day, price 2d.

BICKLEY FARM, BROMLEY, KENT. —IMPORTANT STOCK SALE, consisting of upwards of 400 capital full-mouthed Sussex Down Ewes fit for slaughter, a small quantity of Lambs; 25 Galloway Bullocks, forward in condition; 10 splendid dappled red and white Ayrshire Cows in calf; 1 pure bred Alderney Cow in calf; 3 half-bred ditto in calf; 2 three-year-old Ayrshire Heifers, 2 two-year-old ditto, 3 two year Ayrshire Steers, 10 year-old ditto, 9 weanling ditto, 2 handsome well bred and powerful bay Cart Colts rising 3, fit for the London Trade, and about 50 head of Swine (various) of superior breed, which Mr. SEPPINGS is instructed to SELL BY AUCTION, on THURSDAY, the 17th day of OCTOBER, 1844, in Lots. The above valuable Stock is well known, and was the property of John Wells, Esq. It will be found worthy the notice of the Public, and is to be Sold without reserve, in consequence of the Proprietor having determined to Let this highly cultivated Farm for a term of years. A Luncheon will be provided for the company at Twelve o'Clock on the premises, and the Sale will commence at One precisely. Catalogues will be ready for distribution seven days prior to the Auction, at the White Hart, Bell, and Swan Hotels, Bromley; at the Place of Sale; and at the Offices of Messrs. SEPPINGS and JONES, 1, Exchange-street, Norwich; and the Terrace, Swaffham, Norfolk.

TO BE LET for a Term of Years, with Immediate Possession, the BICKLEY FARM, Bromley, Kent, containing 474a 3r. 32p. Is situated in the most healthy and delightful part of the county, about ten miles of London-bridge, and of Greenwich, Deptford, Woolwich, and Croydon, about six miles. This important, well fenced, and highly cultivated Farm has been, till within the last few months, in the occupation of John Wells, Esq. (the late Proprietor) for many years, under the superintendence and judicious management of Mr. Mack, the Steward, and upon which neither capital, talent, nor industry have been wanting. It contains of Arable Land, 279a. 2r. 34p.; and of Pasture Land, 195a 0r. 38p., including the Park; is subject to an Annual Rent Charge, in lieu of the great and small Tithes, and the Poor's-rates are low. The Hirer will have the option of taking by Valuation all the agricultural Horses, Harness, Carriages, Implements, Farming Utensils, &c. The Hay, Straw, Chaff, and Fodder, the Seed and Tillages, Old and New Layers, Muck, Dung, and Compost, Seed Wheat, Ploughings, Labour, &c., to be taken by Valuation, in the usual way. Mr. MANNING, Surveyor, Swann Inn, Bromley, will shew the Farm, and furnish particulars of the quantities; and Mr. SEPPINGS, the Agent for the property, will be at the Bickley Farming Stock Sale, on the 17th instant, and at the White Hart Hotel, Bromley, the following day, when he will be happy to treat with any eligible and responsible person wishing to hire so important an occupation; or any letter addressed previously to the 17th instant, to Messrs. SEPPINGS and JONES, at their Offices, 1, Exchange-street, Norwich, or the Terrace, Swaffham, Norfolk, will have immediate attention.

SELF-MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.

No longer let those who are dwellers afar,
Themselves from the Warehouse of MOSES debar.
By adopting our plan, which has never a failure,
Ev'ry gentleman now may become his own Tailor!

E. MOSES and SON are desirous of directing especial attention to their plan of "Self-Measurement," The extreme simplicity and the minute exactness of this admirable plan are such as cannot fail to answer the purpose designed. No failure in point of fit can arise from its use; or, should anything of the kind occur, the proprietors will hold themselves responsible. Thousands are thus enabled to avail themselves of the choice Clothing of MOSES and SON, without any inconvenience arising from distance, &c. A Book with a wood-cut and full directions may be obtained on application (gratis) and free of postage. Residents in the country cannot do better than avail themselves of so favourable an opportunity of purchasing at the greatest Tailoring Establishment in the Kingdom.

READY-MADE.	£	s.	d.
Shooting Coats, in every variety, from	0	10	0
Velveteen do., 7 pockets ..	0	18	6
Tweed Taglionis	0	8	6
Ditto, silk facings, collar and cuffs	0	16	0
Cashmarette Coats, in every shape, handsomely trimmed, from ..	1	1	0
An immense stock of Blouses ..	0	3	6
Summer Vests	0	2	6
Cashmarette and Persian do., in every variety from 3s. to	0	8	6
Black Satin Vests	0	6	6
Cloth do.	0	4	6
Cloth Trousers	0	9	0
Single-milled Doe do., from ..	0	11	0
A great variety of Summer do. ..	0	7	0
Dress Coat, edged	1	0	0
Frock do. do.	1	4	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s.	d
Sporting Coats in the most approved style	0	13	6
Velveteen do., 7 Pockets ..	1	3	0
Tweed Coats trimmed with silk ..	0	16	0
Cahmere fine Saxony do. ..	1	3	0
Cashmarette, new and improved article, warranted waterproof, trimmed with silk, collar, cuffs, &c.	1	18	0
Quilting Vests 7s. each, or 3 for	1	0	0
Cashmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	9	0
Trousers adapted for the season	0	9	6
Mill'd Victoria and plain Doe do	0	17	0
Best quality West of England ..	1	3	0
Super Black do. do	0	16	0
Best Black dress do	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Do. do. best manufactured ..	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Do. do., best manufactured ..	3	3	0

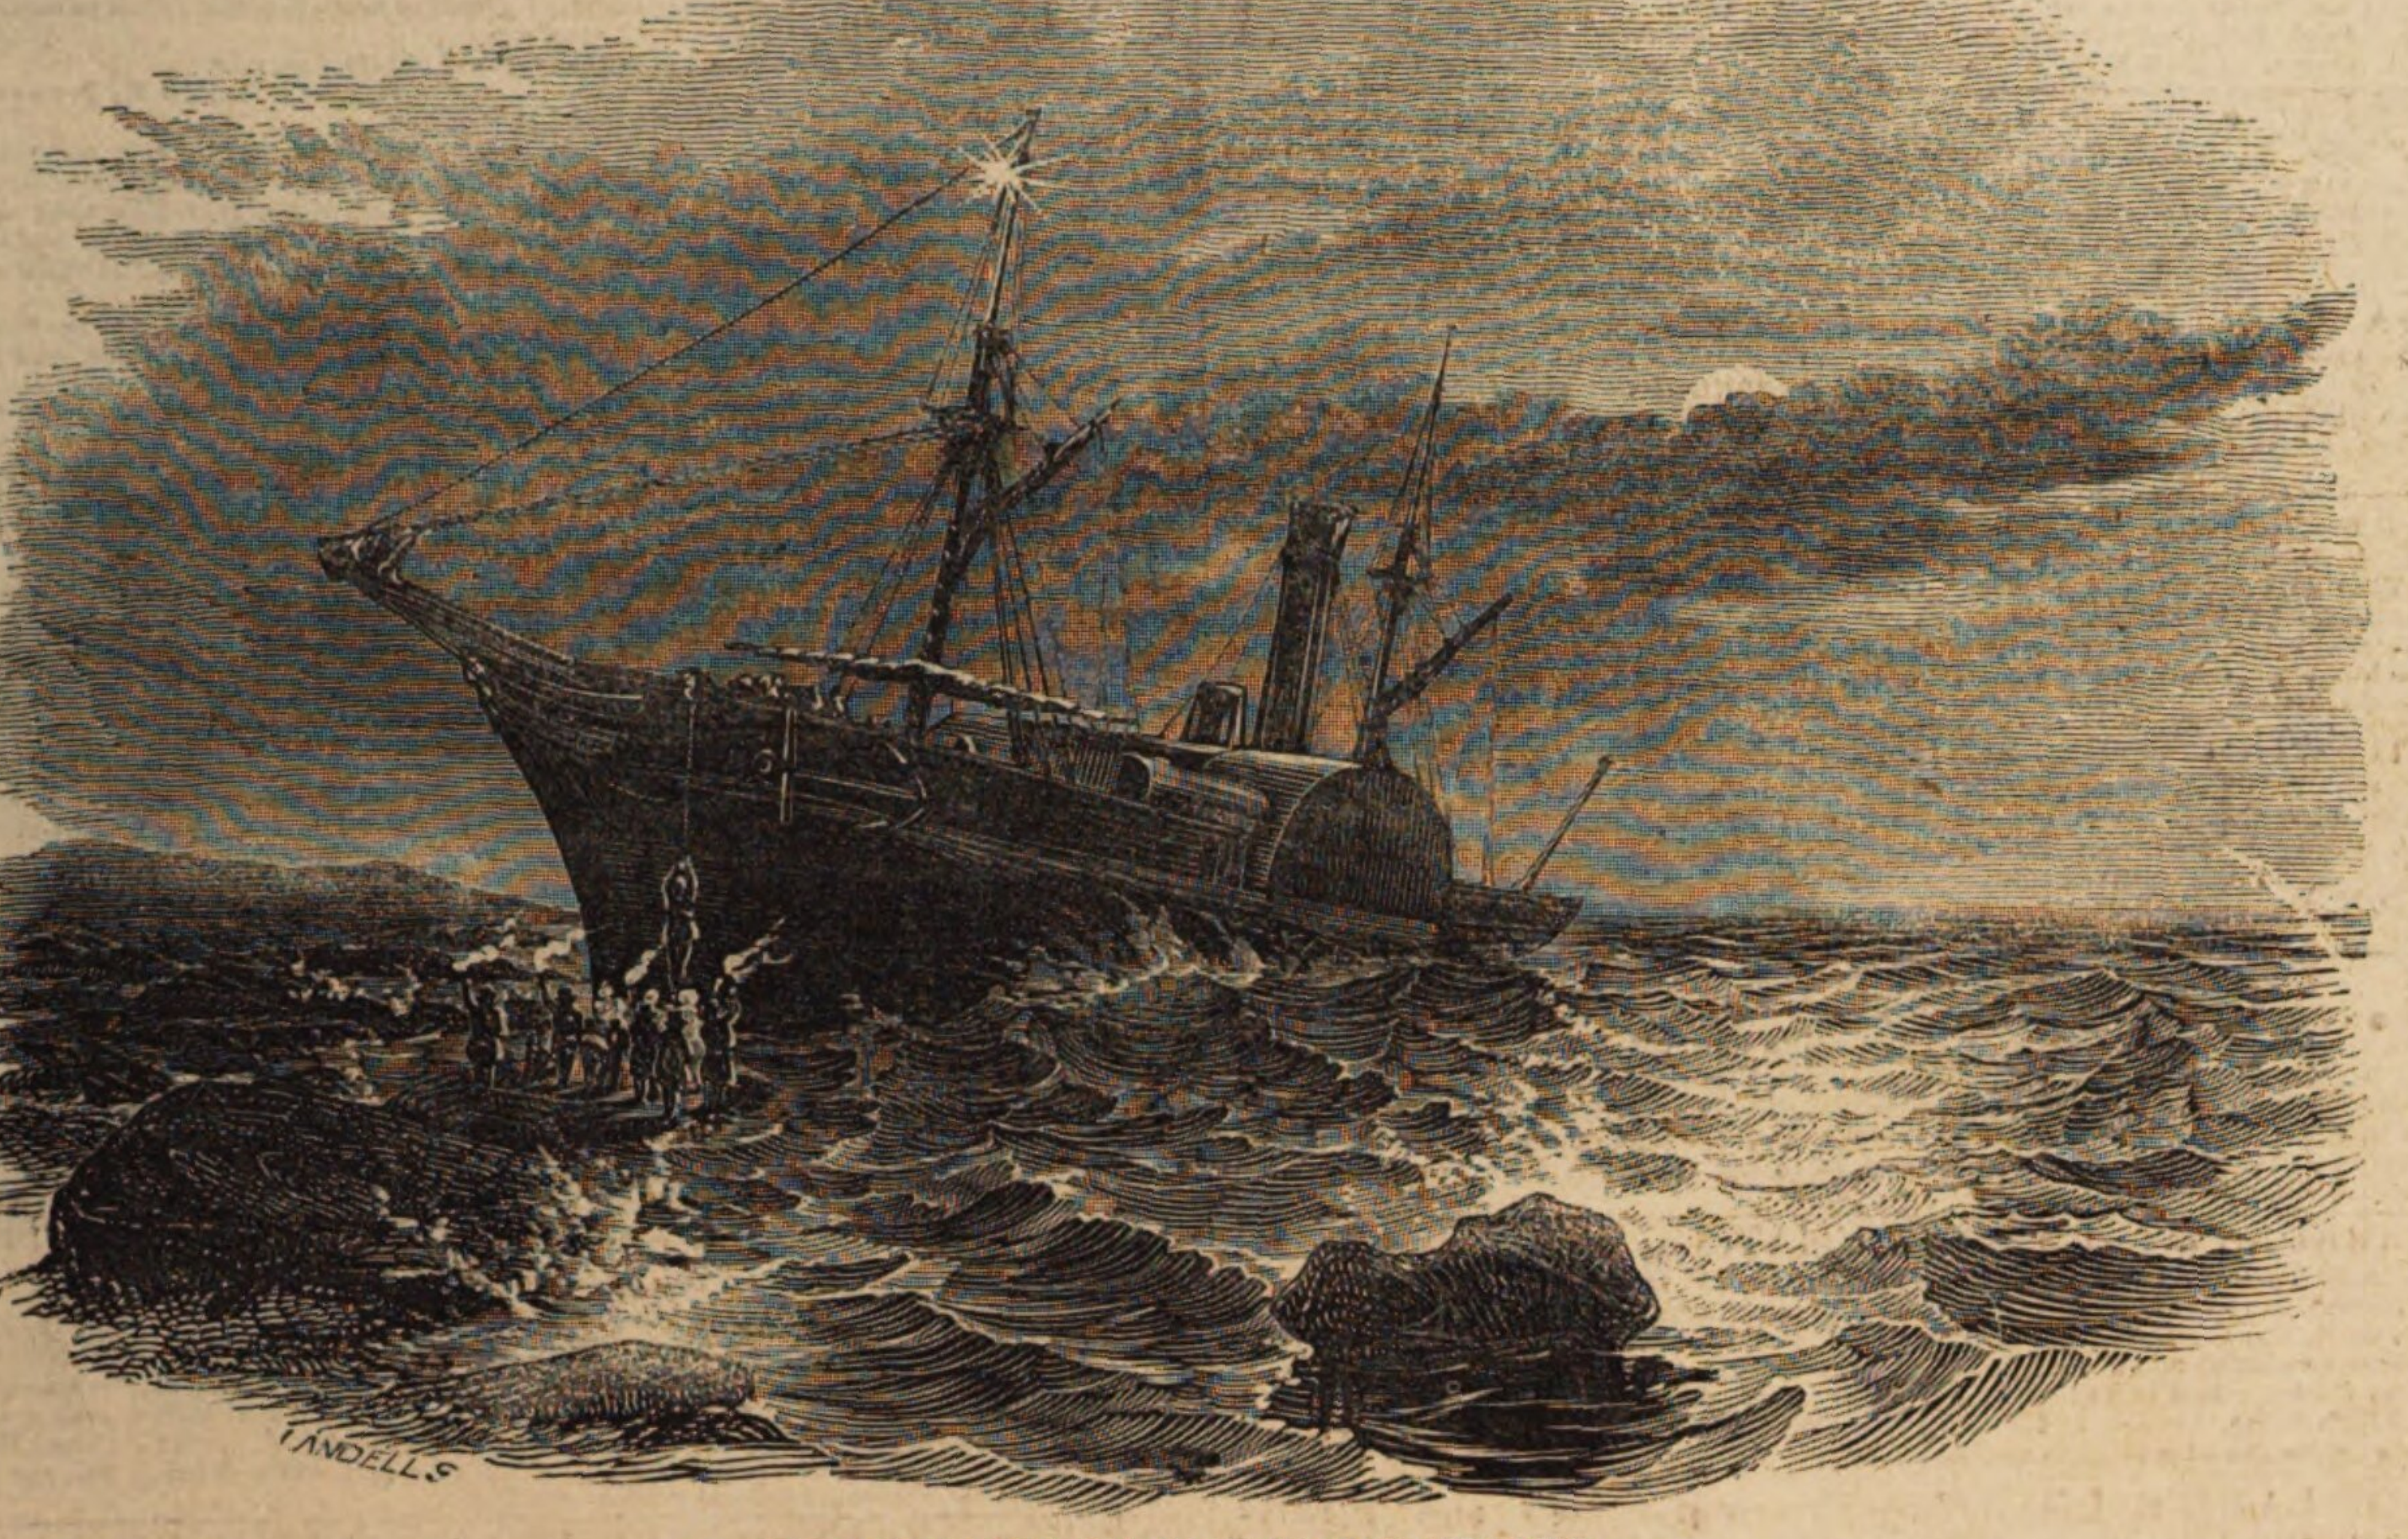
MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion with any other house; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing should (to prevent disappointments, &c.) call at, or send to, 154 Minories; or 86, Aldgate opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.



WRECK OF THE WINDSOR CASTLE STEAMER.

WRECK OF THE WINDSOR CASTLE STEAMER.

In our late edition of last week's journal, we briefly recorded this appalling accident. We now proceed to detail the circumstances, illustrated with a sketch of the vessel by our artist, Mr. Landells, who was a passenger for the purpose of sketching the closing incidents of the Royal Visit to Scotland.

It appears that the Windsor Castle sailed from Granton to Dundee on Tuesday morning, with a great number of passengers, to witness the embarkation of the Queen. The passage to Dundee was performed both safely and with expedition, and about four o'clock in the afternoon the Windsor Castle left the west protection wall of Dundee with passengers to the number of nearly 250, on her return home. The vessel steered directly out to the royal squadron, which had not yet got under weigh, and sailed five or six times round the Albert and Victoria, in order to gratify the passengers with a view of her Majesty and her royal consort, both of whom appeared on the deck, and graciously acknowledged the enthusiastic and oft-repeated cheers of those on board the Windsor Castle.

The royal yacht left the roadstead at half-past four o'clock, followed by the other steam-vessels, and by the Windsor Castle. When off the town of St. Andrew's, the Victoria and Albert, followed by the Black Eagle, the Princess Alice, the Stromboli, and the Eclair, were seen far a-head, rapidly fading from the sight. It was now half-past seven o'clock; the vessel had reached the East Neuk of Fife, and all things were going on safely, when a cry was heard from those in the forecastle to stop and back the engine, which was scarcely done when the vessel, still under the impulse of its former velocity, came with a tremendous crash against the beacon on the North Carr Rock. Instantaneously the air was rent with shrieks from the women and children, the men rushing backwards and forwards in great confusion. Some passengers clung to each other, appalled with the prospect of immediate destruction; others, with great presence of mind, began to lay hold of carpet-stools, pieces of wood, and other lumber lying on the decks, by which they might support themselves in the event of the vessel sinking, while several gentlemen divested themselves of nearly all their clothes, so that they might with more chance of success be able to sustain themselves on the ocean. At the moment the vessel struck, a large party were below at dinner. When the sea-water had attained a considerable depth in the engine-room and the main cabin, the vessel lurched to one side; upon observing which, the passengers rushed to the high side of the vessel, which was thus swung over to the same side, causing the passengers to betake themselves again to the opposite side; and thus the vessel was kept rolling from side to side, the sea water being by the motion lashed up on either side of the vessel's hold. In this awful and helpless condition, the helm was put hard a-port; and after a lapse of nearly twenty minutes, passed in gloomy suspense, the Windsor Castle grounded, most providentially, as was afterwards found, between two large rocks, a little to the east of Kilminning, and about two miles from Crail. The only boat belonging to the steamer was then lowered, by which the female passengers were conveyed ashore in six voyages. Boats and other aid were then obtained from Crail, and the remainder of the passengers were providentially landed in safety. Up to this time the weather had continued favourable; but it now began to blow a violent gale, which continued all night, causing a heavy sea to beat against the vessel; consequently, the steamer, on the return of the tide, shifted from its first position, and was driven violently on a ledge of rocks close by, against which it continued to grate till it was broken in the back, and became a total wreck. It is stated that had the vessel struck the North Carr Rock stem on, she would immediately have split in two. As it was, she made a sliding stroke over the rock, some of the iron staunchions of the beacon, by the concussion, opened up the joining of two plates immediately under the bulkhead, through which the water rushed into the vessel.

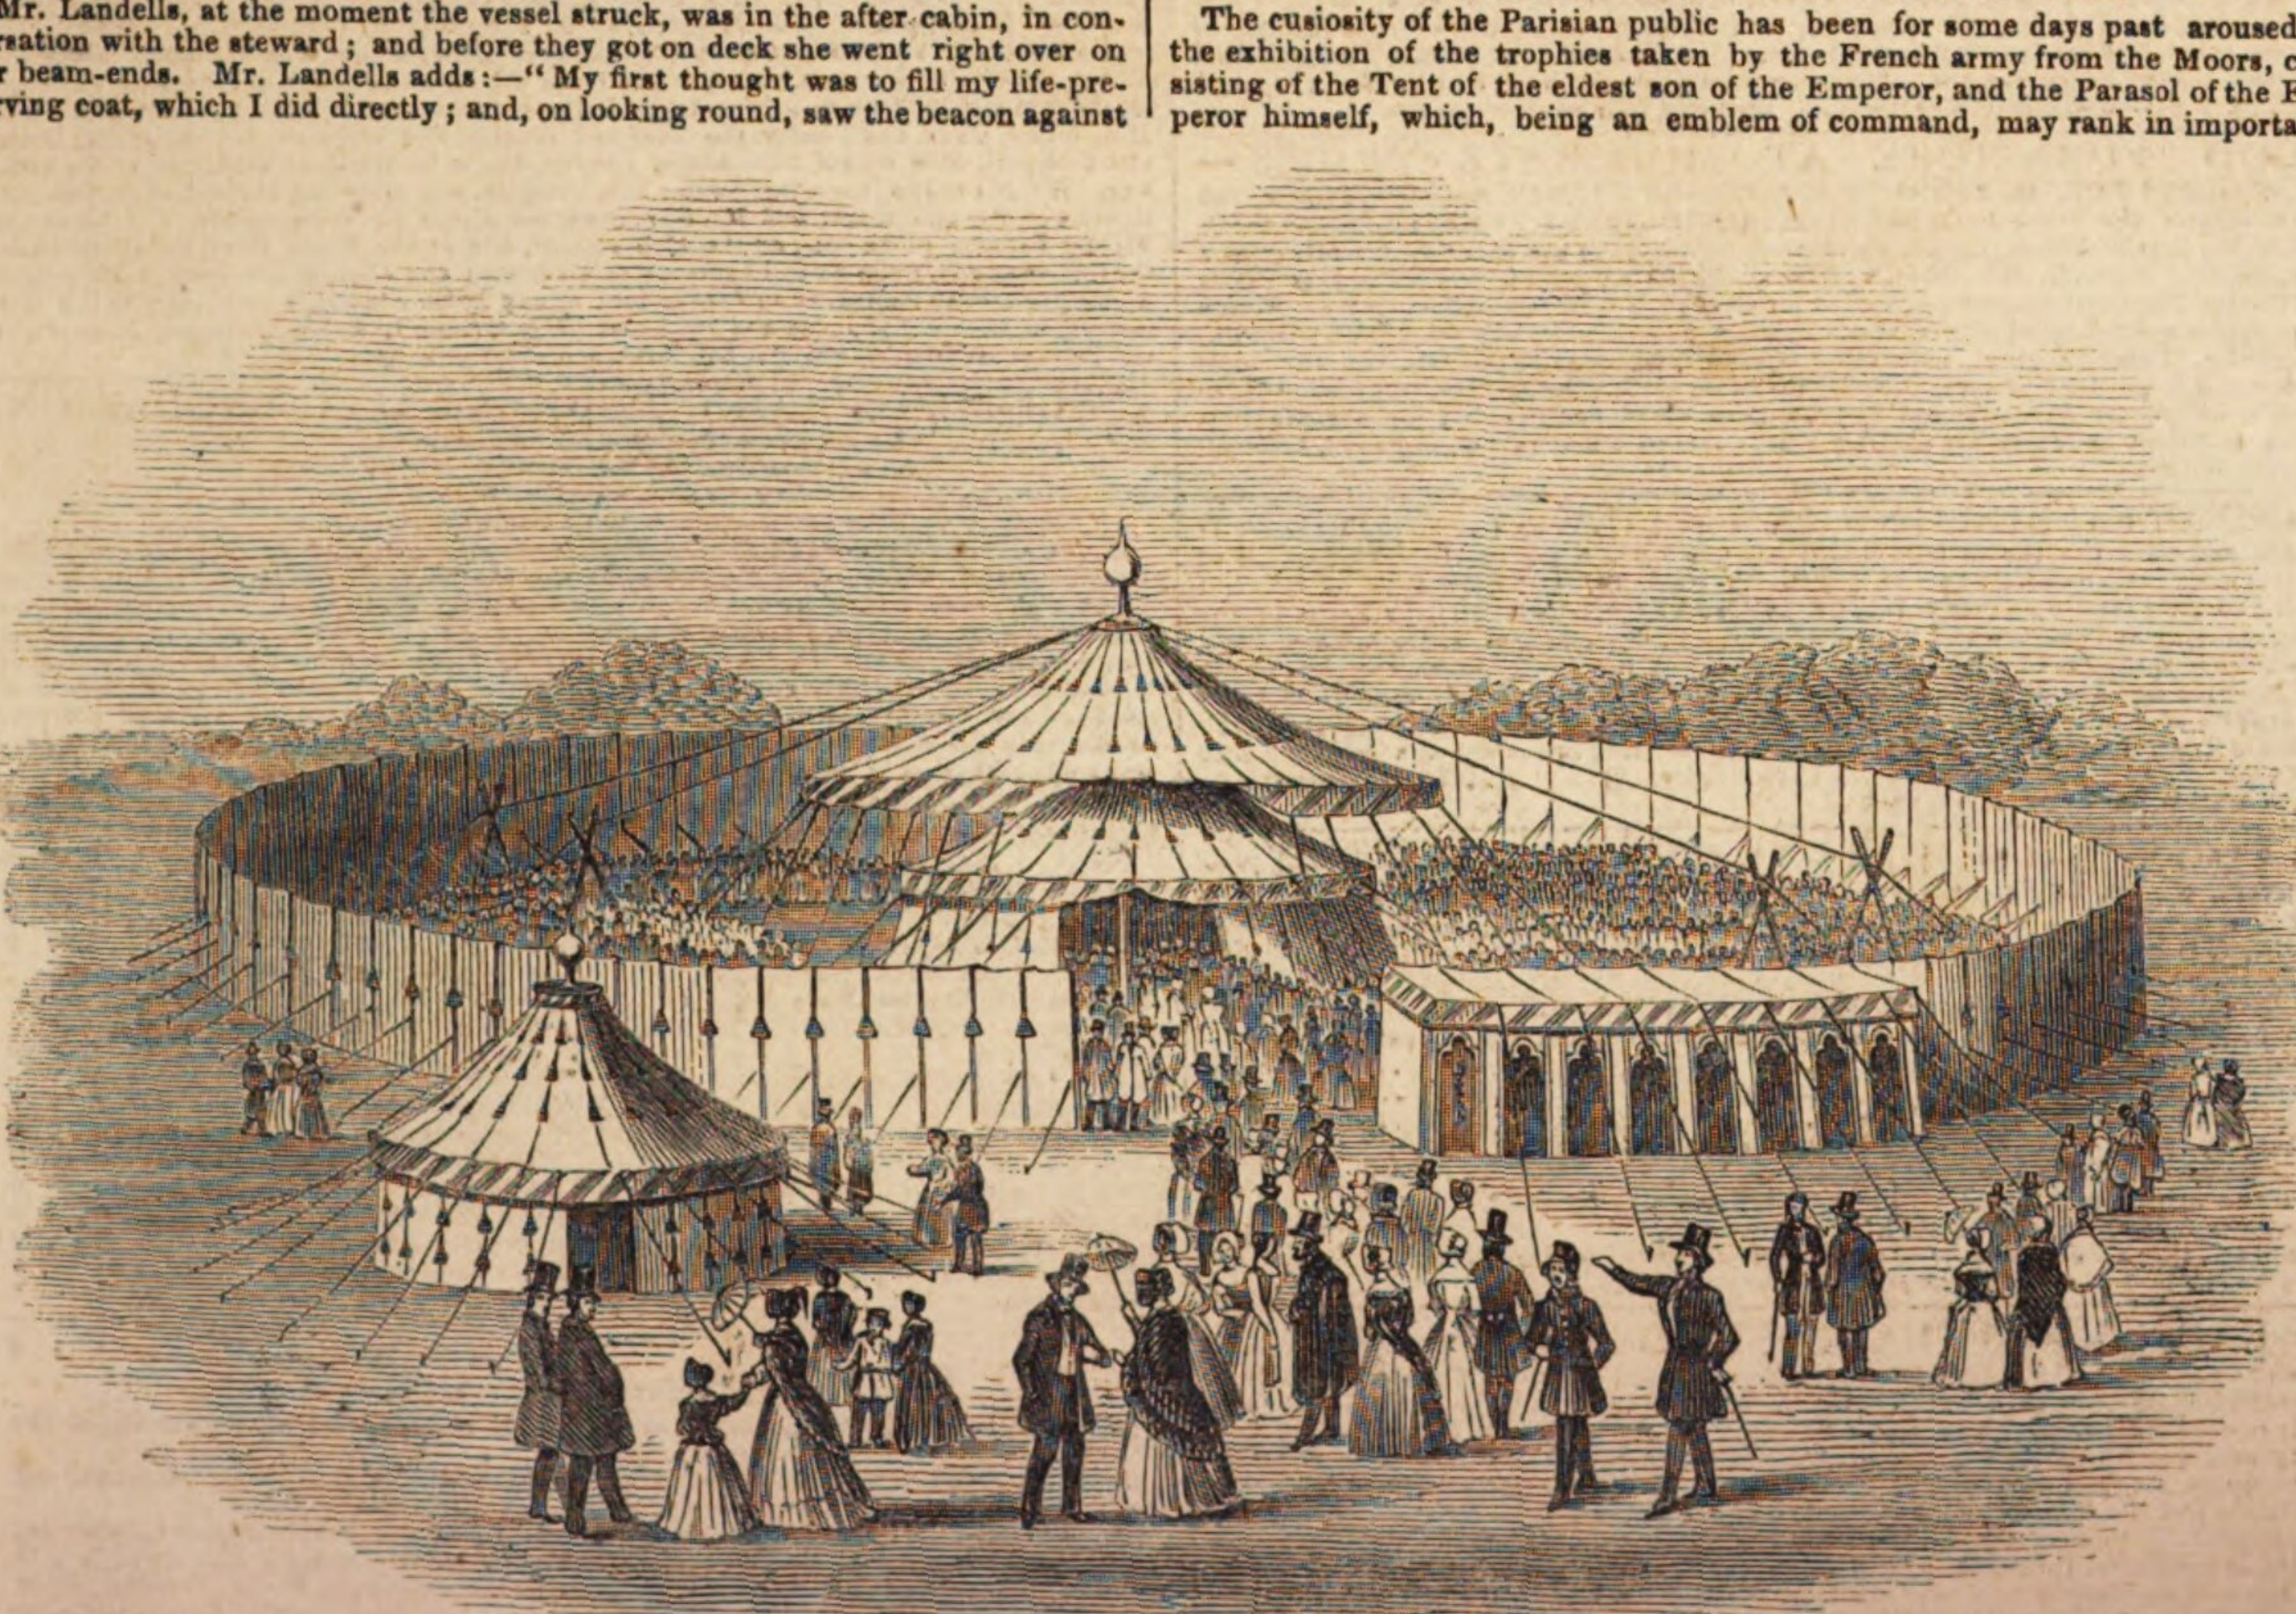
The Windsor Castle is stated to have been built on the Clyde, and to have been one of the strongest iron vessels of her size afloat.

Mr. Landells, at the moment the vessel struck, was in the after-cabin, in conversation with the steward; and before they got on deck she went right over on her beam-ends. Mr. Landells adds:—"My first thought was to fill my life-preserving coat, which I did directly; and, on looking round, saw the beacon against which we had struck, which I at first took for the funnel of another steamer, which I supposed we had run foul of. The captain immediately ordered her head to be put in shore, and we made all speed towards it. By this time I had mounted to the top of the paddle-box, where I remained till we came in sight of land, when all fear left me. I cannot give you any idea of the scene on deck: all were looking with eager eyes towards the shore, except a group of perhaps twenty or thirty persons, that seemed to have given way to complete despair, yelling, shouting, and ringing their hands. In the fore part of the ship, I saw twelve persons holding on by a plank. They had lifted one end off the deck, and placed it on the gunwale of the ship: thus they patiently waited the result. On the vessel being stopped, the screams were again as loud and terrific as when we first struck; the ship gave one or two rolls, and then settled very quietly upon the rock. Three large fishing-boats from Crail came very quickly towards us, having the wind and tide in their favour. When they left, there were yet about ten or twelve of us remaining on deck. The boatmen promised to return as soon as they could; they had got about two miles to go before they could land, and we had no hope of getting off till they returned. As the tide had fallen, so that neither the small boat nor the large one could land near the wreck, I now went forward with some friends on board to see what sort of a place we were in. The moon got out, and we were delighted to see the vessel was quite dry at the bows. I then got down from the bows by a rope and landed safely; several people came towards us with torches. I got my bag and coat thrown down to me, and while my friends were getting out, I made the sketch which you will have in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS this week. It was a romantic scene: the huge black-looking ship, the moon lighting the sea, the black rocks, and the people with torches, altogether made a fine effect. To get to the shore was yet a difficult task, as the rocks were so very rough; but we succeeded and got to our inn. I went down to the wreck next morning, and was surprised to find it covered with water. I waited till the tide went down a little, and got a boat, and went on board to see if I could save my box. The vessel had broken in two, and every thing was floating about in the greatest confusion; she had a pretty cabin, and it was quite painful to see the beautiful furniture and fittings floatings about at the mercy of the sea. We saved a few passengers' luggage, but I could not find my own, and returned to shore, thinking it had washed away. On my landing, one of the Coastguard men told me there were two boxes at a cottage a little way off, and, to my joy, one of them was mine. I put it on my shoulder, and had to carry it about three miles along a coast, the like of which I never saw before, or wish to see again."

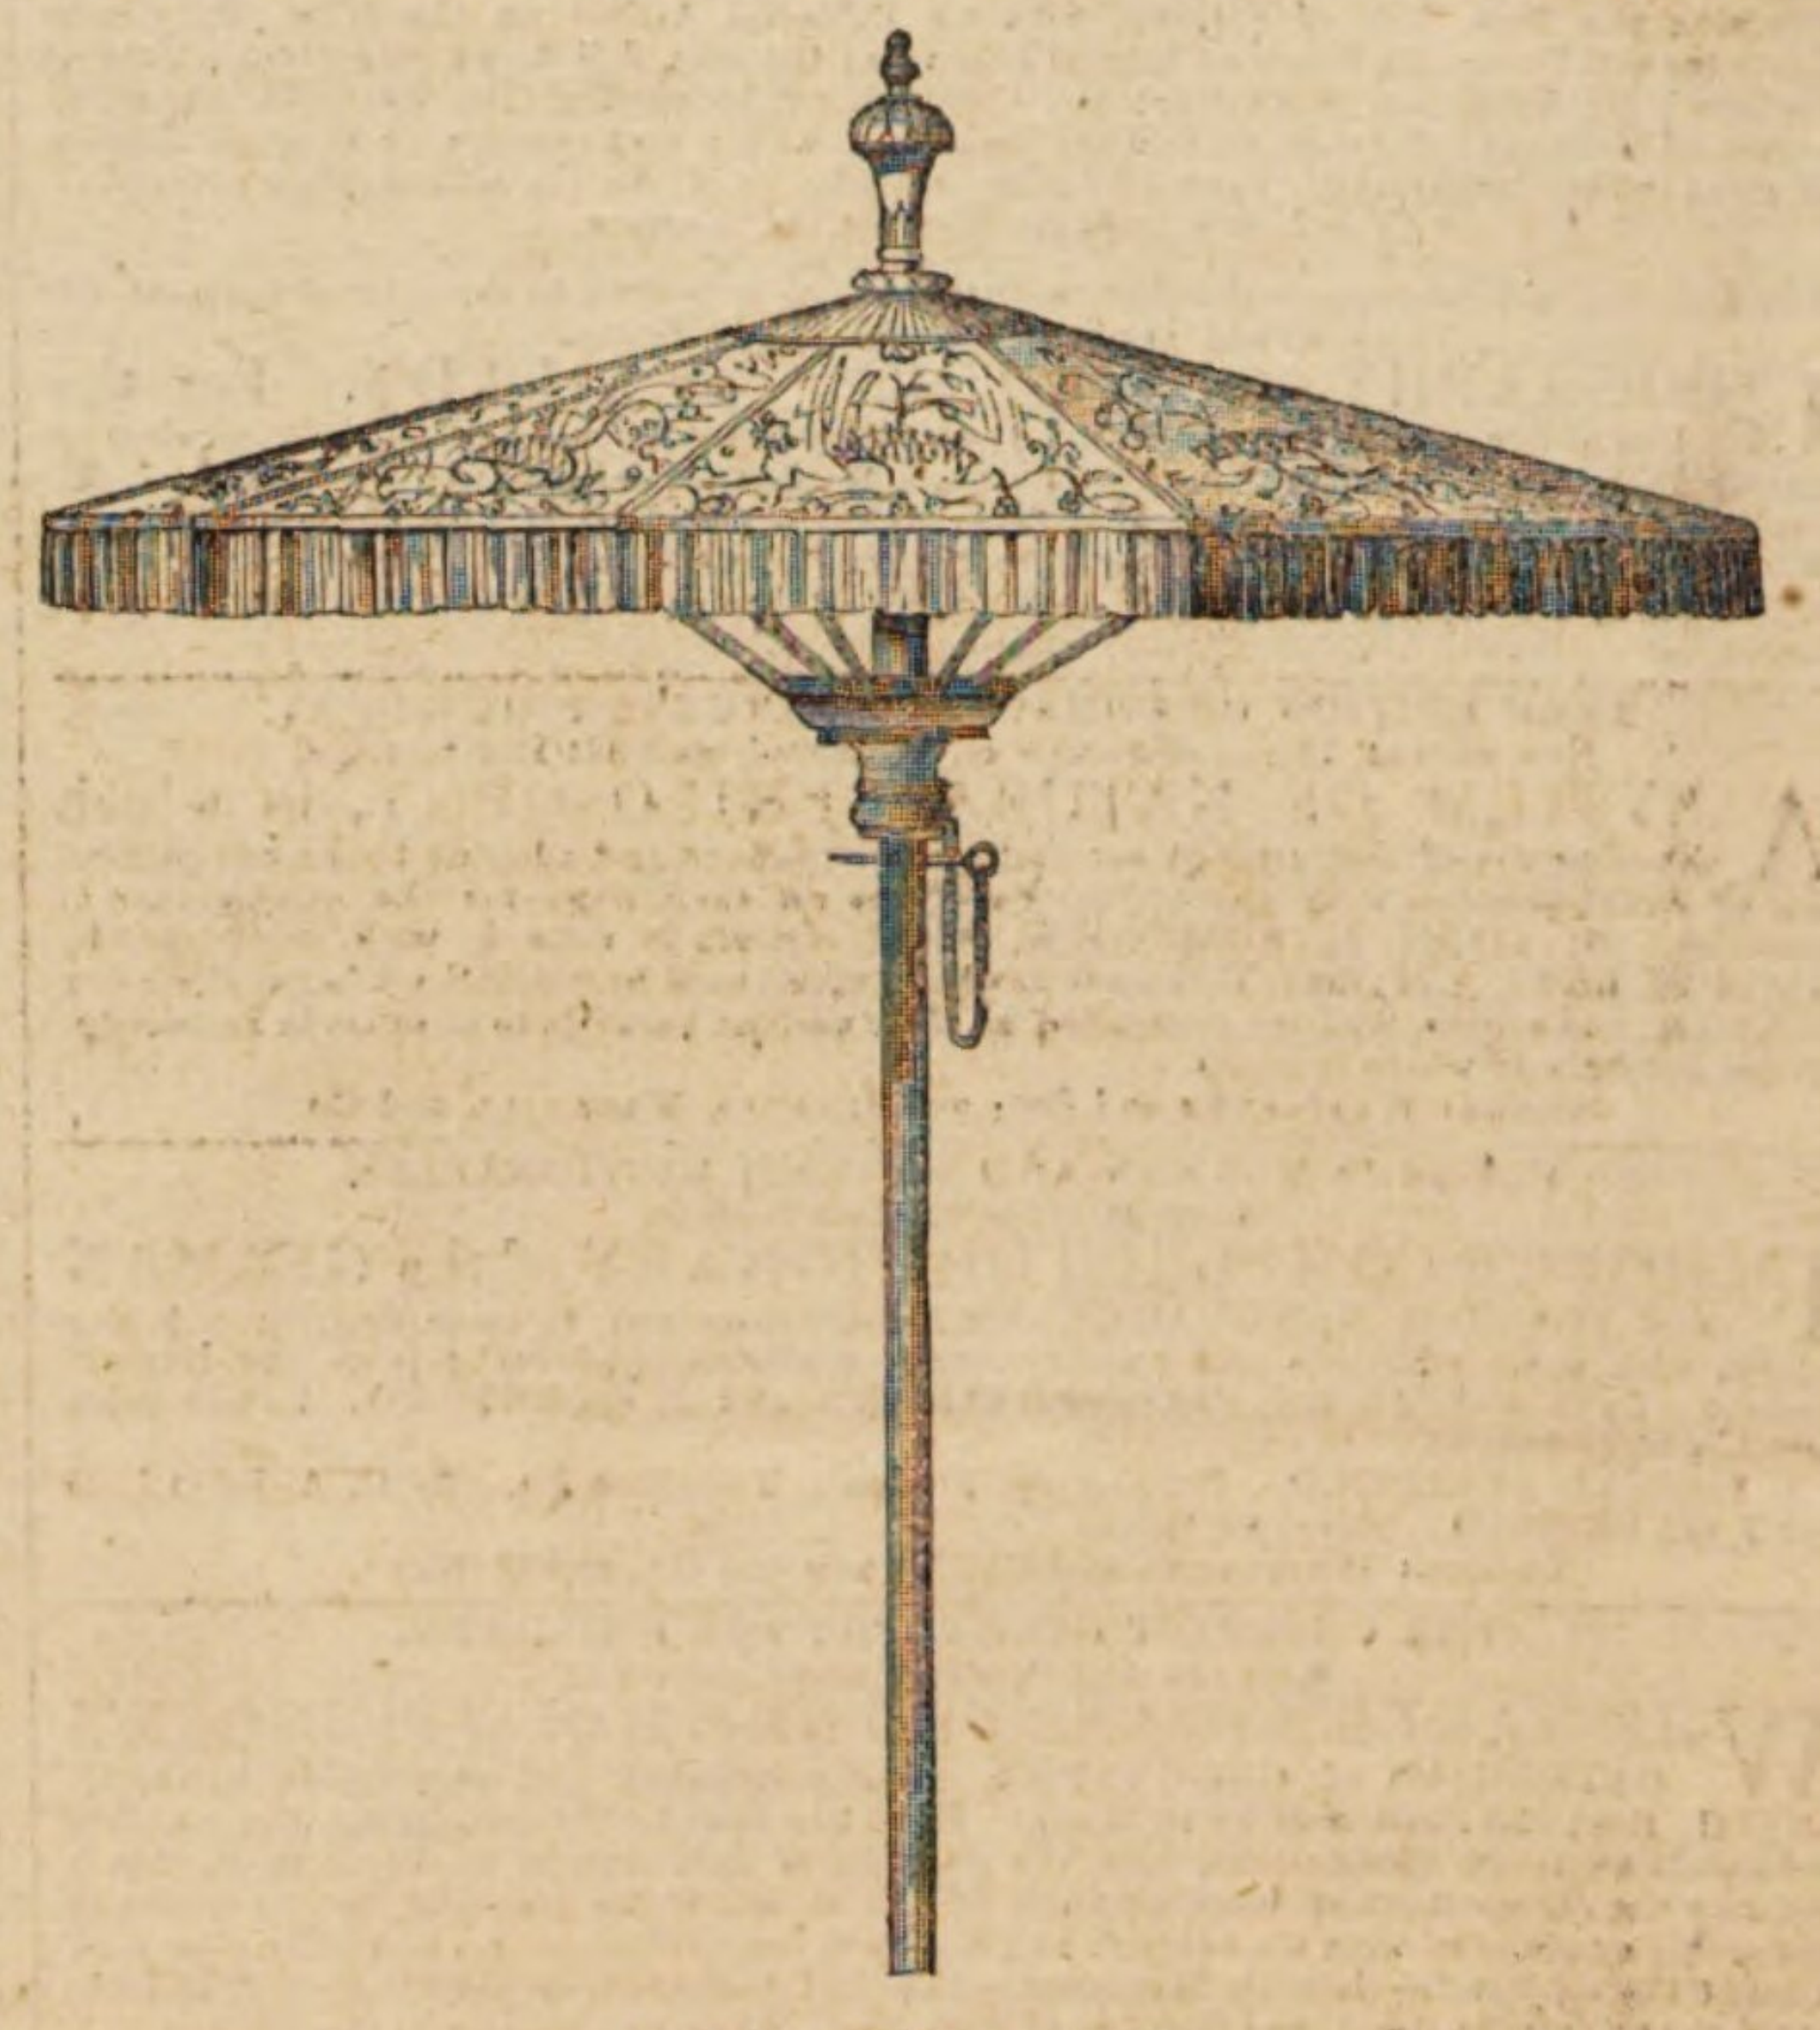
This catastrophe presents another instance of the inefficient manner in which steam-vessels are provided with the means of escape in case of accidents. "In this case, it is truly awful to think that, had the vessel gone down immediately, there was no apparent means by which, in any human probability, one of 250 individuals on board could have been saved. There was only one boat, and that so small as to be incapable of holding more than half a dozen persons, which in the frenzy of the moment would have been, undoubtedly, swamped by the eager multitudes rushing into it. Does not such a state of matters call upon the Government to devise some means of compelling every seagoing steam-vessel to carry at least two or three good boats? The paddle-box boats of Captain Smith have been found in several instances of invaluable service, and every steam-vessel should be provided with them, or with other efficient means of preserving life in cases of danger. The Windsor Castle had also no apparatus for making signals, neither gun nor rocket was on board, and vain was the attempt of the despairing multitude, by uniting their voices, to bring help from the nearest land, which, at least, was four miles distant from them!"

THE TROPHIES OF THE MOROCCO WAR.

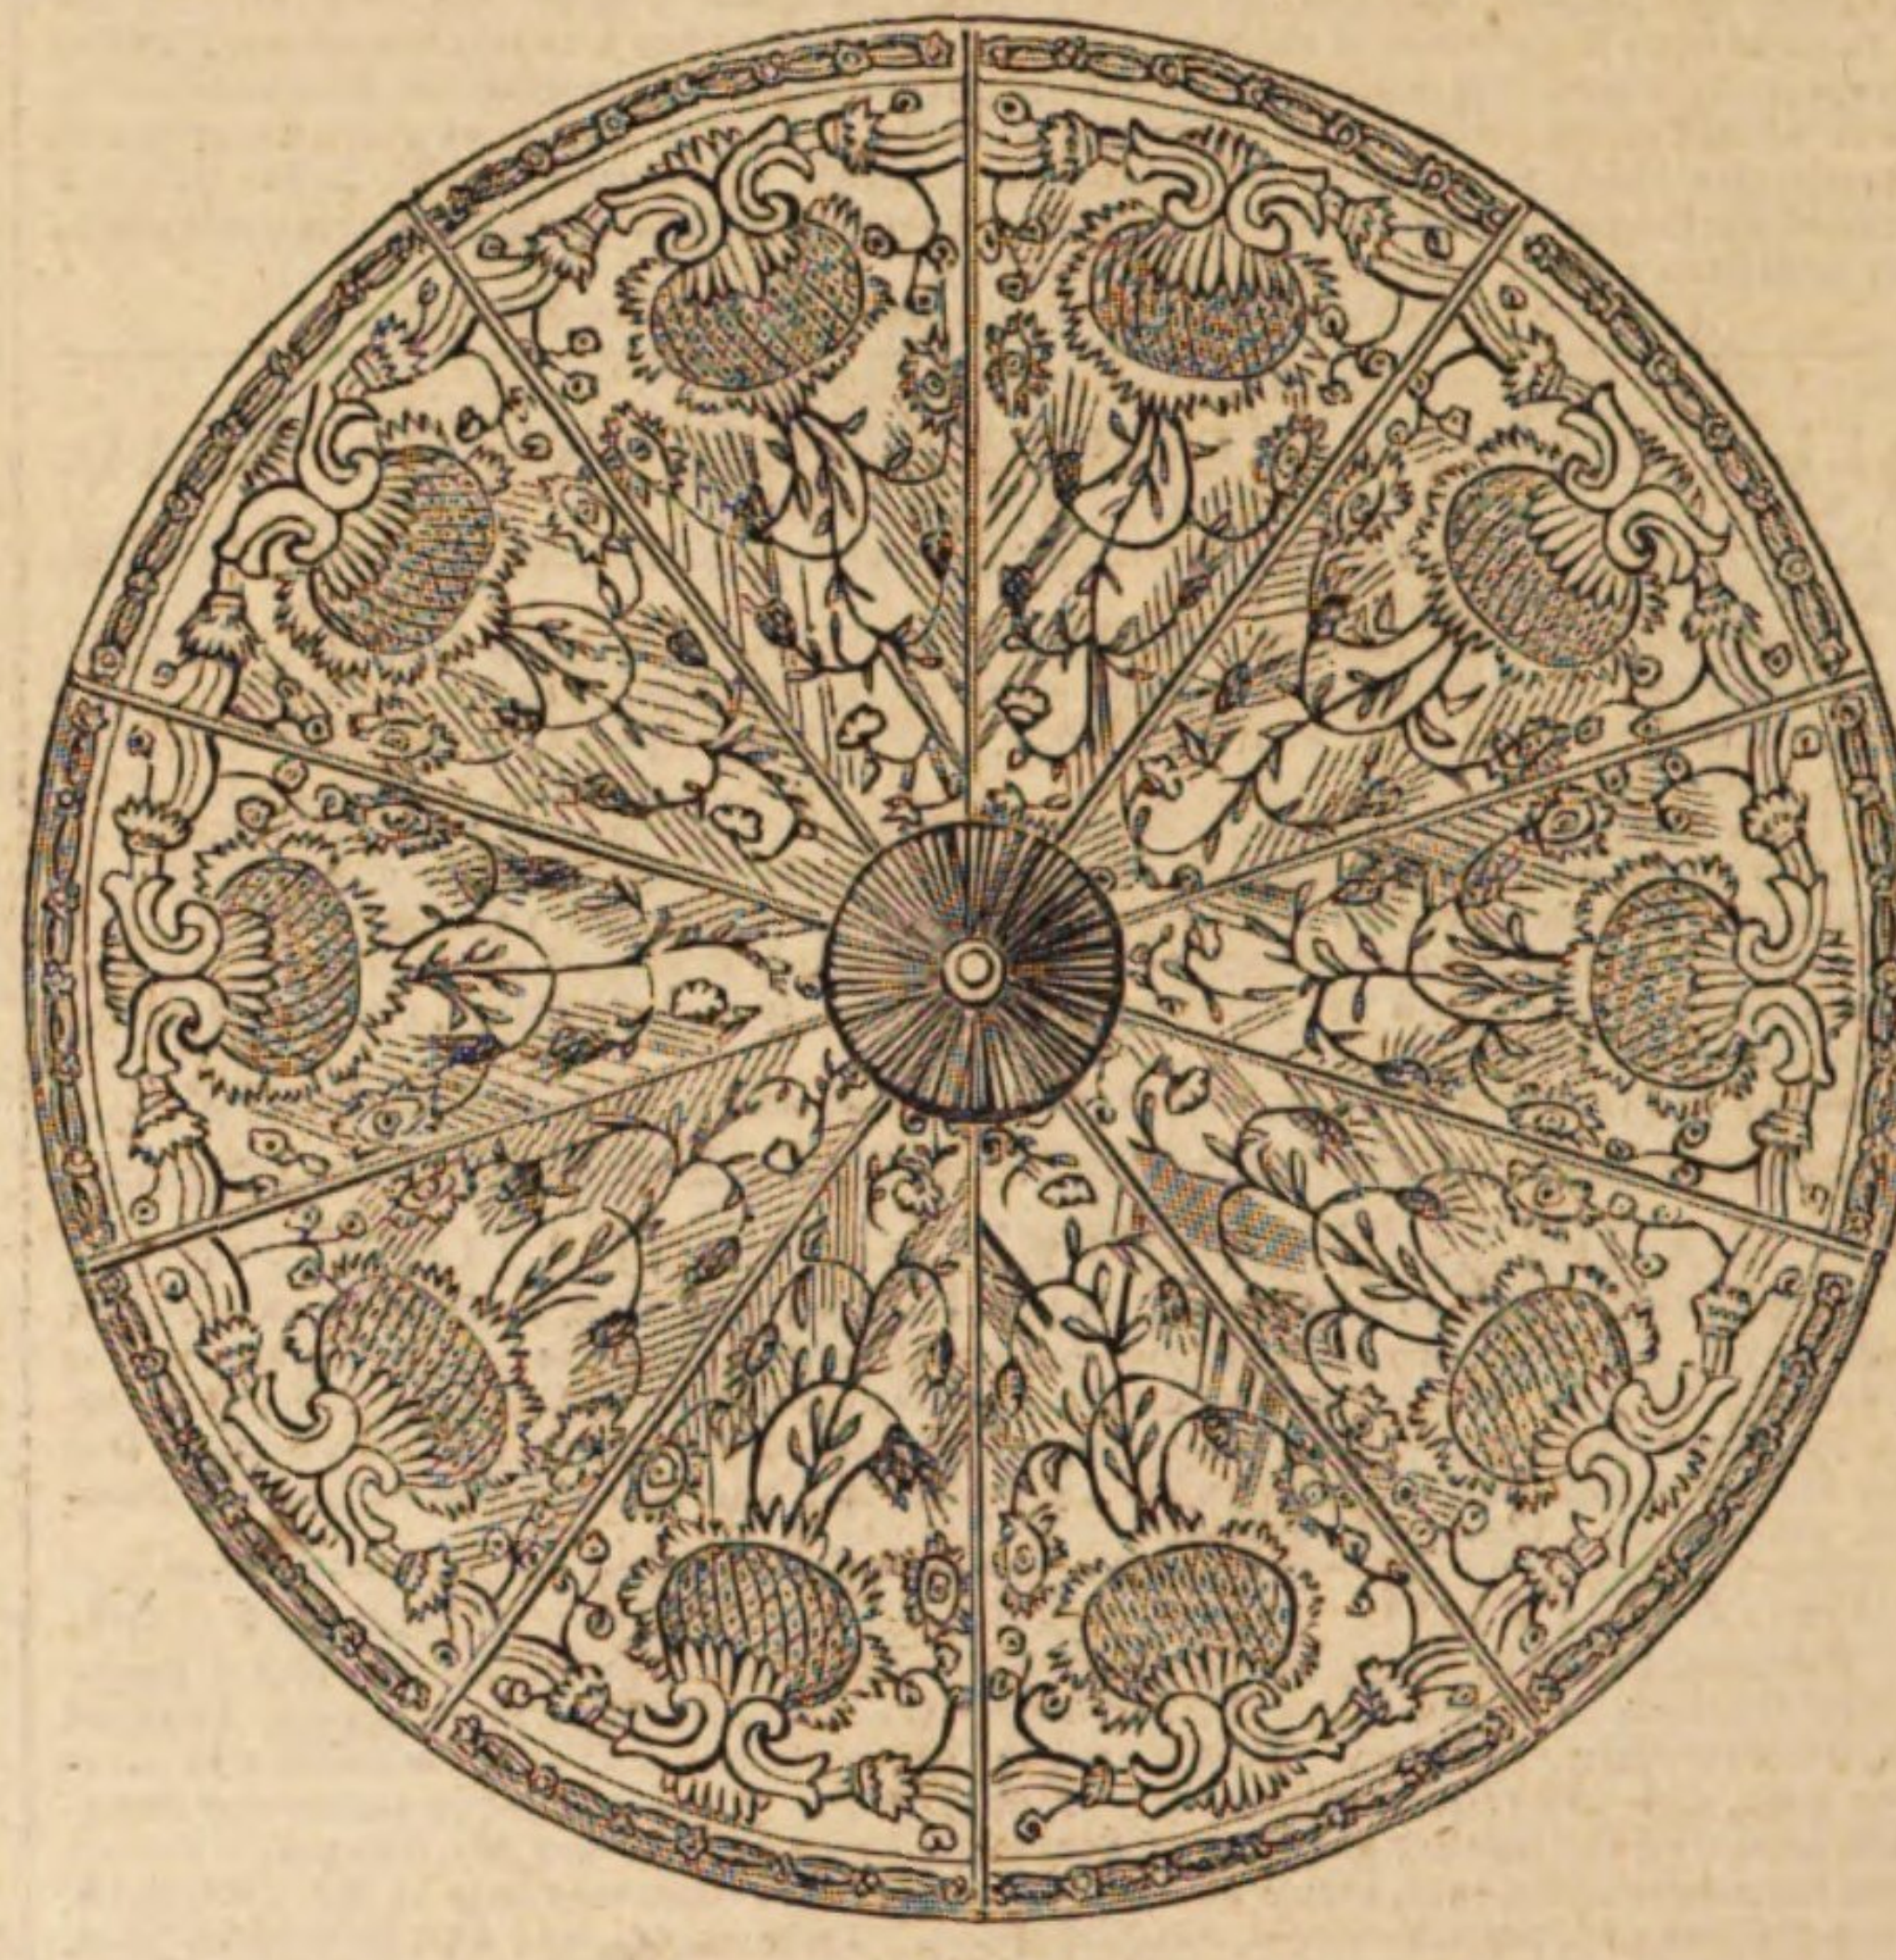
The cusiosity of the Parisian public has been for some days past aroused by the exhibition of the trophies taken by the French army from the Moors, consisting of the Tent of the eldest son of the Emperor, and the Parasol of the Emperor himself, which, being an emblem of command, may rank in importance with the baton of an European field-marshal. Both tent and parasol arrived at Paris on the 27th of September, but some time elapsed before the tent could be raised and submitted to public inspection. It was erected over the great basin of the Tuileries, by the side of the Place de Concorde, the work being executed under the direction of M. Fontaine, architect to the King, by the workmen of the palace, and the machinists of the Opera. The tent is a complete moveable house, containing everything a Moor can desire—carpets, bed, sofa. It required no less than forty mules to convey it from place to place. Above the first tent rises a second, and much larger one, which serves to shade the first from the rays of the sun. Both are surmounted by a large ball of gilt copper, which can be seen from a considerable distance. At the entrance of the tent, and on one side of it, are a number of arches, or rather niches, which served as shelter for the guards of the gate. The tent was surrounded at some distance by a kind of wall, also of white linen, which prevented any one seeing or hearing from the outside what passed in the royal presence. The interior of the tent was hung with tapestry of various designs, and was provided with large round cushions of red Morocco leather and long ones of cloth of the same colour. Immediately opposite to the curtain which formed the door, was the bed of the Prince, hung likewise with red drapery. It was protected by a Mosquito curtain, and had two matresses—a blue and a red one. The couch itself was of Spanish make, and of the most simple design. Nothing had been forgotten in this palace of linen. Between the tent and the outer wall were two small marquees, one for the officers or secretaries of the Prince, and the other, coloured green and red, served as one of those indispensable apartments called by the Moors kenif. The kitchens were about twenty paces distant from the main tent, and were likewise surrounded by a wall of drapery. When the tent was brought to Algiers, some natives employed by the French as labourers were applied to to erect it. But they said, though they could pitch well enough the sort of tents used by poor men like themselves, they knew nothing of the management of that of the great prince; and when, after several attempts, the French succeeded in erecting it themselves, the Moors would not go near it, or look on what was a trophy of the most bloody defeat their countrymen had ever sustained.



SIDI MOHAMMED'S TENT, CAPTURED BY THE FRENCH.

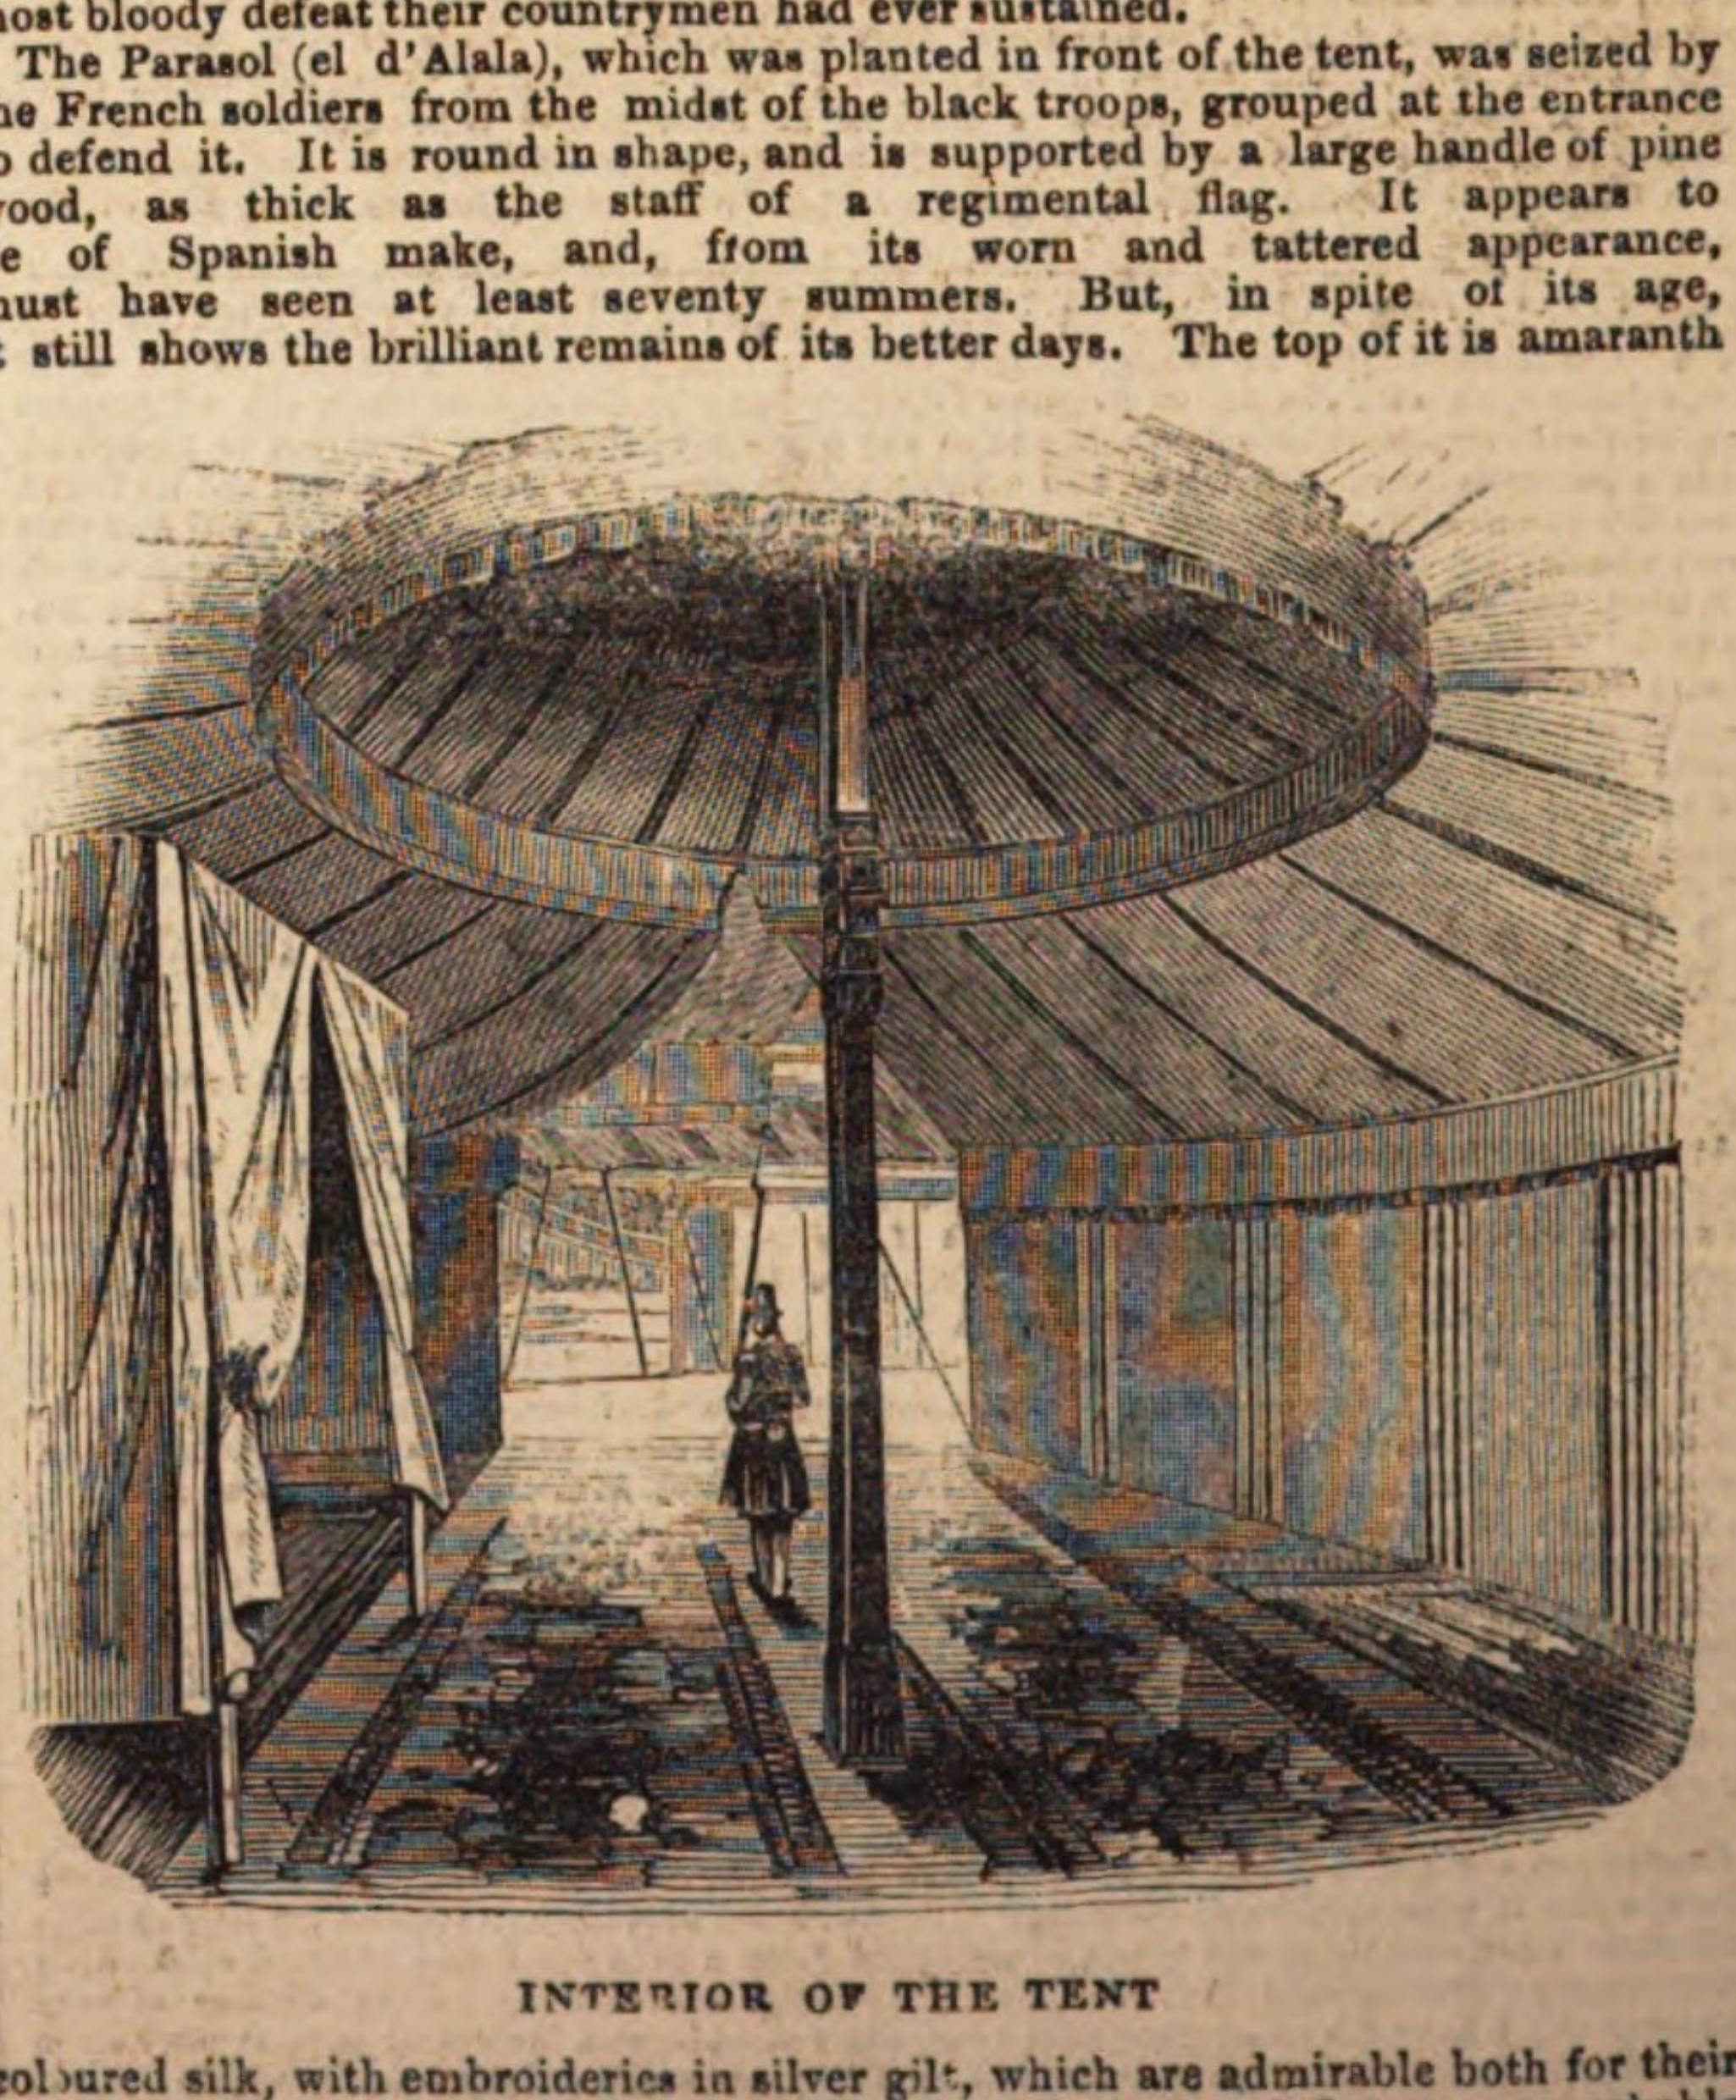


THE STATE PARASOL.



TOP OF THE PARASOL.

The Parasol (el d'Alala), which was planted in front of the tent, was seized by the French soldiers from the midst of the black troops, grouped at the entrance to defend it. It is round in shape, and is supported by a large handle of pine wood, as thick as the staff of a regimental flag. It appears to be of Spanish make, and, from its worn and tattered appearance, must have seen at least seventy summers. But, in spite of its age, it still shows the brilliant remains of its better days. The top of it is amaranth coloured silk, with embroideries in silver gilt, which are admirable both for their elegance and correctness of design; they are arabesques of flowers, remarkable for their lightness and boldness; the inside is green silk, with flowers of gold. The ribs, ten in number, are of gilded wood; the parasol is surmounted by a ball of gilt silver, something like the top of a drum-major's staff. To carry it on horseback would require a strong man, and the post of bearer of the imperial parasol is not one of the least importance in the house of the Sultan of Morocco. In the battle of Isly the post was a fatal one, for the parasol-bearer fell in the attack, his face literally cut in two by a sabre stroke, and his breast pierced by a ball.



INTERIOR OF THE TENT

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1844.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR, SC. A PARIS.

No. 129.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1844. [Sixpence.

WEALTH AND WASTE.

THE interest excited by the late Royal Visit having ceased with the departure of the French King, amid thunder, fire, and storm, that rendered the last scene in which he appeared on British ground not unlike the tableau terminating a regal melodrama, the public attention is again directed to the objects that must naturally occupy it at all times—the social condition, state, and prospects of the country. These are questions never totally forgotten; but they are often sadly neglected; the noisy struggles of party, the brilliant attack, the able defence, of rival orators and statesmen—political events that succeed each other with startling rapidity—all these divert the public mind from those social topics which have a permanent interest for all, and which remain unaffected, almost undisturbed, by the rise and fall of parties, and the shifting and change of rulers. But at a period like the present, with the political stage vacated by the great performers who play their part thereon, with little or nothing to distract the mind from "that which about us lies in daily life," these questions recur with double force; we wish that good results were obtainable with equal certainty, and in an equal ratio.

Let us take advantage of the present interval of political repose to survey our present position and future prospects.

In doing so we are first and most forcibly struck by the many unequivocal indications of an improvement in what is called the "state of the country." Manufactures, trade, commerce, business in general, have all received an impulse; the centres of industry are busy—the loom and the steam-engine are in full work—and, what is better still, the thousands who depend for existence on the employment of these inanimate, but not inactive agents, are gaining the wages which enable them to live in an honourable independence of public aid. This general activity has a visible effect in another quarter, and shows itself in a symptom always considered decisive of returning prosperity. The quarterly revenue accounts exhibit a gratifying increase, particularly in the department of the Customs, in which it amounts to no less than a million and a half. As this arises altogether from duties on imports, it shows that the ability of the people to consume the articles on which duties are paid, is reviving from the prostration of the few past years. In other departments, though the increase is not so great, it is still enough to show a marked improvement. With the Income-tax as a sheet-anchor, in case of a financial stress of weather, and the improvement of the public revenue from the old sources, the Chancellor of the Exchequer ought, officially speaking, to be a happy and contented man. The nation is, in fact, commercially considered, in a highly prosperous condition; we are manufacturing largely, and exporting extensively; and, as a natural consequence, gold is finding its way here from all those countries which are our purchasers. Now comes the question—what are we going to do with it?

As invariably happens at a time when, to use the language of the City, "money is abundant," we shall live on a little of it, extend our trade with more, and lose all the rest in speculation. If any one wishes to have a proof of this, let him read the announcements in the public journals. They are almost filled with advertisements of contemplated extensions of old companies, an projected formations of new ones. The whole surface of the land is to be laced with iron. Two new lines, with two companies, two chairmen, two boards of directors, and all other grades of employes in duplicate, are in some cases announced, to connect points between which a railroad already exists. That all these should pay is impossible: that Parliament should sanction two such undertakings between the same places is improbable. But a large amount of money will be spent in surveys, law expenses, parliamentary agencies, and all those preliminary steps which make the expense of obtaining an Act of Parliament in such cases, run up to something frightful. And all this will have to come out of the deposits on the shares, the buyers of which are the public. We are always glad to see railway communication extended where it is required; but a little consideration ought to be given as to what lines will pay, and what will not. With a sum of money waiting "investment," it is astonishing what imprudent things an Englishman, careful and cautious in the smaller concerns of life, will be guilty of; mystified and deluded by the magic words "safe investment," and "good per centage," he has buried millions in the bottom of South American mines, or seen his thousands evaporate in Poyais and Pennsylvanian bonds. This was in a time of re-action and prosperity like the present: let him look back on the past then, and, as he loves himself, learn circumspection.

EXPLOSION AT THE KING'S BASTION, PORTSMOUTH, ON MONDAY LAST.—See next page.

This eagerness of speculation springs from the competition of capital with capital, which is no less remarkable in its results than the competition of labour with labour. It presses in every direction, and flies to every outlet that gives, or only promises to give, a profitable employment for it. In every existing business this reduces profits to the lowest point, just as the competition of labour reduces wages. It is no wonder then that it seeks fields yet unoccupied and untried, and is frequently disappointed in the expectations that led it there. To those gigantic capitalists who can engage with ease in many speculations, and bear without inconvenience even absolute loss in a few of them, it is a matter of comparative indifference if a crash does come that swallows up a few thousands more or less. But in the train of these men follow many of far humbler means, who embark their all in some one specious and attractive speculation; if that fail they have nothing before them but direct ruin. The amount of social and domestic misery that has been thus caused in England cannot be estimated. It is to this class we would particularly address ourselves, and, in the midst of the present activity, with schemes so rife on every side of them, recall to them the scenes that followed the year 1825.

In the midst, too, of all this bustle of wealth-making and wealth-expending, there are still many things in our social condition far from satisfactory. The property of whole districts is still exposed to, and still suffers from, the violence of a sullen and discontented peasantry, who seem in no degree to partake in the benefit diffused over other classes by our commercial prosperity. They are still unemployed, or, if employed, badly paid, so that their whole existence is divided between the three degrees of destitution represented by six shillings a week, involuntary idleness, or the poor-house. The meetings of landed proprietors, and the suggestions made of remedies for this gloomy state of things, show plainly enough the uneasiness that is felt in this direction. We believe, too, that a conviction of the necessity of furnishing wages and employment, as the only real cures for the evil, is being rapidly arrived at, and we may hope to see a little co-operation and some enlightened benevolence in this respect doing much that has been too long left undone. Assuredly, while there is such an immense mass of absolute pauperism among us, and so large a class only one remove above it, we cannot congratulate ourselves with that fulness of satisfaction we should wish to feel, on our present flourishing circumstances. We rejoice in the good, but it is with the consciousness of being in the presence of an evil, and our glee is repressed like that of the revellers of old who sat at the banquet with a skeleton at the table. We are making wealth; but, unless some prudence is exercised, in this excitement of gaining, the produce of much toil may be uselessly dissipated. And, with so many around us who are, and, under almost any amount of national prosperity, must still be, exposed to destitution, to the virtue of prudence in using what has been gained, may not be added, with advantage, consideration for those to whom the opportunity of gaining is impossible?

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT AT PORTSMOUTH.

A fatal accident took place at Portsmouth on Monday afternoon, on the King's Bastion. As the Artillerymen were re-loading one of the guns, which is supposed to have hung fire, the charge went off, and blew one of them to pieces and the other was so horribly mutilated that he died soon afterwards. The guns upon this bastion are 32-pounders, and there are only four of them; consequently to fire a royal salute requires each gun to be loaded five times and one six. It is usual to use the worm to clear out the gun, every second charge, and it is supposed some fire had remained in the chamber. The names of the unfortunate men are Alexander Miller and Michael Walker, between 25 and 27 years of age. Miller was blown into fragments, and Walker had his thigh broken, his arm blown on into the moat, and his body otherwise disfigured. The remnants of the victims were conveyed instantly to the hospital of the Royal Marine Barracks. Only five guns had been fired when the awful catastrophe occurred. They instantly ceased firing. An inquest was held on the bodies of the unfortunate men on Tuesday, when the above circumstances were given in evidence, and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

I have been staying at Eu, and have no expressions to convey to you the anxiety of the Queen and Madame Adelaide, on the subject of Louis Philippe, who, on his return, had to war with the three elements, winds, waves, and fire. It is with the deepest satisfaction that all honest men and lovers of peace in France, behold Louis Philippe safely returned amongst us. Secure of all possible kindness on the part of the English nation, the King's true lieges had feared, and his democratic enemies had hoped, that this trip would afford an opportunity of perpetrating some attempt on his life. The journey to England of many a desperate character, confirmed the idea. The extraordinary exertions of the police on both sides of the channel have defeated these detestable plans; the projected attack against the Emperor of Russia during his recent visit, having put the English authorities on their guard. But although the King is safe amongst us, and that the vigour of his mind and body are remarkable for his advanced age, time is the ultimate enemy he cannot conquer: already its effects upon the royal statesman are exhibited. Under these circumstances, it is interesting to study the several attitudes the sons of Louis Philippe assume in the political system of France. The eldest son (the Duke de Nemours), is destined vicariously to wield the sceptre of France for many a year, like his great ancestor the Regent Orleans did in the minority of a child who bore the same relationship to Louis XIV. as the Count of Paris does to Louis Philippe. The Duke de Nemours, now the eldest son, has refused the title of Duke of Orleans—on the one hand to avoid at present any comparison with his lamented and popular brother, and, on the other, when he ascends to the Regency, a parallel with that most dissolute prince, the Regent Orleans, who maintained his power by the most subtle corruption in every department of the state, a circumstance which made his worthy pupil and successor, Louis XV. so often, and, alas! so truly exclaim, "apres moi le deluge!" The Duke de Nemours is a prince of irreproachable conduct, conscientious and well informed in all the duties of a prince, with an exalted judgment, and severe and unyielding in that which he deems to be right. But party spirit has raised against him general aversion amongst the majority of the more volatile and unreflecting portion of French society. The Prince de Joinville, the next brother, is all "Jeune France" in his bearing, manners, and language, as completely as in the luxuriant surplusage of his beard and mustachios. At heart, sincerely attached to his family, he carries on an appearance of fashionable liberalism—and also opposition to his father—an imitation of the hereditary policy of the Princes of Wales, during the reigns of your three first Georges. His intercourse with his shipmates, and his naval pamphlets (of which another is, by the by, now forthcoming) are the vehicles of his assumed antagonism to his father's views and government.

The Duke d'Aumale, the third brother, who possesses, in his immense private fortune, the means of purchasing golden opinions, has the office of effecting with the military what his brother does with the navy. By erecting Algeria into a separate kingdom, under the absolute rule of his vice-royalty, the present dynasty will secure to themselves the means of concentrating on one spot devoted adherents, and assure themselves of a temporary retreat in case of any future convulsion in France. It is well known that the wisest statesmen of the elder dynasty of Bourbons had considered Algeria in this point of view. These views they had not time to mature before the catastrophe occurred.

It is with deep-felt pleasure that we behold here an incipient revolution in literature. You are aware that here the press, in its feuilletons—the stage in every species of drama, tragic as well as comic—the ephemeral pamphlets of the day, the novels enjoying surpassing vogue, are the only works that have interested the nation, and that they have been habitually vehicles of doctrines the most dangerous to domestic as well as political society in France. A love of classical literature is fast reviving, and is now about to reflect its spirit upon and modify the productions of the day. Already, last year, Ponsard, a young poet, had shown the deep interest that can be excited, whilst banishing all that is not pure in morality and classical in form. A veteran of philosophy, who has been a university professor, then a minister, and now a peer, and a dilettante in politics as well as in literature, is now contributing his share to raise the mind and feelings of the age, by the profound thoughts and reasoning introduced in his history of Jacqueline Pascal, the gifted and exemplary sister of the immortal author of "Les Pensées." Whilst his eloquence is captivating, this interesting biography of an age as well as of an individual is made the means of conveying the soundest and sublimest notions. "Democracy and royalty, order and liberty, live together, and develop themselves simultaneously; why should not religion and philosophy do the same?" Such is the burden of his song. Lamartine, with his double celebrity of poet and political leader, is returning from the baths of Ischia, having so employed his leisure that the contents of his portmanteau are a sort of trilogy. It contains a poem, a work on his travelling impressions, and another on the political affairs of France.

To the new spirit prevailing, and which we have characterised, is due the exhumation of a manuscript, which is a sort of literary Pompeii or Herculaneum, revealing the state of society in the 17th century. This manuscript, recently published, is a diary kept by the famous Flechier, a bishop, and one of the greatest pulpit orators of that age. He went to Auvergne when a young man, as tutor to the son of one of a numerous commission of judges, deputed by Louis XIV. as an extraordinary tribunal to inquire into and to punish the excesses committed by the nobility and the clergy, who, after the intestine convulsions of the days of the Fronde, still retained the weapons of warfare in their hands, and made them instrumental to their spirit of exaction and tyranny. This work of Flechier, entitled "Les Grands Jours," brings to light the most extraordinary scenes, and reveals society in the 17th century, as vividly as if it were beheld within the magic circle of an enchanter.

As to the pleasures of society at this moment—in private society they have not begun to assume any éclat. The pleasures of the turf keep away many persons of fortune from Paris. The races of Chantilly have employed the time of our fashionables; hunting, and field sports of all kinds, absorb most of our truants. Even the most fashionable of the lady lionnes are obliged to join the hunt, not to lose the society of their male friends, as Madame de Vatry and Madame de St. Didier, did the other day in the forest of Chantilly, where they kept at the head of the sportsmen during the whole of the run! So great is the mania, that you find the newspapers chronicling the attack and death of a ferret, by five dogs and a dozen noblemen, at the Chateau of the millionaires Counts de Greffulhe.

As to the theatres, they are either deficient of novelty, or their novelties lack success. The Italian Opera has opened with a flourish of trumpets and shouts of triumph, amidst a concourse of fashionables, but dissatisfaction soon ensued when "Linda di Chamounix" and "Norma" were brought out with an imperfect caste; amongst other actors, Mario not appearing in his habitual part in one opera, and Lablache in neither of them. The Grand Academie de Musique has been still more unfortunate. "Eucharis," a new ballet, was the first failure, and another has just occurred in the shape of an opera. This will not appear astonishing, when we reflect that to write this grand opera seria were selected Adolphe Adam, who never composed anything but pretty comic operas, and M. Paul Foucher, who is a writer of vaudevilles and melodramas for the small theatres of the Boulevards. The fact is, the lessee of the Academie de Musique is a gifted man, but he too often tries that in which monarchs themselves often fail, the "stet pro ratione, voluntas."

FRANCE.

The French papers this week have been destitute of news either foreign or domestic. Some of the least respectable of the opposition prints have indulged in a vast deal of absurdity upon the subject of Louis Philippe's visit to England, and they endeavour to make their readers believe that their Sovereign has compromised the honour and dignity of France by his decided declarations in favour of peace. It would be puerile, however, to give circulation to these frantic ravings. The Constitutionnel contains a long report from Captain Bruat, which was not transmitted to the Government in the usual way, but obtained publicity by appearing in a French journal established by him at Tahiti, under the title of L'Orcanie Française. Captain Barat's version of the affair at Mahabena, of which we have given the particulars, differs very much, as may be imagined from that supplied by an English writer. He justifies his attack on the natives by necessity; having failed, as he says, even with the aid of the English missionaries, to induce the insurgents against the French authority to disperse. The French force is rated by M. Bruat, at 441 men; the natives are said to have had 1500 fighting men, of whom 1000 were engaged in the defence of their entrenchments. They had 102 men killed, their guns spiked, and a large portion of their ammunition captured. The French loss is stated at 15 killed, including two officers, and 51 wounded; and it is admitted that the natives fought with great gallantry and determination.

The Journal des Débats, in copying M. Bruat's report, comments with just severity on the impropriety of which that gentleman has been guilty in thus anticipating the publication of a document strictly official, without the sanction of his superior officers. This last performance of M. Bruat appears to have opened the eyes of the Government to his unfitness for the responsible position in which he has been placed, and is expected to lead to his immediate recall. He seems to have made a fresh attempt, assisted by the British missionaries on the spot, to effect a reconciliation with the Tahitian chiefs, and to have even invited Queen Pomare to pacify her subjects by her presence. Several chiefs went to see her, and their interview is thus reported in the Tahiti journal:—She wept and sighed, saying, "I am afraid of the governor." "But it is he who has sent us, and do you believe that we can deceive you, Pomare? Come, and be happy as a wife and a Queen!" Pomare hesitated, and at last declared that she was not free, for the English commandant detained her. It is pretended, however, that at the further solicitation of the chiefs, she would have accompanied them ashore, but was prevented from so doing by the commander of the Basilisk.

The Constitutionnel affirms that letters have been received from Tahiti to the 8th of May. Tranquillity was re-established, although the Indians still continued to assemble. It was feared, however, that they would make an united attempt to set fire to our establishments; for this reason the greatest precautions are taken against a night attack.

SPAIN.

The ordinary accounts from Madrid to the 9th are uninteresting. The following telegraphic despatch, however, received in Paris, announces the opening of the Cortes:—

"Madrid, Oct. 11.—The Queen opened yesterday in person the session of the Cortes. Her Majesty, whose health is excellent, was received during the whole of her passage and on her entrance to the Chamber with the liveliest acclamations. Madrid and the provinces enjoy the most complete tranquillity."

We have since received a copy of the speech, which was an unusually long one. Her Majesty first congratulated the Cortes on the friendly dispositions of the Allied Powers. Allusion was made to the good offices of France and England in settling the dispute between Spain and Morocco. The speech also stated that a project of constitutional reform would be presented early in the session. Her Majesty remarked upon the necessity of economy and the maintenance of good faith. Her Majesty also expressed her satisfaction that the army was in the highest state of discipline. The penurious state of the Treasury was alluded to, but her Majesty stated that nevertheless she had turned her attention to the fleet, adding that the peninsular situation of Spain, and the rich countries it still holds in many parts of the world, demanded that it should be a powerful one.

PORTUGAL.

Our letters from Lisbon to the 7th inst. are destitute of political news; but it appears from the opening proceedings of the Chamber of Peers, that the Ministers had but a small majority in opposition to a motion to inquire into the mode in which they exercised the powers temporarily entrusted to them for suppressing the Almeida revolt in February last. The Duke de Palmella upon this occasion voted in opposition to the Government, and expressed himself in favour of the inquiry.

SWEDEN.

Coronation of King Oscar and his Queen.—The coronation of the King and Queen of Sweden was celebrated on the 20th ult., in the cathedral. The morning having been rainy, the cortège could not proceed to the church in the order agreed on. Their Majesties, not wishing to delay the ceremony, went there in their carriages, and were greeted with loud expressions of joy. After the Divine Service, the coronation took place. When it was concluded, the Prince Royal and his brothers, the Dukes of Upland and Ostrogothie, took the oaths of fidelity to the King, who embraced them both. The act of homage of the States General also offered an imposing spectacle, and after they had taken the oath, the vault of the church rang with cries of "Long live King Oscar!" The weather having cleared up, their Majesties returned to the palace on foot, in the order prescribed by the ceremonial. An immense crowd was assembled along their passage, and the windows, roofs, and stands erected for the occasion, were filled with spectators, who threw flowers in the line of the procession, and greeted the King with loud shouts of welcome and approbation. The Queen Dowager could not, on account of her mourning, be present at the august ceremony; but on the return of their Majesties to the palace, they proceeded to her apartment to pay her their respects. The Duke de Dalecarlie and the Princess Eugenie were present at the coronation, in a tribune apart. The diplomatic corps and the foreigners of distinction, on leaving the church, proceeded to the inner court of the palace, to present their homage to their Majesties on their passage. The King the same day gave a grand dinner of 600 covers. In the evening the city was illuminated, and their Majesties, accompanied by the youthful branches of the royal family, went through the streets in an open carriage, amidst loud acclamations. The next day the King received, in separate audiences, the ministers of England and Denmark, who presented letters of congratulation from their respective sovereigns on his coronation. In the evening a fire burst out in the northern faubourg, but was put down after one house had been consumed. The King proceeded to the scene on horseback.

UNITED STATES.

The Britannia, Captain Hewitt, arrived at Liverpool on Monday, bringing the American mails to the 1st inst., and Canadian to the usual late dates. The intelligence from Canada possesses more than ordinary interest.

Sir Charles Metcalf, the Governor-General, has dissolved the Canadian Assembly; and writs have been issued for a new election, returnable on the 12th of November, at which time the Parliament is to meet for the dispatch of business.

There is no news worth mentioning from the United States. The money market was dull. There was abundance of money, with low rates of interest, and little demand for discount from the banks.

A singular murder is reported to have taken place in Wilcox county, Alabama. A young man, named Rivers, was engaged to be married to a Miss Sarah Tait, with the consent of all the lady's friends, except her brother, a Dr. Tait. The latter, in front of his father's house, before the marriage, shot Rivers, who was taken into the bride's dwelling, and there the marriage ceremony was performed! The murdered man died immediately after.

Accounts from Mexico state that the town of Matamoros has been destroyed by a hurricane. It occurred on the night of the 4th of August, and was more tremendous in its effects than the hurricanes of 1835 and 1837. More than two-thirds of the houses of the city were prostrated, and the remainder were more or less injured. As to the extent of the loss of life we are not accurately informed. The correspondent of El Censor de Vera Cruz estimates the whole loss at above two hundred souls. The direst destruction, however, was at the two mouths of the Rio Grande, some thirty miles below the city of Matamoros. Here scarcely any were saved. The greater part of the population are compelled to live in shantees built among the ruins of their houses.

A letter dated August 9, states that the remains of 64 people, who perished at the Boca del Rio, had already been found and interred, and that it was ascertained that as many as 27 were destroyed at the other mouth of the river. It is presumed that many more have perished, whose names were unknown.

The ship Sea, Captain Edwards, had previously arrived, with the New York papers to the 26th of September, but as the Britannia brings later news, it is only necessary to allude briefly to the accounts brought by the former.

BOKHARA.

We are sorry to learn that the favourable accounts given relative to Dr. Wolff have been falsified by authentic letters from the reverend doctor himself, whose humane mission, it appears, has led him into a position of great jeopardy. Dr. Wolff writes from Bokhara, under date of June 27, as follows:—

"I have now been already two months in this place, and though five or six times the King has promised to send me instantly to England, with one of his ambassadors, I am in the greatest danger. I cannot stir out of the house without a guard of three men. Dil Hassa Khan, the fellow sent with me by the Assoof Addoola, has shamefully robbed, deceived, and outraged me. The Persian Ambassador, Abbas Kooli Khan, is kind to me, but I think he will not have it in his power to rescue me. Nayeb Abdool Samet Khan has extorted from me a writing to pay him 5000 tomans to effect my liberation. I suspect that he was the cause of Stoddart's and Connolly's death, in spite of his protestations of friendship. The Ameer is at Samarcand, and I am awaiting the most fatal orders from the King daily to reach me. It is true that poor Stoddart professed openly Christianity after he had made a forced profession of Mahomedanism. Do for me what you can, as far as the honour of England is not compromised. All the inhabitants wish that either Russia or England should take the country. Do not believe any former reports of my speedy departure, for I am in great danger.

"Joseph Wolff."

"Bokhara, Aug. 1, 1844.

"TO ALL THE MONARCHS OF EUROPE.

"Sires,—I set out for Bokhara to ransom the lives of two officers, Stoddart and Connolly; but both of them were murdered many months previous to my departure; and I do not know whether or not this blood of mine shall be spilt. I do not supplicate for my own safety; but, Monarchs, 200,000 Persian slaves, many of them people of high talent, sigh in the kingdom of Bokhara. Endeavour to effect their liberation, and I shall rejoice in the grave, that my blood has been the cause of the ransom of so many human beings. I am too much agitated, and watched besides, to be able to write more.

"Joseph Wolff."

The German papers, since received, contain a letter, dated Constantinople, September 25, relative to this enterprising traveller. It would not deserve notice after the above important communication, if it did not state that the Ameer, who, according to Dr. Wolff's letter of June 27, was then at Samarcand, had returned, and manifested great kindness to the doctor. We therefore presume that the information, whatever may be its authority on which this letter was written, must have been of later date than that transmitted by Dr. Wolff from Bokhara.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Late Colliery Explosion at Haswell.—In our latest impression last week we were enabled to give the result of the inquest on the unfortunate men who were killed by the explosion at Haswell Colliery, near Newcastle. The following was the verdict of the jury:—"That the said Thomas Dryden, George Dryden, Robert Dryden, and James Dryden, and Edward Nicholson, together with ninety persons, being employed in working in the Haswell Colliery, were therein and then accidentally burnt, scorched, and killed, by an explosion of fire damp, and we further say that no blame is attributable to any one connected with the pit, and we also further say that the said Thomas Dryden, George Dryden, Robert Dryden, and James Dryden, and Eward Nicholson, came to their death by accident, and so say we all." The verdict was recorded by the Coroner, after which the jury were discharged. A subscription has been set on foot for the benefit of the relatives of the sufferers, which already approaches to near £2000. The owners of the Haswell Colliery have contributed the munificent sum of £745.

Incendiarism near Newmarket.—A fire broke out late on Saturday night on the farm occupied by Miss Fyson, at Exning, about a mile and a half from Newmarket, which in a short time destroyed a barn full of wheat, all the outbuildings and stacks, four horses, several pigs, and some poultry.

Sudden Death in a Mail-coach.—On Tuesday week Mr. Sammell, a traveller, and shoemanufacturer from London, left Haverfordwest by the mail: after having lighted his cigar, he took his seat by the side of the coachman, but when the coach had proceeded a few miles, feeling disposed to sleep, he took an inside place. While stopping to exchange horses at the first stage, the coachman, thinking Mr. Sammell to be asleep, did not disturb him. On arriving at Begelly, however, where the coach is changed, it was discovered that he was dead. There were two ladies inside the coach with him, but he died so suddenly and noiselessly that they were not aware of his death until the stoppage of the coach. He was a young man, 26 years of age.

Attempted Murder at Liverpool.—On Saturday afternoon a man named M'Gaffey attempted to shoot Mr. John William Arkle, landing surveyor, at Princes' Dock, Liverpool. Fortunately the contents were not discharged, as the pistol missed fire, in consequence of the cap, which was a size too large for the nipple, having fallen to the ground. An immense crowd of persons were upon the spot in the course of a very few minutes, and M'Gaffey, who made no attempt to escape, was almost immediately arrested. It is supposed that M'Gaffey was prompted to the act by revenge, as it appears he had been dismissed from a situation he held as weigher in the Customs, in consequence of intoxication, his dismissal having proceeded from the reports of Mr. Arkle, who was landing surveyor over him. The pistol was loaded with ball. The prisoner was examined at the Liverpool office on Monday, and the evidence supported the above view of the case. It was proved that the prisoner was a weigher under Mr. Arkle, until about four months ago, when he was discharged in consequence of being reported by that gentleman for drunkenness. He did not gainsay any of the evidence adduced against him, and having declined to say anything, was fully committed for trial at the next assizes.

Fatal Accident on Lancaster Sands.—On Tuesday evening, as John Moore, jun., of Flookburgh, carrier, and two other men of the names of Woodburn and Bell, were crossing from Host Bank to Flookburgh, with two horses and carts, they were overtaken by the tide while attempting to ford the main channel, and Moore and Woodburn unfortunately drowned, as also the two horses. Bell, after clinging to one of the carts for some time, during which his cries for assistance were heard on shore, was rescued from his perilous situation by a man in a small boat, and when picked up was nearly exhausted. Moore has left a wife to lament his premature death. Woodburn was a single man.

Attempted Murder and Suicide.—A man, named Richard Young, has been committed for trial by the Cheltenham magistrates, on a charge of stabbing his wife on Saturday last, while in bed. He attempted to cut his own throat. On being taken, he said that he knew nothing of what had happened, until his wife cried out "I am stabbed." He added, "I then recollected all, and cut my throat, in hopes we might die together. I cut my throat because I thought I had stabbed my wife."

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Series of Accidents at Portsmouth.—Portsmouth was the scene of several shocking accidents during the late rejoicings. On Monday, a labourer in the dockyard named Thomas Smart, was struck by a ladder, which was blown down by the violence of the wind, by which his skull was horribly fractured, and he died soon after being conveyed to Haslar Hospital. On Tuesday evening, an elderly man was standing at the bar of the Valiant Soldier, drinking, and talking about the French to the landlord, when he suddenly vomited a mouthful of blood, and fell upon the floor a corpse. An inquest was held upon the body, and a verdict of "Died by the Visitation of God" returned. A young woman was dragged out of the sea near Point Beach on Sunday night, during the terrific storm which prevailed about one o'clock; which, together with the two soldiers killed by the gun, and one at the same time severely injured, and an accident on board the Reine Amelie, form a catalogue of disasters seldom paralleled in so short a space of time in one locality.

Loss of Life in the Regent's Park.—On Sunday afternoon the following melancholy occurrence took place in the Regent's Park. Mr. Norbury, a linen-draper, of Crawford-street, Bryanstone-square, was proceeding towards home in his chaise along the outer circle, accompanied by his wife, and daughter aged four years, when the horse suddenly took fright, and started off at full speed, until arriving at Macclesfield-bridge, where the vehicle came in violent contact with a lamp-post, and Mr. Norbury, with his wife and child, were thrown out, and on being taken to the Middlesex Hospital, he expired. Mrs. Norbury and her daughter were also much hurt.

Railway Accident.—On Wednesday, Mr. Wm. Baker held an inquest, at the London Hospital, on view of the body of William Aldrett, aged thirty-five, an engineer, in the employment of the Eastern Counties Railway. It appeared, from the evidence, that the deceased was on that part of the Eastern Counties Railway which crosses John-street, Bethnal-green, when, as he was in the act of laying hold of a baggage-waggon, which had been pulled up an inclined plane by a chain, he made a signal to a man to stop the engine. As soon as he had done so, he fell through the railings that were put up at the side, to protect persons (a depth of twenty feet), in consequence, it is supposed, of losing his hold of the waggon. He was taken up insensible, and conveyed to the London Hospital, where his skull was found severely fractured, which had caused a compression of the brain, from the effect of which he died the following day.

Supposed Murder.—Mr. Higgs, on Monday, held an inquest on the body of a man unknown, who had been on Sunday found in the Thames behind Whitehall, quite dead, and pierced with five deep wounds. The landlord of the Rose and Crown, Tooley-street, identified the body as that of the captain of a Yorkshire billy-boy, who frequented his house, but whose name he knew not, and whom he had not seen for two months past. Mr. Bainbridge, a surgeon, who had made a post mortem examination, declared it as his belief that the body had been in the water nearly a fortnight, that the deceased did not die from drowning, and that the wounds were inflicted prior to death. The inference was very strong that they were inflicted by some other person on the deceased. The coroner said the circumstances of the case so very clearly showed that the deceased had met his death by unfair means, that the inquiry must be adjourned for a week.

THE THEATRES.

In a week or two the duties of the dramatic journalist will be almost entirely confined to comparisons between the different merits of those gentlemen who have appeared, or are about to do so, in the various adaptations of Don Cæsar de Bazan, who will shortly become completely ubiquitous. We hear Mr. Hicks, Mr. Dale, and Mr. James Browne spoken of as his representatives at different theatres: the only fear is, that the subject will be completely overdone.

The Lyceum is alive in every one of its departments, with busy workmen engaged upon the "Seven Castles of the Passions," to be produced on a scale of splendour which is intended to leave "Aladdin" in the shade, on Monday. An acquisition has been made to the corps of the City National, in the person of Mr. Roxby, an excellent comedian,—we believe from Manchester: and we rejoice to add, that the speculation of Mr. Phelps and Mrs. Warner, for creating a taste for the legitimate drama, at Sadler's Wells, is crowned with undeniable success. We shall make this excellently-conducted theatre the object of a special visit early next week.

DRURY-LANE.

At length the long-talked-of opera of "The Syren," the joint production of the thousand-and-one Scribe and Auber, was produced at this theatre on Thursday last, and was certainly successful, although it is as trashy and vulgar a production as ever we witnessed. The libretto is a tissue of unconnected incidents, so any attempt of ours to describe it would give it perhaps the semblance of a plot. Miss Rainforth as the misnomed Syren—for the reader must put all classical association aside—was interesting, and was encored in the finales to acts II. and III. Mr. Harrison was also similarly honoured, but was most comically attired; and Mr. Stretton seemed very zealous in turning the old Neapolitan Manager into a Pantaloon. The scenery consists of but three set scenes, one for each act.

The grand double scene in the second act is well contrived, and reflects credit on the Grieves. The lower part represents an inn under the Abruzzi Mountains, and the upper part a "Footpath in the Forest, winding through trees and rocks," as the books and the playbills pastorally describe it. There is a rich scene of a saloon also in the palace of the Duke de Popoli, and the barque Etna manned; but on the whole it is nothing wonderful. Auber's music is the worst he has composed—it is noisy and common-place. The overture was encored, much to the detriment, we fear, of M. Benedict's right arm, who of late has become a most furious conductor. All the principal singers were called for at the fall of the curtain, and the piece was loudly applauded; but we fear its duration.

PRINCESS'.

At this charming house also has "The Syren" appeared, with the advantage too of a first start, which came off on Monday evening last most triumphantly. "The Syren" is a totally different character from "The Lucia," and one much more fitted to the powers of voice, elegance, and finish of style which belong to Mdlle. Nau. She does not possess tragic energy enough for the "Bride of Lammermoor," but she is truly captivating in the Circean melody she infuses into the winsome music she has to sing (though by no means the best, that is to say, of the highest order), which Auber has composed, and which is chiefly indebted to her exquisite performance of it. She was eminently beautiful in the trio of the first act, "When the Shades of Night"—in the bravura "From Head to Foot I Tremble," and in the finale to the last act, "Arouse Poor Dear," her finished execution was beyond all praise. The vilanella and romance in the second act were, however, the gems of the opera. Allan sang deliciously; there is a devotion in his voice, particularly in the upper part, which is thrilling beyond measure. Of the rest of the dramatis personæ we say nothing. The piece was highly successful.

But now let us turn to comparisons, and make a few contrasts between what the Princess' and "Her Majesty's Servants" as they were wont to be called at old Drury, have effected on this rival occasion.

It is difficult, and would be almost invidious to compare the two "gettings up" of the respective houses. Each has its merit differently diffused throughout; but, in common candour, we prefer, or rather incline to, the Oxford-street version.

By the way, we were in error in attributing the new farce of "Taking the Pledge" to Mr. Oxberry; the author being Mr. John Courtney.

HAYMARKET.

After the "Confederacy" on Monday evening, a fresh translation of "Don Cæsar de Bazan" was produced, and with the same good luck which has attended its predecessors, under the title of "A Match for a King;" the incidents being compressed into two acts, and much of the melo-dramatic effect omitted to suit the grave taste of the Haymarket audience. The leading features and situations of the drama are, however, closely preserved, and the succession of incidents exactly the same as at the other houses; but, beyond this, the structure of the piece is thin, if we may be allowed the term, and appeared more so from the inefficiency of Mr. Charles Mathews as the Don, in giving weight to the more serious portions of the play, perfectly at home as he was in the lighter phases of the character. It is a rôle of a most peculiar kind, and there are few, very few actors, who can do justice to it: at present Mr. Wallack is decidedly at the head of those who have attempted to pourtray it. Miss Julia Bennett was an interesting Mariquita, here transformed into a flower-girl. Mrs. W. Clifford, with Mr. Strickland for her spouse, were both very droll as the Marchese and Marchesa de Gran Tornados: and Mr. Stuart was rather dismal for a lover, as the King. In fact, between the light, too light acting of the Don, and the dark personification of the Monarch, a species of twilight was produced, anything but effective. More welcome was Mr. Mathews in a very pretty song which he introduced at the banquet-table in the prison, descriptive of the charms of his lady-love. It was very catching and characteristic; and we were glad to hear it taken up again at the end of the piece as a finale. An unpardonable wait occurred between the acts, but the audience soon recovered their good temper, and the piece was given out by Mr. Mathews for repetition amidst unqualified applause. Miss Julia Bennett also appeared before the curtain to receive the usual compliments. Both the scenery and dresses of the drama reflect the highest credit on the management. The house was very well filled.

ADELPHI.

On Monday evening another translation of "Don Cæsar de Bazan" was brought forward at this theatre, and with perfect success. It is unnecessary to repeat the plot, which is precisely similar to the one we gave last week, as belonging to the version at the Princess'; but the entirely different cast of characters, and, in many instances, conception of parts, may admit of a few remarks. Mr. Webster performed the hero, and Madame Celeste the Dancing Girl. Miss Woolgar was the Armourer's Apprentice, and Mr. Howe the enamoured King of Spain: it is to this latter gentleman's performance that, in our opinion, the greatest praise is due. He was drafted from the Haymarket company to these boards, for the purpose of playing the part—not a very gracious one, at best; and which, we believe, was refused by Mr. James Vining; such having been the reason for his quitting the establishment. Mr. Howe may congratulate himself with good reason upon his success. The unlawful love of the licentious monarch, his impetuosity and deceit, were excellently pourtrayed; and his general acting, especially in the third act, of the highest order. With Mr. Webster's Don Cæsar, we must confess that we were less pleased. Although evidently conceived and acted with the greatest care, yet there was throughout a something wanting to identify the character with that of the high-spirited, dissolute, chivalric, decayed nobleman. It was too heavy: its devil-may-care gaiety appeared to pertain more to the respectable bourgeois than the high-born Don: and much of the rollicking, off-hand dash of the character—the most characteristic attribute—was marred by a hesitation in delivery, which induced a perpetual fear amongst the audience that the performer was about to break down. This was less perceptible in the third act, and here certainly the applause was greatest. Madame Celeste played Maritana with her usual effective energy; and Miss Woolgar, as Lazarilla, looked and acted charmingly. A spirited Tarantella by these two ladies at the commencement of the play was warmly applauded.

The rest of the cast need not be noticed, except that we think a more fitting representative might have been found for the Minister, whose declamation, so totally void of expression, was anything but agreeable. The piece has been beautifully put upon the stage, and with the greatest attention to detail. The last scene especially was admirable, and would have been still more perfect had the tesselated pavement come down to the lamps instead of finishing at the proscenium. This can be easily remedied, and with the greatest advantage. The audience—a very full one—were in high good spirits throughout, and applauded lustily at the end, when Mr. Webster announced the drama for repetition every evening until further notice. The piece has been adapted with much tact and stage-effect by Mr. Bourcicault, who appears to produce plays with the same high-pressure facility as Donizetti does operas.

On Tuesday evening a new burlesque from the pen of Mr. Coyne was produced, called "Telemachus; or, the Island of Calypso." The subject was not a new one, since we recollect an extravaganza on the same story during the Vestris' dynasty at the Olympic, but the present version was entirely original. This species of entertainment has of late become exceedingly popular; and in these days of declining legitimacy is the only vehicle for shooting at folly with effect from the stage. Burlesques, as now written, may be divided into two classes; those which depend upon pointed dialogue, whimsical antitheses, and neatly-turned allusions for their success; and those which create laughter by some broad piece of buffoonery or ultra-absurd assumption of character. Of the former class, we may notice "Fortunio," "Open Sesame," the two "Aladdins," &c.; of the latter, "Norma," and pieces of the like kind. The burlesque of Tuesday evening combined some of the principal features of these two, and was plentifully charged with jokes upon the Art-Unions, Joinville, the drama, Captain Warner, &c.; whilst Wright and Paul Bedford had the perpetration of some most exaggerated drolleries entrusted to them, the former gentleman playing the nymph Calypso, and the latter one Mentor, with Miss Woolgar for the hero. We confess that we should have been better pleased had the lady and the nymph changed characters. Mr. Wright, in his line, is inimitably quaint and comic, yet there is something repulsive to us in his assumption of female characters, not more so, perhaps, in him than in any other man; but he is said to "make up" admirably for such parts, and, to our thinking, the closer he carries the personation the more offensive is the performance. We trust this hint will operate in future towards the extinction of such unpleasant assumptions. The jokes of the burlesque were showered about the dialogue with great liberality. The following brought down a hearty round of applause:—

Men. The picture's too delicious; don't proceed.
The Island is a charming spot:—indeed,
To seize it I had serious thoughts.
Tele. Oh, fie!
Men. Did I say seize? I meant to occupy!
That's now the easy phrase, by which we bone
A thing we can't exactly call our own.

Mr. S. Cowell was amazingly funny as a black attendant, and elicited a loud encore in a song to the bango "De Polkum Dance," a parody on the Nigger melody, "Dance, de boatman, dance," which the little lads of the metropolis now whistle about the streets. It had verses adapted to passing events, like "Jim Crow." Miss Woolgar had some quaint parodies also, which she gave with her usual spirit and tact; and Miss Ellen Chaplin, as a little tiger Cupid, delivered the lines allotted to her with careful emphasis. A Polka, by six bears, transplanted from the "Avarice" tableau in "Les Sept Chateaux du Diable," might have been much better, had the figure been more cleverly arranged; as it was, they all appeared abroad, not knowing precisely what to do. Of course, the blame for this falls upon the management.

The burlesque was placed upon the stage with great liberality, and the scenery and dresses were excellent. At the conclusion, Messrs. Wright and Bedford walked, hand in hand, before the curtain, to receive the congratulations of the audience, which were not, however, altogether unmixed.

ASTLEY'S.

Mr. Batty has every reason to be satisfied with the success of his establishment, to which crowded houses nightly bear witness. Mr. Widdecombe—that illustrious individual, concerning whose defiance of time and age such wild legends are extant—dark hints of his having been Master of the Horse to Cheops, whose procession he arranged when that monarch laid the first stone of the pyramid—and mysterious whispers of his equestrian achievements in later times, at Agincourt and Tewkesbury—this type of Eugene Sue's last creation took his benefit on Friday evening, when the still attractive "Mazeppa" was performed to one of the fullest audiences of the season. Previously to this, however, Mr. Barry, the clown, performed his voyage with four geese, from the Red House to Vauxhall-bridge, to give additional éclat to the benefit. We had the curiosity to go and see this feat. There was something irresistibly ludicrous in the grave features of the clown, as he guided his feathered team amongst the throng of boats that surrounded him. There was one goose, of restless temperament, who had not been properly broken in, and preferred going along with his head under water, and his tail in the air, to the great diversion of the spectators. The intrepid navigator was warmly greeted when he entered the arena at night; and elicited loud applause by his humorous burlesque of a parliamentary speech. The scenes in the circle were of a very superior order, Madame Tournaire exhibiting several graceful poses with a floating scarf; and three "Olympians" performing some wonderful feats of strength upon horseback. A Signor Milano and Miss Cushnie were encored in the "Polka;" which, considering it was danced upon six inches of sawdust, required no small amount of labour.

STRAND.

A two act drama was produced at this little theatre on Monday evening, under the title of "Henri de Rochemaine," and was deservedly successful. It is a translation, from the French, of "Mademoiselle de Bois-Robert," which was also performed at the Haymarket, with effect, last winter; and there called, "Victor and Hortense." The principal characters, in the present instance, were played with much ability by Mrs. Montgomerie and Mr. Roberts, and the entire piece was received with unanimous approbation. Mr. Marble still continues to throw his audiences into fearful convulsions of laughter. He is one of the best histrionic importations we have ever seen from the other side of the Atlantic; and the quiet oddity with which he delivers his drolleries, doubles their effect. Looking to the exceedingly moderate prices of this house, we must confess it offers as good an entertainment as any in London.

ADELAIDE GALLERY.

This popular place of amusement, after a short recess, was reopened last Monday evening under a new management, having undergone a complete alteration in the interim. Amongst other novelties which the enterprising proprietor has succeeded in obtaining, the first that appeared in the programme of the entertainments was the Sax-Horn Band, the "horn" being an instrument which has now, we believe for the first time, made its appearance in this country. The band was excellently conducted by M. Laurent, jun.? who on this occasion relinquished his cornet-à-piston for the baton. As we were placed at some distance from the orchestra, we confess we could not satisfactorily distinguish the Sax-Horns from the other instruments which formed the band: but we can speak of the general effect as being exceedingly good. At the conclusion of the concert Mr. Ormonde, a gentleman who has before appeared at this institution, commenced the first of a series of lectures upon the popular dances of all nations, said to be compiled by Mr. Stoquelar, the successful author of "Polkamania." The lecturer commenced by giving a description of the origin of dancing amongst the Greeks. After some allusions to the weakness of our nation in this respect, he proceeded systematically through the dances of all times, from the ballets of the Augustan age to the Polka of our own. The illustrations were capitally given by some foreign artistes; but we would recommend that on future occasions some arrangements should be made to prepare the dances by the time the allusion is made to them. The gallery was crowded to excess, but the excellent arrangement of the seats enabled everybody to obtain a capital view of the entertainments.

Mr. Belaney.—A special sessions has been held at Bedford, near Sunderland, to investigate a charge preferred by Mr. Belaney against Mr. George Grey Bell, and Mr. John Stephenson, of having set fire to his house on the 18th of September. The inquiry on the first day extended to ten hours, during which the Rev. R. Belaney, Thomas Coxon, a baker, Joseph Kidd and Joseph Catton, seamen, were examined, but from whom nothing was elicited to inculpate the prisoners. On the next day several other witnesses were examined relating to the fire, but although they saw Bell at the fire, which he did not attempt to extinguish, they witnessed nothing to indicate that he was the incendiary. Stephenson did not appear to be in the slightest degree implicated in the transaction. At the close of the inquiry the magistrates expressed their strongest conviction that there was not the shadow of a charge against either of the prisoners.—Tyne Mercury.

Another Colliery Explosion.—Another colliery explosion occurred on Monday, at Cox Lodge Colliery, near Newcastle, which fortunately, however, was not attended with any loss of life. Two or three of the men were rather seriously injured. The explosion was caused by a person named Brown having used a naked candle.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

SONNET ON THE PROJECTED KENDAL AND WINANDERMERE RAILWAY.

Is there no nook of English ground secure
From rash assault? Schemes of retirement sown
In youth, and 'mid the busy world kept pure
As when their earliest flowers of hope were blown,
Must perish: how can they this blight endure?
And must he too his old delights disown
Who scorns a false utilitarian lure
'Mid his paternal fields at random thrown?
Baffle the threat, bright scene, from Orrest-head
Given to the pausing traveller's rapturous glance!
Plead for thy peace, thou beautiful romance
Of nature; and if human hearts be dead,
Speak passing winds, ye torrents, with your strong
And constant voice, protest against the wrong!

Rydal Mount, Oct. 12, 1844. Wm. Wordsworth.

TEA-DRINKING IN RUSSIA.

Tea is the principal luxury, besides brandy, in which the moujik indulges, when in his power. It is common to see him on these occasions call for a samovar, or tea-urn full of water; this he continues pouring through a small tea-pot containing a pinch of tea, until the water is all consumed. He will actually thus imbibe eight, twelve, or fifteen pints of hot liquid at a sitting.

A POINTED BLOW.

An invalid sent for a physician, the late Dr. Wheelman, and after detaining him for some time with a description of his pains, aches, &c., he thus summed up:—"Now, doctor, you have humbugged me long enough with your good-for-nothing pills and worthless syrups; they don't touch the real difficulty. I wish you to strike the cause of my ailment if it is in your power to reach it." "It shall be done," said the doctor, at the same time lifting his cane and demolishing a decanter of gin that stood upon the sideboard!

THE FIRST LOCOMOTIVE.

Just forty years ago, Mr. Trevethick, a mining engineer, constructed the first locomotive engine at Merthyr Tydvil, and applied it successfully to the traction of coal and coke.|

LORD ELDON'S TASTES.

In the plainness and heartiness of his tastes, Lord Eldon resembled Sir Walter Scott, and other unaffected lawyers of the olden time. His brother, Lord Stowell, on the contrary, was, according to his account, a thorough gourmand. In describing Lord Eldon's tastes, Mr. Twiss says—"To fashion and refinement Lord Eldon made no pretence, though his right understanding and kind nature preserved him from any solecism in good taste. His disposition was festive, but not luxurious. He liked plain port: the stronger the better. One of his favourite dishes was liver and bacon; and when he dined with George the Fourth it was one of the entrées."

DISCOVERY OF ANCIENT COINS.

On Wednesday, as Mr. Pope, a farmer, residing at Kilburn, was engaged ploughing a field on his farm at Kilburn, adjoining the London and Birmingham railroad, several pieces of ancient gold, silver, and copper coins were turned up, including some of the reign of Oliver Cromwell, in excellent preservation. Some centuries ago on the site of ground stood an extensive convent and burial ground.

THE SCIENCE OF WARFARE.

A society has been formed, and has located itself at Mulgrave House, Fulham having for its object "the advancement of science, and the establishment of universal peace," by the apparently incongruous means of teaching the art of war. The inventor of the new science of warfare is the gentleman for many years known as the Duke of Normandy. Some of his inventions are similar in effect to those of Captain Warner; but in addition to the explosive power which he has at command, the "Duke" also has invented a cannon on the principle of non-recoil, by means of which a certain aim may be taken, and the discharges made with greater rapidity. Some experiments were made on Tuesday. Several shells exploded, and were fearfully destructive in their effects. One of the rockets was fired at a distance of two hundred yards from a bulkhead, against which a stout sheet of iron had been firmly nailed. The rocket exploded the instant it struck the object, with such tremendous force as to rend away the iron, and to shiver the thick planks of wood behind.

AN EXPENSIVE GLASS OF WINE.

On the day appointed by Queen Elizabeth for the opening of the Royal Exchange, in 1570 (Jan. 23rd), Sir Thomas Gresham purchased a most costly pearl, which, on account of its exceedingly great value, had been refused by several persons of distinction. Sir Thomas Gresham at once agreed to give £1500 for the pearl. After he became possessed of this costly treasure, Sir Thomas immediately ordered a wine-goblet to be brought, and grinding the pearl into the finest powder, he placed it in the glass, and, filling the goblet with wine, drank it off at a draught, declaring that the building and the Queen's Majesty were worthy of such a beverage.

EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERY.

In the excavations for the improvement of the Caledonian Canal, a curious circumstance was observed at Bona. In removing some of the ruins a number of human bones, the teeth being remarkably fresh and entire, and one complete skeleton, were found. Some coins of the reign of Elizabeth were also dug up; but what occasioned most surprise was the discovery of a nest of toads, completely encased in the solid wall, with apparently not the slightest opening by which ingress could be obtained. In a small cavity, about three inches in diameter, were found six toads and a lizard. On their first admission to the light of day, the toads appeared insensible, but on being touched by the men they speedily revived.

A CURIOUS PRAYER-BOOK.

There is in the possession of J. Biggenden, Esq., of Walbrook, a very curious old Prayer-book, which has been a sort of heir-loom in his family for nearly 300 years. The title-page is as follows:—"The Psalter, or Psalmes of David, after the translation of the great Bible, poynted as it shall by sayd or song in Churches. With the Morning and Evening Prayer, and certaine additions of Collects, and other the ordinarie service, gathered out of the booke of Common Prayer." "Imprinted at London, by William Seres, Anno 1569."

A POOR MAN.

It is possible that the accumulation of wealth may add to the sorrow of the possessor. I know an individual, with whom I was very intimate when a youth, and I remember very well, at that time, whenever I wanted relief for the poor, he would give a £10 note, and say, "Richard, never pass my door; always come to me when you want assistance for any deserving object." He was then comparatively poor, having perhaps a fortune of from £50,000 to £60,000; but now he is worth nearly £1,000,000. One would have thought it ought to have made its possessor happy; but no, I know not a more miserable man than that.—Extract from a speech of Richard Oastler.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE OF LONDON.

The first stone of the first "Royal Exchange" was laid by the celebrated Sir Thomas Gresham, Knt., agent to the Queen's Highness, on the 7th day of June, A.D. 1566. On the 23rd of January, A.D. 1570 (about twelve years after her accession to the throne), the maiden Queen Elizabeth opened the building with great pomp. This Exchange endured just one century, having been destroyed by the great fire in the year 1666, after which it was rebuilt of excellent Portland stone. The then "merry monarch," King Charles II., deigned to lay the first stone of the new edifice. The 28th of September, 1669, was the day fixed for the opening of the New Exchange. The King was expected, but he did not come. Before the building of any regular Exchange divers common councils in the reign of Henry VIII. consulted whether there should be a burse or convenient place of meeting for merchants to treat of their affairs, and in the 26th year of that monarch's reign he sent royal letters to the city "for the making of a new burse at Leadenhall;" whereupon it being put to hands whether the new burse should be removed out of Lombard-street, it was agreed that it should not; so that the merchants' meeting continued there until the Royal Exchange was opened in 1570.

A NOVEL SPECIES OF CRIME.

A person charged a man at the Devonport Town Hall on Wednesday last, with intending to commit "some sort of suicide on her."

A GOOD IDEA.

In what was formerly the Bankrupts' Hall, at Amsterdam, was a group which might perhaps be usefully exhibited in America. Above is a strong money-chest burst open, and rats clambering in and out; a man is falling headlong below it; and farther down are sculptured the relics of sumptuous feasts. The fellow fell by living too fast. On the right is a figure of Justice, with sword and scales. It would shake the nerves of the grandest of our defaulters to stand his trial amid such emblems as these, if an inexorable Dutch judge were on the bench before him.—Dr. Durbin's Observations in Europe.

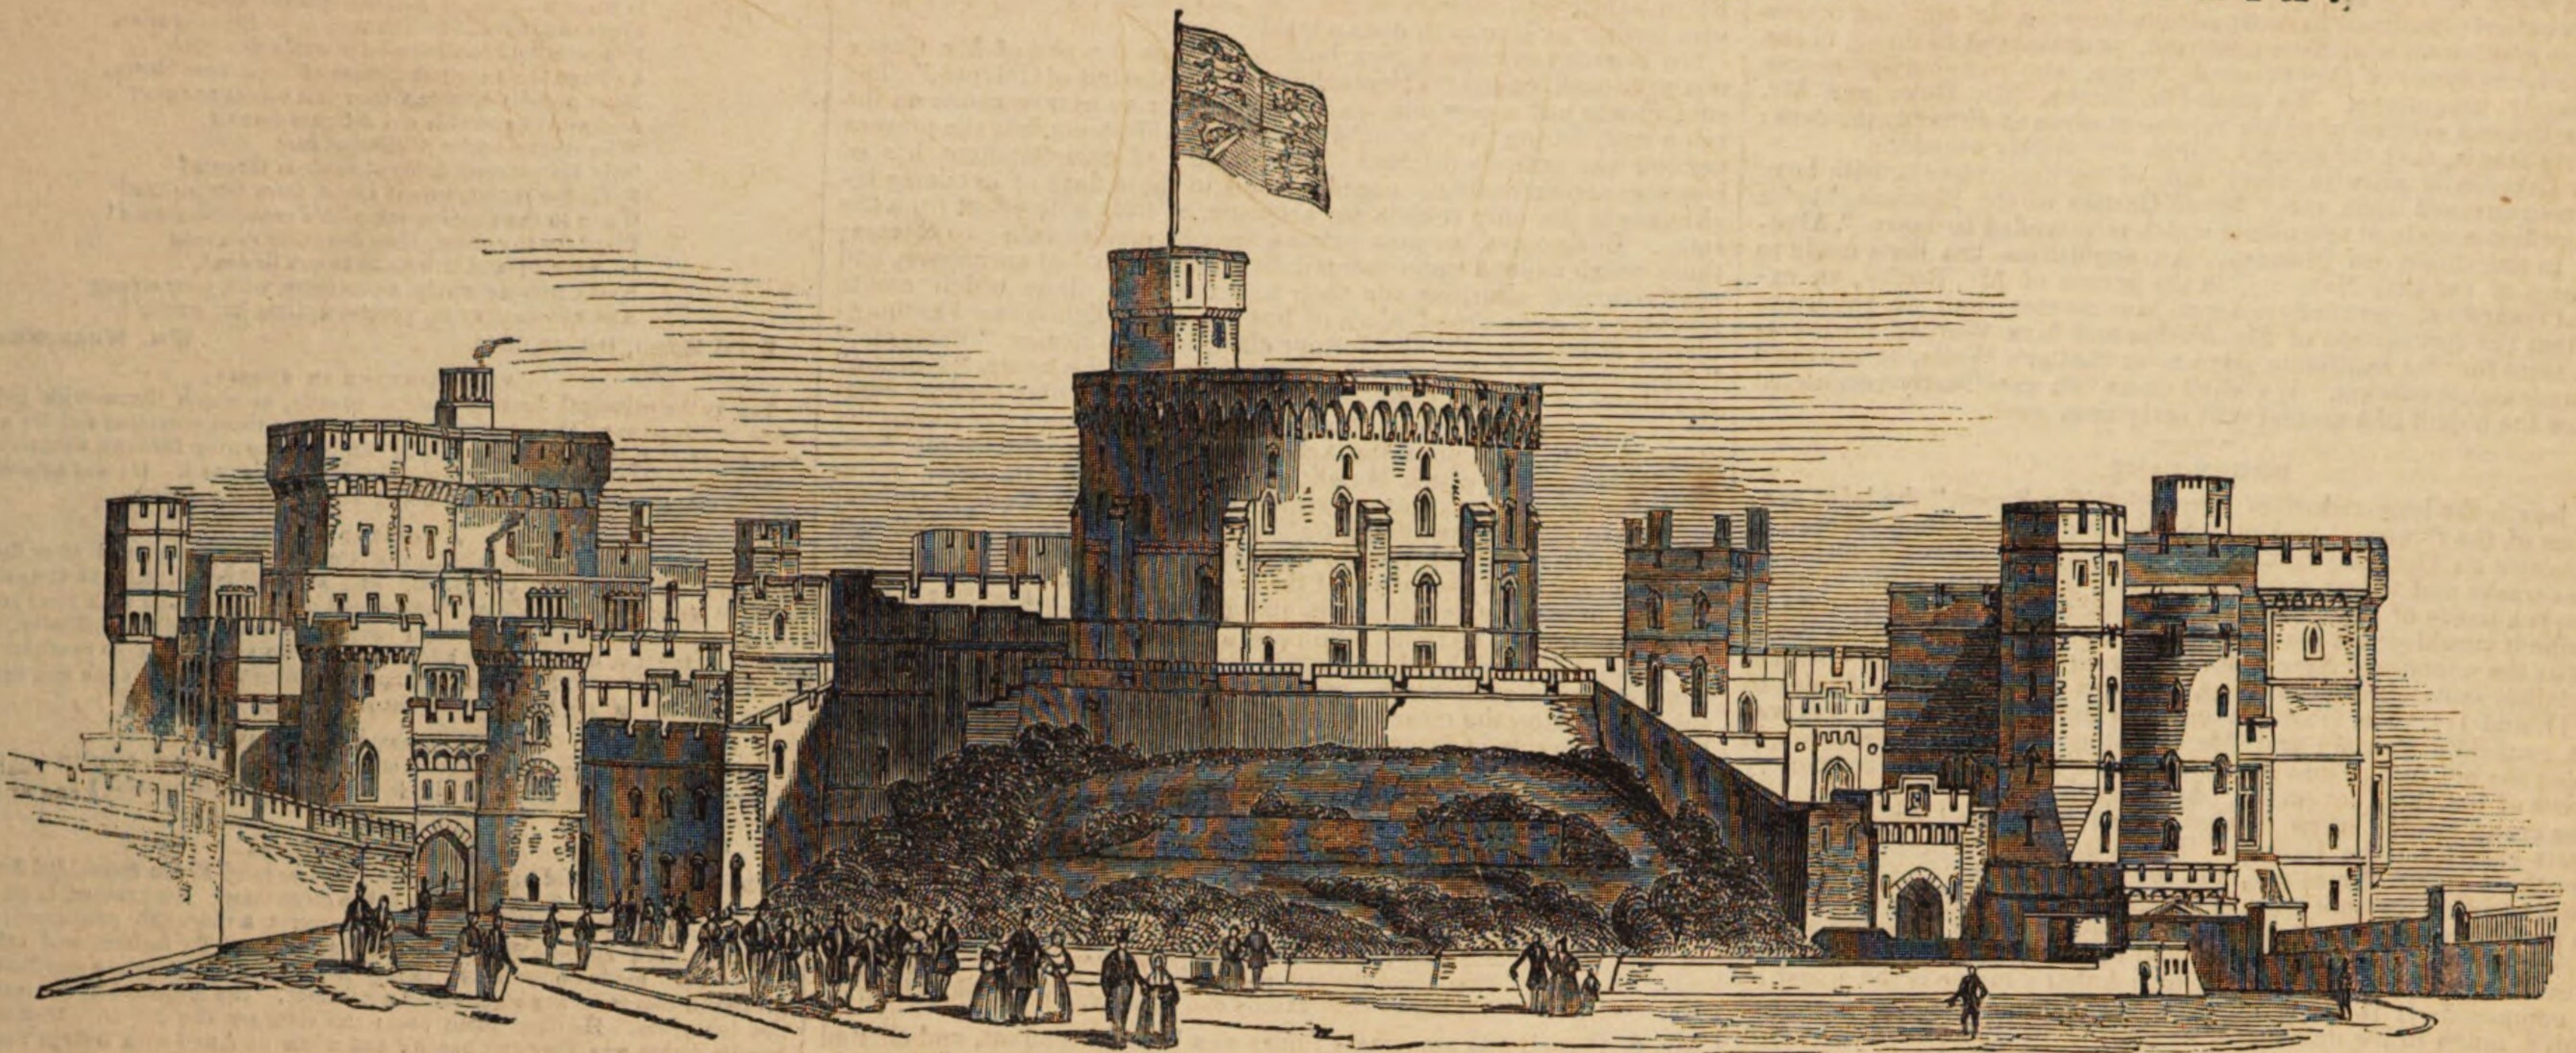
ENGLAND AND THE CONTINENT.

I will make an assertion, grounded on experience and conviction, and which may be applied as a never-failing test, that an Englishman, who after a long absence from England, returns to it with feelings and sentiments partial to other countries and adverse to his own, has no real mind—is without the powers of discernment and plain easy comparison—and has no title to enjoy the superior moral and local advantages to which he is born, but of which he is insensible and unworthy.—Letters of the Earl of Malmesbury.

AMERICAN ORATORY.

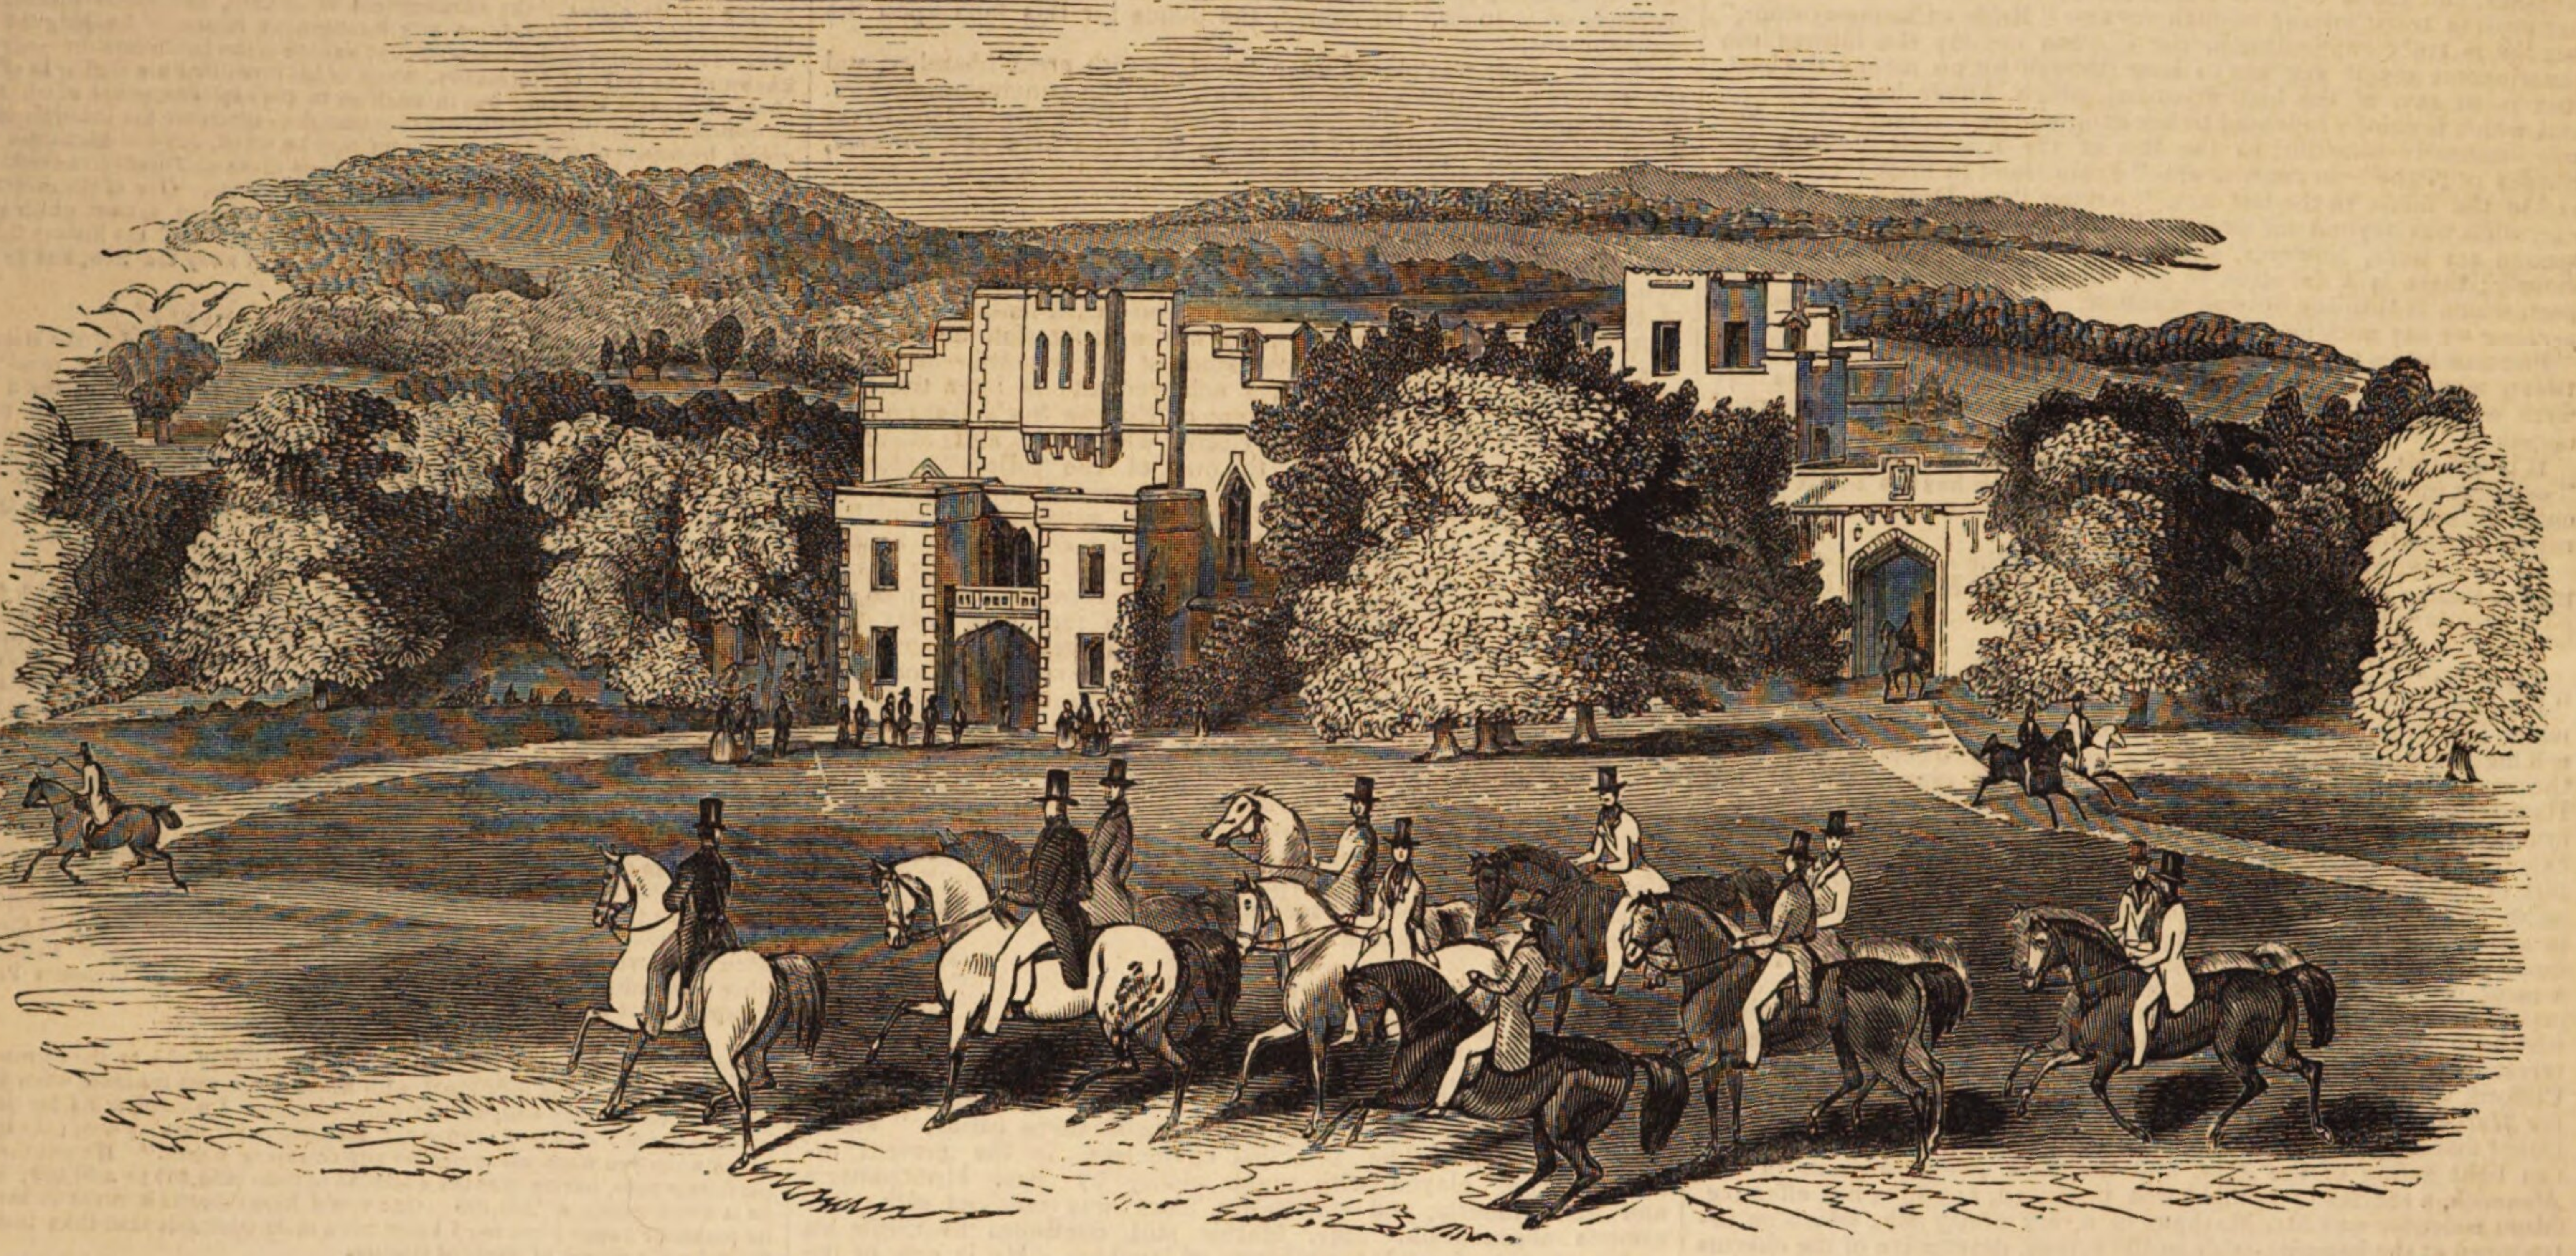
At a late political meeting in the western part of Illinois, the orator electrified his hearers by the following eloquent remarks:—"Every man and woman is born free and equal except niggars. They aint born so in haith, for I am six foot and my brother Rip is only four foot and a half and thick through in proportion. They aint born so in point of strength, for I can double up any he-cretur between here and the forks of Red River. They aint born so in point of gumption, for I know a smart piece, while cousin Leafy was born a nat'ral. We aint so in point of running, for I can run down a steam-boat, a panther, or a railway car; nor we aint born so in point of taking rye, for I can put the bung-hole to my mouth and swallow half a barrel. Then what is we born equal in? I'll tell you how we're equal. When you go to the polls next 'lection day, if you'll vote for me to go to Congress, I swear to you by all the eyes in my breeches pocket, that every one of you shall have a grant and I'll take a grant too, and then we shall be equal all round."

VISIT OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH TO QUEEN VICTORIA.



WEST FRONT OF THE UPPER WARD OF WINDSOR CASTLE.—THE QUEEN AND HER ROYAL VISITORS PROCEEDING TO ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL.

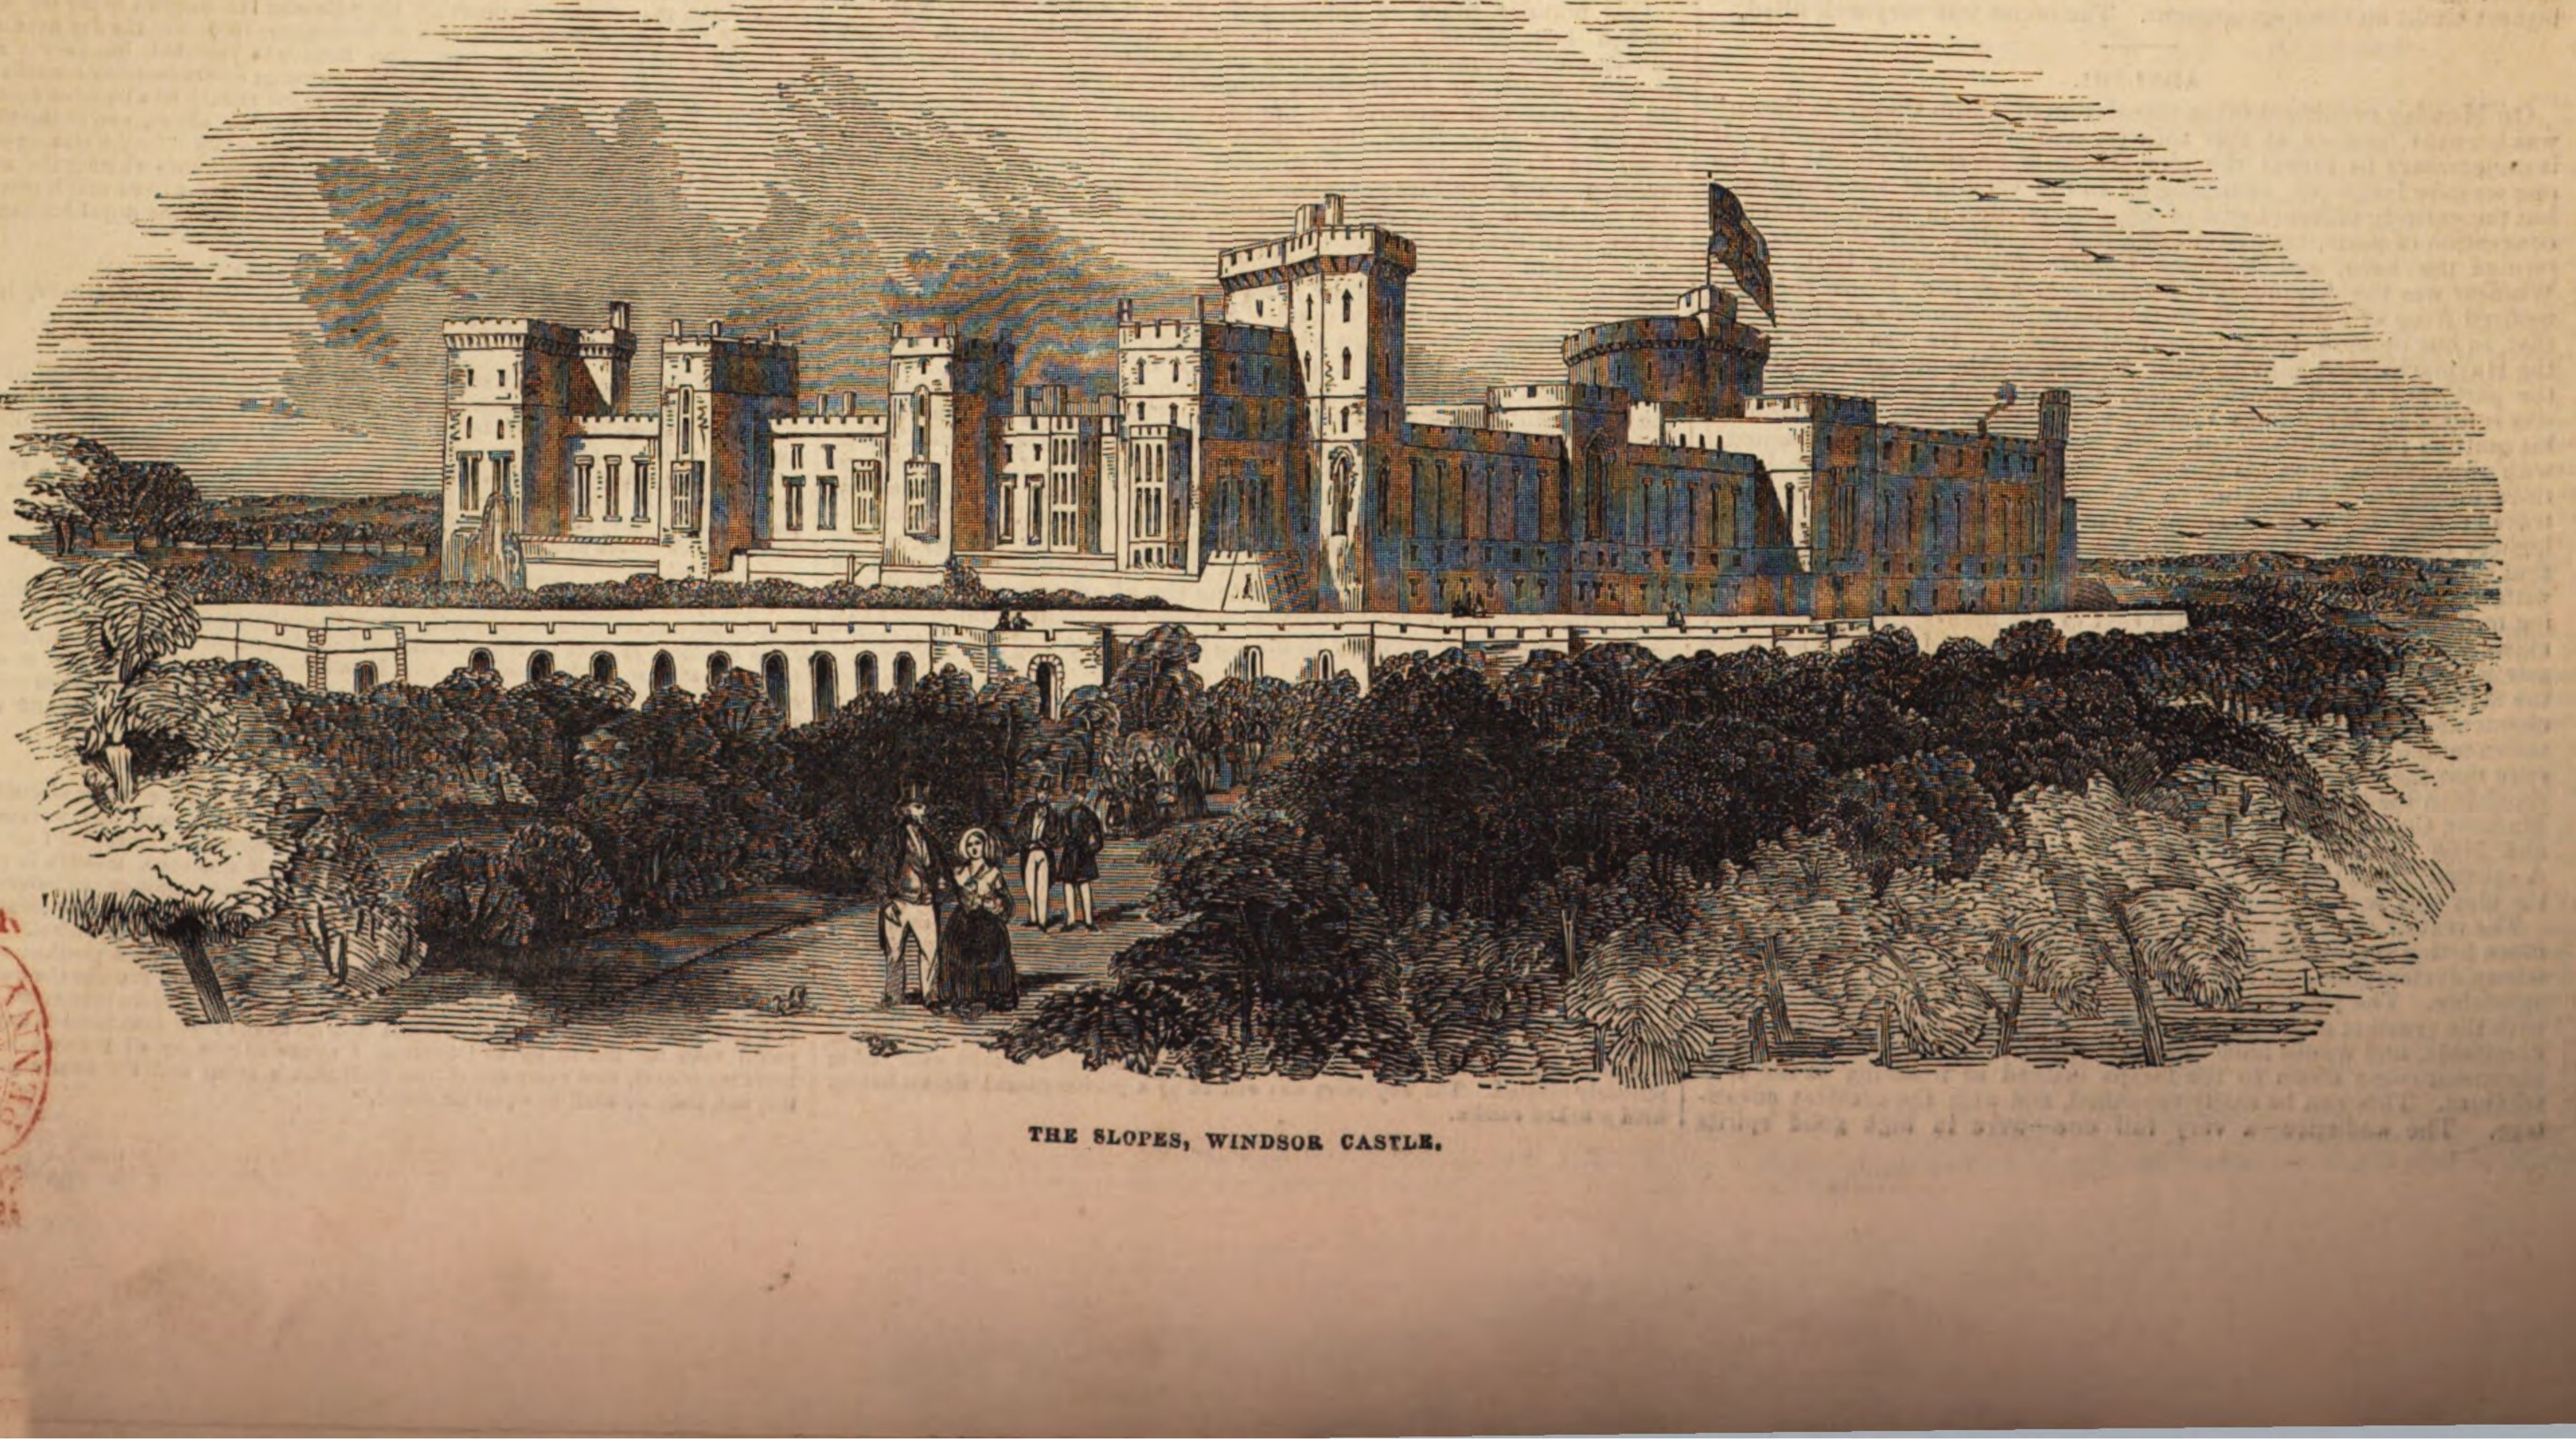
In resuming our illustrated chronicle of this most important and interesting event, it may be as well to state, that the several Engravings of the Royal sojourn at Windsor, have been executed by Mr. Stephen Sly, from Drawings, made by him, by Authority; so that the accuracy of the details of the splendid scenes and incidents portrayed, may be implicitly relied on; and the very handsome manner in which the means of insuring this authenticity has been granted, will ever command our most grateful remembrance. We take up our record with our Windsor Correspondent's report of the proceedings on Friday, which appeared only in part of our impression of last week.



THE GRAND LAWN AND DRIVE IN FRONT OF VICTORIA GATE, WINDSOR CASTLE.

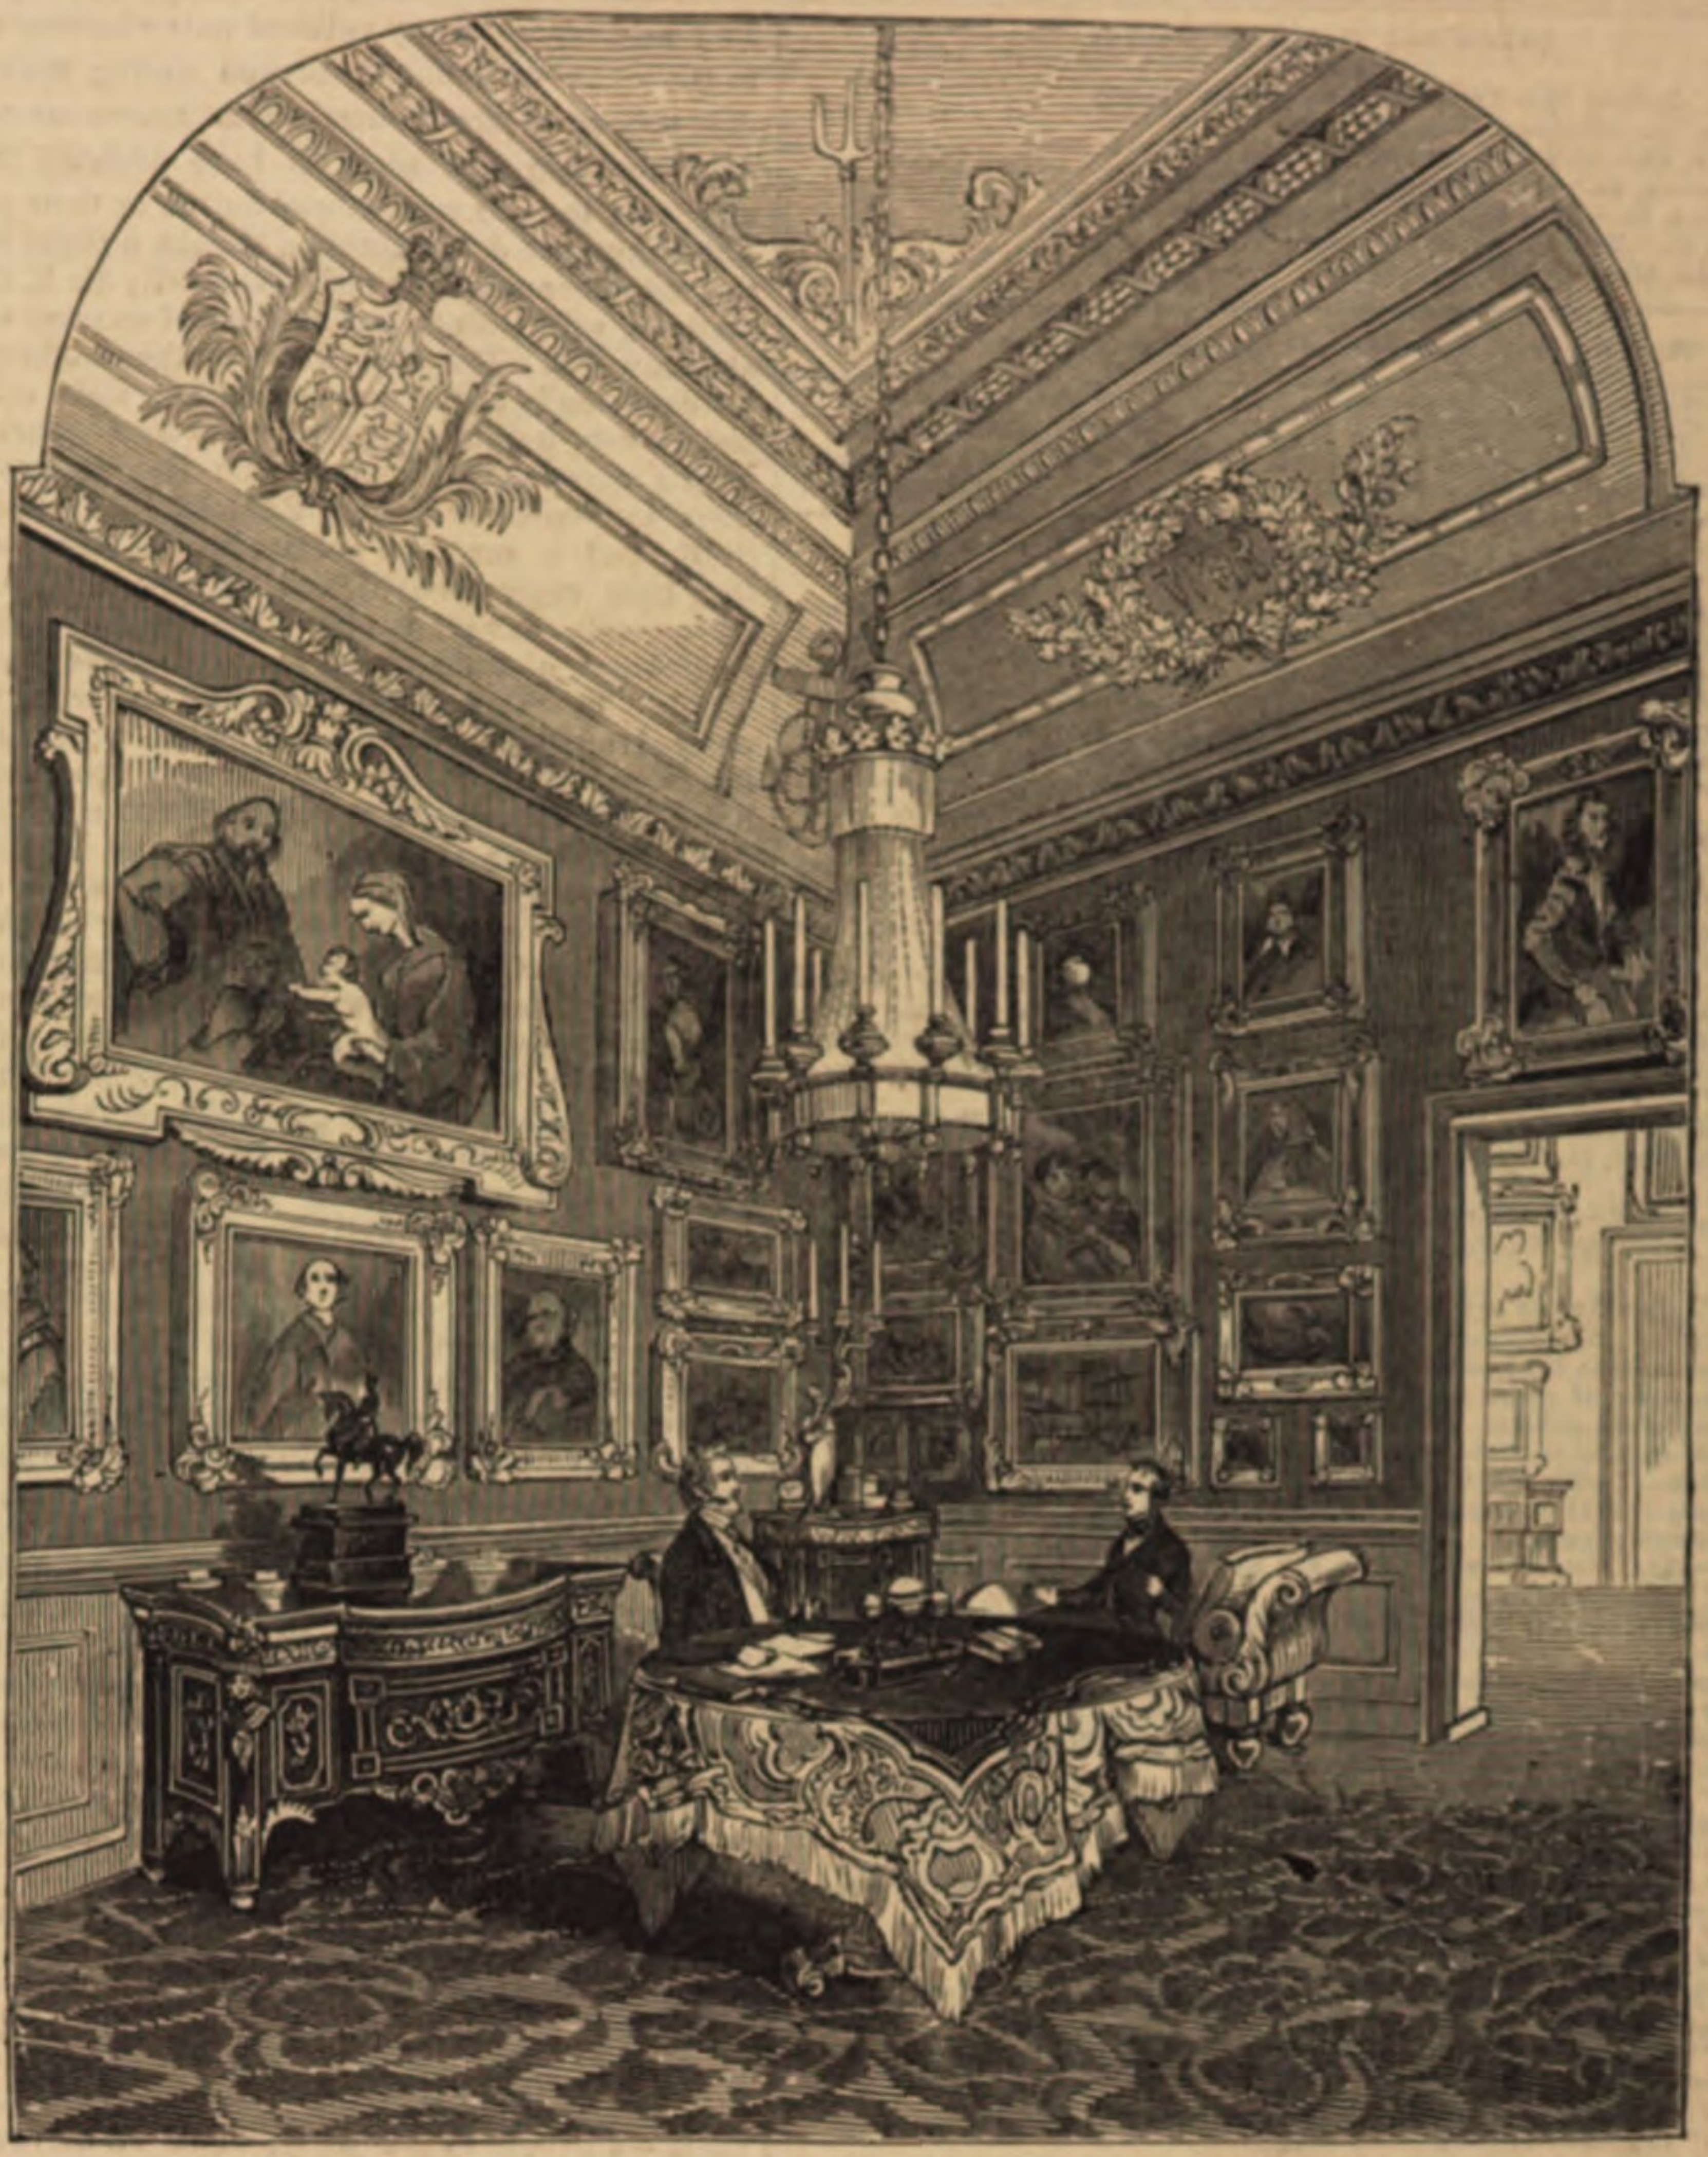
ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY FROM THE CORPORATION OF WINDSOR.

This morning, at nine o'clock, the members of the Corporation, with the Rev. Isaac Gossett, the vicar, in full canonicals, assembled in the Council Chamber, at the Town Hall, or the purpose of proceeding in procession to the Castle, to present the address, which had been agreed to at a numerous meeting of the Aldermen and Town Council on the preceding day.



THE SLOPES, WINDSOR CASTLE.

NEWSPAPER



THE KING'S CLOSET, WINDSOR CASTLE.

The civic procession left the hall at half-past nine, preceded by the mace-bearer, who, with the whole of the members of the corporation, was in his full official robes. Upon their arrival at the Castle, they were taken to the Queen's drawing (or Zuccarelli) room, there to wait the pleasure of the King. After waiting for a few minutes, the mayor, vicar, and town councillors were ushered into the presence of his Majesty, in the King's drawing-room, where his Majesty (who was surrounded by the Duke de Montpensier, Admiral Mackau, General Rumigny, Count Dumas, General Baron Athalin, Count de Chabannes, Colonel Thiery, Baron Fain, and several others in the suite of the King) received them in the most gracious and affable manner. The address, after having been read by the town clerk in an extremely emphatic and feeling manner, was handed by him to the mayor, who presented it to his Majesty, by whom it was received very graciously.

His Majesty having handed the document to M. Guizot, who stood immediately upon the King's right, advanced somewhat nearer to the Corporation than the position he had previously occupied, and addressing himself to that body, spoke as follows :—

"Mr. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Windsor—I feel most grateful to her Majesty Queen Victoria for having permitted you to present this address to me. I receive it with the most cordial thanks, impressed with the kind reception I have met with from all classes of her Majesty's subjects since my arrival in this country. I was most happy last year to perceive the sentiments of the French people, when her Majesty favoured me with a visit at Eu. I was most happy to entertain her Majesty under my own roof on that occasion, and rejoiced at the interchange of social feelings which then took place. The union of France and England is of great importance to both nations, not from any wish of aggrandisement, however. Our view should be PEACE, while we leave every other country in the possession of those blessings which it has pleased Divine Providence to bestow on them. Happy I am that you appreciate my constant endeavours, assisted by a wise government at home, to promote the most friendly and peaceful relations between the two countries. France has nothing to ask of England, and England has nothing to ask of France, but cordial union. I thank you for this very kind address, and I consider it a privilege that I have had the good fortune to express before you the sentiments with which my heart is filled."

Thirty of the Yeomen of the Queen's Guard also arrived at Windsor this morning, their services having been commanded by the Queen this afternoon, at the Palace. They were accompanied by the Earl of Beverley, Captain; Sir Samuel Hancock, and Thomas Seymour Sadler, Esq., Exons; and Jonathan Ellerthorpe, Esq., Clerk of the Cheque and Secretary.

VISIT TO THE DUCHESS OF KENT.

Her Majesty, accompanied by the King of the French, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, left the Castle this day at noon, in an open pony carriage and four, and proceeded across the Home Park, to Frogmore House, to pay a morning visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Three other pony carriages and four, containing Prince Albert, the Duc de Montpensier, M. Guizot, Admiral Mackau, and several others of the illustrious guests, followed the Queen and the King of the French.

The royal and distinguished party, after alighting for a short time at the mansion, again entered the carriages, driving along the Frogmore road, and entering the Home Park at the iron gates opposite the Long Walk. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent returned to the Castle to luncheon, in the carriage with the Queen and his Majesty Louis Philippe.

Her Majesty and her august visitors lunched at half-past one o'clock, in consequence of the Investiture having been appointed to take place at half-past two.

Here we may describe, respectively, the three engravings at page 244, illustrating other incidents of the Royal visit.

1. West Front of the Upper Ward of Windsor Castle.

This view—the grandest in the Castle—exhibits, in the centre, the ancient British mound, crowned with the Round Tower; on the left, the Norman Gateway (through which the royal party passed on their way from the upper to the lower ward), with the Brunswick Tower, containing George IV.'s, the King's Gate, behind it, in the distance; and on the right, Clarence Tower, St. George's Gate, King Edward III.'s, Lancaster Tower, with a small projection of Victoria Tower, in the distance, beyond it. The Royal company, as they passed before this imposing range of buildings, were seen to great advantage.

2. The Grand Lawn and Drive in front of Victoria Gate—Visit to the Royal Stables.

In this view, the royal entrances to the stables and riding house are shown; and in the distance, the wooded heights of Forest Hill and Queen Anne's Walk.

3. The Slopes.—Promenade of the Queen and her Visitors.

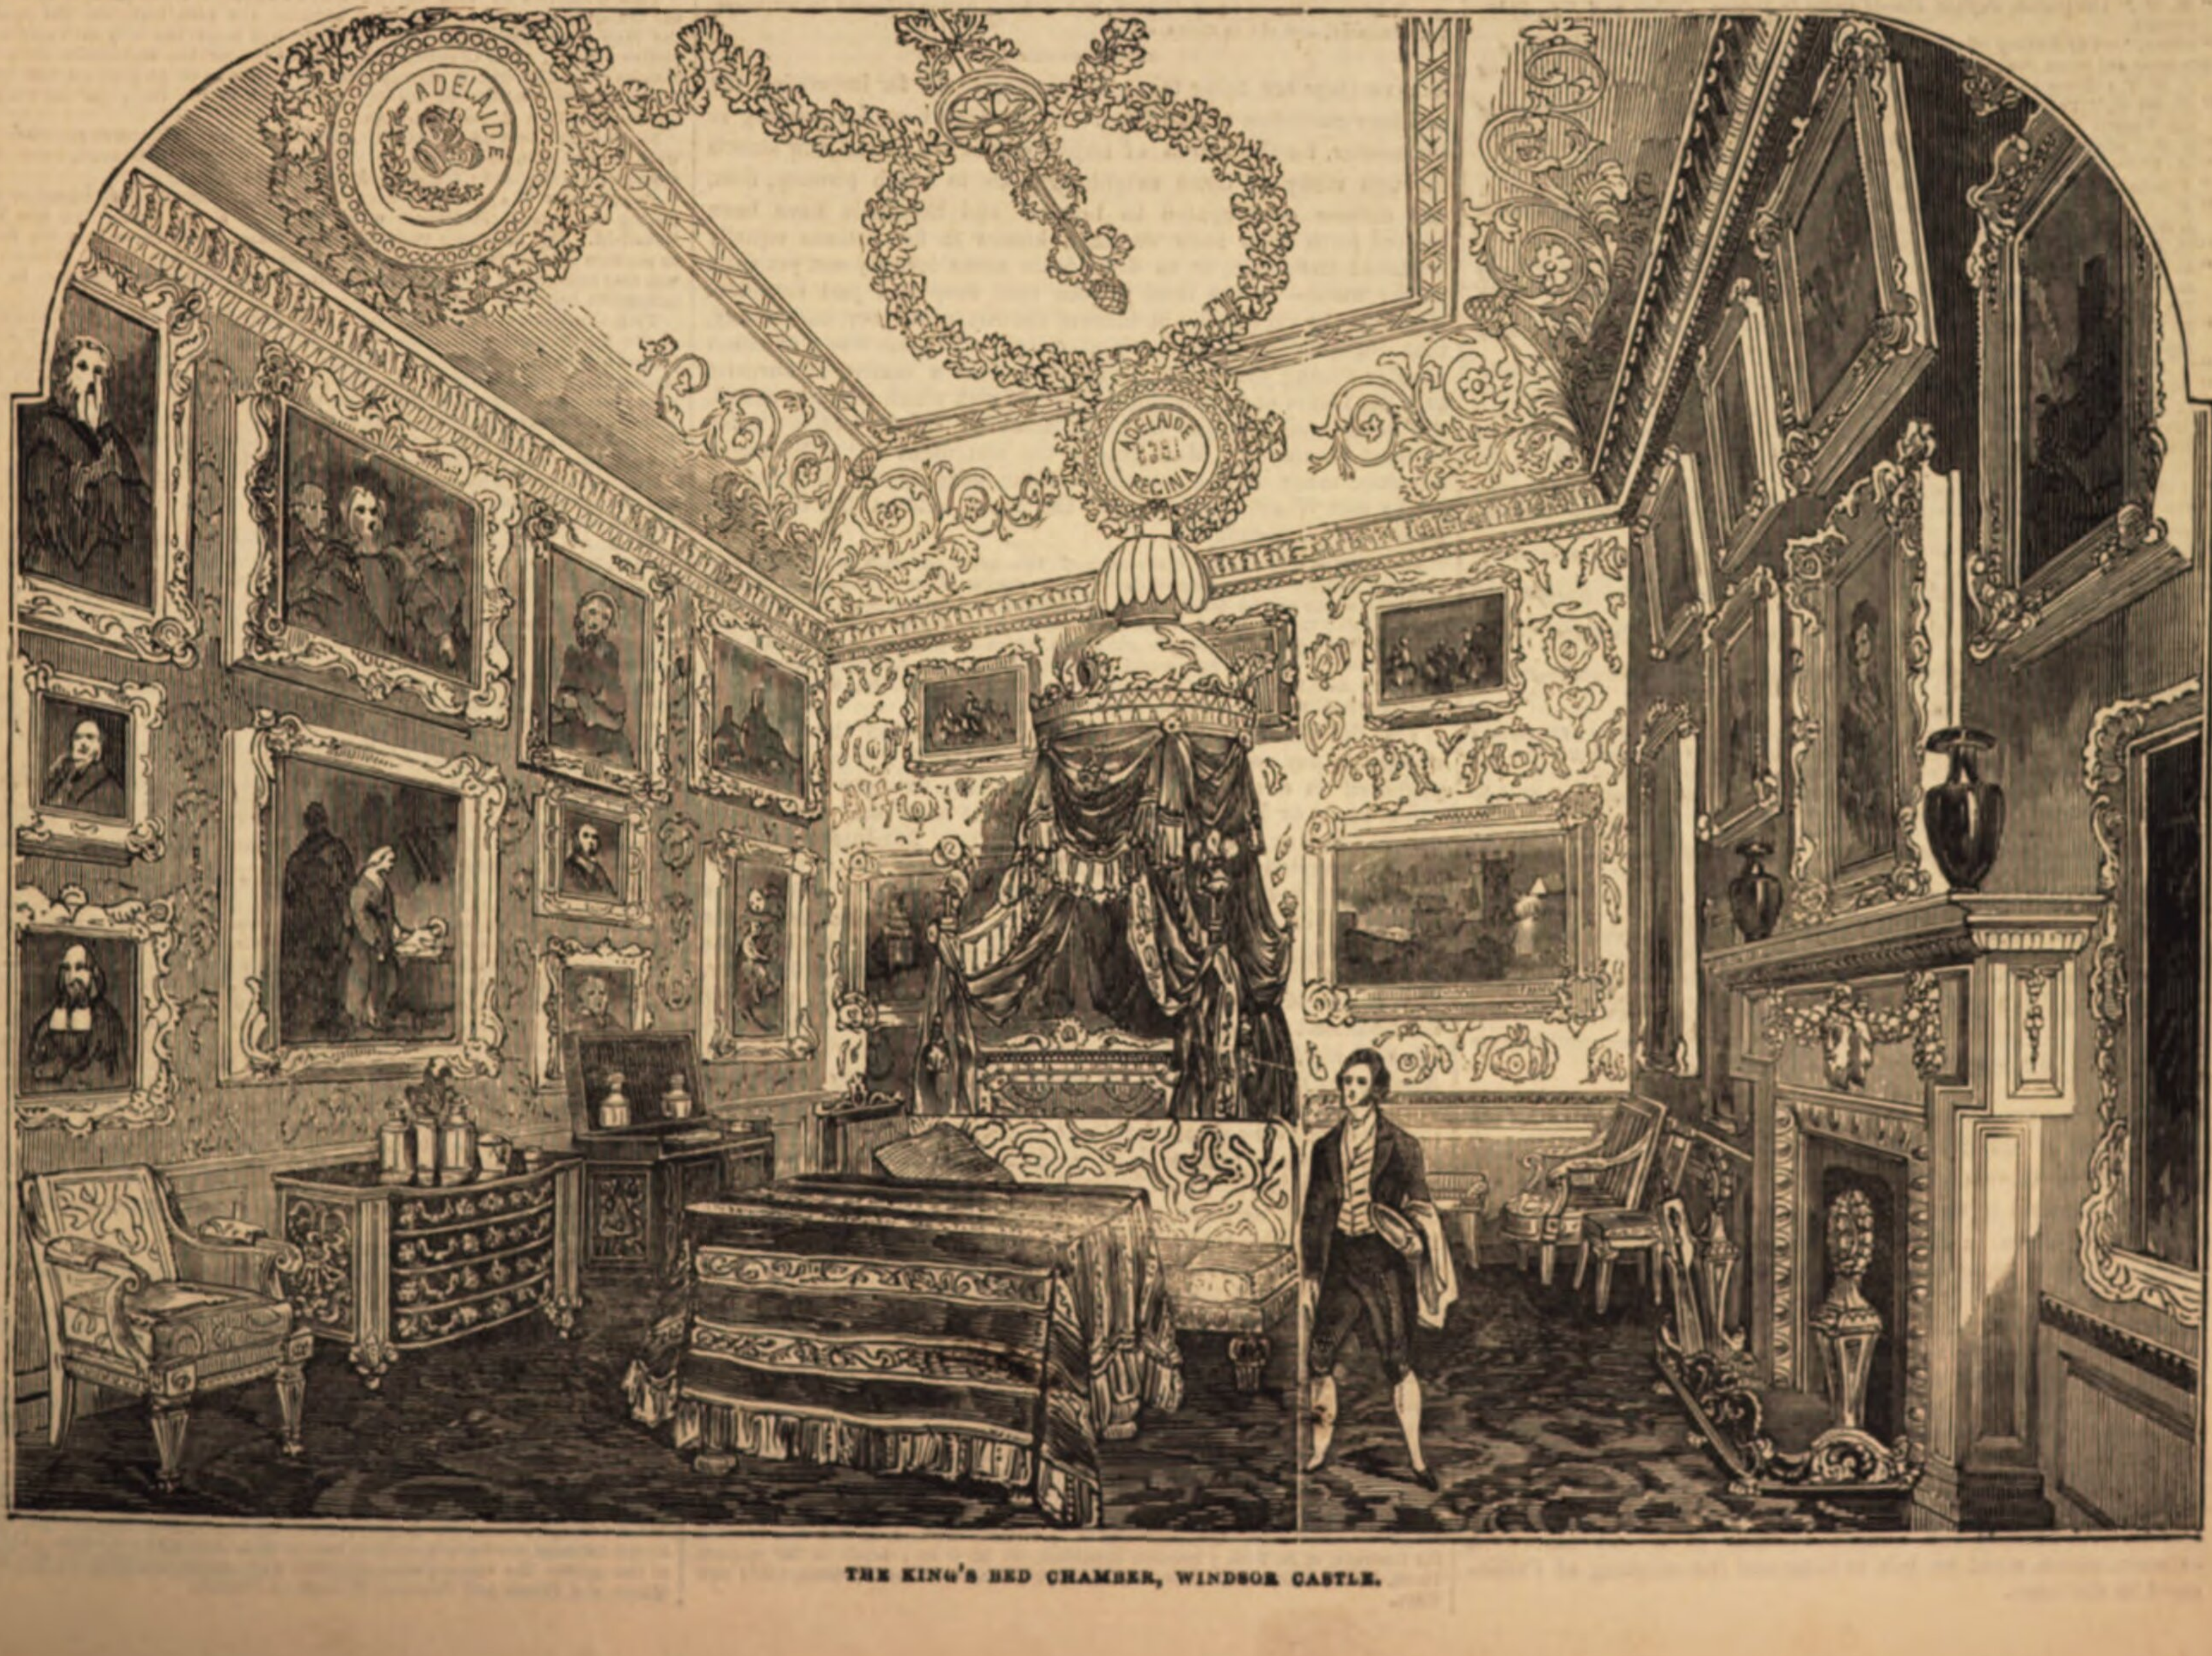
This engraving exhibits, in the distance, a view of the east front of the Castle, in which the private apartments are situated;—also the north terrace, devoted to the service of the King and his suite;—a part of the east terrace;—the Queen's private conservatory, &c. The slopes are a series of elevated walks, on the north-east of the Castle, between the Little and the Home Parks. They are much frequented by her Majesty, being of great beauty, and perfectly secluded from the public eye.

We now proceed to the illustrations of a portion of the arrangements made specially for the Royal visit in the interior of the Castle.

The King's Closet.

Of all the rooms devoted to the use of the King, this was, perhaps, the most comfortable, but yet the most gorgeous, in its decorations. It is of small size, and consequently was not overloaded with furniture — a rich cabinet, a sofa, three or four chairs and a pillar table, being the only large articles it contained. The prevalent colour of the room was crimson, the carpet, window-hangings, walls, &c., being of varied tints of that most regal colour. The room, in this respect, seemed to focalize the colours of the other rooms of the suite, in which a variety of reds of lesser intensity, prevailed. The walls of this chamber were hung with the following pictures :—"The Emperor Charles V.," by Sir Ant. More; "Jons Van Cleeve and his Wife," by himself; "The Two Misers," by Quintin Matsys; "Man's Head," by Parmegiano; "A Fair," by Breughel; "St. Catherine," by Guido; "Holy Family," by Tintoretto; "A Madonna," by Carlo Dolci; "Portrait of a Warrior," by Spagnoletto; "St. Sebastian," by Guido; "An Antiquary," by Miereveld; "St. Catherine," by Domenichino; "The Supper," by Rubens; "Guercino Painting," by himself; "Captain of the Papal Guard," by Parmegiano; "Holy Family," by Julio Romano; and others of great beauty chiefly by the Dutch masters, Jan Steen, Peter Neefs, Wouvermans, and Steenwych. The ceiling of this unique apartment is covered with insignia of royalty, having reference to the reign of William IV., who hung the pictures. A fine bronze statue of Frederick the Great held a prominent place among the smaller ornaments of the room. The whole is lighted by two windows on the north side, between, and on each side of which, massive pier glasses were placed; it is approached on the west by the King's bedchamber; and on the east by the King's council chamber. Our cut gives an excellent idea of the room as it ap-

(Continued on page 248.)



THE KING'S BED CHAMBER, WINDSOR CASTLE.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, October 20.—Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 21.—Battle of Trafalgar, 1805.
TUESDAY, 22.—Lord Holland died, 1840.
WEDNESDAY, 23.—Royal Exchange founded, 1667.
THURSDAY, 24.—First British Parliament, 1707.
FRIDAY, 25.—Battle of Agincourt, 1415.
SATURDAY, 26.—Hogarth died, 1784.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending October 26.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
10 0	10 39	11 14	11 44	0 0	0 10	0 32	0 54	1 15	1 34	1 51	2 9

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Ignoramus," Bromley, who asks the origin of the Reculvers, off Margate.—The name of Reculver, or Regulbium, is derived, by Baxter, from the British words Reg ol tiion, signifying "the point against the waves," and was thus descriptive of its situation. It is concluded, by existing remains, to have been one of the very earliest stations occupied by the Romans in this country; and used as a lighthouse, to guide sailors, by fires kindled every night. Reculver subsequently became a principal seat of the Saxon kings, and next the site of a Benedictine Monastery, the ruins of the church of which (temp. Edward I.) remained till a few years since, when they were in a manner restored, principally with a view of keeping up the two towers and spires at the west end, as a land mark. The story of their having been built by two sisters is a popular tradition, whence they have been called "the sister spires."

"W. C."—We believe Oakham to have been the county town of Rutland from the time of John, when it is first mentioned as a county. Our correspondent wishes to receive some account of "the old cross at Barrow, now and for many years past, a chapel to Cottesmore, in the county aforementioned."

"An Architect's Clerk."—Our illustrations of the New Royal Exchange will be so numerous, that we shall not be able to include any of the unaccepted designs.

"X. Y. Z.," City.—We do not understand the inscription in Gravesend church.

"Alpha," Tunbridge Wells."—Taylor's System of Short-hand, improved by Odell.

"Dελτα" should write to a manager of one of the London theatres.

"A Subscriber," Macclesfield.—Cheshire is a county palatine. Coventry is locally situated in the hundred of Knightlow, in the county of Warwick, of which, however, it forms no constituent portion; having been made, with several adjacent villages, a separate county, by an act of Henry IV., in 1451, and entitled the County of the City of Coventry.

"Major Domo."—The bright polished sides and back of a fire-place give out much more heat than surfaces in the opposite condition, on account of the increased radiation.

"Oxted."—The Emperor of Austria did not accompany "the Allied Sovereigns" to England in 1814.

"A Constant Subscriber" is thanked for the hints as to the Portsmouth illustrations.

"A Downpatrick Subscriber."—The distance between the supporting pyramids, or points of suspension, of the Menai Bridge, is 560 feet. The two roadways are each 12 feet wide, with a footpath, 4 feet wide, between them. It will bear 732½ tons, besides its own weight.

"W. B.," Green, Devizes.—The volume on Dogs, in the Naturalist's Library (Edinburgh), is a sound work. The agent will supply the Print, &c.

"H. F."—We have not room for the verses.

"S. K. B.," a Constant Reader, wishes to know the weekly allowance to each of the inmates of the London City-road Almshouses.

"J. R. W."—The Church shall appear.

"C. W.," Uxbridge, is cautioned against foreign lotteries.

"An Old Sub." has mistaken for fact the clever irony of Punch's Complete Letter-writer.

"Arator," Evesham.—The Sovereign had as free choice of marriage as either of her subjects.

"A Loyal Subject."—Prince Albert's surname is Busici.

"Charley" should write to an Army-agent.

"A Bolton Subscriber" should write to the Secretary to the Metropolitan Loan Society.

"A. X. O.," Nuttall-lane.—The Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital are the Great Officers of State (her Majesty's Ministers).

"Etiquette of the Bar."—We have not room for the long letter.

"L. E.;" "Creon," Stamford; "G. C.," East-street.—See future announcements of the Large Print.

"J. P. D.," Liverpool, should consult a Navy-agent.

"Amicus" may learn the price of the newly-invented Zinc, not Tin, Churns at the corner of Winsley-street, Oxford-street.

"G. H. P.," Dublin.—Clontarf has already been engraved in our Journal.

"A New Subscriber," Liverpool, should order the Census Supplement, price 6d., of his news-agent. The subject obligingly suggested, is in hand. The Carnival at Paris is engraved in No. 44 of our Journal.

"H. M.," Cavendish, Suffolk, should apply to Messrs. Dulau and Co., Soho-square.

"Flora."—The history of the Death-watch is too well known for reprinting.

We have not room for: Lines, by Zeta; Music; Rome, by R. E.; Lines, by J. H. T.; Lines to Louis Napoleon; Death of an Old Sailor.

"E. W. J.," Towcester.—The resident clergyman is legally the Chairman of the Vestry.

"O. P." should apply at Doctors' Commons.

"R. W."—The creditor may strike the balance.

"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—The Trustees may be sued.

"E . . . ."—Leasehold and funded property left by a person dying intestate is divided equally among the children.

"U. P."—There are two descriptions of Marriage Licenses.

"L. L."—Letters and newspapers are forwarded to India the 1st day of every month, viâ Southampton. Those sent by Overland Mail are forwarded on the 4*th.*

"T. W.," Guernsey, should consult the "History of Hampshire" for genealogical details.

"S. D." should consult the memoir of Dr. Wolff, in one of our late numbers.

"Beta."—The address is the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Worcester.

"O. S."—The chief magistrates of London, York, and Dublin, are styled Lord Mayors. In the case of Dublin, the title of Lord Mayor was granted by the King in 1665, in consideration of the leading part taken by the city at the Restoration.

"A Constant Reader," Haverfordwest.—The subject of the Art-Union plate for 1841, was Mr. J. P. Knight's picture. The print for 1843—"Raphael and the Fornarina"—is from Sir A. Calcott's picture.

"L. S. D."—The Parliamentary interference as regards railway charges extends only to the third class carriages, which is 1d. per mile.

"A. F. T. G." Glo'ster, will find a minute account of a recent Spanish bull fight in No. 83, vol. 3, of our journal.

"A Constant Subscriber," Aylesbury.—"Farmer's Violin Preceptor," lately published.

"G. H."—Any person may dramatise the incidents of a novel, without infringement of the Copyright Act.

"J. R."—The franks are declined.

"J. S.," Rochester, is thanked for correcting our misinformation: the Prince of Wales was not born Bishop of Osnaburg, but Duke of Cornwall.

"A. Z."—The subjects have mostly been engraved in our journal.

"An Inverness Subscriber."—The best Treatise on Whist is that illustrated by Kenny Meadows, and published by Bell, Fleet-street.

CHESS.—"A Subscriber from the Beginning."—There are at present no good authorities for the rules quoted: get Mr. Walker's laws, and adopt them.

PART XXVI., is Now Ready, Price 2s. 6d.

 Any Country News Agent may receive Posting Bills, bearing his address, by informing our Publisher where a parcel can be enclosed, free of expense.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1844.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH has been created an Earl; the patent of his higher grade of nobility almost met him on his landing. This looks as if the Government were determined to support the ex-Governor-General to the full extent of their powers against the company of kings in Leadenhall-street. The unanimity with which he was deposed by this last body, and the zeal with which he is, and no doubt will be, "in another place," defended by the Ministry, alike stimulate public curiosity as to what could have been the nature of the act which was so deadly a sin at the India House, and so decided a merit in Downing-street. But nothing beyond guess and surmise has been offered to the public. All that seems certain is, that his lordship made himself exceedingly popular with the army in India, and equally disliked by the civil service; the probability being that some flagrant want of respect to this branch of the Indian Government is at the root of the matter. At present the quarrel remains as it was before—a mystery, which must be left to time and the meeting of Parliament to develope.

THE only names of any political note whatever that have appeared in the arena of public discussion during the recess, are those of that section of the Conservatives known as "Young England." All other party men seem to have deserted the public, and are alive only to their mere official duties, or their personal recreation. The Whigs are doing nothing, though a slight suspicion is abroad that they are coquetting with O'Connell; Sir R. Peel has been diplomatizing with Guizot, and we hear of no more agricultural dinners at Tamworth. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is rubbing his hands gleefully at the very satisfactory state of the public coffers, but we hear nothing else respecting him. There has scarcely ever been a recess in which our public men gave so few indications of their existence. "Young England" has had all the stage to itself; and it must be acknowledged that the manner in which they have come forward, and the objects they avow, do them infinite credit. Twice almost in the space of a week they have met assemblies of their countrymen, not for the purpose usually visible in these intersessional gatherings, of self and party laudations, defence of past votes, and biddings for future political support, but for a higher object, that of ameliorating the intellectual and physical condition of the people. And they bring to their task many qualities that already fix attention upon them, and must, in the course of time, create a large amount of public opinion. They are few in number, but they have energy, eloquence, and, what is equally valuable, heart and earnestness. At Manchester they met the members of a society, established to promote the cultivation of intellectual tastes and habits in the people; the speech of Mr. Smythe may be taken as the exposition of their principles on this important point, and those who think that "Young England" are mere sentimental deplorers of a past, which all their exertions are intended to restore, will do well to read his eloquent appreciation of the wants of the present, his estimate of the importance of commerce, and its connection with, and influence on, literature and the arts. In every branch of his subject he exhibits a spirit far superior to that of the mere laudator temporis acti. The meeting at Bingley, which followed that at Manchester, had more of the character of a rural fête, and possessed an interest of another kind; the class by whom it was attended was also a very different one. The occasion was trifling enough in itself—the extension of the allotment system to the cotters of a village in Yorkshire, and the establishment among them of a cricket-club, are not events that attract "the eyes of Europe," or rivet the attention of a people. But, both in the large sphere and the smaller one, the same amiable wish really to effect something for the improvement of the many, was visible; and because the good they can yet do must of necessity be limited in amount, that is no reason why it should excite a sneer. Many, we believe, still ask what are the principles of "Young England?" We question if, in the mere infancy of a party, and in the first steps of a movement, the party themselves could accurately define them; they must be developed by action; at present their course seems to be directed as much by a few generous impulses, as by any distinct or settled code of opinion. But the following eloquent estimate of the tendency of those opinions, as far as facts have yet exhibited them—a tribute to the party, which we borrow from the Times—may throw some light on a much debated question:—

> If we might resolve their recent acts into any one principle, we should say it is an acknowledgment of the great but neglected truth, that man is the masterpiece of the creation, and that for him all earthly things are made and should be administered. He is better than money, or house, or land, or rank, or learning, or any work, or quality, or institution of men. As far as the bulk of our fellow-creatures does not partake of these, or of the benefits flowing from them, so far are they a disgrace and a burden to the possessors. The gifts of Heaven live and flow. Favoured men and classes are their channel, and the many their most rightful recipients. Monopoly, selfishness, and negligence, are sins against this divine dispensation. Wealth in the midst of misery, literature dwelling contentedly by the thick of ignorance, thousands of acres for the sole use of one, while thousands never tread the native turf or know the shade of a tree—these are all blots in the sight of Heaven, and make a nation old—old in weakness, old in misery, and old in crime.

ACTIVE steps are being taken in the metropolis for improving the sanatory condition of the Poor. It was high time for stirring in the matter, for the march of improvement has driven new streets through many of those neighbourhoods in which poverty, filth, and disease congregated in heaps; and hundreds have been hunted forth from their wretched homes to find others equally wretched elsewhere, or to deteriorate some locality not yet sunk to the worst—to the level of the spot they had just forsaken. Nothing can exceed the pictures of the dirt, profligacy, and misery, that were centred in these "Rookeries." Disease was a constant dweller among them, and it has often been a matter of surprise that the fevers and contagious disorders with which they abounded, did not spread into the districts inhabited by the wealthy, often in close proximity. Most true is the statement of the Bishop of London, made at the meeting for the purpose of Establishing Baths and Washing-houses for the Poor, held at the Mansion-house, on Wednesday:—

> The crowds who throng the streets of this great and rich metropolis, surrounded as they are on every side by the evidences of its wealth and grandeur, are little aware of the fearful mass of wretchedness and misery which is to be found behind the wealth of those gay streets—in the abodes of the poor; or that within a few yards of those splendid shops which are filled with the richest productions of all parts of the world—within so short a distance of the counting houses of merchants whose fortunes are reckoned by millions, are to be found masses of human wretchedness, suffering and degradation.

On the fact that for the vilest accommodation the poor are obliged to pay an exorbitant price, is founded the plan that is proposed as a remedy for the evils. It is believed that for the same rent, or less, the poor and honest man may command a decent dwelling, and the speculators clear a fair interest on the capital invested in the experiment. The plan is not a new one; it has often been proposed in various forms, but there seems some chance of its now being carried out. Another plan before the public is supplementary to this, but still conducive to the same object, the improvement of the physical condition of the poor. This is the establishment of baths and washing-houses, to enable the humblest classes to secure to themselves cleanliness both of person and clothes, neither of which is at present within their reach. Among the middle classes, the name of "washing day" has long been a sort of synonym for the most extreme domestic discomfort; but in every respect its inconvenience is increased when the process has to be carried on in a room which is the only dwelling of a whole family. The details given by the Bishop of London in the speech we have already quoted, are absolutely frightful. If it be possible, then, to provide places where hot water and drainage can be provided at a very low price, and a constantly recurring evil can be thus removed from the dwellings of the poor, an immense benefit will be conferred on that large class of society. The improvement of their dwellings is the larger and most comprehensive project; but there is no reason why the two plans should not work together.

LAUNCH OF THE GLADIATOR WAR STEAMER.—On Monday afternoon this splendid sea boat was launched from her Majesty's dockyard, Woolwich, in the presence of about 1000 persons. The following are the correct dimensions and tonnage of this fine vessel:—Length between the perpendiculars, 190 ft.; length of keel for tonnage, 161 ft. 8⅝ in.; breadth extreme, 37 ft. 8 in.; breadth for tonnage, 37 ft. 2 in.; breadth moulded, 36 ft. 6 in.; depth in the engine-room, 23 ft; burthen in tons, 1210, 23-94 old measurement; ditto, 1167½ new ditto.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The infant royal family, who are in excellent health, have been taken out for their usual airings both this morning and in the afternoon. In the morning the Princess Royal rode out on her favourite Shetland pony, in the private grounds in the Home Park. The Dowager Lady Lyttelton was in attendance upon her Royal Highness.—Her Majesty, agreeably to a notification which reached Windsor this morning from the Isle of Wight, will return to the Castle on Saturday; it is expected, to luncheon, as the arrangements were for the Court to leave Osborne House at nine o'clock on that morning. It is fully expected that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by a portion of the infant royal family, will again pay a visit to the Isle of Wight for a week or ten days, after the opening of the New Royal Exchange.—There has been a report during the past week that her Majesty will honour her Irish subjects with a visit before the close of the autumn; but we have the best authority for stating that there is not the least truth in the rumour.—The Hon. C. A. Murray, the respected Master of the Household, who has been seriously indisposed at the Pavilion at Brighton for some weeks past, is, I am happy to state, so much improved in health as to be expected to resume his duties at Windsor Castle in the course of the ensuing week.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—On Monday at St. George's, Hanover-square, Anna Horatia Caroline, only daughter of the Rev. J. and Mrs Sandford, was married to the Hon. Federick Paul Methuen, eldest son of Lord Methuen. The newly-married pair are passing the honey-moon at Corsham Park, Wilts.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH.—The late Governor-General of India arrived in London on Sunday last. The Government has conferred an earldom upon the noble Ex-Governor, and he has been gazetted by the title of Earl of Ellenborough and Viscount Southam. On Tuesday the noble earl visited the Duke of Wellington, at Apsley House, and was engaged for a lengthened period with the noble and gallant duke. On leaving the Duke of Wellington's his lordship went to Sir Robert Peel in Whitehall-gardens, and had a protracted audience.

DEATH OF THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.—We are sorry to state that the Duchess of Marlborough died suddenly at Blenheim Palace, on Saturday last. Her grace had only returned home the preceding evening, from a long visit to her sister, Lady Feversham, in Yorkshire. Her grace is known to have been long in a feeble state of health, but not the slightest apprehension was entertained by her medical adviser of her being quite equal to the journey. A sudden and unexpected change occurred on the Saturday; Dr. Wootton, of Oxford, was immediately called in, but her grace expired in the presence of the duke and Lady Louisa Churchill the same evening. The duchess was the eldest daughter of George, the eighth Earl of Galloway.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.—Sir Robert Peel is expected to return to Whitehall-gardens on Monday next, from Brighton, and will remain some days in town before he rejoins his family at that watering place.

DEATH OF SIR SAMUEL HIGGINS.—Sir Samuel Higgins, who was equerry to his Royal Highness the late Duke of Gloucester, died at his residence, Chapel-street, Grosvenor-square, at five o'clock on Monday morning. Although Sir Samuel had been suffering some weeks from indifferent health, yet it was not supposed he was in anything like a critical state, for on the previous Wednesday he was at the Birmingham Railway terminus, at Euston-square, to receive her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester. He was born in 1775.

The Earl and Countess of Essex have left Brougham Hall, the seat of Lord Brougham, where they had been paying a visit for nearly a fortnight. Lord and Lady Brougham are still at Brougham Hall, but the noble and learned baron is expected in Grafton-street, in the course of the ensuing week, on his way to the south of France.

FUNERAL OF LADY HEYTESBURY.

The mortal remains of her Excellency the late Baroness Heytesbury were conveyed on Friday evening from the Viceregal Lodge, Phœnix Park, Dublin, to the Northwall-quay, where her Majesty's steamer Meteor, Lieut. Butler, R.N., was in waiting to convey them to Bristol.

The mournful funeral procession consisted of a hearse, drawn by six horses. A mourning coach, drawn by four horses, in which were the Hon. Captain A'Court, brother to his Excellency; the Hon. William A'Court Holmes, M P., son of the Lord Lieutenant; Colonel Bowles, Comptroller of the Household; and Mr. A'Court, Private Secretary. The Procession left the Viceregal Lodge at eight o'clock, and advanced along the North Circular-road in the most private manner to the place of embarkation. The breast-plate on the coffin bore a coronet, with the following inscription:—

MARIA REBECCA,
wife of
The Right Honourable WILLIAM A'COURT,
Baron HEYTESBURY, G.C.B.,
Died
October the Sixth, 1844,
In her Sixty-first year.

The coffin was lowered by pullies into the state cabin, the glazed roof of the cabin having been removed for the purpose, and all the mourners accompanied the remains on board, where they stopped for a short period.

The Hon. Captain A'Court and the son of the late Baroness were alone to accompany the body to Bristol, and soon after ten the Meteor got under way, and sailed for her destination.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE OPENING OF THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—We are enabled to state, that the Queen has positively appointed Monday, the 28th inst., for the opening of the New Royal Exchange. Her Majesty will enter the City at Temple-bar at twelve o'clock. The Commissioners of Sewers for the metropolis have caused notices to be distributed, stating that no platforms or projections will be sanctioned on the occasion of her Majesty's visit to the City, for the purpose of opening the New Royal Exchange.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—Deaths from all causes registered in the week ending Saturday, Oct. 12:—Males, 507; females, 511—total, 1018. Weekly average:—Males, 483; females, 463—total, 946.

PORTSOKEN WARD.—Two candidates have announced their intention of contesting the vacant aldermanic gown, viz., Mr. F. G. Moon, and Mr. Thomas Bousfield. Mr. Salomons declined again coming forward, as it is his intention to petition against the decision of the Court of Aldermen. Mr. Michael Scales was also solicited to stand, but has declined, expressing his intention to use his interest in behalf of Mr. Moon.

THE CORPORATION OF LONDON AND MR. DAVID SALOMONS.—A meeting of the Corporation of London took place on Monday, when the Town-clerk placed before Mr. Salomons the copy of the declaration, the omission to subscribe which was fatal to the election of Mr. Salomons for the ward of Aldgate nine years ago. Mr. Salomons requested the Court to postpone the matter, to allow him to take advice upon the subject. This the Court declined to do, and Mr. Salomons having thus formally refused, on conscientious grounds, to take the required oath, his election as Alderman of the Ward of Portsoken, was declared null and void by a majority of ten to six. Mr. Salomons protested against the proceedings, and declared his intention to appeal to the laws of the country in such way as he might be advised.

FIRE AT BLACKWALL.—On Thursday morning, between three and four o'clock, a fire, involving considerable destruction of property, broke out at the Britannia Tavern, Blackwall-stairs, which was not got under until the Britannia had been entirely consumed, and the Plough and East India Taverns, had been considerably damaged. Nothing is known of the origin of the calamity. The following is the official account of the damage done:—The Britannia Tavern, occupied by Mr. Tiver, the whole contents destroyed; insured in the Phœnix Fire office. The Plough Tavern (Mr. Bleaden), upper part of house destroyed, furniture damaged; insured in the Licensed Victuallers' office. The Artichoke Tavern (Mrs. Brendle), roof and furniture of upper floors consumed; insured in the Sun Fire-office. The India House Tavern (Ramage), all destroyed; insured in the Hand-in-Hand office. The King's Arms Tavern (Mrs. Allen), building damaged, also furniture by removal; insured in the Union Fire-office. The George public-house (Mr. Emerson), furniture damaged by removal, and also building; insured in the Union Fire-office. The house of Mrs. Russell, front damaged, furniture also by removal; not insured. Next house, name unknown, like damage; not insured.

EXTRAORDINARY FRACAS IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—On Thursday, John Rudden, of Chatham, came before Mr. Commissioner Evans for his interim order, which was opposed on the ground that he had fraudulently made away with his property, and remained upwards of six months in the Queen's Bench prison, but obtained his liberation by petitioning that Court. It was proved that his debts were more than £300, and that he was a trader at the time. Mr. Commissioner Evans said he had no jurisdicsion in the case, and dismissed the petition. The solicitor said that the insolvent must go back to prison. A scene of indescribable uproar now took place, the insolvent, surrounded by several of his friends, insisted that the Commissioner had discharged him, and a regular fight ensued between the parties. The solicitor ran into the Court to ask for the Commissioner's advice, whilst Mr. Hodgson, the house registrar, called in several of the City police, and gave them instructions to clear the avenues of the Court. Mr. Commissioner Evans said, under the sixth section of the Act, the insolvent could be again arrested upon the judgment; but, as the sollcitor was unprepared with a Sheriff's officer, or the necessary warrant, the Court could not assist him. Eventually the insolvent escaped, amidst the shouts of his party.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from St. Petersburgh of the 27th ult. announce the death of Count Alexander de Benkendorff, first aide-de-camp of the Emperor of Russia, and former Minister of Police, on board the war steamer Hercules, on his way back from Germany.

We learn from Parma that the theatre of the ancient city has just been discovered at a considerable depth in the earth, and in a remarkable state of preservation. The government has ordered researches to be made, and has purchased several houses which stand in the way of the operation.

The King of Prussia gave a suberb fête on the 6th inst., at the Palace of Sans Souci, to which most of the distinguished foreigners, as well as the various delegates from the Zollverein now at Berlin, and the principal exhibitors at the national exposition, had the honour of receiving an invitation. On arriving at the palace the visitors were received with much affability by the King and Queen and Prince and Princess William of Prussia.

A Berlin journal gives an account of an extensive robbery at Stockholm on the 27th ult. The offices of the General Insurance Company were broken into, and private bills to the amount of 300,000 rix-dollars, and bank-notes to the amount of 117,000 rix-dollars, carried off.

During the gale of Wednesday week, the schooner Nymph, of Wisbeach, her master (Mr. Kirby Wilson) and two hands were lost, off Holyhead, in a collision with the Ocean Queen.

The Siècle announces, on the authority of private letters, that Prince Metternich is so dangerously indisposed that his recovery is despaired of.

Five tenders were presented for the contract for the rails of the first section of the Paris and Northern Railroad. These works were estimated at the maximum of 225,000f., and the contract was awarded to M. Barbier St. Ange, at 8 per cent. below this sum.

An extraordinary trial for swindling took place last week before the Court of Assize for Paris. A person, named Hue de Marsenay, and his wife, were charged with having obtained, by fraudulent means, more than 500,000 francs from different persons, of which, however, 450,000 francs were from a M. Gosse. Marsenay was originally a captain in the army. The various persons swindled gave evidence on the trial, which lasted four days, and the prisoners being found guilty, Marsenay was sentenced to eight years' imprisonment, with hard labour, and his wife to five years of the same punishment, and both to stand in the pillory.

The Hanover Gazette announces that a treaty of commerce had been concluded between the Governments of Hanover and Denmark.

The King of Prussia has just given 50,000 Prussian crowns towards the completion of the Cathedral of Cologne.

Lucerne has made a strong demonstration against the installation of the Jesuits in that town. At a grand convocation of the inhabitants, held lately, 769 of them out of 1260 declared against their admission.

The last Newfoundland papers state that the British Bank Fishery had been nearly ruined by the encroachments of the French fishermen, who, from the encouragement given by their Government to the trade in fish, are enabled to conduct it in a manner more profitable, though more expensive, than that practised by British subjects.

In the borough of Finsbury Registration Court, on Wednesday, the revising barrister, Mr. Moylan, imposed a fine of 50s. upon the overseers of the parish of St. Luke, for omitting the names of two persons from the list of voters for the borough of Finsbury.

We have already stated that Mrs. Nesbitt was about to be married to Sir William Boothby, Bart., Receiver-General of Customs. The ceremony took place at St. Mary's chapel, Fulham, on Monday. Sir William, who is in his 70th year, in addition to holding a very lucrative situation under Government, possesses estates in Derbyshire and other counties, and also, it is stated, in Ireland. The bride is but in her 30th year, and has scarcely attained the age of some of Sir William's daughters by a former marriage. The ceremony excited much interest in the neighbourhood. Sir William is a remarkably fine looking man for his age.

A woman, named Leclerc, has just expired at Havinnes, (Belgium) aged 101. She was three years old when the famous battle of Fontenoy took place.

The New Orleans Courier of the 16th confirms the news of the death of Madame Lopez Santa Anna, wife of the President of Mexico, on the 22nd ult., of a breast complaint. Her remains, in compliance with her dying wishes, were taken to Alvarado, the place of her birth, for interment.

A letter from Otaheite, in the Emancipation of Toulouse, gives the following account of the affair of Lieut. Rose:—"The commandant of the guard-ship sent a midshipman to invite the English officer to come on board. At first he refused, but afterwards said he should yield to superior force, and offered his sword to the midshipman, who received it without having any orders, and the officer came as a prisoner. After explanations, the English officer was sent to his own ship, and the midshipman put under arrest for having exceeded his orders. The chief of the staff afterwards went on board the English sloop to make apologies."

The Cadiz Eco del Comercio states that an attempt has been made at Seville to assassinate General Schelly, the Captain General of the province. General Schelly was entering his own house, at midnight, when a pistol was fired at him. Fortunately the shot missed both him and the aide-de-camp who accompanied him. The assassin escaped.

There is now living at Leaken, upon the estate of Fowlis, in the parish of Kiltearn, Ross-shire, a cottar of the nome of Donald Ross, who is above 105 years of age. He has always been of temperate habits and good conduct, and is still in possession of his faculties, and able to walk about.

Letters from Vienna now announce as positive the approaching visit of the King and Queen of Naples to the Court of Austria, which is likely to take place at the latter end of the ensuing month.

A very handsome monument is being erected at Dum-Dum, near Calcutta, by the corps of Bengal Artillery, to the memories of those officers and men of that regiment who fell at Cabul, during the insurrection there in 1841, and the subsequent retreat in January, 1842.

Owing to the heavy rains that have fallen within the last few days, the tides have been extraordinarily high. On Wednesday afternoon, about three o'clock, when the tide was at its height, many of the steam-boats found it impossible to pass under the arches of Vauxhall and Westminster bridges with their funnels lowered. The banks of the river were in many places overflowed.

It has been determined to establish a gipsy school establishment at Farnham, Dorset, with the view of educating that neglected wandering race of people. Lord Ashley has taken very active measures to establish this novel school.

A Paris paper states that a few evenings ago a person named Chartier, employed at the Abattoir Fontainbleau, having to find fault with his wife for her misconduct, was provoked to box her ears. The enraged woman seized a knife and stabbed him to the heart. He had just time to say to his murderess—"You have for a long time threatened to kill me, and you have done it at last." Chartier then fell dead, leaving four unprotected orphans. The woman was immediately arrested.

The feeling lately evinced to reduce the hours of business of linendrapers and other trades, to enable the assistants to obtain some relaxation, is becoming pretty general, and has extended itself to many of the principal towns in the country.

IRELAND.

O'Connell's Manifesto.—Another very lengthy letter from Mr. O'Connell was read at the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday. The letter commences with congratulations on the recent decision of the House of Lords, and Mr. O'Connell then argues in favour of Repeal. Considerable space is then devoted to an argument to prove that the Catholics do not desire any undue ascendancy. A comparison is then drawn between simple Repeal and Federalism, and this is the most remarkable part of the document, as it appears from it, that in spite of Mr. O'Connell's declarations in support of Repeal, he prefers Federalism. Mr. O'Connell says:—"For my own part, I will own, that since I have come to contemplate the specific differences, such as they are, between 'simple Repeal' and 'Federalism,' I do at present feel a preference for the federative plan, as tending more to the utility of Ireland and to the maintenance of the connexion with England than the mode of simple Repeal. But I must either deliberately propose or deliberately adopt from some other person a plan of federative union, before I bind myself to the opinion I now entertain." Mr. O'Connell, having made this declaration, invites his countrymen of all classes to propound their plans, and amicably and candidly discuss the respective points of a "Federative" or "simple Repeal" connexion with Great Britain. The letter was ordered to be entered on the minutes. The rent for the week did not exceed £400.

Destruction by Fire of Mr. Hampton's Balloon.—Mr. Hampton, the celebrated aeronaut, made an ascent on Monday afternoon from the Portobello-gardens, Dublin, the balloon passing over the city in a north-easterly direction. When in the neighbourhood of the North Strand, it was observed descending with great rapidity, and, notwithstanding all Mr. Hampton's exertions, it continued to do so, until it came into collision with the top of a house, and struck the chimney, which was thrown down; the balloon, at the same time, exploding, by some sparks from the flue, he was thrown to the ground with great violence, but happily was not much hurt. He was removed on a car as soon as possible. The balloon was totally destroyed. A description of Mr. Hampton's balloon, with three engravings, appeared in No. 121 of our Journal.

Another Shocking Murder.—A man named James Dunne, of Seafield, three miles from Carrick-on-Shannon, was waylaid and most barbarously murdered on Monday night last, within a few yards of his own house, and robbed of £7, part of which he had that day received for butter in the town of Boyle, county of Roscommon. His throat was cut in three places; his nose, breast, and other parts of his body deeply wounded by some sharp weapon, and his teeth broken, so that from the mangled condition of the remains it was frightful to look at him. An inquest was held on Tuesday, and a verdict of Wilful Murder returned against some person or persons unknown.

Atrocious Murders in Cork.—On Sunday night, the 6th inst., a most diabolical outrage was committed on the lands of Kilwhelan, in the vicinity of Mitchelstown, on a family of the name of M'Eligot. James M'Eligot, the head of this family, is caretaker to William Johnson, Esq., formerly of Mitchelstown. About a year and a half ago Mr. Johnson found it necessary to evict one of his tenants for non-payment of rent, and as he knew M'Eligot to be honest and industrious, he gave him this small farm. The former tenant, some short time since, threatened M'Eligot for taking the land. It is said likewise that Mr. Johnson found it necessary to serve ejectment processes upon some of his tenants, and that M'Eligot was to be his principal witness at the Fermoy sessions, where they were to be tried. A gang of armed ruffians entered his dwelling on Sunday night about seven o'clock, and without giving him the slightest notice, fell upon him and fractured his skull, and not only left him apparently dead, but likewise used every member of his family, six in number, in the most brutal manner, beating them with the butt-ends of their guns. The son died from the effects of the wounds he received about four o'clock next morning. M'Eligot's wife and three daughters were likewise apparently dead. However, it is hoped that himself and two of the girls will recover, but little hopes are entertained of his wife, and none of one of his daughters.

Murder in Kilkenny.—A man, named Matthew Brenan, was murdered a few days ago at Coolcullen, in the county Kilkenny. His throat was cut, several wounds inflicted upon his body, and his hands lacerated as if a knife had been drawn through them while trying to defend himself. The supposed cause of his murder is that Brenan rented a farm for the past year and a half, from which the former tenants were ejected. A verdict of "Wilful Murder" against persons unknown was returned by the coroner's jury.

TWO BRUTAL MURDERS IN TIPPERARY.

In our last we briefly mentioned the murder of a man named Maxwell, a driver or care-taker on the property of Mr. Latouche, near Barnane. Another murder has since been committed on the person of a man named Cleary, the wood-ranger of Mr. Carden, of the same locality.

Maxwell, it appears, was engaged in prayer on his knees, in his own house, and about retiring to rest, when he was shot through the body and killed. This poor man, it appears, was murdered because he had been in the habit of serving law processes.

Maxwell had seized upon a defaulting tenant, named Tierney, whose effects were to be sold on last Thursday for non-payment of rent. The deceased was also bound to prosecute a man named Tracey, at the next Thurles' quarter sessions, for assaulting a person named Patrick Doyle.

The Dublin Gazette contains a proclamation from the Lord Lieutenant, offering a reward of £100 for the discovery of the murderers of David Maxwell. The reward to be paid by Sir William Lynar, resident magistrate at Shinrone.

Cleary had been engaged in serving law processes on the tenantry on the Barnane estate, and had accompanied Mr. Carden in one of his recent visits to the tenantry. He was shot, it appears, on Tuesday week, having been missing since then—but nothing was known of his most wretched fate till Wednesday, when he was discovered dead near the wood of Barnane. He must have been engaged in his usual business at the moment selected for depriving him of life—going through the wood, unattended and alone. It appears he was speaking to Mr. Carden's gardener about two or three o'clock, on Tuesday, after which he was not heard of till found as above stated. He served notices to quit on some of the tenants a few days before. The tenants, we are informed, owed no rent, nor would any be due till the 1st of November. To show the apprehensions of danger under which the wretched man laboured, we may mention that he carried a double-barrelled gun and a case of pistols: he was deprived of these arms by the person or persons by whom he was murdered. His head was shockingly mutilated, broken in both in front and behind. The greatest discontent has prevailed for a considerable time amongst the tenantry on this property. Nothing can equal the dissatisfaction they experienced at the prospect of being dispossessed of their holdings, and to this it is said the murder is attributed.

POLICE.

Affray in Regent-street.—On Saturday afternoon a riot of a somewhat violent description took place in Regent-street, during which several of the police were assaulted, and a soldier rescued who had been given into their custody. The police succeeded in taking three persons into custody who were alleged to have been amongst the most active in creating the disturbance, and in assaulting the constables. On Monday the defendants were charged with the offence at Marlborough-street police-office. The first person gave his name John Conway, law student, 35, George-street, Bryanston-square; but this description is presumed not to be exactly correct. He was bailed out by the Earl of Caledon and the Hon. Charles Grimston, captains in the Guards. The other defendants were Edward Skinner, buttler, 26, Sidmouth-street, and William Hibell, confectioner, 4, Great Russell-street. From the evidence of police constables Boyce, C 181, Skinner, C 137, Ward, C 188, and Adams, C 62, it appeared that a soldier went into the White Horse Tavern, Regent-street, on Saturday afternoon, in a state of intoxication, and on being refused to be served with more drink, he became very disorderly, assaulted the servants, damaged the landlord's property, and when ejected from the house, broke a window purposely. The police were sent for to take the soldier into custody, but when constable Boyce came to the spot the soldier refused to go to the station house, and swore he would "smash" any policeman who should attempt to take him. A mob by this time had collected, and when some more constables made their appearance the mob took the part of the soldier, and urged him to resist the lawful authorities. The police, however, proceeded to do their duty by laying hold of the soldier; but they were not only prevented from taking him into custody by the mob, but were assaulted by several persons, and ultimately the soldier was rescued from them. The police pursued the soldier, and again laid hold of him, but the constables were again baffled, and ultimately some gentlemen, who were actively opposing the police, got the soldier into a cab, and caused him to be driven away to his barracks. During the affray, police-constables Boyce and Ward proved that they were struck by Conway with a thick cane, and that Conway excited the mob to rescue the soldier, and also encouraged the soldier to resist the police. All the constables deposed to the fact of hearing Conway make use of expressions calculated to excite the mob against them. The constables further said, there were above five or six hundred persons at one period collected together. Skinner pushed against the police and attempted to obstruct them in the execution of their duty. The defendant Hibell also obstructed the constables as they were in pursuit of their rescued prisoner. Three witnesses were called to corroborate the evidence of the police. The defence of Conway was, that he saw a mob of persons in Regent-street, and on going to the spot he perceived a soldier struggling with several of the police. As the police appeared to use more than necessary violence, he interfered in the soldier's behalf; but he declared that he neither struck a police constable, nor did he use language to the mob calculated either to incite them to ill-use the police or to attempt the rescue of the soldier.—Skinner, in defence, said he saw the soldier enter the tavern, and witnessed his bad conduct afterwards. He went out to look for a constable, and so far from obstructing or assaulting the police, he rendered them all the assistance in his power. The soldier, however, resisted, and when the police seized him by the stock and attempted to strangle him, he certainly did remonstrate. Another constable, C 62, also drew his staff, and struck the soldier over the head and body.—Hibell denied having either obstructed or assaulted the police in any way.—Mr. Maltby was of opinion that the defendants had more or less assaulted the constables and obstructed them in the execution of their duty, and that they had further assisted in completely rescuing the soldier from the constables. For the two assaults committed by Conway on the constables he should inflict a fine of £5 each, and of £5 additional for assisting to rescue the soldier. He should fine Skinner £5 for the assault on the police, and Hibell 40s. The fines, it is said, were all paid by the defendant Conway.—On Tuesday the individual whose conduct originally led to the assault was examined at the above office: his name is Benjamin Cox, a private in the second battalion of Coldstream Guards. He was charged with having wilfully broken a square of glass at the White Horse Tavern, Regent-street; with having assaulted the waiter and the cook; and also with having resisted and assaulted the police in the execution of their duty. The prisoner had entered the house drunk, and in attempting to eject him he committed the assaults. He was fined £5 for the assaults on the servants, and £5 for assaults on the police, or two months hard labour. [We are unwiling to blame magisterial decisions upon slight grounds' but some suspicion must always attach to cases where the defendants appear to be gentlemen, and are allowed to expiate an offence by a fine. Daily instances occur where poor men are sent to prison or the tread-mill for committing assaults, and if the upper classes will offend against the laws, or commit breaches of the peace, we do not see why a distinction should be made. Indeed, if there be a difference, they should be visited with more severity, for men of education and good position in society ought to set an example to those beneath them.]

A Father Charged with Robbery by his Son.—At Union Hall, on Wednesday, William Brocksopp, formerly an extensive grocer and tea-dealer, in Blackman-street, was brought before Mr. Traill, on the extraordinary charge of stealing a gold pin, a gold ring, and a portfolio, the property of William Brocksopp, his son. The complainant, a young man, stated that the prisoner was his father, and that about six months ago the latter had a box in his possession belonging to him (the son) containing, amongst other articles, a gold pin, a ring, and a portfolio; that on a recent occasion he (the son) had the box delivered up to him, from which he missed the jewellery articles above specified, and that the prisoner having refused to give him an account of what had become of them, he made inquiries at the pawnbrokers' shops, and found that they were pledged at Mr. Filmer's shop by the prisoner, who, however, refused to restore them, and that in consequence of the refusal he gave him into custody that day. The complainant added that he had purchased the articles with money that he had earned himself while in a situation. The accused said, that he had been at considerable expense in his son's education; that he had also advanced him sums of money from time to time, and that the articles he now charged him with stealing were purchased with part of the money. He admitted having pledged the gold pin, and appealed to the magistrate whether, his son being a minor, he was justified in giving him into custody, putting out of the question his being his parent?—Mr. Traill said that although the accused was the father of the complainant, still he had no right to convert the articles to his use without his consent. The magistrate then inquired if the portfolio was also pledged without his sanction?—The complainant replied in the affirmative.—The accused, however, denied that the portfolio belonged to his son, the latter having made it a present to his sister; and that, if he (the prisoner) was not mistaken, the magistrate would perceive the fact inscribed in writing in the portfolio.—Mr. Traill examined the inside of the portfolio, and found it written down that it was presented by William Brocksopp, jun., to his sister, as reported by the accused. The magistrate, exhibiting the writing to the complainant, asked him if it was his?—The complainant having examined the characters, after a great deal of hesitation, said that he had every reason to believe it was not his handwriting.—The accused said, that he was ready to make oath it was his son's writing, although he now denied it.—The complainant, however, still declared it was not, and added that he was willing to put the portfolio out of the charge altogether, and proceed on those of the gold pin and the ring. He, however, was not desirous of pressing too hard against the accused, if he restored him the property.—The accused said that the complainant had disgraced himself by the harsh step he had adopted towards him, his parent, and that his mother was in attendance to prove the fact of the portfolio being given by the complainant to his sister.—Mr. Traill could not help remarking, that it was an extraordinary proceeding altogether for a son to give his father into custody, and have him brought up to the bar of a police-court under such circumstances. The charge, however, of illegally pledging the ring and pin by the accused being made out, by the production of the articles by the pawnbroker, and his identity as the pawner being proved, he should call on the accused to enter into his recognizence to appear on a future day. The accused having entered into the requisite surety was then set at large, and he left the court accompanied by his wife, a lady-like looking woman, who appeared to be absorbed in grief at the circumstance of her son giving his father into custody on such a charge.

A Man Charged with Drowning His Wife.—At Marlborough-street on Tuesday, Michael Lee, alias Molloy, a labourer, between 45 and 50 years of age, was charged with having murdered his wife, Ann Lee, by drowning her in the Paddington Canal. Constable Ross, 15 D: At three o'clock on Monday, as I was passing Northumberland-street, I saw a great crowd round the workhouse door, and on inquiring what was the matter, I was informed that there was a man there who had been making away with his wife. I went inside, and the prisoner was given into my custody. He told me that he had not spoken to her (his wife) for the last three months, during which time they had lived apart. Ross added that the deceased had not been near her home since last Sunday night week, and he had not, as yet, had time to get witnesses together, who would, he believed, be able to prove that she and the prisoner were, on the evening of the day in question, seen drinking together, and afterwards quarrelling at Maida Hill, a short distance from where the body was found. Mr. Rawlinson remarked that he had heard quite enough to justify him in detaining the prisoner, and desired the officers to get together all the evidence they could for the coroner's inquest. The prisoner, on being asked if he wished to say anything on the charge of having murdered his wife by drowning her, replied, "I know nothing about it; I have seen nothing of her."—The prisoner was remanded. [On Wednesday Mr. Mills held an inquest at the Dudley Arms, on the body of the deceased woman Lee. The accused was brought from the station-house to the inquest-room, in order that he might hear the evidence adduced. After several witnesses had been examined, the coroner adjourned the inquiry for a post mortem examination, and for further evidence. On Thursday afternoon this protracted investigation was resumed. The jury returned a verdict, "That deceased was found drowned; but how she came into the water there was no evidence to show;" with a request, however, that the police would renew their inquiries.]

Highway Robbery near the Victoria Theatre.—At Union-hall on Wednesday two powerful-looking young fellows, named Charles Byford and George Williams, alias Luxton, were charged with robbing Mr. Charles Powerie, a grocer and cheesemonger, of Camberwell, of a knife and comb. Prosecutor stated that about eleven o'clock on the previous night he was passing the Victoria Theatre, in the Waterloo-road, and when near the Victoria Tavern he was accosted by Byford, who asked him whether his name was Jones. He replied in the affirmative, thinking that it was merely a lark, when, to his surprise, Byford seized his hands, while Williams put his hand in his left-hand pocket, which fortunately contained only his comb and knife. They then wanted him to enter the public-house and partake of a pot of beer, which he declined. They then attempted to have a dip in his other pockets, when he broke away from them and went in search of a policeman. He met 140 L in Webber-street, to whom he related the circumstances; they then returned to the public-house, when he gave the prisoners into custody. He informed the magistrates that if they had succeeded in emptying his right hand pocket, they would have had a good haul, as he had twenty sovereigns deposited there.—Byford denied ever seeing the prosecutor before. Williams said that he was in the public-house, waiting for a gentleman, when the policeman entered and took him into custody.—Mr. Powerie said that the latter prisoner was the man that put his hand in his pocket, and Byford held his hands. He was quite certain they were the men. The prisoners were remanded to enable the officer to make enquiries about them.

Alleged Murder.—On Thursday a young man, respectably connected, who gave his name as Thomas Stokes, but which is supposed not to be his real name, was charged at Bow-st. with the murder of Obadiah Garnett. It appeared that on the 1st of last month a scuffle took place between the prisoner and the deceased on the steps leading to the Salisbury Arms, Durham-street, Strand. The prisoner seized the deceased with both hands by the collar, and threw him violently down backwards, and fell on the top of him. The deceased fell with his head on the step. The prisoner said to the deceased, "There, what do you think of that?" and he went into the Salisbury Arms. The deceased was then lying on the ground. He was quite insensible. He died on Wednesday afternoon from concussion of the brain. The prisoner was fully committed to Newgate for the wilful murder.

POSTSCRIPT.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE CITY.

The following are the arrangements made up to the present time for the reception of her Majesty at the Royal Exchange, on the 28th instant.

As the day approaches, the works of the interior have been proceeded with with increased activity, so that the entire range of apartments of Lloyd's, and the Royal Exchange and London Assurance Companies, may be in as forward a state of completion as possible by that period.

The subscription-room belonging to Lloyd's is completed, all but fitting up those places where decoration is required, and for that purpose workmen have commenced the embellishments, which are to be of a superb description. It is in this room that the grand entertainment is to be laid out; a cross table for ten to be placed on a raised flooring on the south end of the room, at which her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the principal guests, are to seated. Three extended tables are to be formed from north to south, and the leading visitors having the favour of an invitation, the Lord Mayor, the members of the Royal Exchange and Gresham Trust Committees, the Aldermen and Common Councilmen of the City, and chief civic officers, are there to be accommodated.

We understand that their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, are invited to grace the ceremony by their presence at the entertainment. The Duke of Wellington has engaged to meet the Queen; and Sir Robert Peel, and several other members of the Government are likewise to attend. The Earl of Jersey, as Master of the Horse; the Lord Chamberlain, Earl Delawarr; and Lord Steward, the Earl of Liverpool, are to be among the officers of the royal household who will attend on the Sovereign in their official capacity. Most of the foreign ministers are to be invited, also the Lord Chancellor and Judges.

It is ascertained that sufficient space can be afforded at those tables for 360 persons.

In the commercial room, a spacious and noble apartment ranging the whole extent east to west of the north side of the merchants' area, an entertainment is to be supplied for four hundred, and in the colonnade in the quadrangle or merchants' area six hundred are to be accommodated.

The Lord Mayor and civic functionaries are to be in waiting at Temple-bar, at twelve o'clock precisely, so that due homage may be paid to the Queen on her Majesty's entrance of the City of London. On the civic and royal procession reaching the portico of the Exchange, the members of the committee, headed by the chairman, are to await her Majesty, who, on descending from the royal carriage, will be formally received by these gentlemen.

At the announcement of the banquet, appointed, we understand, for two o'clock, her Majesty passes from that private room, by a temporary doorway, to the Reading and Map Room of Lloyd's, at the south-east corner, which communicates with the Subscription Room, as the apartment devoted to the uses of the banquet.

The Honourable Artillery Company have received orders from Sir James Graham to attend at the Royal Exchange to join the guard of honour to her Majesty.

A Court of Common Council was held yesterday, at which it was agreed, by acclamation, to present an address to her Majesty upon her auspicious visit to the city, to be presented at the opening of the New Royal Exchange. It was understood, that as the Mercers' Company were joined with the corporation in raising that magnificent building, they should be duly recognised in the address. At the same Court it was also agreed, that the answer of Louis Philippe to the address recently presented to him by the Corporation, should be inserted upon the records of the Court, and that steps should be taken by the committee to emblazon and otherwise record the answer, and that a copy, executed in such manner as to the committee appeared to be most eligible, should be transmitted to every member of the Court.

On the occasion of her Majesty's visit to the City, the Mansion-house, East India House, the Halls of the several Companies, Clubs, &c., will be brilliantly illuminated.

Westminster Registration.—The proceedings at the Westminster Registration Court terminated yesterday. The result is a majority of 54 for the Conservatives.

Punishment of Fraudulent Bankrupts.—At the Exeter Bankruptcy Court on Thursday, the Commissioner committed to prison a bankrupt named Hutton, a lime burner, for giving prevaricating answers. A linendraper, named Goodenough, late of Newton Abbot, had the consideration of his application for a certificate adjourned for four years, from the date of the fiat, in consequence of attempted fraud.

Attempted Robbery of Jewels at Brighton.—A German named Gust Shulte Johnsohn, has been committed by the magistrates of Brighton, on a charge of attempting to swindle Mr. Cochrane, a jeweller, of a diamond brooch, value 225 guineas, and some other valuable articles of jewellery. He pretended they were ordered by the Countess Revolski, who was staying at the York Hotel. When Mr. Cochrane took them home, the prisoner requested him to wait while he went with them to the Countess, who was ill, but Mr. Cochrane becoming suspicious, after waiting a few minutes, opened the room door and saw the prisoner attempting to escape. Mr. Cochrane seized him, and the result was as above stated.

Death from Drinking.—Mr. Wakley held yesterday an inquest on the body of a lady who had been found dead in her house at Hammersmith, where she lived by herself. Her husband, a surgeon, said, that soon after their marriage he had found her dreadfully addicted to drinking, and they had in consequence separated. A girl, who had been her only attendant for some time, said she was constantly drinking spirits, and would send out for a quartern perhaps a dozen times a day! The verdict was, "Died from excessive drinking of ardent spirits."

FOREIGN.

Accident to the Prince of Prussia.—The Prussian Gazette says, that the Prince of Prussia, while inspecting some buildings at Babelsberg, fell, and broke both the bones of his right arm, two inches above the wrist. The fracture was immediately reduced, and his royal highness was, at the date of this account, October 10th, doing well.

The Brazilian Treaty.—The Linnet has arrived from Rio Janeiro, which she left on the 26th of August, with the long-looked for Brazilian treaty. The reduction of duties is not to such an extent as the advocates of free trade desire: but the amount of the duties to be charged on the various articles of import has attracted much less notice amongst the merchants in the city than the following clauses, giving certain powers to the executive:—"The Government is authorised to impose upon the merchandise of any country in which the produce of Brazil is liable to a higher duty than similar produce of other countries, an additional duty, so as to neutralise the ill effects of the difference of duty upon Brazil produce. Such additional duty to cease when the increased duty upon Brazil produce shall be abolished. Again, a similar differential duty will be charged upon the merchandise of any country in which the produce of Brazil is chargeable with a higher duty, if imported in foreign vessels, than in national bottoms."

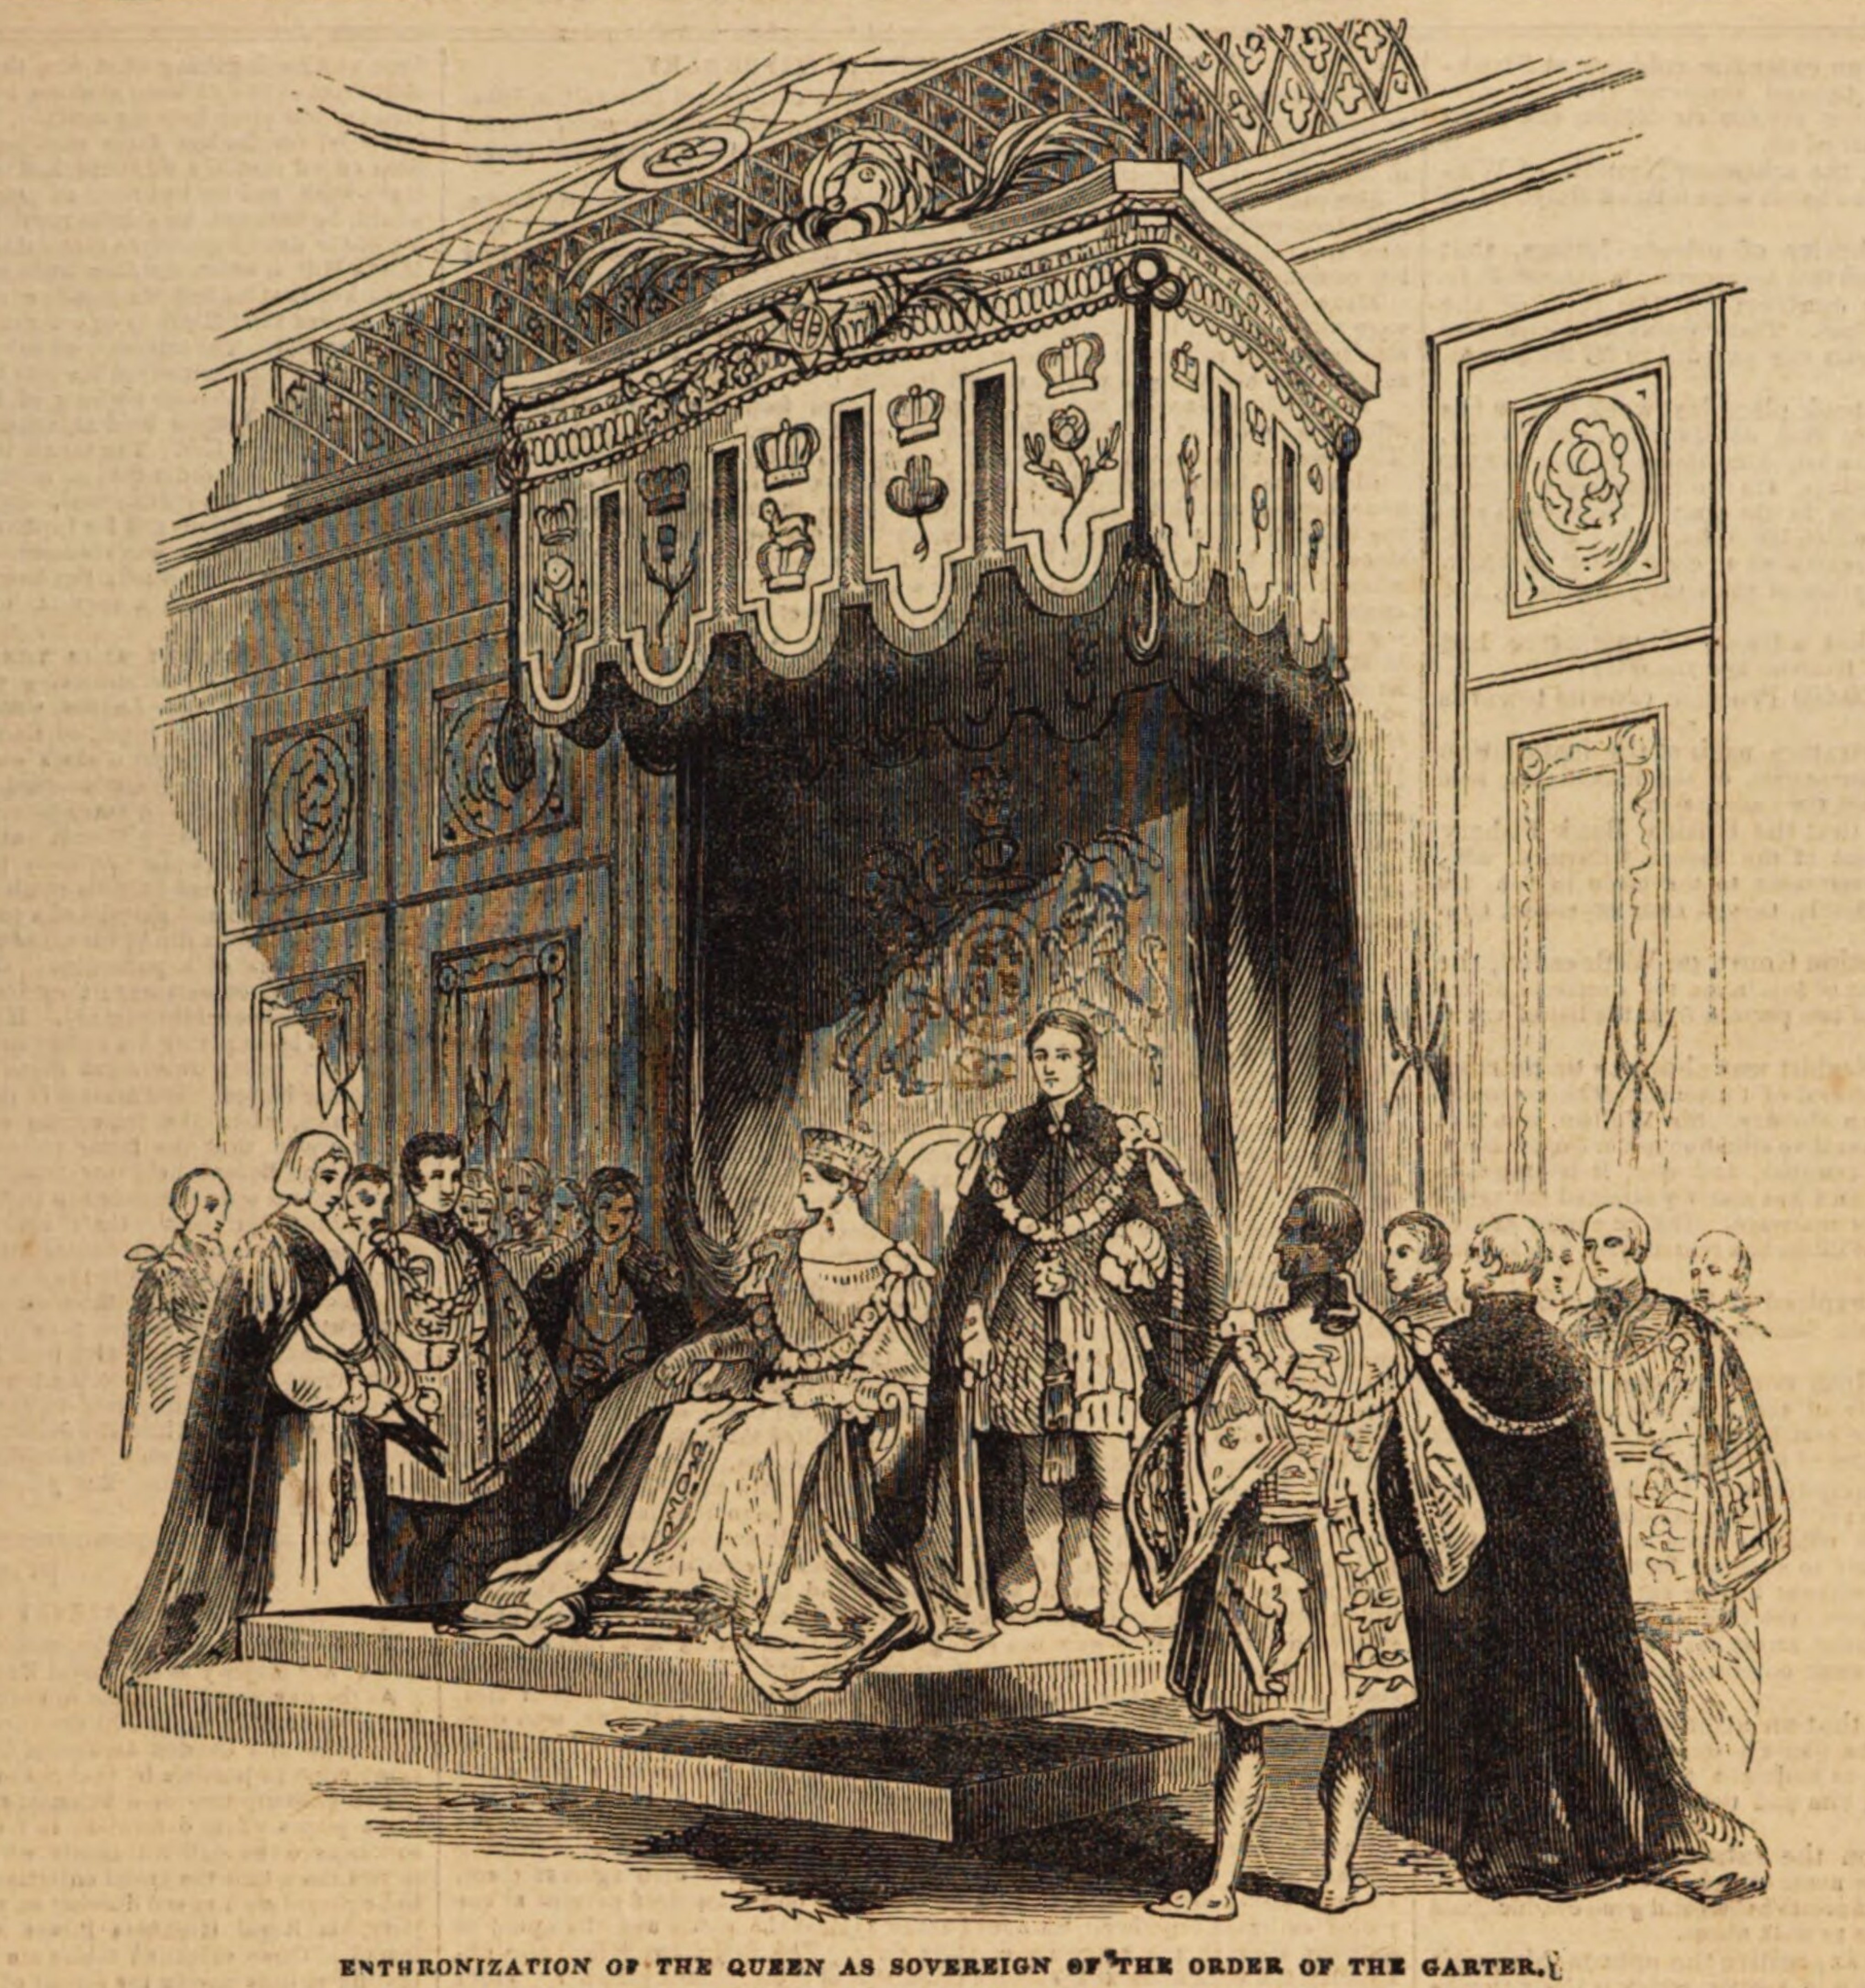
Continued from page 245.)

peared on the first day of its occupancy by the King. The next engraving shows

The King's Bed Chamber.

This room, better known to visitors of the Castle as the Queen's closet, presented a beautiful specimen of appropriate embellishment. The prevailing colour in the room was light blue, with the picture frames silvered instead of gilded, to harmonize with the general tone. This we think to have been in excellent taste; but the effect was somewhat marred by a carpet, of a pattern too large and florid, both in colour and design, to accord with the rest of the arrangements. The mantel piece is of white marble; the fire place, fenders, &c., of polished steel, with massive standards of bright chased brass, having a most elegant effect. But, as we last week gave some detail of the furniture of this room, we shall not do more now, than enumerate the principal pictures of the precious collection which adorn the walls, and which, we believe, were a source of much and constant gratification to his Majesty. Holbein's "Henry VIII.," "Edward VI.," and the "Duke of Norfolk," bearing his double wands of office, as Lord Treasurer and Lord Steward; "A Man's Head," by Leonardo da Vinci; "Titian and Aretino," by Titian; "Infant Christ," by Carlo Maratti; "St. John," by Guercino; "Virgin and Child," by Vandyke (placed on the left of the King's pillow); "Holy Family," by Sebastian del Piombo (on the right of the King's pillow); two splendid "Landscapes," by Claude; "Portrait of Erasmus," by George Peuz; "A Head," by Gerard Douw; and others by Dutch masters, of great interest and value.

The smaller decorations of the room consisted of vases of Lapis Lazuli, magnificent pieces of floral porcelain, and various costly bronzes, amongst which one of Henry IV. was conspicuous.



ENTHRONIZATION OF THE QUEEN AS SOVEREIGN OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

INVESTITURE OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

On Friday afternoon, at two o'clock, a guard of honour, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Moncreiff, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, marched into the Quadrangle, and took up its station beneath the window of the Guard Chamber, and directly opposite to the Grand Entrance to the State Apartments.

The following members of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms were stationed as a guard of honour at the door of the King of the French's apartments:—T. G. Wright, A. Perkins, H. L. Ewart, and E. C. Murray, Esquires. The remainder of the Honourable Corps were stationed in the Blue Chamber, forming a double line through which the Knights proceeded to the Throne-room, in which were stationed G. Platt and G. Denne, Esqrs., two of the Gentlemen at Arms.

The Queen, being seated on a chair of state, and the Knights Companions having taken their respective places at the table, the Chancellor of the Order, the Bishop of Oxford, signified, by her Majesty's command, the Sovereign's royal will and pleasure, that Louis Philippe, the King of the French, should be elected into the Most Noble Order.

The Knight Companions then proceeded to the election, and the suffrages having been collected by the Chancellor, were by the Lord Bishop presented to the Sovereign, who commanded his lordship to declare that his Majesty Louis Philippe, King of the French, had been elected a Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

The King of the French was then conducted from an adjoining apartment into the Chapter-room by their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge, preceded by Garter King of Arms, Sir Charles Young, bearing the ensigns of the Order upon a crimson velvet cushion, and by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Sir Augustus Clifford. Upon entering the Chapter-room, his Majesty was received by the Sovereign and the Knights Companions, standing, and placed in a chair of state on the right hand of the Sovereign. Her Majesty then announced to the King of the French that his Majesty had been duly elected a Knight of the Most Noble Order.

Garter, upon his knee, then presented the garter to her Majesty. The Sovereign, who was assisted by Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge, buckled it on the left knee of the King, the Chancellor pronouncing the usual admonition.

Garter next presented, in like manner, the Riband and George, when her Majesty, assisted as before, placed these ensigns over the left shoulder of the King, the Chancellor pronouncing the admonition. The Sovereign then gave the accolade to the King of the French, when his Majesty received the congratulations of the Knights Companions present.

The Chapter being ended, Garter, by her Majesty's command, again called over the Knights Companions, who with the Officers of the Order, then retired from the presence of the Sovereign with the usual reverences.

Her Majesty, on retiring from the chapter-room, took the arm of the King of the French (paying his Majesty the highest compliment ever conferred upon a newly-created Knight of the Order), and proceeded with the King to the door of his apartment, and there left his Majesty, proceeding thence, attended by the lady, maids of honour, &c., in waiting, to her own room on the south side of the palace.

Before, and at the conclusion of the investiture, the band of the Scots Fusilier Guards, stationed in the Quadrangle, played several favourite airs from the compositions of Rossini, Beethoven, Auber, &c.

The jewellery worn by the Marquis of Westminster was of the most superb character. In the centre of his lordship's badge was the celebrated Arcot diamond. His lordship's sword also displayed a massive diamond, one of the largest in the world, weighing 96 carats.

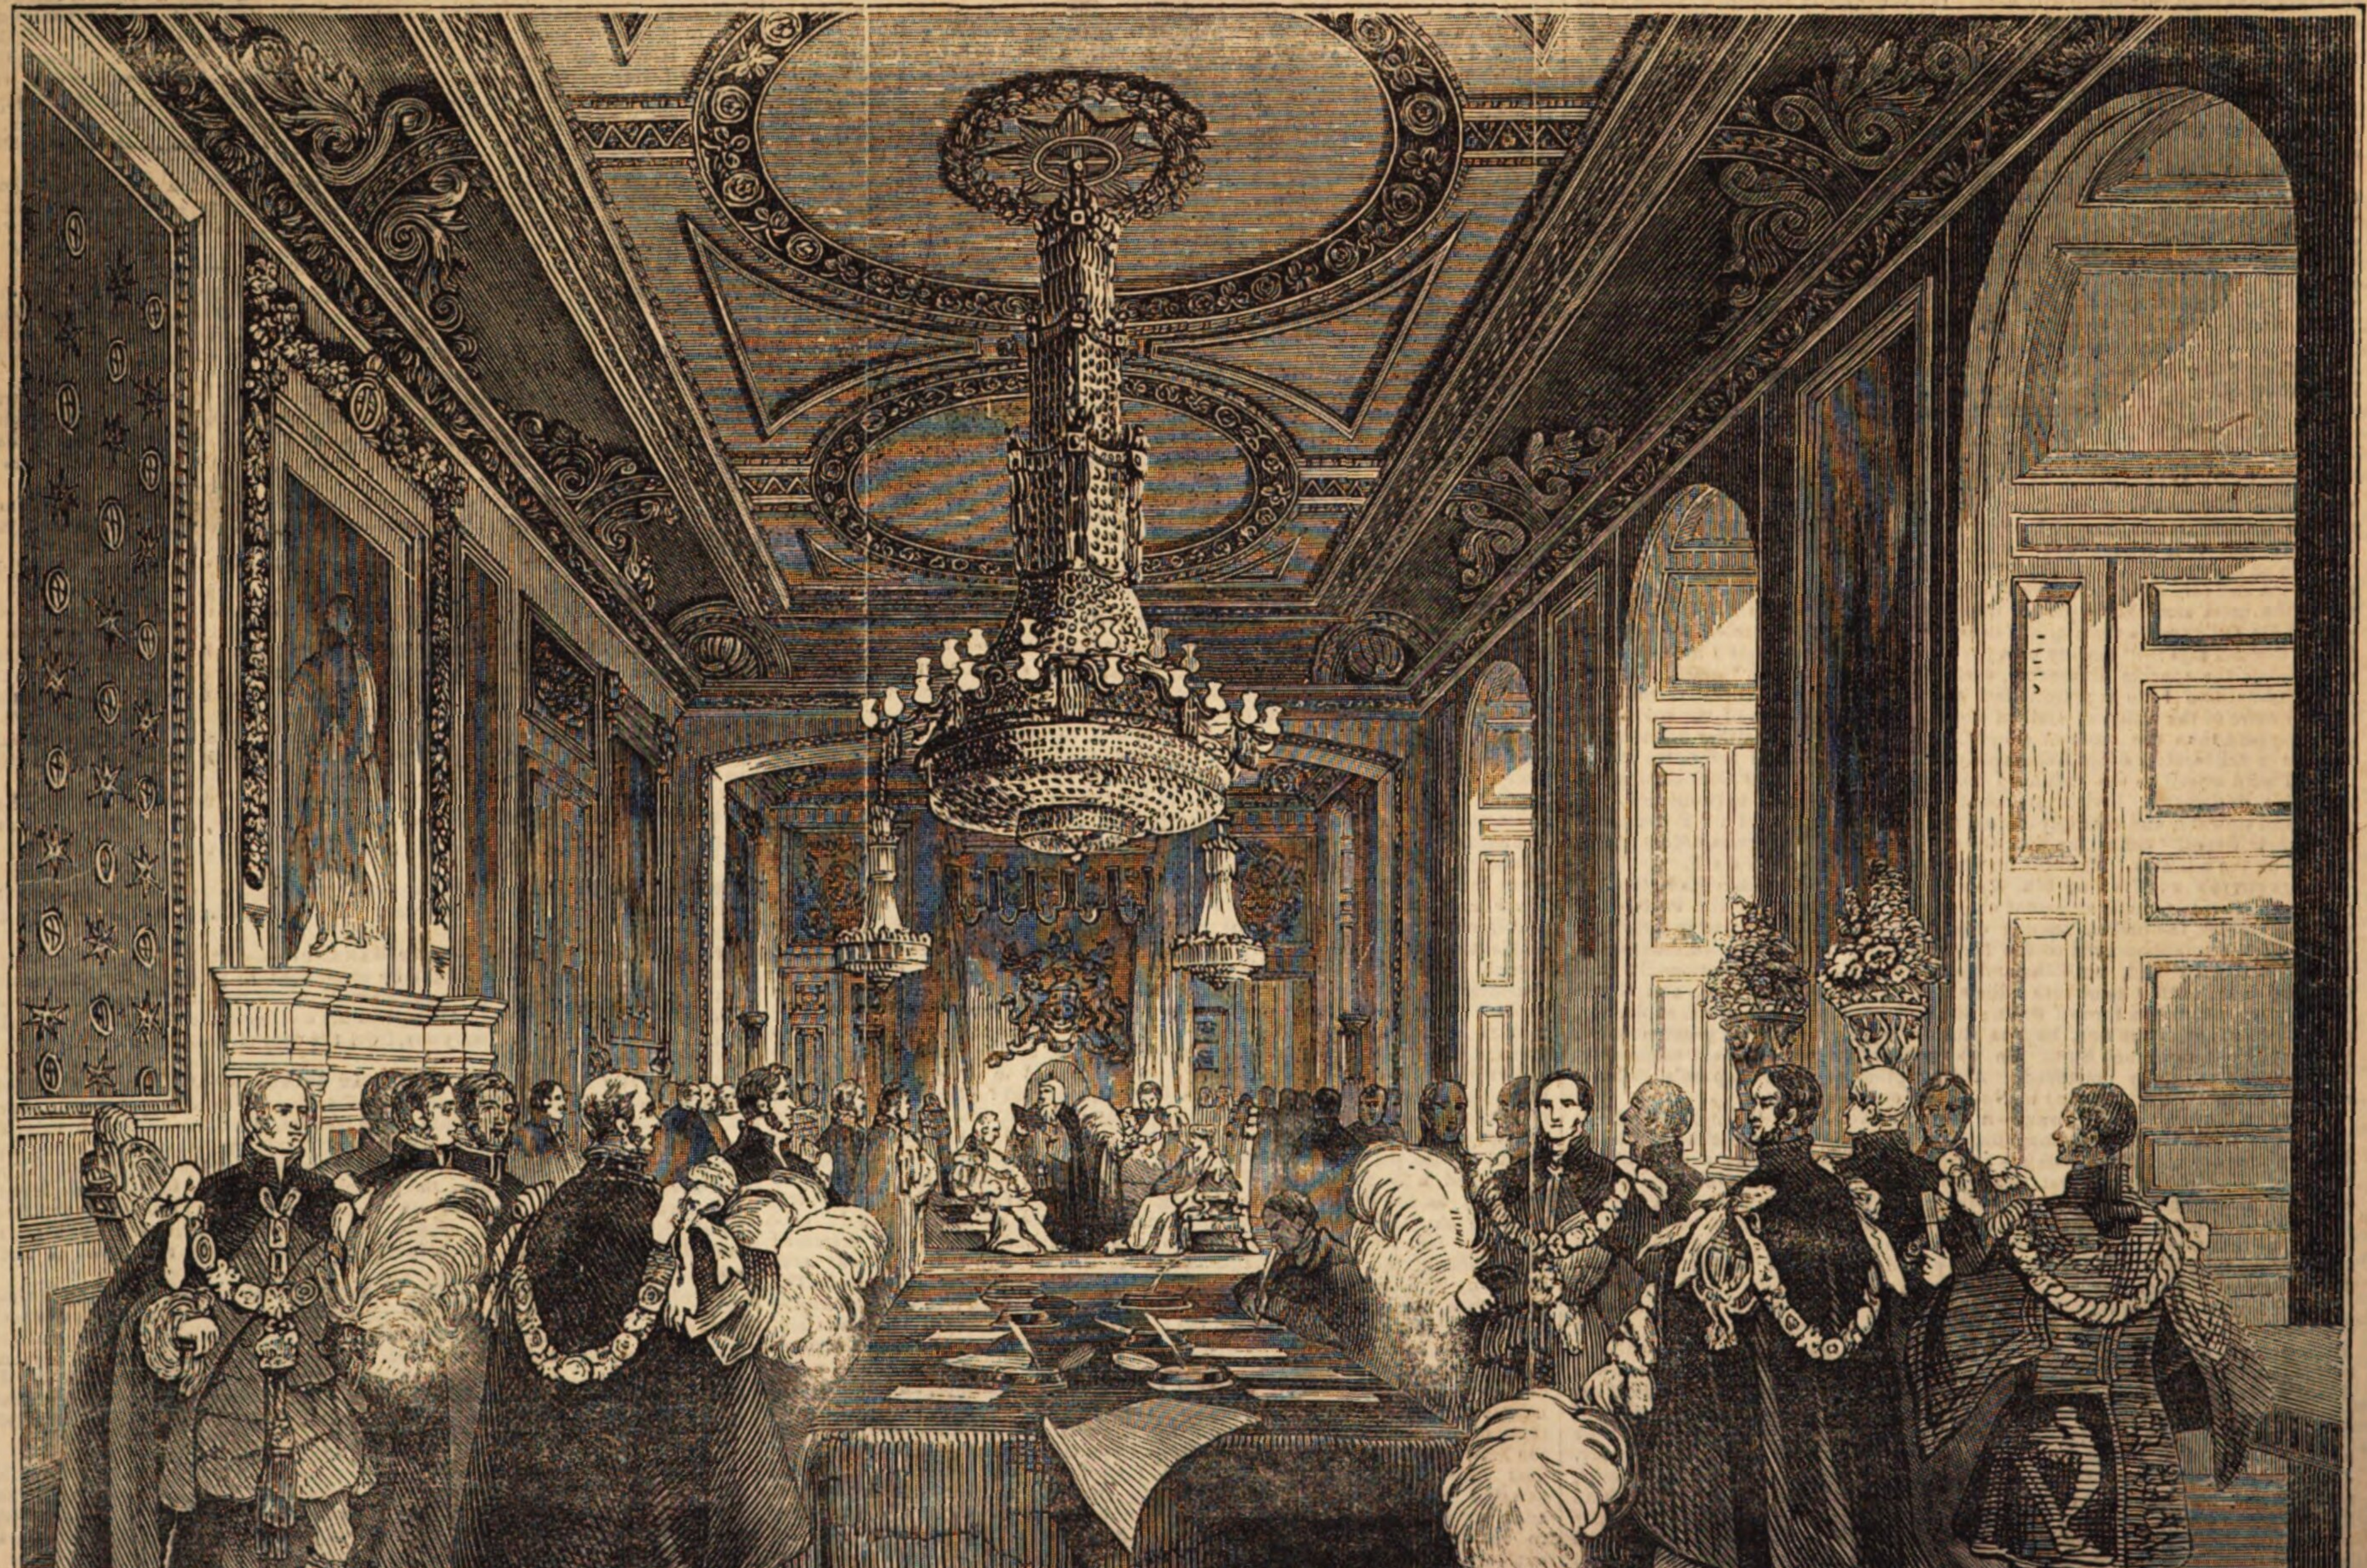
The Engraving in this page represents

The Chapter of the Garter—Enthronization of the Queen, as the Sovereign of he Ordter.

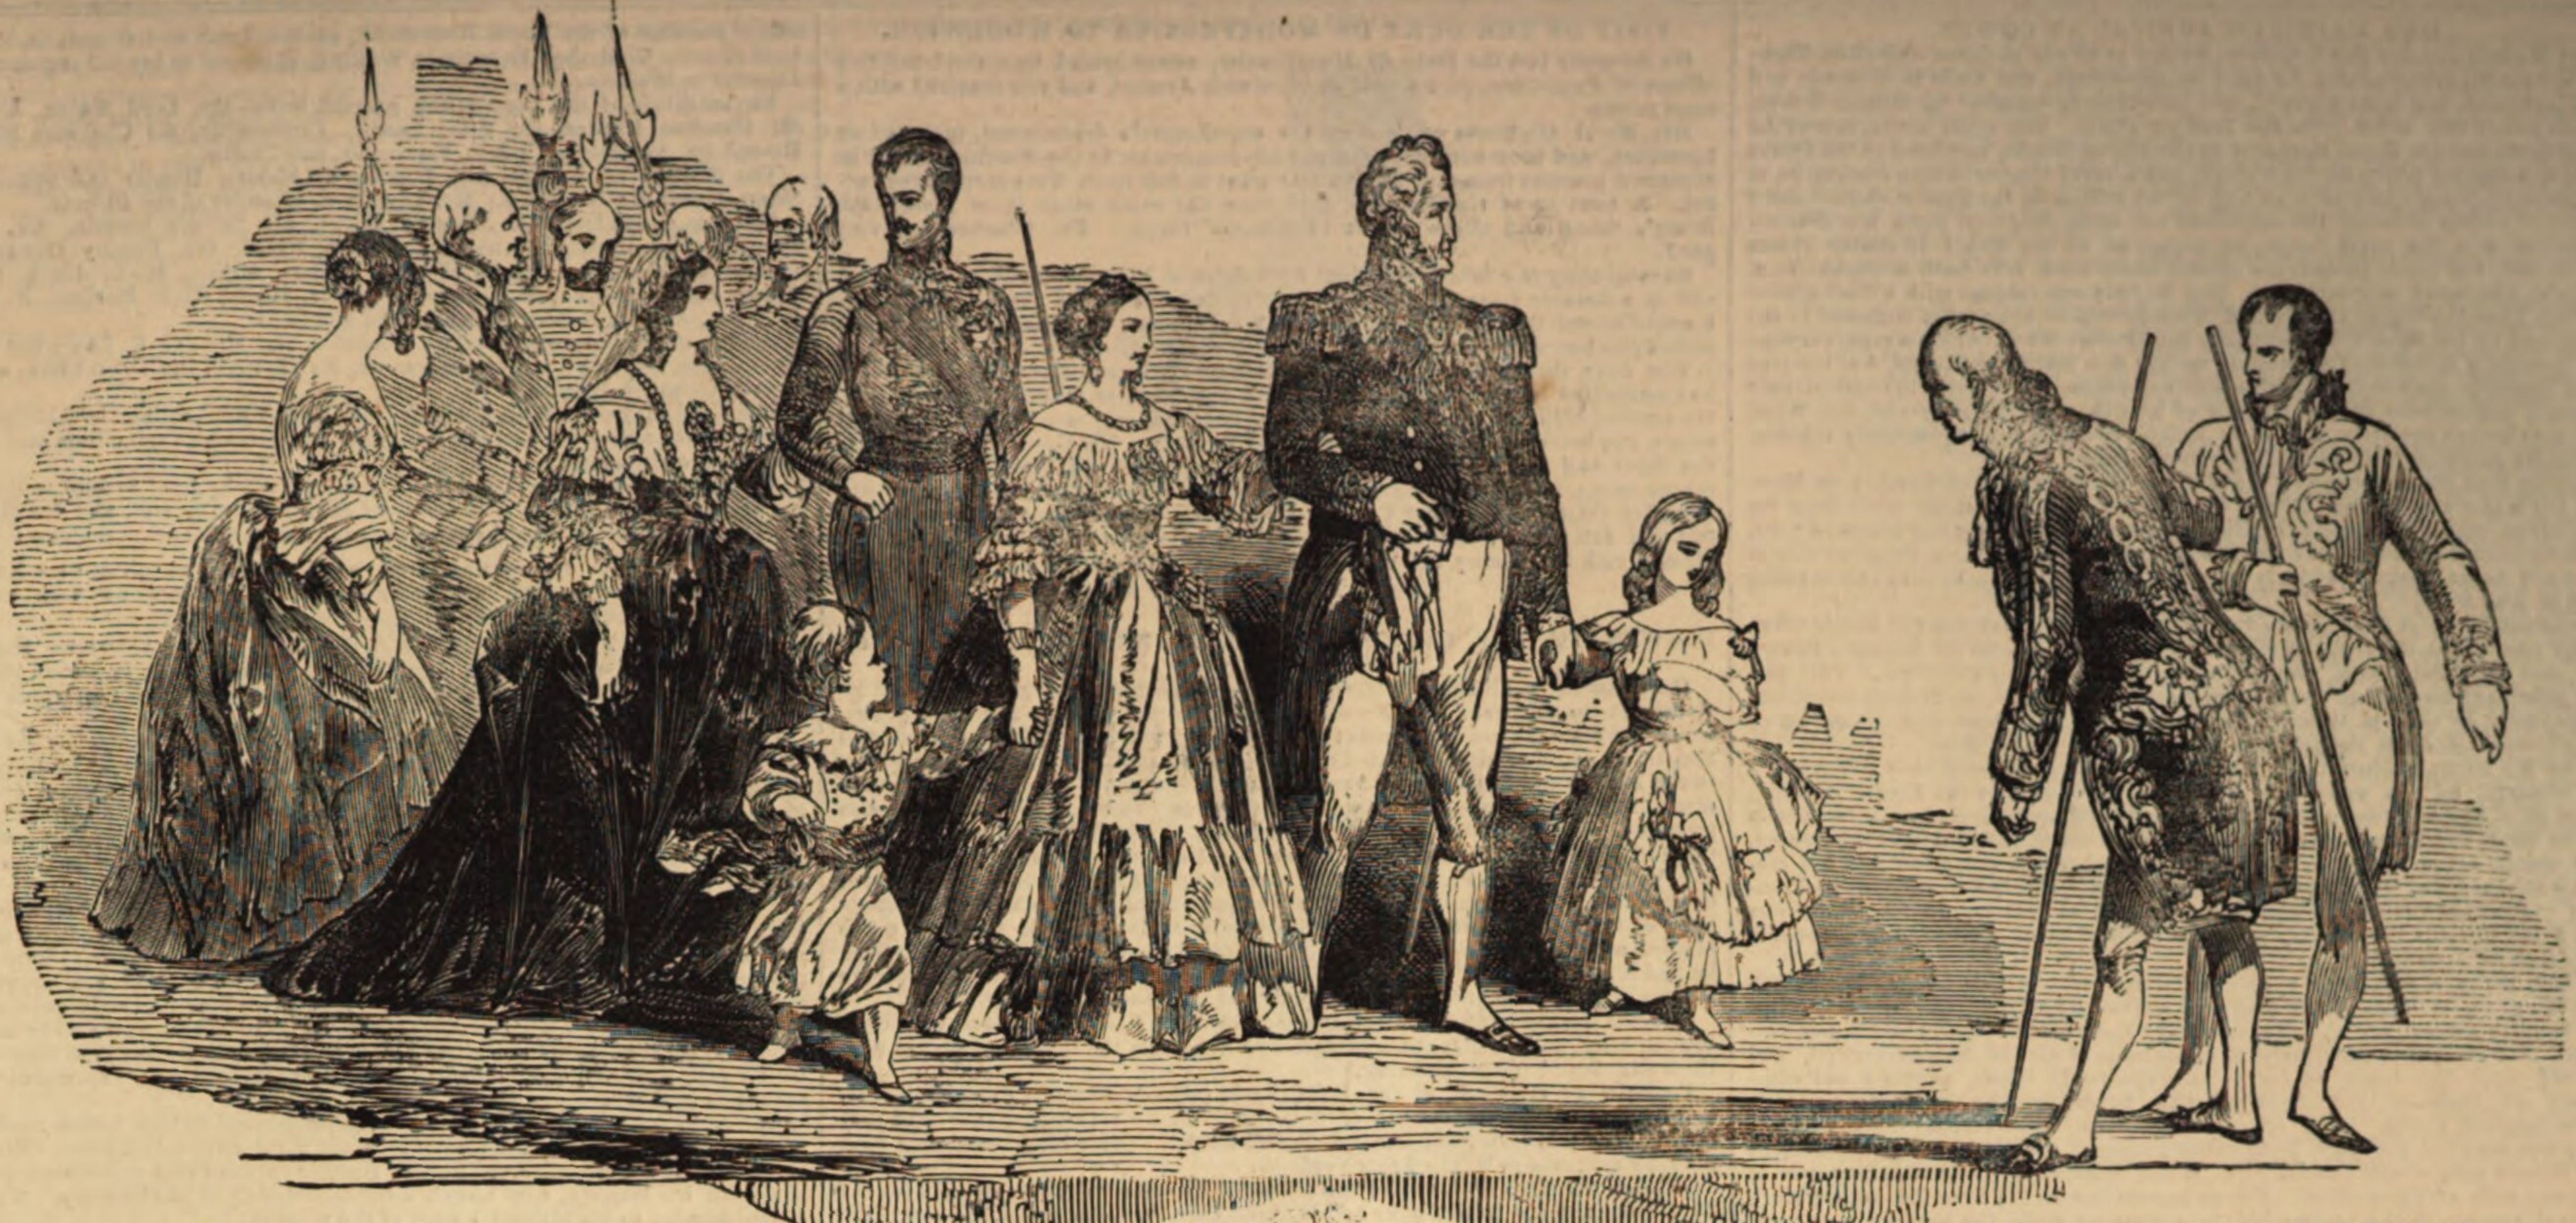
The Throne is of comparatively small size, and of simple structure and decoration; the hangings are of blue velvet, decked with gold; it stands on the dais of the Garter-chamber, and is regarded, formally, as "The Throne of Edward III.," the founder of the Order. The view from it is very imposing, as it looks across the length of the chamber into the Grand Reception-room beyond.

The ceremony represented in the cut takes place immediately before the opening of the Chapter, when the Garter, with the Knight Companions, attend the door of the chamber, and pray to be admitted. Prince Albert, as the Senior

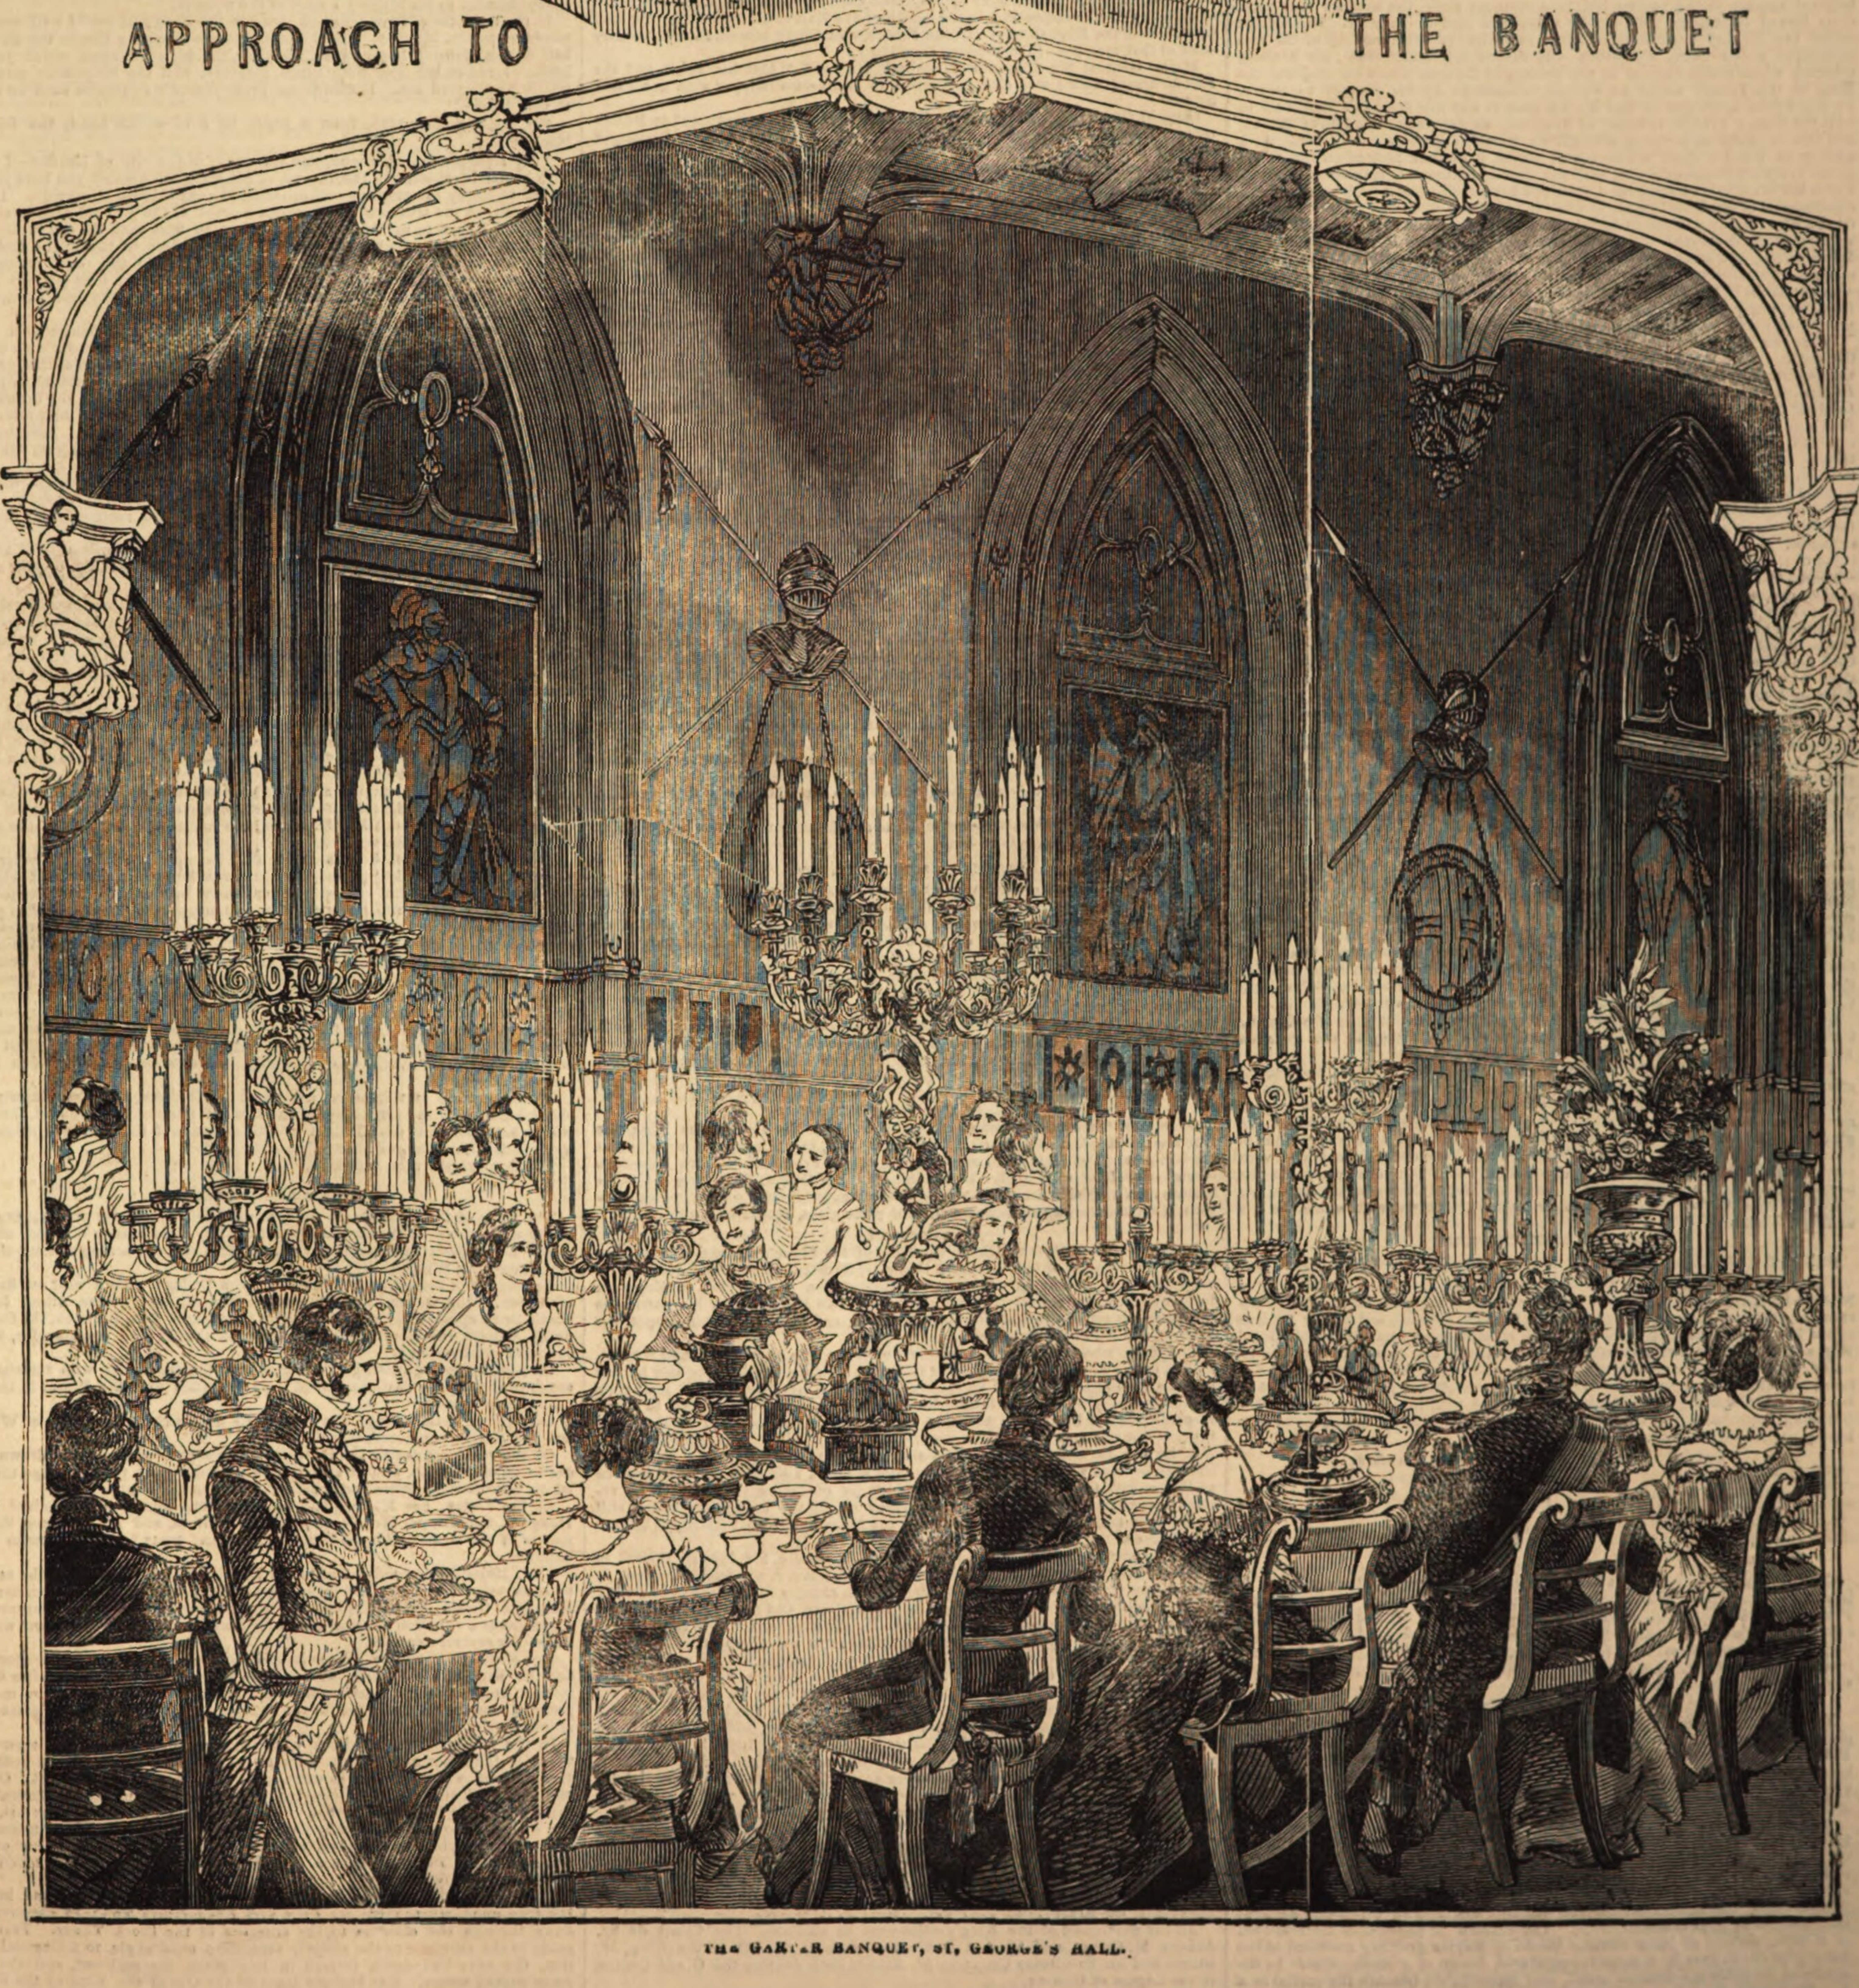
(Continued on page 250.)



CHAPTER OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER: INVESTITURE OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH.



APPROACH TO THE BANQUET



THE GARTER BANQUET, ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

HER MAJESTY'S ARRIVAL AT COWES.

Her Majesty and her Royal Consort arrived at Cowes at eleven o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by Lady Gainsborough, the Lady in Waiting, and Lord Liverpool, the Lord Steward, and immediately departed for Osborn House, distant nearly two miles from the landing place. The royal yacht, conveying her Majesty and his Royal Highness to the Isle of Wight, anchored in the Cowes roads at a quarter before eleven o'clock, but a heavy shower of rain coming on at the moment, her Majesty took shelter in the saloon on the quarter-deck. After a delay of twenty minutes, the sun shone out again brightly, when her Majesty descended into the royal barge, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the noble personages already mentioned, with Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, who acted as steersman. Her Majesty was saluted with a discharge of artillery from the Solent battery and from several of the yachts anchored in the roads, and on her debarkation opposite the Medina Hotel, where a royal carriage was in waiting to convey her Majesty to her new marine residence, was received by an immense multitude of people who had assembled to greet her arrival, with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of loyalty. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness looked perfectly free from fatigue or anxiety, and graciously acknowledged the greetings with which they were hailed.

Shortly after the departure of the King of the French from Gosport on Monday, her Majesty and Prince Albert stepped on board the royal yacht from the state barge, which conveyed her Majesty and the Prince from the Clarence-yard, At this moment the scene was truly beautiful and picturesque, every portion of the royal yacht having suddenly shot forth, as if by magic, into one dazzling blaze of blue stars.

Amongst the most distinguished of the private festivities was the dinner given by the Lieutenant-Governor of the garrison, Major-General Sir Hercules Pakenham, and Lady Pakenham, who had for a guest Sir Henry Pottinger. This gallant personage arrived at the George Hotel, Portsmouth, on Sunday afternoon, accompanied by Colonel Malcolm, from China, and has been since waited on by the principal officers of the garrison, and several of the nobility.

After Sir Henry's return to his hotel, from Sir Hercules and Lady Pakenham's dinner-party, he was waited on, about twelve o'clock, by the French Admiral, Baron de la Susse. The interview between the gallant officers lasted for nearly half an hour, and at its conclusion the French Admiral departed from the George, in a coach, accompanied by Lieutenant Chamberlain, commander of her Majesty's steamer, the Dwarf, and the English pilot. In a few minutes more Monsieur le Baron had taken farewell of Portsmouth, and, seated in his barge, was seen flying towards the Gomer, at Spithead, as fast as sixteen lusty oars could speed him on his way.

Never, perhaps, was there a more sublime spectacle presented to the human eye than at the moment of her Majesty's arrival, when the guns of the French and English men-of-war at Spithead opened their brazen throats to bid her welcome. For some time previously a dense mass of clouds had descended, and hovered over the scene as far as the eye could reach, shutting out completely all trace of the horizon, and investing the shipping with a dense funereal gloom, in which their outlines were entirely lost, and nothing was seen but the angry foam dashing against their sides. At this moment the French men-of-war poured forth whole broadsides (their usual manner of saluting) with startling effect. For an instant the flashes from the guns gave a brilliant sparkle to the scene; but, in a moment more, the heavens sent forth their forked lightnings, followed by a dreadful peal of thunder. During the storm her Majesty preserved her usual equanimity. The parting of the two sovereigns a few hours afterwards was exceedingly affectionate, her Majesty evincing considerable distress at the prolonged fatigue which his Majesty the King of the French would be obliged to undergo by his journey to Dover. Shortly before midnight it was known that it was her Majesty's intention to visit the Gomer French steamer, at Spithead, on her way to the Isle of Wight, and this no doubt accelerated Admiral La Susse's departure from shore. At a quarter to seven o'clock a number of signal flags were hoisted on the Royal yacht, evidently communicating with the fleet at Spithead. Immediately afterwards her Majesty's steamer the Comet left her moorings, and took up a position right a-head of the Royal yacht, and in the twinkling of an eye all the vessels in the harbour, which a moment before showed nothing but bare ropes and poles, were profusely decorated with flags. At eight o'clock the Royal yacht cast off her moorings, and as she got weigh upon her the Victory manned her yards and saluted. Previously to the yacht getting under weigh the Admiralty barge, with the Lords of the Admiralty, Sir George Cockburn, Admiral Bowles, and the Hon. Mr. Corry, went on board to pay their respects to her Majesty, and remained on board when the yacht proceeded to Spithead.

When her Majesty's yacht neared that of his Majesty the King of the French, the engines were stopped, and notwithstanding the wind had freshened since her departure from the harbour, her Majesty and Prince Albert went on board Le Gomer, accompanied by Lady Gainsborough, and Lord Liverpool and the Lords of the Admiralty. Her Majesty was received on board by Vice-Admiral Baron de La Susse, Captain Goubin, and other officers of the ship, who were assembled on the quarter deck. The royal standard was hoisted on board the Gomer, and saluted by the French ships. Her Majesty, during her progress through the magnificent apartments, repeatedly expressed herself to the French admiral as delighted in the highest degree with the admirable tact displayed in their arrangement, with the splendour of the tout ensemble, and the exquisite taste which pervaded the details, as well the largest as those of the minutest description. But her Majesty did not confine her visit to the state apartments and those of the officers, for returning to the deck, she went right "forward," and appeared to feel scarcely less interest in inspecting the part of the vessel occupied by the common sailors. Her Majesty also stood some time at one end of the vessel, and examined with much interest its capacious deck, and the extreme cleanliness and order which prevailed upon it. Her Majesty, leaning on the arm of the French admiral, with Prince Albert and suite, paced up and down the deck for some time, while the band played our National Anthem, and several of their own favourite tunes, and then descended to the state cabin, where a déjeûner à la fourchette was provided for her by the French admiral, of the most recherché description. Her Majesty sat at the head of the table, supported on her right by Prince Albert, and on the left by the French admiral. The four senior captains of the French squadron—namely, Commander Laurenciere, chef d'état major; Captain Graeb, of the Inflexible; Captain Hernoux, of the Belle Poule; and Commander Goubin, of the Gomer. The Duc d'Yarcourt, who came over on board La Reine Amelie, which is commanded by his son, and also Lady Gainsborough and the officers in her Majesty's suite, were likewise honoured by an invitation to partake of the déjeûner with her Majesty. On rising to leave the table, her Majesty, speaking in French, proposed "The Health of his Majesty King Louis Philippe," which was drunk, the toast being previously acknowledged by a profound inclination of the head by all present. Shortly afterwards her Majesty ordered her barge, and the same honours being rendered to her on deck and aloft as upon her arrival, descended to it, accompanied to the bottom of the ladder by the French admiral.

When the Queen left the Gomer, the French men-of-war again thundered forth their broadside salutes; and as soon as the standard was rehoisted on board the Victoria and Albert, the English ships commenced their salutes. The yacht then proceeded with her Majesty on her course to the Cowes Roads.

Cowes, Wednesday.—At one o'clock this afternoon, her Majesty the Queen, accompanied by Lady Gainsborough, took a carriage airing in the grounds around Osborne House.

Thursday.—This morning her Majesty was stirring by daybreak, and shortly afterwards was seen, with his Royal Highness the Prince, crossing the lawn of Osborne House towards the sea beach, where the royal pair continued to promenade for a considerable time. Her Majesty afterwards went round the grounds, and frequently expressed the liveliest satisfaction at the splendour of the scenery. This afternoon, at one o'clock, her Majesty and Prince Albert, with several members of the royal suite, embarked on board the royal yacht, for the purpose of enjoying a short excursion. It is her Majesty's intention, during her short stay here, to visit hastily the various points of interest with which the Isle of Wight abounds.

PRINCE ALBERT'S PRIZE AT ETON COLLEGE.—ETON, Oct. 17.

The examination for Prince Albert's Prizes for the Promotion of the study of Modern Languages has just concluded, the examiners this year being M. de Vericour, ex professor at the Athenie Royale de Paris (in French), and Signor Panizzi, of the British Museum, London. The sum of £50 given annually by his Royal Highness (the prizes having been instituted in 1841), has this year been distributed, agreeably to the arrangements of the provost and the head master, as follows:—To the best French and Italian scholar, £25 in money, and £15 in books; and £10 in books to the boy who stood next in point of merit. The following boys, including the prizemen, were mentioned by the examiners as having particularly distinguished themselves:—

French.	Italian.
1. Boileau, ma.	1. Beaumont
2. Beaumont	2. Boileau, ma.
3. Stratton	æq. Barton
4. Barton	,, Close
5. Peel	,, Stratton
6. Foster

The first prize was awarded to Beaumont, and the second to Boileau, ma. It is gratifying to observe that all the successful competitors for Prince Albert's Prize have always been distinguished boys in classics. The present year furnishes no exception; for the two prizemen are next to each other in the school; they have both gained several public honours, and are also at the head of their remove, the Middle Division of the Fifth Form. The examinations last year were in the French and German languages.

English Plays in Paris.—His Majesty Louis Philippe was graciously pleased to receive the prospectus of the intended English performances in Paris, which are to take place alternately with the Italian operas, and expressed his intention of taking a box for the whole of the representations. Mr. Macready will appear in Paris on the 25th of next month, with Miss Helen Faucit, in Shakspeare's tragedy of "Othello."

The Statue of William IV. in the City.—The pedestal which is intended for the statue of William IV., was on Monday raised to its full elevation (25 feet), and in a few days the statue will be placed thereon. The site of the statue is most commanding, and the work will, when completed, not only form an excellent point of refuge at these immense thoroughfares, King William-street, Arthur-street, and Gracechurch-street, but also will form an ornament, particularly when seen from London-bridge. The column or pedestal is the frustrum of a cone, formed of large circular blocks of Haytor granite; encircled at the lower part of the base is a massive sculptured design of a chain cable. In the centre of the pillar is a Grecian scroll, and immediately beneath the capital is a circular wreath of oak leaves with acorns.

VISIT OF THE DUKE DE MONTPENSIER TO WOOLWICH.

On Saturday last the Duke de Montpensier, accompanied by several military officers of distinction, paid a visit to Woolwich Arsenal, and was received with a royal salute.

His Royal Highness on leaving the storekeeper's department, mounted on horseback, and proceeded past the powder-magazines, to the Marshes, where he witnessed practice from four 24-pounder guns at 600 yards distant from the target. A number of rockets were fired from the same range from Lieutenant Boxer's tubes, and afterwards at 1200 yards' range. The practice was very good.

Subsequently one round was fired from General Miller's gun of 10-inch bore, and at a distance from the target of 1250 yards; one round from one of Lieutenant-Colonel Dundas's 68-pounder, or 8-inch guns, at the same range. The rocket practice was under the command of Lieut. Williams.

The duke then rode to Woolwich-common, where the Royal Horse Artillery had assembled in review order, under the command of Colonel Dyneley, C.B. On arriving opposite the troops, his Royal Highness was received with the usual salute, the brass band playing the National Anthem. His Grace then rode along the front and rear of the troops, and on returning to the flag-staff, the rocket service troop, under the command of Lieutenant Willan, and the troops H and F, under Captain Ward and Captain Dupuis, marched past, and afterwards at trot and full gallop; and the Duke de Montpensier appeared evidently greatly pleased with the celerity and regularity of the movements.

DINNER TO THE OFFICERS OF THE FRENCH SQUADRON AT PORTSEA.

On Saturday a dinner was given by the inhabitants of Portsmouth and its vicinity to the officers of the French squadron, at the Queen's Rooms, Portsea, which deserves notice on account of the perfect cordiality which prevailed, and the strong manifestation exhibited of a desire to perpetuate amicable feelings between France and England. Edward Casher, Esq., the Mayor, was the chairman. After the accustomed compliments to our royal family, the chairman proposed, with a suitable preface, "The health of his Majesty Louis Philippe, the first King of the French." This toast was received with very great applause. Mr. Vandenberg (the French Consul) returned thanks for the toast of the Queen of the French, and in doing so, said he was quite certain that when the proceedings of the evening were communicated to her Majesty, she would be much pleased with the compliment paid to her by so respectable a body as that which he had then the honour to address—in fact that day would be looked upon in France as one of the greatest in the history of the two countries. (Cheers.)

Admiral Parker briefly proposed the next toast, "The Baron Mackau and the French navy, particularly those officers who did them the honour of dining with them that day." (Great cheering.)

Commodore Hernoux, of the Belle Poule (aide-de-camp to Prince Joinville, and a member of the Chamber of Deputies), briefly returned thanks, and proposed "Lord Haddington and the British navy." (This toast was drunk with peculiar enthusiasm by the French officers.

Admiral Sir Hyde Parker said it devolved upon him to return thanks for the honour done to the British navy by his friend Captain Hernoux and the company, in drinking to its success and to the health of the Earl of Haddington. He only trusted that the English navy and the French would long remain friends, as they were at that moment. (Tremendous cheering.)

Major General Sir Hercules Pakenham proposed "Marshal Soult and the French army, which was also responded to enthusiastically, "with one cheer more."

Captain Graeb returned thanks, and, after paying a high compliment to British valour, proposed "The Duke of Wellington and the British army." (Prolonged cheers.)

Sir Hercules Pakenham returned thanks, and expressed a hope for the continuance of peace between France and England, for the sake of the world in general, and the promotion of the fine arts.

Several other speeches were made in a similar spirit.

The Recorder of the Borough, Mr. Rawlinson, proposed "May the present friendly relations between France and England continue for ever." This gentleman alluded in forcible terms to the sentiments uttered by Louis Philippe. He declared that his heart was touched when the King said, in speaking in the warmth of his zeal of the necessity of peace between two powerful nations like France and England—"I look upon the cordial union of these two nations as the key-stone of the arch which supports the peace of the world." (Loud and continued cheering.) Was there ever a truer or a finer sentence spoken by man? The language was beautiful, the metaphor was perfect, and he believed with the King of the French, that the union of these two nations, the first in civilization as in attachment to liberty, was necessary for the advancement of science and the welfare of the entire habitable globe.

VISIT OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH TO QUEEN VICTORIA.

(Continued from page 248).

Knight, attends by the side of her Majesty, and assists her in all the duties of the day.

The next Illustration shows

The Investiture of the King.

The details have been already copiously related.

After the investiture her Majesty, accompanied by the King of the French, left the Quadrangle in a pony carriage and four by George IV.'s gateway, crossing the Frogmore road (which was crowded at this point by an immense number of persons who had arrived in Windsor during the day, and by whom their Majesties were received with loud acclamations) into the Long Walk, through which they drove into the Great Park.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, the Duc de Montpensier, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, and several of her Majesty's visitors and royal suite were on horseback.

In the second carriage were their Royal Highnesses the Duchesses of Kent and Cambridge.

Several other carriages and four, filled with her Majesty's distinguished guests, followed.

The royal and illustrious party returned to the Castle through the Long Walk, after being absent for about an hour.

THE GARTER BANQUET, ETC.

Covers were laid in the evening, in St. George's Hall, for 130. The banquetting table was ornamented, if possible, in a still more gorgeous and magnificent manner, with gold plate, epergnes, candelabra, vases, wine coolers, &c., than upon the two former occasions of the banquet in St. George's Hall during his Majesty's visit.

The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards performed during the dinner in the Western Gallery.

The upper Engraving at page 249 shows

The Queen, the King of the French, and Guests entering the Banqueting Hall.

The Queen is leading the Prince of Wales; and the King, the Princess Royal On taking their seats, the children were taken from them and conducted round the room.

The next Illustration shows

St. George's Hall;

Or rather, the central portion of the table, with the Queen, the King, the Duchess of Kent, the Duc de Montpensier, &c., in their several positions at the banquet. The plate seen, are portions of the Prince of Wales's Plateau, a service entirely of solid gold. In the centre is the famous St. George's Candelabrum; on each side are smaller ones of the Hesperides and other classical subjects, the whole resting on massive slabs of plate glass, bound with gold.

SATURDAY.

In the morning, at ten o'clock, the King of the French received a deputation from the committee of the "Societé Française de Bienfaisance," who waited on his Majesty to present an address of congratulation on his visit to England. In this address the society tendered their thanks to the King for his patronage and generous gifts to this charitable institution, and invoked blessings upon his Majesty and his illustrious family.

The King, who received the deputation with the utmost courtesy and respect, replied in the French language to the following effect:—His Majesty said he was most happy to be surrounded by those of his countrymen who devoted their time and attention to the relief of unfortunate Frenchmen who happened to be in England, and felt grateful to them for the expression of their kind feeling towards himself and the various members of his family. His Majesty added that he was in hopes his present visit would contribute to the peaceful and friendly feelings which ought always to exist between two such powerful nations as France and Great Britain, and concluded by observing that if ever he returned to England, he should be most happy to see the deputation again, still engaged in their good work of alleviating the sufferings of their distressed fellow-countrymen.

His Majesty then addressed a few words to M. Andrè, the French Consul in London, and the deputation were about to retire, when it was suggested that as Frenchmen only were present, they should first express their feelings in a truly national spirit, by giving three cheers for his Majesty, and as the King withdrew the walls of the reception chamber echoed with the shouts of "Vive le Roi!"

THE ADDRESS OF THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

A deputation from the Corporation of the City of London arrived at the Castle at two o'clock in the afternoon, having travelled from town by the Great Western Railway, to present an address of congratulation to his Majesty the King of the French upon his arrival in this country. The Lord Mayor and the members of the deputation alighted at the grand entrance, and were conducted to the equerries' room, where a déjeûner was served to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and members of the Common Council, together with the officers.

The King having expressed his pleasure to receive the address immediately, the Corporation were conducted by the Hon. Captain Duncombe, Groom in Waiting, to the presence of his Majesty in the King's Reception Room.

The King's station was near the window of the apartment. His Majesty was habited in a dark blue uniform with gold appointments, being that of a Lieutenant-General, and wore the riband, with the George appended, of the most noble Order of the Garter over his left shoulder, and the star on his breast. The King had also the garter bearing the motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense," buckled on the left leg.

All the gentlemen of the King's suite were in uniform. The Count de St. Aulaire, M. Guizot, and Admiral de Mackau, were on the left of the King, M. Guizot and his Excellency Count de St. Aulaire both wearing the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour.

Viscount Sydney and the Hon. Captain Duncombe both appeared in the official costume of the Royal Household, as the Lord and Groom in Waiting. Lord Charles Wellesley, Equerry in Waiting, appeared in his full regimentals as Equerry in Waiting.

The members of the Corporation present were—the Lord Mayor, Aldermen Sir Claudius Hunter, Sir Peter Laurie, Farebrother, Sir Chapman Marshall, Humphery, Sir George Carroll, Farncomb, and Challis.

The Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Messrs. Hunter and Sydney, Mr. Moon, mover of the address; Mr. Lawrence, seconder of the address.

Common Councillors—Mr. Deputy Legge, Mr. Deputy Stevens, Mr. Deputy Peacock, Mr. Deputy Evans, Mr. Deputy Hicks, Mr. Deputy Obbard, Mr. Deputy Mitchell, Mr. Deputy Wright, Messrs. Norris, R. L. Jones, Britten, Bower, Cope, Hickson, Hall, Nott, Harrison, Hoole, Holt, Hartley, R. Taylor, J. Dixon, Acocks, Selson, Marsden, and Eagleton.

Officers of the Corporation—The Recorder, the Hon. C. E. Law; the Chamberlain, Mr. Brown; the Remembrancer, Mr. Tyrrell; the Town Clerk, and Mr. Laurie, Common Pleader.

The Lord Mayor wore his gold robe and his splendid collar, the Aldermen and the Recorder wore their scarlet robes, and the Common Councillors and officers their respective mantles.

The deputation having been introduced generally by Lord Sydney to the King, his Majesty bowed cordially to the Lord Mayor and the rest, and the Recorder then read, with much impressiveness of manner, the following address:—

"TO HIS MAJESTY LOUIS PHILIPPE, KING OF THE FRENCH, THE ADDRESS OF THE LORD MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND COMMONS OF THE CITY OF LONDON, IN COMMON COUNCIL ASSEMBLED.

"May it please your Majesty,—We, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London, in Common Council assembled, approach your Majesty to offer our sincere congratulations on your Majesty's auspicious visit to our beloved and Gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria.

"Deeply interested in every event which is calculated to influence the welfare of Europe and of mankind, we hail with peculiar satisfaction your Majesty's presence in this country as a sure and certain indication of the mutual good will and the reciprocal sentiments of respect and confidence which subsist between two mighty nations, capable by their happy union and combined efforts, under divine Providence, of preserving the blessings of peace to the nations of the earth.

"We desire to convey to your Majesty these sentiments towards the free, gallant, and enlightened nation over whom you reign, and we fervently trust that your Majesty's valuable life may long be spared to your people to continue to promote their best interests, and with them to advance the general happiness of mankind. Sire, you visit a scene where the highest domestic enjoyment is found to be associated with the highest functions of sovereignty; to return after a brief space into the bosom of an illustrious and united family, to dispense the blessings of paternal government, and to communicate and experience the inestimable endearments of social life."

The King, on the Recorder having been introduced to him, before reading the address, had bowed most courteously to the right hon. gentleman. When the Recorder had concluded, Lord Sydney stepped forward and introduced the Lord Mayor to his Majesty, who bowed most courteously to his lordship. The Lord Mayor handed to his Majesty a copy of the address.

In receiving the address from his lordship the King said:—"I well remember your father, Mr. Magnay. I had the happiness of seeing him in the Egyptian-hall of the Mansion-house, when he filled the high situation which you now hold. I remember him with much pleasure, and the hospitable manner in which he received me. It affords me great pleasure to receive such an address at your hands."

His Majesty then read, from a paper he held in his hand, the following reply:—

"My Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London—I receive with heartfelt satisfaction the address of congratulation which you have just presented to me by the gracious authorisation of your beloved Sovereign. In coming to offer to the Queen of these realms a proof of the sincere and unalterable friendship I bear to her Majesty I am happy to find that the city of London—that illustrious city which holds so prominent a place in the world, and which represents interests of such magnitude—are come to the royal residence to manifest to me sentiments so perfectly congenial to my own feelings and to the sense I entertain of my duties towards my country, towards Europe, and towards mankind.

"I am convinced, as you are, that peace and friendly relations between France and England are, for two nations made to esteem and honour each other, a source of innumerable and equal advantage. The preservation of that good understanding is, at the same time, a pledge of peace to the world at large, and secures the tranquil and regular progress of civilization for the benefit of all nations. I consider my co-operation in this holy work, under the protection of Divine Providence, as the mission and the honour of my reign. Such has been the aim and the object of all my efforts, and I trust that the Almighty will crown them with success.

"I thank you in the name of France and in my own for this manifestation of your sentiments. They will be fully appreciated in my country, coupled, as they are, with the many tokens of friendship which I have received from your gracious Sovereign.

"I thank you most cordially for your kind feeling towards myself and my family. The impression produced upon me by the presentation of your address will never be effaced from my heart."

His Majesty read the reply with marked emphasis, dwelling impressively upon the portion which inculcated the advantages of peace. The last two paragraphs of the reply his Majesty spoke without looking at the paper, which he had previously folded up. When he had concluded, he handed the copy of the answer to the Lord Mayor, with whom his Majesty shook hands with great cordiality, again entering into conversation with him.

The Lord Mayor having expressed a wish that his Majesty could have visited the citizens of London before his departure, the King replied:—"I assure you, that if I had time, etiquette should not interfere with my hearty wish, but my time is limited. I should wish very much to visit Guildhall, the Mansion House, and Fishmongers' Hall."

The Lord Mayor then presented to the King Mr. Alderman Humphery, the mover, and Sir Peter Laurie, the seconder, of the address in the Court of Aldermen; and Mr. Moon and Mr. Lawrence, the mover and seconder of the address in the Court of Common Council.

His Majesty conversed with them all. Previously, on Sir C. Hunter being presented to him, his Majesty mistook him for Sir Peter Laurie, and addressed him by that name. This caused some laughter, in which the King joined. He observed to Sir Claudius Hunter that he remembered to have seen him abroad. On Sir Peter Laurie being presented by the Lord Mayor, his Majesty said that the name of Sir Peter was quite familiar to him. He added, addressing Sir Peter, "Ah! Sir Peter, you are an old acquaintance of mine. I remember dining with you at Fishmongers' Hall many years ago. It is a great pleasure to me to meet you again." To Mr. Moon his Majesty said, taking him by the hand, "Ah! Mr. Moon, I have heard of you; I know you well from your connexion with the fine arts, and I have derived great pleasure from the examination of your admirable engravings. I find, too, that you have an excellent way of making speeches." This was, probably, an allusion to Mr. Moon having moved the address.

The deputation at this period was about to withdraw, when his Majesty again shook hands with the Lord Mayor, and said—"I assure you, my lord, that I feel the highest possible gratification at this evidence of the feeling of respect and approbation from you and your fellow-citizens."

The Corporation then withdrew.

VISIT TO ETON COLLEGE.

The King, at the royal dinner-party at the Castle, yesterday evening, expressed a very warm desire to the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, the Head Master of Eton, who was one of her Majesty's guests, to pay that ancient seat of learning a visit before his departure from Windsor.

The royal and august party honoured Eton College with a visit on Saturday afternoon. The Queen, the King of the French, and Prince Albert left the Castle in an open carriage and four. The Countess of Gainsborough, the Countess de St. Aulaire, the Viscountess Canning, and the French Ambassador, were in the next royal carriage.

On passing through George IV.'s gateway, the spectators who thronged the south terrace of the Castle, received their Majesties and the Prince in the most enthusiastic manner.

On arriving at the college, the royal party were met by the Dukes of Wellington and Rutland on horseback.

On the cortège entering the Quadrangle the boys were discovered drawn up on each side of the path, and as the cortège passed to the private lodge the illustrious visitors were greeted with loud cheers from the pupils.

At the Lodge, her Majesty and her illustrious guests were received by Dr. Hodgson, the provost, Mr. Grover, the vice-provost, and Dr. Hawtrey, the head master of the school, who conducted the august party into the interior of the building.

Their Majesties proceeded first to the Election Chamber, where all the assistant masters were assembled, and from the principal window of this apartment the King and Queen looked out into the quadrangle below. Their presence in so conspicuous a situation was the signal for tumultuous cheering, which was continued for several minutes.

Her Majesty repeatedly acknowledged the same, by bowing to the spectators, and the King of the French, who stood with his head uncovered, after bowing several times, put his right hand on his heart, and displayed in the most expressive manner his gratitude for the enthusiastic reception which greeted him on every side.

In the Library there is a book where distinguished visitors are accustomed to write their names. Prince Albert's name was already in the book, and Her Majesty was requested to write hers. She wrote "Victoria R., October 12, 1844." The Duke of Wellington wrote his name under the Queen's, and the King of the French, who had of course been requested to write his, filled the opposite page. His Majesty had expressed his delight at the enthusiastic reception given him by the boys, and, with their shouts ringing in his ears, he wrote, "Louis Philippe, encore emu de l'accueil que lui ont fait les élèves de cette honorable college."

The royal visitors were then shown into the Provost's Lodge and into his Drawing-room, where there are some very fine pictures, and they then returned down through the cloisters to the entrance of the Clock Tower. From this point to the entrance to the chapel, across the quadrangle, in a diagonal direction, the boys had again formed in line along the pathway, and the royal party walked across. Her Majesty leant on the arm of the King of the French, and Prince Albert walked behind; the suite and visitors followed. Again the King and the Queen were vociferously cheered by the boys. They bowed repeatedly in acknowledgment of the reception given them. They entered the chapel, where they remained a few minutes, and they were then conducted into the upper school. Here they remained for a few minutes, Prince Albert taking particular pains to point out to the King the names cut by boys in the walls. The Prince mounted on a form the better to point them out. He particularly drew the King's attention to the name of Charles James Fox. The statue of the Duke of Newcastle was shown to the King, and the circumstances connected with the Newcastle Scholarship explained to him, as also the names of those who had obtained it. Leaving the upper school, the royal visitors were conducted through Dr. Hawtrey's rooms down to the quadrangle, where the carriages were in waiting. Her Majesty stepped first into the carriage, and took the left hand seat facing the horses, which was not the seat she had before. A small foot-mat was at the bottom of the carriage under the seat she had before occupied. The King of the French was about to get into the carriage, but seeing that the Queen had changed her seat he stood for a few moments at the door, leaning forward and pressing Her Majesty to resume her original seat. Her Majesty, however, continued where she was, and the King laughing, at last got in and occupied the vacant seat. Prince Albert occupied the seat opposite.

The engraving at page 252 represents the reception in the Quadrangle; a right loyal scene of enthusiasm.

As the royal carriage drove off the cheers of the boys and visitors in the quadrangle were renewed with redoubled vigour, and the people on the way back to the castle also repeated their enthusiastic reception, which the King of the French acknowledged by repeatedly taking off his hat and bowing.

The Duke of Wellington was also a prominent object of the cheers of the boys. As his Grace came in he had nearly met with an accident. He came in on foot, and mingled among the boys, who scarcely knew him at first. Walking forward towards the Clock Tower, the Duke was run against by one of the carriage horses and very nearly knocked down. The boys, however, rallied round him, and he met with no further annoyance. In a few minutes after, on his being very much cheered, Prince Albert said to the Duke, "You must remember you were an Eton boy yourself."

In the evening, dinner was served in St. George's Hall, in the usual style of magnificence and splendour. Covers were laid for eighty-eight.

The august circle, followed by the numerous and distinguished guests, entered the hall at a quarter past seven o'clock, the band of the Royal Horse Guards, stationed in the west gallery, playing "God save the Queen."

The Queen took her usual seat, having on her right his Majesty Louis Philippe, her Royal Higness the Duchess of Gloucester, M. Guizot, and Madame de Moncorvo. On her Majesty's left were his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier, the Lady in Waiting (the Countess of Gainsborough), the Lord Chancellor, Lady Katherine Jermyn, and the Duke of Wellington.

Prince Albert sat opposite to her Majesty, having on his right her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Countess St. Aulaire, the Duke of Rutland, and the Countess of Verulam. On his Royal Highness's left were the Baroness de Gersdorf, the Duke of Devonshire, the Countess of Lincoln, and the Count St. Aulaire.

The band of the Royal Horse Guards performed a number of favourite pieces during dinner.

ATTENDANCE AT THE CATHOLIC CHAPEL AT CLEWER.

On Sunday morning the King of the French, accompanied by the Duke de Montpensier, and attended by some of his suite, attended divine service at the Roman Catholic Chapel, at Clewer.

The chapel in question is a remarkably small edifice, affording comfortable accommodation for only about 150 persons. It was built by Mr. Reilly, a Catholic gentleman of some considerable property residing at Forest-hill, in the vicinity.

Precautions had been taken against overcrowding the building, and the ordinary congregation being of course allowed to retain their seats, very few strangers were admitted.

On entering the royal pew, his Majesty knelt for some moments, and after performing his devotions took his seat near the centre, having the Duke de Montpensier on his right hand, Count de St. Aulaire and the other members of his suite occupying positions behind his Majesty.

The service was performed by the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, who was unassisted by any other clergyman. After the prayers, before mass, Mr. Wilkinson mounted the pulpit, and preached an excellent sermon from the parable of the unjust steward, selecting the words, "Render an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward." The only allusion to the royal presence throughout the sermon, was at its commencement, Mr. Wilkinson prefacing the opening sentence in the following words:—"May it please your Majesty and Christian brethren."

After the sermon high mass was performed, and, this solemn ceremony concluded, his Majesty returned from the chapel, having first left a handsome donation to the funds in the vestry, besides presenting to the chaplain a magnificent piece of altar plate, in which the holy water is preserved.

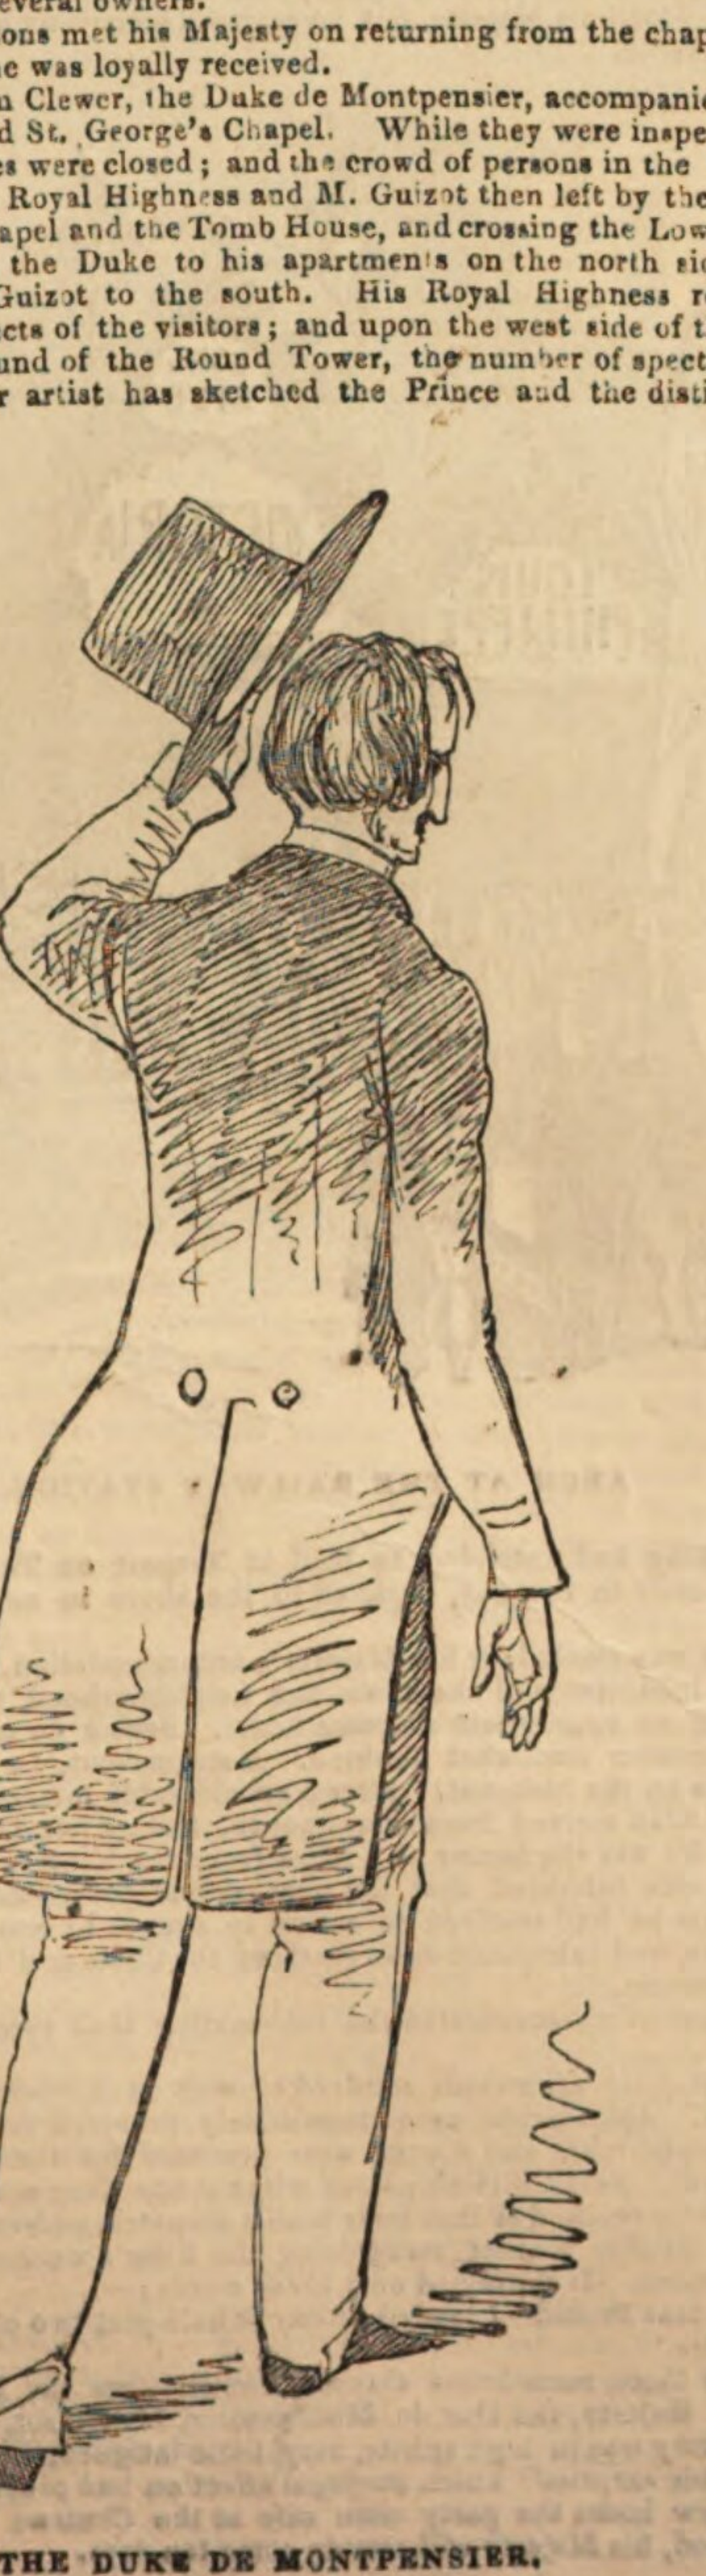
On the Gospel side of the altar was placed a very magnificent remonstrance of silver gilt, of exquisite workmanship, which had been presented by the King to the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson. On the base is inscribed "Donné a la Chapelle Catholique de Clewer, par Louis Philippe, Roi des Française, 1844." It is surmounted by a cross, and the pedestal is formed of the figure of an angel pointing upwards. Around the base is sculptured, in alto relievo, a serpent with the apple, the lamb, and other typical figures.

His Majesty was attired in a plain suit of black clothes, and wore the blue ribbon of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

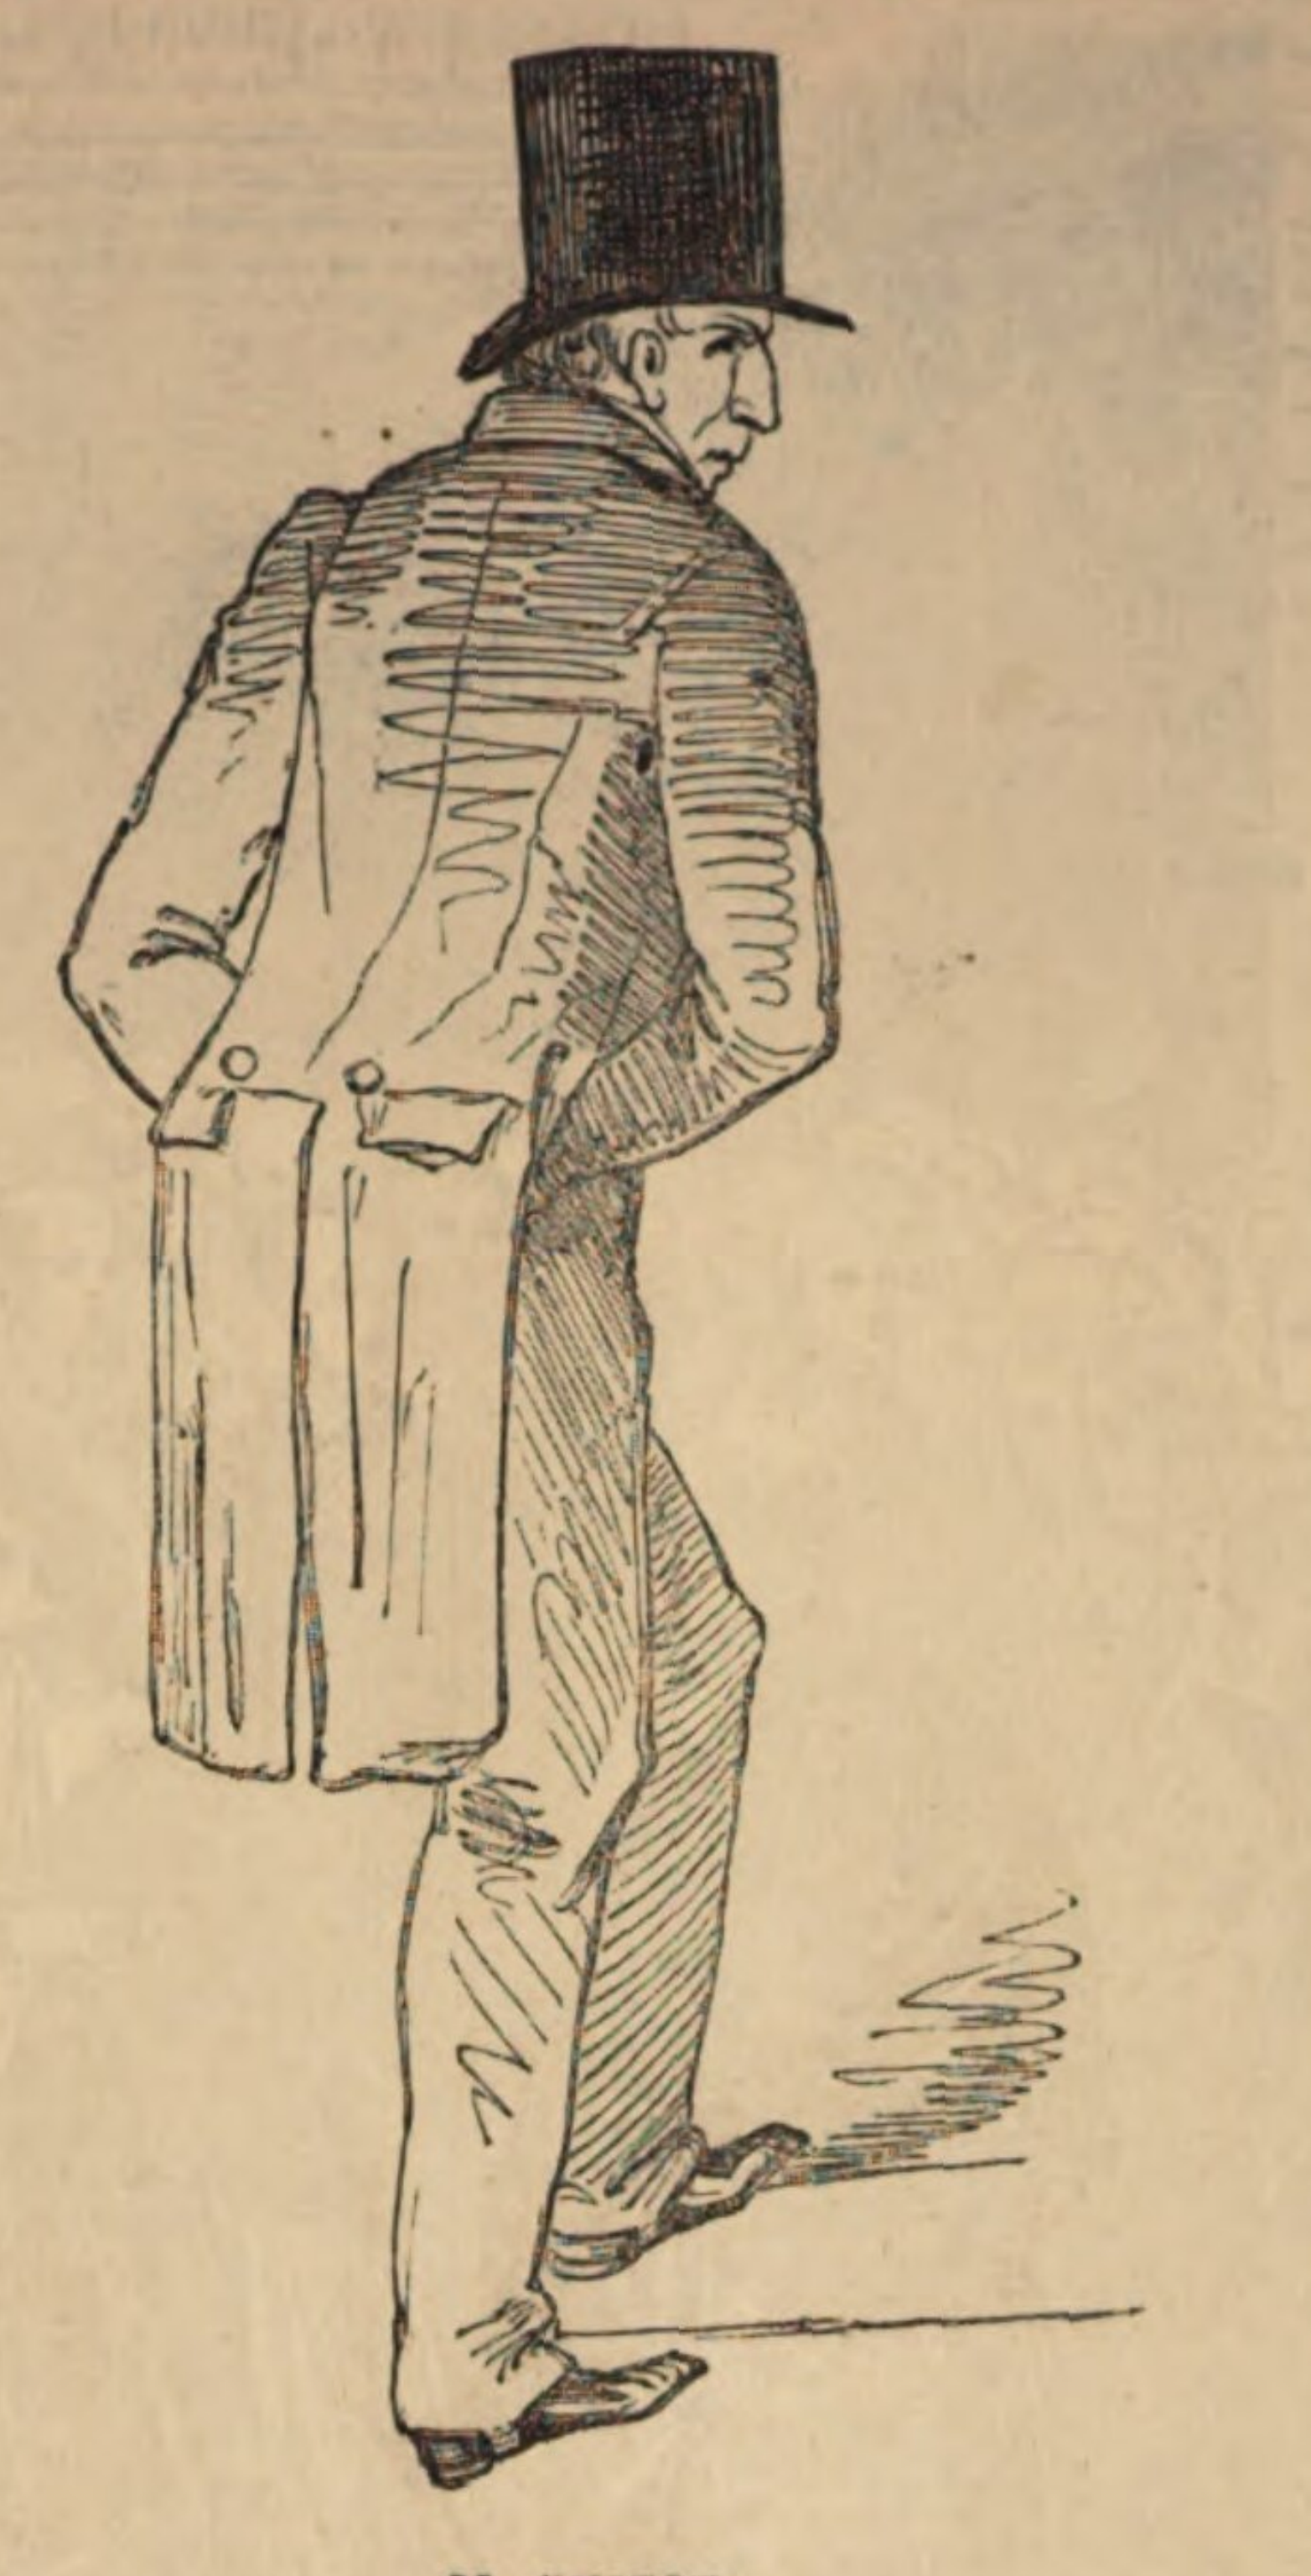
On his Majesty entering the royal carriage at the chapel door two persons, the one a female, and the other a respectable-looking man, endeavoured to throw papers into it, but the officers in attendance quietly prevented the intrusion and returned them to their several owners.

A dense crowd of persons met his Majesty on returning from the chapel to the Castle, by all of whom he was loyally received.

After their return from Clewer, the Duke de Montpensier, accompanied by M. Guizot, and suite, visited St. George's Chapel. While they were inspecting the beautiful choir, the gates were closed; and the crowd of persons in the nave was very considerable. His Royal Highness and M. Guizot then left by the Cloister passage between the Chapel and the Tomb House, and crossing the Lower Ward, returned to the Castle, the Duke to his apartments on the north side of the Quadrangle, and M. Guizot to the south. His Royal Highness repeatedly acknowledged the respects of the visitors; and upon the west side of the Quadrangle, and up the mound of the Round Tower, the number of spectators was very considerable. Our artist has sketched the Prince and the distinguished statesman.



THE DUKE DE MONTPENSIER.



M. GUIZOT

The august company lunched together at the Castle at two o'clock.

During the afternoon the east terrace and ornamental gardens were thrown open to the public, and a very large number of persons availed themselves of the opportunity of promenading therein. Towards three o'clock, her Majesty, the King of the French, the Duke de Montpensier, and the Duchess of Kent, appeared at one of the large drawing-room windows; and were seen in occasional conversation, by the spectators in the garden; the appearance of the youthful Prince of Wales at this window also excited very considerable interest.

At half-past three, the pony phaetons were ordered to Adelaide Lodge, her Majesty having determined to accompany the King across the park on foot, and return by the road.

At four o'clock, the band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) took up their station in the centre of the garden, and commenced playing one of their favourite marches. The next moment her Majesty was observed to leave the Castle by a private doorway, leading on to the east terrace. Her Majesty rested on the arm of the King of the French, and was followed by Prince Albert and the Duke de Montpensier. The royal pair were preceded by the Lords in Waiting and Equerries in attendance, attired in the Windsor uniform, and succeeded by a party of ladies and gentlemen, most of whom belonged to the suite of the French King.

The two most conspicuous in the latter group were Sir Robert Peel and M. Guizot, who walked for some time together.

The presence of the royal party on the terrace was the signal for most enthusiastic cheering from the crowd in the gardens—a circumstance, be it observed, wholly unprecedented on the Sabbath, but excusable on an occasion of such surpassing interest.

The King appeared overjoyed at his reception, and took off his hat repeatedly, while her Majesty was evidently much gratified by the exhibition of loyalty and affection made by her faithful subjects.

After passing to and fro several times, the illustrious party were compelled to seek shelter from a shower, by returning to the Castle. Many of the crowd retired. A momentary cessation of the rain, however, brought out the august party again, who, on this occasion, cheered as before by the remaining spectators, proceeded through the greenhouse to the slopes, and thence across the park to Adelaide Lodge, where, after remaining a short period, they entered the carriages which were in waiting, and drove back to the Castle.

The Queen and Prince Albert and the ladies and gentlemen of the suite and the household attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle.

The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

Viscount Melbourne took his departure soon after eleven o'clock for his seat, Brocket-hall, Herts. Lord and Lady Beauvale left the Castle soon afterwards, on a visit to the noble viscount.

A dinner took place, as usual, in St. George's Hall. The Queen had on her right his Majesty Louis Philippe, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar. On the left of her Majesty were his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier, the lady in waiting, the Countess of Gainsborough, his Excellency Count de St. Aulaire, and Lady Georgiana Bathurst.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert sat opposite to the Queen, having on his right her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, M. Guizot, Lady John Russell, and the Marquis of Exeter. On the Prince's left were Madame la Comtesse de St. Aulaire, Admiral de Mackau, and Lady Beauvale.

After dinner the Earl of Liverpool, Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, gave the health of "His Majesty the King of the French." Also the health of "The Queen."

Throughout the day, Windsor was thronged with visitors, several of whom proceeded on the Clewer road, to meet the King, on his return from chapel. The demand for accommodation at the inns was very pressing; and we suspect that many an unlucky wight returned to town impransus. The rush to the omnibuses, in the evening (more especially on account of the heavy rain), was very great. The view of the Castle, from the Eton road, was truly exciting; the principal windows in the northern front presenting a flood of light, protracted through the entire eastern front. We rarely remember seeing the stately pile to such advantage: it was, even from without, a scene of right regal hospitality, carrying the mind's-eye back to the chivalric glories of the feudal age in which the palace was founded, and assuring us that in the lapse of ages—the long vista of seven centuries—Windsor has lost not a ray of its splendour and magnificence.

DEPARTURE FROM WINDSOR, AND CHANGE OF ROUTE.

On Monday Louis Philippe, her Majesty and Prince Albert, left Windsor for Gosport.

Precisely at twelve o'clock, the Queen and his Majesty the King of the French descended the Grand Staircase, preceded by the Earl Delawarr, Lord Chamberlain of her Majesty's household, in the Windsor uniform, and wearing his gold key, or badge of office. The King was attired in a suit of black, and wore the riband, with the George appended, and also the Star of the most noble Order of the Garter.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, and the Duke de Montpensier, accompanied their Majesties.

The King's suite followed—M. Guizot, Count de St. Aulaire, Count de Jarnac, M. Fauquier, M. Pasquier, and M. Herbet, wearing their respective official costume, and the two first-named wearing the decoration of the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour.

Admiral de Mackau, General Baron Athalin, General de Rumigny, Colonel Dumas, Count de Chabannes, M. Thierry, Le Capitaine Page, and Le Capitaine Pellion, appeared in military and naval regimentals.

The Duchess of Kent accompanied the royal party to the door of the grand entrance, and there took leave of his Majesty and the Duke de Montpensier.

Sir R. Peel and the Earl of Aberdeen also paid their respects to the French Monarch, and took leave of his Majesty at the grand entrance.

His Majesty, before leaving the Castle, presented six magnificent gold snuff-boxes, with his portrait set in brilliants, to the principal officers of the household who had been appointed to attend him. He also presented a number of brilliant rings and brooches to the ladies and other attendants of her Majesty, and a sum of £1000 to be distributed among the domestics generally. The King also presented to M. Gautier, the vice French Cousul, who had waited upon him on Saturday, a sum of 10,000 francs, in aid of the French charitable institution already alluded to, of which his Majesty is the patron. He also left a sum of 4000 francs to be distributed to the poor of Windsor, and a number of other equally munificent donations.

A party of the Royal Horse Guards formed the escort of the royal party down the Long-walk and through the park to Blackness. The illustrious party afterwards proceeded by way of Bagshot to the Farnborough station of the South Western Railway.

At Farnborough, every preparation had been made to receive their Majesties. The fittings up at the station were most elegant. A private carriage-road leading to the chief entrance-door, at the back of the station, had been set apart for their Majesties' sole use; and from the entrance-door to the door which leads to the platform, a costly and beautiful crimson carpet with an elegant border of gold colour, was laid down. On either side of the passage-way were reception-rooms, the one on the left being for the use of the four royal personages, the Queen, the King, the Duke de Montpensier, and Prince Albert; while the opposite room was for the use of their suites. Our engraving at page 254 represents the exterior of the Reception-rooms, the Railway-platform, and the arrival of the Royal State Carriage; the former provided with an awning, and decorated with the British and French flags.

The room prepared for her Majesty was fitted up in a style of remarkable elegance and taste. The gold fillagree work traced on the ceiling was particularly beautiful, and the furniture of the room was also unostentatiously and appropriately rich and splendid.

At the station, the directors and officers of the railway were assembled to receive their Majesties.

Owing to some slight delays on the road, the royal carriages did not reach the station till a quarter to two o'clock, the special train having been ordered to be in readiness at one o'clock. Arrived at the door of the station her Majesty alighted, and was escorted by the King of the French into her reception-room, followed by the Prince and the Duke de Montpensier. The directors were at the entrance and received her Majesty.

During the interval that elapsed while the train was being finally prepared for starting, the royal party remained in the reception-room. At a few minutes to two o'clock they came out, and entered the state carriage amidst the loud cheers of the people. It was still raining heavily when the train started, at five minutes to two o'clock. Upon the engine there was the tri-colour flag, and on the tender the royal standard.

The royal carriage itself is a beautiful structure. Externally it is plain, but light and elegant, and the interior is fitted up with much taste. It is lined with a light drab silk damask, richly trimmed with crimson and white silk lace; the ceiling is formed of white watered silk, exquisitely embroidered with crimson velvet and silver in relief, forming the national emblem of the rose, shamrock, and thistle, with the royal crown at each corner. The carriage is entirely surrounded by light and tasteful draperies of crimson and white satin damask, and lined with crimson satin, richly trimmed with fringes, &c. The blinds are of a delicate peach colour, with silver tassels. The carpet is of Axminster manufacture, in colours to harmonize with the rest of the interior decorations. (Next week, we shall present to our readers an engraving of this costly specimen of coach-fitting.)

The train proceeded at a very rapid pace towards Gosport. Owing to the state of the weather there were not many persons assembled at the different points of the road. At several places on the line the tricolour flag was set up on the way-side. At Basingstoke, the tricolour waved from the station, where a considerable number of people were assembled, who cheered lustily as the train came up. There was also a rustic band, and the National Anthem was played right loyally. At Bishopstoke, where the rail branches off to Gosport, there was a considerable number of people, who cheered loudly as the train passed; and at Botley, a small intermediate station, there was much preparation. Besides the tricolour flag there was a band of music, and a great crowd of persons. As the train shot by the band played the National Anthem, and the people cheered. At Farnham, the last station before Gosport, there were also many people. There was also a party of foot soldiers, who presented arms as the royal carriages passed.

ARRIVAL AT GOSPORT AND DEPARTURE FOR LONDON.

At Gosport, the station presented a most animated appearance as the train came up. The decorations were nearly the same as those which were prepared for the reception of the King of the French. On the triumphal triple arch at the place of exit, however, there was a fresh inscription, "Long Live Louis Philippe, Victoria, Albert." The arch was flanked with an immense royal standard and tricolour; shown in the illustration at page 252. The station was filled with well-dressed persons, chiefly ladies; and there was a party of foot soldiers, who presented arms as the royal carriages came up, the band playing the National Anthem. The directors had come on in the train, and were ready to receive their Majesties as they alighted. The spectators cheered most enthusiastically. The train entered the station at thirty-five minutes past three o'clock, having left Farnborough at five minutes to two.

Their Majesties, with the Prince and the Duke de Montpensier, alighted immediately after their arrival at the station, and proceeded at once to the carriage, followed by their respective suites. They drove off towards the Victualling-yard (the place of the intended embarkation) amidst the cheers of the multitudes of people, who, notwithstanding the rain, had assembled on the way-side. The road was lined on either side with foot soldiers from the station to the yard.

As the royal cortège passed along the bands of the different regiments struck up "God save the Queen," and at a quarter to four o'clock the Admiralty flag was lowered from its staff in the centre of the yard, and the royal standard substituted, as the carriages entered the yard. The Victory and the other vessels in the harbour were at this time dressed out in their gayest colours, and the yards manned.

The rain, which had all along fallen heavily, soon increased to a perfect torrent; the wind blew a hurricane, and the rumbling of thunder in the distance succeeded faint flashes of lightning, which gave promise of a stormy night. To cross from Spithead to Treport, under any circumstances, would be attended with immense loss of time in the then state of the weather, and his Grace the Duke of Wellington having joined the consultation, it was instantly determined to despatch a special train to London, in order to secure the necessary accommodation for his Majesty's departure for France viâ Dover.

Colonel Bouverie was entrusted with this important duty, and his Grace the Duke of Wellington accompanied the gallant colonel to town.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, it was understood, endeavoured to prevail upon their illustrious guest to return with them to Windsor Castle and extend his sojourn in this country for a day or two; but his Majesty, feeling it necessary to return to Paris, was reluctantly compelled to carry out the idea of proceeding viâ Dover.

The Queen and the Prince Consort then determined to pass the night on board the Royal yacht, which fortunately remained at her moorings opposite the Victualling-yard; but as it was necessary that the express train conveying Colonel Bouverie should precede the King of the French by three hours, in order to allow that officer time to make the arrangements for the route, the august circle determined to spend the interval in the residence of Mr. Thomas Grant, the storekeeper, who occupies a house on the left of the entrance yard.

The rain still pouring down in torrents, the Royal party entered their carriages, and proceeded across the yard to Mr. Grant's residence, where they were received in the best manner which the absence of all preparation on the part of the worthy host would allow. Her Majesty and the Prince, with the King of the French and the Duc de Montpensier, occupied a small parlour looking into the dockyard, where they partook of a hasty repast, the attendants on the Royal party occupying an adjoining apartment; and here the august circle remained until half-past seven o'clock, when the Queen and her illustrious consort took leave of their Royal guests in the most affectionate manner, the King entering one of the carriages in attendance and proceeding direct to the railway station.

It should be here mentioned, that at a quarter to seven o'clock Lieutenant Prevost, R. N., flag lieutenant to Sir Charles Rowley, left Gosport by a special train for the Farnborough station of the South Western Railway, bearing despatches from her Majesty to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, acquainting her Royal parent with the unfortunate train of circumstances which had succeeded the departure from Windsor Castle. Lieutenant Prevost was directed to return to Gosport by the same special train.

All these arrangements made, the royal party took dinner, as already mentioned, in Mr. Grant's house, which, as may be supposed, was completely crowded with gentlemen and ladies, and with the officers of the King's suite. Notwithstanding the extreme inconvenience to which they were all put, it was satisfactory to hear every now and then a hearty laugh amongst the party, especially from the room where the illustrious travellers themselves were. The royal party remained nearly three hours at Mr. Grant's, until the hour at which the special train was ordered.

At a quarter-past seven the King of the French and the Duke de Montpensier took leave of the Queen and the Prince, and proceeded, accompanied by M. Guizot, Count de St. Aulaire, and all of his suite who had not gone on board the steamer, to the station. His Majesty arrived there at half-past seven o'clock, and was saluted with hearty cheers. His Majesty acknowledged the compliment, and entered the carriage, followed by all the chief members of the suite, so that the royal carriage was nearly filled. General Wemyss accompanied his Majesty.

After a short delay, the train started at a quarter to eight o'clock, and reached the Nine Elms station at thirty-five minutes past ten o'clock.

At Nine-elms, Sir John Easthope, Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Boothby, and some others of the directors were in waiting to receive the King.

Sir James Graham was also in waiting at the station, and as soon as the train stopped, the right honourable baronet entered the carriage where the King was, and, conducting him out, handed him to a carriage, which, with servants in the royal livery and outriders, was in waiting to receive him. Sir James Graham rode in the carriage with the King, as did also the Duke de Montpensier. The rest of his Majesty's suite followed in other carriages, and the party drove off immediately to the Dover Railway.

DEPARTURE OF HIS MAJESTY FROM THE NEW-CROSS STATION FOR DOVER.

The information that his Majesty intended to take his departure from this station did not reach the authorities until about eight o'clock in the evening. The utmost activity was, however, displayed on the instant, and one special train having been got ready with the greatest possible despatch, was sent on to Dover to prepare for his Majesty's reception there, and to give the necessary directions at all the intermediate stations. A second train was soon after sent on, conveying six of his Majesty's carriages. The preparations then set on foot for the third special train, destined for his Majesty himself and his suite, were not interrupted by the fire at New-Cross station. (We give elsewhere the particulars of this unfortunate occurrence.)

The fire was at its height when his Majesty drove up, escorted by a troop of Horse Guards. The preparations for his departure, however, had been proceeding uninterruptedly, a circumstance highly creditable to the energy and presence of mind of all the parties concerned, and they were just completed as his Majesty arrived—at eleven o'clock. His Majesty was received at the station by Mr. Gregory, superintendent of the Croydon line; Mr. Howell, superintendent of the Brighton line; and by Captain Clarkwood, superintendent of the South-Eastern and Dover line; by whom he was ushered into the waiting-room; and thence, in the course of less then five minutes, to the special train which was in readiness, and which immediately started for Dover, as though nothing unusual had taken place.

One of the gentlemen connected with the London and Dover Railway expressed his regret that the late hour at which the notice for the special train had arrived rendered it impossible for the directors to be in attendance to receive his VISIT OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH AND QUEEN VICTORIA TO ETON COLLEGE.

Majesty. The King, in reply, expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the arrangements, and expressed in strong terms his regret at the unfortunate fire then raging on the premises, and concluded by hoping that the company were well insured.

The illustration at page 253 represents the arrival of the King, when, to get to the platform, the royal carriage had to pass over several lengths of hose whilst the engines were at work. The scene at that moment was one of intense interest. The appearance of the troops who formed the royal escort, the reflection of the flames upon their bright helmets and accoutrements, the roaring of the engines working, the shouting of the firemen, and the huzzas of the crowd in honour of the French monarch, excited a feeling that can with difficulty be described. For some minutes the carriage remained stationary, and his Majesty viewed from the window the progress of the flames, which were within one hundred feet of him, the heat at that time being very great.

ARRIVAL AND EMBARKATION AT DOVER FOR FRANCE.

His Majesty the King of the French, the Duke de Montpensier, and suite, arrived at Dover on Tuesday, at half-past two in the morning, by special train from New Cross.

His Majesty and suite were received at the station by the Hon. Colonel Bouverie, one of her Majesty's Equerries, and the Count de Chabannes.

The proprietors of the Ship Hotel had hastily prepared every available apartment, and a kind of state bed-room, very handsomely fitted up, with a carved heart of oak bedstead, and furniture en suite (a royal crown cut out of the solid wood ornamenting the foot-board of the bed), was made ready for his Majesty.

The King rose at nine o'clock, and transacted business with M. Guizot, in his private apartments. His Majesty did not appear at all to be fatigued after his recent journeyings and adventures, but looked quite hale and hearty. Although the King did not retire to rest until past five o'clock in the morning, at day-light he was roused from his slumbers by the roaring of a royal salute from the Castle.

At half-past ten the King partook of his frugal breakfast, and shortly afterwards the Mayor and civic functionaries of the borough of Dover, preceded by their macebearer, arrived at the hotel, in their official robes, to present a congratulatory address to the King on his visit. They were introduced to his Majesty by General de Rumigny, and were received by the King with the greatest kindness and affability. The King wore a plain black dress, with a white neckcloth, and by his side stood the young Duc de Montpensier in a plain morning dress.

The congratulatory address, which was appropriate to the occasion, was read by the Town Clerk, and immediately his Majesty, in a clear and impressive manner, gave the following reply to it:—

"Mr. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the ancient town of Dover—I leave this country with my heart impressed with feelings of the warmest nature. But particularly as regards the general greeting and gratifications which have been extended to me by all classes of her Majesty's subjects, and all the many tokens of friendship and affection which I have received at the hands of her Majesty. They give me a favourable opportunity of manifesting towards England those sentiments of amity, peace, friendship, and union, which have ever been uppermost in my heart; and I am most happy to find those sentiments congenial to the wishes of the British nation; and I have no doubt but that they will be appreciated in my country. Two such nations, mutually calculated to be of so much advantage to each other, will, I trust, equally appreciate those earnest desires which I have so deeply at heart—sentiments which I have ever so deeply felt."

After the delivery of this speech his Majesty turned to a gentleman representing one of the London papers, who was taking a note of it, and said to him, "If you are taking down what I say, I am very happy to tell you that I am speaking my sentiments, and I am very glad you are taking them down," at the same time placing his hand upon his heart. His Majesty then turned to the Mayor, and said, "I know something of Dover—I am not a stranger to it; I know its localities; and I am exceedingly obliged to the Mayor and Corporation for having paid me the compliment they have done. I am sorry I cannot have time to go round the town."

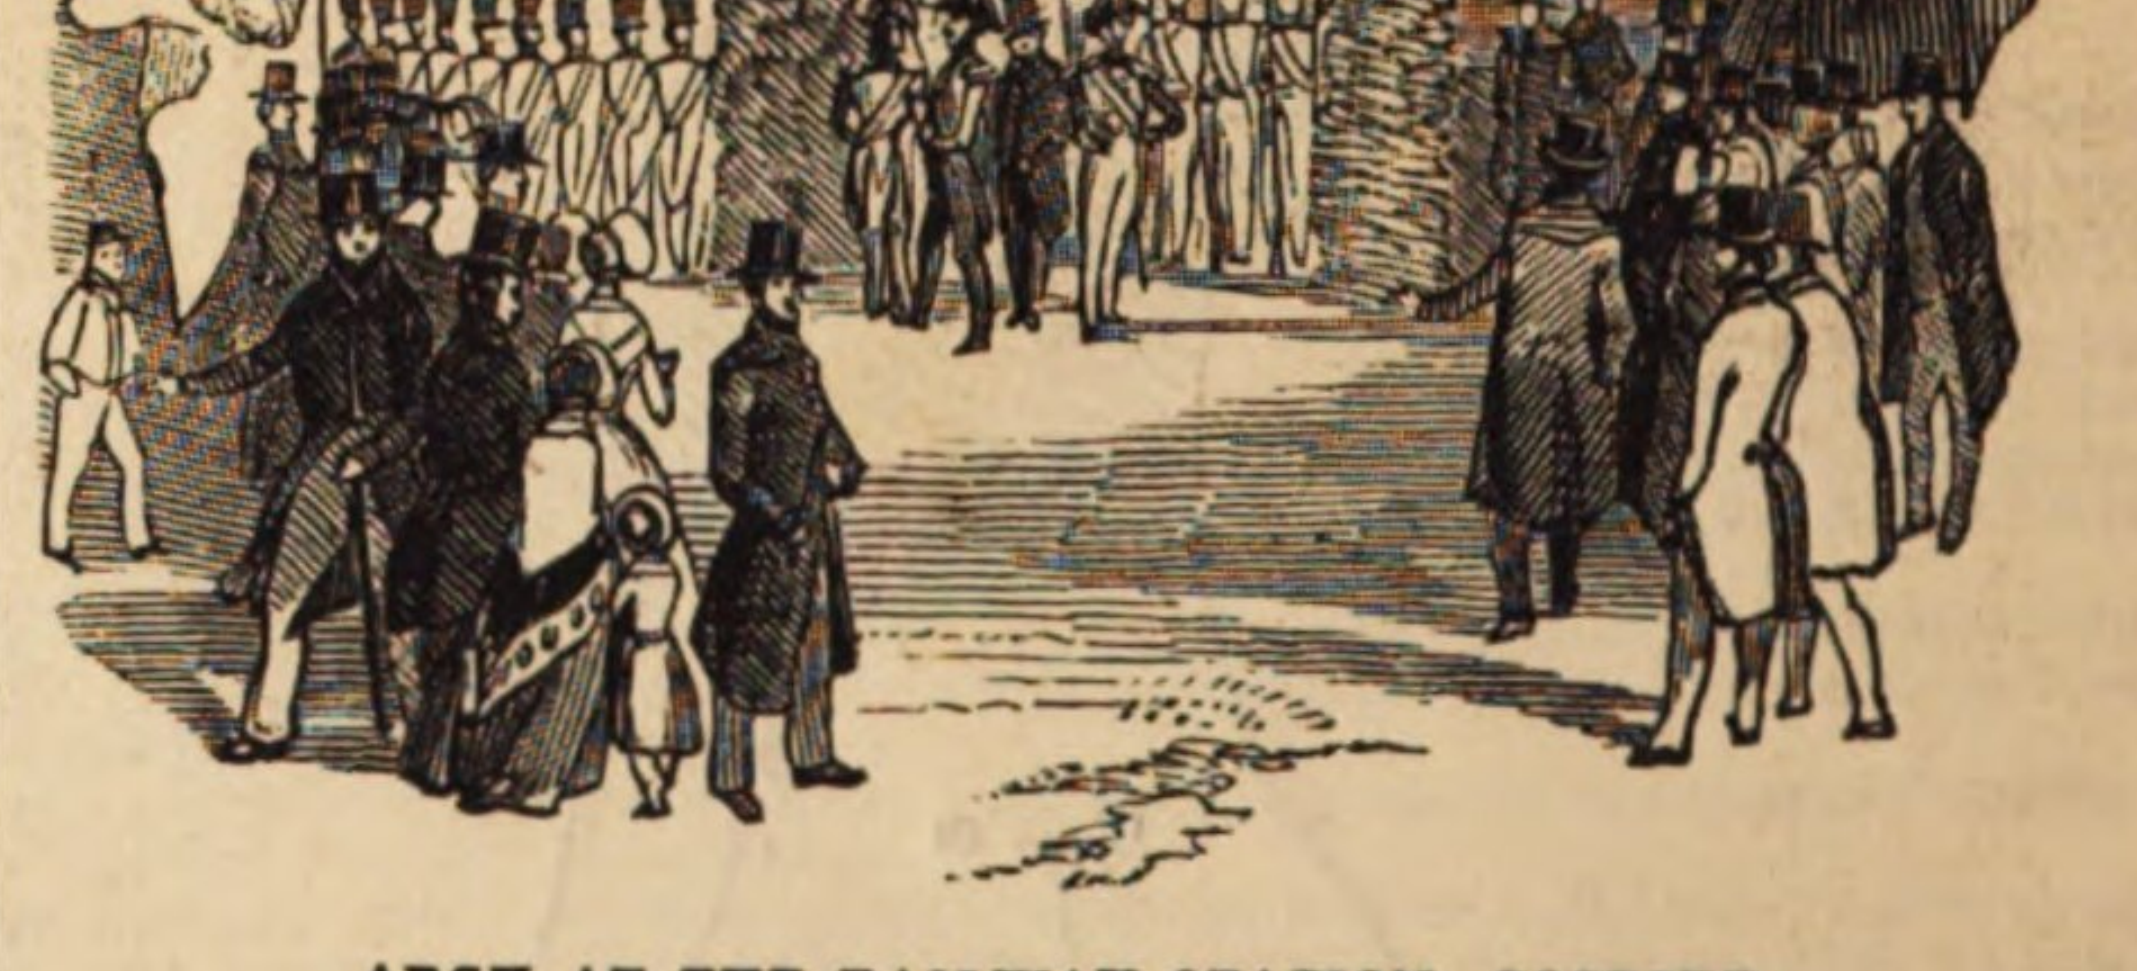
The deputation then retired, and within a few minutes the King, attended by Colonel Rice Jones, Captain Mercer, and surrounded by the members of his suite, descended the staircase, and passed through a guard of honour, consisting of the depôt of the 52nd Regiment, and proceeded on foot to the steamer, amidst the cheers of the assembled multitude. As soon as the King and his suite were on board the Nord, the vessel got under weigh, and as she steamed out of the harbour, his Majesty appeared on the poop in a white great coat, and took off his hat in acknowledging the farewell greetings of the vast crowds who were assembled at the pier-head to take a parting glance at the Monarch who was leaving our shores for his own dominions.

As soon as the Nord cleared the harbour, she was followed by the Princess Alice, the Swallow, and the Ariel, and another royal salute was again fired from the castle.

The King remained on deck until his vessel, with her convoy, were about mid-channel, when the tremendous gale, which was blowing to the southward and westward, compelled his Majesty to go below.

THE RETURN TO THE CHATEAU D'EU.

The King of the French landed at Calais on Tuesday afternoon, from Le Nord steamer, in excellent health and spirits, having made a rapid passage from Dover, during which his Majesty felt no material inconvenience, although the swell was considerable.



ARCH AT THE RAILWAY STATION, GOSPORT.

The King had intended to land at Treport on Tuesday morning, and the Queen, early in the day, repaired to the shore to await her Royal husband's arrival.

A tent was erected for her Majesty's accommodation, troops were under arms, and the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood were on the alert to give the King an appropriate welcome home. Seeing no squadron in the offing, the Queen became somewhat alarmed. A steam-boat, La Poste, was dispatched to the roads on the look-out. After a considerable interval, the captain of the war-steamer Elan arrived from Portsmouth, having left that place late on Monday night. He was the bearer of a letter from the King to the Queen, by which her Majesty was informed that the weather had prevented his Majesty's embarkation; that he had resolved to return to France by way of Dover and Calais or Boulogne, and calculated upon reaching the Chateau d'Eu in the course of Tuesday afternoon.

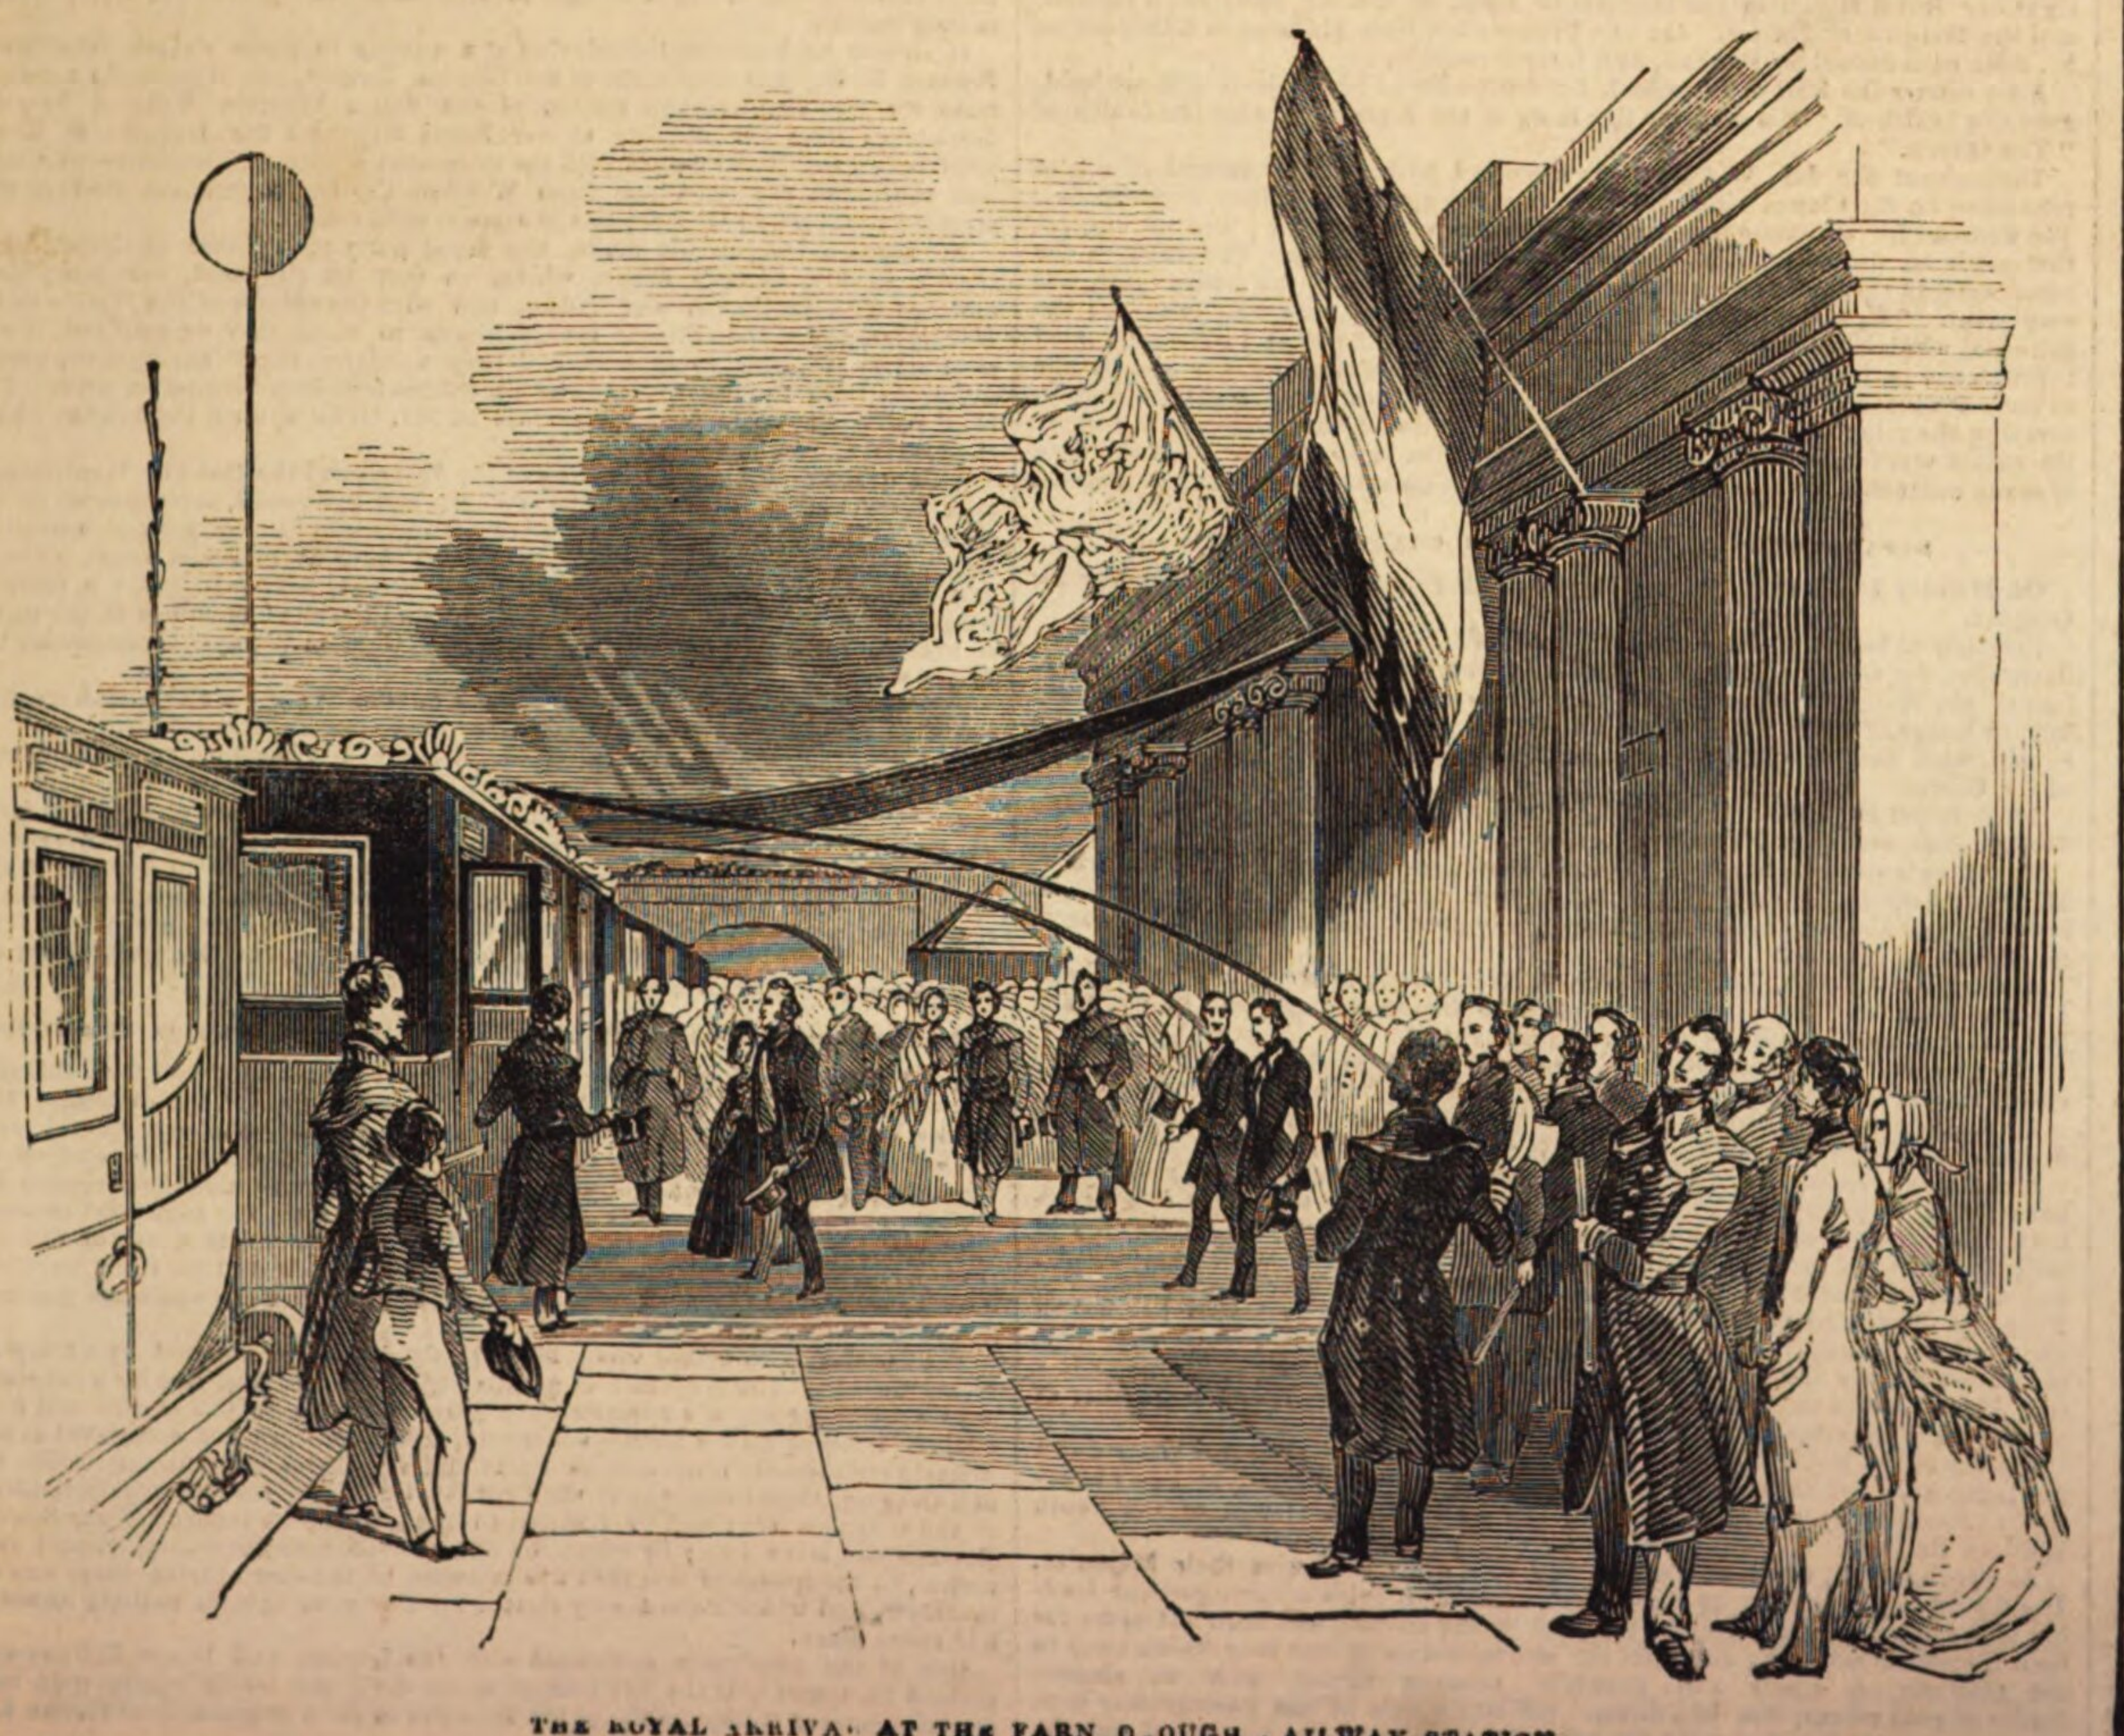
The Queen communicated the information thus received to the anxious bystanders.

Her Majesty afterwards resolved to wait at Bernai the arrival of her august husband. Apartments were immediately provided for her Majesty and suite, and a second table and dinner were prepared for the persons who had accompanied her. Seven o'clock passed without the King making his appearance, but an estafette reached at that hour with a dispatch, addressed to the Chateau d'Eu, and the Courier Wernet, recognising the King's writing, immediately carried it to the Queen. It contained only these words:—

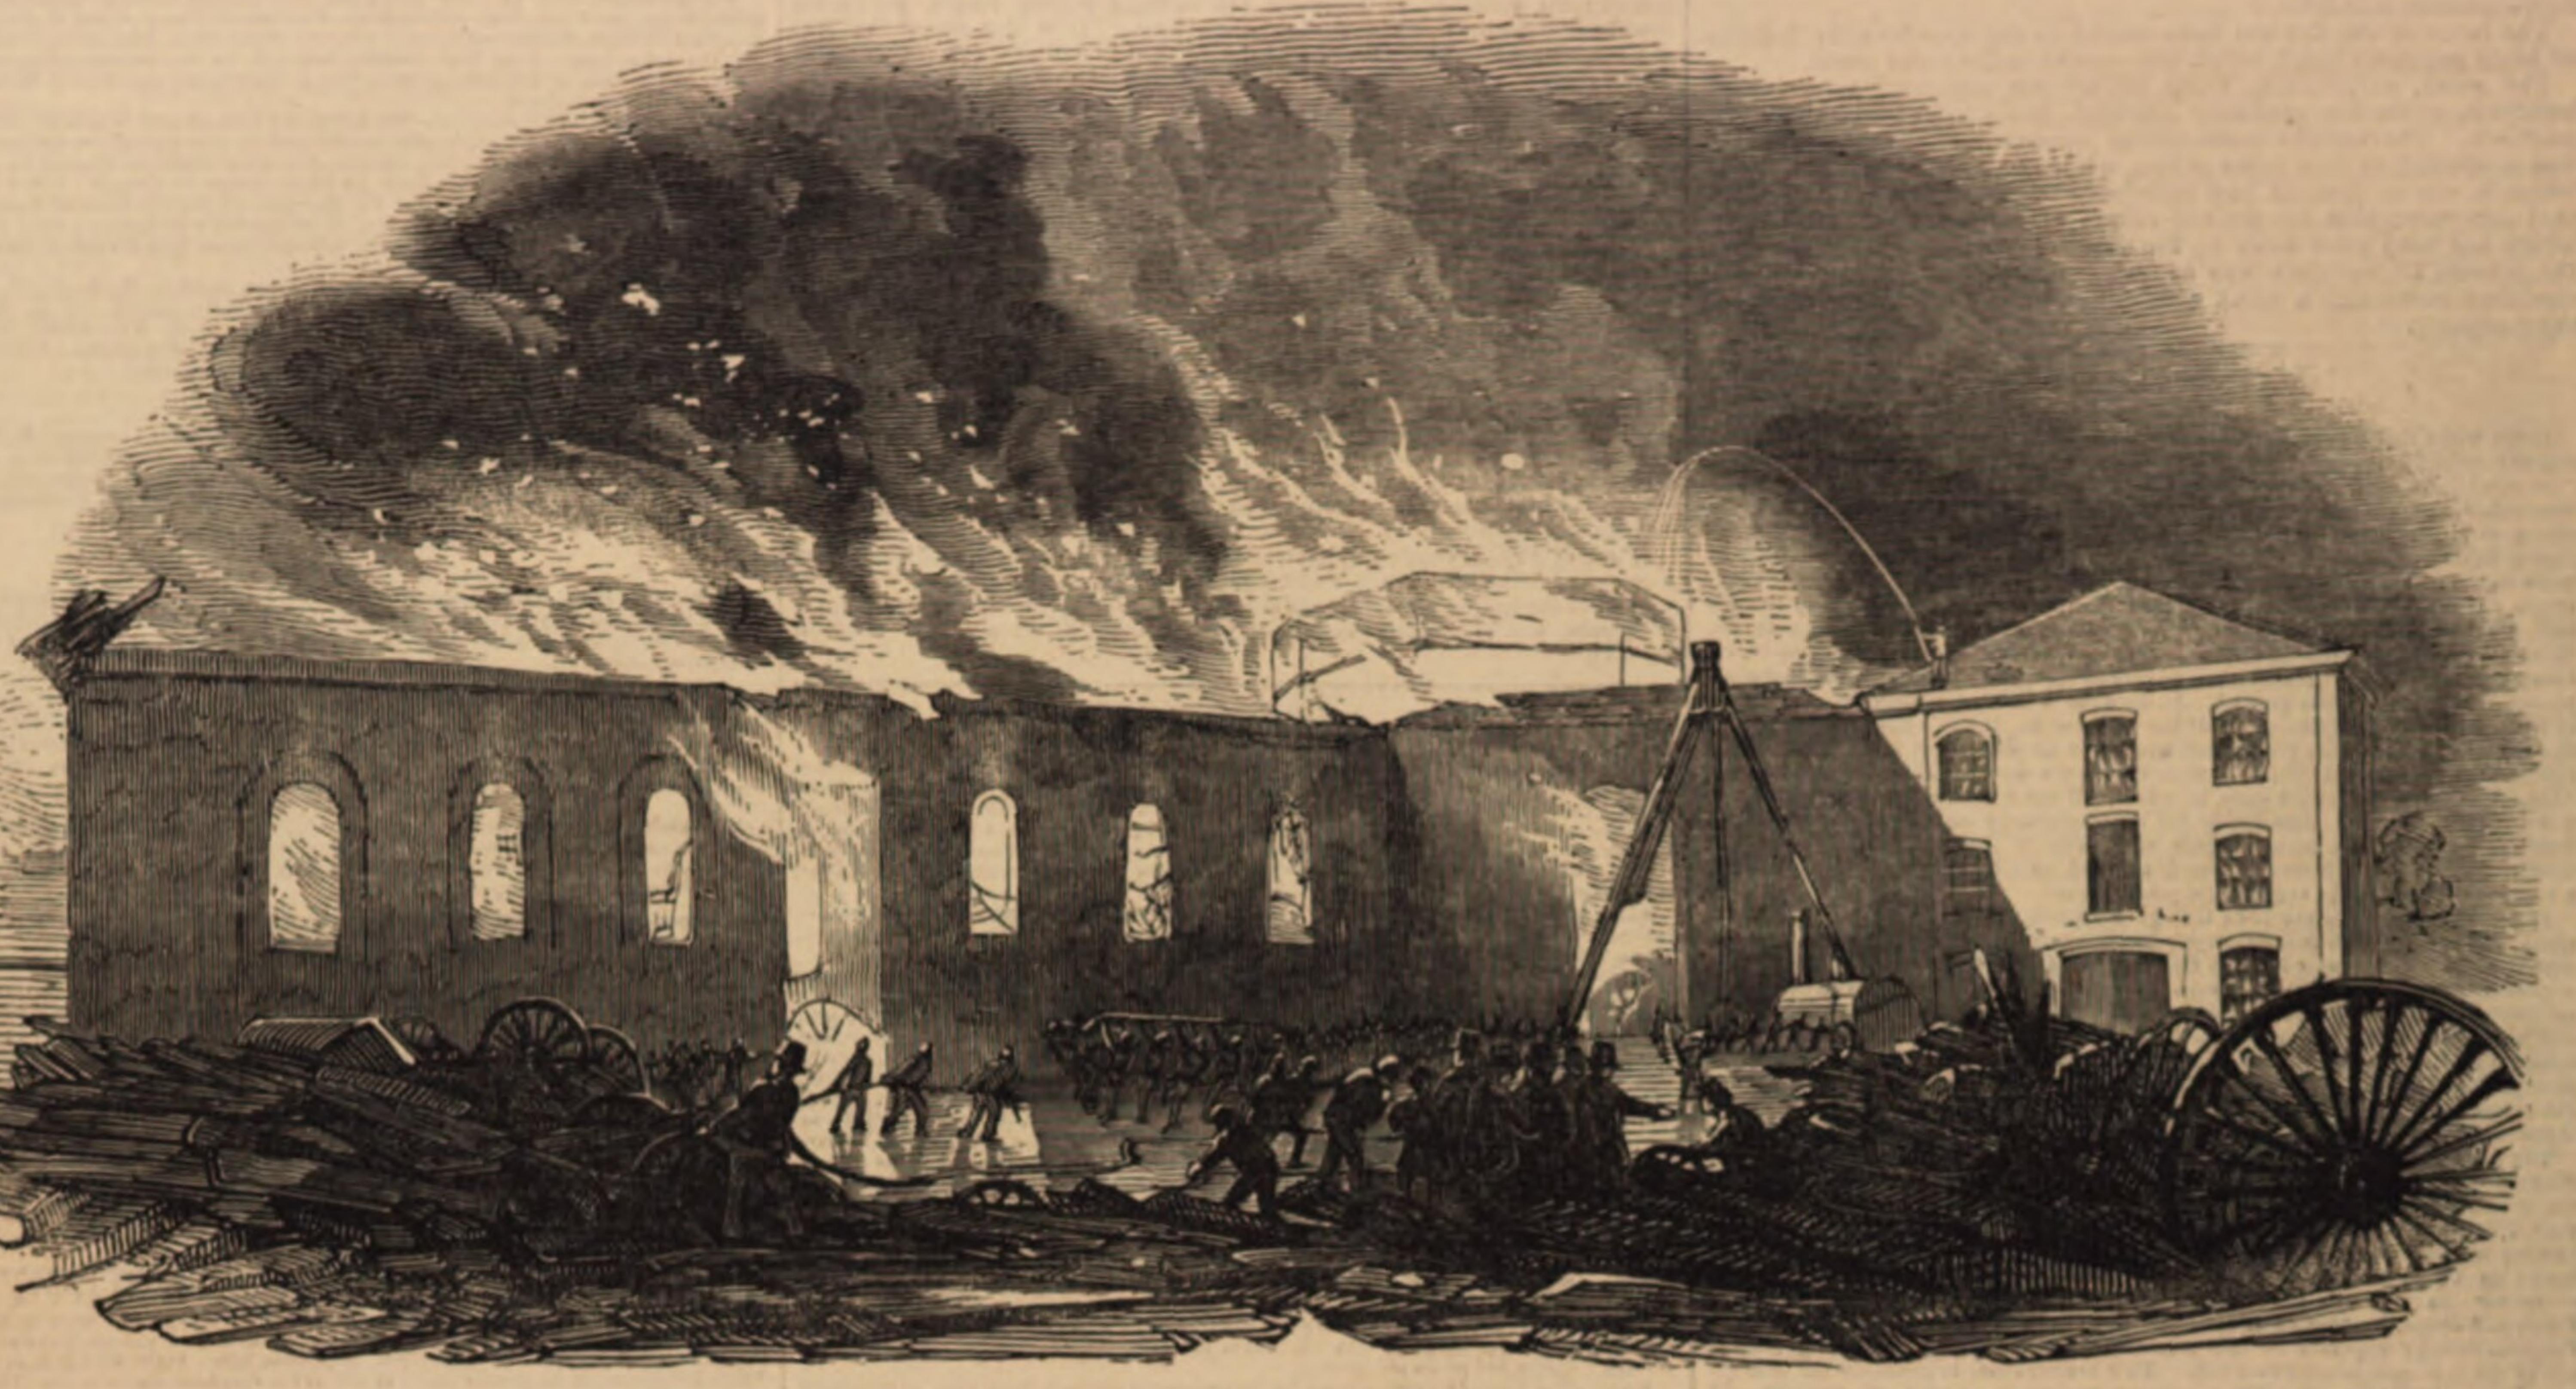
"My dear Friend—I landed to-day at half-past two o'clock in excellent health and spirits."

Nearly three more hours elapsed, however, ere the Royal carriages drove up with his Majesty, the Duc de Montpensier, M. Guizot, and the numerous suite. His Majesty was in high spirits, very little fatigued, and much pleased with the "agreeable surprise" which conjugal affection had prepared for him.

In a few hours the party were safe at the Chateau d'Eu, and there, it was understood, his Majesty will remain some ten days.



THE ROYAL ARRIVAL AT THE FARNBOROUGH RAILWAY STATION.



GREAT FIRE AT THE NEW-CROSS RAILWAY STATION, ON MONDAY LAST.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT THE NEW-CROSS RAILWAY STATION.

One of the most fearful fires that have occurred in the neighbourhood of the metropolis for many years took place at a late hour on Monday evening, at the works attached to the station of the South Eastern, Brighton, and Croydon Railways at New-cross, resulting in the destruction of property to an enormous amount.

The New-cross station is to the above Railways what Wolverton is to the London and Birmingham line. It communicates with the metropolis by the Kent-road, on which it is situated; and with the Thames by part of the old Croydon Canal. The area occupied by the station is about equal to that of Russell-square. It consists of an assemblage of vast workshops, large lathe and planing machine rooms, furnace rooms, carpenters' and painters' rooms, carriage and fire engine houses; and a grand octagonal engine house, nearly as large as the Colosseum, in the Regent's-park; in the centre is a stone shaft, surrounded by a circle of columns, supporting a roof in the manner of the Chapter-house, at Salisbury; between these columns are eight large doorways, with trams for the engines and and tenders. The height of this vast octagonal building is, or rather was, 70 feet; and with the range of carriage and workshops attached, it was part of the original station, as erected under the superintendence of Mr. Gibbs, then engineer to the Company: it was handsomely built of brick, with stone finishings.

The fire commenced in a loft of this large octagonal building, fitted up as a painter's shop, upwards of eighty feet in breadth, having in its centre a lantern roof, to the extreme height of the structure, seventy feet. The works were all shut up, and the interior of the station was in a state of animation in consequence of the approaching arrival of the King of the French, he having signified his intention of proceeding to Dover by this route. There were present Captain Charlewood, superintendent of the Dover Railway; Mr. Howell, deputy-superintendent of the same line; Mr. Cubitt, the engineer; with several others. While the work-people were engaged erecting the tent on the platform, for his Majesty's reception, they were startled by cries of "Fire." The engine repository was then found to be burning in the upper part, among the paint stores, and the flames made such rapid progress, that in less than a quarter of an hour the whole building was in a blaze. The fire was greatly assisted by a quantity of oil and turpentine, as well as paint, that had been laid aside in a part of the engine-room. The police force hastened to the spot, and were most active in maintaining order, and saving the property, and books from the offices adjoining the burning pile. It was near an hour before any engines arrived, and by this time the conflagration had spread to a long building, also used to keep carriages and steam-engines in. By eleven o'clock the roofs of both houses (which were boards covered with lead, and on iron rafters) fell in, and then the engines, amounting to about fourteen, were able to make an effectual resistance. The conflagration was fearfully rapid, the flames rushing up through the lantern, whence they burnt with increased fury, until the roof and floors fell in. Attempts were then made to save the various shops beneath, but in vain. Engines from the dockyard at Deptford, and from the London fire brigade, reached the scene before ten o'clock, the fire having broken out at nine.

The firemen at first appeared to be completely bewildered; the flames were rushing out of the roofs and nearly every window in the octagon and fitting departments, and were roaring with an awful sound. At the same moment, the molten lead was running from the cornices round the blazing property, thereby exposing every one to great danger. Nevertheless every man exerted himself with the greatest intrepidity, and by that means a long range of premises used for the erection of carriages was saved. There *was a spa*cious tank between the two buildings, but the fire was so fierce, that it completely reached over the tank, and almost set the roof in a blaze. It was indeed truly distressing to see the valuable lathes and splendid machinery in the fitting-house falling a sacrifice. There was no alternative, the whole was quickly destroyed or rendered useless. For two hours and upwards the fire continued to rage with awful violence, although its progress had, to a certain extent, been stopped. The immense mass of inflammable materials that the two buildings contained, with the heavy floors and roofs, caused the fire to be of frightful extent, the flames rising to such a great altitude as to be seen for many miles distant, attracting some thousands of persons to the spot.

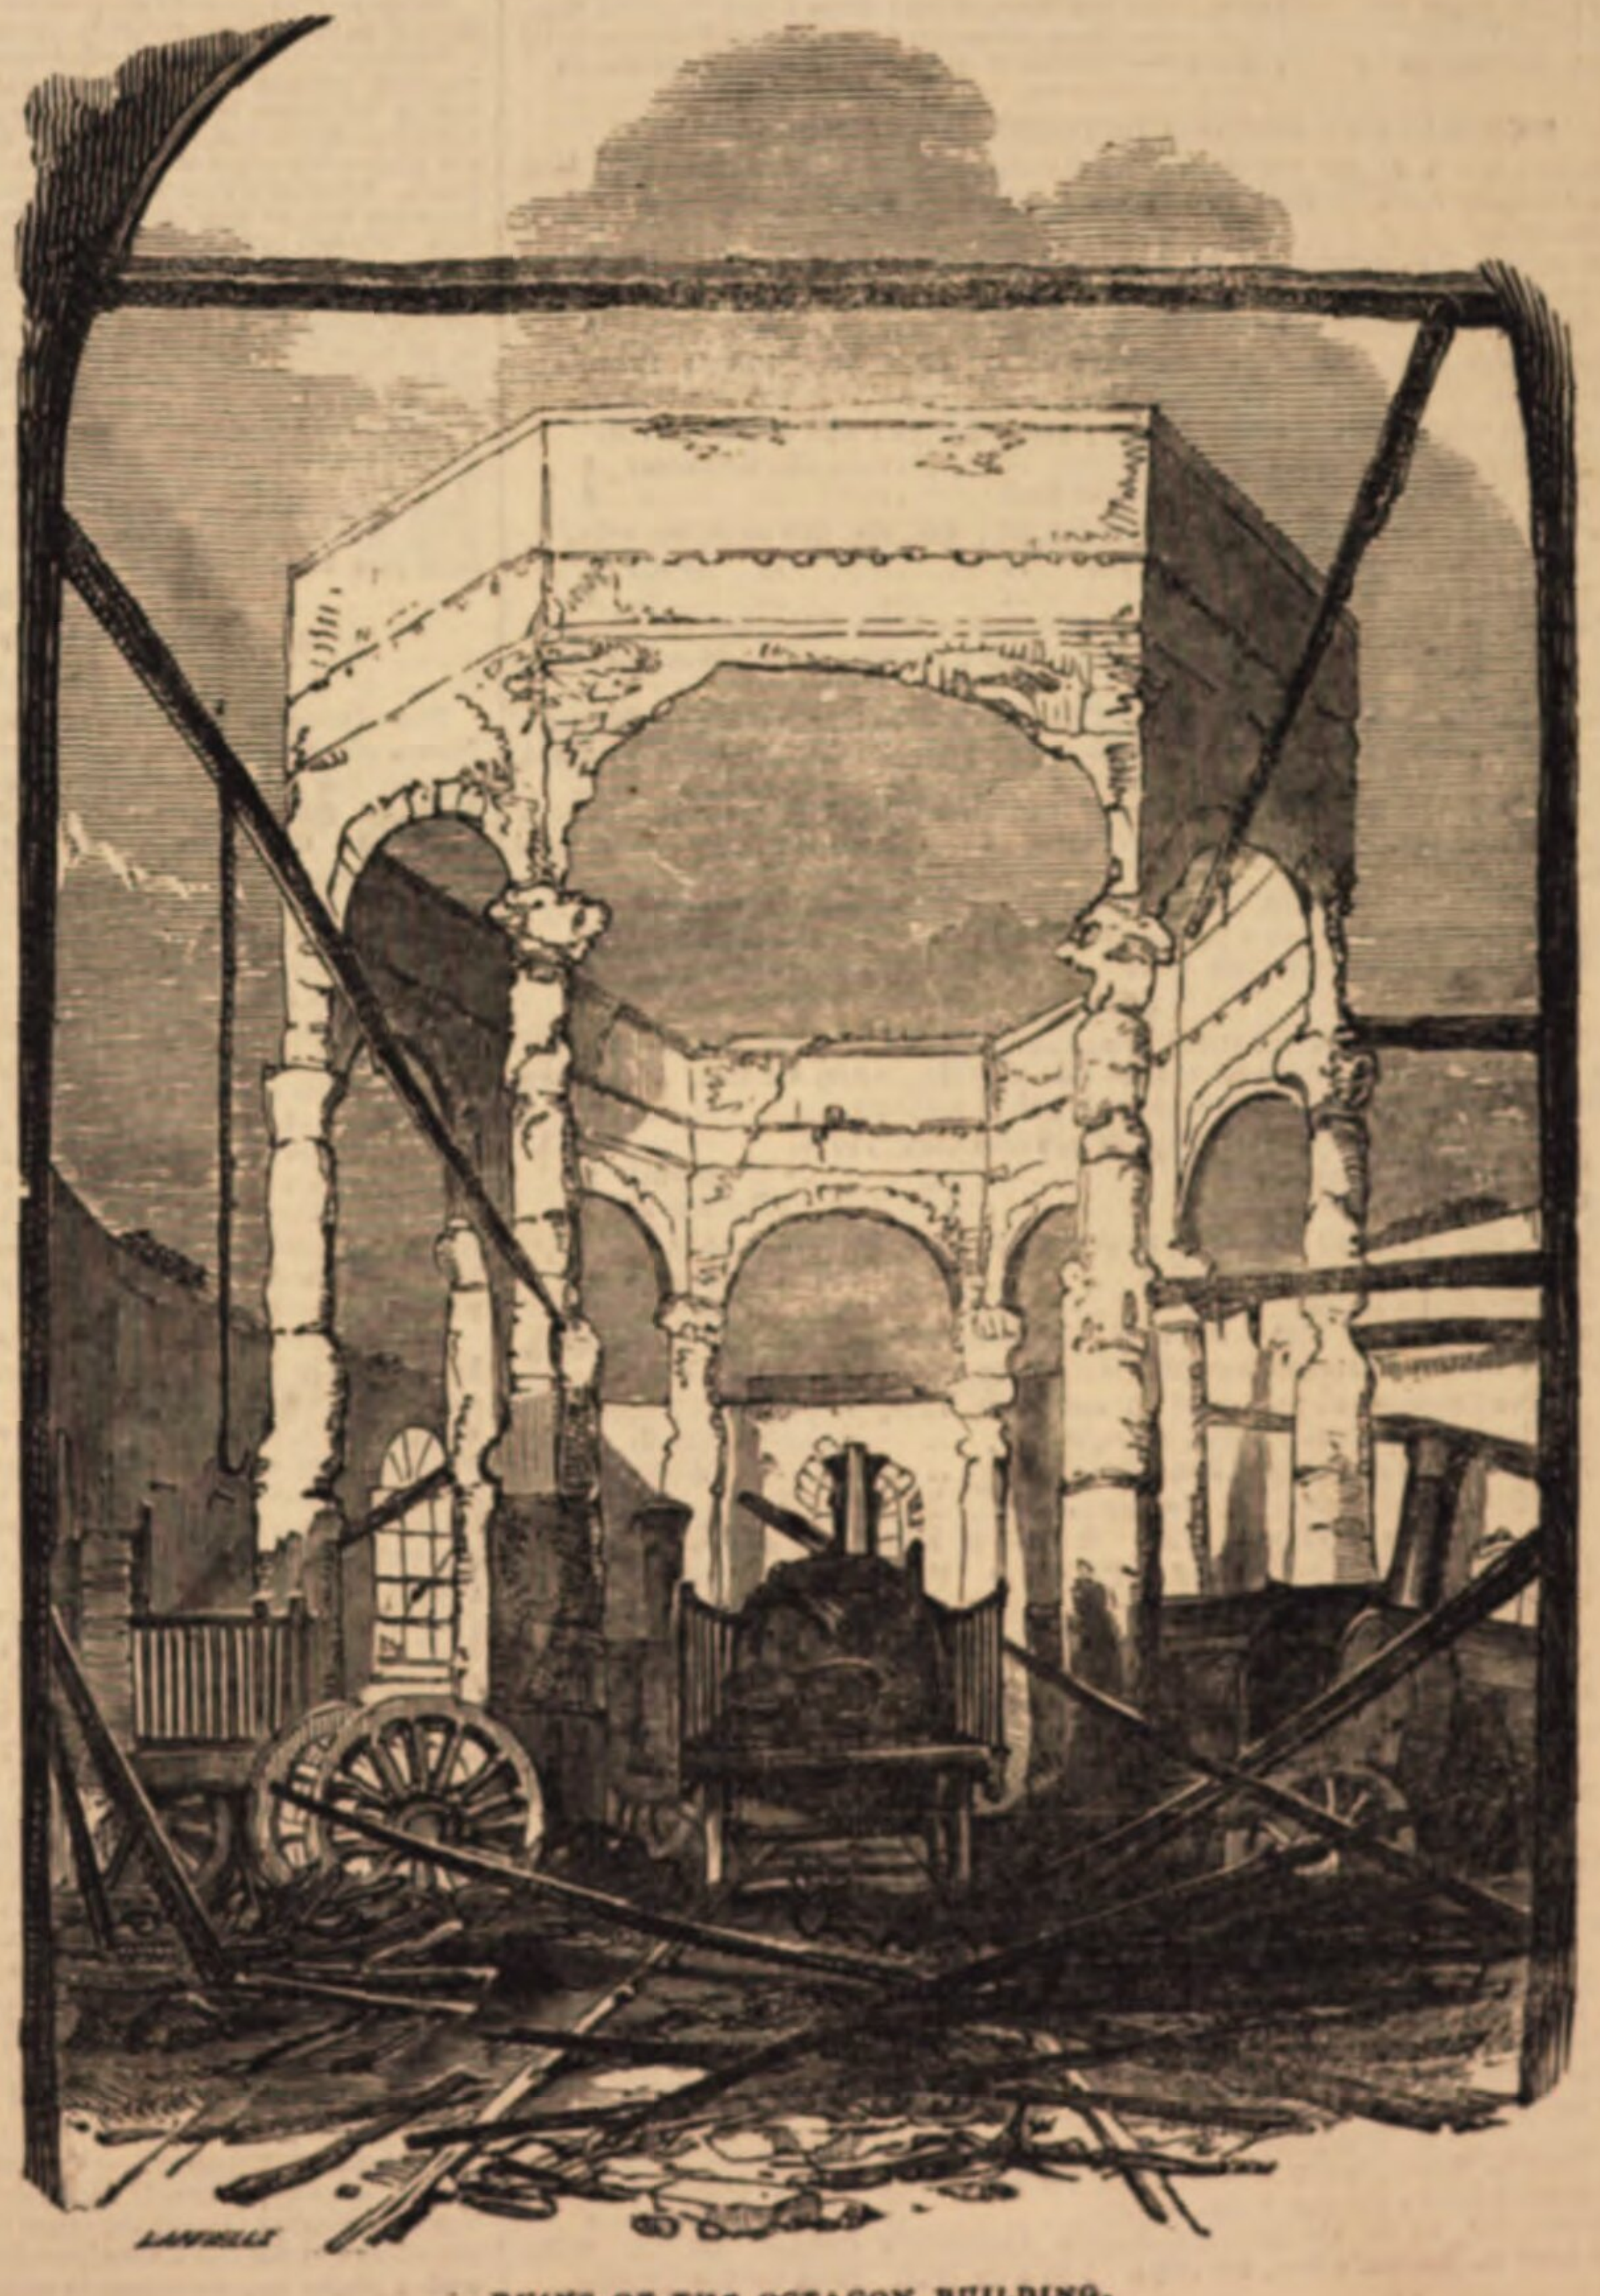
His Majesty the King of the French arrived at the station at about eleven o'clock, and on alighting, expressed his great regret at the calamity.

One very fortunate circumstance was, that the wells from which the engines worked were powerfully charged with water, the engines being supplied by a steam-engine on the works, and to this in a great measure may be attributed the saving of the remainder of the company's property.

At one o'clock, a great number of the engines were still in full operation, there remaining a great body of fire in the ruins. The hose of some were directing streams of water from the warehouses and the adjacent buildings into the burning mass beneath, whilst the firemen were stationed on all sides to prevent the flames from extending. Up to this period, and an hour subsequently, several attachés of the King of the French, who were to follow in another train, after the royal carriage, were to be seen mingled with the police and firemen. Their state dresses wonderfully contrasted with those of the fire corps, whose apparel was covered with mud, and their faces as black as sweepers. In the course of another half-hour or so the whole of the suite left the New-cross station in a special train, on their way to Dover.

The exact amount of property destroyed, as well as the extent of insurances, are as follows:—The octagonal building, as well as the fitting house, which was 120 feet long by 30 wide, were insured in the Westminster Fire Offices for £4600, and the contents in the Phœnix Office to the amount of £9000, making a total of £13,600. There were in the octagon six engines and three tenders, the former valued at £1300 each, and the latter at £200 each. It will cost an enormous sum to reinstate the machinery alone. The company estimate the damage under £20,000.

ARRIVAL OF THE KING OF THE FRENCH DURING THE FIRE.



RUINS OF THE OCTAGON BUILDING.

The cause of the fire has been traced to the spontaneous ignition of some vegetable black which was stowed in the paint room.

The ruins, particularly those left of the octagonal or principal buildings, as the fire gradually subsided, had a most remarkable appearance. The upright walls of the upper story, or lantern, which was supported by four stone pillars, while the body of fire was raging beneath, was so charred and splintered by the intensity of the heat, that they resembled the fretted pillars of some ancient monastery, which had been worn away by the lapse of years, while the wreck of the several locomotives was to be seen along the extensive line of shedding, presenting a most serious loss of this valuable property of the company.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

If the world don't grow better as it grows older, it certainly becomes wiser as regards worldly things. Were the South Sea scheme (subsequently called "bubble") to be introduced on the New 'Change, it is doubtful whether it would find any patrons: were Count Fathom to come to life again, he would starve within the bills of mortality, beyond a doubt. It was almost a pity Sir James Graham wasted his energies on the thimble-rig, for of a surety it could no more continue to exist in Young England, than a dolphin in the House of Commons. Not that we should have opposed the profession of that science or mystery, but we should have ruined the "pea-men" before another lustrum. With all respect for the ancients, verily, as regarded the machinations of the sharp practitioner, our fathers were, to borrow the phrase of one of Mr. Dickens's young gentlemen, "jolly green." In especial were they verdant in the matters of their games and exercises. Half the parish of St. James's had lived on sauter la coupe, till a bungling young lord sauted in so slovenly a style, that the old squires could not avoid seeing it with their eyes shut; while till the season of 1844, the Derby and Leger were, in effect, all aged stakes. In the south, the years '32 and '39 were remarkable for the appearance on the turf of the oldest three-year-olds within memory, just as it was in the north in '29 and '32. Good-natured people, however, merely grinned and bore it; and so it went on, a rogue's saturnalia, till the present year of grace.

In the preceding autumn Lord George Bentinck, having a suspicion that mischief was afoot, beset himself manfully to overthrow it, but the time was not ripe enough. Then came the last Epsom Olympics, whereat the victor was subsequently shown to be an impostor. While yet the Running Rein affair was sub judice, rumours were rife touching another robbery at the Derby; the pigeons had been shot at with two barrels! Allusion has already been made in these columns to Ratan's defect, and the suspicions attaching to the conduct of his jockey, Sam Rogers. These doubts, it was announced, would be cleared up in the course of the present autumn; and to the manner and matter of that investigation we purpose herein to address us.

The present week witnessed the celebration of the Second October Meeting at Newmarket. The weather was unpropitious, the sport good and plentiful, and the attendance excellent. Save as regarded their temporary results, the public took little interest in any of its events, except the Cesarewitch Handicap—a great betting-round business—and the Clearwell, a two-year-old stake pretty well found in Derby and Oaks nominations. The former of these was won in a canter, in one of the largest fields that Newmarket has seen, by Foigh-a-Ballagh, beating 26 others. By the way, a capital portrait of that same Foigh-a-Ballagh appeared in this paper, October 5, drawn by Herring, and is one of the best portraits he ever did. This performance is probably the best on record of a three year old. His proprietor won by it upwards of £13,000, and has cleared by this horse, within six weeks, nearly £30,000. As yet the real speed of this Irish phenomenon has never been tried—what a race would be a match between him and Alice Hawthorn, at weight for age—the Beacon Course. The Clearwell brought out eight—and Refraction won—of course. She is the best two-year-old filly of her year, beyond question. And apropos of question is the matter which we said we should especially canvass in this article. The inquiry was going on during the whole of the meeting, before Lord Stradbroke, chairman; the Marquis of Exeter, the Duke of Beaufort, Lord George Bentinck, Captain Rous, Colonel Anson, and Colonel Peel. There were also in attendance two short-hand writers from the House of Commons, and certain counsellors and attornies for the parties accused. As the investigation was conducted with closed doors, we can only allude to the on dits in circulation. According to these, a very disreputable case will be made out against several individuals connected influentially with betting circles—even if worse come not of it. Most probably the present course is adopted with reference to the gambling inquiry now in progress before Parliament. Whatever the policy may be, however, the result must benefit the turf. During the last twenty years a large body of men have been living on racing robberies. Some of these will be shown off, beyond a doubt, when the report of the Ratan affair sees the light—the whole of the evidence will be published in a pamphlet—at the instance of the Jockey Club. There is—or rather there was—up to our going to press, no betting of amount on the events beyond the meeting, which had not then been brought to a close.

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE STAKES.

6 to 5 on Foigh-a-Ballagh	20 to 1 agst Evenus	20 to 1 agst Golden Rule
18 to 1 agst The Cure	20 to 1 —— The Altered One	30 to 1 —— Rowena

DERBY.

5 to 1 agst J. Day's lot	25 to 1 agst Newsmonger	40 to 1 agst Pantasa
5 to 1 —— Scott's lot	25 to 1 —— Minikin colt	45 to 1 —— Lillah colt
20 to 1 —— Forth's lot	30 to 1 —— Fits-Allen (t)	50 to 1 —— Young Eclipse
20 to 1 —— Sir G. Heathcote's lot	30 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger (t)	50 to 1 —— Laird o' Cockpen (t)
10 to 1 —— Alarm (t)	33 to 1 —— Old England (t)	50 to 1 —— Clear-the-Way
17 to 1 —— Kedger	35 to 1 —— Black Prince (t)	66 to 1 —— Fahowiagh (t)
18 to 1 —— Cobweb	35 to 1 —— Brother to E. O.	100 to 1 —— Lycurgus (t)

NEWMARKET SECOND OCTOBER MEETING.—Monday.

Match; 200 h ft, 8st 7lb each. B. C.—Colonel Peel's Zenobia (Nat) beat Lord Glasgow's sis. to Give-him-a-Name, 3 to 1 on Zenobia, who won easy by two lengths.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each, for three-yr-olds, &c. T.Y.C.
Lord Stradbroke's Evenus, 4 yrs, 8st 12lb .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Payne's Audrey, 3 yrs, 6st 4lb 2

The Coffee Room Stakes of 100 sovs each. Lord Stradbroke's Boarding-school Miss, allowed 3lb. Walked over.

(First Class) £50, for two-yr-olds; colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 5lb.
Mr. Edwards's Hedgehog .. .. .. (E. Edwards) 1
Lord W. Powlett's c by Jerry, out of Zeal 2

£50 for three-yr-olds, 7st 7lb; four, 8st 7lb; five, six, and aged, 8st 12lb.
Duke of Richmond's Pastoral, 3 yrs .. .. .. (Nat) 1
Lord Exeter's Celia, 5 yrs 2

Match, 300 h ft. T.Y.C.—Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis, 5st (Kitchener), beat Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 9st 12lb. 6 to 5 on Miss Elis. Won easy by a length.

Match, £150, h ft. T.Y.C—Duke of Bedford's Minotaur, 8st 8lb (Robinson), beat Mr. Phillimore's Physalis, 7st 7lb. 7 to 2 on Minotaur. Won by three lengths.

Match, £200, h ft. T.Y.C.—Duke of Bedford's Glen Fishie, 8st 7lb (Robinson), beat Col. Anson's Marquise, 7st 11lb. 6 to 4 on Glen Fishie. Won by a neck.

(Second Class) £50, for two-yr-olds, 8st 7lb, and fillies, 8st 5lb.
Duke of Richmond's br c the Laird of Cockpen (E. Edwards) 1
Lord Lonsdale's Loadstone 2

TUESDAY.

A Match, 50, h ft, T.Y.C.—Lord Huntingfield's Mario, 5 yrs, 9st 5lb (Boyce), beat Mr. Barne's c by Slane, out of the Warbler, 2 yrs, 6st 4lb. 5 to 2 on Mario. Won by a neck. The Slane colt pulled up lame.

The Royal Stakes of 200 sovs each, 120 ft.
Lord Exeter's Algernon .. .. (Mann) 1
Duke of Portland's Welbeck .. .. .. (Robinson) 2

The Clearwell Stakes of 30 sovs each, 20 ft, for two-yr-olds.
Duke of Richmond's Refraction .. .. .. (E. Edwards) 1
Colonel Peel's Hersey .. .. (Chapple) 2

Match, 200, h ft, T.Y.C.—Duke of Richmond's Espoir, 8st 7lb, (Robinson), beat Lord Exeter's Merope, 8st 7lb, (Mann), by a head. 4 to 1 on Espoir.

The Cesarewitch Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, with 300 added.
Mr. Irwin's Foigh-a-Ballagh, 3 yrs, 8st .. .. (Bell) 1
Mr. Dawson's Lightning, 3 yrs, 6st 5lb .. .. (Riley) 2

WEDNESDAY.

The Town Plate of £50. Winner to be sold for £200.
Mr. Booth's Priscilla Tomboy, 5 yrs .. .. (Sly) 1
Duke of Bedford's Robinia, 3 yrs .. .. (Whitehouse) 2

The Steppingley Stakes of 50 sovs each. T.Y.C.
Mr. Gully's Old England, 8st 3lb .. .. (J. Howlett) 1
Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 7lb .. .. (Robinson) 2

The Bretby Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for two-yr-old fillies, 8st 7lb.
Lord G. Bentinck's Longitude .. .. .. (Marson) 1
Duke of Richmond's f by Glaucus, out of Estell .. (Abdale) 2

THURSDAY.

Match, 100, T.Y.C.—Lord G. Bentinck's b c Devil to Pay, 8st 10lb (Nat), beat Lord Glasgow's f by Retainer, out of Purity, 8st 7lb (Robinson). 2 to 1 on the colt, who won by three lengths.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.
Lord Chesterfield's f by Hornsea, dam by Sultan.. (F. Butler) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Duke of Cornwall .. .. ..(Marson) 2

Match.—Lord G. Bentinck's All-round-my-Hat, 8st 7lb (Nat), beat Lord Glasgow's c by Velocipede, out of Amulet, 8st 3lb (Marson), 200, T.Y.C. Won in a canter by a length.

Handicap Plate of £100, for 3 yrs old, &c.
Lord G. Bentinck's Naworth, aged, 7st 2lb .. ..(Abdale) 1
Lord Exeter's Crosby, 3 yrs, 5st 2lb .. .. .. (Sharp) 2

Match, 150, 50 ft, Ab. M.—Mr. Joseph Anderson's Chance, 8st 7lb (Bell), beat Lord E. Russell's Nat, 8st (Sly). 7 to 4 on Nat. Won by five lengths.

The New York papers state that Mr. Macready took his farewell of the New York stage, at the Park, in the character of King Lear. At the close of the tragedy he was called for by the audience, and received with applause, and, with considerable agitation, he addressed the audience at great length, urging the beneficial influences of the Shaksperean drama. It is also stated that Mr. Macready has received for his professional services in America, over his expenses, 35,000 dollars, a part of which has been invested in Ohio 6 per Cents.

The Safety of Railway Travelling.—At a recent inquest Mr. Wakley took occasion to observe, that he had held the office of coroner for five years and a half, and had the two great termini, and upwards of thirty miles of the most extensive railways in the kingdom in his district, and yet, notwithstanding the millions of persons that must have travelled up and down those lines during the period he had mentioned, he had never held a single inquest on a railway passenger.

The triangular piece of ground near Kennington-cross, which, during many years, has been an open space, conducive to the health of the surrounding inhabitants, has been let on lease by the officers of the Duchy of Lancaster for building. Thirty or forty houses are to be erected, and Kennington-green will no longer be a pleasant spot for the eye to rest on, but a mass of brickwork.

Letters from Alexandria of the 26th ult. state that Mehemet Ali had not yet returned any answer to the proposal of Mr. Bourne to grant a privilege for the transit of passengers and merchandise through Egypt. It was said that the Pacha had regarded as a mark of disrespect the sending a simple employé of the Post-office to negociate the matter, instead of an officer holding a commission from her Majesty's Government.

Twenty Polish students have recently been arrested at Warsaw, on a charge of being members of a secret society. The younger of them, who were only from thirteen to fourteen years old, were, it is added, sent into the interior of Russia, but the others were sent to the army of Circassia, as common soldiers.

THE MARKETS.

Corn-Exchange, Friday.—Since Monday, the arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on a very limited scale, hence the show of samples of that grain here, to-day, was small. The demand ruled rather active, at full prices. In foreign wheat only a moderate business was doing, yet previous rates were supported. The show of barley being small, and the masters mostly in full work, the sale for the finest qualities was brisk, at full quotations. In other kinds, comparatively little was doing. The best malt was quite as dear, while all other articles of grain supported their previous value.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 2970; barley, 1160; oats, 150 quarters. Irish: wheat, —barley, —; oats, 5360 quarters. Foreign: wheat, —; barley, 430; oats, — quarters. Flour, 2920 sacks. Malt, 100 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 45s to 50s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 39s to 44s; ditto white, 41s to 48s; rye, 35s to 37s; grinding barley, 28s to 29s; distilling ditto, 30s to 32s; malting ditto, 30s to 33s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 61s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 61s to 62s; Chevalier, 62s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 21s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 34s to 36s; old ditto, 34s to 37s; grey peas, 29s to 31s; maple, 31s to 32s; white, 31s to 36s; boilers, 36s to 38s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 37s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 53s; Dantzig, red, 53s to 54s; white, 54s to 56s. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto feed, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 24s to —s per barrel. Town made, —s to —s.

The Seed Market.—Linseed and rapeseed are commanding a steady sale, at full prices. In all other kinds of seeds next to nothing is doing.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 35s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 26s to 38s; hempseed, 28s to 35s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 12s to 18s; white ditto, 10s to 12s; tares, 4s to 4s 6d per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £10 10s to £11 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton; canary, 56s to 60s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 46s 3d; barley, 33s 6d; oats, 20s 6d; rye, 37s 10d; beans, 36s 11d; peas, 34s 0d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 46s 4d; barley, 34s 10d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 36s 4d; beans, 37s 3d; peas, 33s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 4s; oats, 6s; rye, 6s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 9s 6d.

Tea.—Public sales, of upwards of 20,000 packages commenced on Thursday. So far as they have proceeded, fine qualities have supported previous rates; but other kinds have had a downward tendency.

Sugar.—The best kinds of West India sugar—the supply of which offering is small—have sold at full currencies; but other descriptions, as well as Bengal, Mauritius, and refined, have declined from 6d to 1s per cwt.

Coffee.—Exceedingly little business has been doing in coffee this week. West India may be considered about stationary, but other kinds are lower.

Rice.—Some rather large sales of Bengal have been reported; while the value of other kinds is quite as high as last week.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5; fine upland ditto, £5 to £5 8s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 10s; Oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 11s to £1 13s per load.

Coals.—Adair's, 17s; Holywell Main, 19s 3d; Tanfield Moor, 18s 9d; Hilda, 21s 9d; Killingworth, 22s; Newmarch, 20s 6d; Lambton, 24s; and Stewart's, 24s 3d per ton.

Oils.—Linseed oil has met a steady sale at full prices. The same may be said of Southern; but other kinds have met a slow inquiry.

Provisions.—There has been less demand for both Irish and foreign butter, since our last, and prices may be considered somewhat easier. Hams and bacon are quite as dear; but other kinds of provisions are rather heavy.

Tallow.—By accounts from St. Petersburgh, we learn that the shipments of tallow have been less by 10,000 casks than at the same time in 1843, yet the demand for P.Y.C. is heavy. Town tallow, however, is working up, owing to the make being short.

Hops.—Although the supplies of new hops on offer are extensive, the demand for the finest parcels is active, at somewhat improved currencies. In other kinds, as well as in the best yearlings, a fair business is doing, at full prices. The duty is still called £130,000. Sussex pockets, £6 10s to £7 10s; Wealds, £6 18s to £8 0s; Mid Kent, £8 to £10 10s; East Kent, £7 7s to £8 5s; Choice ditto, £10 0s to £12 0s; Farnhams, £10 to £10 10s.

Wool.—Since the conclusion of the public sales very little business has been doing privately, yet prices rule about stationary. The imports continue large.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes offering at the waterside are good, yet the sale for them is steady at from £2 10s to £5 per ton.

Smithfield.—Our market, to-day, was, on the whole, fairly supplied with beasts as to numbers, but their general quality was very inferior. Primest Scots commanded a steady sale, at full prices, but otherwise the beef trade was dull. We had on show 72 oxen and cows from Rotterdam, and 120 Scots from Aberdeen. The numbers of sheep being small, the mutton trade was active, and the quotations had, in some instances, an upward tendency. In calves a good business was doing, at an improvement of 2d per 8lbs. The pork trade was firm, at fully Monday's prices. Milch cows sold slowly, at from £16 to £18 10s each. Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality do. 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 4s 2d; prime small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; sucking calves, 18s to 33s; quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each; Beasts, 641; cows, 180; sheep, 4250; calves, 248; pigs, 350.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had a fair average supply of meat on sale here to-day, while the demand was steady at full prices. Per 8lb., by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; ditto small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d.

Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The advance in the value of money, alluded to in the Illustrated London News of last week, continues well sustained. The effect has been already to depress the value of Consols, which, although the market opened steadily on Monday, did not quote the full value of Saturday's closing prices, marking only 100¼ to ⅜. Some rumours on Tuesday, relative to the return of the King of the French, although perfectly unimportant in themselves, had the effect of causing sales at a decline of nearly three-eighths per cent. This is a symptom that cannot be understood; particularly when it is known that the principal sales were made on private accounts, and did not therefore partake of a speculative character. The fact is, that many of the capitalists are getting out of stock, in order to employ their money in those different channels of trade which, from the low rate of interest and amount of unemployed capital, have been lately unavailable. Stock for this class of capitalists is only resorted to as a last resource, and, consequently, at the first symptom of an increased value for money, is immediately sold. Wednesday's market experienced a slight reaction in consequence of some good purchases; and Stock being rather scarce on Thursday, the improvement was maintained. The settlement of the account passed off favourably, money being at a moderate price. Consols, at the close of the week, quoted 108½ to ⅝ for money, and 100⅝ to ¾ for account; Exchequer Bills, 73 to 76; India Bonds, 93 to 94; Bank Stock, 205 to 206. India Stock has receded to 287½.

The business in the Foreign-house has been extremely limited, and quotations have scarcely varied. The half-monthly settlement passed off quietly; money, however, was a little dearer. In consequence of the trifling variations during the fortnight, the account was a very small one. Spanish, on Wednesday, advanced to 23⅞ to 24 for the Actives; Three per Cents., 35½ to ¾. This was the result of some large speculative operations, and the price was maintained on Thursday by a large purchase through an influential broker. The only assigned reason for these purchases is the probability that the Queen's accession may tranquilise parties, and thus gradually restore the finances of Spain. The prices at closing, were—Spanish Actives, 23⅞; Three per Cents., 35½; Dutch Two-and-a Half per Cents., 62⅝; Five per Cents., 98¼; Mexican, 34⅝; Portuguese Converted, 50¾; Brazilian, 82½.

The settlement in the Railway Market progressed without difficulty, and prices remain at previous quotations. York and North Midland have advanced, but speculation has been principally confined to the French lines. Boulogne and Amiens have quoted 2¾ to 3 premium; and Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux have been the same. All the completed lines have also been in demand. The newly projected English lines have not been much dealt in this Account, the former one having been a losing game to some of the most active of the speculators. The closing quotations, without reference to premium or discount, are:—Bristol and Gloucester, 42; Caledonian, 4½; Churnet Valley, 4⅝; Eastern Counties, 13⅞ to 14; Lancaster and Carlisle, 13⅞; Birmingham Stock, 213; Brighton, 47½; Dover, 40½ ¾; Kent Valley, 8½; Yarmouth and Norwich, 26½; York and North Midland, 110; Central of France, 4½ to 4; Boulogne and Amiens, 5¼; Orleans, Tours, and Bordeaux, 3¼ to 4; Paris and Lyons, 3¼; Paris and Orleans, 39⅝; Paris and Rouen, 39¾.

Saturday Morning.—Yesterday was pay day in the English House; all passed quietly, Consols closing at 100¼. Spanish was a shade better in the Foreign Market; in consequence of the funding of the floating debt of Spain, it closed at 35¾ for the Three-per-Cents., Actives 24½. The Railway Market closed with a slight improvement in some of the leading lines.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, Oct. 15.

WHITEHALL, Oct. 14.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignities of Viscount and Earl of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Hon. Edward Lord Ellenborough, and the heirs made of his body lawfully begotten, by the names, styles, and titles of Viscount Southam, of Southam, in the county of Gloucester, and Earl of Ellenborough, in the county of Cumberland.

DOWNING-STREET, Oct 14.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Henry Draper, Esq., to be her Majesty's Attorney General for that part of the province of Canada formerly called Upper Canada; Wm. Morris, Esq., to be Receiver General for Canada; D. B. Papineau, Esq., to be Commissioner for Crown Lands for Canada; James Smith, Esq., to be her Majesty's Attorney General for that part of the Province of Canada formerly called Lower Canada; Dominic Daly, Esq., to be Secretary for Canada; John Downie, Esq., to be First Puisne Judge for the Colony of British Guiana; and Francesco Dalmas, Esq., to be Cashier to the Government of Malta.

BANKRUPTS.—W. MINTER, Colchester, Essex, builder. T. B. HALL, Coggeshall, Essex, grocer. M. and B. LEE, Duke-street, Piccadilly, tailors. F. A. BERENGER, Homer-street, Crawford-street, Marylebone, clothier. H. D. WILLIAMS, Southampton, plumber. G. BALL, Bath, carpenter. W. J. J. COALL, Exeter, grocer. T. TABBERNER, Birmingham, corn-factor. J. BIBBY, Liverpool, coach proprietor.

Friday, Oct. 18.

BANKRUPTS.—B. PERKINS and S. WOOLLEY, Stamford, drapers. T. SMITH, sen., Minto-street, Bermondsey, wool stapler. W. CHEQUER, Blackfriars-road, saddler. C. ROGERS, Bishopsgate-street Within, saddler. R. FOOTNER, Lymington, Hampshire, upholsterer. W. HILL, Woolwich, builder. W. RICHARDSON, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, glass manufacturer.

BIRTHS.

At Portland-place, the Countess of March of a daughter.——At Park-street, Grosvenor-square, the lady of Major-General Frederick, C.B., of a son.——At Lavender-hill, the lady of Joseph Gurney, Esq., of a daughter.——At Rock House, Cheshire, the lady of the Rev. W. Hinson, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Kensington, William Beloe Rix, Esq., of Matching, Essex, to Laura Anne, third daughter of the late W. Bond, Esq., of Ashford, Kent.——At St. George's, Camberwell, Henry William Waddell, Esq., to Elizabeth Douglas, youngest daughter of John Holmes Gibson, Esq.——At the Collegiate Church, Manchester, William Jacobs, Esq., to Mary, eldest daughter of the late John Heaton, Esq., of Blackrod, Lancashire, surgeon.

DEATHS.

At Madeira, Lieutenant James Gordon Caulfeild, eldest son of Major-General Caulfeild.——At Knowle Lodge, Hampstead, John Alexander Thwaites, Esq.——At Haggerstone, Miss Fanny Holcroft, daughter of the late Thomas Holcroft. She was the authoress of several esteemed works of fiction.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after Eight o'clock on Thursday Evening.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE, under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Open every evening with its unequalled rotation of Equestrian and Dramatic entertainments.—MONDAY, October 21, and DURING THE WEEK, at Seven o'Clock, the splendid spectacle from the poem of the illustrious Sir Walter Scott, entitled LOCHINVAR; or, the Bridal of Netherby and Steed of the Brave. After which, sixth appearance of the celebrated KANTROWITZ FAMILY, from Warsaw, who will have the honour of singing the national airs of Poland and Russia, engaged by Mr. Batty at a great expense, in addition to the present novelties.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot.—Box-office open daily, from Eleven till Five.

HER MAJESTY'S GUEST, LOUIS PHILIPPE, King of the French, in the UNIFORM of a NATIONAL GUARD, worn by himself. The NATIONAL GROUP, in honour of the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Duke of Wellington, consisting of 18 Figures. R. COBDEN, Esq., from Life. TOM THUMB, as Napoleon.—"This Exhibition, in its present state, is one of the very best sights in the Metropolis, and abounds with such a variety of objects, that it is a matter of surprise how so many things could have been brought together."—The Times.—Admittance, One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence. Open from Eleven till Five, and from Seven till Ten. Concert at Eight. Madame TUSSAUD and SONS, Exhibition Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

CHINESE COLLECTION, Hyde Park Corner.—Open Daily from Ten till Dusk, and from Seven to Ten.—Admission, One Shilling.—This SALOON contains numerous objects of the greatest interest, illustrative of CHINA and the CHINESE; and is the only MUSEUM where the visitor can obtain, at one view, a correct idea of the manners, customs, and appearance of the Inhabitants of that vast Empire, as conveyed by portraits, the size of life, attired in the respective costumes of the rank represented—the higher orders displaying a lavish luxury, and those of the middle and lower classes the strictest economy. Several figures have lately been added, illustrative of their modes of punishment; and the Saloon (which is 240 feet in length, and brilliantly lit up every Evening) is also enriched with numerous highly interesting specimens in the different scientific departments. His Royal Highness Prince Albert's Military Band attends on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings.

Now ready, the Fourth Edition, enlarged.

HOW TO DANCE THE POLKA; and all the Quadrilles, German Waltzes, Highland Reels, &c. After the method of M. COULON. Forwarded to all parts of the Country post free, on receiving a remittance of 8d., or eight postage labels. London: Hugh Cunningham, Publisher, 193, Strand.

POLKA LESSON BOOK, or Ball-room Guide.—Illustrated, Price 1s., a complete Cours de Polka, with beautiful representations and correct instructions how to execute the various figures. This work contains the figures of all the Quadrilles, Gallopades, Mazourkas, Polonaises, Polkas, and all those dances adopted at Court.—Order Mitchell's Edition of any bookseller, or of the publisher, C. Mitchell, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street; who sends the work (post-free) on receipt of 1s., or 12 Stamps

THE INNISKILLING POLKA by M'CARROLL, as played by the Bands of the Coldstream Guards and 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, is now ready, for Pianoforte, price 2s. It is also now in the press, for Harp and Pianoforte, arranged by the Misses M'Carroll.—To be had of all Music Sellers in London; and at M'Carroll's Music Libraries, 171, North-street, Brighton, and 9, Lower Union Parade, Leamington.

ORATORIOS for VOICE (Vocal Scores), with Piano or Organ Accompaniments.—A new and splendid edition of The Messiah, from Mozart's score, arranged by John Bishop, only 15s.; ditto of The Creation, arranged by John Bishop, only 15s.; The Seasons, arranged by Clementi, only 21s.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, with Latin and English words, arranged by Joseph Warren, only 15s.; Beethoven's Mount of Olives, with English words by Joseph Warren, only 12s.; and Tallis's Services, by John Bishop, an elegant pocket edition, only 6s.—N.B. The most eminent professors of music have pronounced the above editions to be far superior to all others extant. All orders must state Cocks's Edition.—London: published only by Messrs. Cocks and Co., 20, Princes-street, Hanover-square, Musicsellers to her Majesty.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.—SOCIETY OF BLUES.—Brother Blues are requested to attend the ANNUAL FESTIVAL, in commemoration of the Birthday of the Royal Founder, King Edward the Sixth, which will be celebrated at the LONDON TAVERN, Bishopsgate-street, on WEDNESDAY next, the 23rd Instant.

President: John Smith, Esq.

STEWARDS:

Joseph Beioley, Esq., 1, Warren-street West, Camden town
P. L. Crofton, Esq., Bank-chambers
John Grellier, Esq., 21, Lombard-street
Jeremiah Lodge, Esq., Lloyd's
George Murrell, Esq., Leadenhall-market
T. W. Parkes, Esq., 1, Verulam-buildings, Gray's-inn
T. Purdue, Esq., 15, Lower Islington-terrace
F. A. Sadler, Esq., Lloyd's
C. B. Ward, Esq., Fleet-street
F. P. Webb, Esq., 23, Finch-lane
H. J. White, Esq., 15, Lombard-street.

Tickets, One Guinea each, to be had of the Stewards, or of the Secretary, at the Committee-room, London Tavern. Dinner on the table at Five o'clock.

JOHN A. L. BARNARD, Honorary Secretary.

25, Holloway-place, Holloway, Oct., 1844.

MONEY.—GRAND DISTRIBUTION OF £70,170 Sterling. Authorised by his Imperial Majesty and the Government of Austria.—The Next DRAWING of the IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN LOAN will take place at VIENNA, on the 2nd December, and be paid in British Money. There are 700 Prizes of £23,000, £5000, &c.; the lowest, £50. A few Tickets, £3 each; Shares, 12s., with Prospectus; six, Tickets for £15, may be obtained of Messrs. A. J. Straus and Co., Bankers and Receivers-General, Office, 26, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London. Remittance can be made by Post-office order. Government Lists of the Drawing will be sent to each Purchaser. Office hours from Twelve till Three.

EMPLOYMENT.—Persons having a little time to spare, are apprised that Agents continue to be appointed in London and Country Towns by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY, for the sale of their celebrated TEAS (Offices, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate street). They are packed in showy leaden canisters, from an ounce to a pound, with the prices and weight marked on each packet, and but little trouble is occasioned by the sale; the license is only 11s. per annum, and many, during the last nineteen years, have realised considerable incomes by the Agency, without 1s. let or loss. Application to be made (if by letter, post paid) as above.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London. Established 1823. Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 William IV.

Chairman—The Right Hon. THOMAS FRANKLAND LEWIS.
Deputy Chairman—HENRY FREDERICK STEPHENSON, Esq.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—

Lower Rates of Premium than those of any other Office which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society.

No Proprietary participate in the profits, the whole being divisible among the Assured.
The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged £16 per cent. on the Premiums paid.
The second ditto, 1839, ditto £31 ditto since the 1st division.
The third ditto, 1844, ditto £36 ditto since the 2nd division.

In addition to which, all Policies entitled to the absolute bonus, will receive a contingent prospective bonus of £1 per cent. per annum, on becoming claims before 1849.

Assurances effected on the equal scale of premiums in the year 1844, will participate in the Bonus to be declared in 1849. CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER, Secretary.

ELECTRO PLATE SUPERSEDED by RICHARD and JOHN SLACK'S Pure NICKEL SILVER.—This incomparable metal possesses all the richness of Silver in appearance, with all its durability and hardness, warranted to stand the test of aquafortis, and to retain its silver-like appearance as long as the articles endure.—Tea spoons, 5s. per dozen; dessert ditto and forks, 10s.; table ditto and forks, 12s. R. and J. S. beg to caution the public against several Spurious Imitations of their articles which are daily offered; the genuine are to be had only at their Establishment, where no inferior articles are kept.

IVORY TABLE KNIVES, 11s. per dozen; dessert ditto, 9s.; carvers, 3s. 6d. per pair; ditto in sets of 50 pieces, from 40s.; superior kitchen table cutlery, from 6s. 6d. per dozen; steel table knives and forks, with Nickel Silver handles, 22s. 6d. per dozen; dessert ditto, 18s.; carvers, 6s. 6d. per pair; three full size tea trays, 6s. 6d.; superior Gothic ditto, 13s. 6d.; Gothic paper ditto, 33s.; also, an extensive assortment of Furnishing Ironmongery, Thirty per Cent. under any other house.—R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset-house. Their Illustrated Catalogue (gratis), or sent to any part free.—Established, 1818.

Just published, price 5s. 6d., with cases and coloured plates,

DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a Successful Mode of treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic, Nervous and Spasmodic Coughs, and Affections of the Heart.—"Full of important and consoling facts."—Gazette. London: Simpkin and Marshall.—Gratuitous advice by Dr. Maddock to the poor, at his residence, 10, Hunter-street, Brunswick-square.

This Day, with Wood cuts, 1s. 6d.

INSTRUCTIONS in HOUSEHOLD MATTERS; or, THE YOUNG GIRL'S GUIDE TO DOMESTIC SERVICE. Written by A LADY, with an especial View to Young Girls intended for Service on leaving School.

London: John W. Parker, West Strand.

MR. GRANT'S NEW WORK.

On the 25th of October will be published, in two vols., post 8vo.,

IMPRESSIONS OF IRELAND AND THE IRISH. By the Author of "Random Recollections of the Lords and Commons," "The Great Metropolis," &c. &c. &c.—London: Hugh Cunningham, Publisher, 193, Strand.

. Orders received by all Booksellers.

LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for NOVEMBER, Price 1s., post free 1s. 6d., will contain double the number of Winter Fashions given in any other work, and a Coloured Giant Plate of Fashions (size 198 inches), for Show Rooms, &c.; Patterns of the Queen's Winter Dress, and other important novelties. 100 figures; patterns of 40 walking and children's dresses; 60 bonnets, cloaks, pelisses, &c.; descriptions, tales, poetry, music of "Royal Polka," and march in "Norma;" a Complete Ball Room and Polka Guide, with all the Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c.

G. Berger, Holywell-street, Strand.

ADVICE TO THE DEAF.

Just published, with Plates, price 1s.,

THE PRESENT STATE of AURAL SURGERY; with new Modes of Treating Deafness, and other Diseases of the Ear, with Remarks founded on the experience of upwards of 30,000 cases. By J. HARRISON CURTIS, Esq., Surgeon to the Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear.—"Interesting to the profession and all classes."—Literary Gazette. "The author appears well versed in its diseases."—Lancet. "It should be read by all deaf persons."—Morning Chronicle. "Mr. Curtis has done more for the cure of diseases of the ear than any other man living."—Monthly Magazine. London: Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria lane.

Large 8vo., price 2s.,

MONASTIC and SOCIAL LIFE in the TWELFTH CENTURY, as exemplified in the "Chronicles of Jocelin of Brakelond," from A.D. 1173 to 1202. Translated from the original Latin, as printed by the Camden Society With Notes, Introduction, &c., by T. E TOMLINS, Esq., Editor of "Lyttleton's Tenures," &c.—"The reader must consult some of the living pictures, drawn by contemporaneous hands. One document of this kind, easily obtained, very brief, and deeply instructive we have much pleasure in recommending to their attention. * * * A well-executed translation in a very cheap form."—Edinburgh Review, Oct., 1844.

Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria-lane, London.

Published This Day, 8vo., 1s. sewed,

INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS to the STUDENTS of UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, at the Opening of the Winter Session in the Faculty of Medicine, 1844-45: containing Observations upon the Effects likely to be produced by the Medical Reform Bill and the New Charter on the Surgical Profession and the Schools; Remarks on the Expediency of Combining Literary with Professional Pursuits; and Directions for the most Advantageous Method of Studying Medicine and Surgery. By SAMUEL COOPER, Professor of Surgery in the same College; Vice President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Consulting Surgeon to University College Hospital, &c. &c.

London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans.

AMUSEMENT BLENDED WITH INSTRUCTION.

BUTTER'S TANGIBLE ARITHMETIC and GEOMETRY FOR CHILDREN; an easy and effectual method of teaching Addition, Subtraction, &c., and Fractions; also the formation of Squares, Cubes, Prisms, Pyramids, &c., and an endless variety of Buildings; with numerous illustrative Cuts, admirably adapted for Preparatory Schools and Families. Second Edition, revised and improved. Price 1s; or, with a box of 96 Cubes, 5s.; with 144 ditto, 6s. 6d.; or with 144 larger mahogany Cubes, 10s.—"A very ingenious and amusing manual, worthy the attention of all who are engaged in domestic or infantile education."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. Sold by all Booksellers, Stationers, Toymen, &c. Agents: J. Trimen, 11, Portugal-street, Lincoln's inn; Taylor and Walton 28, Upper Gower-street; Payne and Son, 16 and 17, High Holborn; T Edlin, 37, New Bond-street, London.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

POOR RICHARD'S ALMANAC for 1845, the genuine edition, enlarged and beautifully illustrated. Price 1d.

Poor Richard's Almanac, with the addition of all the fairs in England and Wales, a great variety of agricultural and domestic receipts, &c. Price 2d.

The Victoria Miniature Almanac, the smallest and cheapest ever published, with engravings, and 16 additional pages. Price 3d. roan tuck 6d.

Poor Richard's Farmer's and Commercial Pocket-Book, foolscap 8vo., gilt edges, tuck, &c. 1s 6d. only. The completest, the cheapest, and the most useful pocket-book ever published.

List of Fairs for all the towns in England and Wales, Agricultural and Domestic Recipes, &c. Price 1d.

The public and booksellers are cautioned against purchasing spurious imitations of Poor Richard's Almanac, legal proceedings having been instituted by the proprietors against certain parties for infringement of copyright. Samples may now be had of the wholesale agents. A liberal allowance to the trade.—London: W. Strange, 21, Paternoster-row London; Allen, Nottingham; and all booksellers.

PARKER'S COLLECTIONS IN POPULAR LITERATURE.

THE MERCHANT and the FRIAR; or Truths and Fictions of the Middle Ages. By Sir FRANCIS PALGRAVE. New Edition. 3s.

HISTORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION; its Causes and Consequences. By FREDERICA MACLEAN ROWAN. 3s 6d.

THE LORD AND THE VASSAL; a Familiar Exposition of the Feudal System in the Middle Ages. 2s.

NAPOLEON'S INVASION OF RUSSIA. By EUGENE LABAUME, Captain of Engineers during the Expedition. 2s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHIES; each with an Historical Introduction and Sequel.

SIR JOSEPH BANKS AND THE ROYAL SOCIETY. 2s.

CUVIER AND THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF ZOOLOGY. 2s.

SMEATON AND LIGHT-HOUSES. 2s.

LINNÆUS AND JUSSIEU; or the Rise and Progress of Systematic Botany. 2s.

CHRONICLES OF THE SEASONS; or the Progress of the Year. In Four Books 6d each.

THE WRITING DESK and its Contents; a Familiar Illustration of Important Facts in Natural Philosophy. By T. GRIFFITHS. 2s.

THE USEFUL ARTS employed in the Construction of DWELLING-HOUSES. With numerous Illustrations. 2s. 6d.

THE USEFUL ARTS employed in the Production of FOOD and of CLOTHING. With numerous Illustrations. 2s. 6d each.

VAN TI, THE CHINESE MAGISTRATE; and other Tales of other Countries. With Illustrations. 2s.

NORAH TOOLE; and other Tales illustrative of National and Domestic Manners. With Illustrations. 2s.

THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF PETER WILKINS, a Cornish Man. New and carefully revised Edition. 3s.

THE DELECTABLE HISTORY OF REYNARD THE FOX, and of his Son Reynardine. A revised Version of an old Romance. 2s.

London: John W. Parker, West Strand.

WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY.

Large 8vo., sewed. Now ready, price 4s. 6d.,

THIERRY'S NARRATIVES of the MEROVINGIAN ERA, and THIERRY'S TEN YEARS' HISTORICAL STUDIES. Translated with notes, &c.—"Thierry is an author of rare merit. His productions have acquired an European reputation, and, in the phrase of the day, have exercised a powerful influence upon the science of history. He displays singular genius—genius fed and sustained by sedulous industry. * * * In his recent "Récits des Temps Merovingians," we have a narrative uniting Walter Scott's liveliness of detail and dramatic effect with the observance of historical truth."—Last Quarterly Review. The foregoing, with The HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST, complete the historical works of this celebrated author, and can be had bound together, as

AUGUSTIN THIERRY'S HISTORICAL WORKS. In cloth, price 12s. 6d. Also, nearly ready, the first part of

A COMPLETE HISTORY of FRANCE. Translated from the French of M. MICHELET. To be published in parts, corresponding with the volumes of the original. The celebrity of this work on the Continent, and the want in English literature of a good history of France, has induced the publishers to introduce it in the present series. The Edinburgh, Foreign Quarterly, and other established Reviews, have urged the necessity and advantage of its being introduced by translation to the English reader. Also preparing for immediate publication,

The HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. By MONS. THIERS.—A translation of this work was issued by the present publishers on the first appearance of the original work, and with the additional volumes, now in the course of translation, will, with the following work, complete the entire history of Mons. Thiers.

The HISTORY of the CONSULATE and EMPIRE of NAPOLEON, from the French of MONS. THIERS. To be issued in parts, corresponding to the volumes of the original work.

CONDE'S HISTORY of the ARABS in SPAIN. Translated from the Spanish.

HISTORY of the SWEDES. By ERIC GUSTAVE GEIJER, Historiographer Royal of Sweden, and Professor of History in the University of Upsala, &c. Translated from the Swedish, with an Introduction and Notes, by J. H. TURNER, M.A.—"Long application to the study of Scandinavian History, an elevated position, and unlimited access to the public records, pointed out Geijer as the man who possessed most qualifications for a task to which preceding historians had failed to do justice."—Foreign Quarterly Review.

The HISTORY of the GAULS. Translated from the French of M. AMADEE THIERRY.—"A work of rare merit—a work which must ever be in the hand of every one who would understand the history of antiquity. It is little to the credit of the literature of this country that his work has not yet appeared in an English translation. * * * His style, is always animated and graphic, while his subject is one of deep and varied interest."—Blackwood's Magazine, Oct. 1844.

. A detailed list of the works already published in this series can be had gratis of any bookseller. Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

ALLIANCE BRITISH and FOREIGN LIFE and FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—This is to give Notice, that the Profits of the Fire Assurance Branch of the Company, appropriated to the Assured at the last Quinquennial Meeting of the Company, will be in course of payment at the Office, No. 1, Bartholomew-lane, London, and at the various Agencies throughout the Kingdom, on and after Friday, the 1st November ensuing, from 11 to 3 o'clock. The Policy Holders entitled to participate are such as were assured on the 3d of April last, on which day the profits were declared, and who had made Five consecutive Annual Payments of Premium previous to the 25th of March. Parties applying to participate are requested to bring to the Office the last receipts issued by the Office for their Premiums, or their Polices of Assurance.

1, Bartholomew-lane, October 11th 1844. A. HAMILTON, Secretary.

SHIRTS—W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, Strand (Established 20 Years), solicits the attention of Gentlemen to the SHIRTS he supplies for 6s. 6d. each, including Washing; they are made from MARSLAND'S PATENT SHIRTING, with fine Linen Fronts and Wrists, with collars or without, the very best work; the Corazza and other new styles, and are superior to what are usually charged 8s. 6d.; also, all Linen, 10s. 6d., usual price, 13s. 6d. All sizes kept ready washed, from boys upwards. The measure requisite, is the neck, chest, and wrists, tight; Half a dozen sent (carriage paid), upon receiving a post-office order for the amount. Best Shirts for Outfits, supplied at 42s. and 54s. per dozen, washing and marking included; every other requisite for ditto, at the Wholesale prices.—Gentlemen waited upon with samples in any part of London.

SIX POUNDS of TEA, whether Black or Green, for 17s.; and small bright Gunpowder, in 12lb. boxes, at 4s. 6d. per lb.—EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY'S OFFICES, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, Brightest, Purest, and most in esteem by connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at 1s.!!! per Gallon, by addressing to the John Bull Brewery Office, 20, Philpot lane, City. Sent to any part of London carriage-free.

JONES' £4 4s SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

A SET OF CHAMBERS, BUCKINGHAM-STREET, ADELPHI.—To be LET or SOLD, by Mr. HERRING, with possession at Christmas next, or earlier if required, an excellent set of Chambers, comprising two large Sitting Rooms, three Bedrooms, Kitchen, &c., spacious Hall, Entrance Lobby, and Water Closet, with Cellaring in the Basement. Apply to Mr. Herring, 109, Fleet-street.

WINTER HOSIERY—Manufactured by POPE and PLANTE, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall—of white and coloured Merino, Lambs-wool, real Cachmere, and of other choice Wools, in Socks, Hose, and Under-clothing. Elastic Silk and Cachmere Gaiters for Ladies, and every description of Silk and Cotton Hosiery.

GENUINE PATENT CAMPHINE (Wm. Oxley English, sole Patentee) may be obtained, Wholesale, with the best constructed LAMPS for its use, from ENGLISH and WATSON'S Offices, 34, St. Mary-at-hill, London; 18, Edmond street, Birmingham; 180, High-street, Hull; and all respectable dealers in the United Kingdom.—N.B. Prices, terms, and particulars may be had, on application as above.

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.—Office for Patents of Inventions and Registrations of Designs, 14, Lincoln's-inn Fields. The Printed INSTRUCTIONS gratis, and every information upon the subject of PROTECTION for INVENTIONS, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, or by letter (pre-paid) to Mr. Alexander Prince, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to ladies and gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An evening academy on Mondays and Fridays. A juvenile academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Lessons in the Polka and Valse a Deux Temps every day. Terms may be had on application as above. The rooms may be engaged by private parties.

NOTICE to GOVERNESSES, Companions to Ladies, &c. —H. BULGIN will feel particularly obliged to those ladies who have placed themselves upon his books, it they will inform him immediately upon obtaining situations, to prevent inconvenience to parties engaging. In the event of leaving a situation before the expiration of twelve months, they will be again placed upon the books gratis. Prospectuses may be had upon application.—221, Regent street, corner of Maddox-street

---

BARRELLED OYSTERS, of the very best quality, closely packed, from 4s. 6d. to 6s. per barrel, at a moment's notice, and forwarded to all parts of the Kingdom, by H. ADAMSON, FISHMONGER, 333, OXFORD-STREET (established upwards of 40 years), being one door from Griffin's, Green Man and Still universal Coach and Booking Office.

N.B.—Country orders for Fish most carefully attended to.

LESSONS IN MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.— MRS. HOWELL, 304, Regent-street, Sole Inventress of teaching the art of DRESSMAKING, in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons, of the meanest capacity, a correct knowledge of cutting, fitting, and executing in the most finished style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.

PIANOFORTE WAREHOUSE, 73, Bishopsgate-street Within (Opposite the Marine Society), London—G. PEACHEY, Manufacturer of Improved CABINET, COTTAGE, PICCOLO, and SQUARE PIANOFORTES. An assortment of One Hundred Pianofortes for General Inspection, with a variety of Second Hand, in good condition. Instruments tuned, repaired, exchanged, and Lent on Hire.—Packing Cases lent, free of expense.

LAMPS.—LIGHT INSTEAD OF SMOKE! or, MORE LIGHT NO EXPENSE!—Upton's New Registration, the ADJUSTING CHIMNEY-GLASS-HOLDER, affords a great increase of Light, by a more perfect combustion of the oil or camphine of the lamp. It prevents smoke or smell, and breakage of chimney-glasses; is adapted to every kind of lamp, and not liable to be mismanaged.—Price 1s. To be seen without solicitation to purchase.—UPTON and CO., Oil, Camphine, and Lamp Dealers, 33, George-street, Hanover-square; and 66, Basinghall-street, City.

INSTANT RELIEF, and a RAPID CURE of COUGHS, ASTHMAS, and CONSUMPTION, DIFFICULT BREATHING, &c., are given by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—To SINGERS and PUBLIC SPEAKERS, they are invaluable, as in a few hours they remove hoarseness, and increase the power and flexibility of the voice.—Price 1s 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box; or sent free, by post, for 1s. 3d., 3s., or 11s. 6d., by DA SILVA and CO., 1, Bride lane, Fleet-street, London.—Sold by all Medicine vendors.

CROSBY HALL VAULTS, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within. —CURRALL and SON beg to invite public notice to their STOCK of OLD BOTTLED WINES: they being desirous to secure that patronage which WINES of the first quality, at fair and remunerating profits, will maintain, respectfully submit the annexed list of cash prices:—Port, old bottled, 36s. and 42s.; Do, six years in bottle, 48s; Do., superior draught, 28s. and 33s.; Sherries, pale and brown, 36s.; Do., do., 42s. to 48s.; Bucellas, 32s.; Sherry (excellent dinner wine), 28s.; Marsala, 24s per dozen. Bottles, 2s. 6d. per dozen; hampers, 1s. each. . Marsala, per Quarter Pipe, £11 11s.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, for Cash only, at RALPH and Co's, 54, Cheapside.—Ivory handled Table-knives, quality warranted, 11s. 6d. per dozen; a bold Bronze Fender, with steel bar, 15s.; new silver pattern Dish Covers, in one entire piece, 45s. per set; pure British Plate Spoons or Forks—Tables, 16s.; Dessert, 11s.; Tea, 6s., per dozen; Bed-room Stoves, 4d. per inch; good Register Stoves, with double backs, &c., 3 feet wide, 27s.; strong Kitchen Range, with self-acting oven and boiler, wrought bars, &c., the best that can be made, 4 feet wide, 110s.; and all other articles, of the best manufacture, at qually low prices, at RALPH and Co.'s, 54, Cheapside; two doors west of Bow Church.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by instantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-st., London; and by Joseph Rodgers and Sons, 6, Norfolk-st., Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each, and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations: the Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by I. D. Cogan and R. Gillo.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.— THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting, Paper-hanging, and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

WOOLLASTON'S PATENT GELATINE, for immediately making Jellies or Blanc-mange, being quickly dissolved in boiling water. It is of equal strength with the finest Russian Isinglass, and perfectly free from any unpleasant taste or smell, requiring less flavouring than any other preparation of Gelatine or Isinglass, being a perfectly pure, colourless, and soluble substance. For Jellies, it will not be found necessary to use eggs, as passing through a flannel bag is sufficient. Invalids will find this a very nourishing and valuable restorative, from the great facility and readiness with which it is used, and not being liable to become sour so soon as isinglass.—Manufactured by Edward L. Woollaston, Dover. Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Messrs. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; Messrs. Evans and Lercher, Bartholomew-close; Mr. Snelling, 30, Fenchurch-street; and retailed by Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Messrs. Ball, 81, New Bond-street; Messrs. Fortnum and Mason, 182, Picadilly; and by all respectable Patent Medicine Vendors, Druggists, and Italian Warehousemen, in packets, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 5s.

COX'S PATENT SPARKLING GELATINE FOR MAKING JELLIES, BLANCMANGE, &c., stronger than Isinglass, at one-third the price, is particularly economical and convenient for the use of Families, Hotel-keepers, Invalids, and others, and a profitable article for Exportation.—Sold, in packets only, by the principal Druggists, Grocers, and Oilmen in the United Kingdom, at 9d., 1s. 6d., 3s., 5s., and 7s.; each packet bearing the Patentee's signature.—Extract from Dr. Ure's Testimonial:—"London, 9th February, 1844.—I have much pleasure in certifying that the Patent Sparkling Gelatine of Messrs. J. and G. Cox is prepared by an excellent process, which, while it preserves entire all the virtues of this alimentary substance, renders it equally pure and beautiful. Examined by chemical tests, it is found perfectly free from acid, and fully stronger than the best isinglass in the London market, and affords a Jelly (in a few minutes) equal in all respects to, if not richer and more crystalline than, that prepared from calves'-feet."—Agent in London, Mr. Henry Watson, No. 11, Old Fish-street, City.—Patent Gelatine Works, Gorgie Mills, Edinburgh.

D. MANRIGG and CO. beg most respectfully to announce that *the PALATINE HOTEL is now completed, and fitted up with every improve*ment that experience and art can suggest, to ensure the comfort and satisfaction of the Nobility, Ladies, and Gentlemen who may honour them with their patronage. This Hotel is now OPENED for the reception of visitors, and the principle on which it will be conducted in its various departments is such that the greatest degree of comfort, at the lowest cost, shall be secured to all who visit it. Suites of Private Apartments, large and small. Baths, &c. A spacious and elegant Coffee-room; and a Commercial-room, for the exclusive use of gentlemen so engaged; with a Luxuriating Divan attached.

The Palatine Hotel adjoins the Victoria station of Liverpool, Leeds, York, Hull, and Derby Railways, and is adjacent to the Exchange, and other principal places of resort in MANCHESTER.

The porters of the Establishment are always in attendance, at the arrival of every train, to remove, free of any expense, the luggage of visitors to the Hotel, or to provide Post Horses, should they be required. Stables, Coach-houses, and Riding-school attached to the Establishment. Turtle and other Soups, Dinners, Suppers, or Single Dishes, supplied to Private Families, of the first quality, and on the shortest notice, as their Cuisine department is conducted by first-rate French and English cooks. The charges at this Establishment include all gratuities to servants of every description.

COD LIVER OIL.—Read the following Undeniable Testimony of the extraordinary value of this natural remedy in the CURE of GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCROFULA, DISEASED JOINTS, SPINAL and GLANDULAR AFFECTIONS, LUMBAGO, SCROFULOUS ULCERS, and other external Diseases:—

Sept., 1844. Mr. H. W. Pitman, Moor's Picture Gallery, St. Martin's-lane, London, cured of excruciating Gout and Rheumatism, after having tried every other remedy.

Oct., 1844. Anne Midgley, 331, Strand, cured of a Diseased Swelling of the Legs, with only a small bottle of the Oil, after leaving St. Thomas's Hospital as incurable, and trying the advice of several medical men without the least benefit.

Sold in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, by Sanger, Oxford-street; Hooper, Chemist, Pall-mall; Johnstone, Cornhill; and all respectable Medicine-vendors in Town and Country.

CAUTION—Observe the seal and address of JONES and CO., 201, STRAND, on the wrapper.

TO MILLINERS and STRAW BONNET MAKERS.— WINTER FASHIONS.—BAILEY and Co. beg to inform Milliners and Dress-makers that their new and fashionable stock of bonnet materials, velvet ribbons, blonds, Lisle lace, French and English flowers, feathers, a great variety of models, Ayrshire worked collars, French velvets in every colour, bonnet and cap ribbons, girdles, gimps, cane, chips, linings, &c., are now ready for inspection.—Foreign orders promptly attended to and carefully packed.—Observe—BAILEY and Co., Albion House 77, St. Paul's Church-yard.

ASK for the "POTOSIAN LIQUID SILVER," 1s. per bottle; or four in one, 3s. The only lasting preparation for resilvering WORN-OUT PLATED ARTICLES, and rendering them quite equal to new, by depositing a layer of pure silver upon the surface. The cost a few pence, the effect instant, and the operation so simple that it may be performed by a child.—Smith and Co., sole proprietors, opposite Norfolk-street, Strand, where specimens and the operation may be seen. Sold also by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard A wholesale agent wanted at Manchester.

WATER CURE ESTABLISHMENT, SYDNEY-GARDENS, BATH. Resident Physician, A. E. Mastalier, M.D. The General Management is under Mr. and Mrs. WATSON, with whom Ladies and Gentlemen may respectively correspond. The establishment is open for the reception of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Families. The new Douche Building (under the same roof) is comfortably fitted up; all its rooms and passages are warmed for invalids. A Prospectus will be forwarded on application. . Treatment for Out-patients.

H. WALKER'S NEEDLES (by authority, the "Queen's Own,") have large eyes, easily threaded, (even by blind persons), and improved points, temper, and finish. Each paper is labelled with a likeness of her Majesty, or his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in relief, on coloured grounds. Every quality of Needles, Fish Hooks, Hooks and Eyes, Steel Pens, &c., for shipping. These Needles or Pens for the home trade are sent free, by post, to any respectable dealer, on receipt of 13 penny stamps for every 1s. value.—H. Walker, Manufacturer to the Queen, 1, (late 20), Maiden-lane, Wood-street, London.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be procured from this establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid or even sea-water. Black and Grey and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids and Merinos of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for mourning, in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c. W. C. JAY and Co.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.— Under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H. R. H Prince Albert, the Royal Family, and Nobility.—A fragrant White Powder prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the Teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

Caution.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus:—A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed on each Box.

. All others are Fraudulent Counterfeits!!!

THE HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced, for promoting the growth or reproduction of the Hair, few survive even in name, beyond a very limited period, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled is still on the increase in public estimation. The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Preserving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very facts of the high and distinguished patronage it enjoys, its general use in all countries, together with numerous testimonials constantly received in its favour, are authorities which stamp its superior excellence and title over all attempts of a similar nature. Being universally preferred, its consequent great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who vend the most spurious trash as the "genuine" Macassar Oil; whereas, the genuine article is wholly the invention and property of A. Rowland and Son, and the amalgamation of its costly exotic materials (solely imported by them) renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts—thus proving the imposition of all other articles bearing the title of "Macassar Oil." The genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.—. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

PORT, SHERRY, and all other FOREIGN WINES for cash, in quantities of one dozen and upwards.

Sherry (pale or brown)	21s., 25s., 30s., 35s., and 40s. per dozen.
Port from the wood	23s., 26s., 30s., and 34s.
Ditto crusted	26s., 30s., 36s. and 40s.
Madeira	27s., 40s., and 48s.
Claret	30s., 40s., 50s., and 60s.
Champagne	40s., 54s., and 70s.

Bucellas, 27s.; Vidonia, 24s; Lisbon, (dry or sweet) 24s; Marsala, 21s.; Cape, 15s.

Bottles, 1s. 6d. per dozen, the price of old ones; hampers at the rate of 9d. per dozen. To all who pay ready money Messrs. Cornwall and Co., address themselves, soliciting attention to the above prices, under which it is impossible for genuine wines to be sold, offering to purchasers the immense saving of from 10s. to 20s. per dozen. The continued and rapid increase of their connexions is a gratifying proof to them of the approbation of the public. Their wines are warranted genuine and those at only one price the finest imported; any not approved of will be exchanged or the money returned, and a trial of any one kind is respectfully requested. Samples can be tasted at the office from Ten till Five o'clock. Payment to be made on or before delivery. Orders from the country must be accompanied by a remittance, and will be executed with punctuality and dispatch.

CORNWALL and Co., 14, WALBROOK, CITY.

READ the following TESTIMONIAL in favour of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which is sufficient to convince the most prejudiced person that they are all that is required to conquer disease, and consequently, prolong life.

To T. ROBERTS and Co.

Sirs,—I beg to hand you the following testimonial, which I have just received from Mr. Williams, Union-street, Nottingham. Yours, obediently,

G. BATTERS, Chapel-bar, Nottingham.

Sir,—Printing is a great blessing to mankind, for now I am enabled to make known, through you a perfect Cure, by taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, *of extremely bad Indiges*tion, a Bilious disorder, and Sick Headache, which I have been subjected to for years; and money enough has been paid to physicians and surgeons, which now would have been a little fortune to me. I wish every fellow-creature clearly to understand that I was wonderfully relieved by taking one box of PARR'S LIFE PILLS. Accident threw a testimonial in my way of a miraculous cure of a bilious attack and sick headache. The second box enabled me to go about my business with spirit and alacrity; and by taking two or three more boxes, I am happy to add my humble testimony of a perfect cure of that dreadful disorder—bilious and sick headache, which rendered me, before I took PARR'S LIFE PILLS, unfit for business. Considering the loss of time and pain, persons would find that one box of PARR'S LIFE PILLS is worth, instead of 1s. 1½d., as many guineas. May all persons make trial of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, is the sincere wish of

Yours, thankfully, M. WILLIAMS, Union-street, Nottingham.

To Mr. G. Batters.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS are sold by all respectable Medicine Vendors. See the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS," in White Letters on a Red Ground, on the Government Stamp.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.

SELF-MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.

No longer let those who are dwellers afar,
Themselves from the Warehouse of Moses debar.
By adopting our plan, which has never a failure,
Ev'ry gentleman now may become his own Tailor!

E. MOSES and SON are desirous of directing especial attention to their plan of "Self-Measurement," The extreme simplicity and the minute exactness of this admirable plan are such as cannot fail to answer the purpose designed. No failure in point of fit can arise from its use; or, should anything of the kind occur, the proprietors will hold themselves responsible. Thousands are thus enabled to avail themselves of the choice Clothing of MOSES and SON, without any inconvenience arising from distance, &c. A Book with a wood-cut and full directions may be obtained on application (gratis) and free of postage. Residents in the country cannot do better than avail themselves of so favourable an opportunity of purchasing at the greatest Tailoring Establishment in the Kingdom.

READY-MADE.	£	s.	d.
Shooting Coats, in every variety, from	0	10	0
Velveteen do., 7 pockets ..	0	18	6
Tweed Taglionis	0	8	6
Ditto, silk facings, collar and cuffs	0	16	0
Cashmarette Coats, in every shape, handsomely trimmed, from ..	1	1	0
An immense stock of Blouses ..	0	3	6
Summer Vests	0	2	6
Cashmarette and Persian do., in every variety from 3s. to	0	8	6
Black Satin Vests	0	6	6
Cloth do.	0	4	6
Cloth Trousers	0	9	0
Single-milled Doe do., from ..	0	11	0
A great variety of Summer do. ..	0	7	0
Dress Coat, edged	1	0	0
Frock do. do.	1	4	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s.	d.
Sporting Coats in the most approved style	0	13	6
Velveteen do., 7 Pockets ..	1	3	0
Tweed Coats trimmed with silk ..	0	16	0
Cashmere fine Saxony do. ..	1	3	0
Cashmarette, new and improved article, warranted waterproof, trimmed with silk, collar, cuffs, &c.	1	18	0
Quilting Vests 7s. each, or 3 for	1	0	0
Cashmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	9	0
Trousers adapted for the season	0	9	6
Mill'd Victoria and plain Doe do	0	17	0
Best quality West of England .	1	3	0
Super Black do. do. ..	0	16	0
Best Black dress do ..	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Do. do. best manufactured ..	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Do. do., best manufactured ..	3	3	0

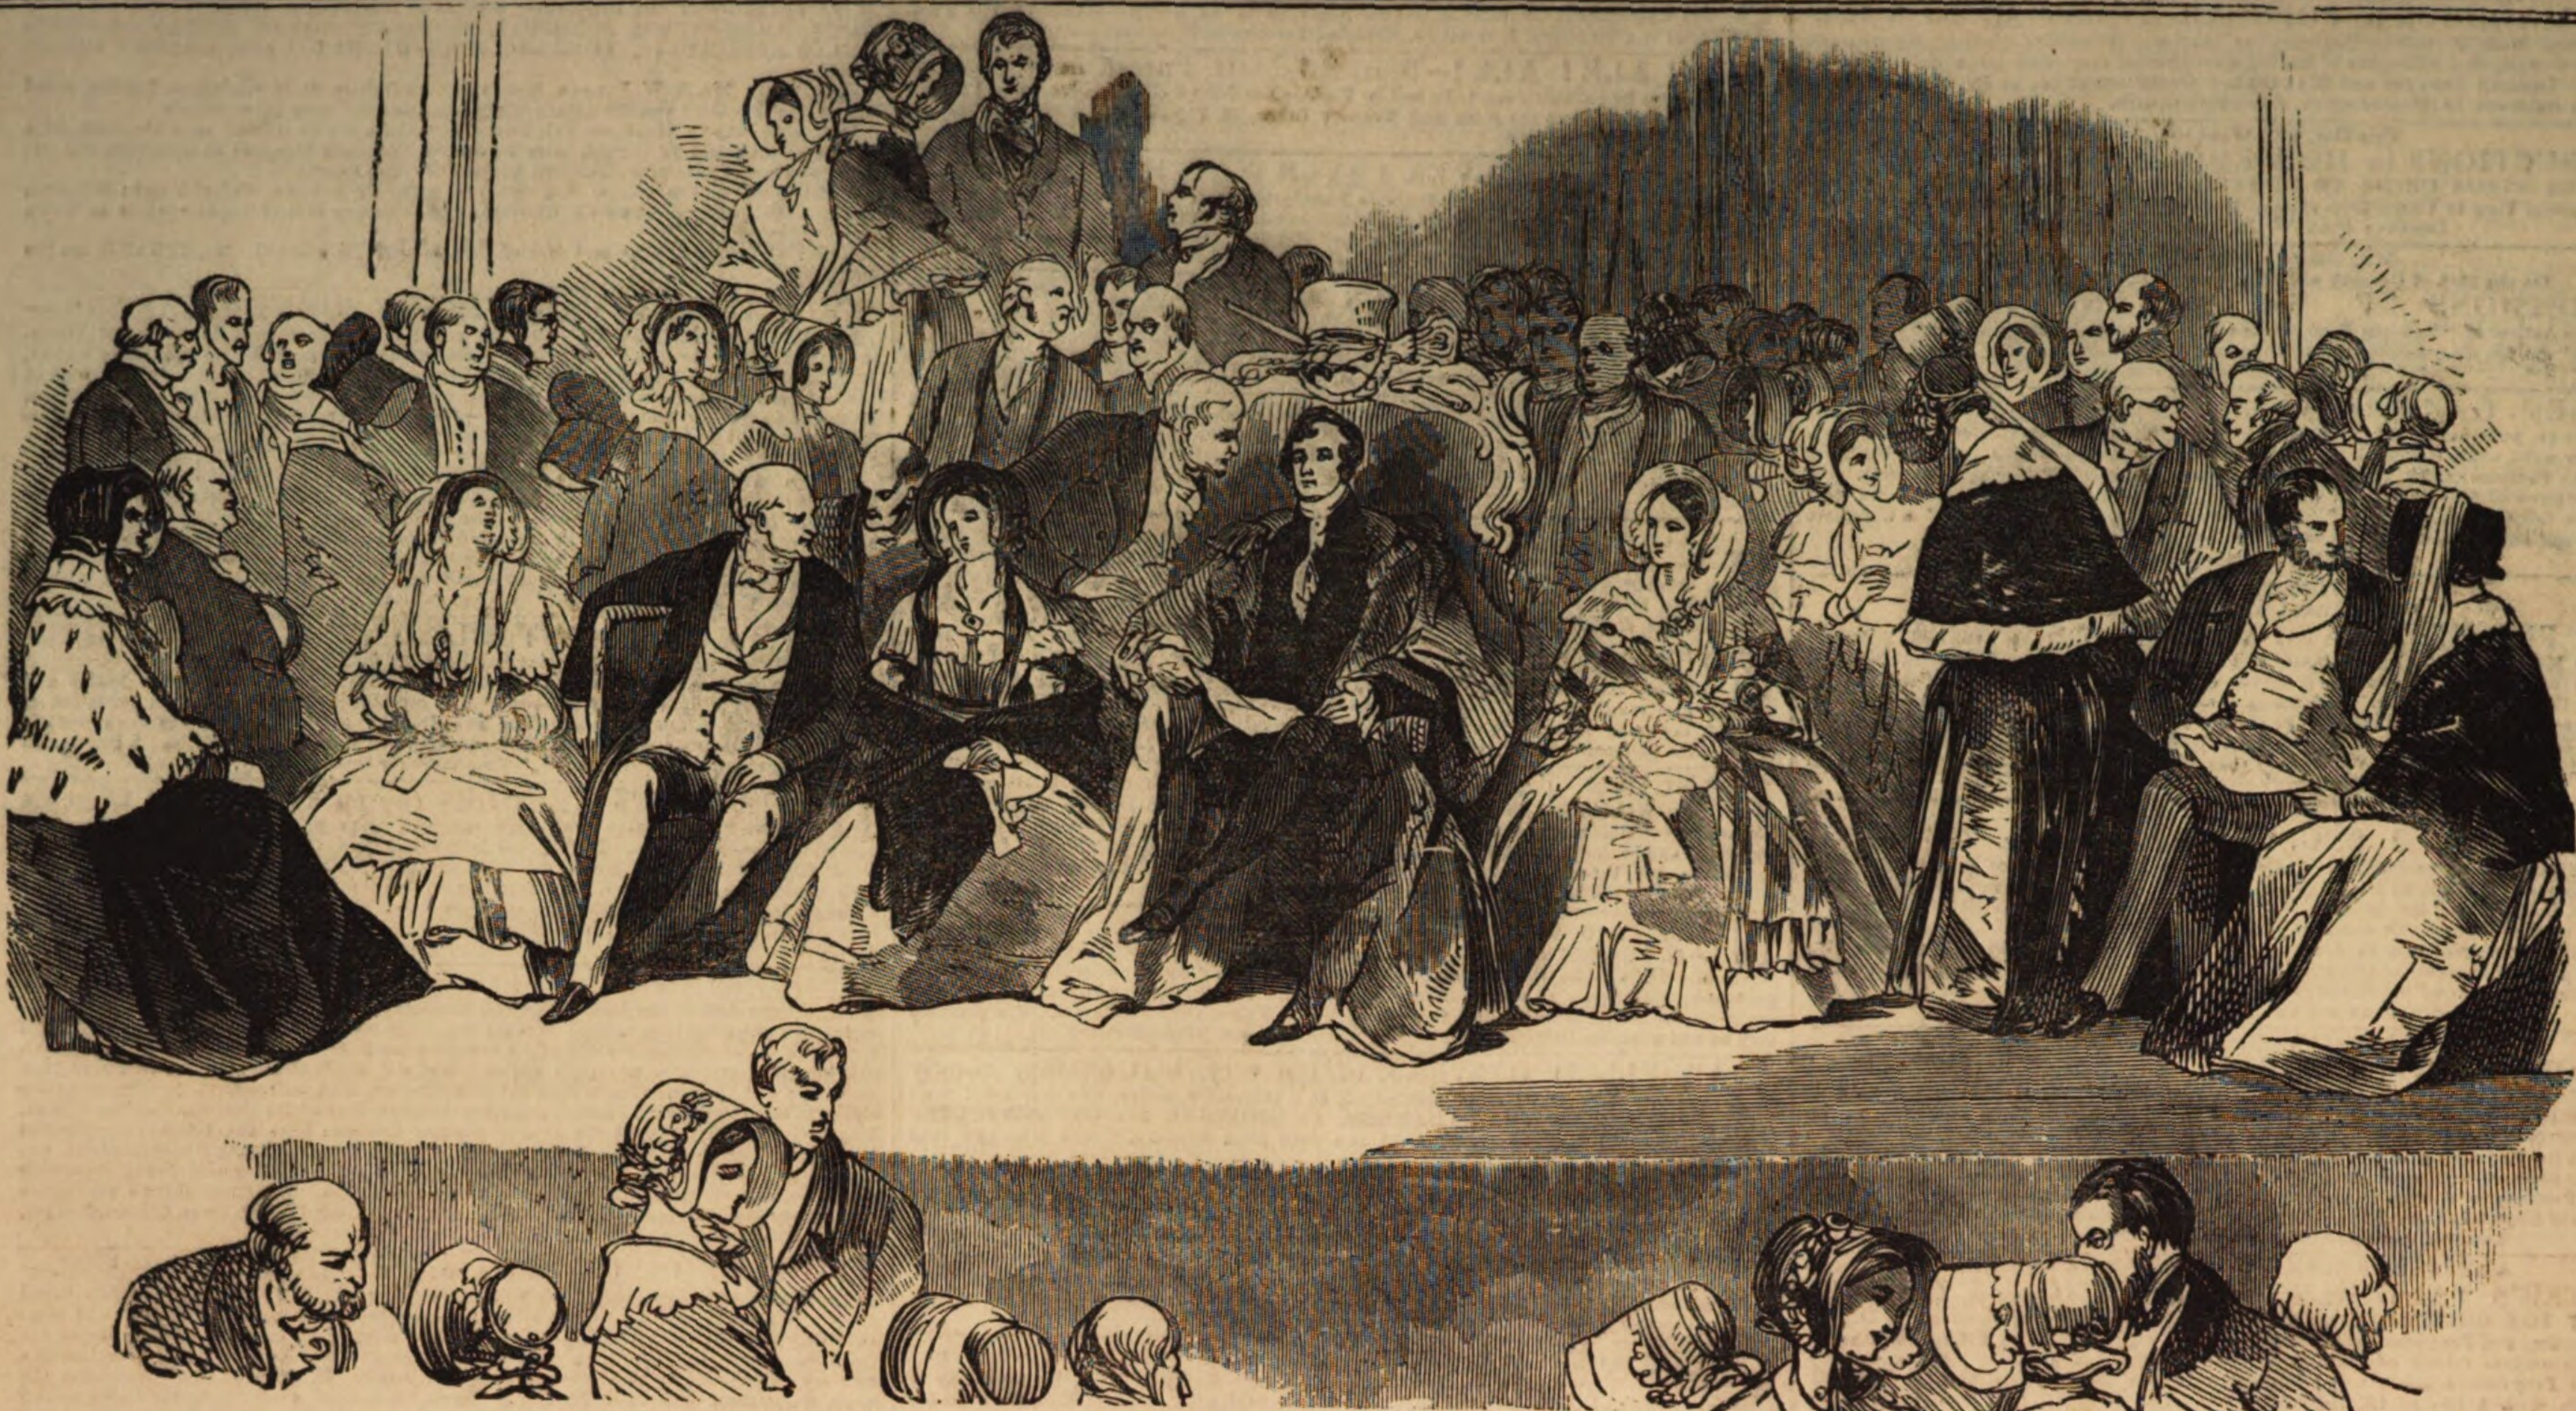
Mourning to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the Public against imposition, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connexion with any other house; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing should (to prevent disappointments, &c.) call at, or send to, 154 Minories; or 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this establishment from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.



PUBLIC MEETING AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—THE LORD MAYOR IN THE CHAIR.

BATHS FOR THE LABOURING CLASSES.

On Wednesday a very numerous meeting was held in the Egyptian-hall of the Mansion-house, for the purpose of forming an association to furnish the labouring poor with baths and wash-houses. Several ladies were present, and on the platform we observed Lord Dudley Stuart; Mr. Byng, M.P.; Mr. Colquhoun, M.P.; Sir W. Clay, M.P.; Alderman Sir J. Pirie, Alderman W. Hunter, Alderman Sidney, Mr. Moon (late sheriff), Mr. Wire, Mr. D. Salomons, Mr. Cotton (Governor of the Bank), Mr. Seeley, Archdeacon Wilberforce, Archdeacon Hale, the Rev. Dr. Russell, and a large number of other clergymen and lay gentlemen.

At two o'clock, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Bishop of London, ascended the platform, and was warmly applauded on taking the chair as president of the meeting. The Lord Mayor having opened the proceedings in a brief address explanatory of the objects of the meeting, the Bishop of London, in moving the first resolution, expressive of the advantage which would be conferred upon the working classes, by providing baths and wash-houses, quoted authorities to prove the improvement of health arising from frequent ablutions. The Right Reverend Prelate went into details respecting the public baths and wash-houses at Liverpool, in which it appeared, that although the baths were on a contracted scale, 220 labourers bathed in one day. One man told him, after he had a bath on a Saturday, that he felt himself able to do another week's work.—Mr. Byng, M.P., seconded the resolution, which was unanimously agreed to.—Mr. Gregg stated that he had erected baths for the use of the poor, in St. Luke's parish, at an expense of £1000. The Rev. Archdeacon Wilberforce moved the second resolution, the effect of which was, that it was desirable to extend the benefits of the institution to all parts of the metropolis.—Lord D. C. Stuart seconded the resolution, which was carried.—On the motion of the Rev. Archdeacon Hale, seconded by Sir G. Larpent, a committee was appointed to carry the resolutions into effect.

SCENE FROM "THE CONFEDERACY."

Our illustration shows the opening of the last scene of Vanbrugh's admirable comedy, lately revived with well-merited success at the Haymarket Theatre. Araminta, Corinna, Gripe, and Moneytrap, are discovered at a tea-table, very gay and laughing.

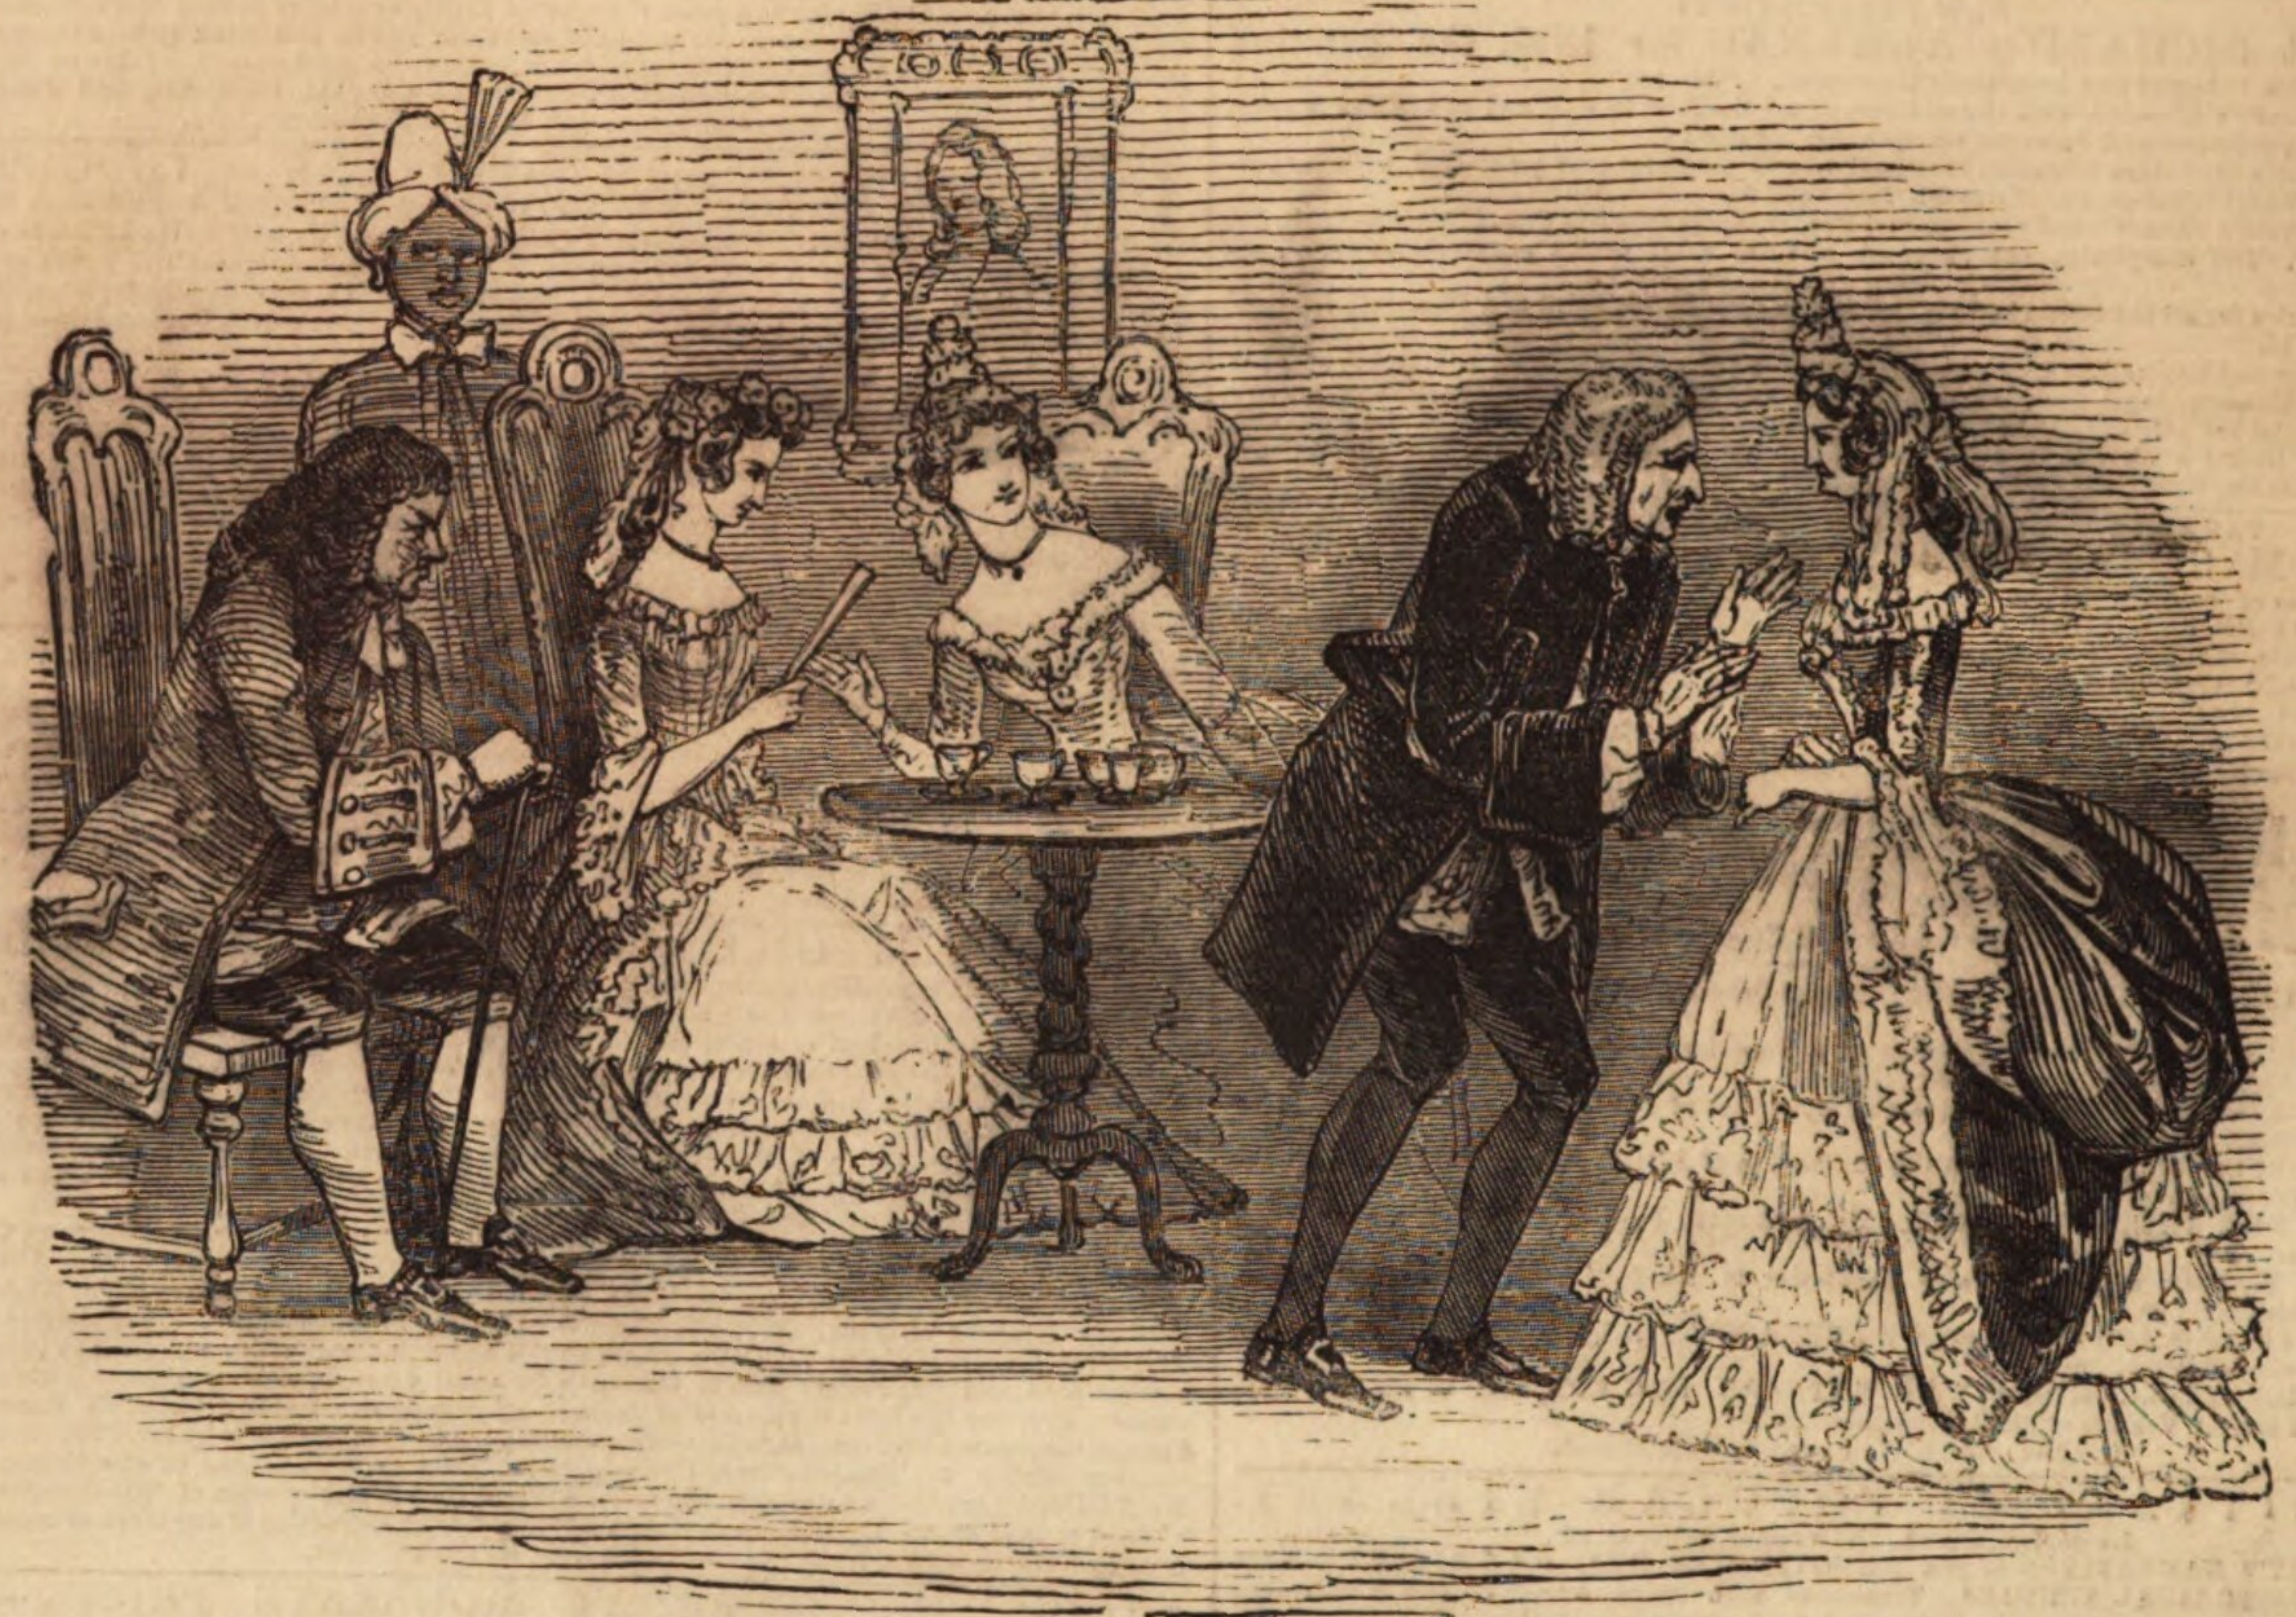
All.—Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Mon.—Mighty well, O mighty well indeed!

ENTER CLARISSA.

Clar.—Save you, save you, good folks! you are all in rare humour methinks.

The precise incident of the sketch is, however, Moneytrap's (Farren's) attentions to Clarissa, (Miss P. Horton): the other characters are Gripe, (Strickland); Araminta, (Mrs. E. Yarnold); Corinna, (Miss J. Bennett); a veritable group from the tea-table society of the early part of the last century, when a set of tea-cups or a fan were considered a pretty New Year's Gift.

What is characterised in the admirable criticism in the Times, as "the anxious, earnest, and senile appearance" of Farren, has been caught by our artist.



SCENE FROM "THE CONFEDERACY," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Leigh Hunt, speaking of the "Confederacy," says: "Dick Amlet, Mrs. Amlet, and Brass, are all perfection, after their kind—the unfeeling son, whose legs are doted on by his mother; the peddling mother, hobbling about, with fine ladies in her debt; and Brass, exquisite Brass, whom one can hardly help fancying made of the metal that christens him, and with a voice that rings accordingly. We know of no better comic writing in the world than the earlier scenes of Lord Foppington, in the 'Relapse,' and those between Dick Amlet and his mother, and of Brass securing his bargain with Dick, in the play before us."

SCENE FROM "DON CÆSAR DE BAZAN."

In our journal of last week we sketched the plot of this very effective drama, first produced, in English, at the Princess' Theatre, on Tuesday week. We now present our readers with the best "situation" in the piece, cleverly sketched by Mr. Kenny Meadows. The scene is in the third act, in which the licentious King is detected by Don Cæsar. We quote the passage from the drama, with the early part of the context.

King—Impertinent! I desire you quit the room.
Don Cæsar.—What! after the trouble I have had to get here. Are you——
King—The master of this house.
Don Cæsar.—The master of this house!—hem!—this house, where I have just seen the Countess de Bazan?
King—You know her, then?
Don Cæsar—Very slightly. I've only seen her for about ten minutes. But she resides here—may I ask your name?
King—I am—— I am Don Cæsar de Bazan.
Don Cæsar—Eh! Don Cæsar de Bazan! Egad, I excel the Phœnix! for two Don Cæsars have arisen from my ashes!
King—Now that I have satisfied you, I demand to know your name?
Don Cæsar—The unblushing rascal!
[Lazarillo, the page, steals behind Don Cæsar, and whispers.
Lazarillo—It is the King! [Exit]
Don Cæsar—Eh, Lazarillo.
King—You hesitate, Sir!
Don Cæsar—The King here!—I understand it all.
King—My question embarrasses you—I demand an answer!
Don Cæsar—Certainly.—If you are Don Cæsar de Bazan, I AM THE KING OF SPAIN!
King—What!—the King!
Don Cæsar—THE KING OF SPAIN!

The performance never fails to be received with an enthusiastic burst of applause, which it well deserves; for it is one of the finest coups de théâtre we ever remember to have witnessed.

SCENE FROM "DON CÆSAR DE BAZAN," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1844.

THE ILLUSTRATED
LONDON NEWS.

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR. SC. A PARIS.

No. 130.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1844. [Sixpence.

THE QUEEN AT THE EXCHANGE.

PLATO is said to have held it as a doctrine that the revolution of ages brings the affairs of the world, and of the men who dwell therein, at the end of a certain, or rather uncertain time, round to the same condition as that in which they stood at the commencement of the cycle. Thus, could the hero of Eugene Sue's very wandering romance give us the benefit of his extended experience in an authentic form (we cannot accept Eugene as a faithful chronicler), we should hear from him that on several separate occasions, though at long intervals, he has found mankind going through the same details of war, and trading, and other earthly occupations, precisely in the same mode and manner as at the beginning of the term of centuries—provided always that Plato's theory is a true one.

We are by no means prepared to give in our adhesion to the opinion of the old philosopher. Neither can we deny that certain events become almost repetitions of others that have long preceded them in the order of time, which in its course is perpetually adding to the number of "Historical Parallels."

Some three centuries ago, when the City of London was increasing in wealth, numbers and power, and the usual place of mercantile resort had become inconvenient, a "Royal Merchant," possessed of the necessary means and munificence, did, at his own proper cost and charges, build an Exchange, for the use and accommodation of his fellow citizens. The building, when completed, was opened by a Queen, and received the name of "Royal," and great was the pomp and ceremony of the opening. That edifice saw the bargain-making, and the cautious chafferings "about their monies and their usances" of the merchants of the time of the first James; its walls re-echoed their groans over the frequent "subsidies" demanded by that King, whose pedant's learning left him both unwise and unthrifty. They heard the discontents of the merchants of this reign grow into disaffection in that of James's successor, Charles, of unhappy memory. As years wore on, and royal necessities made the royal will less scrupulous, that disaffection grew deeper and deeper; but many a substantial merchant had grown up in the principles of the Puritans—careful men with a keen eye to the things of this world, and esteeming but lightly your feathered courtier. Shakspeare forshadows them in the "Master Dumbleton," who "liked not the security" that Falstaff offered for the price of the thirt yards "of satin for his short cloak and slops." And to this chariness in trade, they added a stubborn way of thinking of their own on higher matters than merchandise, such for instance as politics and religion, deeply hating both prerogative and prelacy. And as they thought so they acted; the King himself coming for loans was met by that distrust of the "security" for which Falstaff so reviles the "rascally yea-forsooth knaves;" and when he would take their money by "right divine," they demurred to the title and would not be plundered otherwise than by Act of Parliament. Then ensued war of the worst kind, the fall of Monarchy, the rise of a Cromwell, and a revival of commerce with the restoration of peace. All this the old Royal Exchange saw, but it was approaching its end. The sober citizens had scarcely shaken their heads over the profligacy and excesses of the Court—which were again sending Royalty city-ward for cash—when its busy walks became silent, and its halls of traffic void, beneath the desolating breath of the Plague. That passed over, and it was beginning to awake again to life almost with a new generation, so many had there perished of the old one, when the Great Fire swept over the city like a flaming deluge, and the centre of the City's commerce, with many a "temple and tower" beside, went to the ground.

THE CHAR-A-BANC PRESENTED TO HER MAJESTY BY THE KING OF THE FRENCH.—See next page.

Of its successor less can be said. Its history brings us down to our own times, through an uninteresting age, when the Lombards had degenerated into mere bankers—handling copper shovels, and wrinkling their brows over bills and cheques—all the picturesqueness and romance of money-lending in the olden time gone from them. The gown and cap of the merchant, as we see them in old engravings, or in the dress of the Blue-coat Boy, had given place to broad-skirted coats and deep-flapped waistcoats, and wigs and shoe-buckles! Could anything individually great or magnificent come from men so apparalled? Yet did our old grasshopper-crowned acquaintance witness many things, and some of them note-worthy. It saw the end of the Stuarts, and the beginning of the National Debt, with the rapid and altogether frightful growth and development thereof; it saw both the beginning and end of that gigantic folly, so fatally infectious then, so utterly inexplicable now,—the South Sea Scheme, and other bubble-like speculations, needless and tedious here to name. But those who congregated beneath it, did also act their parts, in their day and generation, right manfully. They extended our trade to all quarters of the world, and when assailed almost by the united strength of the nations of Europe, they with an energy nearly unparalleled, enabled successive Governments to find the funds which enabled us to "win through" a long and terribly expensive war. We speak of them, of course, as the representatives of the whole mercantile body of the empire, which, directly or indirectly, must be represented in its great centre. But the days of the existence of this mart of nations, like that of its predecessor, were numbered, and like that too it sank in flames, as we can all remember.

A few years have passed and another Exchange is standing on the old foundations. The first was opened by Queen Elizabeth with all the regal pomp of the sixteenth century. The last, within a few hours from the date of our present number, will be opened by Queen Victoria, with pomp and royal ceremony also. We could wish that the corporate and governing body of the City had retained the same place and influence, in proportion to the wealth and numbers of the City, as it did in the days of Gresham; but the greatest of our mercantile names seem to hold aloof from civic honours; it is lamentable, but the fact. This, however, is by the way.

The present ceremonial will, in many things, resemble that which was presided over by the "Virgin Queen," for state and its observances partake of the traditional, and are transmitted down with comparatively slight changes. But in all else how different! What an empire, and what a metropolis! How vast the increase in all that constitutes the strength of nations in the England of Victoria since it was the England of Elizabeth! The empire is one of many tongues and nations; the population of its chief city is counted, not by thousands, but by hundreds of thousands; and as for the commerce of the realm and City of Gresham's royal Mistress, it was, as compared with that of the England and London of to-day, but as the rivulet to the ocean; its development has been as vast as that which could bring "Dordona's forest from an acorn cup." Between the day on which a Queen of England passed through the Temple-gate to open the first Royal Exchange, and the hour which will see another Queen of the same fair land pass along the same road on the same august errand, great has been the destiny of England among the nations of the world. At this point the mind naturally goes forward to the future, and asks itself the question, what will be the state of this "crowning city" of the traffickers of the earth, when three centuries shall have passed over the now white walls, the fair chambers, and sculptured portico of the New Exchange? What will be the condition of the Empire when the generation that gazes on the pageantry of to-day shall—with many succeeding ones—be mingled with the dust? They are solemn questions, and, happily for us, can find no answer from human intelligence. The misery of Adam, when the Angel, in Milton's immortal epic, revealed to him the doom of the future race of man, is but a type of what would be felt by all if the coming time were not, with infinite wisdom and mercy, hidden from our ken. The past we know; the present we can govern; for the future we can only hope, making our actions such as to render a cheerful hope justifiable. Let the spirit of commerce, then, when it takes up its new abode, work with the energy and activity that have always marked it. Above all, let it preserve that integrity and commercial honour which have been so long the pride of the English merchant, and then will it have done the best to secure a still further development of the wealth, extent, power, and numbers of that realm over which ELIZABETH watched, and which VICTORIA now rules, Queens who, differing in much, yet resemble each other in the extent to which they have commanded the loyalty and affection of the people, and in this also—that the commercial activity of their respective ages received the countenance of both. In its reference to our history, the opening of the NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE by Queen VICTORIA, is one of the most interesting events of modern times.

THE CHAR-A-BANC PRESENTED BY THE KING OF THE FRENCH TO HER MAJESTY.

This elegant vehicle is a modification of the family jaunting van of Normandy, and may, one day, become as great a favourite in the parks of Windsor as it is in the royal forest of Eu—at least such has been the hope of King Louis Philippe in presenting it to her Majesty. It is built to accommodate eight persons; the body of the carriage being divided into four double seats. A neat canopy, supported by brass pillars, protects the company against the sun; and from a series of rollers, on the inside, screening curtains may be drawn down as shelter from dust or rain. The framework of the carriage is light, but substantial, firmly girded with iron fittings, and suited to the traffic of rougher roads than are ordinarily found in this country. The decorations are neat and appropriate. The body is painted dark blue, with a high enamel-like polish; the seats, of platted cane, are lined with blush-coloured watered silks; the lamps, handles, edgings, &c., of silver gilt; the hangings of buff-coloured flowered serge, bordered with fringes and tassels of Bourbon white, alternating with Orleans blue. Approach to the seats is gained from the sides, by three steps, which close and shut in beneath the floor of the carriage. We wish her Majesty and her royal family—for whom, we believe, the carriage will be chiefly used—much pleasure in introducing it to a neighbourhood already Replete with art and science, taste and beauty.

Our cut, which was drawn by her Majesty's permission, represents the Char-a-banc starting from the Queen's Entrance, Windsor Castle, to conduct the King and Queen to Twickenham.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

FASHIONS FOR THE ENSUING MONTH.

PARIS, Wednesday.

The watering-places have yielded up their fair tenants, and the races are finished for the year. Every day Paris fills more and more. Fashions revive in all their pristine éclat, and assume daily more splendour. However, the fashions you will most appreciate will be the costumes de chateau, since all your English fashionables are at present sojourning at their country seats. A young belle, of the highest rank and fashion, arriving the other day on a visit at the chateau of the pretty Countess de F—— J——, and well aware that the profound repose and solitude she was invited to enjoy would consist in an uninterrupted succession of parties of pleasure, carried with her, in deference to the assurance "that ideas of dress were out of the question," a simple collection of toilettes, each adapted, with marvellous felicity, to each hour and occupation of the day, and bearing ample testimony to the well-known taste of the Baronne de G——, as distinguished for her elegance as for her wit. The chief of these costumes, and those which obtained the greatest success, were a soi-disant robe de chambre, a pelisse for country drives, a dinner and an evening dress, of which we purpose to give a description for the benefit of your fair readers.

The robe de chambre was of sky blue cachemire, lined with pink; the sleeves à la Turque, that is, open from the fore-arm, with under sleeves of pink silk: it was fastened in front with clasps of a trefoil form, trimmed with gimp. To match this charming negligé she wore Oriental slippers, embroidered in blue and pink on a black ground. Her head-dress consisted of lappets of Valenciennes lace, trimmed with pink and blue striped ribbon.

The redingote, for morning walks or drives, was of striped Pekin of two different shades of green, trimmed up the front with gimp; with small loose sleeves, coming down to a short distance of the wrist, with sous mouches of lace Point de Paris.

The bonnet accompanying this pelisse was a Leghorn, with a bow of green and white sarsnet ribbon, fastening two or three fern-leaves, which fell gracefully over the front of the bonnet.

The dinner-dress, of still greater rechérché, was of that colour which our Parisian ancestors called Cheveux de la Reine. A trimming of fringe of apple-green colour contrasted charmingly with the delicate colour of the silk. This fringe, two rows of which ornamented the skirit, after passing beneath the waistband, formed a V on the body of the dress. Three jockeys placed over the epaulettes of the half sleeve were also trimmed with the same fringe. The evening dress was in white tarlatane, with a double skirt, the edge of each skirt embroidered in coloured silk; the body not so decolleté as they have been worn of late, and the sleeves trimmed with three puffings of tarlatane, with a row of English lace at the bottom of the third. The English fashion which has universally prevailed all over Europe, that of wearing tweed paletots, is now universally adopted by ladies, modified in form and under a different name, being called a par dessus. Satin is frequently employed for the purpose—black the only colour; but Scotch cachemire is far more effective; when made outwards, of a light colour, with a bright lining within. As to the accessory ornaments, they merely consist in braiding, or in that elegant, new, and most fascinating invention, velvet lace.

The most fashionable model of autumnal mantles is made square and broad, wadded and lined with white satin, with a wide pelerine trimmed with two flounces, beneath which escape two fore-sleeves, which remain invisible. In the trimmings figure three narrow bands of velvet (which by-the-by are now employed in every possible manner), as, for example, in coiffures, mixed with blonde and flowers. The Amazon dresses, the pelisses of woollen tissue and of silk are trimmed with this velvet, which produces also a fascinating effect on papyrus pelisses. The latter, a novel tissue, only made of uniform colours, is highly distinguished. It has a high body, only opened in the shape of a V, narrow and prolonged down to the waist, and framed in by three or five narrow bands of the above-mentioned velvet. The latter are likewise adapted to silver-grey dresses of damask. That which the fashionable Russian Countess P., appeared with in the Tuileries a few days ago, had a high body, and broad turned-down collar, light whalebones inserted only near the waist. Half-sleeves, terminating in a trimming of braid, with a full under sleeve of guipure projecting beneath. The skirt with two flounces, headed with bands of velvet, and trimmed with the same below. As a promenade toilette, and as the most coquettish, we may take as a model that of the Marquise d'A——n, a dress in Gothic pekin, of a light shade of colour; the body rather low, and long waisted, with pleats fastened down below, and gathered on the epaulettes. Sleeves à la Chambord, that is to say, half tight, and only reaching a little below the elbow, leaving room for an under sleeve, with bracelets of plumetis; round the opening of the sleeve a round fold, slashed in the style of costumes of the days of Francis I. On the body, two crossway pleats, undulating and festooned; the same on the skirt, but larger. A brooch of the choicest elegance decorated the opening of the boddice, supporting, with the aid of a porte-mousqueton, a marquise chain. This jewel, of a novel invention, and now so sought after, is of exquisite workmanship. It is a chain, generally adorned with seven oblong beads, either of malachite, jasper or onyx. With the assistance of the double mousqueton, this chain, which resembles the chaplets worn by dervishes, can be made to join most elegantly the brooch at the upper part of the dress, or pass from right to left, over the waistband, where, on one side, it may bear a watch, and be maintained on the other by an ornamental hook.

Ornaments for coiffure will be exceedingly varied. The feathers and shaded willow, which were so much admired at the exposition, were only forerunners of much handsomer articles. Already we have embroidery-feathers, follettes glacées, hybrid willows, double branched marabouts, peacock-zephyrs glacés, and jasped herons, tempting the élegantes in every first-rate shop. Capotes and bonnets have not as yet changed their form, but we are on the eve of a reform. Some ladies of the highest fashion show a tendency to make the coiffures only half height—as the beautful Baroness F——t does. As fancy costume, lace barbes, mixed with ribbons and still more small Albanese toques, made in chenille and gold net, will enjoy a furious vogue for the theatre and for balls. Our communications with Algeria are exerting a curious effect upon fashion—above all in the style of surtouts and mantles. On all sides you see nothing but burnous, cabans, caftans, and Moorish capes, of most eccentric forms—and the white burnous for the crush-room of the opera, so exquisitely elegant, and whose scarceness gives them an additional merit, are still the perfection of bon ton. This is another instance how much costume, in all ages, is connected with the conquests and history of nations.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Paris Opposition press has not yet sated its appetite for slanderous accusation and insinuation in reference to the recent visit of the King, but the virulence of the attacks is nevertheless diminished.

There is little news in the papers. The Duke d'Aumale had arrived in Paris from Africa, after an absence of twelve months.

The trial of the Duke de Montmorency, Prince de Robecq, for the distribution of alleged seditious emblems, took place on Monday, before the Court of Assize of the Seine. The Duke de Fitzjames, Marquis de Larochejaquelin, and several other distinguished personages of the Legitimist party, were in court. The Prince de Robecq was defended by M. Berryer. The prosecution was conducted by the Avocat-General. It was urged that there had been seized at the house of the noble defendant busts of the Duke de Bordeaux, and books containing entries, showing that these emblems of sedition, as they were styled by the Avocat-General, had been distributed and sold. The Avocat-General stated that the defence set up was, that these busts had been sold for the purpose of increasing the fund of the Society of St. Louis, whose professional object is the relief of distressed persons of the Legitimist party, but he contended that this society was a mere blind to conceal the political manœuvres of that party. M. Berryer denied that there was anything political in the affair. He asserted that the society was purely one of charity, and that his client had been actuated by charitable motives alone. After a very animated appeal to the jury, to which the Avocat-General replied, the President summed up, and the jury, after deliberating only five minutes, pronounced a verdict of acquittal.

The Moniteur Parisien contains a very significant announcement in these terms:—"It is said that Captain Bruat, Governor of the Marquesas, is promoted to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour." We do not see any confirmation of the paragraph in the Débats, but our private letters speak of the news as positive, and anticipate a good deal of excitement in consequence of it.

A telegraphic despatch had been received in Paris from Perpignan, dated the 16th inst., at nine o'clock in the morning, with the intelligence that Generals Ametller and Santa Cruz, accompanied by other refugees, having secretly quitted Perigueux for the purpose of returning to Spain, were arrested during the night of the 15th and 16th, at Ceret, in the department of the Eastern Pyrenees, by the French custom-house officers.

The Journal des Débats has a long and mysterious article, the object of which is to prove that the translator of the treaty between England and China was bribed by the Chinese Government to suppress certain parts of the treaty, and change the meaning of others; the consequence of which, it contends, will be to ruin the recently-established commercial town of Victoria, in which the British merchants have expended vast sums of money, and to carry the monopoly of the trade back again to Canton. The Débats attempts to supply the omissions made by the translator; but although we are sure that no respectable contemporary would not knowingly lend itself to a misrepresentation, yet as the treaty was ratified many months ago, and there have been ample opportunities to verify it, we are of opinion that the Débats is the victim of some mystification.

According to the latest accounts from Algeria, Abd-el-Kader continues encamped at El-Aondj, on the right bank of the Moulouïja, twenty-five leagues to the east of the Morocco frontier. His Deira is composed of about three hundred tents of the tribes of Hachem, Diafra, Aeni-Amer, &c.; seven hundred or eight hundred tents of the same tribes are dispersed amongst the Beni-Senassen, the Messirdo, &c. The camp is composed of three hundred cavalry, the horses very bad; and about three hundred and fifty infantry, badly armed. Before occupying this position, the Emir was at Oued-el-Kesseb, near to Aïoun-Sidi-Mellouk. It is only twenty-four days since he retired to El-Aondj. This movement was made in the direction of the mountains, in all probability on learning that the treaty of peace had been signed by the Emperor. In the Deira and camp nearly everybody has been laid up with a violent fever, and many persons have fallen victims to it. Abd-el-Kader has been seriously ill.

The French war party have discovered another mare's nest, on the alleged occupation by England of the north front of Prince's Island, on the western coast of Africa, belonging to the Portuguese, under the pretext, as they call it, of establishing there a depôt of coal for the transatlantic steam-packets. The National de l'Ouest thus describes the motive which England has in view. It says: "the following is the real object of England in taking forcible possession of this important point, for the making it only a depôt for coal may be very well believed to be a mere pretence. France has just established a factory on the Gabon, a point essentially military for her navy in time of war. Prince's Island being at the mouth of the Gabon, the English have evidently determined to secure to themselves a point from which they could blockade the river against our ships in the event of a collision. Thus, besides the violation of a friendly territory, an excess which the English have the shameful habit of committing, their attempt on Prince's Island is directed against us. It must be confessed, after so many instances, that if the entente cordiale produce any fruits they are bitter to us."

SPAIN.

Our letters from Madrid contain the announcement of an event likely to create considerable interest in Spain, and which indeed may lead to important consequences. Queen Christina was married on the 13th inst. in her own private apartments to the Duke of Rianzares, the illustrious obscure who was so well known formerly as Munoz. Every one is aware that a marriage took place between these parties some years ago, but it was never recognised; but it is now asserted that the formal announcement of the marriage is made in consequence of the permission of the Court of Rome. The ceremony on this latter occasion was performed by the Patriarch of the Indies, in presence of the Ministers of the Crown. It does not appear that the young Queen was present. This avowed marriage is likely to give rise to some difficult questions, and a Council of Ministers was convoked, to consider what should be done in the circumstances. The principal questions which will come before the Council are—1st. As to the form in which this great event will be published to the world. 2d. If her Majesty the Queen Mother is to be allowed to retain her title, or if she is to sink down to that of Duchess of Rianzares. 3d. As to the amount of pension to be settled upon Queen Christina out of the patrimony of Queen Isabella; and lastly, it is to be determined whether or not the Ministry should demand of the Cortes, in the name of a national remuneration and testimony of gratitude to her Majesty, an addition to the pension to be allowed to her by Queen Isabella, in the event of the sum allowed not being equal to her Majesty's dowry.

Some other exciting questions arise out of this event, for instance, in regard to the legitimacy of certain children, and the mode in which Queen Christina has disposed of large sums of money left to her by the will of King Ferdinand only so long as she remained a widow. By her marriage the Queen loses her title as Queen Dowager, but another decree is to continue to her the title of Queen, and to preserve to her all her privileges at the court.

The letters by the ordinary mail are to the 15th only, but a telegraphic despatch, dated the 18th, announces the constitution of the two Chambers:—

"M. Castro y Orozco has been appointed President of the Congress. The four Vice-Presidents and the four Secretaries have been chosen from the different parties in the Chambers.

"The Vice-Presidents are MM. Pacheco, Govantes, Armeco, and Perpina.

"The bill relative to the reform of the Constitution has been presented to the Congress. The Ministry have, at the same time, demanded permission to decree some organic laws."

The Madrid papers say that the treaty between Spain and Morocco was being executed with the best grace and faith. The affair of the Rayo, it was said, is likely to lose all its gravity in the official investigation instituted. It appears that the officer of the Rayo had really passed the line of limitation, and that the vessel had been fired upon by the English batteries of Gibraltar without any intention of sinking it. The hope that this delicate affair will be arranged by diplomatic negotiations is openly expressed, it is added, by Mr. Bulwer.

PORTUGAL.

According to our Lisbon letters of the 16th inst., the report of the committee appointed to inquire into the use made of the extraordinary powers granted to Government during the late troubles (of which committee the brother of the minister Cabral was a member) was favourable to the Government. The documents referred to in the minister's report of the use made of those powers were moved for, and their production opposed by the Government. The account of the expenditure of the loan of 2000 contos for the suppression of the revolt were likewise moved for, and refused, but promised to be produced at some future period.

A bill has been introduced into the Chamber of Peers for the abolition o slavery in the Portuguese possessions in Asia, by the Count de Lavraido and the Viscount Sa da Bandeira, but was opposed by Ministers, and was lost by a majority of 23 votes against 18.

The peers have likewise had an important discussion on the question of ecclesiastical education. The bill for erecting diocesan seminaries throughout the kingdom, in which the clergy, with a view to their moral perfection, are to be educated apart from lay institutions (only a small proportion going to Coimbra for a complete course of theology), passed the Deputies last session, and came now before the Upper Chamber. The Deputies had decided that the professors in these seminaries should be appointed by the Government, but the Committee of the Peers recommended that it should be vested in the diocesan prelates respectively. But the charter declares (rightly or wrongly) that it belongs to the Executives to fill up ecclesiastical benefices as wall as civil appointments; the Government remained silent, taking no part whatever in the discussion; and the peers voted, by 23 against 18, against the proposal of their committee. The ecclesiastical professors will therefore be appointed by the Government, the prelates having only the privilege of proposing.

BELGIUM.

The Belgian Chambers were opened by King Leopold on Tuesday, with rather a long speech, which, however, it is not necessary to publish, as it related chiefly to local matters. In the first part of the speech, the King alluded to commercial topics, and stated that he had concluded with the German Zollverein a treaty of navigation and commerce. His Majesty then said, that by a recent convention, the postal communications between Belgium and Great Britain have been regulated on a basis at once more extended and more favourable to commerce. The charge on letters has been reduced, and special advantages have been stipulated for the transmission of foreign correspondence. The only other point worth notice was a reference to finance. His Majesty announced that the Government had been able to effect two important financial operations. The receipts balanced the expenditure, but his Majesty recommended the adoption of some plan to create a permanent excess of revenue.

HOLLAND.

The Session of the States General was opened on Monday by the King in person, with a speech which did not present any remarkable feature. His Majesty alluded to the satisfactory state of political relations, to the improvement in some branches of manufacture, and to his desire for the increase of instruction. The King also stated, that Holland would not confine itself to bare words when improvements in commercial legislation should have to be considered; and after remarking upon a determination to effect every practicable economy, in conclusion implored the blessing of God on the country, and expressed a hope that it would continue to develop those virtues which have always characterised the Dutch people.

GREECE.

Letters from Athens of the 6th inst. give a most deplorable account of the condition of Greece. Complete disunion exists in the Cabinet, and a change of Ministry appears inevitable. King Otho probably, by way of dissipating his anxiety, had just departed on an excursion to Eubœa and the frontier. The letter adds:—"Never since that period of anarchy which succeeded the assassination of the President Count Capodistria has the country been in so deplorable and lawless a state. From every province daily reports arrive of fearful crimes. During the few last days of the election for Elis six persons were assassinated. In Maina more than fifty persons have fallen victims to political enmity or private revenge. Within the last fortnight thirty-six acts of brigandage have been committed in Acarnania, attended with six murders. Yesterday an official report was received here that a band of thirty brigands had taken possession of the narrow mountainous pass of Klissova, in Acarnania, and had detained and plundered every one that passed, binding them to trees till their day's work was over; and in this manner more than seventy persons had been robbed and ill-treated."

THE WEST INDIES.

The Teviot steamer has arrived with the West India mails. The dates are:—Demerara, the 18th; St. Kitts, the 20th; Barbadoes, St. Vincent, and Dominica, the 21st; Jamaica, the 23rd; Antigua, the 24th; and St. Lucia, the 26th ult. The St. Thomas dates are of the 30th. The intelligence contained in the papers is of little interest. There is a notice of the earthquake, but it does not contain any details, in addition to those received by the last arrival.

The Demerara Legislature have voted, in accordance with the terms of Lord Stanley's despatch, £75,000, for the encouragement of Hill Coolie emigration, and the revenue of the colony appears to be increasing.

The last cargo of sugar for the season had been shipped from Barbadoes, and the total quantity exported is estimated at 22,558 hhds., which is about 2000 short of the production of 1843. The weather in this island continued excessively warm and dry, so that the appearance of the young canes was scarcely so favourable as at the departure of the previous mail.

UNITED STATES.

The Cambridge, Captain Barstow, has brought New York papers to the 4th inst., four days later than those received by the Britannia, but their contents are uninteresting. The papers are almost exclusively occupied with electioneering news. The commercial accounts are favourable: more business was doing.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SMUGGLERS AND CONTRABANDISTS.—At the Surrey Sessions, on Tuesday, a man was indicted for having fraudulently obtained £2 from a tea-dealer, who had been induced to give him that sum on account for two pretended parcels of smuggled tea, which he was to purchase from the prisoner at the low price of 2s. 6d. per lb., though the tea was declared to be worth 8s. On opening the packets, however, they were found to contain (with the exception of half an ounce of tea, skilfully disposed in each at a corner, whence the prisoner drew a small sample) sawdust and ashes. The prosecutor, on cross-examination, admitted that he sold contraband goods. The prisoner, having a good character, was recommended to mercy by the jury, and this, the chairman said, saved him from transportation; as it was (he having been found guilty also on another similar charge), he was sentenced to twelve months' hard labour. The prosecutor was refused his expenses, the bench severely reprobating his dishonest design to defraud the revenue and the fair trader.

FATAL OCCURRENCE ON THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY.—An inquest has been held at Alpraham, (Cheshire) on view of the body of Elizabeth Astbury, aged 39, who was killed by the early train from Crewe on Tuesday morning week, at about three o'clock. It appeared in evidence that the deceased was a native of Stoke, in the Staffordshire Potteries, and had been visiting her friends at Manchester. The footsteps of the deceased were traced from Crewe to Choldmondeston; at the latter place she was found dead by Evan Roberts, the engine-man employed by the Grand Junction Company, who indistinctly saw something between the rails as he passed Cholmondeston from Crewe, by the three o'clock train on Tuesday morning; on his return from Chester, shortly afterwards, he stopped the train at Cholmondeston, where he found the body of the deceased dreadfully mutilated, portions of the skull and brain being scattered on and about the rails. The jury returned a verdict of accidenta death, and imposed a nominal deodand on the train.

Letters from Cordova of the 11th inst. mention that a rich landed proprietor in the neighbourhood of Fuente Genil, in the Quebradas, had been carried off by a troop of riders, who demanded 50,000 reals ransom. The smuggler Wavarro, and seven other brigands, were said to be the authors of this act of violence.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

The Court met again on Monday. The Recorder, in his address to the grand jury, stated that the calendar contained the names of 180 prisoners for trial, and that some of the offences were of a very serious description.

THE ATTEMPTED MURDER AT A SHOOTING GALLERY IN HOLBORN.

On Wednesday the Hon. William Ross Tuchet, aged 21, was tried before Mr. Justice Maule and Mr. Baron Rolfe, for firing a pistol at Mr. Smith, the gun-maker, of Holborn, with intent to murder him.

The prisoner looked calmly round in a perfectly indifferent manner, and then leant forward upon the bar, as if lost in thought. He is a man of mild and prepossessing appearance, and of handsome though somewhat delicate features. On being called upon to plead to the indictment, he in a low tone of voice replied "Not guilty."

Mr. Charnock, who appeared for the prosecution, then proceeded briefly to state the circumstances of the case to the jury.

The first witness called was Mr. Thomas Smith, who was still in a feeble condition from the effects of his wound. He deposed:—I reside at 288, High Holborn, and am a gun-maker. I also keep a shooting gallery there. On the 6th of July last the prisoner came into my premises. I had never seen him before, to my knowledge. I was in the gallery at the time. My son Alfred Smith was in the shop. On coming into the shop he asked if he could be accommodated with a pair of duelling pistols. I got him a brace, and loaded them myself. He took one of them and fired it off, but complained that it pulled too hard, saying he should like one that would go off more easily. I told him I could set the hair-trigger, and then it would go off sufficiently easily. I did so, and he fired it off, but he then complained that it went off too easily, and said "let me have it as I had it at first." I loaded him a third and a fourth. At first he fired at a distance of fifteen yards, but afterwards wished to have a longer listance, and the third pistol he fired at a distance of thirty yards, and hit the mark. While I was loading the fifth pistol, the fourth was discharged, and I exclaimed "Good God, I am shot; this gentleman has shot me!" I afterwards was removed to the hospital, but did not have the ball extracted until some weeks afterwards. Some corroborative evidence was then given.

Mr. Clarkson (with whom was Mr. Bodkin) then rose to address the jury for the prisoner. The defence which the learned gentleman had to submit was that of insanity; and, having entered into a narrative of the family and circumstances of the prisoner, and the state of his mind previously to and down to the period of the unfortunate transaction, said he should prove, on the highest testimony, both medical and otherwise, that he had been in an unsound state of mind for some time past, and was so at the period when he committed the offence of which he stood charged.

Mr. Clarkson called Lord Audley, Dr. Munro, Dr. Warburton, and other witnesses, who gave evidence which left no doubt whatever as to the insane state of the prisoner's mind.

Mr. Justice Maule summed up, and the jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict of "Not Guilty, on the ground of Insanity."

The prisoner was accordingly ordered to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure.

The Slave Trading Case.—On Wednesday morning Thomas Jennings, the captain of the Augusta, surrendered on discharge of his bail, to answer an indictment charging him with having navigated the said ship with a view to carry on the slave trade. It will, be in the recollection of our readers that the defendant at the last sessions of this court had put in a plea of autrefois acquit, to which a demurrer was taken on the part of the Crown, and the question was argued before the presiding judges, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Justice Cresswell. Those learned individuals took time to consider their judgment, and on Wednesday Mr. Baron Rolfe read a lengthy judgment, which overruled the objections taken on behalf of the prisoner, and held that the prisoner had not been tried at Sierra Leone for the offence specifically charged in the present indictment. The case on the application of the prisoner's Counsel has since been postponed till next session.

Manslaughter.—Last week, we gave an account of the examination at Bow-street, of Thomas Stokes, charged with the murder of Obadiah Garrett. On Wednesday he was placed at the bar for trial, but Mr. Clarkson, for the prisoner, begged leave to retract the plea of not guilty. His client was now anxious to plead guilty. He had been originally committed on the charge of wilful murder, but the grand jury had thrown out the bill, and sent up one for the manslaughter.—Mr. Bodkin, for the prosecution, recommended the prisoner to the merciful consideration of the Court.—A number of highly respectable witnesses, some of whom had come up from Exmouth, the prisoner's native place, gave him a most excellent character, and one of them produced a paper signed by several magistrates, bearing testimony to the respectability and good character of the prisoner.—Mr Baron Rolfe addressed the prisoner, and having commented upon the evil effects of intoxication, sentenced him to three months' imprisonment.

Frauds of Horse-Dealers.—George Henry Ward, aged 39, stable-keeper; and George Ward, aged 19, groom, were indicted for obtaining, by false pretences, from Mr. W. Angerstein the sum of £115 10s., with intent to cheat and defraud him thereof. In another count the defendants were charged with the offence of conspiracy.—Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Ballantine were for the prosecution; and Messrs. Bodkin and Wilains appeared for the defendants.—The charge was made against the defendants under the following circumstances:—The prosecutor, a gentleman residing at Blackheath, had been attracted by an advertisement in the Times, representing three horses for sale, with a description given of their excellent qualities, together with their sound state of health; the advertisement concluded by stating that a fair trial would be allowed to any person likely to become a purchaser. Mr. Angerstein went to Gloucester-mews, and was shown the two horses and a mare by the younger prisoner. He (Mr. Angerstein) inquired whether they were the same horses that had been advertised in the Times. He was informed by the younger prisoner that they were the same, and that he had the care of them, and that they had been sent to the elder prisoner, Ward, to be sold by commission. The elder prisoner came into the stables about half an hour after, and stated that the horses had been sent to him by a person of the name of Lloyd—that he knew the family very well, and that they lived at Stratford-upon Avon. Mr. Angerstein gave a cheque upon Glyn and Co. for the £115 10s., receiving a warranty from the elder prisoner for the soundness of the horses, and that if they should not turn out to be what had been represented, the money should be returned in seven days afterwards. Mr. Angerstein, immediately the sale was concluded, sent his servant, together with the younger prisoner, with the horses to the Veterinary College, to have them passed as sound. A very short time elapsed before Mr. Angerstein received a letter from Mr. Spooner, of the College, informing him that all the horses were unsound. He (Mr. Angerstein), upon the receipt of the above letter, ordered his servant to take the horses back, for by this time he discovered that a gross fraud had been practised upon him; and until another advertisement appeared in the paper, similar to the one which had taken him in, all trace of the prisoners was lost. This second advertisement nearly entrapped a Mr. Prior, who was anxious to purchase a horse; and seeing that the advertisement represented the description of horse likely to suit him, he proceeded to the place referred to, and was only prevented being duped by the timely arrival of the police in plain clothes, who, by some sign, put him on his guard.—Several witnesses were called in support of the above evidence.—The case was then argued at considerable length both for the prosecution and the defence.—The Recorder having summed up in a very clear manner, the jury returned a verdict against both prisoners of Guilty upon the fourth and fifth counts, wherein it states that the prisoners conspired together to cheat and defraud Mr. Angerstein.—The Recorder said, to put an end to such diabolical frauds, he felt it his duty to make an example of the present case; but he should do so with a marked distinction, as he looked upon the younger prisoner as merely the servant of the elder, and, therefore, should sentence him to four months imprisonment in the new prison, Westminster Bridewell, and the elder prisoner to twelve months in the same place.

POLICE.

A Man Charged with Murdering his Wife—At Union-hall, a Mr. Henry Brenton, an apothecary, in Newport-street, Lambeth, has been examined on suspicion of causing the death of his wife soon after she had given birth to a child. Mr. Houston, a surgeon, the prisoner's father in law, stated, that on last Thursday se'nnight he was informed that his daughter had received considerable injury at the hands of the prisoner, and that she died of those injuries. The witness described that an examination had taken place since his daughter's decease, and that it was pronounced that the injuries inflicted were on the lower part of the spine. He was present when his daughter was dying, and she mentioned to him that the prisoner had done her the injury. The witness added that he believed no person was in the room at the time of the alleged injury, but the nurse attending on his daughter had heard a scuffle in the bed-room. The nurse (named Lee) stated, that while she was attending on the deceased last Thursday se'nnight, on leaving the room and going down stairs, she heard a scuffling noise in the bed-room, and heard the deceased complain of ill-usage on the part of her husband; that the next morning witness found her mistress insensible, and although she recovered her senses in some measure after that, yet she dwindled away until Saturday, and then expired. She heard the deceased tell her father that the prisoner had ill-used her, but she did not describe the manner in which he did it. Mr. Fisher, a surgeon, stated, that he had instituted an external examination on being apprised of the circumstances, and discovered that her death had arisen from injury of the lower part of the spine, which appeared to have been caused by violence. The prisoner said, that the injury of which his wife died was from natural causes, and that he had done nothing to produce it. Mr. Traill remanded the prisoner until a post mortem examination of the deceased had taken place. [An inquest was held on the body of Mrs. Brenton, at the George, Lambeth Walk, on Tuesday. Mr. James Laver, surgeon, of Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, deposed to making a post mortem examination of the body, and after detailing at considerable length the results, he attributed death to the paralysis of the phrenic nerve. The spinal chord was affected by some shock, but whether from a fall or blow, he could not say. He had no doubt that some degree of violence had been used. The deceased and her husband had hitherto lived on very good terms. The Coroner adjourned the inquiry for further evidence.]

Committal for Murder.—Alfred Edwards, a young man describing himself as "a pickle manufacturer," who has been many times remanded from Worship-street, underwent a final examination on Monday, upon a charge of having poisoned Jane Gregory, a young woman of loose character, with whom he had for some time past lived. There had been a little quarrel between them, but on the occasion out of which the present charge originated the prisoner visited the deceased at her lodgings in Spitalfields, and a reconciliation appeared to have taken place, and in the course of that evening the deceased drank several times from a bottle containing what was said to be "brandy and bitters," given to her at the time by the prisoner. She was afterwards exceedingly sick, and continued so until the following morning, when she died with the symptoms of poison, having repeatedly, and with her dying breath, declared to every one that her illness was occasioned solely by the liquid which "Alf," the prisoner, had given her. In the stomach a slight odour of hydrocyanic (prussic) acid was detected, arising no doubt from the flavouring of bitter almonds from which it is abundantly obtained. At the prisoner's residence Sergeant Lambert found a paper, marked "Poison," containing a quantity of sugar of lead, and another paper containing a white powder, which Dr. Leeson said was what is called white precipitate, used sometimes for cleaning plate, &c., but decidedly poisonous. The Coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Wilful murder" against the prisoner more than a fortnight since, and the Coroner's warrant was of course issued for his committal to Newgate upon that charge; but the evidence appeared to be very unsatisfactory, and at length it was suggested that the body, which had been buried immediately after the inquest, should be exhumed and further examined. On Friday last it was accordingly taken from the grave, and such of the viscera as were required being removed from it in the presence of the churchwardens, the police, and other witnesses, the remains were again committed to the earth. After a good deal of evidence, Mr. Broughton informed the prisoner that he would be committed to Newgate to take his trial, and the witnesses were bound over to prosecute. The prisoner, who appeared very dejected, and looked as if he had wept a great deal, said he would reserve his defence until the trial.

Two Legal Wranglers.—Costs and Sharp Practice.—In general the practitioners of the law are amiable enough amongst their own class and vent their ill-humour only on those against whom they proceed. An instance, however, occurred at Guildhall, on Monday, of a dispute between the attorneys themselves; it also afforded an illustration of the tender mercies of the law, as well as the general practice of the profession in regard to legal technicalities.—Mr. Guy, of the firm of Addis and Guy, solicitors, Westminster, appeared before Alderman Wilson, upon a summons charging him with having used threats to Mr. May, another solicitor, on the 16th inst., at the Judge's Chambers in Chancery-lane, whereby a breach of the peace might have been occasioned.—The complainant said they were before the Judge on Wednesday, on an information in a writ, and on leaving the chambers the defendant said to him, "Unless you recall the letter you have written to me, or apologise, I will horsewhip you. I will bring a stick twice as big as the one you carry." He told his clerk that he intended to assault him. Witness wrote to him, requiring him to apologise, and he replied by an abusive letter.—Joseph Liddell, Mr. May's clerk, was called to prove that half an hour after the conversation with Mr. May, Mr. Guy told witness he should "slap it into him" when he saw him.—Mr. Guy denied that he had used the language mentioned by the clerk, but he admitted having demanded that the letter should be recalled or apologised for.—Mr. May said whatever he had written was with consideration, and he could not withdraw it.—Mr. Guy then proceeded to state that a poor man at Twickenham owed a small debt of £5, and Mr. May was instructed to apply for it. He did so by letter, requiring payment by one o'clock next day, or a writ would be issued. In the course of the post this letter would not reach the poor man until the morning of the day the money was to be paid by one o'clock. Defendant was applied to, and on behalf of the poor man begged for time, but the writ was taken out, and £2 12s. costs incurred. Defendant wrote again requesting delay, or he would take advantage of a technical error to annul the proceedings. The answer was a refusal, unless the attorney would undertake to pay the debt and costs. Defendant then took out the summons to appear before the Judge at chambers, on the ground that it was not a proper writ or a true copy. The letter he received from Mr. May on this occasion had called forth the demand that it should be recalled. Mr. May began his letter by saying he was surprised defendant had condescended "to low tricks," and that as the Judge then in attendance set his face against "sharp practitioners," he would probably amend the error on the payment of a small fee. Upon hearing the summons, the Judge postponed his decision. As they retired, Guy said to Mr. May, "When this is over, I shall have a matter to settle with you." Mr. May replied, "I should like to catch you at it," holding up a great stick. Defendant told him he should bring a stick twice as big as that, perhaps, the next time they met. Mr. May had no right to impute low tricks and sharp practice to him.—Alderman Wilson asked the complainant what had induced him to use such offensive terms to a lawyer?—Mr. May said he considered it was a shabby objection. It was that he had omitted to strike out a printed word in the writ, and to substitute another (the name of the new Judge for Lord Abinger's.)—Alderman Wilson replied, that all his experience with counsel and solicitor led him to conclude that the profession considered it perfectly fair to take every possible objection to their opponent's proceedings. He thought this had been established in a case which had recently agitated the political world.—Mr. May said it was done for the sake of annoyance, and not to obtain time for his client, for another writ could be obtained before the 24th, and no further step could be taken on the first writ till then.—Mr. Guy asked which was the sharpest practice—to object to an error in a writ, or to write to a debtor to pay the amount by a certain time, and issue the writ before an answer could be received?—Mr. May begged it might be understood that this was not the case. They had an answer before the writ was issued. The wife called and said the money could not be paid for two months. It was not convenient to the creditor to wait so long.—Alderman Wilson said they had each done their best for their clients, and there was quite as sharp practice on one side as the other.—Mr. May reminded the alderman he had not been charged with sharp practice by Mr. Guy.—Alderman Wilson thought the term was nevertheless applicable, and he dismissed the defendant on paying a fine of five shillings for using threatening language.

Dando Eclipsed.—At Union Hall on Thursday Thomas Stelwell, was charged before Mr. Traill with stealing two bushels of oysters, belonging to William Smith, a green-grocer at Clerkenwell. The prisoner was employed by the complainant to carry home two bushels of oysters. Instead, however, of taking the oysters home the prisoner absconded, and was taken into custody the preceding night. In reply to Mr. Traill, the prisoner said that being hungry he ate the oysters. Mr. Traill (with surprise)—What! two bushels of oysters! Why, you have achieved greater wonders in gluttony than the man Dando, who was notorious for consuming large quantities of the same description of shell-fish. Prisoner—It's a fact, Sir, I ate them all. Mr. Traill—Then I shall commit you for trial.

A Woman Charged with Stabbing her Husband.—At Clerkenwell Police-office on Wednesday, Mrs. Elizabeth Lewis, a fierce looking woman, of lofty stature, was charged with stabbing Mr. James Lewis, her husband, a veterinary surgeon, residing in Long-yard, Lamb's Conduit-street.—It appeared that the parties have been married for twelve years, and that the wife had been always addicted to habits of intemperance, and has, in order to support them, disposed of property belonging to the prosecutor to the amount of £150. On Sunday last the prosecutor remonstrated with her on the impropriety of her conduct, and the bad example she was giving her children. The prisoner immediately seized a fork; he ran towards the door, but before he could get out she stabbed him in the back with it, and occasioned three painful, though not deep, wounds by its prongs. The prosecutor turned about to reproach her with her brutality, but, seizing another fork, she stabbed him under the right shoulder. She was then secured, and the prosecutor conveyed to the London University Hospital, where the house surgeon dressed the wounds. Those near the shoulder were considered dangerous. This was not the first time she had maltreated him, and he considered his life to be in danger from her violence.—Mr. Combe (to the prisoner): What have you to say to the charge? Prisoner: He abused me in a shameful manner.—Mr. Combe: But you should not have taken up the fork.—Prisoner: What made him strike me with a stick, and throw the chair at me?—The prosecutor said he held up the chair to save himself from the fork, but never touched her before she stabbed him.—In answer to a question from the magistrate, he said he was still under the hands of the surgeon.—The prisoner was remanded.

The Case of a Father Prosecuted by his Son.—Last week we gave an account of the examination of William Brocksopp, sen., charged by William Brocksopp, his son, with stealing from him a gold ring and a portfolio. The case presented the unfilial and heartless spectacle of a son, not yet of age, prosecuting a father, who was stated to have been some time struggling against adversity with a large family, his business having been formerly that of a respectable grocer and tea-dealer in the Borough. At the last hearing it was very naturally supposed that an amicable arrangement would take place, but when Mr. Brocksopp, sen., re-appeared upon his re-examination at Union Hall, he handed in the following note, which his son, in pursuance of his intentions, had addressed to him:—

13, Norfolk-place, Kent-road, Oct. 16.

Mr. Brocksopp,—If you are willing to deliver me the articles I claim, being the two rings, gold pin, and portfolio, or give me the tickets and the money for which they are pledged, I will drop any further prosecution. If they are not delivered up on these terms you must take the consequences. If not settled by to-morrow, by four o'clock, my solicitor has my instructions to make out the necessary brief.

I remain, sir, yours most respectfully,

To Mr. Wm. Brocksopp, sen. Wm. Brocksopp.

The magistrate said he expected to have heard no more of this charge. The son immediately replied that his father had taken the box without his sanction, and pawned the things, and as he did not think proper to restore them, he should, in agreement with the notice in his letter, pursue the charge. The magistrate said, that as he was unable to produce evidence of his father's stealing the articles, illegally pawning was the utmost charge he could bring against his father. The son said he was still willing to forego the prosecution on the articles being delivered up. Mr. Brocksopp denounced, in severe terms, his son's harsh and unparalleled conduct; in his unfortunate state he should be unable to restore the jewellery if so adjudged, not possessing the means of doing so. The son said that his father, unless checked, would deprive him of all his property; he some time ago prevented him from obtaining £2000. Mr. Brocksopp denied this assertion.—The Magistrate: Then I suppose the principle of revenge incites you to adopt this course against your father?—The son denied the allegation, and complained loudly of his father's general misconduct towards him. Recrimination ensued between the parties, which the magistrate stopped by stating that Mr. Brocksopp must deliver up the articles to his son, or he must issue an order to compel him. Mr. Brocksopp stated his utter inability to redeem the things, and he was then informed of the consequences of his neglecting the order to be made upon him.—Mr. Traill, the magistrate of Union-Hall, has received the following letter in reference to this case:—

"Kennington-road, October 23.

"Sir,—Will you be kind enough to accept the small sum enclosed, viz., 4s.—3s. to be presented to Mr. Brocksopp, sen., and the remainder to purchase a rope for his son.

(Signed) "R. B."

Mr. Edwin, the chief clerk, said the money should be disposed of agreeably to the request of the writer.—[We question whether the annals of the causes célèbre can afford any parallel to the case of a son pursuing a father, already prostrated by misfortune, for the alleged robbery of a few trifling articles which he is utterly unable to restore. We would recommend to Mr. Brocksopp, jun., a perusal of the fifth commandment, or, at all events, should he persevere in disregarding the divine precepts as well as the common dictates of humanity, there is the consolation of knowing that juries, in spite of the abuse heaped upon them, always have a fellow feeling with the oppressed and unfortunate.]

IRELAND.

Difficulties of Father Mathew.—The celebrated Father Mathew has been arrested, while in Dublin, for the balance of a debt incurred for temperance medals. A subscription has been set on foot to relieve the rev. gentleman from his difficulties, and a very earnest appeal has been made in his favour. [Surely Temperance, like Repeal, is not to be made a pretence for drawing money from the pockets of the people.]

The Repeal Association.—The proceedings of the Repeal Association become gradually less interesting, and the attendance also decreases. On Monday last Dr. Nagle read a letter from Mr. Henry Grattan, M.P., which accompanied a presentation of 100 copies of the memoirs of his father, the late Mr. Grattan, to the association. The letter went at considerable length into the policy of establishing repeal reading-rooms through the country, and dwelt on the benefits to be derived from them. The writer contrasted the extensive system of education that prevailed in America with that existing in this country, and then observes, "that it would be for the association to follow up the great example afforded by that country, and forward the establishment of libraries everywhere, and support these reading rooms throughout the country. With that view I beg to place at the disposal of the association 100 copies of the memoirs of the late Mr. Grattan, amounting to 400 octavo volumes. They comprise the most interesting period of Irish history; they set forth the proceedings of 1782, and detail the successful efforts of the glorious and immortal volunteers; they contain authentic letters of the ablest statesmen in Ireland and England, and official documents that never before appeared. They may serve to raise the character of that country which it is now the fashion to depress, and rescue from oblivion the most glorious period of her annals, when her people were strong and generous, but, alas, too credulous and too confiding; they may teach the rising generation to revere the memory of those departed patriots who struggled so nobly for their liberties; may still cherish the virtues of her people; may generate a race of patriots; and thus convert them into a race of heroes." Dr. Nagle moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Grattan for his magnificent donation, which was seconded by the Hon. Mr. Hutchinson, and passed with acclamation. A discussion arose, chiefly with reference to the state of the Registries in Ireland, and many letters were read, announcing small subscriptions to the Repeal fund. The amount of the week's rent was stated to be £391 6s.

Melancholy Death of a Barrister.—A very afflicting occurrence took place on Saturday afternoon, in the neighbourhood of Finglass, a village about three miles on the north side of Dublin. Mr. John Walsh, barrister, after concluding his business in the Insolvent Court, walked out in the direction of Finglass, taking with him two dogs. Adjacent to Finglass there is a large quarry hole, filled with water to the depth, it is said, of thirty feet in some parts, and in which, it is thought, Mr. Walsh sent the dogs to swim. Be that, however, as it may, the lifeless body of the unfortunate gentleman was discovered in the water, about five o'clock, by a policeman. It is thought that while he was walking on the edge of the quarry a portion of the earth gave way beneath his feet, and he was precipitated into the water. Mr. Walsh, ten or twelve years ago, had been an active member and a frequent speaker at the Trades Political Union. At the election for Dublin, in 1835, he was the proposer of Mr. O'Connell. Subsequently he went to the bar, and devoted himself with diligence to the business of his profession. He has left a wife and young children. On Monday an inquest was held on the body of this lamented gentleman, when the jury returned the following verdict:—"We find that the deceased, John Walsh, accidentally came by his death by drowning in a quarry-hole, through which the river Tolka runs, in the parish of Finglass, county Dublin, on Saturday, the 19th day of October."

The entire military force now in Ireland consists of about 22,000 men of all arms.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Robbery at St. Thomas's Church, Southwark.—On Sunday last, the church of St. Thomas, Southwark, was the scene of unusual bustle and confusion, in consequence of the loss of the whole of the communion plate, consisting of several pieces of silver, which had been in the possession of the parish authorities for the last 200 years. The plate had been deposited in its usual place of safety at the commencement of the present month, and on opening the safe, on Sunday, the contents were found to have been removed. Information having been forwarded to the Southwark-bridge-road police-station, a diligent search was made by several officers, but no clue could be discovered. A small crow-bar was found, used by housebreakers, near the entrance of the church in St. Thomas's-street, and on making more minute examination, there was no doubt that the thieves had effected an entrance through a window which had been left insecure at the front part of the building.

Murder on the River.—On Tuesday evening, Mr. Higgs concluded, at the Pine Apple, Hungerford-market, the inquest adjourned from last week, on the body of the man, name unknown, found in the river off Whitehall stairs, with four or five mortal stabs in the chest. The previous inquiry appeared in our last number. The evidence now adduced showed that the man had been stabbed first and then thrown into the river, and it also showed a probability that the deed was done on the night of Friday week, on Vauxhall-bridge. At the first inquiry it was supposed that the deceased was the captain of a coasting schooner, but a man, named Blackwall, a river pilot, who it was thought knew deceased, upon this occasion said he did not think he was a seafaring man, and that he knew no captain of a Thames trading vessel that was missing. There was nobody to identify the body or give any material evidence as to who were the murderers of deceased. In consequence the jury returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown."

Singular and Fatal Accident.—On Wednesday Mr. Higgs held an inquest at the Ormond's Head, Princes-street, Westminster, on Louisa Mooney, aged ten months. The deceased was the daughter of a shoemaker, residing in Orchard-street, Westminster. On Monday the child was taken to its grandmother's house, and laid in a bed, where it shortly afterwards fell asleep. A young female named Emma Bourne, not knowing that the child was there, turned up the bedstead, and nearly four hours elapsed before it was missed. When the bed was overturned the child was found dead, it having been suffocated by the bed-clothes. Verdict, "Accidental death."

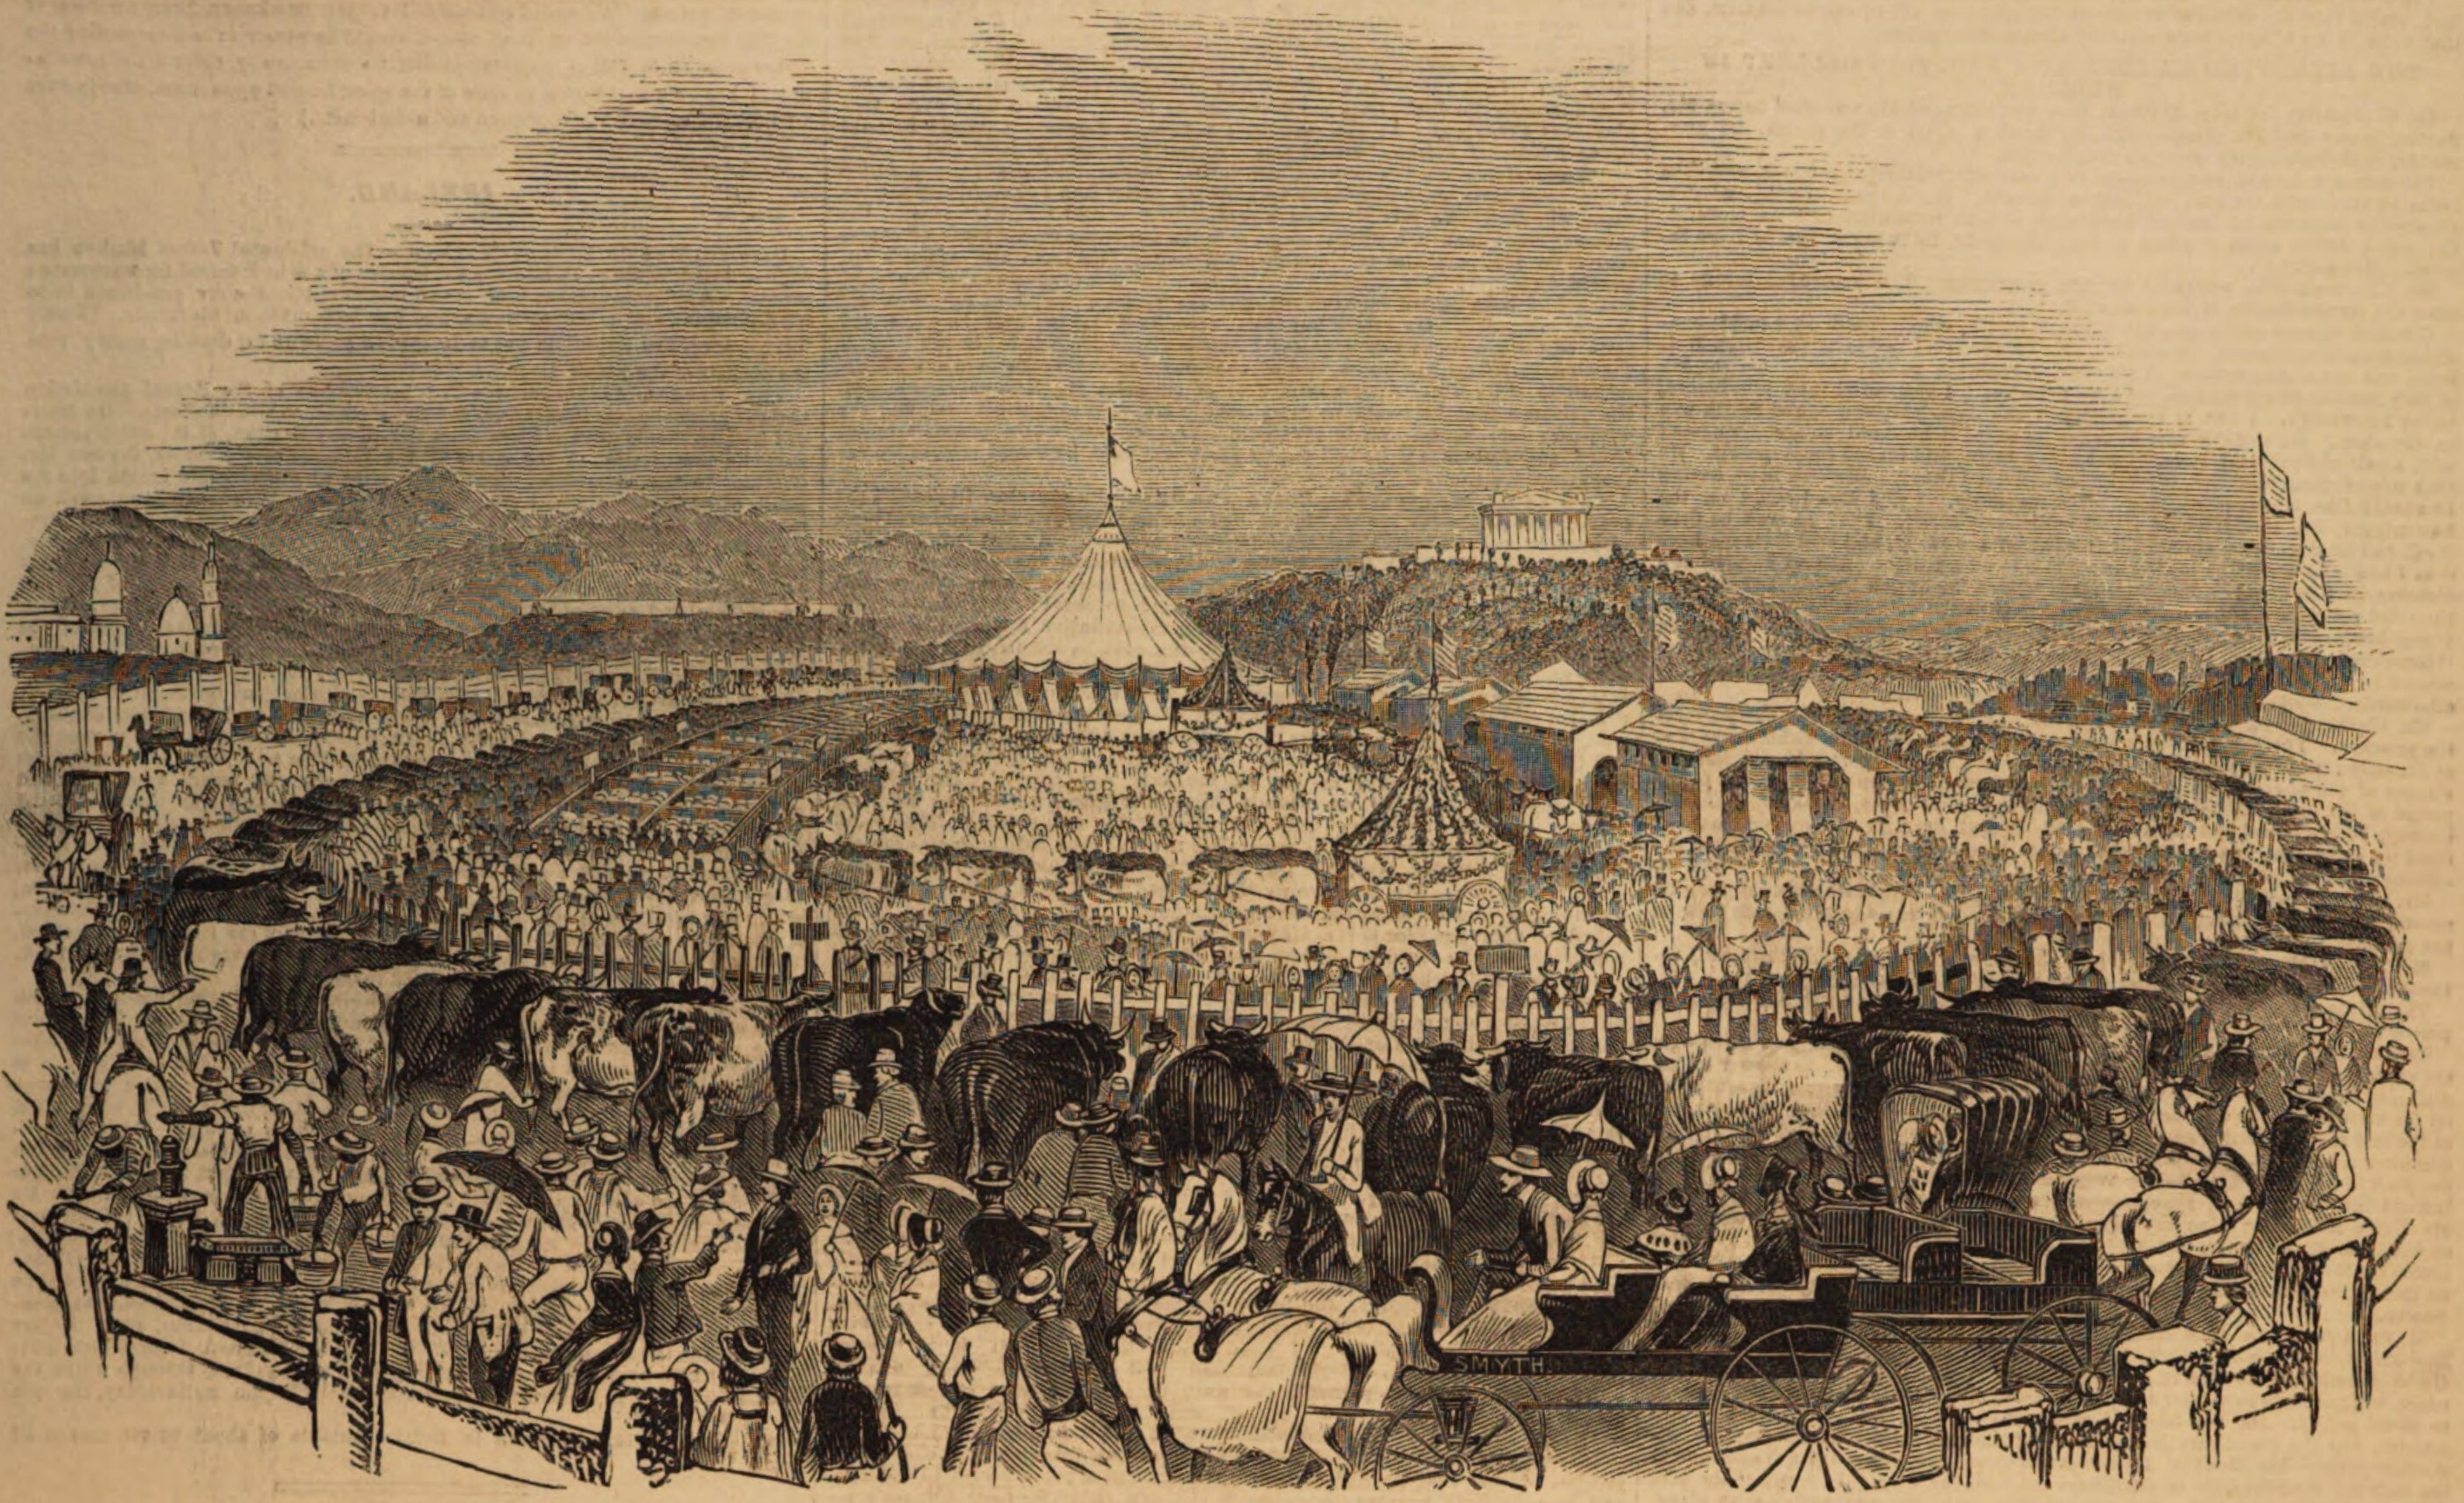
Curious Accident.—On Saturday a singular, but very serious accident happened to a man named Henry Pope, a butcher, residing in the New-cut, Lambeth. The poor fellow, while in the act of cutting a calf's head in two, slipped his knife, and pierced his thigh to the extent of several inches, dividing the main blood-vessels. Mr. Edward Cock, one of the principal surgeons of Guy's Hospital, was sent for immediately, and upon his arrival found it necessary to cut down upon the femoral artery, which he succeeded in tying directly, and thus prevented the further loss of blood. The man is favourably progressing.

Attempt to Burn the Barque Hermes, off Holthead.—A Swede, named Henry Brown, has been examined and remanded at Liverpool, on a charge of attempting to burn the barque Hermes, Captain Donough, about nine miles off Liverpool. The vessel was on her voyage to Buenos Ayres yesterday week, when the occurrence took place. The prisoner was seen to light some matches, and a fire was discovered in the forecastle. He also said he would either sink or burn the vessel. No motive whatever could be assigned for the attempt.

Awful Sudden Death.—On Thursday morning, at eleven o'clock, Mr. James Bennett, late partner to Mr. Daniel Whittle Harvey, and now managing clerk to Messrs. Yates and Turner, solicitors, Great George-street, Westminster, came in his usual health and spirits to the office, which he has been accustomed to do for upwards of fifteen years, and whilst in the act of speaking to one of the clerks he fell on the floor, and an effort being made to raise him, he was found insensible and helpless. A messenger was immediately sent for medical aid, and Mr. M'Cann, surgeon, of Parliament-street, promptly attended, and pronounced him dead, but, notwithstanding, opened the temporal artery, from which blood freely flowed. Mr. M'Cann gave it as his opinion that the deceased died from apoplexy, being of a very sanguineous and plethoric temperament.

Attempted Murder in the City.—Shortly after one o'clock on Monday morning, one of the most determined attempts at murder took place in St. Paul's Churchyard, that has ever been heard of. The object of attack was Collins, of the City police, whose beat has been of late a meeting-place for bad characters. The inspectors and Collins have been the means of removing some, but other persons have taken their situations. On Monday morning, about half-past one o'clock, Collins was walking on his beat, when suddenly a tall, stout fellow, about six feet high, tripped the officer up. He fell heavily, but not being at the time insensible, he endeavoured to draw his truncheon, when his assailant, standing over him, unfortunately got possession of it, and struck him several blows over the head. Shortly afterwards the officer was found bleeding profusely from his wounds, and quite insensible. The wounded man was conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where he remains without the least hope of recovery. The individual who committed the murderous assault is named Isaac Higgs, a paper-stainer, at Lambeth. He was examined at Guildhall on Wednesday, before Mr. Alderman Wilson, when the facts above stated were given in evidence.—Higgs excused himself on the ground of intoxication.—Mr. Alderman Wilson said if he had been drinking, that would not justify such a savage assault. The police must be protected in the execution of their duty, and he should commit the prisoner for trial and instruct the City Solicitor to prosecute.

Curious Charge of Arson.—An extraordinary sensation has been created in Bishop Stortford, in consequence of the apprehension of Alfred, son of Mr. Yardley, pawnbroker, together with Sarah Fuller, his servant girl, who were charged, the former with having set fire to the dwelling-house of his father, and the latter as an accessory. The woman has been discharged, and Yardley fully committed for trial at the next Hertford Assizes. On the 5th ult., the premises of Mr. Yardley were found to be in flames, when a great quantity of property was destroyed, a great portion of which belonged to the poor of Stortford and the neighbourhood. Young Yardley was very much respected, and would, on attaining his majority (in a few months), come into possession of very considerable property.

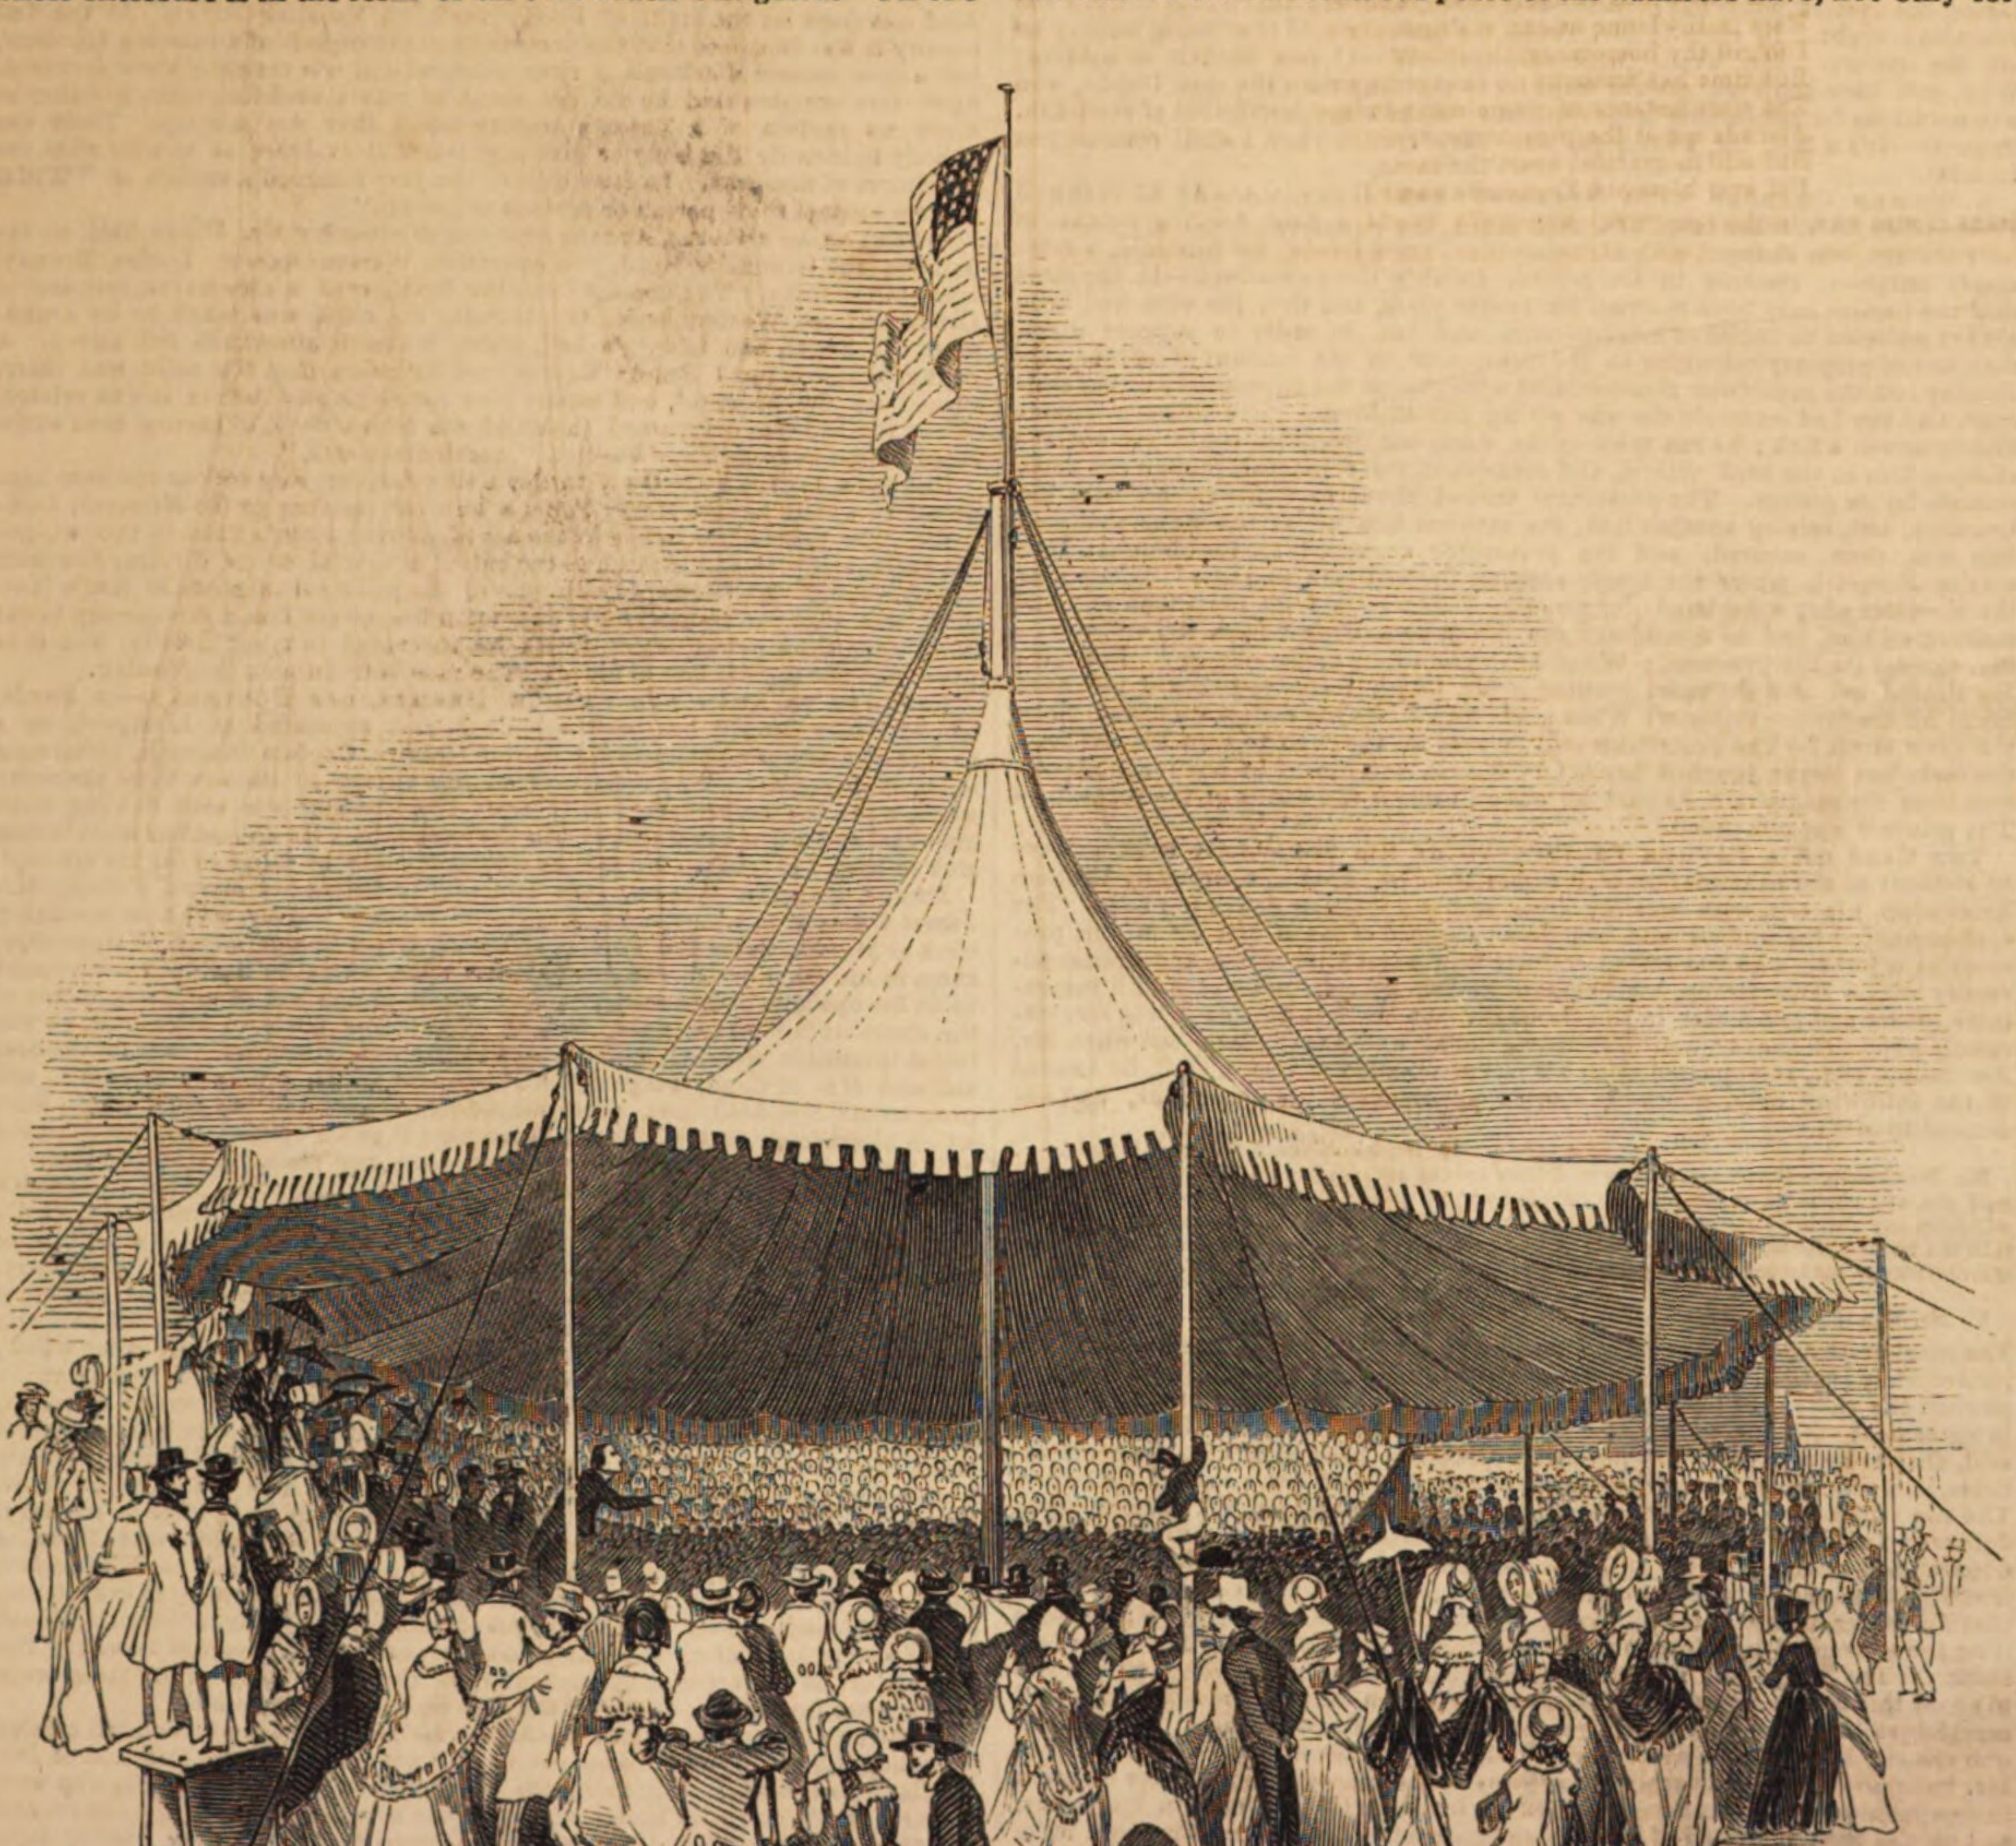


THE GREAT POUGHKEEPSIE CATTLE SHOW.

GREAT AMERICAN STATE FAIR AND CATTLE SHOW.

We have frequently illustrated these "monster meetings" in our own country, and it may neither be uninteresting nor useless to see how they are managed upon the other side of the Atlantic. The specimen we have chosen for representation is somewhat magniloquently termed "The Great Annual State Fair and Cattle Show of the New York State Agricultural Society, for 1844," held at Poughkeepsie, on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September, "the three glorious days dedicated to the farming and agricultural interests of this great country." The preparations are thus described in the Weekly Herald:—

"The site of the fair is half a mile to the east of the town, on the summit of a slight elevation, which affords a view of the whole scene. It occupies a tract of ground of about ten acres, which is enclosed by a substantial seven foot wall of boards, which effectually excluded all but those who paid the ticket at the moderate rate of 1s. each. The whole enclosure is in the form of an oval much elongated. On one side are erected an infinity of pens for hogs, folds for sheep, stalls for oxen, stands for horses, and various other fixtures for quadrupeds, which makes it, one would think, no bad representation of the interior of Noah's ark. Other edifices there are, too, in prodigal numbers. There are tents pitched for the "Light Guards," or some other dashing company or companies expected to come from New York; there is to be a mammoth marquee, within whose ample precincts a whole host of men, women, and children can take shelter, when they like, from the sun's heat, and from the rain, if it be necessary. In different places throughout the fair ground, the committee have caused to be erected a great number of commodious booths, or, as they are termed here, shanties, which are to be appropriated to the sale of refreshments—but to the utter exclusion of that vile rogue, alcohol, who will be, on no condition, looked upon as admissible inside the walls. However, to conceal those who are familiar with this personage, John Barleycorn, alias Alcohol, it is to be observed that a numerous posse of his admirers have, not only for the benevolent purpose of providing him with quarters, but also with a view to avoid the rent of a tenement inside the wall of partition, built sundry emporiums outside, where everything, from egg nogg to brandy smashers, and hot punch, may be had on moderate terms, for cash."



INTERIOR OF THE GREAT MARQUEE.

In the centre of the ground, and running parallel with its greatest length, stands a row of sheds for the display of horticultural and agricultural specimens, implements, ladies' work, &c.

The first day was appropriated to the choice of officers, committees, &c.; entries of stock, trial of implements, &c.; the number of premiums competed for were 500.

Wednesday was dedicated to the grand exhibition of cattle, farming products, and implements.

According to the Weekly Herald, nothing could be finer than the display of Black Cattle of every description: they occupied a strip of the field extending around the whole circumference of the oval enclosure; and it would be difficult to match the collection beheld with lively satisfaction to-day, for size, weight, symmetry, breed, colour, and other leading qualities, by which the merits of stock are estimated. Horses were less numerous; but swine and sheep were in thousands.

A detailed description of the thousands of curious machines, and ingenious contrivances for curtailing, expediting, and facilitating agricultural labour, would take a good-sized volume. There were of the plough alone, hundreds of specimens; also, harrows and rakes, hoes and spades; machines for churning, reaping, threshing, winnowing, and grinding; machines for sowing, cutting straw, cornstalks, &c., and a great variety of ingenious horse-powers to set them in motion. The belles on the ground were, you may be sure, quite numerous; but we cannot forbear to mention, whilst on the topic of machinery, two bells of another description, made at Meneely's foundry, West Troy, the tones of which are full of melody. One of these bells weighs 650 pounds, the other 1525 pounds, and are excellent specimens in their line. But the most wonderful exhibition was the arrival of "the Farmers' Car," from Hyde Park, drawn by ten yoke of oxen. A waggon of enormous length, height, and capacity, was attached to this famous team. Perpendicular and transverse rails were raised thereon, and ornamented with fruit, flowers, and forest foliage; whilst, through the interstices peered the smiling products of the farm, the orchard, and the granary, in every possible shape. This stupendous car is shown towards the centre of the large engraving. An exhibition of another character was that of Colonel Chaplin, who caused to be labelled in large characters upon his tent the following:—"General Tom Thumb beat at last—The celebrated dwarf, Colonel Chaplin, nineteen years old, twenty-seven inches high, and weighing twenty-six pounds—The smallest man living to be seen here." There were on the ground to-day several hundreds of the Po'keepsie and Fishskill firemen, with music, banners, and engines, in full uniform. There were, altogether, 40,000 persons present

The great feature of Thursday was a Ploughing Match by nine teams. In the afternoon, the meeting in the marquee (shown in our Engraving), numbering nearly 1000 ladies, was addressed at great length, and most eloquently, by Mr. Bancroft, of Massachusetts. Then came the award of payment of the premiums; and thus terminated the proceedings of the Great Poughkeepsie State Fair.

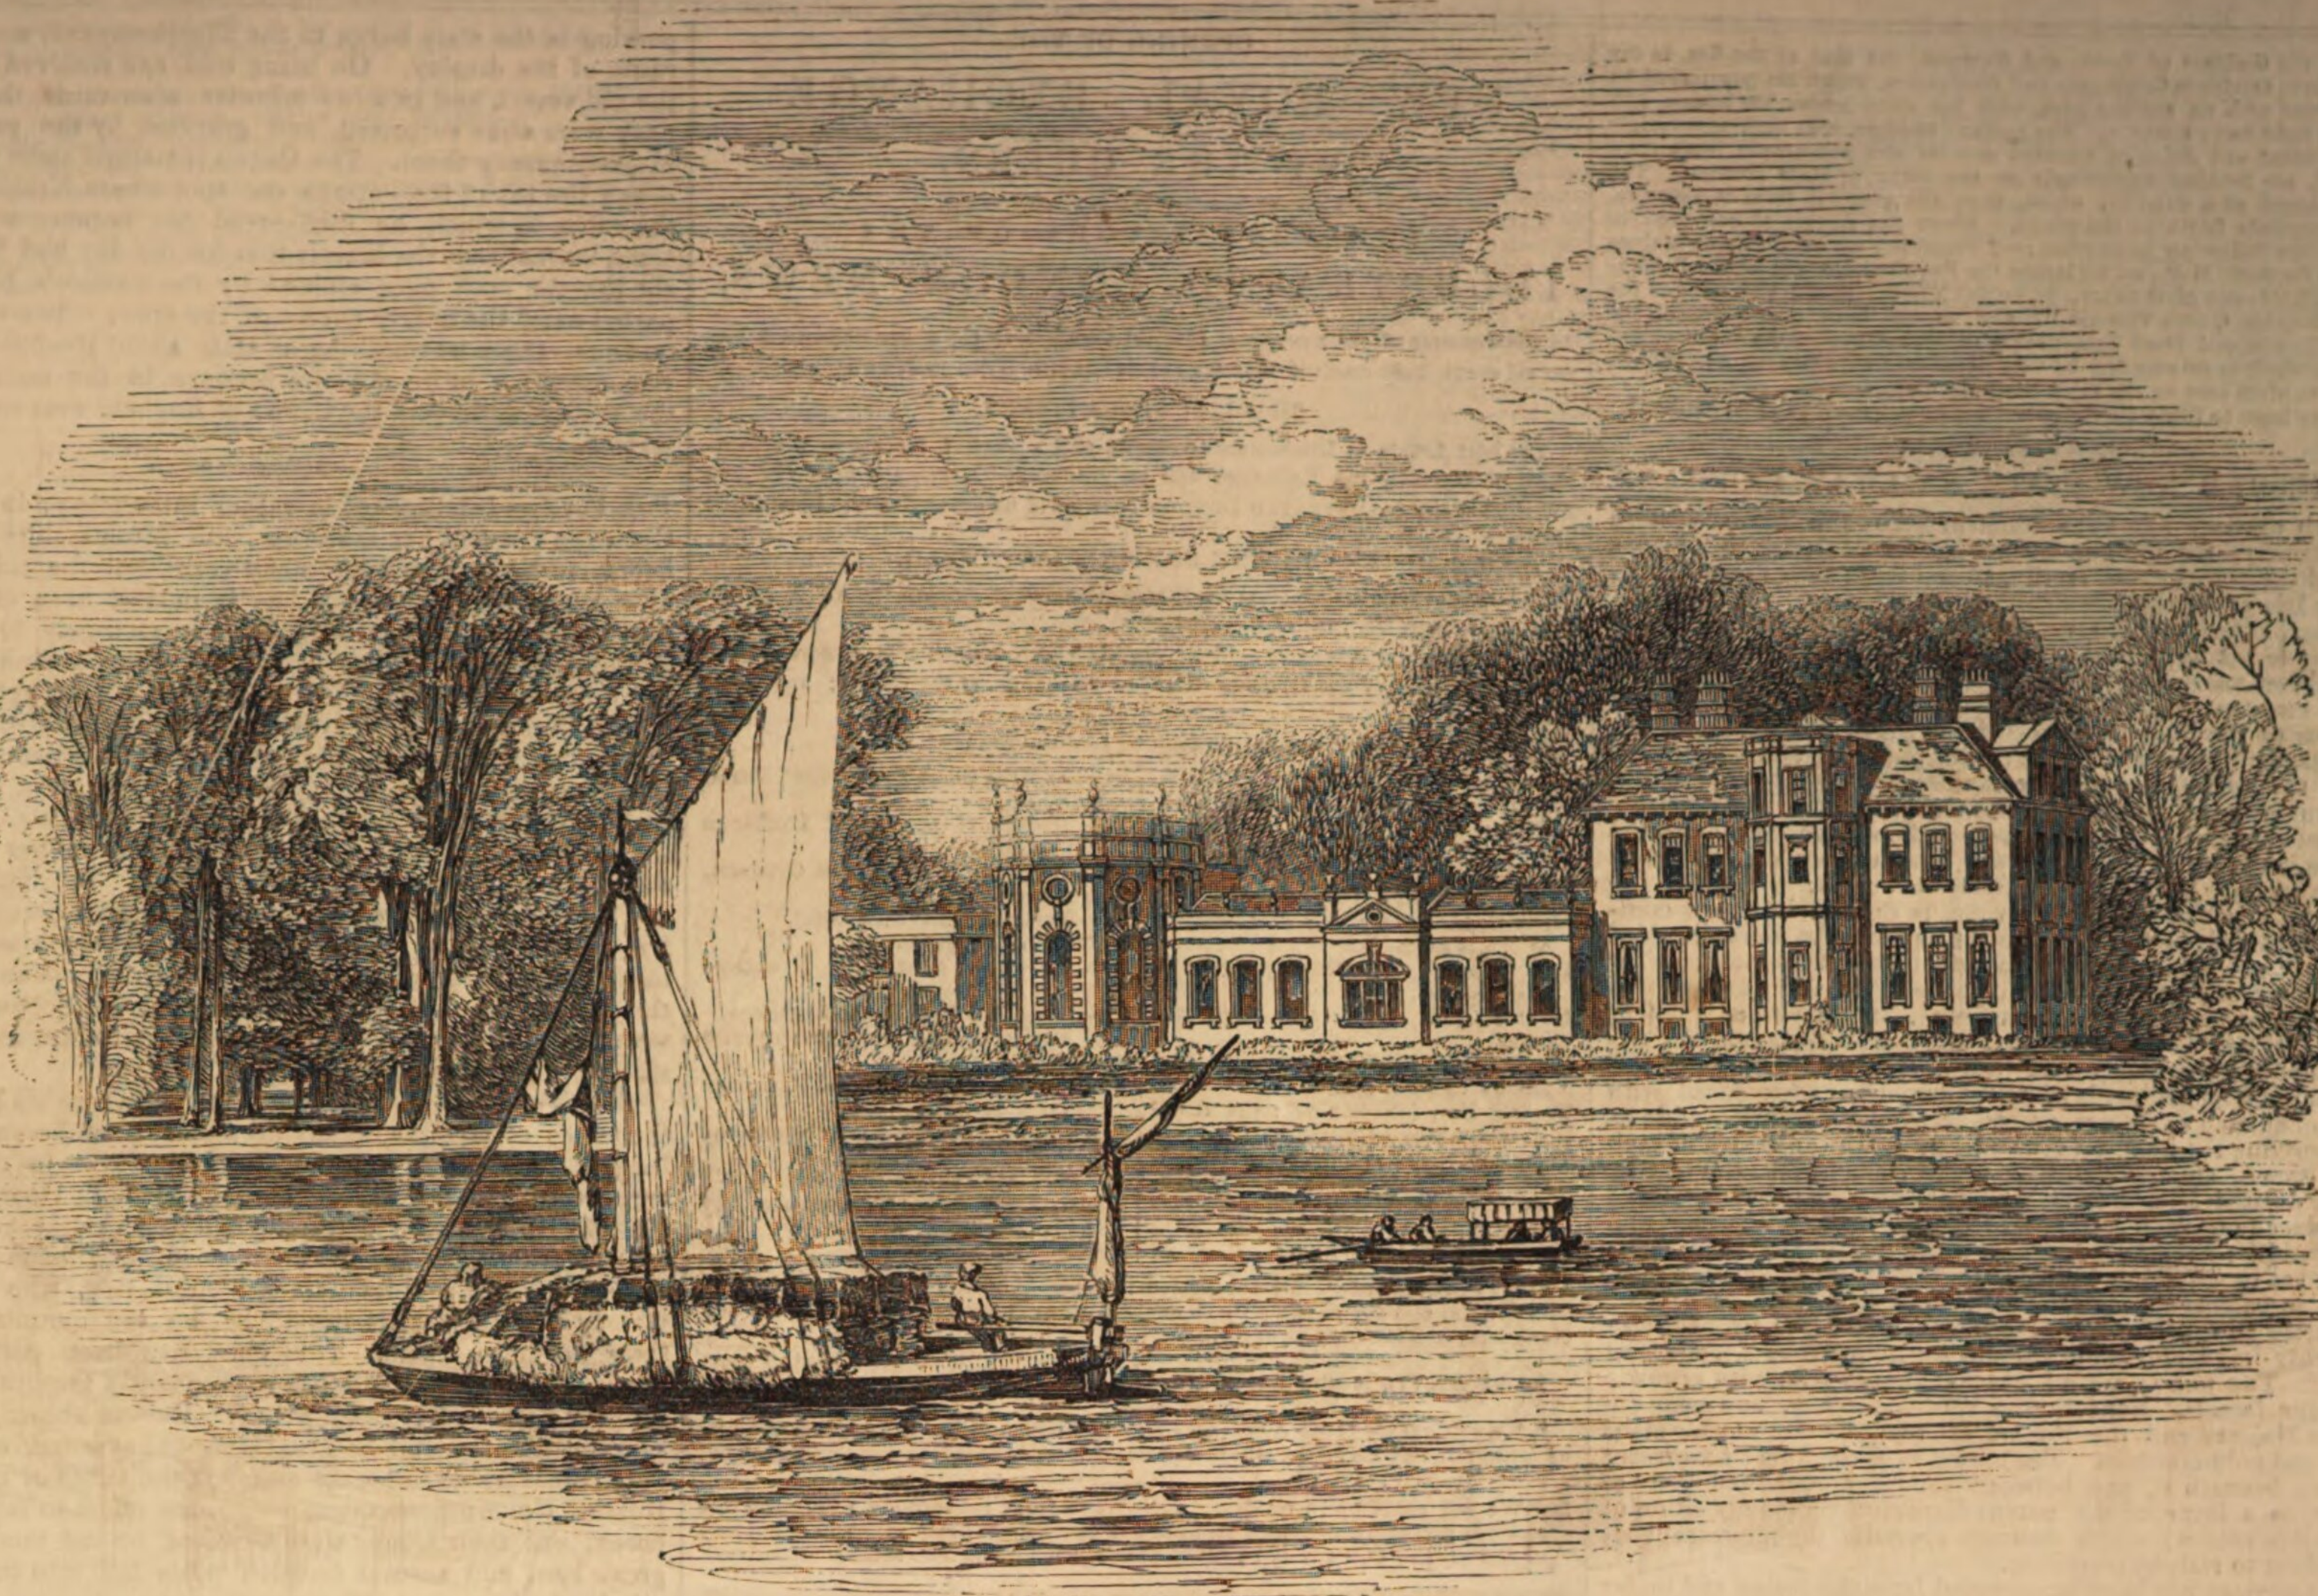
The larger Engraving shows the general arrangement of the Fair: in the foreground are visitors, some of them farmers, carrying umbrellas to keep off the sun; next, are the fine black cattle, and then the Floral Car; to the right are the refreshment booths; to the left, the white buildings of Poughkeepsie; and, in the distance, the Reservoir, the Marquee, and the College; the latter, a superb white marble structure, after the Parthenon, and situate two miles distant.

Incorporation of Brighton.—A meeting of householders of the borough of Brighton, was held on Monday to consider the propriety of petitioning the Queen to grant a charter of incorporation. Some difference of opinion prevailed, and ultimately a committee was appointed to investigate and report upon the extent of the change in local affairs which an incorporation would entail.

Effects of the Season.—Mrs. Martha Scrafton has at present growing in her garden at Aislaby, near Whitby, Yorkshire, an apple tree, which bore blossom in Christmas, again in spring, and after producing a good crop of fruit, is again to be seen in blossom.

Public Walks in Manchester.—Sir George Philips has subscribed £500 to the fund raising for the establishment of public walks in that town.

Fatal Accident on the Manchester and Leeds Railway.—On Friday an inquest was held before Mr. Chapman, at the Atlas Hotel, Manchester, on the body of James Carse, a map-dealer, of Rochdale, whose death resulted from the injuries received on the Oldham branch of the Manchester and Leeds Railway. It appeared, from the evidence of Elizabeth, wife of William Leigh, hatter, of Rochdale, that she and Carse got into a railway train at Oldham, on Wednesday evening, and were going to Rochdale, but, on the arrival of the train at the Middleton junction, Carse opened the door of the carriage, which was a third class, as the train was slackening its pace, and tried to get out, when his foot slipped, and he fell across the rail. The off-wheel of the succeeding waggon passed over his thighs, and he was removed to the Manchester Infirmary within half an hour of the accident, but he survived the injury only until Thursday night, when he died about half-past seven. The witness stated that deceased was in liquor at the time of the accident, and the fault was entirely his own. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."



ORLEANS HOUSE, TWICKENHAM; ONCE THE RESIDENCE OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

ORLEANS HOUSE, TWICKENHAM.

Our readers will remember that his Majesty the King of the French, during his recent visit, paid a visit to the handsome mansion at Twickenham, where the King, then Duke of Orleans, took up his residence on his arrival from New York, in the year 1800. Here the royal exile had, at length, an opportunity of enjoying some repose in the midst of the best English society. The duke engaged with zeal in the study of political economy, and the institutions of Great Britain; at times making excursions with his brothers into the country, and from taste and habit becoming almost an Englishman. The only pressing subject of concern was the infirm health of the Duke of Montpensier. With a somewhat weakly constitution, deranged by long and cruel confinement in prison, he had, since his first arrival in England, experienced a gradual sinking in bodily strength. Notwithstanding every effort of medicine to save him, this amiable and accomplished prince died May 18, 1807. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey, where his tomb is marked by an elegant Latin epitaph, the joint composition of the Duke of Orleans and General Dumouriez.

Writing from Twickenham to the late Bishop of Landaff, in July, 1804, the duke observes—"I quitted my native land so early, that I have hardly the habits or manners of a Frenchman, and I can say with truth that I am attached to England, not only by gratitude, but by taste and inclination. In the sincerity of my heart do I pray that I may never leave this hospitable soil. But it is not from individual feeling only that I take so much interest in the success of England—it is also as a man. The safety of Europe, of the world itself, the happiness and independence of the human race, depend upon the safety and independence of England."

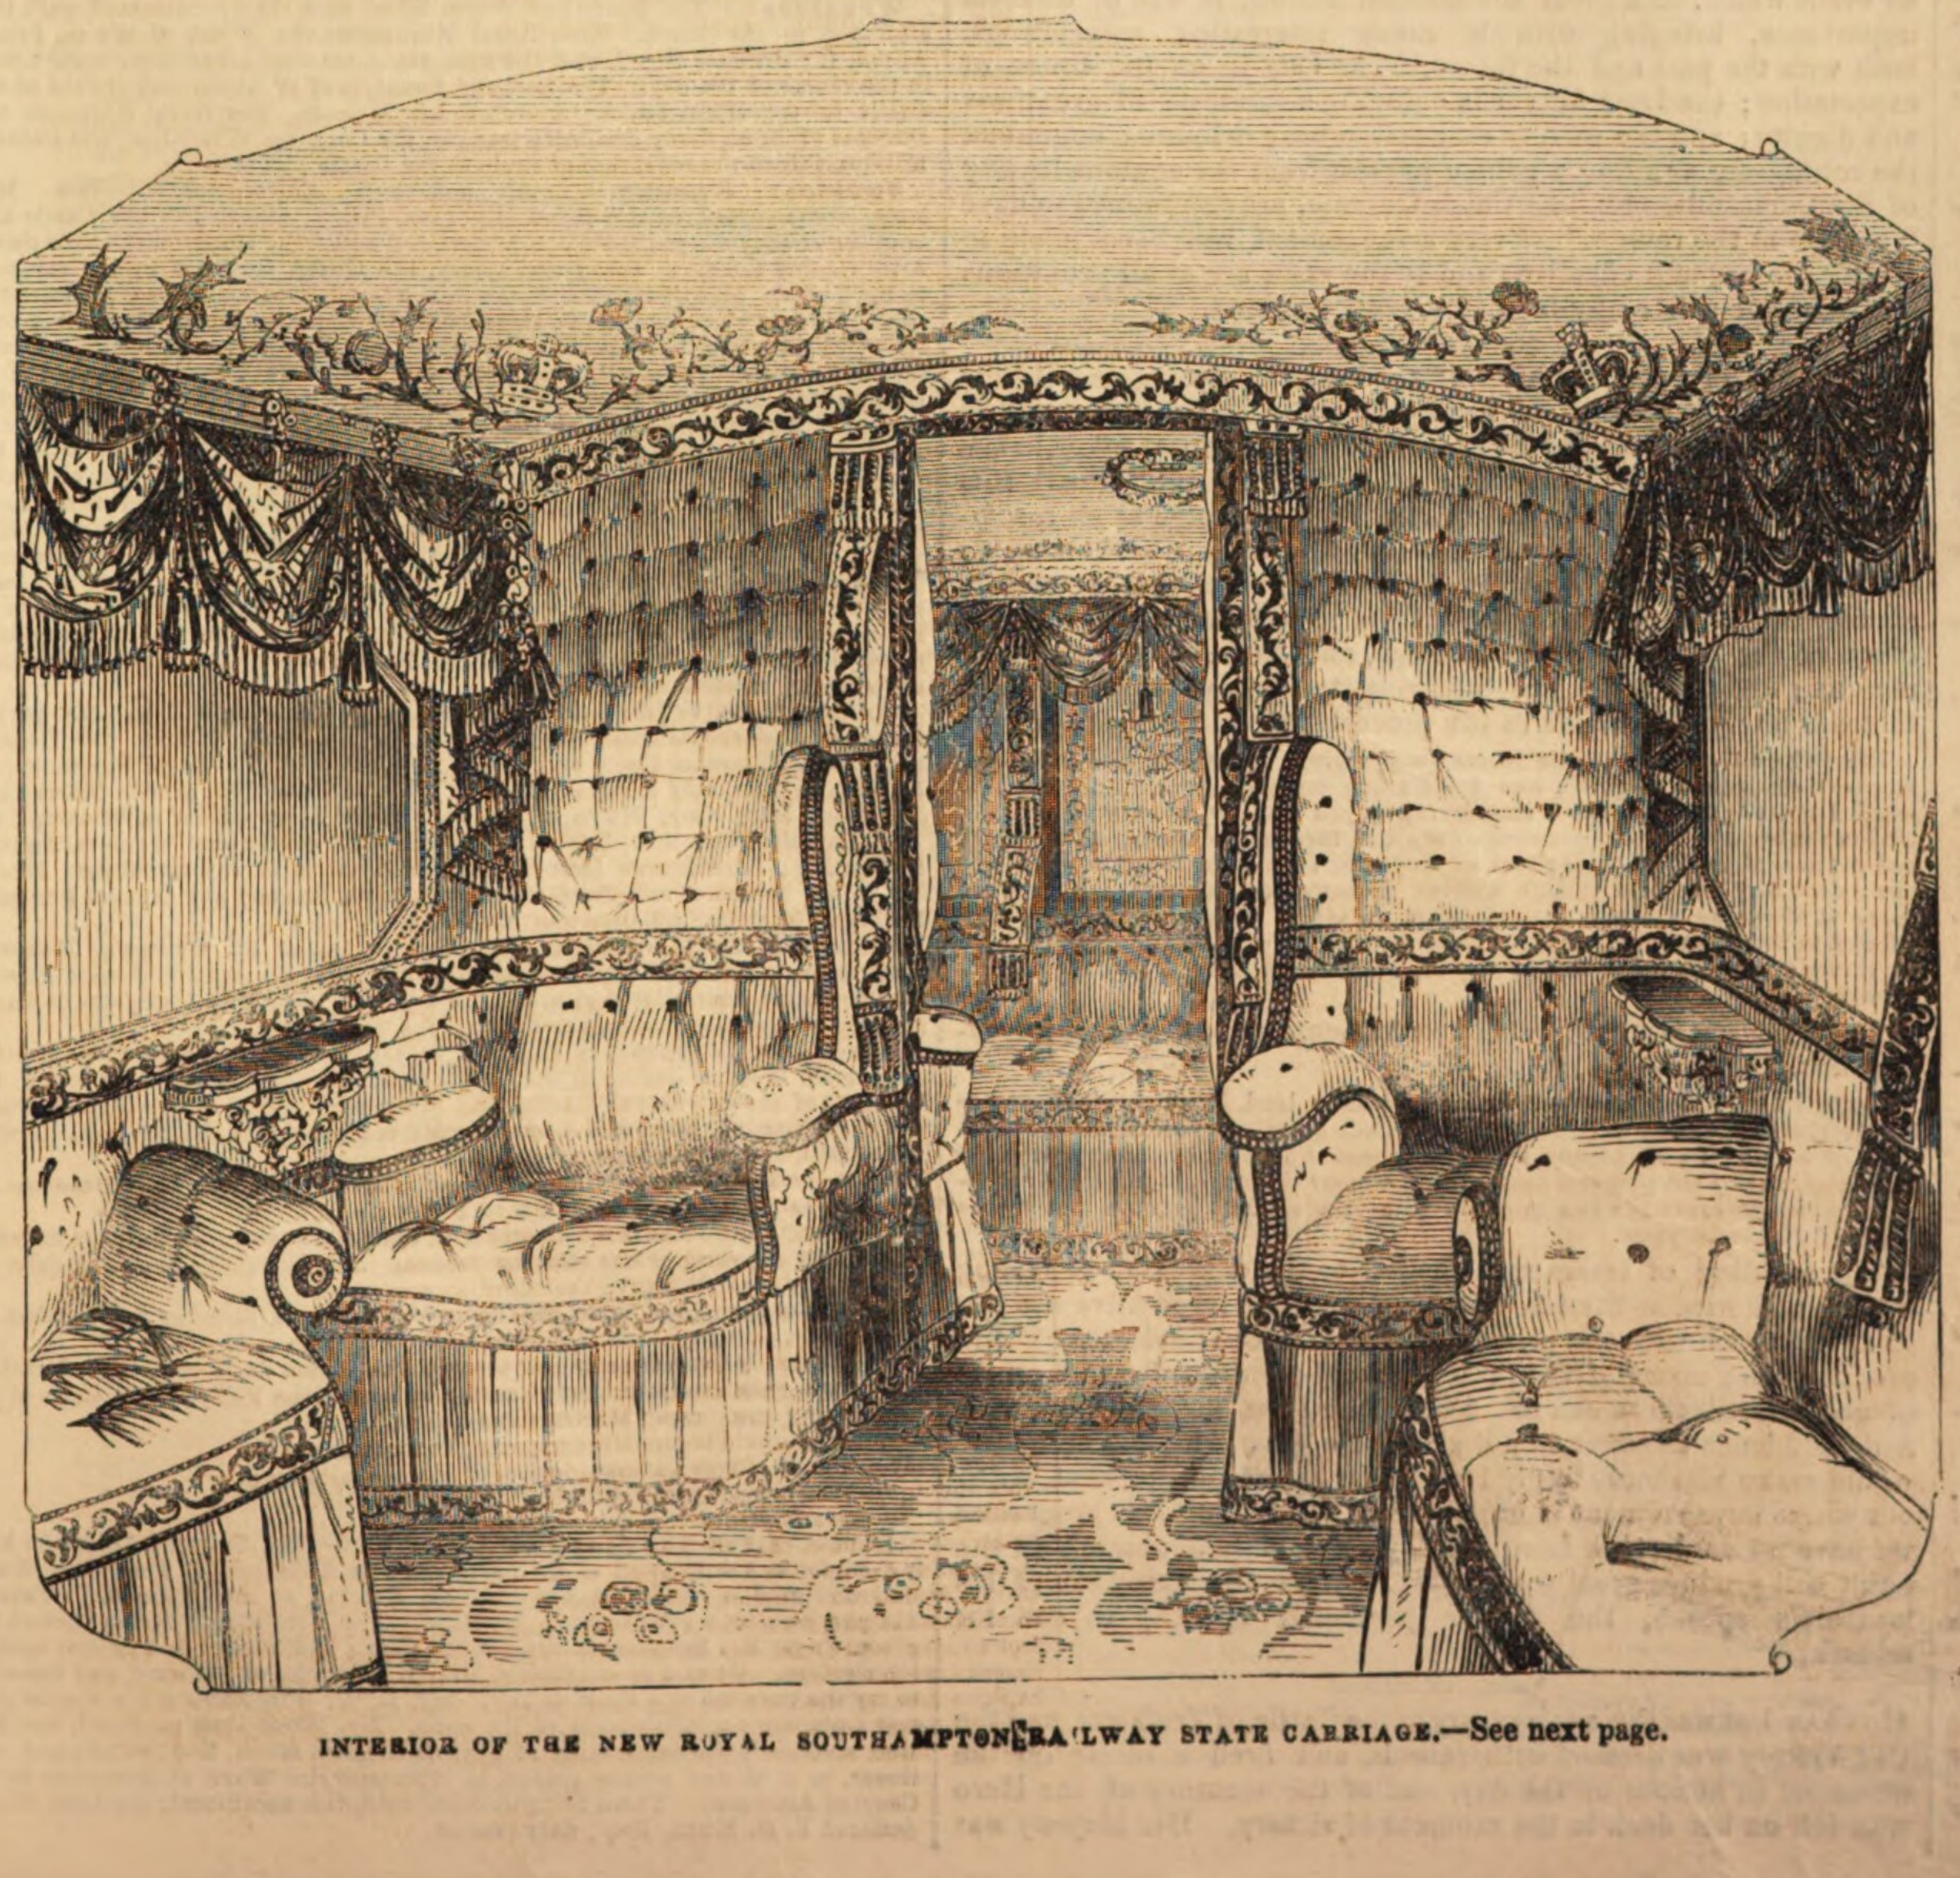
A correspondent has penned the following:—

ROYAL SOLILOQUY

SAID TO HAVE BEEN SPOKEN IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF TWICKENHAM OR ETON.

"Ye distant spires, ye antique towers
 That crown the watery glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
 Her Henry's holy shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below,
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among,
Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way!"—
And thou, fair Twickenham, where of old
Some thirty summers erst I stray'd,
It glads mine eyes now to behold
Each happy hill, each peaceful shade!
Time has wrought many changes since
Here in thy home as exil'd Prince
I found thy hospitality,
But time has wrought no change in me!
The circumstance of pomp and pow'r,
Attends me at the present hour—
But still in grateful heart the same,
I'll ever bless old England's name!

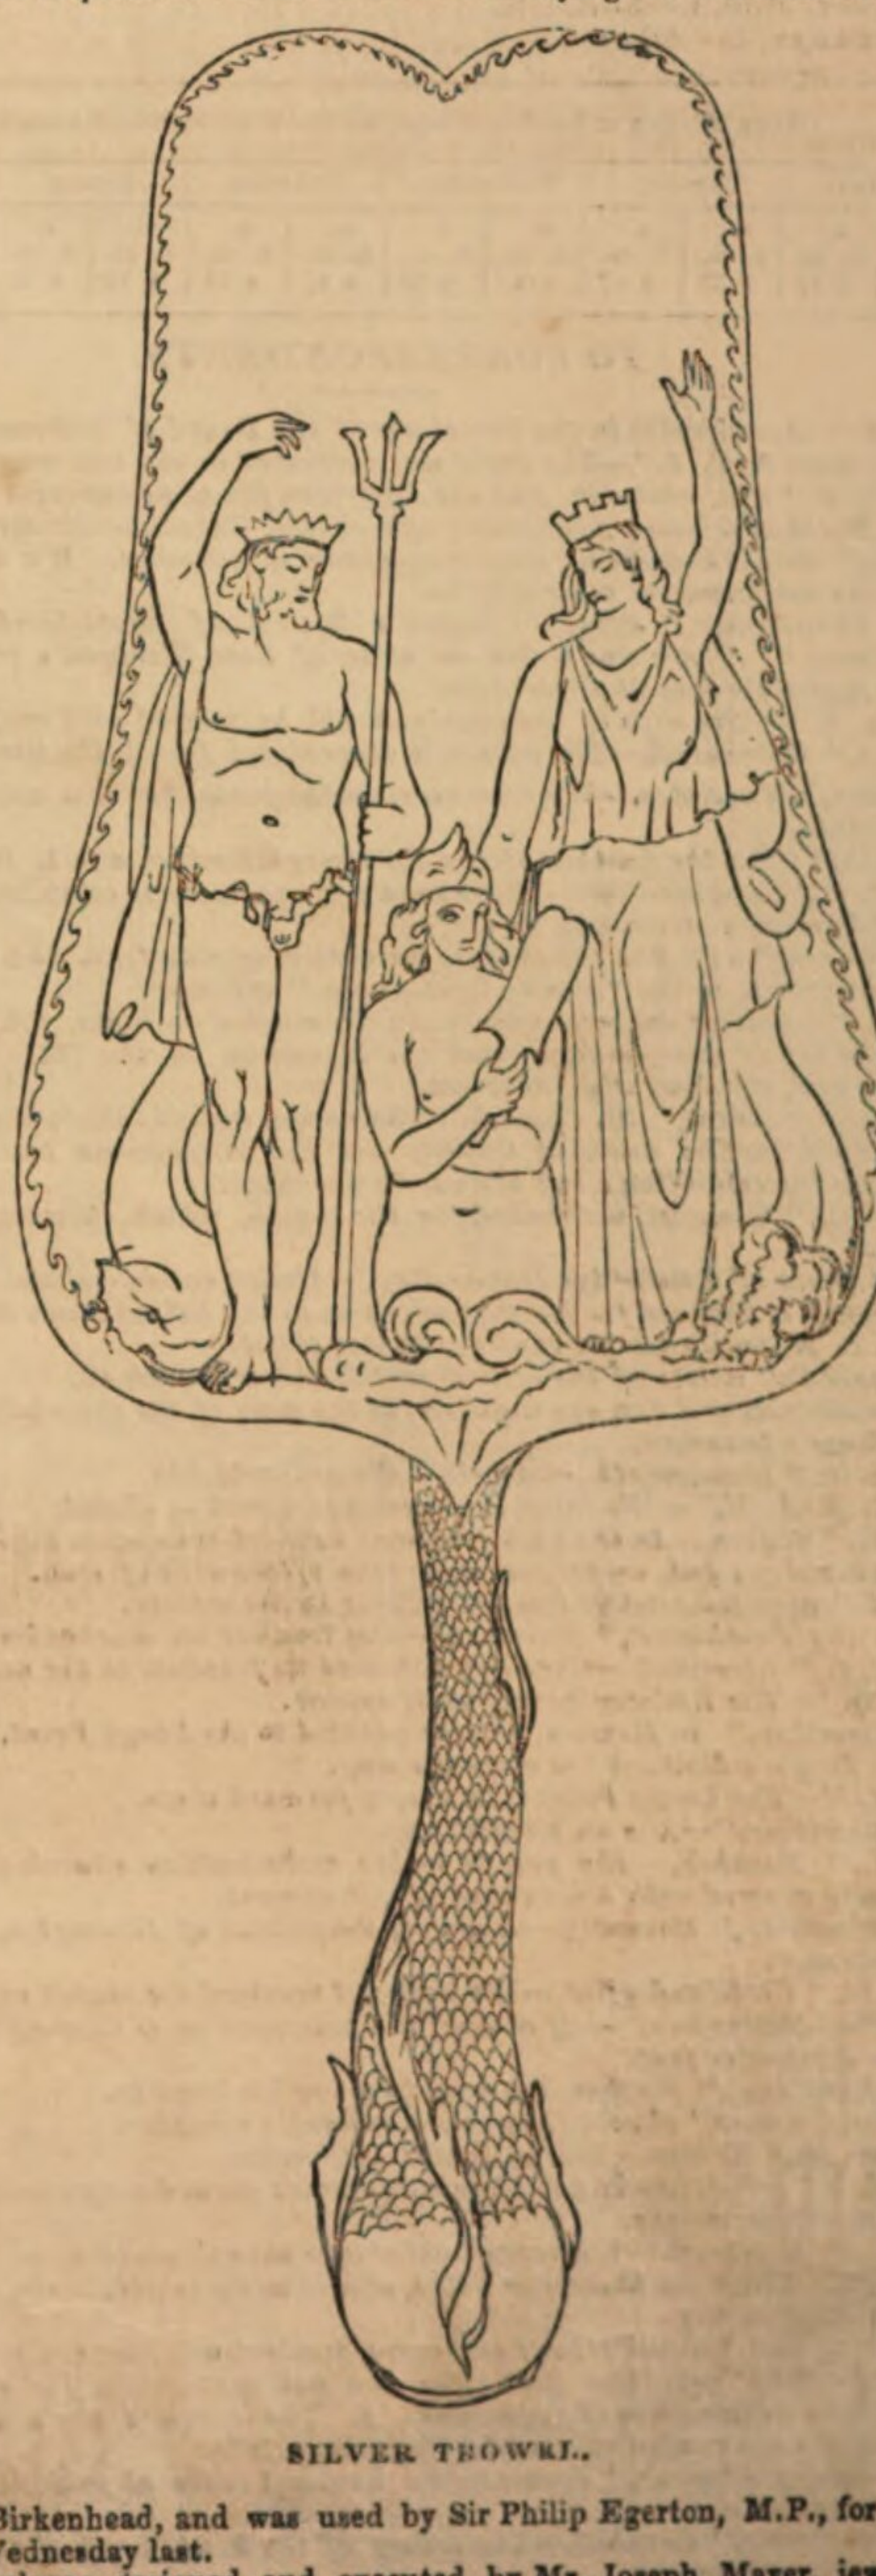
Orleans House was, in the reign of Queen Anne, the property of her Secretary of State, Mr. Johnson, who built the large octagon room at the extremity of the gallery, for the express purpose of entertaining Queen Anne there. The house was erected from a design by the celebrated Earl of Burlington. It afterwards became the property of G. Morton Pitt, Esq., and was purchased from him by Admiral Sir George Pocock, K.B., who left it to his son, the late baronet, by whom it was sold in 1827, to the present possessor, Alexander Murray, Esq., the member for the County of Kirkcudbright. The Pocock family held the property for about a century.



INTERIOR OF THE NEW ROYAL SOUTHAMPTON RAILWAY STATE CARRIAGE.—See next page.

SILVER TROWEL.

This superb implement was manufactured for laying the first stone of the New Docks, at Birkenhead, and was used by Sir Philip Egerton, M.P., for that purpose, on Wednesday last.



SILVER TROWEL.

The trowel was designed and executed by Mr. Joseph Mayer, jeweller and goldsmith, of Lord-street, Liverpool. It is of unique design, its several ornaments being emblematical of commerce and navigation. The form of it is that of the Greek helm, or paddle. On the blade, or flat part, is chased in altoreleivo, Terra, the Goddess of Earth, and Neptune, the God of the Sea, in the act of calling into existence Commerce and Navigation, which are pourtrayed by a female, crowned with an antique proa, with her arms across her bosom, and holding in her right hand a clavus. The god and goddess, with their appropriate symbols, the trident and dolphin, turreted coronet and cornucopia, with their heads inclined, are looking approvingly on the being of their creation. The handle is composed of a dolphin, which, from the graceful form it assumes, makes an appropriate finish to the whole. Above the figures is engraved, in classic letters, the following inscription:—" Presented to Sir Philip de Malpas Grey Egerton. Baronet, M.P., on his laying the Foundation-stone of the Birkenhead Docks, XXIII. day of October, M.DCCC.XLIV., in the VII. year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria." And on the back of the trowel the names of the Birkenhead Dock Commissioners, with those of the engineer and solicitor. The whole is surrounded by that beautiful Greek border, emblematic of the waves, so often seen on the early Etruscan vases.

Next week we hope to illustrate the grand festive proceedings at Birkenhead.

HER MAJESTY'S NEW STATE RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

This superb carriage has been constructed by the South Western Railway Company, for the conveyance of her Majesty, the Prince Consort, and the young royal family, to and from their marine residence in the Isle of Wight.

The carriage, externally, is seventeen feet in length by seven feet four inches wide: it is placed on wooden wheels (Beattie's patent), which have been successfully used on this railway, and, from their principle of construction, afford comfort and perfect security. The ground colour of the body is the same as that of her Majesty's private carriages, dark maroon; in the centre panel are emblazoned the royal arms; the commode and door handles are massive silver, with the royal arms elaborately chased; and the windows are of superbly embossed and ground glass. A crown and cushion surmount the centre of the body, and along its entire length is an elegant scroll cornice; the carriage itself being similarly decorated.

The interior, of which we annex a view, is divided into two compartments, two-thirds of the length being assigned to that occupied by her Majesty and Prince Albert; the other compartment being for the royal children and suite, and accessible by an almost imperceptible door, opening into either compartment, and hung on a patent self-adjusting hinge. The lining is of light drab flowered silk damask, trimmed with crimson and white silk, and embossed pile figures. The roof, or ceiling, is of white damask, embroidered with crimson; and at each angle are embroidered the national emblems in silver, encircling the imperial crown of gold. In the centre of each ceiling is a crown, surrounded by the rose, shamrock, and thistle, carved, and painted after nature. Immediately over each of these crowns is placed one of the improved lamps, made by Miller and Son, of Piccadilly; each crown, by an ingenious contrivance, being removable, so as to admit into both compartments an agreeable light—for example, in passing through the railway tunnels.

The draperies throughout are of crimson and white figured satin damask, richly lined and trimmed, and surmounted by a white and gold cornice. The blinds are of peach-blossom silk, with crimson silk and silver tassels. Beneath the centre window, and near the seats for her Majesty and the Prince, are placed white marble slabs upon white and gold consoles. The carpet is of the finest Axminster manufacture; beneath it, and between the framework and body of the carriage, is a layer of the patent Kamptulicon (composition of cork and Indian rubber) which entirely prevents the unpleasant vibration incident to railway travelling.

The entire carriage has been constructed from the design and under the superintendence of Mr. Joseph Beattie, of the carriage department of the Railway Company. It is, certainly, an elegant specimen of coach building, furniture, trimming, and decoration, in convenience as well as embellishment; and it has been much admired by her Majesty and Prince Albert.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Oct. 27.—Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 28.—Bristol riots, 1831.
Tuesday, 29.—Morland died, 1804.
Wednesday, 30.—King Alfred died, 900.
Thursday, 31.—Allhallow Eve.
Friday, Nov. 1.—All Saints.
Saturday, 2.—All Souls.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending November 2.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
3 0	3 17	3 32	3 47	4 5	4 20	4 37	4 53	5 12	5 32	5 51	6 15

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. B." should write to the Secretary of the Board of Ordnance.
Scrutator S. T. T."—The error was corrected in our last week's journal.
B. C. F." will, probably, find the American file of newspapers he requires, at the North and South American Coffee-house, Threadneedle-street.
' Leila" should inquire of some respectable ship-broker. We have not room for the astronomical observations.
"St. Christopher," City.—" Taylor's System of Short-hand simplified by Harding." There was a fire on some of Lord Glenlyon's premises during her Majesty's stay at Blair Athol.
" L. A. S."—The slips of the plants should be covered with soap and water.
"Alias," Edinburgh.—The person is disqualified for all the situations.
"Ερυαις," Worcester.—We have received the poem, but it is much too long for insertion.
" Truth."—See the number of the Edinburgh Review, art. 1, just published.
" J. P. P.," Enniscorthy.—Blackwood's Magazine was established about 1817, and Bentley's Miscellany in 1837.
Adolescens" will find the process for obtaining zinc from its native ores, in a concise form, in the " Penny Cyclopædia " art. zinc.
L. L."—Letters and newspapers are forwarded to India, viâ Southampton, on the 3rd of every month; and viâ Marseilles on the 7th. Our reply last week was, consequently, incorrect.
A Correspondent," St. Columb.—The person named stands high in his art.
W. Ford."—The Adelaide Gallery and the Polytechnic Institution receive models for exhibition; but are rarely purchasers.
" J. M'C.," Glasgow, is thanked for the sketch, which, however, arrived too late.
" A Member of Cambridge University."—Under consideration.
" Amicus" is thanked for his suggestion as to the Elizabethan Medallion; and Mr. C. R. Smith for his courtesy to our artist.
" Benedict's" notice of the cricket match did not reach us.
Messrs. Shields and Son are thanked for the copy of the description of the Earl of Rosse's telescope.
" S. S. S.," Handsworth, can deduct the property-tax.
" J. C. M. A. M."—We think the marriage would be illegal.
" J. B.," Clifton.—In the 14th century, cannon-balls were made of stone, in this country; but, we believe, were soon afterwards of iron.
" J. M." need not trouble himself further in the matter.
" Timothy Touchwood," Barnsley.—Any treatise on mechanics.
" A. Y. Z.," Liverpool.—Coventry obtained its freedom in the mode referred to.
" W. Q."—The Railway School shall appear.
' A Subscriber," in Hawick, will be entitled to the Large Print. The English of " Foigh-a-Ballagh" is clear the way.
" M. C."—The Large Print is in a very forward state.
" A Subscriber."—A is an Englishman.
" F. F.," Tunstall.—The graves in the metropolitan church-yards are frequently covered with bricks coated with cement.
" A Subscriber," Coventry.—The only inhabitant of Aldrington, Sussex, is the toll-keeper.
" W. B.," Cleveland-office.—We have not received the sketch referred to.
" Shiffnal Subscriber."—Of course, the judgment on O'Connell being reversed, he is altogether free.
" An Expectant," Walton, has only to prove his identity.
" A Tried Friend" should consult a respectable solicitor.
" F. W. G.," Exeter.—Tait's Mental Arithmetic.
" F. A. F."—Soldiers in her Majesty's service abroad may receive their letters for a trifling charge.
" A. B.," Bridgend.—We cannot enter into the calculation.
" T. W.," Little Bartholomew Close, should write to Mr. Serle, Southampton-row, Bloomsbury.
T. A.," Coleford.—Perhaps our correspondent will forward a sketch.
" Macclesfield."—1. The Post-office are not responsible for cash, bills, &c., lost with letters, even if registered. 2. The carriers are not liable. 3. A Knight's son cannot succeed to his father's title.
" A Country Admirer," Frome.—We have not room at present for the extension suggested.
" A Subscriber," Cornhill.—The salary of the First Lord of the Treasury is £5000 per annum.
" G. G.," Carlisle.—The author of the " Beggar's Petition" is not known.
" G. B.," Rothesay, is correct.
" Somebody."—" Sans Changer" is the motto of the Derby family.
" L. D. J."—Under the New Alien Act, a naturalised alien enjoys all the rights and privileges of a British subject.
Ineligible.—Lines on Punch, on Louis Philippe's Visit; Lines by Krawlis; Lines by Zeta; A Song of Young England; Lines to a Child, by Florence.

OPENING OF THE

NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE

BY THE QUEEN.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

In consequence of the absorbing Interest attached to the above important historical event, have resolved that the Illustrated London News

SHALL SURPASS ITSELF.

The best Artists in London are engaged; and a Perfect Picture of the Ceremony of Opening the Exchange will be produced. Nearly the whole of two numbers of the Illustrated London News will be devoted to the Illustration of this ERA IN THE COMMERCIAL WORLD.

The present number contains an Historical Account, with Engravings, of the Exchanges from the time of Elizabeth.

The number for Nov. 2nd will be crowded with Magnificent Pictures of the Grand Ceremony of the Opening the New Exchange by the Queen; and other Engravings.

The following are among the number of Illustrations:—

The Great Western Portico, with the Arrival of her Majesty, and the Civic Procession.
The East End, with the Clock Tower.
The Northern Entrance.
Interior of the Great Quadrangle, with the Royal Procession: Proclamation by the Heralds, &c.
The Library: her Majesty receiving the Address.
Lloyd's Great Room: the Royal Déjeûné.
Her Majesty in State, passing St. Clement's Church, Strand.
Temple Bar, (West Side): the Royal Herald asking admittance.
Temple Bar, (East Side); the Presentation of the Keys, &c. to her Majesty: the Royal and Civic State Procession.
Gresham's Wedding Ring.
Interior of the Clock Tower: the Chimes, Bells, &c.
The History of the Royal Exchange will be given.
Superb Portrait of Sir Thomas Gresham, in Mercers' Hall.
The Gresham Seals (Five Cuts).
Holt School, Norfolk.
Exterior of the First Royal Exchange (temp. Elizabeth).
Interior of the First Royal Exchange.
The Exchange and Tun Tavern, after Hollar.
Exterior of the second Royal Exchange (temp. Charles II.).
The Second Exchange just before the Late Fire.
Statue of Sir Thomas Gresham.
Medal struck at the Inauguration, by Queen Elizabeth.
Gresham College.

⁂ The largest sale ever experienced is expected of the Illustrated London News, and copies can only be ensured by early orders to all Booksellers and Newsmen, in Town and Country.

PART XXVI., is Now Ready, Price 2s. 6d.

⁂ Any Country News Agent may receive Posting Bills, bearing his address, by informing our Publisher where a parcel can be enclosed, free of expense.

☞ We are continually receiving complaints from subscribers respecting the slovenly way some newsmen forward our journal by post, much to the injury of the work. Our advice is, change the agent for one who is more attentive.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1844.

The week has been, politically, a very quiet one. The retirement of Royalty to the privacy of Osborne House, withdrew attention from the Court; the interest awakened by the visit of the French King has, here at least, completely subsided, though in Paris the papers cannot afford to let so good a subject escape them so soon, and they are "still harping" on the enormity of the crime Louis Philippe has committed, and the endeavours of Guizot to make France, as they are pleased to phrase it, "not happy, but English." They take exception to an exclamation attributed to his Majesty during his investiture with the Order of the Garter, by which he expressed his determination never to wage an unjust war with the Sovereign of the Order and of England. An honest and just determination, we should say, but on that account so much the more likely to give offence to the peace-hating spirit of Young France. But this last breeze of passion will, we hope, blow over with as little effect on the good sense of the bulk of the French nation.

The feeling of the week has been one of anticipation; every one is looking forward to the ceremony of opening the Exchange; an event which, to a great commercial nation, is one of unusual importance, bringing with it many interesting associations, both with the past and the future. The City is on the tiptoe of expectation; the Lord Mayor is enjoying a foretaste of greatness and dignity; and the worthy citizens—whose windows command the route—are awaiting a golden harvest from the anxious loyalty of the thousands, who, like Caleb Quotem, are determined to have "a place at the review." Every arrangement has been made to render the pageant effective; and if the skies are at all propitious the spectacle will really be a very gratifying one.

The silence of every member of the Ministry during the Recess has been at last broken by Lord Stanley, who on Tuesday last presided at the dinner of the Liverpool Agricultural Show. His lordship's speech on this occasion contains nothing political; it is simply such an address as might have been expected at an assembly of agriculturists. It is full of good advice,—recommending increased activity and exertion, and all, in fact, that is usually comprehended in the term agricultural improvement. He speaks much of the good effect of drainage, and the use of guano as a manure; and he bears the following testimony to the advance that has lately been made in the processes of cultivation:—

> Everywhere I see old useless fences disappearing, fields enlarging, improved modes of cultivation adopted; and I see going on with immense rapidity that which I must again and again impress upon you who are connected with the land is the basis of all improvement—deep and thorough drainage of the land; and not here alone, but throughout all England, I see most remarkably, as any one indeed may do, even though whirled through the country at the railway speed at which we are now carried, what an extent of improvement has been effected in this respect. Every one is struck with the appearance of preparation for future exertions, which are, at the same time, the tokens of well-deserved success.

But while speaking of this improvement, he makes this important declaration:—

> But this I say—and, as one connected with the land, I feel myself bound to say it—that a landlord has no right to expect any great and permanent improvement of his land by the tenant, unless that tenant be secured the repayment of his outlay, not by the personal character or honour of his landlord, but by a security which no casualties can interfere with—the security granted him by the terms of a lease for years.

The granting of leases must be left to the discretion or feeling of the landlords, as the law could not make it imperative without an interference with the private affairs of individuals, that would produce more mischief than the practice so enforced would create of good. Still there can be no doubt that the increased security and confidence a tenant would gain from this certainty of tenure would make him more freely invest that capital in the land, without which improvement is impossible; and among this large class we have no doubt that Lord Stanley's unqualified opinion on the point will produce great satisfaction. With the exception of his lordship's speech, the dinner presented nothing to call for remark.

Monday last was the anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar, and the Old Victory was dressed with laurels, and fired a salute on the occasion, in honour of the day, and of the memory of the Hero who fell on her deck in the moment of victory. Her Majesty was passing in the state barge to the Clarence-yard, and inquired the cause of the display. On being told, she resolved to go on board the old vessel, and in a few minutes afterwards the ship's company were alike surprised and gratified by the presence of her Majesty among them. The Queen remained some time on board—saw the tablet that marks the spot where Nelson fell—visited the cabin in which he died—read his famous signal—plucked some leaves from the laurels that for the day had been placed to shadow the spot once stained by the warrior's blood—and departed amid the hearty cheers of the crew. The visit was spontaneous—there was nothing of state about it—but it was, for that very reason, a more graceful homage to the memory of one of the bravest defenders the Crown of England ever numbered in its service.

The Foreign Intelligence is rather interesting; in Spain Queen Christina has had her marriage with Munoz ratified; they have been privately married for many years, but the union has not till now been recognised; nor has it at last been effected without much negotiation. It reads rather strangely to find that the young Isabella, in years little more than a child, should have given her august permission to her mother to get married! It is said Christina will lose the allowance she received as the widow of Ferdinand; and, in fact, as it was to cease in case of her second marriage, she must, for some years past, have been receiving it illegally. But all her revenues, rights, and privileges are to be secured to her by royal grant from her daughter. In the north of Europe affairs appear busy. The Kings of Belgium and of Holland have each opened the Legislatures of the respective countries: the principal subject for the attention of both these bodies will be the commercial regulations and the tariffs of the two states. The tariff promulgated by Belgium is marked, we are sorry to say, by a spirit adverse to the extended admission of English manufactures.

The ill success of the Russian army in Circassia has encouraged the tribes of Georgia, many of whom have heretofore acknowledged the authority of the Czar, to waver in their faith, and throw off their allegiance. Throughout both Georgia and Circassia, the Russians are detested, and during last year the inhabitants of the mountainous province of Daghistan revolted; they were headed by a chief named Shamil Bey, who had long previously been endeavouring to league the mountaineers against their northern rulers. This chief had been partly educated in the Russian capital, and has consequently acquired some insight into the nature of Russian policy. He was known to be a man of superior abilities and of great personal courage, and to possess a very considerable influence amongst the tribes of Daghistan. The Russian Government made a vigorous effort to suppress this outbreak, but their troops were defeated by the mountaineers with great loss, and several fortified posts fell into the hands of the rebels. In the spring of the present year another expedition was sent against Shamil Bey; the force was a strong one, and such importance was attached to success that it was at one time stated the Emperor would himself direct part of the operations in person. But by retreating into the mountains, avoiding a battle, continually harassing the flanks of the Russian army, and cutting off its supplies, the Bey has completely defeated the troops sent against him, which, thinned by losses, weakened by desertions, and distracted by the divisions, said to exist among the generals, have retreated, the campaign being altogether abandoned. It is said that by this event the power of Russia in Georgia and Circassia will be materially shaken. Those who are continually making a bugbear of the great military power of Russia, might draw consolation from these repeated failures, which do not say much either for the capacity or the spirit of these masses of serfs in uniform, when put in action before an enemy.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Windsor, Tuesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert walked for some time this morning in the pleasure grounds adjacent to the Castle. In the afternoon her Majesty and his Royal Highness again promenaded in the Home Park. Lady Portman has arrived at the Castle, and has succeeded the Countess of Gainsborough as the lady in Waiting on the Queen. The Hon. Captain Duncombe has also arrived at the Castle, and has succeeded Sir Frederick Stovin as the Groom in Waiting to her Majesty.

Wednesday.—The Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed walk this afternoon in the slopes. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice were taken their usual airing in the course of the day. The Earl and Countess of Westmorland arrived at the Castle in the afternoon, on a visit to her Majesty. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lady Charlotte Dundas, the Countess Wratislaw, and Colonel Knollys, joined the royal dinner circle at the Castle this evening.

Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, left the Castle this morning shortly after nine o'clock, and walked across the Home-park to the dairy. After visiting the royal aviary and apiary, the Queen and the Prince returned to the Castle. Shortly afterwards, the Prince Consort, attended by Col. Bouverie, proceeded in a close carriage to Virginia Water, for the purpose of shooting over the royal preserves in that vicinity. The rain, however, commencing immediately upon the Prince reaching Virginia Water, with every appearance of its continuance, his Royal Highness returned to the royal residence without firing a shot. The rain continued without intermission during the remainder of the day; thus preventing any of the royal family leaving the Castle since the early part of the morning, where their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken out for their usual airings. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Countess Josephine Wratislaw, and Lady Charlotte Dundas, had the honour of joining the royal dinner circle at the Castle this evening. It is expected that the Court will leave the Castle, for Claremont, on Saturday. Nothing, however, with reference to the departure of her Majesty and the Prince has yet been finally determined upon. I regret to state that the Hon. Mr. Murray still continues at the Pavilion, at Brighton, in an ill state of health.

Her Majesty's Visit to the City.—The following will be amongst the members of the royal household, who will be in attendance upon her Majesty and Prince Albert on the occasion of the opening of the Royal Exchange, on Monday next:—Lady Portman, Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Amelia Murray and the Hon. Lucy Kerr, Maids of Honour; Lord Byron, Lord in Waiting; the Hon. Captain Duncombe, Groom in Waiting; Major-General Wemyss, Equerry in Waiting; Lord George Lennox, Lord in Waiting to Prince Albert; Mr. G. E. Anson, Treasurer and Private Secretary to the Prince; and Colonel Bouverie, his Royal Highness's Equerry in Waiting.

Marriage in High Life.—On Wednesday, at St. George's, Hanover-square, was solemnized the marriage of Captain the Honourable Robert Edward Boyle, second son of the Earl of Cork and Orrery, with Miss Georgiana Robarts, youngest daughter of Abraham Robarts, the well-known banker.

The Duke of Wellington is expected to arrive at Apsley House, on Monday next, from Walmer Castle, to attend the royal banquet, on the occasion of the opening of the new Royal Exchange. His grace's party at the castle includes Countess Powlett, Lord and Lady Charles Wellesley, the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, and Mr. Algernon Greville.

Viscount Melbourne is at Brockett Hall, Herts. Lord and Lady Beauvale are visiting the noble Viscount.

Lord and Lady John Russell have left town for Dover, and purpose to reside there until the close of the ensuing month. Her ladyship's health is quite restored.

Lord Brougham and suite left Brougham Hall on Monday for London, en route to his lordship's chateau in the south of France.

A marriage is in contemplation between the Comte de Jarnac, First Secretary to the French Embassy in London, and the Hon. Miss Foley, eldest sister of the present and daughter of the late Lord Foley.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Election for the Ward of Portsoken.—The Court of Aldermen having declared the election of Mr. Salomons, as Alderman of Portsoken Ward, null and void, a wardmote was held on Monday, at the Three Nuns Tavern, Aldgate, to elect a gentleman in his stead. The Lord Mayor having opened the proceedings, Mr. Salomans addressed the Court, and handed in a protest against the election. He said he considered himself alderman of the ward, and intended to try the question in a court of law. Mr. D. W. Wire handed in a similar protest from certain inhabitants of the ward. Mr. Wood then proposed, and Mr. Bull seconded, the nomination of Francis Graham Moon, Esq., citizen and stationer, as a fit and proper person to represent the Ward of Portsoken in the Court of Aldermen. There being no other candidate nominated, the Lord Mayor declared F. G. Moon, Esq., duly elected.

STATUE OF WILLIAM THE FOURTH.—The statue to his late Majesty King William IV., designed for erection in King William-street, is in a state far advancing towards completion, and will, in the course of a short period, be removed to its final destination; thus adding another agreeable ornament to the City of London.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—Deaths from all causes registered in the week ending Saturday. Oct. 19:—Males, 458; females, 437; total, 895. Weekly average—Males, 483; females, 463; total 946.

METROPOLITAN DRAPERS' ASSOCIATION.—A public meeting of the Chelsea branch of this association was held in the Temperance-hall, Exeter-street, Sloane-street, a few evenings ago, Mr. Lilwall in the chair. Mr. Cooper, the district secretary, read the report, from which it appeared, that though one of the smallest, it was the most flourishing district in the metropolis, and, owing to the active exertions of the committee, evening trade was very much diminished. Mr. St. Clair, a member of the Central Committee, moved the adoption of the report. In doing so, he observed, that to abridge the hours of business was not, as some imagined, the sole object of these associations; but they had an ulterior object in view, towards which this was but the stepping-stone. This object was to elevate the character of trade, and to improve the moral and intellectual welfare of the shopmen, to do which it was absolutely necessary to secure a portion of time from the demands of business. Some resolutions were agreed to similar in spirit to those adopted at Exeter Hall, and deprecating late hours of business. Mr. Shipton moved, and Mr. Mayon, in an eloquent and humorous speech, seconded, a resolution of thanks to the Central Committee, for their exertions in the cause, which was agreed to.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE LIVERPOOL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY—The annual meeting of this Society took place on Tuesday, presided over, as usual, by the new peer, Baron Stanley, of Bickerstaffe. Nothing marked the proceedings, except the speech of the President himself. That noble lord, after expatiating upon the advantages of such societies, adverted to the improvements which were progressing in farming. Baron Stanley, in the course of his remarks upon these improvements, said:—It was not more than four or five years ago that he (Baron Stanley), at the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, when it was held in Liverpool, had taken the opportunity of mentioning a new manure, guano, as applicable and valuable for land. At that time only a single cargo had arrived in Liverpool, and now, if he (Baron Stanley) was not misinformed, from the single port of Liverpool only no less than one hundred and fifty vessels were engaged in the importation of that then unknown manure. It was not merely in such matters as that that he looked for advantage from the Society, but on all sides he saw old and useless fences disappearing, fields being enlarged, and deep and thorough draining of the land taking place. (Loud cheers) He (Baron Stanley) had heard of some old farmers who disapproved of such improvements. It had been said that it was useless growing more on the land, for if they did, the landlord would get the benefit of it. This was a very fallacious notion; for, in point of fact, by improvement they did not grow more upon the land, but a different kind of crop—wheat, instead of weeds. Baron Stanley then gave his opinion that landlords ought to grant leases to their tenants; and in reference to draining, gave an example of what had been done on his father's property. He said—"On my father's property in this neighbourhood there has been laid down at his expense, and charging 5 per cent. interest to the tenants, which, I believe, they most gladly and willingly acknowledge they have, over and over again, received the benefit of—in this last year we have laid down in deep draining somewhere about 300 miles of drains at an expense of between £5000 and £6000, and, I think, employed about 1,500,000 of draining tiles."

THE HASWELL COLLIERY EXPLOSION.—The Marquis of Londonderry, says the Durham Advertiser of Saturday, has written to the secretary to the fund for the survivors of the sufferers by the late accident at Haswell Colliery, in reply to an application for a subscription. The noble lord disapproves of all such subscriptions, and contends that it is the duty of all proprietors of collieries to maintain those who are bereft of their protectors by fatal accidents in the mines. He estimates the amount of money he has paid in this way, as coal proprietor, since 1819, at £6162 17s 5d. He concludes his letter, however, by saying that, as the Lambton Colliery and the Earl of Durham have each given £100 to the fund, he will give the same sum.

CALAMITOUS EXPLOSION AT ROWLEY REGIS.—ELEVEN LIVES LOST.—On Saturday a most calamitous explosion of fire-damp took place in a coal-pit belonging to Mr. Darby, at the Five Ways, Rowley Regis, Staffordshire. The number of persons at work in the pit at the time of the explosion was 17 or 18, and of these no less than 11 have fallen victims. Immediately after the explosion, the effects of which were perceived for some distance, the most active measures were taken to afford assistance to such of the workmen in the pit as might be alive, and six of them were as soon as possible extricated from their perilous situation. In a short time the bodies of eight workmen also were got out, those of three others being left in the pit, in consequence of the foulness of the air. The six poor fellows who were got out alive are all more or less injured, but not, we are happy to state, to such a degree as to endanger their lives.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE BRANDLING JUNCTION RAILWAY.—All the persons injured last week on the Brandling Junction Railway are in an improving condition; it is expected that in a few days most of them will be out of danger. Every attention has been paid to them by the managers of the railway.

POSTSCRIPT.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE CITY.—Official notices have been issued, stating, that on the occasion of her Majesty visiting the City, on Monday next, to open the Royal Exchange, the Treasury and the other public offices will be shut, and the day observed as a holiday. The Lord Mayor has issued various regulations, providing that the streets between Bishopsgate-street and Temple-bar be closed at seven in the morning on Monday, and that no vehicle be allowed to remain after eight o'clock. Also, that no person be allowed to pass or remain in the Poultry, Mansion-house-street, Cornhill, Bartholomew-lane, or Threadneedle-street, after seven o'clock, except inhabitants and others going to the houses in those streets, who will be permitted to pass for that purpose until nine o'clock, after which time no person whatever will be admitted into those streets. That no carriage be admitted into any of the streets between Temple-bar and Bishopsgate-street after seven o'clock, except those going to the Exchange (who must produce their tickets of invitation).

Lord Brougham left town this morning for the continent, his lordship being about to pass the winter at his residence at Cannes, in the south of France.

Sir Robert Peel returned to town this morning from his seat, Drayton Manor, Staffordshire. Miss Peel, we are happy to hear, is daily gaining strength.

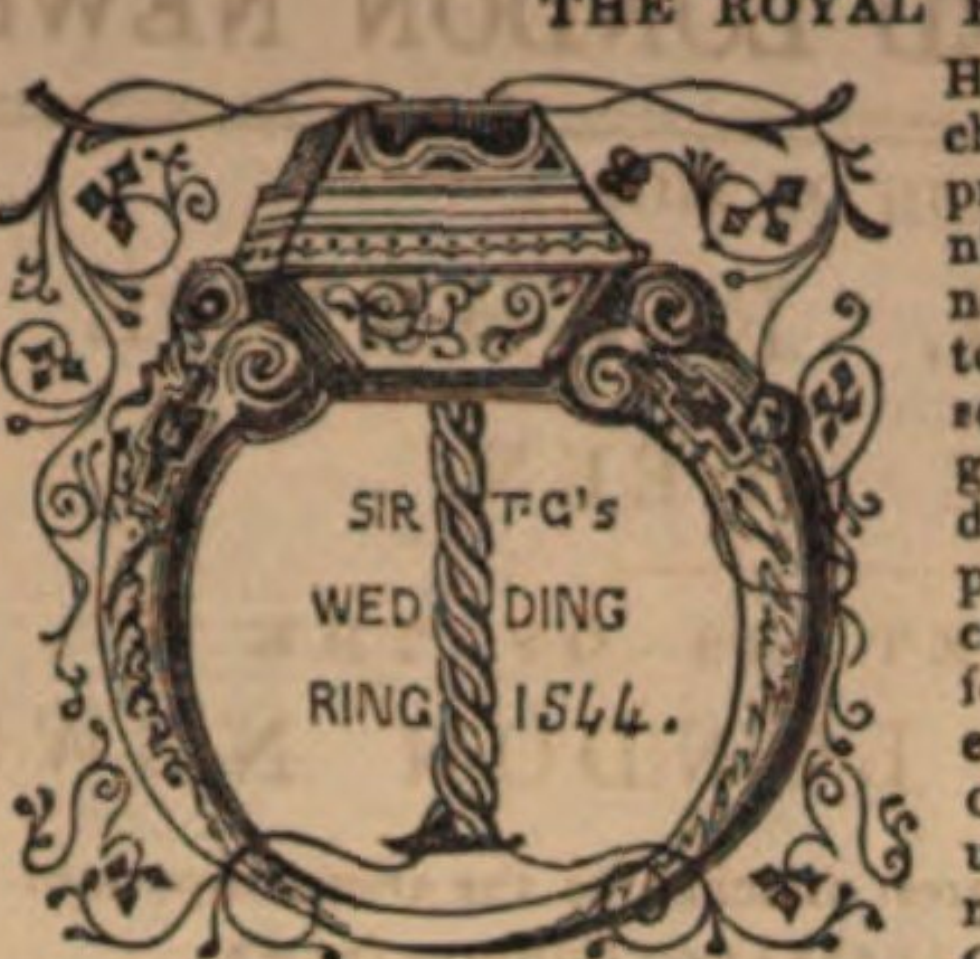
MARRIAGE OF QUEEN ISABELLA OF SPAIN.—A Madrid correspondent assures us that a family compact has been entered into between Don Carlos on the one part, and Queen Christina on the other, for the marriage of Isabella of Spain to the Prince of the Asturias, eldest son of the former. The definitive arrangements were, we are informed, completed at Madrid on the 11th, and the contract has been signed at Bourges.

ANOTHER MURDER IN IRELAND.—Accounts have been received of another murder in Ireland. It took place on the borders of Tipperary. The victim was a person named Thomas M'Namara, who was employed as one of the bog-rangers on the county Limerick estate of the governors of the schools founded by Erasmus Smith. He was murdered about noon on the public road leading from Cappamore to Doon, on the lands of Ballycushown; there were people passing to and from the bog, bringing out turf to the very place where he was murdered. The police were soon on the spot, and arrested some persons whom they found there.

OUTRAGE AND BURGLARY AT MANCETTER.—An account has been received of a daring burglary in the dwelling-house of Mr. Thomas Worthington, at Mancetter, near Atherstone. Warwickshire. The house was a few nights ago broken into by a gang of ruffians, wearing black masks, and their persons otherwise disguised. The burglars commenced their operations by cutting a hole in the front door, the noise of which disturbed Miss Worthington, who opened a window and inquired what they wanted, on which the burglars said the cows had escaped from the close; but Mr. Worthington, who had now joined his niece, ordered them to be off about their business, or he would shoot them. Of this the burglars took no notice, but continued their operations against the door, and at last succeeded in making an opening. The inmates, consisting of Mr. Worthington, a niece, a grand niece, and a servant lad and maid, were by this time fully prepared, and Mr. Worthington, who is in his 89th year, placed himself at the door, and with a drawn sword cut and stabbed at the fellows through the hole they had made, and kept them at bay for a considerable time. The burglars battered the door to pieces; but while they were doing so, Miss Worthington brought her uncle his fowling-piece, loaded with swan shot, and desired him to shoot the villians; and seeing that his aged hands shook so that he could not take an aim, this heroic young lady pointed and held the gun while her uncle fired. The burglars, uttering the most horrid oaths and imprecations, next tore up the stones and threw them at the old gentleman and his niece, who still kept their places in the hall; at length, after half an hour's fighting, and Mr. Worthington's being wounded in the temple and in various parts of the body, the niece, who stood firmly by his side during the conflict, parleyed with the robbers, when one of them said all they wanted was money, and they did not want to hurt them. The lady then said, if they would promise not to hurt her uncle, no further resistance should be made, which the robbers promised, on which four of them made their way into the house, and after making the servant lad give up all his money, they next took from Miss Eliza Worthington, a grand niece of Mr. Worthington, a young lady about fifteen years old, all the money she had, threatening to hang her if she did not keep quiet. They then forced the niece to show them where the money was kept, which they took, as well as some fire-arms; and, after threatening the inmates, if they made any noise about the robbery, or took any steps to discover the robbers, they would come again some night, and burn the house and murder all the inmates, they took their departure, and no traces have been obtained of them. We are happy to say that neither Mr. Worthington nor any of his family are seriously injured.

At the Central Criminal Court, George Weston, John Cooper, alias Timberlake, and George Jackson, were tried yesterday for stealing some jewellery and other articles from the house of Mr. Blundell, in Agnes-street, Waterloo-road, under daring and heartless circumstances. The particulars recently appeared in our police reports. The jury found Cooper and Weston guilty, but acquitted Jackson. They were subsequently tried on another indictment, and all were convicted. Mr. Justice Maule sentenced Weston and Jackson to be transported for fifteen years, and Cooper for ten years.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

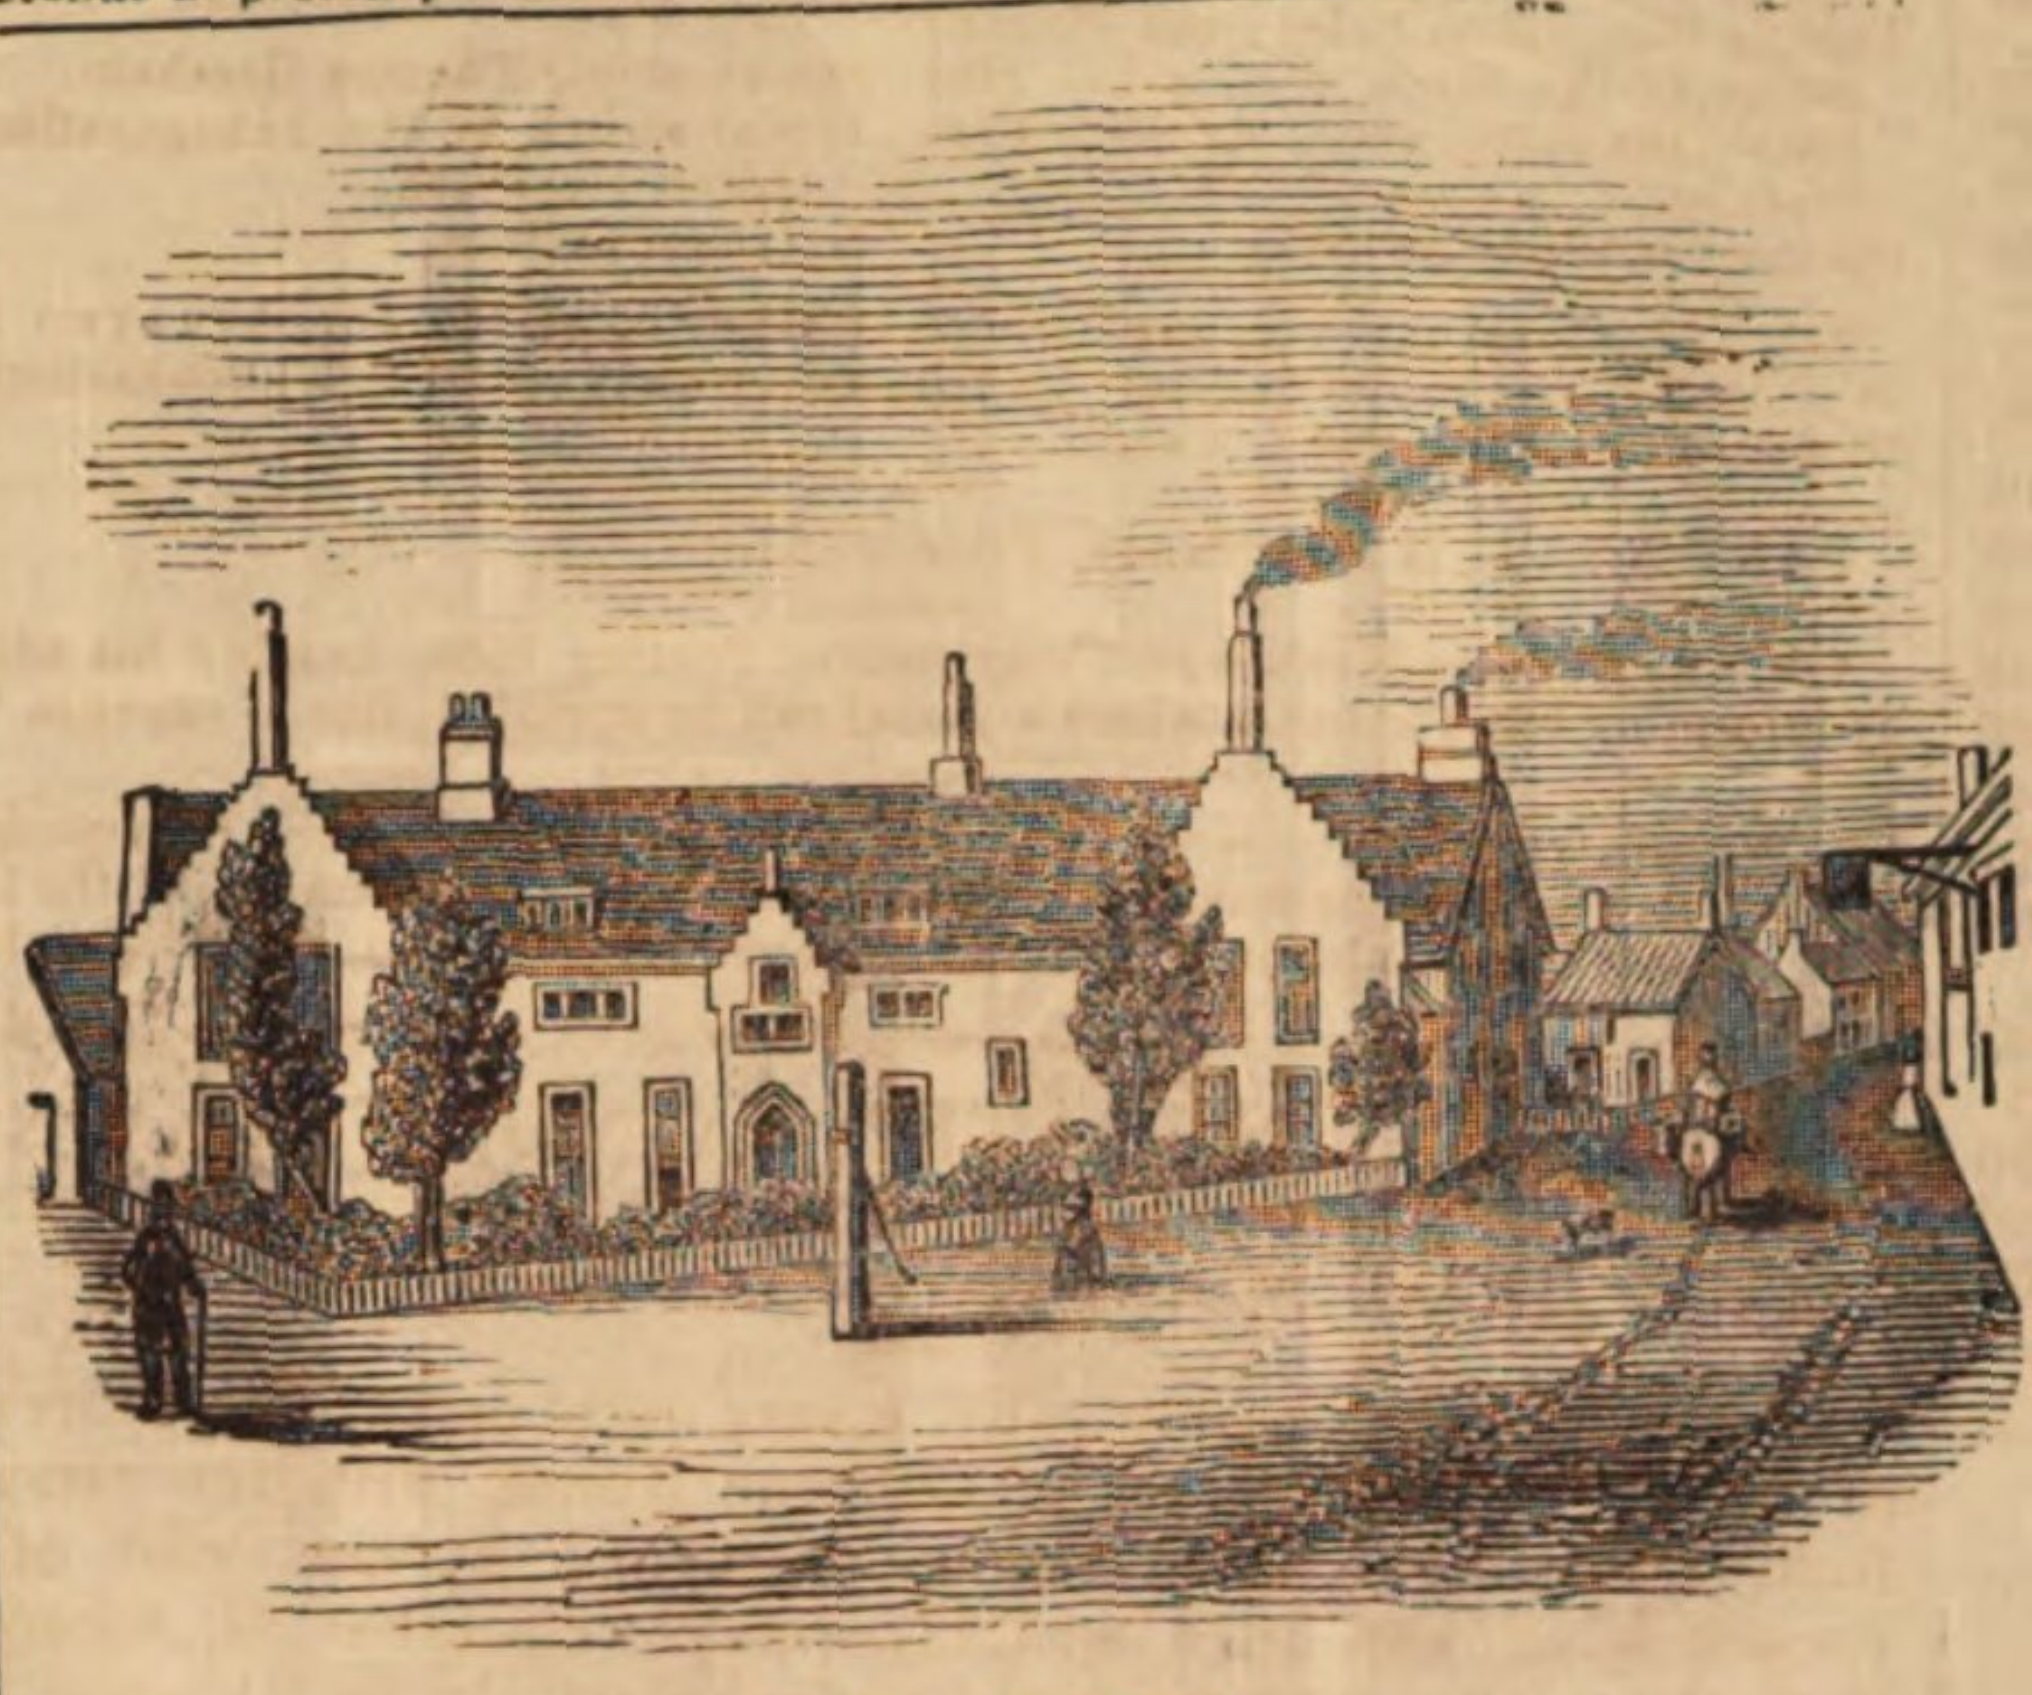


THE opening of the New Royal Exchange by her Majesty, on Monday next, promises to be a spectacle of such magnificence, that the greater portion of our next week's journal will be appropriated to the illustration of the most striking scenes and incidents of the Royal Progress. Upon the eve of the ceremonial destined to be chronicled as a most important and attractive event in regal and civic history, it may be interesting, before proceeding to the details of the new edifice, to glance at the TWO EXCHANGES which have been built nearly upon the site occupied by the THIRD—namely, the north-western extremity of Cornhill.

Notwithstanding the early commercial importance of the City of London, the merchants appear to have been unprovided with some fixed establishment wherein they might assemble and transact business, until long after the building of the Bourse at Antwerp, in the year 1531. Stow tells us, in the picture he has left us of Lombard-street, that—"The merchants and tradesmen, as well English as strangers, for their general making of bargains, contracts, and commerce.... did usually meet twice every day," at noon and in the evening. "But these meetings were unpleasant and troublesome, by reason of walking and talking in an open narrow street.... being there constrained either to endure all extremes of weather, viz., heat and cold, snow and rain; or else to shelter themselves in shops."

The King himself (Henry VIII.), however, so early as 1535, proposed that the merchants should remove to the old edifice of Leadenhall, which they declined doing; and in 1537, Sir Richard Gresham, the wealthy merchant, laid before Cromwell, then Lord Privy Seal, the plan of a Bourse for London, to which he had, no doubt, been incited by a visit to Antwerp. In this attempt he was unsuccessful; but, before retiring from his mayoralty, in the following year, he made another effort to carry his design into execution in a letter which is still extant; proposing to erect the building in Lombard-street, at a cost of £2000. This application likewise failed, and the attempt was not, for some years, renewed. Thus, with Sir Richard Gresham rests the honour of having originally projected the "Goodely bursse," which his son was happily possessed of the means as well as the inclination, thirty years later, to construct.

The name of Gresham is derived from a little village in Norfolk, where the ancestors of the future civic worthies had resided, it is said, for generations. They subsequently removed to Holt, a few miles from Gresham, in the midst of a wild heathy moor, in the most northern part of Norfolk, being only four miles distant from the sea. Here James Gresham (whose letters, written between 1443 and 1464, are included in the Paston Collection) probably erected the old manor-house, which Sir John Gresham, the brother of Sir Richard, converted into a free-school, and richly endowed with his own means. The edifice, as it stands at present, is shown in the annexed engraving.



HOLT SCHOOL,

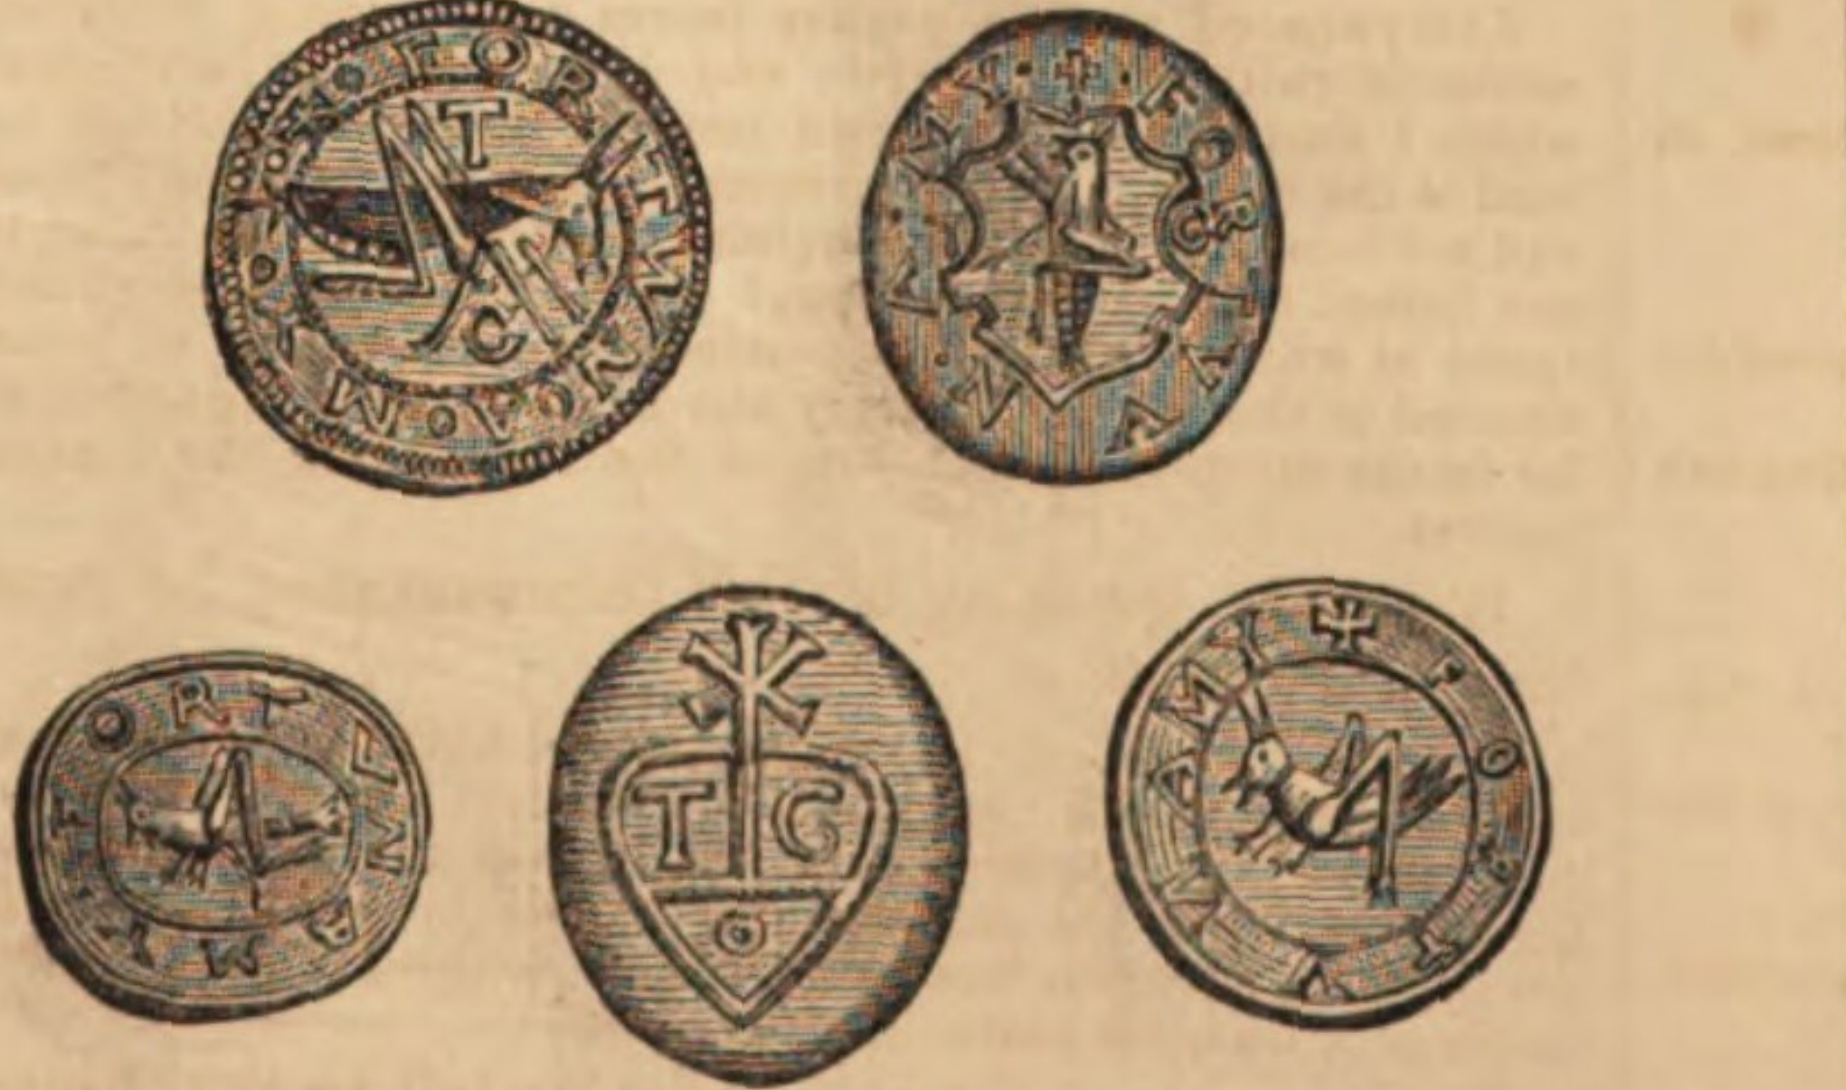
FORMERLY THE RESIDENCE OF THE GRESHAM FAMILY.

Thomas Gresham, who eventually founded the Royal Exchange, was the younger of two sons, and is supposed to have been born in London about 1519. He was educated at Cambridge, apprenticed to his uncle, Sir John, and admitted to the Mercers' Company in 1543, being then in his 25th year. A fine Portrait of Sir Thomas hangs in the Company's Hall, in Cheapside; which we shall, next week, present to our readers.

We have not space to glance at the history of Gresham—how he became a merchant in 1544; Royal Agent at Antwerp to Henry VIII. and Edward IV.; removed by Queen Mary, but restored by Elizabeth; how he became Sir Thomas on undertaking the duties of Ambassador at the Court of the Duchess of Parma. His principal English residences were in Lombard-street; Mayfield, in Sussex, previously a favourite old palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury; and Osterley, in Middlesex: he had other country houses, but of less importance. Lombard-street was, in Gresham's time, the busiest and most important street in London: in short, it was as yet the only Exchange.

Like all other bankers and merchants of the day, Gresham had his shop in this street, with his grasshopper, his crest, over the door, as his sign. Those who feel any interest in so doing, may yet look upon the site of Gresham's house. It stood where now stands the banking-house of Messrs. Stone, Martin, and Co. Pennant saw the sign itself in the last century, which is understood to have remained on the spot till the erection of the present building. Mayfield and Osterley were magnificent places; and in both Gresham had the honour of a visit from his royal mistress. One of the rooms yet existing among the beautiful ruins of Mayfield is called the Queen's Chamber to this day.

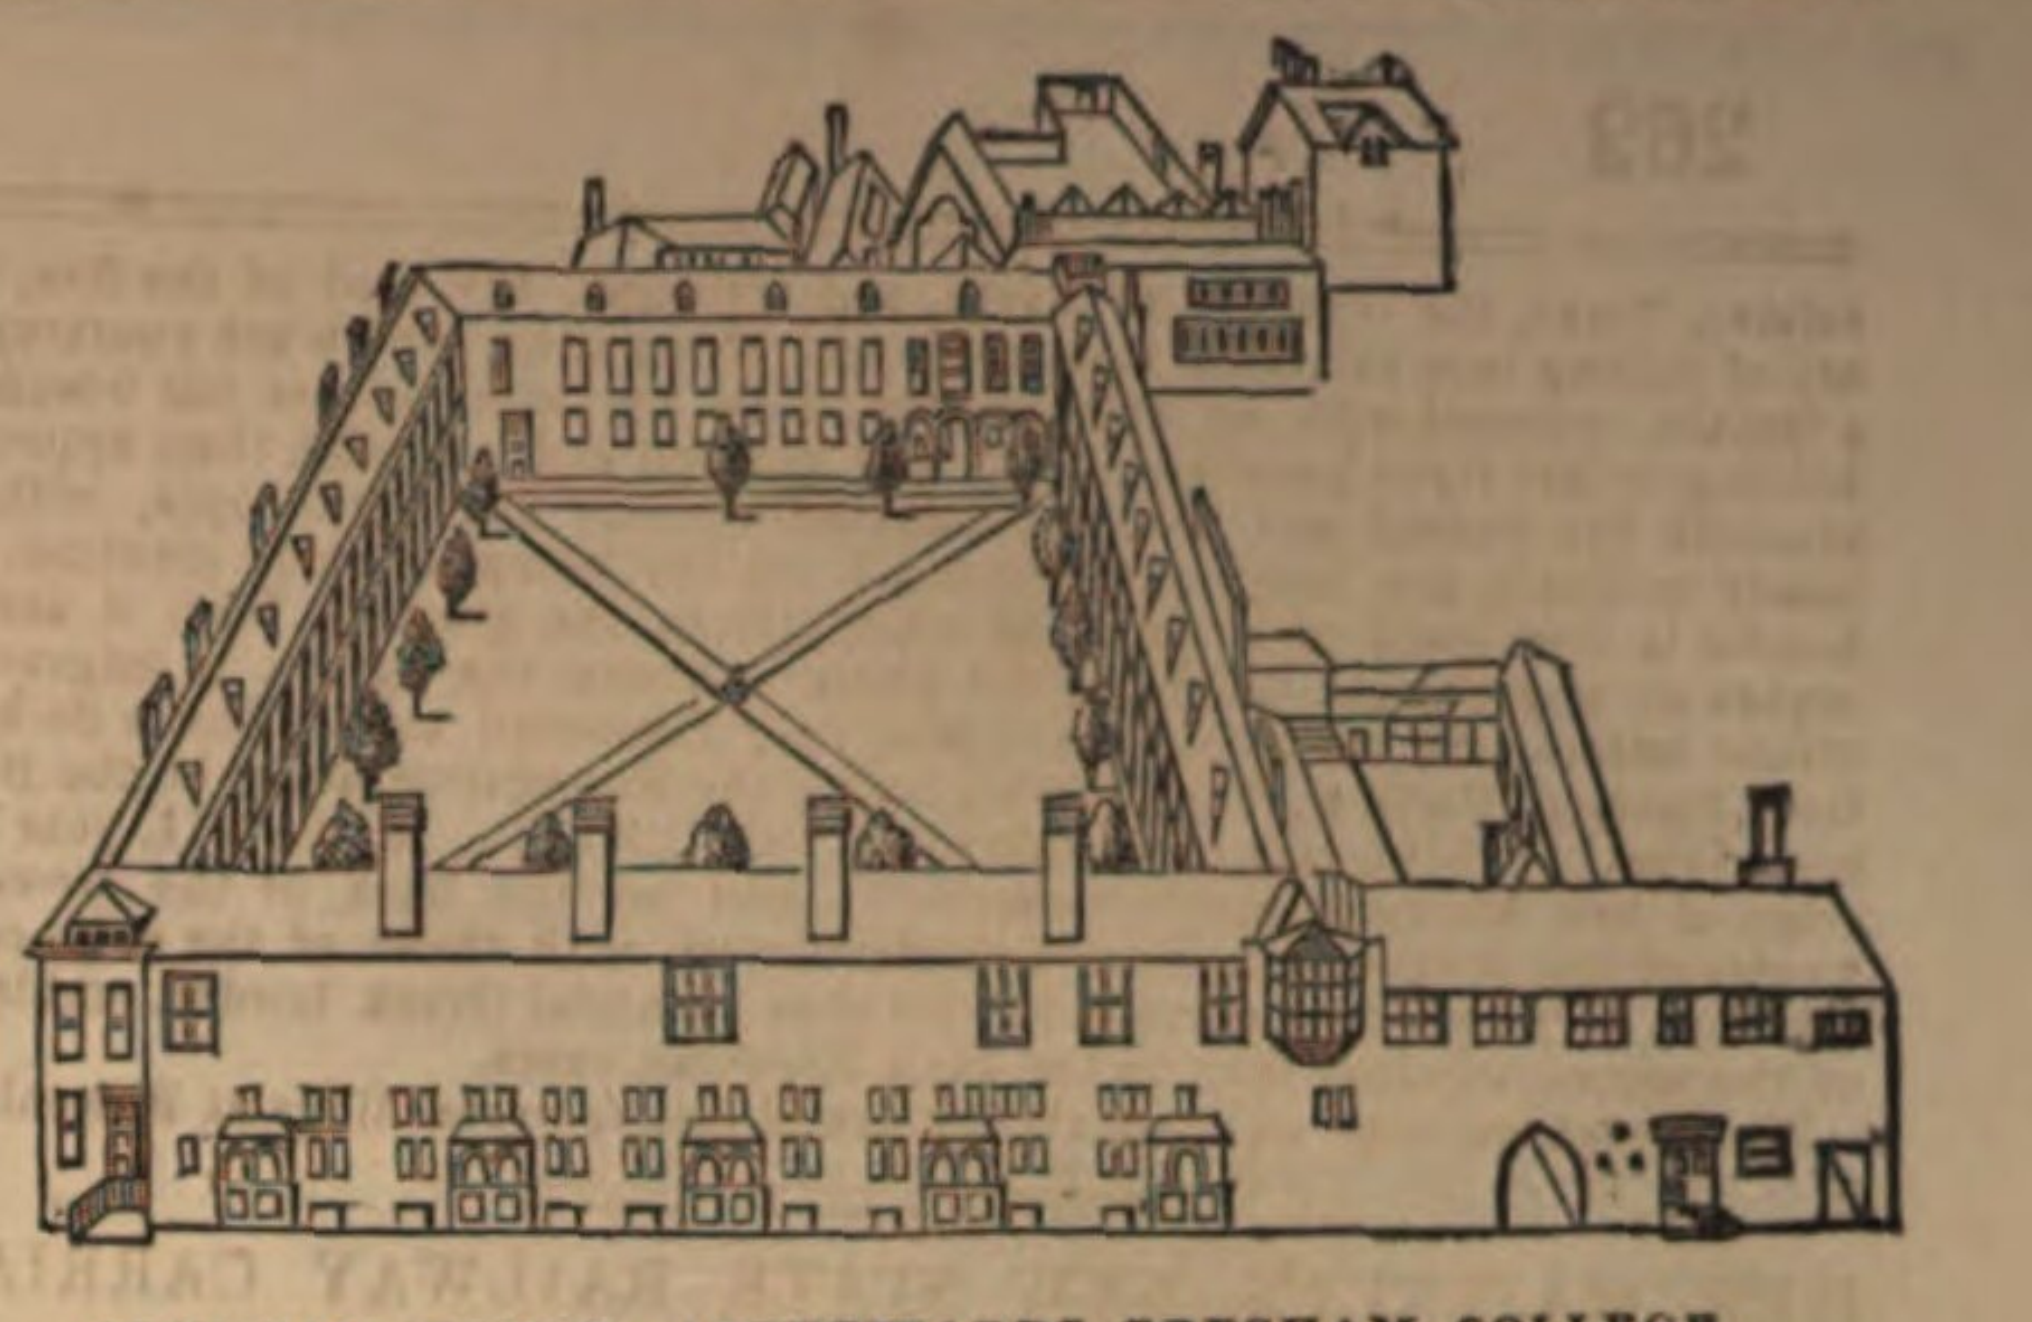
As we have just mentioned the grasshopper sign, we may here state that James Gresham's letters in the Paston Collection, are sealed with a grasshopper; a sufficient refutation of a tradition accounting for the adoption of that heraldic symbol by Sir Thomas Gresham, from a grasshopper having saved his life when he was a poor famished boy, by attracting a person to the spot where he lay, in a helpless condition! Still, it were almost a pity to disturb the legend, teaching, as it simply does, reliance upon God's Providence. In four of the annexed the grasshopper is very prominent.



SEALS USED BY SIR THOMAS GRESHAM, [illegible]

Nor must we forget to mention, among Sir Thomas's residences, Gresham House, which stood in Fair Gardens, upon the site now occupied by the Excise Office, between Bishopsgate and old Broad-streets. This mansion Gresham munificently left as a college, richly endowed. We annex a view, from Vertue's plate, engraved in 1739. It was pulled down in 1768. The College was richly endowed: there was a fund expressly for lectures, which, after the College was taken down, were delivered at the Royal Exchange; but the trustees of the property have, at length, erected a suitable hall for the purpose, engraved in No. 60 of our journal.

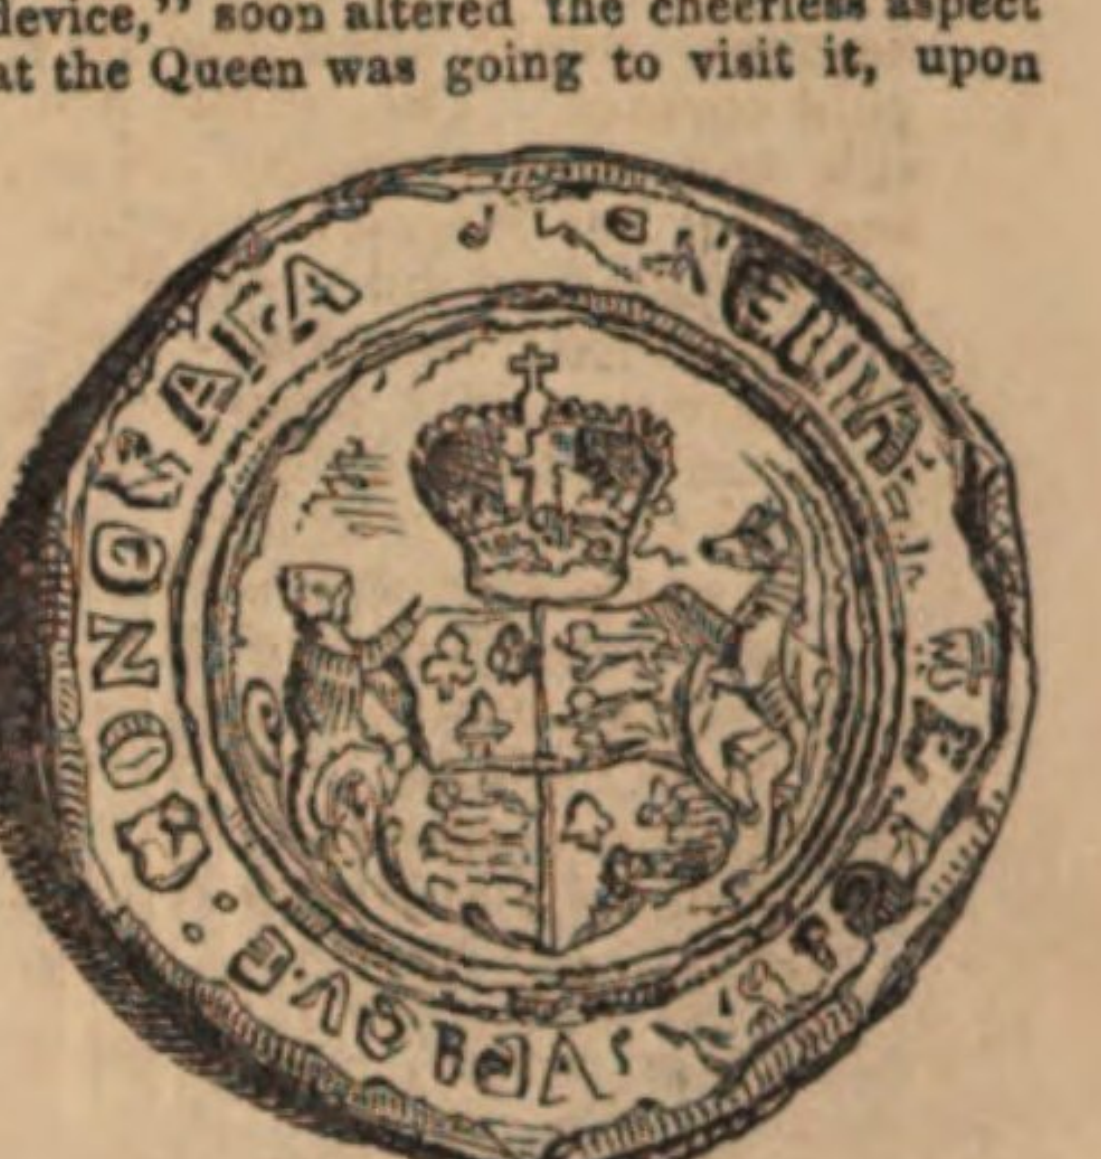
To return to the more immediate subject of this sketch: in the year 1566, Sir Thomas Gresham offered to remedy the inconveniences of Lombard-street, by erecting a Bourse or Exchange, provided a site was found. A subscription was immediately set on foot for the purchase of the chosen spct in Cornhill, and in the alleys at the back, which, with the houses thereon standing, were ultimately bought for £3532. The ground was then made plain, and the whole conveyed over to Sir Thomas Gresham, by certain aldermen, in the name of the citizens generally. Sir Thomas, on his part, being at the house of Mr. John Rivers, alderman, in company with other citizens, most frankly and lovingly promised that, within a month after the Bourse should be fully finished, he would present it in equal moieties to the City and the Mercers' Company. In token of his sincerity, he thereupon gave his hand to Sir William Garrard; and, in the presence of his assembled friends, drank a carouse to his kinsman, Thomas Rowe. Mr. Burgon adds to this passage the remark: "How rarely do ancient documents furnish us with such a picture of ancient manners." On the 7th of June, 1566, Sir Thomas laid the first stone of the foundation, accompanied by several aldermen, each of whom laid a piece of gold upon it for the workmen. By November. 1567, the entire building was completed.



GRESHAM HOUSE, AFTERWARDS GRESHAM COLLEGE.

The general aspect of the new building presented striking evidence of its in every way Flemish character. As Flemish materials, Flemish workmen, and a Flemish architect were employed in the execution, so was the design itself a tolerably close imitation of a Flemish building—the great Bourse of Antwerp, engraved at page 272 of our present number. Two prints have been preserved of an interesting character, which show very completely the interior and exterior aspects of the building. They were executed in 1569, and from the date, and the inscription upon them, it appears not improbable, as Mr. Burgon suggests, (in his excellent "Life and Times of Sir Thomas Gresham") that they were engraved at Gresham's own order. The exterior is engraved upon page 264. Its principal feature is a lofty square tower, with two balconied galleries, and a grasshopper surmounting the ball at its top, which stands on one side the entrance, and formed a bell-tower, from which issued at twelve at noon, and at six in the evening, the merchants' call to "'Change." The pillars of the court were of marble. All the four corners of the building were ornamented with the founder's crest, the grasshopper. The building consisted essentially of two portions—an upper and a lower; the first being laid out in shops, one hundred in number, and the other into walks and rooms for the merchants, with shops on the exterior. We likewise annex a view of the interior, copied from the above print. We may, however, observe, that the column there seen in front of the northern entrance, commanding a view of the court within, is shown in no other engravings of London. The statues of the several sovereigns of England were ranged in niches in the upper story.

Long after the opening of this Exchange, the shops remained "in a manner empty;" when Gresham, by a new "device," soon altered the cheerless aspect of the place. It was noised abroad that the Queen was going to visit it, upon the strength of which Gresham prevailed upon certain shopkeepers to stock the shops, on promise of "one year rent free." All being prepared on January 27, 1571—amidst the ringing of the bells in every part of the city—"the Queen's Majesty, attended with her nobility, came from her house at the Strand, called Somerset House, and entered the city by Temple Bar, through Fleet-street, Cheap, and so by the north side of the Burse to Sir Thomas Gresham's house, in Bishopsgate-street, where she dined. After dinner her Majestry returning through Cornhill, entered the Burse on the south side," and after she had viewed the whole, she caused it, by herald and trumpet, to be proclaimed the Royal Exchange. A bas-relief through which Elizabeth had passed, existed down to the fire, commemorative of the incident:—



MEDALLION TO COMMEMORATE THE OPENING OF THE ROYAL EXCHANGE, BY QUEEN ELIZABETH.

> "Proclaim through every high street of the city,
> This place be no longer called a Burse;
> But since the building's stately, fair, and strange,
> Be it for ever called—the Royal Exchange."
>
> Queen Elizabeth's Troubles, Part 2.—A Play, by T. Heywood, 1609.

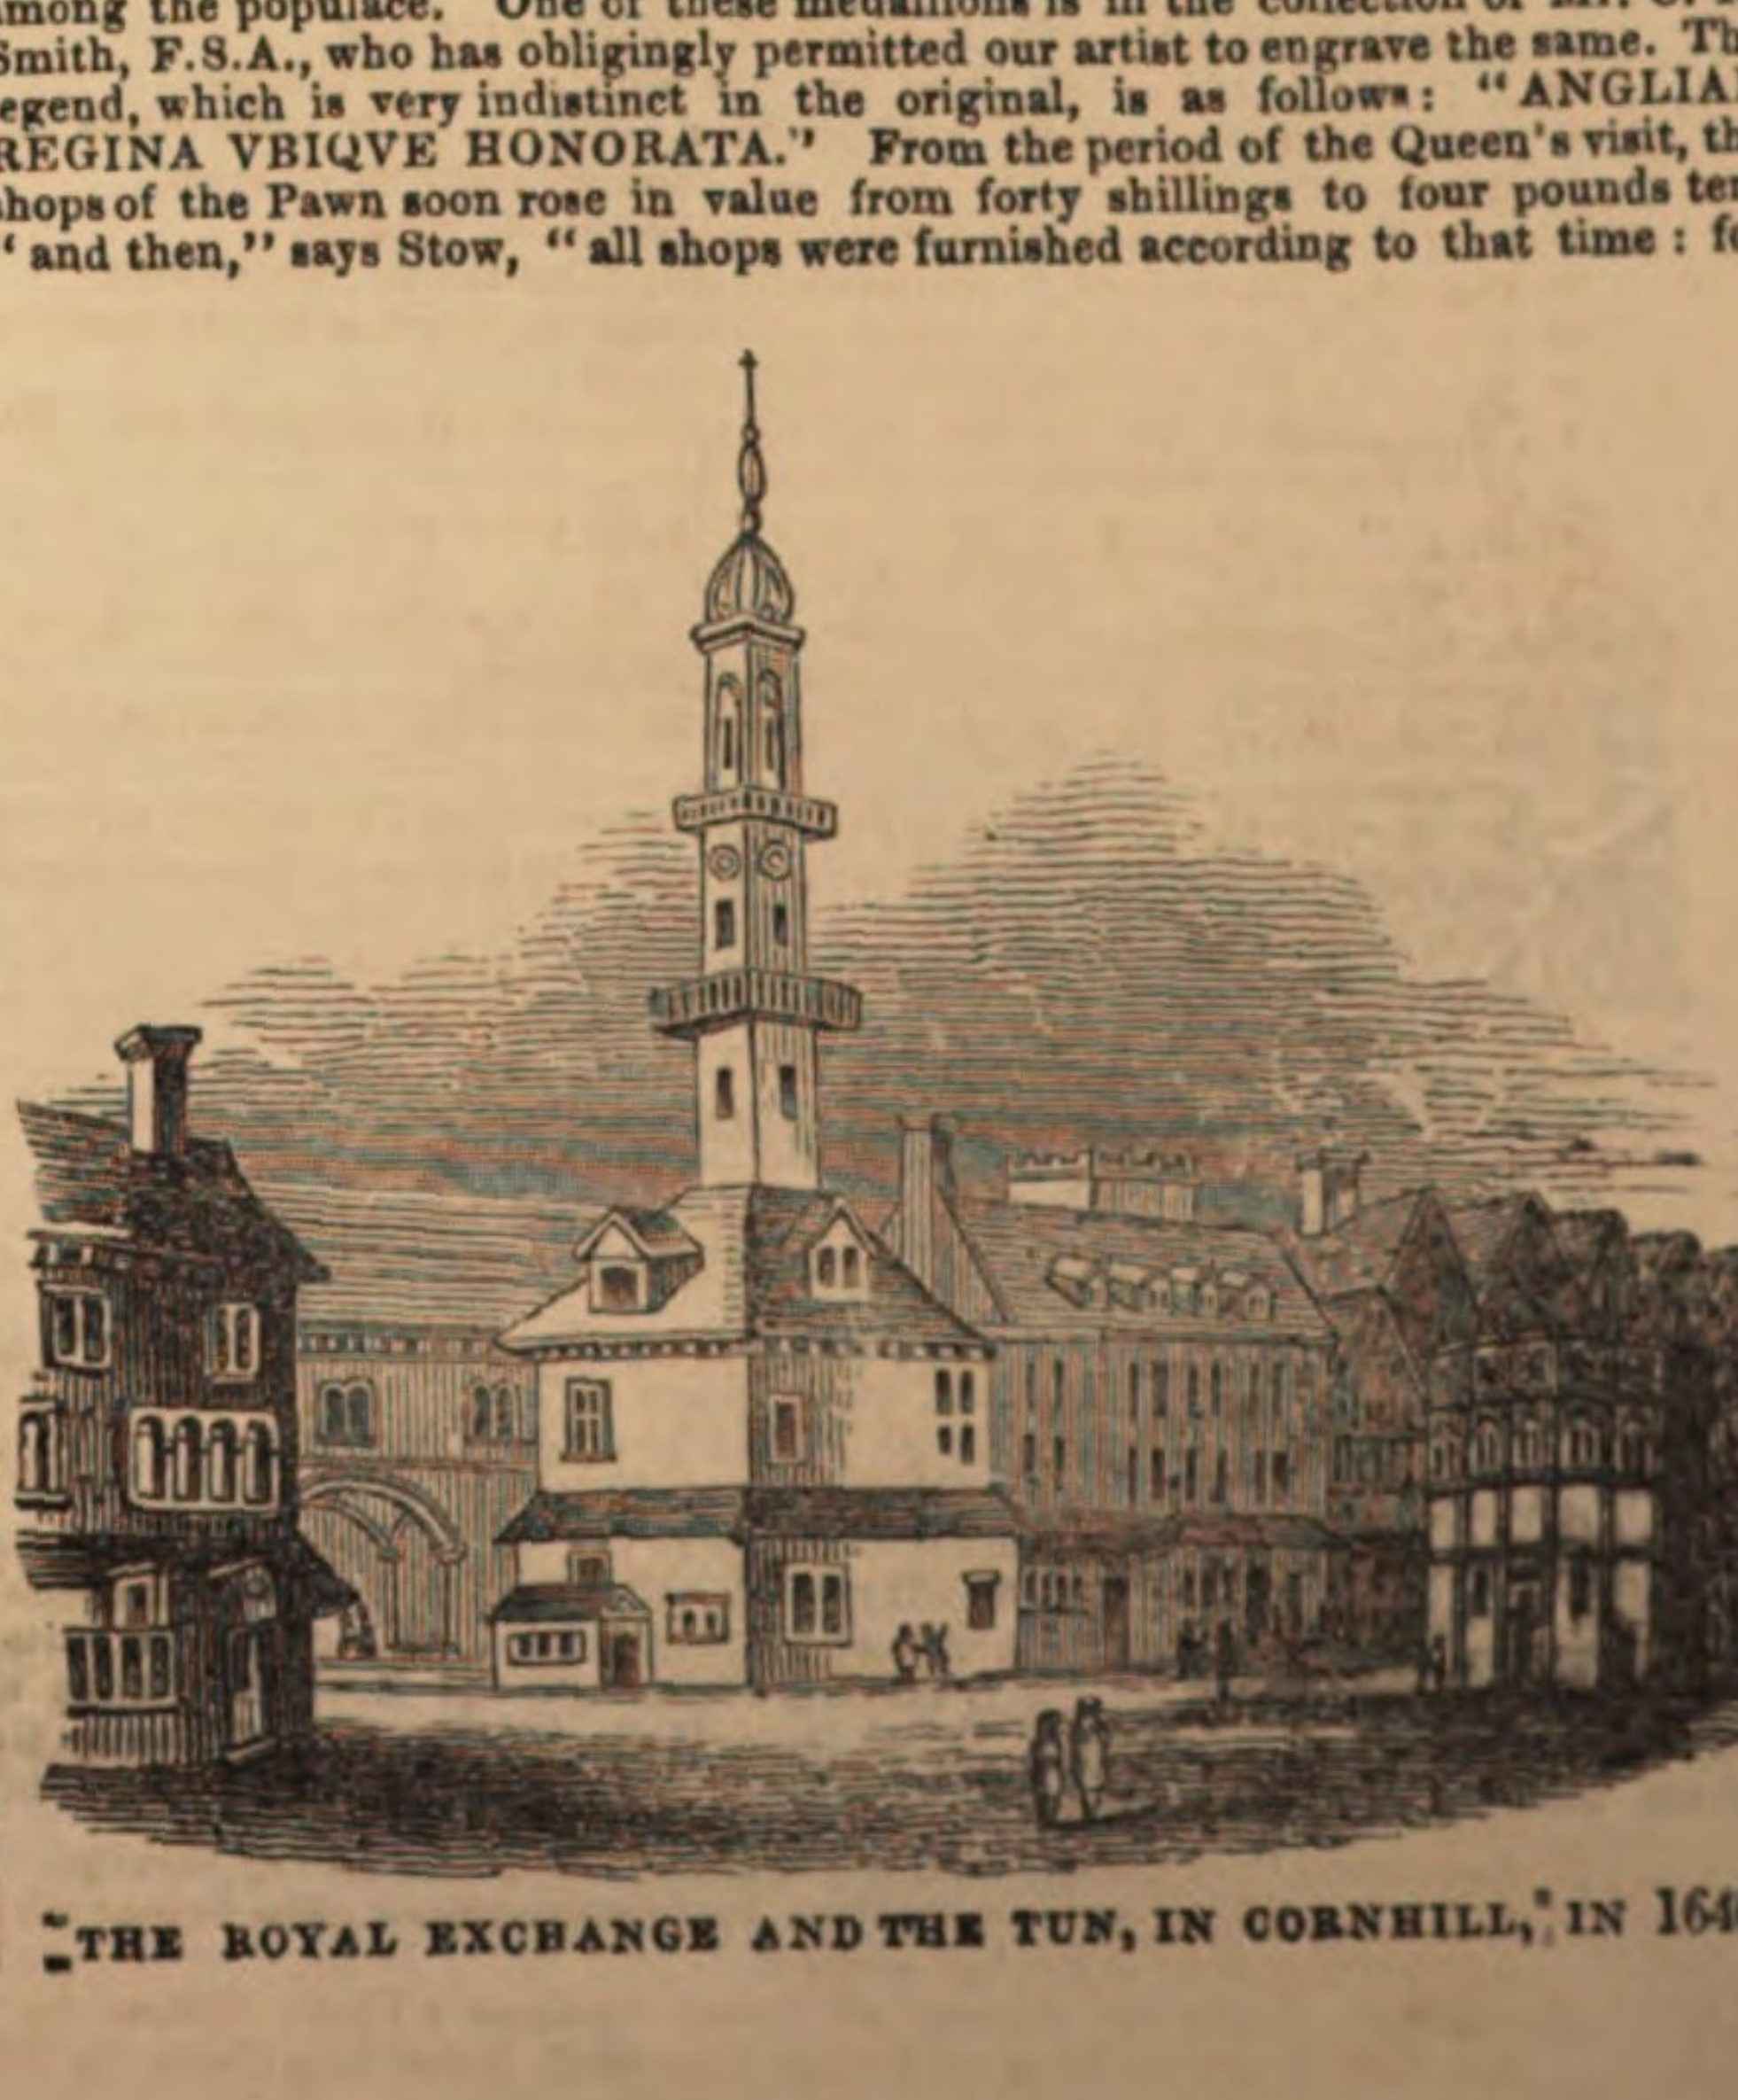
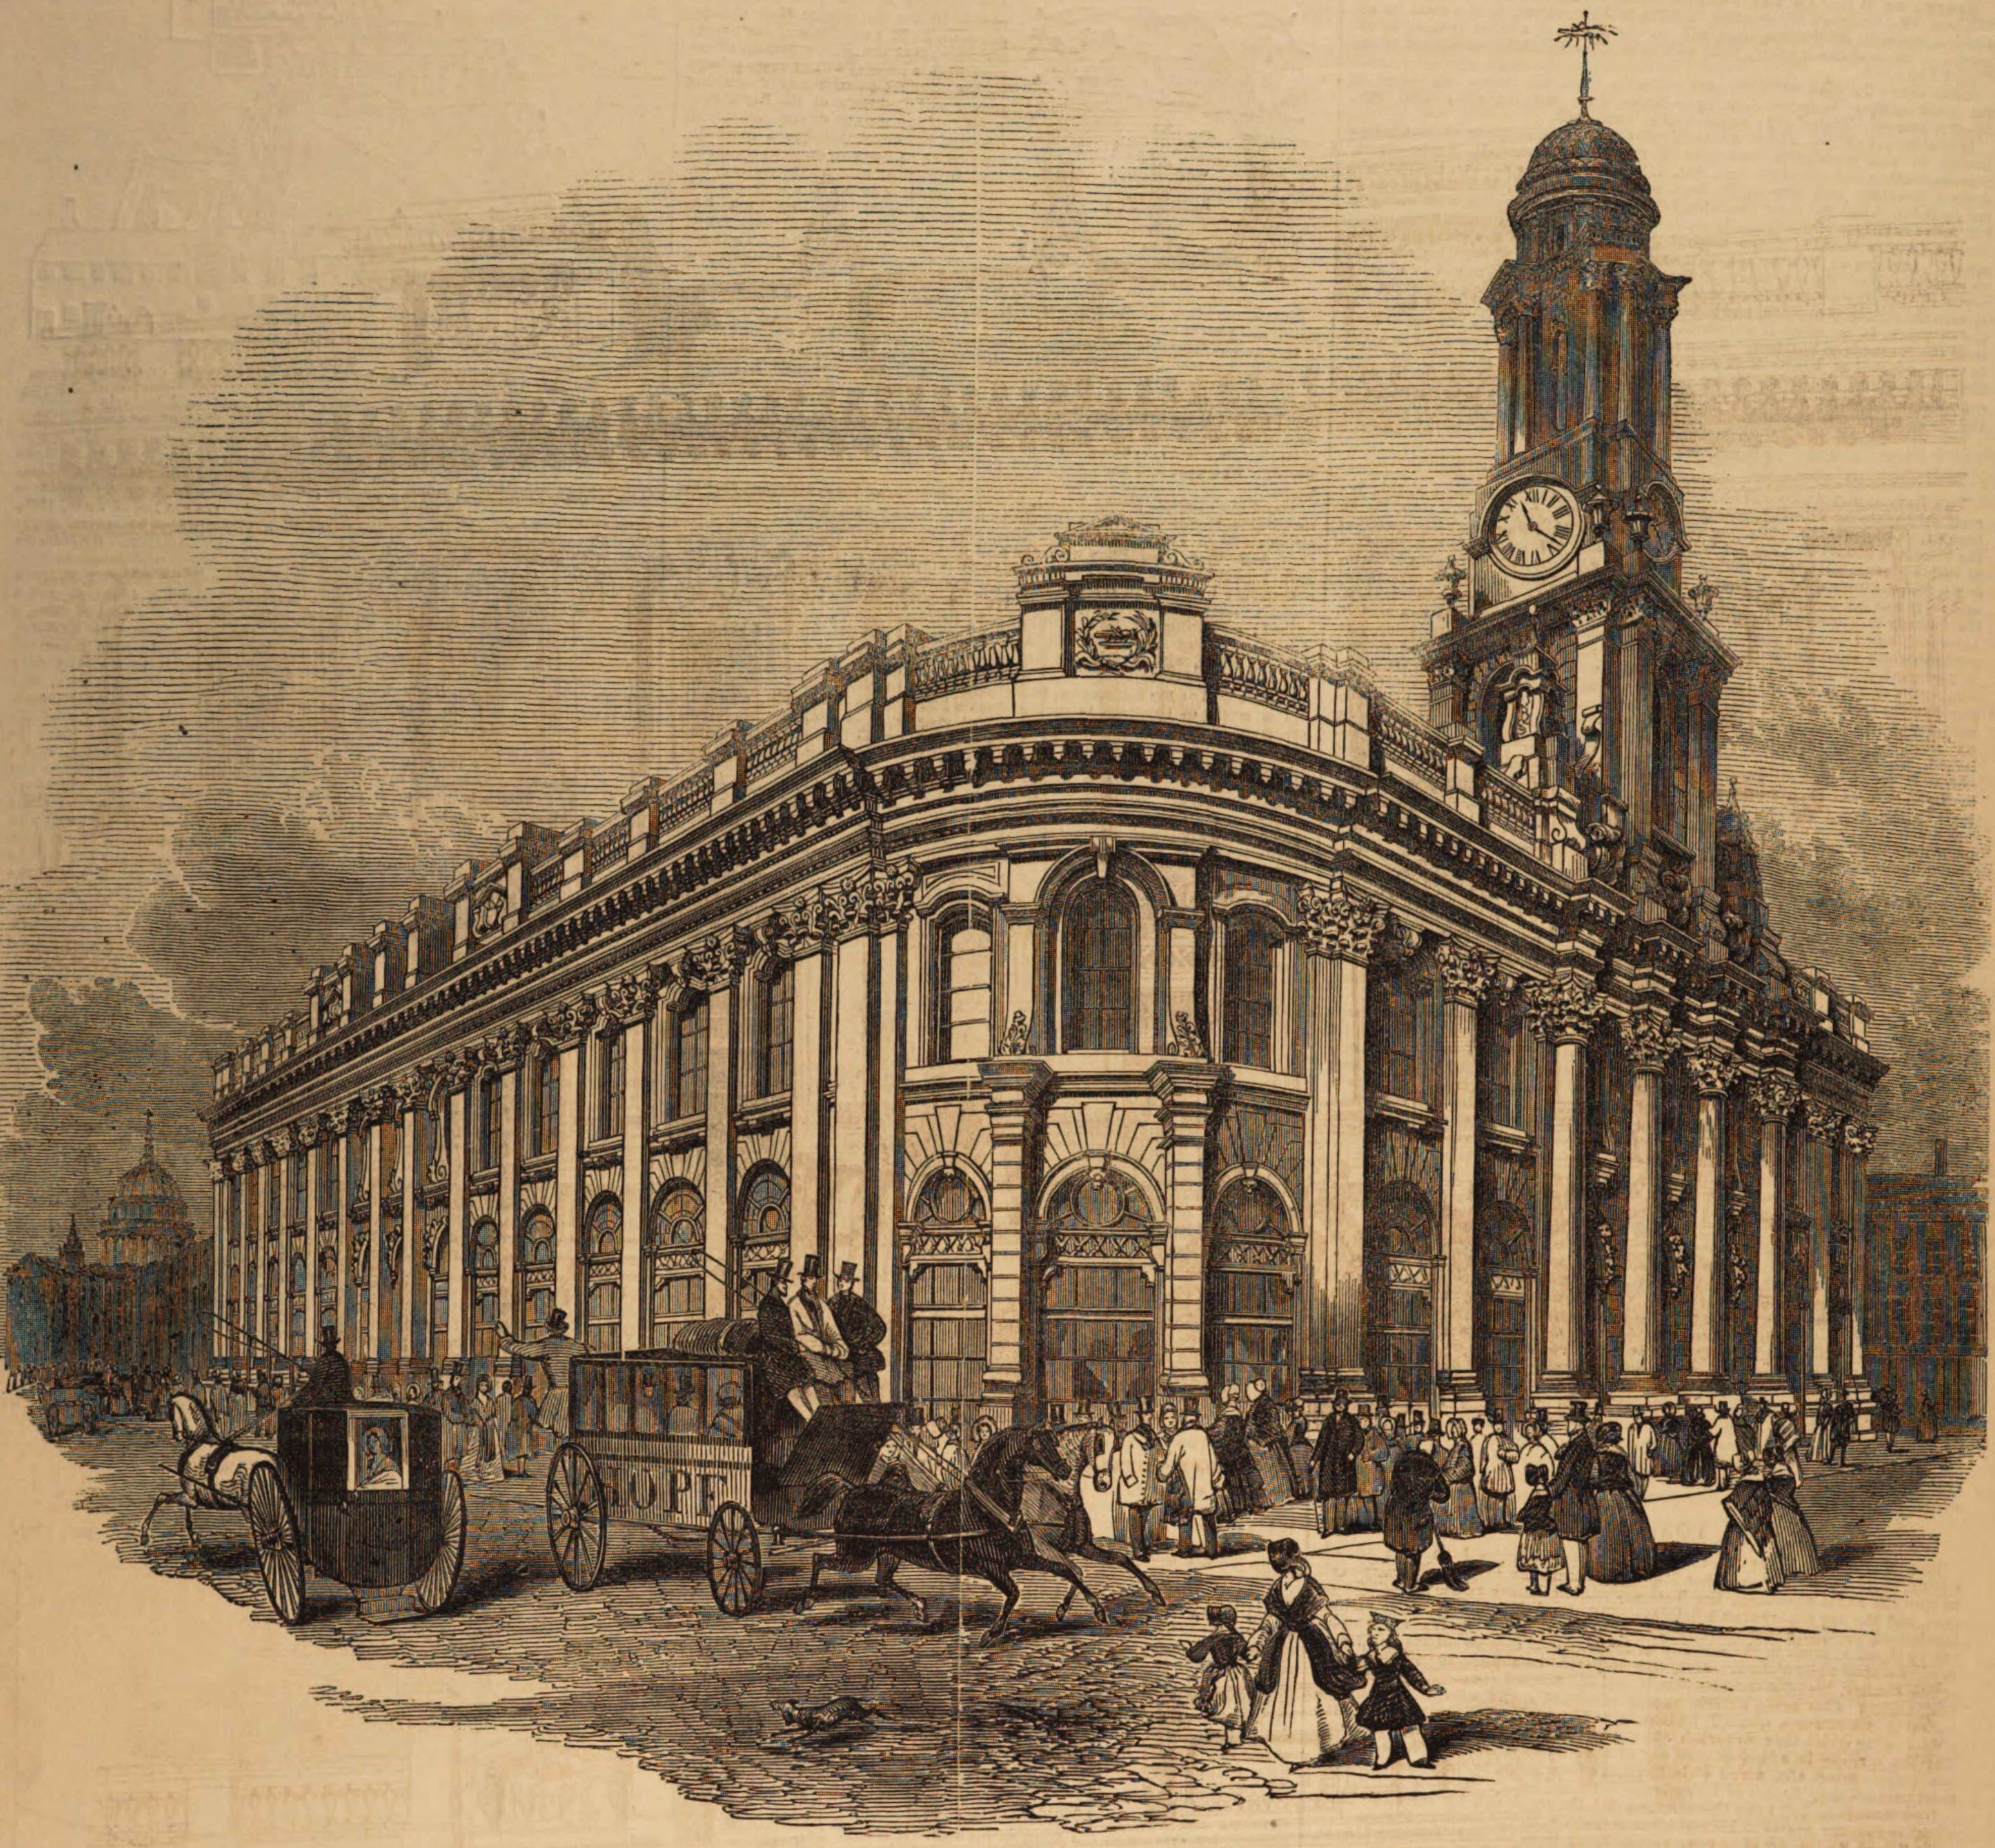
INTERIOR OF THE FIRST EXCHANGE, 1569.

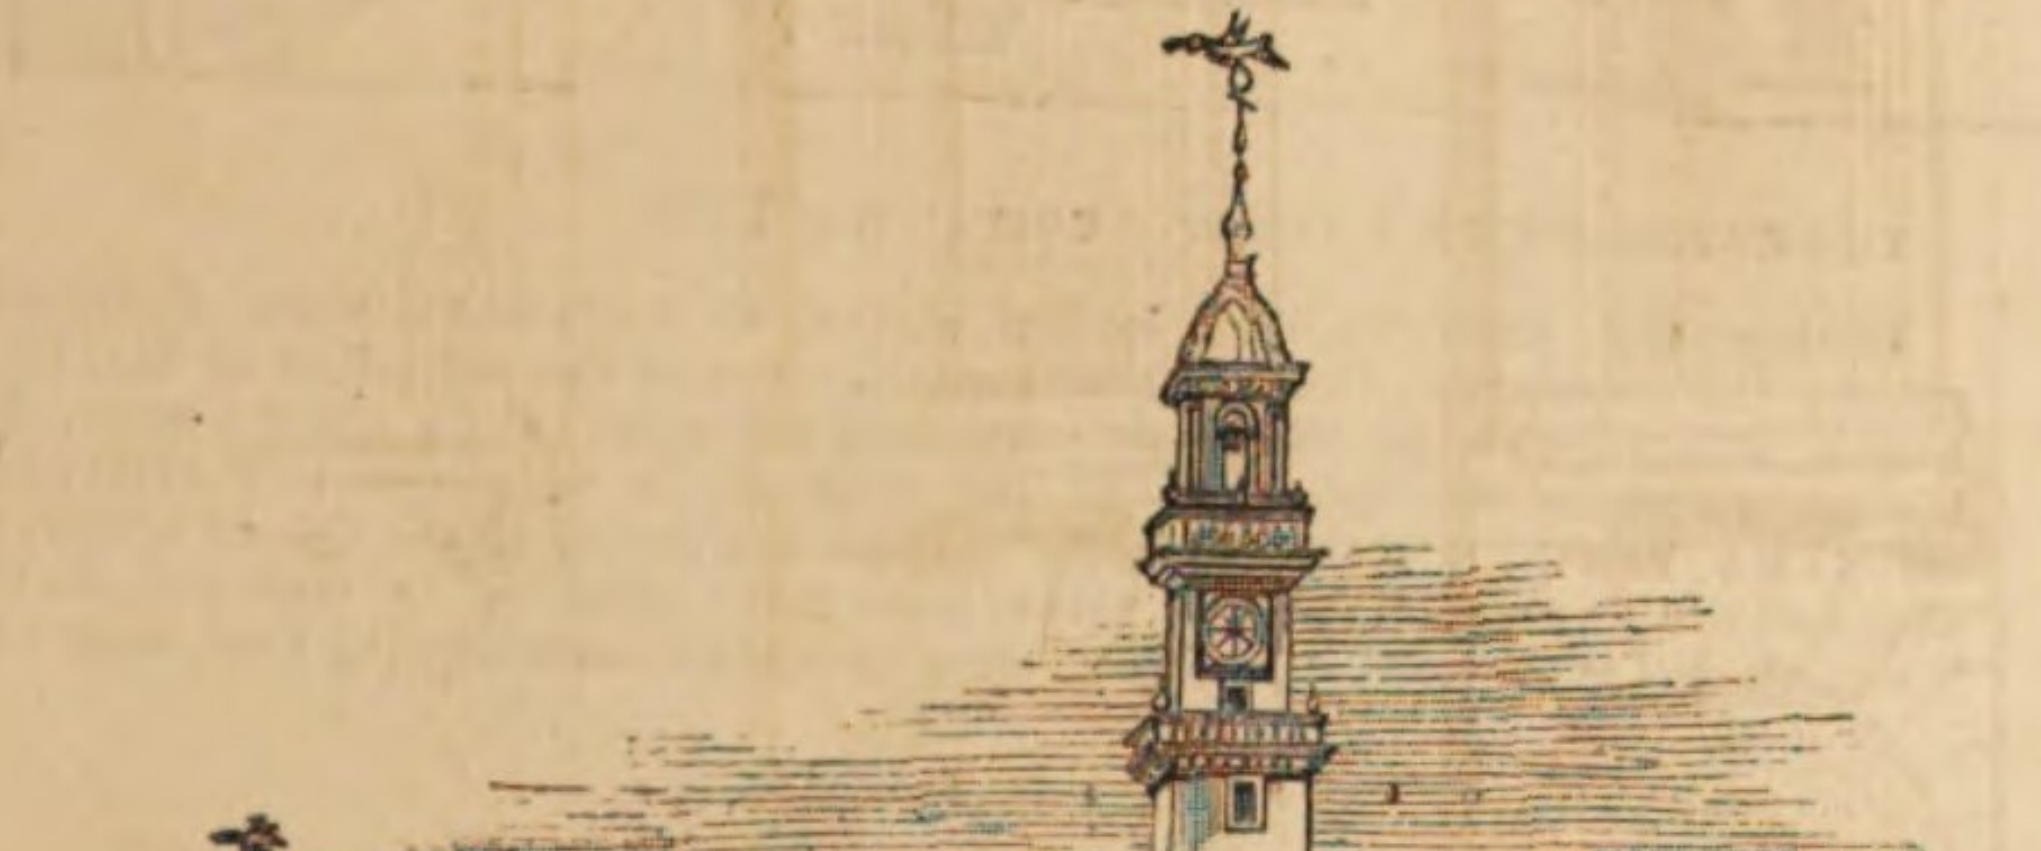
During the proclamation, leaden pieces, or medallions, were distributed among the populace. One of these medallions is in the collection of Mr. C. R. Smith, F.S.A., who has obligingly permitted our artist to engrave the same. The legend, which is very indistinct in the original, is as follows: "ANGLIAE REGINA VBIQVE HONORATA." From the period of the Queen's visit, the shops of the Pawn soon rose in value from forty shillings to four pounds ten, "and then," says Stow, "all shops were furnished according to that time: for



THE ROYAL EXCHANGE AND THE TUN, IN CORNHILL, IN 1640.



THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.—THE EAST AND SOUTH FRONTS.

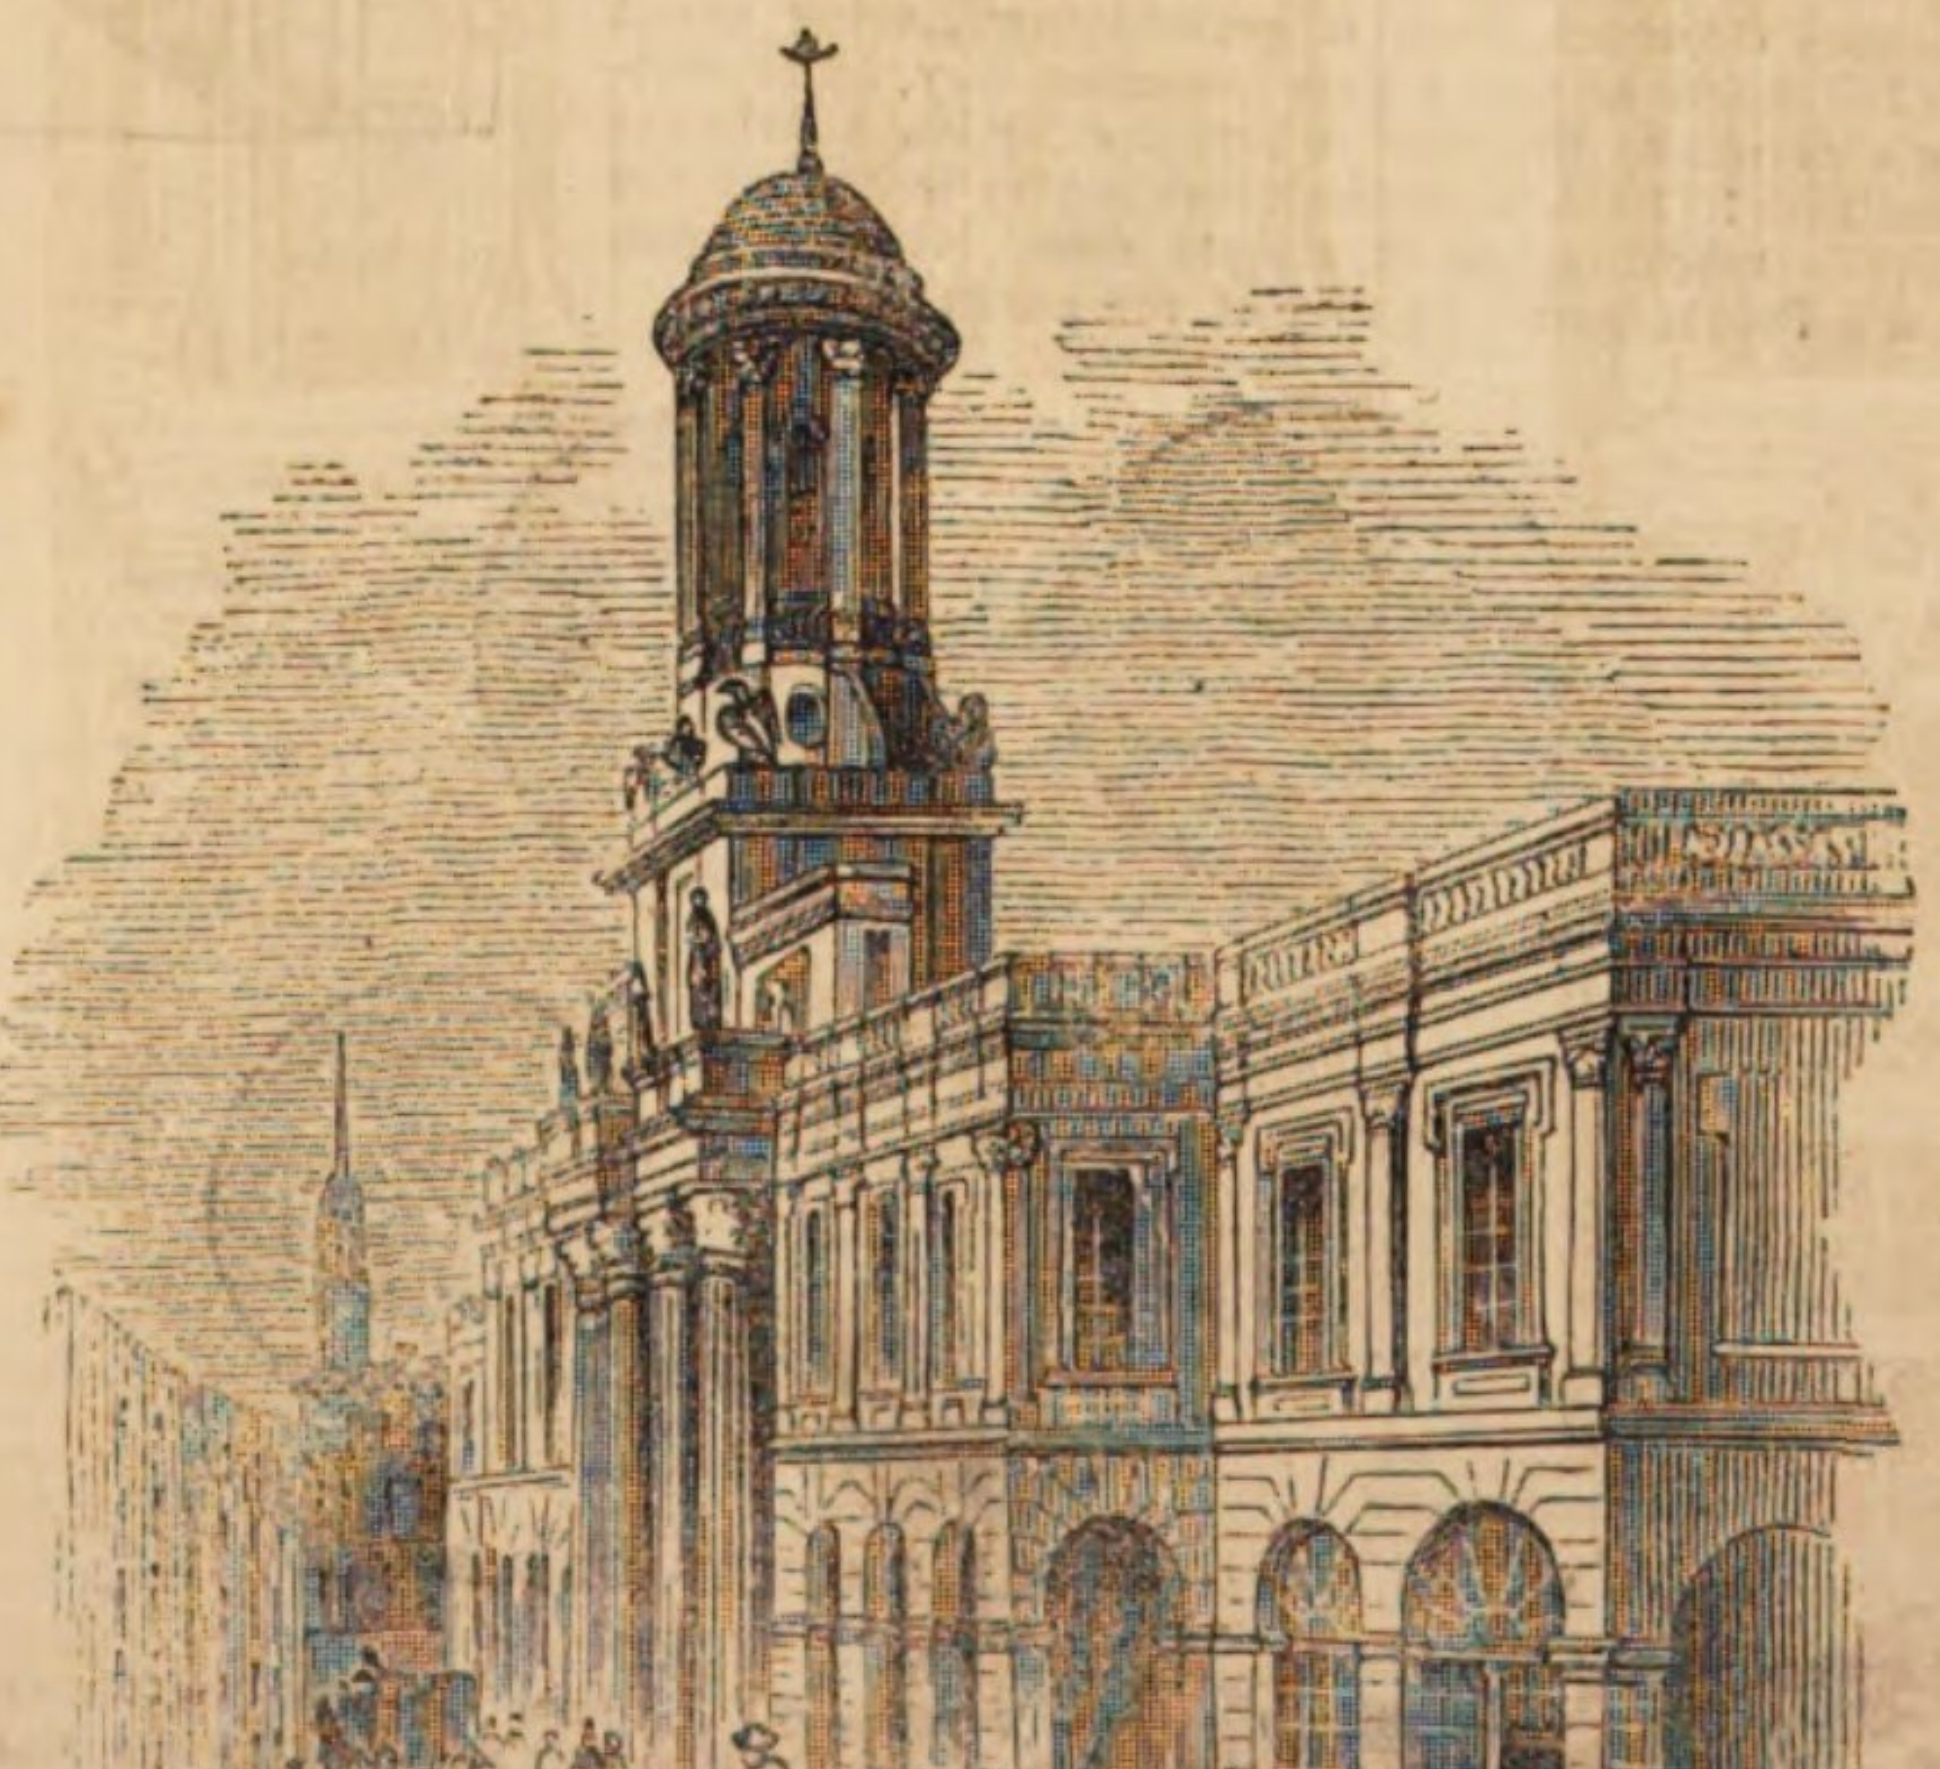


THE FIRST ROYAL EXCHANGE, 1569.

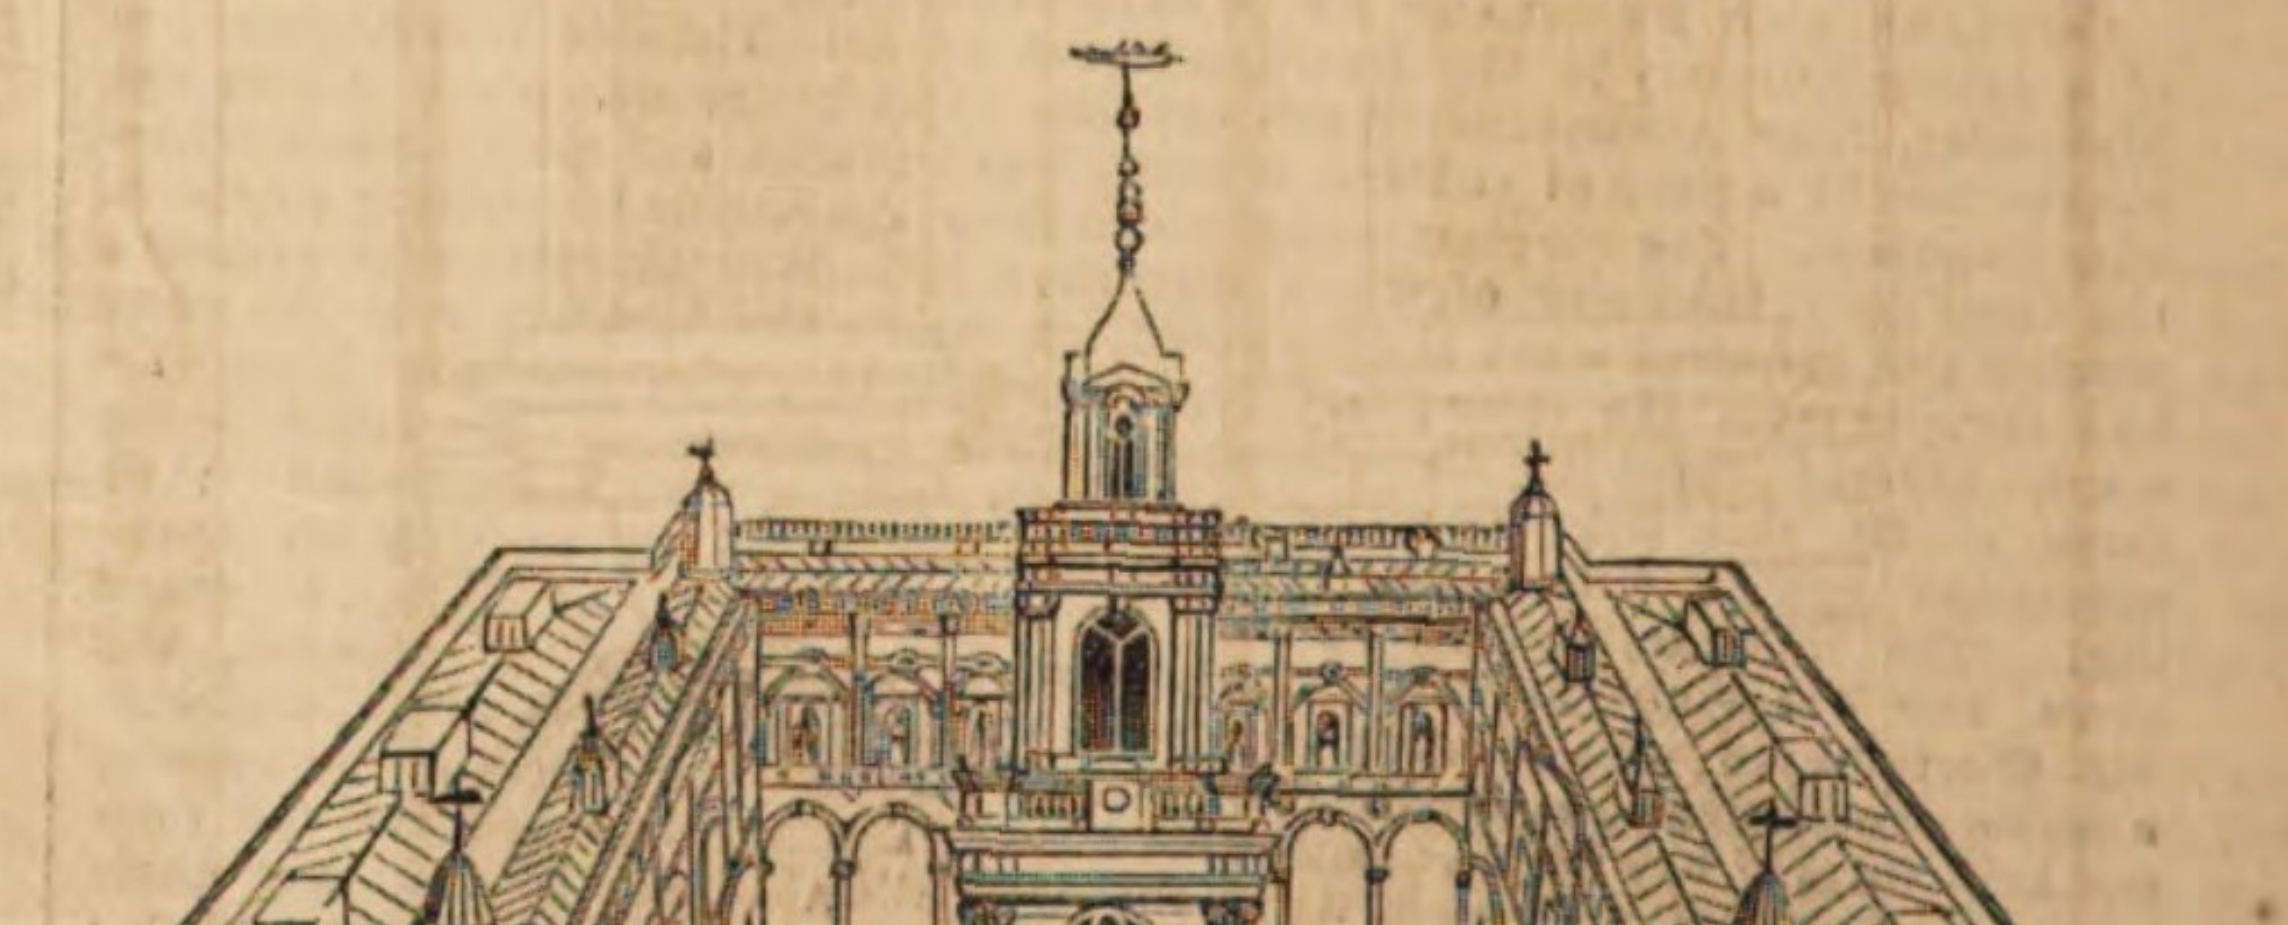
then the milliners or haberdashers in that place sold mouse-traps, bird-cages, shoeing-horns, lanthorns, and Jews'-trumpets, &c. There was, also, at that time that kept shops in the upper Pawn of the Royal Exchange—armourers, that sold both new and old armour—apothecaries, booksellers, goldsmiths, and glass-sellers.'' But we have in this passage only an indication of the transition period of the Exchange; for a few years later still, and the shops were filled with the richest wares that the world of commerce could produce. Not the least interesting part of the history of the old Exchange are its literary memorials, though, for the most part, their authors are unknown to fame. In the lower part of the Exchange, including the great court, jostling each other among the crowd, were men from almost every known nation of the world, habited in their respective costumes, interspersed with the more numerous English merchants, dressed in their large puffed breeches, long vests, short cloaks, and ruffs, appeared here the half-naturalized Fleming, with his fur-trimmed coat and hat, and tight fitting pantaloons; there the lordly Venetian, in his long robes and elegant cap, &c. On Sundays and holidays, the Exchange appears to have been the resort of boys, children, and young rogues, who played all sorts of pranks therein. The preceding Engraving represents the Royal Exchange and the Tun, in Cornhill, in 1640, copied from Hollar's View. Sir Thomas Gresham died in 1579, and his wife in 1596. The latter enjoyed the rents, arising from the Exchange, and all the houses, buildings, &c., belonging to it, amounting to an annual income of £751 5s., besides all charges and reprisals.

Immediately after the death of the Lady Gresham, the Royal Exchange and its revenues reverted to the Corporation of the City of London and the Mercers' Company; a patent from the Crown, bearing date Feb. 3, 1614 (12 James I..), confirming them in their possession of the property.

The Royal Exchange was utterly destroyed in the Great Fire of 1666:—"When the fire was entered, how quickly did it run round the galleries, filling them with flames; then descending the stairs, compasseth the walks, giving forth flaming volleys, and filling the court with sheets of fire. By-and-by the Kings fell all down on their faces, and the greater part of the stone building after them (the founder's statue alone remaining), with such a noise as was dreadful and astonishing.'' The very interesting fact recorded in the words we have marked with italics is noticed by all the historians of the Fire. The Statue is here represented; and it is a remarkable fact that the statue was again saved in the fire of 1838.

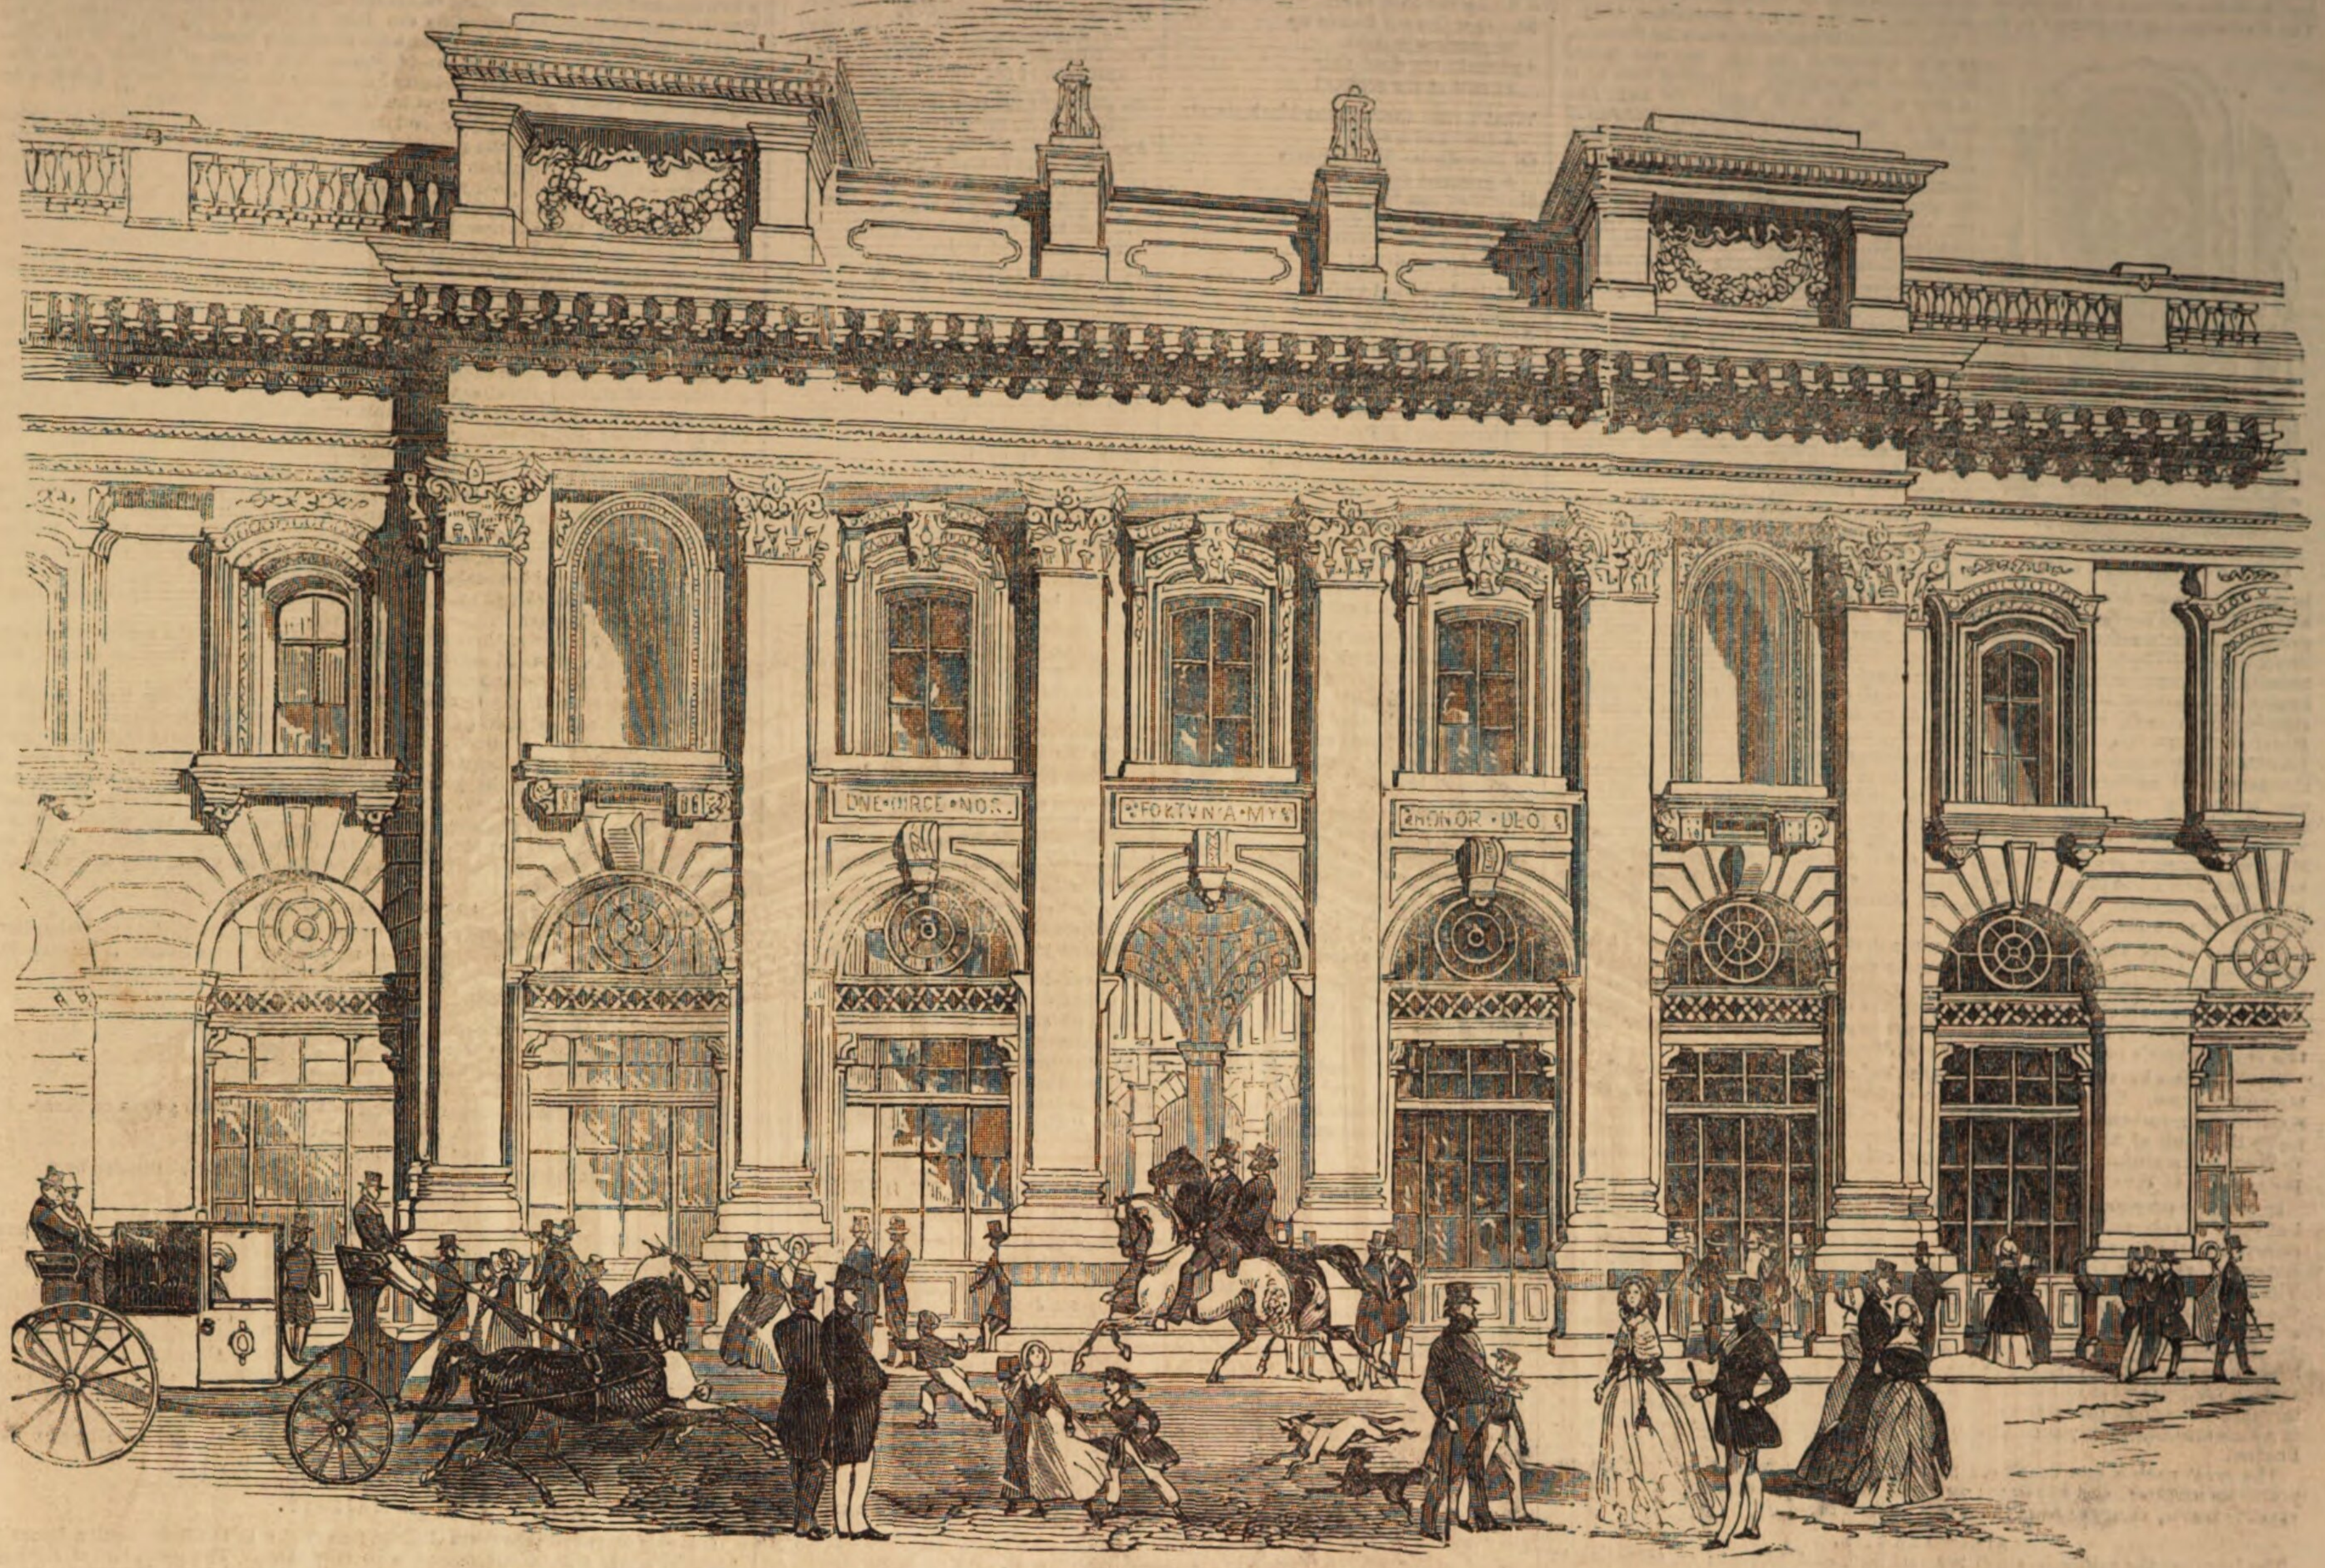


THE ROYAL EXCHANGE, 1838.



THE SECOND ROYAL EXCHANGE. 166[illegible].

The re-edification of the Exchange became an object of prime concern after the Great Fire; and in Wren's plan for rebuilding London its reconstruction upon the ancient site formed a grand feature. Wren's project, however, was not entertained; but within a month after the Fire estimates were prepared, and early in the following year the ground was cleared, and an order obtained from Charles II. for the Portland stone required. In April, 1667, Mr. Jerman was appointed architect, under the committee appointed by the Corporation of the City and the Mercers' Company. On October 23rd the first stone was laid by Charles II.; when a tapestried shed was set up, and a table spread with a chine of beef, grand dishes of fowl, gammons of bacon, dried tongues, anchovies, caviare, wines, &c.; and Charles gave £20 to the workmen. Similar ceremonies



DNE·DIRGE·NOS.
FORTVNA·MY HONOR·DEO

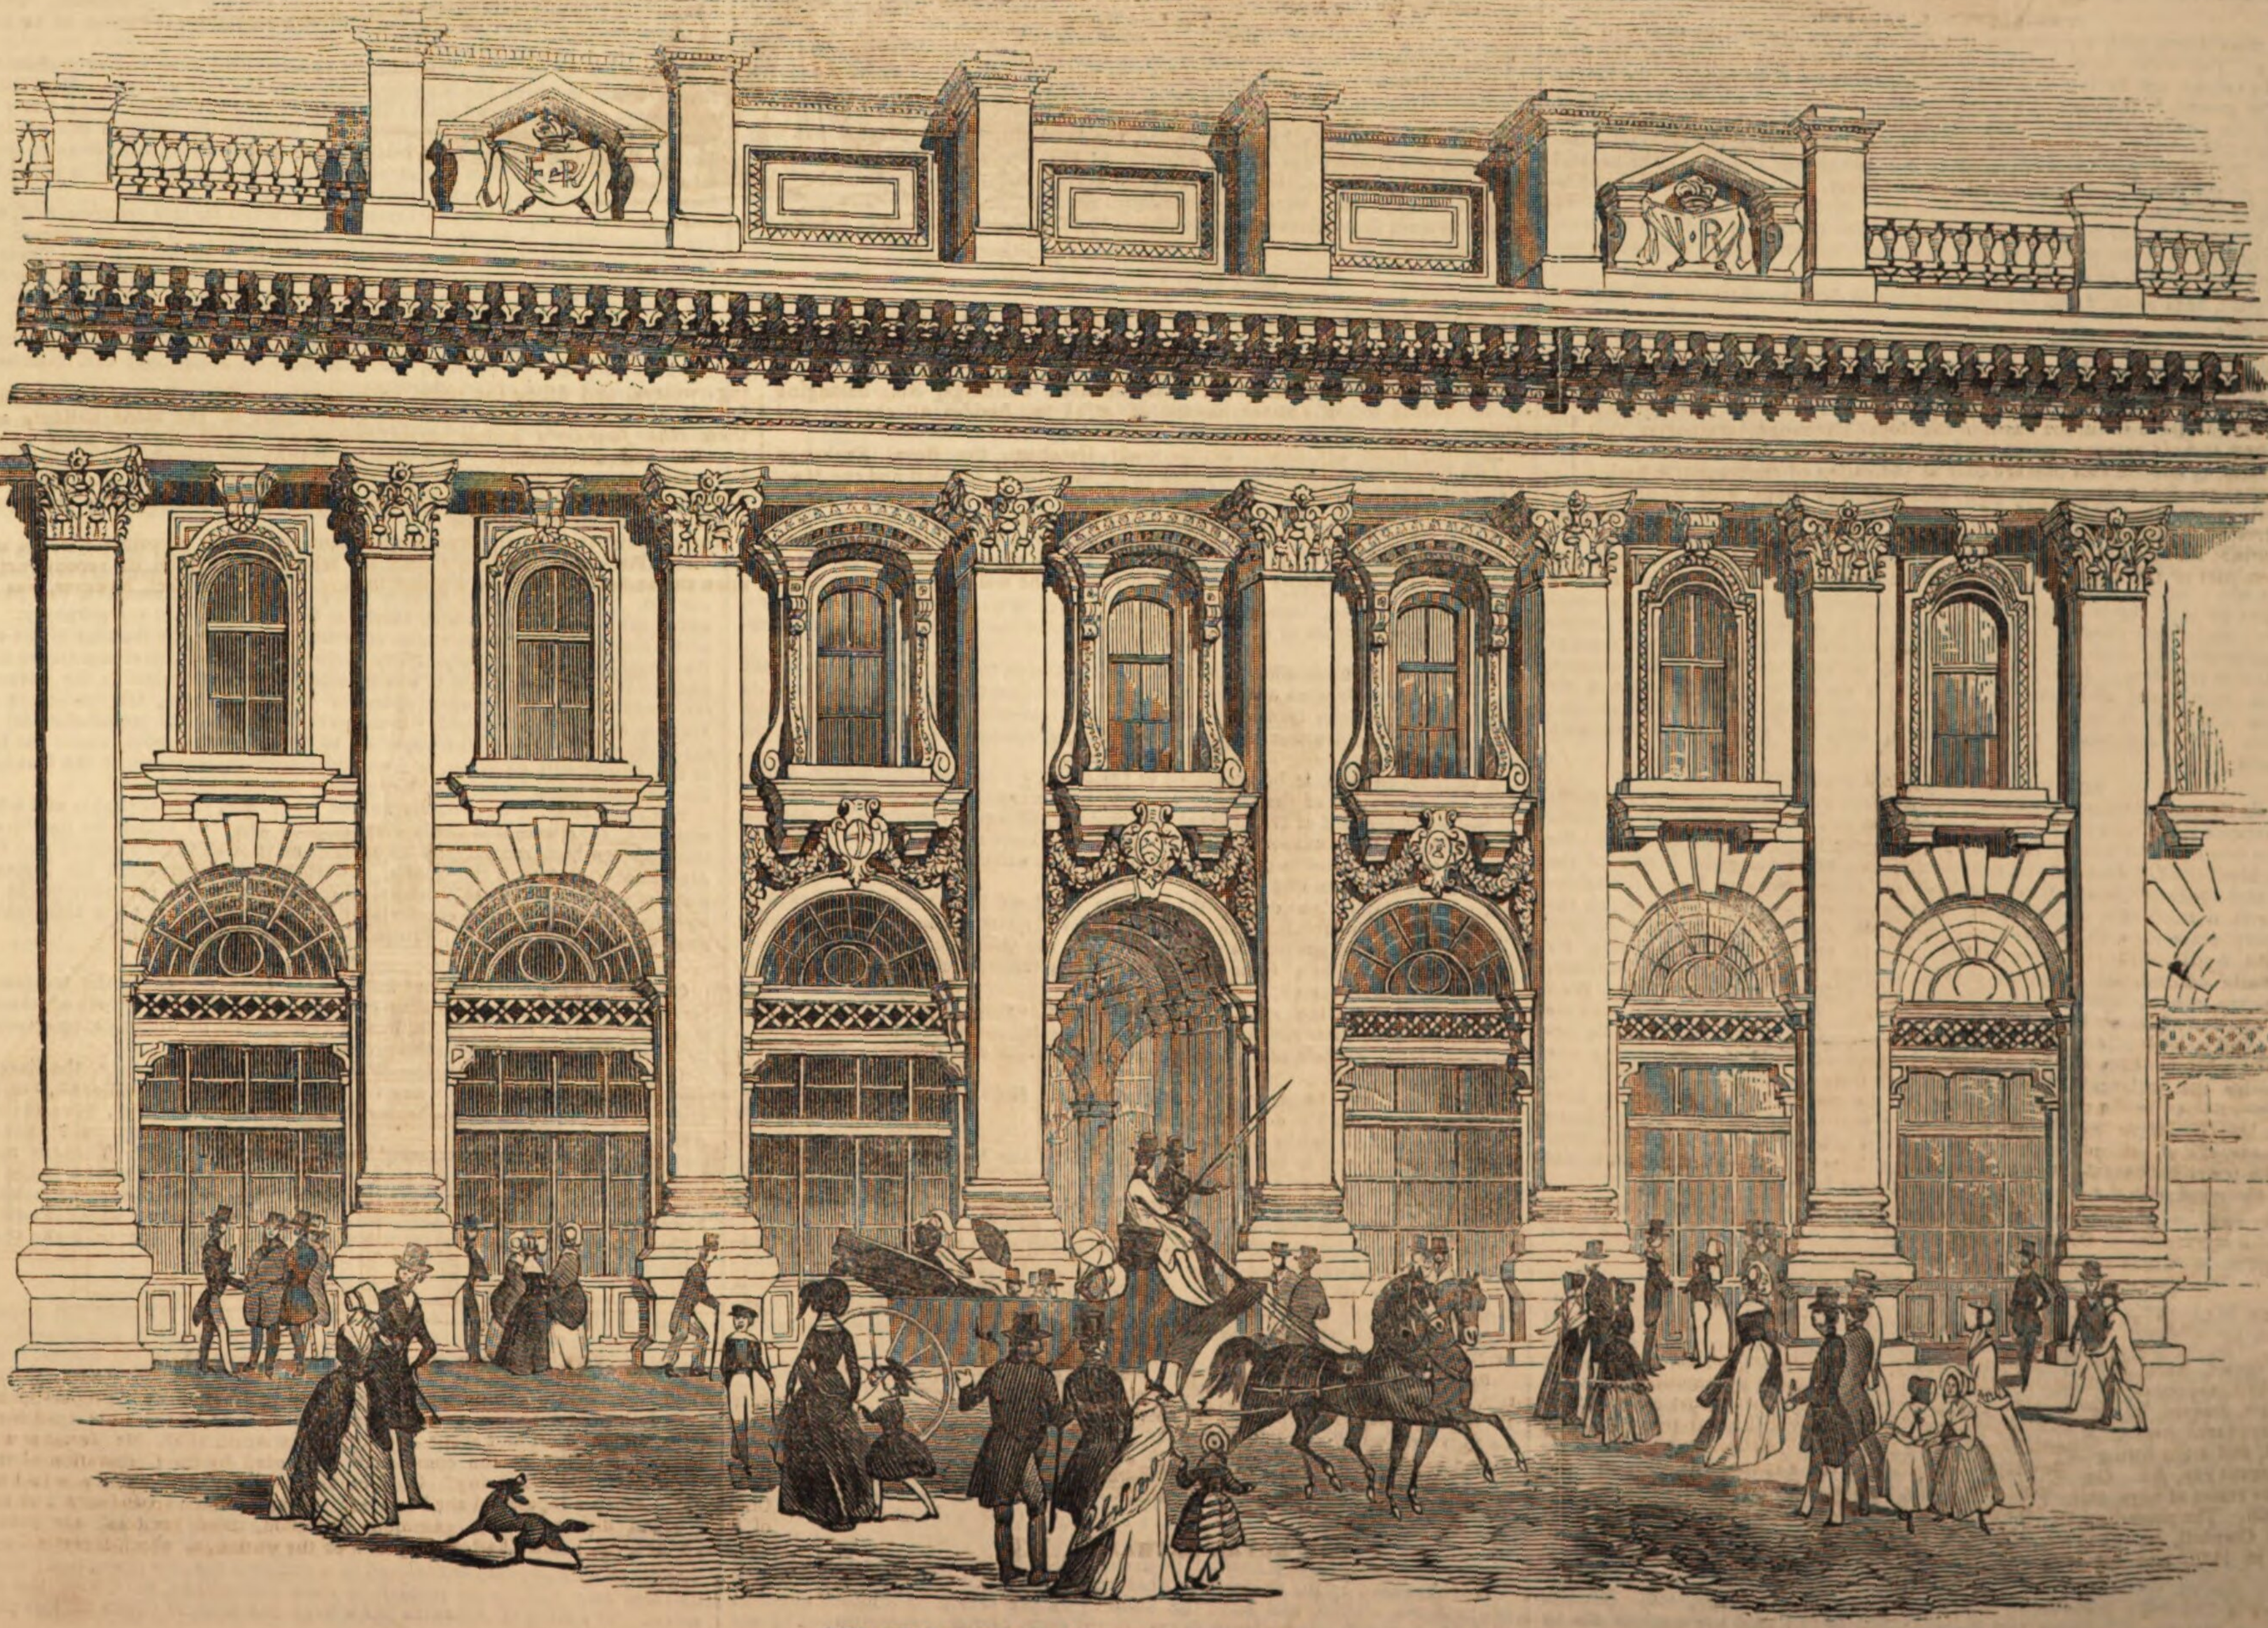
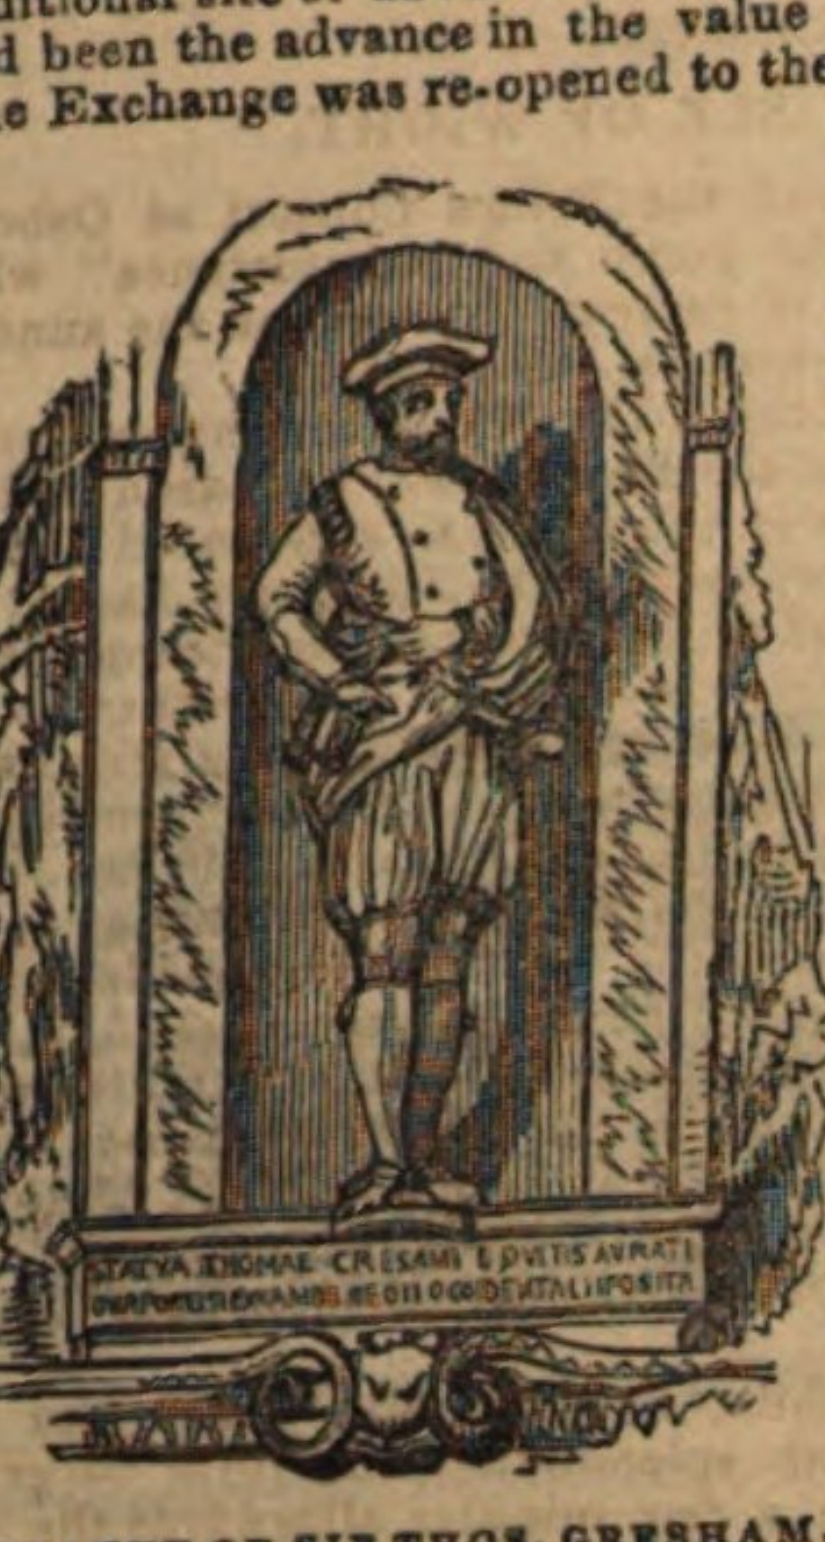
THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.—THE NORTH ENTRANCE.



THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.—THE SOUTH ENTRANCE.

commemorated the laying of other "first stones," by the Duke of York and Prince Rupert—these ceremonies being very pleasant things. The edifice was completed in 1669, at an expense of nearly £59,000, besides an expenditure for additional site of about £7000, or twice the cost of the entire original site; such had been the advance in the value of property here in the course of a century. The Exchange was re-opened to the merchants on the 28th of September, 1669.



STATUE OF SIR THOS. GRESHAM.

The new building, in its essential features, greatly resembled the old, but was larger and more magnificent. A general view of it is shown in the next page. It had, like the old, its ranges of statues, sculptured on this occasion principally by Cibber; its shops above and below, now increased in number to two hundred; its bell-tower; and its uncovered quadrangle in the centre for the merchants, where was placed a statue of Charles II., by Spiller. The grand entrance, from Cornhill, was also decorated on each side by statues of the same King and of his father.

The ascent to the shops was by spacious staircases of black marble; the colonnade beneath was paved with white and black marble; and the open area with Turkey stones of a small size, the gift, according to tradition, of a merchant trading to that country, whose heart, perhaps, was opened by some unusually fortunate venture, which he thus fitly recorded.

We reluctantly pass over the association of the name of Addison, who has not only recorded his frequent visits to the Exchange, but has commemorated them in one of his most delightful papers in the Spectator. Sir Richard Steele has also contributed to the Spectator some details of the shops, which, in his time, produced a yearly rental of £4000. By the year 1739, however, this sum had declined, especially in the upper story; but their place was supplied by other tenants. Among other offices, were the Lord Mayor's Court, the counting-houses of the several attorneys, resembling small shops, with a sort of projecting sign-board to each, bearing the name of its occupier. Then, too, were the Royal Exchange Assurance and other offices; the Gresham Lecture-room; and Lloyd's extensive establishment. (The Exchange and its neighbourhood, about this period, will be found engraved in No. 121 of our journal.) This Exchange was frequently repaired; as, about 1767, when Parliament voted £10,000 towards the charges; but the most extensive reparations and improvements were made between the years 1820 and 1826, by Mr. G. Smith, architect to the Mercers' Company, at a cost of about £30,000. Among these improvements was building a new stone tower, 128 feet high, on the south front, in place of a more lofty one of timber. Thus repaired, the Exchange presented the appearance depicted at page 264.

Thus the edifice remained until its entire destruction by fire, on the night of Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1838, the flames having first been seen to burst from the windows of Lloyd's Coffee-room. The conflagration was truly magnificent. Amidst the tumult of the populace, the shouts of the firemen, and the crash of the falling masonry, the chimes in the tower began to play their popular air on this day, "There's nae luck about the house."

A second time burned out, the merchants had once more to seek a new, though temporary home. This matter was soon accomplished. The South Sea House received the members of "Lloyd's;" whilst the Court of the Excise Office, formerly the Court of Sir Thomas Gresham's House, and subsequently of Gresham College, accommodated the general mercantile body, as it had done before, on the occasion of the similar calamity.

It was now proposed to rebuild the Exchange with an open area, as before, but upon an enlarged scale, and improved approaches thereto; the cost being defrayed by the Corporation of London and the Company of Mercers (to be reimbursed out of the Gresham estates), and by a grant from Government. Mr. Tite, F.S.A., was then chosen architect, and the materials chosen—granite for the stylobate, and the finest Portland stone for the superstructure. The first stone was laid on January 17, 1842, with great ceremony, by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in the mayoralty of Alderman (now Sir John) Pirie. It should here be explained that the ground has been cleared westward of the site, by removing the two stacks of buildings in front of the Bank, so as to leave an uninterrupted area from the intersection of the streets in front of the Mansion House, in which area has been placed Chantrey's equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington.

The great work is now nearly completed. We have from time to time reported its progress, and at present we shall confine our description to the respective fronts, abridged from the Morning Herald:—

EXTENT AND SITE.

The length of the edifice is about 300 feet from east to west; or, according to Mr. Tite's plan, 293 feet 6 inches from the columns of the portico, on the west, to the pilasters on the east. The general width of the building averages about 160 feet; the width of the portico is 89½ feet, and the extreme width at the east end, at the broadest part, being 175 feet, and the width through the centre, from north to south, 144 feet.

THE EXCHANGE.

The Exchange is entered at each of the four sides by an arched opening placed directly in the centre of each side, the form of the archway being parallelogram, by which the area or principal court is gained.

THE EXTERNAL FACADES.

The west front, with its portico, is superior in its dimensions to any in this country. The width from outside to outside of the eight columns of the first row, the second row having six corresponding columns, is 90 feet, and the height from the ground to the apex of the pediment is 74 feet and a half. The dimension of the portico is consequently 26 feet wider and 16 higher than that of St. Martin's Church, and 14 feet wider and 7 higher than that of the General Post-office. This front has been engraved in No. 101 of our Journal. The general height of the order used in this building is 50 feet, the tower at the east end to the top of the vane rising to the extreme height of 170 feet. The tower will be found engraved in our No. 89. The emblematical sculptures in the tympanum of the pediment of the portico, by Mr. Westmacott, have already been described and engraved in No. 94 of our Journal.

We shall, next week, detail the portico more at length, when we shall engrave ts interior.

THE SOUTH FRONT (engraved at page 264).

Has been much admired for the boldness of its architectural outline. The shops along the footpath are divided by pilasters with Corinthian capitals; and over the centre archway or entrance is an attic, which contributes greatly to the general architectural elegance of the façade. In the three central compartments, are sculptured festoon enrichments of the fruits and flowers of all nations, also shields, the balustrade and attic having sculptured frames of shields and foliage.

THE EAST FRONT.—(See page 264).

The corners of this façade, north and south, are rounded, and each has an attic similarly ornamented with sculpture. In the centre, or midway along this front, is the entrance to the Exchange, beneath the tower, in which the clock and chimes are placed. The tower is, in every respect, accordant with the style of the other parts of the building, Italian; the tower has an octagonal lantern over the clock and chime rooms, and is surmounted by a dome, supported by Corinthian columns, at the summit of which is the vane with the grasshopper crest of Sir Thomas Gresham. In a niche prepared in the east front above the entrance into the inner court and grand quadrangle, a statue in Portland stone of Sir Thomas Gresham is to be placed, now in the hands of Mr. Behnes, the sculptor. The keystones, spandril panels, &c., are enriched by elaborate sculpture.

THE NORTH FRONT (see page 265)

Is, in all its main features, the same as that of the south front, except as regards the entrance into the merchants' area or quadrangle. On each side of the archway are two niches intended for the figures of Sir Richard Whittington and Sir Hugh Myddelton. As a general observation, we must state the design of the north and south fronts are much praised, for their unbroken lines of entablature, with a repetition of arches of the same character. Mr. Tite, in his explanatory researches to the committee on the design he submitted to that body in April, 1840, observes:—"It appears to me that a building for essentially commercial purposes should present the character of grandeur, simplicity, and usefulness. In this way the universally acknowledged good effect of the Bourse at Paris has been obtained. In that building the lines are simple and unbroken, and the large arched windows surrounding the walls behind the columns, have all the character of shops or offices." Considering the difficulties the architect had to contend with from the shape of the ground, for the tower named in the directions issued by the committee to preserve the lines of the building, were happily overcome by the position of the tower being placed at the east end of the building; for, as Mr. Tite pointed out to the committee, had the tower been erected to agree with the lines of the south front, it would have disagreed with the lines of the east and west fronts.

Next week, we shall engrave the principal portions of the interior, with the splendid ceremonial of Opening the Building; at the same time that we shall enlarge upon its architectural details.

HER MAJESTY'S STEAM VESSEL, DWARF.—This is a small steamer (propelled by a screw) and intended, we believe, to act as a tender to the royal yacht. She is a very pretty little boat, and the internal arrangements, though on a small scale, are excessively comfortable. Great taste has been displayed by Messrs. Wakeling and Son, the Admiralty upholsterers (who last season fitted the Royal Victoria and Albert), in arranging and fitting the principal cabin: on the deck of it is a Brussels carpet; on either side is a long double sofa, covered with a neat pattern chintz, with fluted green silk in front. The sides and bulkheads are panelled with the same chintz, with green silk borders, and finished with beautiful gilt rope mouldings, which have a pleasing effect. The other parts are painted white, relieved with gilt mouldings, and there are ivory fittings to the doors. The tout ensemble is very elegant. She is now quite ready for the reception of her Majesty, and will, probably, be used by the royal family during their next visit to the Isle of Wight. The length of The Dwarf is 130 feet; breadth, 16 feet; horse-power, 90; tonnage, 160. She was built by Messrs. Ditchburn and Mare, of Blackwall; and her engines are by the Messrs. Rennie.

THE OPENING OF THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.

The Fire, the Fire
Hath reared up on high,
And sent the dark column
Along the dark sky,
And shot the red flames up
In passionate light,
And woke the dead City
At mid of the night!!

What a rush through the black streets,
A rush and a roar,
Of thousands—all dreamers
A moment before!
How they run from the East,
How they ride from the West,
To see the Flame-Spirit
In red ruin drest!

Ha! looks he not awful
And wrathful and grand,
As he crackleth the great temple
Under his hand?
They come, the vast people,
To quench his wild ire,
Still a Lord over all rules
The Spirit of Fire!—

The engines pour round him
Their waters of strength,
On-stirred and on-shouted
To crush him at length.
Work on!—his bright eye-balls
Are fast growing dim.
Now the Red Giant faileth
In muscle and limb!

Yes, yes, they have killed him—
Have quenched his hot breath;
But see how his grand ruin
Lords it in death!
Where, where!—tho' he sleepeth
With flame-career run—
Is the temple that yesterday
Stood in the sun?

They say when it rose
In magnificent might,
Its proud founder, Gresham,
Half mad with delight,
Drank pearls crush'd to powder
In wine to its toast,
And vow'd such a wild draught
Was worth what it cost!

When the west-throned lady
Came forth in her grace,
To make his great palace
A regalised place,
Of his spirit the proud eyes
Were piercing thro' time,
For its Future before him
Gleamed vast and sublime.

He saw it the bright home
Of Commerce and Gold;
Of might never wot of,
Of wealth never told.
Of Fame gathered greedily,
Fortune unfurl'd;
The 'Change-mart of glory,
And gain of the world!

He was right—it rose faster
Than sun-exhaled dew!
And still through its grand halls
Time's fleet coursers flew.
In the strength of its riches
Long years made it old,
Till the Flame-Spirit tore down
The Temple of Gold.

Then, where he had strewn it
In ashes about,
With voice of a victor
His soul shouted out—
"Come forth now, ye merchants,
From homes where ye bide,
And build up another
World-Babel of Pride."

They built up another
More rich and more gay,
Which five hundred Greshams
Shall open to-day!
But with fire-proof wall-ribs
They haughtily dare
Another Flame-Spirit
Again to burn there!

Who comes to make royal
This palace? The best
Of all the fair Queens
Ever throned in the west!
When by their high temple
Her dear graces shine,
Oh, will not her merchants
Drink pearls in their wine?

And from where the Bar opens
His heavy old gate,
To pass the grand pageant
That brings her in state,
From millions stretched gaily
In links of delight,
To where the fine Temple
Bursts proud on her sight:

The well-lov'd, worth-loving
Victoria will hear,
The City's heart-homage
In blessing and cheer;
And the first echo waking
That Palace of Sheen,
Will be loud London's greeting
Of "God save the Queen."

OFFICIAL PROGRAMME OF THE CEREMONIAL OF HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE CITY.

We are enabled to communicate the following official outline of the ceremonia to be observed on Monday. The programme has been sanctioned by her Majesty, and we have the Lord Mayor's permission to give it publicity.

It was communicated to the Lord Mayor by Sir James Graham, accompanied by the following letter:— "Whitehall, October 21.

"My Lord—With reference to your lordship's note of the 19th instant, I have the honour to inform your lordship that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify her approbation of the ceremonial proposed to be observed upon her Majesty's visit to the Corporation of London on the occasion of opening the new Exchange.—I have the honour to be, my lord, your lordship's obedient servant, "J. R. G. GRAHAM.

"To the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, &c."

ORDER OF PROCESSION

FROM TEMPLE-BAR ON RECEIVING HER MAJESTY IN HER PROGRESS TO THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

Police-officers on horseback.
The state carriages of the Sheriffs.
The Lord Mayor's state coach.
The City Marshals on horseback.
Members of the Court of Common Council, in their mazarine gowns, on horseback, each with an attendant.
Sheriffs,
in their scarlet gowns and chains, on horseback, each attended by a Sergeant and a Groom.
Aldermen,
in their scarlet gowns (those past the chair in their chains), on horseback, each attended by a Beadle and a Groom.
The Common Crier on horseback, carrying the City Mace.
The Swordbearer on horseback, with the Cap of Maintenance.
Three Footmen in State Liveries.
The Lord Mayor, in a crimson velvet robe and collar of SS, on horseback, bearing the City Sword of State immediately before
Three Footmen in State Liveries.
HER MAJESTY.

On the Queen's arrival at Temple-bar, the Lord Mayor will present the City Sword to her Majesty and Prince Albert. At the Exchange they are to be received at the western entrance by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder, and the members of the Joint Gresham Committee, the Sheriffs, and the Remembrancer, who will form themselves into a procession to precede her Majesty, in the following order:—

Trumpeters.
Clerk of the Gresham Committee.
Architect.
Twelve Members of the Gresham Committee, two and two.
Remembrancer.
Sheriffs.
Members of the Court of Aldermen and Recorder, two and two.
Lord Mayor.
Her Majesty the QUEEN and Prince ALBERT,
Followed by her Majesty's Officers of State.

The procession to enter at the western gate of the Exchange, turning to the right into the ambulatory, and round to the west end, across the open area from west to east to the entrance of Lloyd's room, up the great staircase into the rotunda and from thence to the commercial room, preceeded by the Lord Mayor, the procession waiting in the rotunda for her Majesty's return, and then precede her Majesty into the subscribers' room, and from thence into the throne room prepared for the address.

The Lord Mayor, immediately preceding her Majesty and Prince Albert, will state the purposes to which the various parts of the building are to be appropriated.

The Officers of State who do not join the procession to be previously conducted into the throne room, as also the members of the Court of Aldermen, who have preceded her Majesty from Temple-bar, and the members of the Joint Gresham Committee, who have not formed part of the procession, and the officers of the Corporation.

A suitable address, to be presented to her Majesty from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in the usual form, and setting forth an historical account of the original building, its subsequent destruction, and the restoration of the Exchange by the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company, as the joint trustees of Sir Thomas Gresham's will under the superintendence of the Joint Gresham Committee.

After her Majesty's answer to the address, the Lord Mayor (provided her Majesty's sanction be obtained) to present to her Majesty the mover and seconder of the address, and afterwards the Chairman of the Gresham Committee and the Master of the Mercers' Company, under whose superintendence the new Exchange has been erected, and the architect.

The whole of the company in the throne-room, except the Lord Mayor and such of the Joint Gresham Committee as are in attendance at the entertainment, will then retire to their seats, and her Majesty will be conducted to the private apartment.

The Lord Mayor to precede her Majesty to the Royal table, and attend upon her Majesty during the déjeúner.

Grace to be said by the Bishop of London.

Toasts to be given to be previously approved by her Majesty.

Proclamation of herald to be made in the centre of the merchants' area, and her Majesty in person to give her gracious permission for the Exchange to be thenceforth called the Royal Exchange.

Her Majesty to be preceded on her return in the same manner across the open area to the great western entrance.

The number of visitors to the déjeúner will be about 1400, beyond which number it is found that accommodation cannot possibly be afforded. Of these, about 700 will be seated in the ambulatory, and the same number will be seated in Lloyd's apartments.

In the ambulatory and merchants' area every provision is being made to protect the company from draughts, or the encroachments of bad weather. The north and south entrances will be closely boarded up, and ample protection will be provided at the east and west ends. A very thick and brightly ornamented carpet will be laid on the parts of the area and building on which her Majesty will walk, and under the tables and seats for the company, temporary flooring and drugget will be laid down, so that there will be complete security against damp. The seats will be confined to a double row, quite round the ambulatory, which, from its ample dimensions and noble height, will admit of such a regulation, without at all being liable to be prejudiced as to the view of its architecture.

It is supposed by the Committee, that her Majesty will arrive at the Exchange at about one o'clock, and leave the building on her return to Windsor at three. Her Majesty will appear in state and in the state carriage, accompanied by her Ministers and suite. Most of the distinguished members of both houses of Parliament, and all the leading merchants and bankers, have been invited.

The procession from Temple-bar to the Exchange will be led by a certain number of the Corporation, Aldermen and Commoners, on horseback, in accordance with ancient custom.

The Lord Mayor has received from Sir James Graham a letter, stating "that a communication had been made to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Captain General and Colonel Commanding the Hon. Artillery Company, informing his Royal Highness that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify her pleasure that the corps abovenamed should attend as a guard of honour at the Exchange on the occasion of her Majesty honouring the Corporation of London by being present at the opening of that building on the 28th instant."

The joint Gresham Committee and that of the Mercers' Company, intrusted with the arrangements for the reception of her Majesty, are engaged in superintending the suitable decoration and comfort of the apartments to be appropriated to the use of her Majesty, her august Consort, and their suites, within the walls of the Exchange. The grand apartment appropriated for the royal banquet is fast approaching towards completion, and will, when entirely so, present at the same time a unique and magnificent appearance. It is now understood, in addition to the plate belonging to the Corporation, the magnificent gold plate belonging to the Goldsmiths' Company will be brought into requisition.

The occasion of her Majesty's visit will, it is understood, be observed as a holiday by the principal City establishments. The Directors of the Bank of England have already signified their intention of closing their doors to business operations; and the private bankers, we are informed, have resolved to suspend the attendance of their clerks after twelve o'clock, the previous hours being alleged as necessary for the payment of bills and other affairs which cannot be delayed. It is to be hoped that all other leading firms will follow the example so readily set, and make the day one of general holiday and recreation.

The Lord Mayor has officially recommended an abstinence from business on Monday, and also that the parapets of houses on the line of procession should be made secure, in order to prevent accidents. Barriers will be fixed at the end of all the streets in the city through which the royal procession will pass. Similar measures will be adopted outside the city, under the direction of the Metropolitan police, a considerable number from each division having been ordered to keep the line clear from Buckingham Palace to Temple-bar, assisted by the two Regiments of Horse Guards.

At the Royal Exchange there are to be four entrances for the general company, in addition to the principal entrance at the western front. They are situate, two in Cornhill, and two in Bartholomew-lane.

In the area around St. Paul's, seats capable of containing from 10,000 to 15,000 persons, and extending from the north-west to the north-east side, are in the course of erection. These are to be covered in, and lined inside with pink and white drapery, with similar decorations as those used in 1837. At some of the shops in Cheapside the goods have been removed from the windows, and seats fitted up in lieu of them. In the neighbourhood of the Exchange as much as five guineas is asked for a single seat, whilst throughout the whole line not one is to be obtained under 10s. 6d. The tradesmen along the line of route are also on the alert to accommodate the sight-seers, from whom they will no doubt reap a plentiful harvest.

LATEST PARTICULARS.

The members of the Corporation who are to take part in the procession have been allotted their respective places in it, and Sir Peter Laurie is to have the control of the procession. It will be formed as follows:—

Police officers on horseback.
State carriages of the Sheriffs.
Carriages of the Aldermen.
State carriage of the Lord Mayor.
The two City Marshals mounted.
12 members of the Common Council in their mazarine gowns on horseback and with an attendant.
Sheriffs Sidney and Hunter
in their scarlet gowns and chains, on horseback, each attended by a sergeant and a groom.
The Aldermen
in their scarlet gowns, those past the chair in their chains, on horseback, each attended by a beadle and a groom, placed as follows:—

Mr. Alderman Hooper
Mr. Alderman Johnson
Mr. Alderman Farebrother
Sir John Key, Bart.
Sir C. S. Hunter, Bart.
Sir George Carroll
Mr. Alderman Wood
Sir P. Laurie
Mr. Alderman Lucas
Mr. Alderman Gibbs

The Common Crier on horseback, carrying the City Mace.
The Swordbearer on horseback, bearing the Cap of Maintenance.
The LORD MAYOR,
in a crimson velvet robe and collar of S S, on horseback, and bearing the City Sword of State, attended by three footmen in liveries.
His Lordship will immediately precede
HER MAJESTY.

It is now intended that there shall be four tables in the Subscription Room at Lloyd's, where the entertainment is to take place. The south end of the banqueting-room has been hung with crimson draperies, festooned at the top in graceful folds. There is an enormous mirror, and the royal arms surmount it, denoting the place at which her Majesty is to preside at the festive table. On each side of the large looking-glass it is proposed to have the British standard and ensigns. The royal table at the south end of the room is to be on a raised flooring, so that her Majesty and the distinguished personages selected for the honour of meeting the Sovereign at luncheon shall be so situated as to command an uninterrupted gaze of the room when the whole of the company have assembled, for it is determined there is not to be a throne or canopy in that room, but merely two gilt state chairs for the Queen and her Royal Consort. The dais, or raised flooring, is to be covered with rich carpeting, the room to be covered generally by a less costly material.

The library, or reading-room, is to be appropriated as an audience-chamber, or throne-room, in which her Majesty is to receive the City address. Here the decorations are on an extended scale; the walls of this apartment being hung with a crimson drapery, tastefully festooned and adorned by suitable gilt ornaments. The whole of the flooring is of inlaid woods, varied in colours, so as to resemble mosaic work, the different shades and colours being brought out in all their brilliancy from having been lightly polished.

There is to be an entire new throne, constructed for this occasion, and, according to rumour, it is to be of a superb description. It will be erected at the eastern extremity of the room, raised on a platform of three steps. There are to be two splendid chairs for the Queen and Prince Consort, beneath the canopy of the throne. The Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, and the officers of the Queen's Household (as the Ministers of State), are only to be present at the ceremony of the presentation of the City address by the Recorder, attended by the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs, Mr. Lambert R. Jones, and Mr. Harrison, the mover and seconder of the address.

We hear from a well-informed source, that her Majesty has signified her gracious approbation of the arrangements hitherto submitted for her consideration and approval, and it is intimated that the noblemen and ladies, and other persons having the honour of invitations to the entertainment in the grand room, are to appear in full dress and uniform. Such desire is not, however, understood to apply to the guests to be entertained in the colonnade of the Merchants' Area.

The interior of the Quadrangle has an elegant, though too showy, an appearance for the purposes of the building. The arabesque ornaments are elaborately worked, the predominant colours being buff and crimson, and the pavement under the arcade is inlaid with blocks of black marble and red porphyry. At the north-eastern corner is the statue of Queen Elizabeth, the founder of the original Exchange, and in a corresponding niche on the north-west is a statue of King Charles II., in whose reign it was rebuilt. A vacancy is left in the pavement in the central part of the open space of the Quadrangle, for the statue of her Majesty Queen Victoria, which is not yet completed, but a model of it will occupy the place on Monday. The approach to Lloyd's coffee room, where the banquet to the Queen will be given, is from the north-eastern end of the Quadrangle; the staircase being handsome, but greatly deficient of light.

The room itself is imperfectly lighted by ground-glass skylights and a few side windows, otherwise it is finely proportioned and well suited for its object. Of the fourteen hundred persons invited not more than three hundred and fifty can dine in the room with the Queen, and though it is expected her Majesty will promenade round the other tables, the majority of the company might almost as well take their dinners comfortably at home, were it not for this anticipated passing view of the Queen, Prince Albert, and the royal suite.

On Thursday application was made to the Lord Mayor by the trustees of several of the livery companies to call out by precept the whole of those commonalties to erect booths in St. Paul's Churchyard, or to form themselves in line in the streets through which the procession will pass.

It is recorded that when Queen Elizabeth visited the City, the livery companies being drawn out in line from Temple-bar to the Guildhall, her Majesty thought proper to dismiss the military attendants, and that, when the Spanish Ambassador said to the Queen, "Where are your Majesty's guards?" she replied, pointing to the faithful citizens, "These are my guards!" There is no doubt that, if time had sufficed, the whole of the livery companies would, in the present day, have been anxious to testify their loyalty by a similar demonstration. The Lord Mayor, however, felt that, with the limited interval which would elapse before the Queen's entry, there would not be sufficient time to make the requisite arrangements.

SILVER CHEST FOR THE KING OF ASHANTEE.—We have just inspected an elegant chest, which has been designed, and manufactured, and chased in silver by Mr. Sharp, of Burton-crescent. It measures 18 by 12 inches, is 6 inches deep; and, it is computed, will hold about £20,000 worth of gold-dust, as a depository for which the chest is intended to be used by his Ashantee majesty. The chased designs are very elegant: in the centre of the lid is a massive lion's head, the emblem of Ashantee, in frosted silver: and around the lid is a frosted border of the heads alternately, of the tiger, elephant, and lion, beautifully chased. The sides are ornamented with the heads of tigers, &c. on a burnished ground: and at each end is a stout handle, formed of two entwined serpents, admirably chased: the interior is highly burnished, and entirely plain. The chest is furnished with a triple lock, by Chubb, to which there is a gold key. The precious depository is enclosed in a wainscot case for protection; and one of its chief uses will be its display in state processions, filled with the precious metal. The King of Ashantee has a large collection of chests for this purpose.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It's the greatest mistake in the world to imagine October a favourable month for sporting, as a popular pastime. You can't desire a more convenient season for pheasant shooting—exactly so—but (we don't mean to be vulgar) don't you wish you may get it? How many metropolitan gentlemen ever saw a pheasant with more feathers to his back than the plume they stick in his nether parts after he is roasted? The Eastern Hunt used to be a popular exercise—a sylvan recreation for the million—but, worse luck, it's gone to the d—— dickins—not to the dogs, for latterly they declined having anything to do with it. The Royal Hounds is sporting, which any body may follow who has not the fear of a spit, or a two-pronged fork before his eyes. Fox-hunting is sport that any one may follow, if he can, and so is the chase of the hare, which every one should pursue that has a taste for currant jelly. Then there's your regatta on the Thames, that's pretty general fun—and capital, too, except when the Coroner does you the honour to inquire how you came to fall into the water. Cricket is easy of attainment—bats and balls are cheap—and it is so manly; but (we tell it ye in confidence), the ugliest crack o' the head we ever got was from a leathern missive discharged from that human mortar, Lillywhite: a steam-bullet would have been badinage to it. Angling we cannot conscientiously recommend: it's cheap—but, to our thinking, nasty also: so perhaps the reader would, had he, in the paroxysm of a bite, caught (as we once did) his nose with a green drake, or hook, No. 4. Racing and hunting are essentially the rural sports of the Cockney. The latter has not commenced—the former is all but over—one week of the turf only now remains; and to the prospectus and probabilities of that we would rightly direct his attention.

The Houghton Meeting begins on Monday at Newmarket, and will, of course, extend over the six days. The opening will be the best of it—Monday being the anniversary of the Cambridgeshire Handicap and the Criterion—the most important two-year-old trial, as regards the Derby, that we have. The Cambridgeshire is in a position heretofore certainly never occupied by any handicap of its kind. There are seventy-three acceptances for it, and against such a field one horse has been backed at odds! Foigh-a-Ballagh having won the Great St. Leger, went to the south for his other engagements. These were three in number, the Grand Duke Michael Stakes, and the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire handicaps. He has won the two former, and they all but treat the third as over. He has been backed to win them at odds varying from 60 to 1 to 40 to 1. It is true the field on paper shows nothing that ought to beat him for it—if in his form, but how seldom a horse preserves it to the end of a season. The only way to make the rubber of these games safe, would be to buy the odd trick in the latter—we mean nothing libellous in this allusion to tricks. There is no law of the turf to prevent Mr. Irwin giving the owner of the Cure, for example, £500 to keep his horse in the stable. For our own part we think it will be bad generalship if the party don't secure the third event, seeing the position in which they are. Bell will not ride Foigh-a-Ballagh next week, as his services will be required by his regular master. The Criterion, though not very rich in the character of its nominations, will bring together a lot from which a line will most likely be drawn; still the Derby betting will be very open during the winter. This is all the business to which the meeting will give existence—but there will be lots of sport. Squire Osbaldeston will ride his mare Sorella a match on Monday against the Duke of Bedford's Minotaur, with a jockey up—and as the weights are high, Robinson will very probably officiate for his grace. It will be nuts to see this brace of cavaliers meet in a second encounter of the sort.

In the course of the week a yearling match will be run between Lord Glasgow's stable and Colonel Peel's—one to the post from eight of the earl's youngsters and six of the gallant officer's. Such very early débûts are very rare now-a-days. There is every reason to believe that this meeting will bring the season to a brilliant close. Let us hope as satisfactory a one, too, as is expected. Let us trust the Jockey Club will put before the public without reservation the whole of the evidence given before them on the Ratan affair. It is not because the testimony may be susceptible of doubt it should be withheld. The public have suffered by the matter, and they are entitled to all that bears upon it.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The present betting on the Cambridgeshire is without parallel in the history of the turf: seventy-five acceptances, and 6 to 5 on one! And even those who back the field do so simply on calculation, or from the possibility that, as Foigh-a-Ballagh has twice been "off," he may be so again; and not from an idea that anything in the race can have a chance with an animal to whom weight, pace, and distance seem alike indifferent. Of the business done this afternoon a few words of description will suffice:—Even money and 6 to 5 was laid on the crack; 11 and 12 to 1 agst The Cure to a good deal of money; 16 to 1 in several quarters agst Evenus; and 20 to 1 agst Newcourt, all in same force; the other prices are nominal. Average closing prices:—

CAMBRIDGESHIRE STAKES.

6 to 5 on Foigh a-Ballagh (t)
11 to 1 agst The Cure (t)
16 to 1 —— Evenus (t)
18 to 1 —— Golden Rule
20 to 1 agst Newcourt (t)
25 to 1 —— Negress gelding
25 to 1 —— Philip (t)
25 to 1 —— Rowena
25 to 1 agst The Altered One
30 to 1 —— Counsellor
40 to 1 —— The Emperor (t)

DERBY.

11 to 1 agst Alarm
15 to 1 —— The Irish lot
16 to 1 —— Kedger (t)
25 to 1 —— Newsmonger
30 to 1 —— Black Prince (t)
30 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger (t)
33 to 1 —— Rebecca colt (t)
40 to 1 —— Jinglepot
40 to 1 agst Cabin-boy (Lillah colt)
45 to 1 —— Clear-the-Way
66 to 1 —— Lycurgus (t)
66 to 1 —— Fuzbos (t)

THURSDAY.—A feeling against Foigh-a-Ballagh was indulged to a large amount, at an average of 11 to 10 on the field; but, accompanied as it was by a most liberal outlay on The Cure, at an improved price, failed to choke off his supporters, the last offers being 11 to 10 on him. Newcourt, The Altered One, and Sir Gilbert Heathcote's lot were in some demand, but neither Evenus nor the Golden Rule deserve more than nominal prices. A match is made for Friday next, at Newmarket, between Alice Hawthorn and Foigh-a-Ballagh; the mare to carry 9st, and the young one 7st 7lb, D. I., 500 sovs each, 200 forfeit. Even betting.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE STAKES.

11 to 10 on Foigh a-Ballagh
6 to 1 agst The Cure
15 to 1 —— Newcourt
20 to 1 —— The Altered One
20 to 1 —— Evenus
25 to 1 agst Golden Rule
30 to 1 —— Sir G. Heathcote's lot.
30 to 1 —— Rowena
30 to 1 agst Councillor
30 to 1 —— Sir Abstrupus (t)
35 to 1 —— Akbar (t)
40 to 1 —— Example (t)

DERBY.

12 to 1 on the Field
16 to 1 agst Kedger (t)
28 to 1 —— Rebecca colt (t)
30 to 1 —— Fitz-Allen (t)
30 to 1 agst Black Prince (t)
30 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger
40 to 1 —— Young Eclipse
40 to 1 agst Cabin Boy (t)
50 to 1 —— Lycurgus
50 to 1 —— Collier
50 to 1 —— Fuzbos

CHESTER OCTOBER MEETING.—MONDAY.

The Mostyn Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, with 20 added.

Mr. A. W. Hill's The Ironmaster, 2 yrs	(Darling, jun.)	1
Mr. Mostyn's Master Stepney, 2 yrs	(Copeland)	2
Mr. Mostyn's Alvanley, 3 yrs	(Oates)	3

The Chester Handicap of 15 sovs each, with 40 added.

Mr. Mostyn's A-la-mode, 3 yrs, 5st 6lb, and 5lb over	(Dufflo)	1
Mr. Flintoff's The Rhine, 4 yrs, 7st	(Darling, jun.)	2

The Selling Stakes of 5 sovs each with 25 added.

Mr. Flintoff's The Rhine, 4lb, to be sold for £80	(Francis)	1	1
Mr. Shirley's Nonsuit, 5 yrs, £80	(Oates)	0	2

TUESDAY.

The Military Challenge Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Captain Boyd's Dog Billy, 3 yrs	(Hon. S. Erskine.)	1
Captain France's Brenda, aged		2

The Dee Stand Handicap of 20 sovs each, with 50 added.

Mr. Mostyn's A-la-Mode, 3 yrs, 5st 10lb	(Dufflo)	1
Mr. King's Yarrow, 3 yrs, 4st 7lb and 8lb over		2

The Hurdle Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added. Heats.

Mr. Robinson's Wasp, aged	(Hopwood)	1
Mr. Halford's Pickwick, aged		2

ROYAL VISIT TO THE MARQUIS OF EXETER.—We hear from good authority that her Majesty and Prince Albert will shortly honour the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter with a visit at Burghley House, near Stamford. The extensive pile belonging to his lordship is one of the most splendid of any of the seats belonging to the aristocracy of this kingdom. The mansion itself is a noble structure. It has four fronts, facing the several points of the compass, in each of which is an entrance gate of unique construction, all of which are overlaid with gold. The whole of the exterior is in keeping with the style of Queen Elizabeth's time, in whose reign, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, it was erected. The arms of his lordship are emblazoned upon the front gate, representing two lions rampant, supporting a sheaf of wheat, surmounted by a ducal coronet, and based by a scroll bearing the motto, "Cor unum via una." To the magnificence of the interior no description can do adequate justice. Workmen are now employed in regilding and otherwise adorning the house for the anticipated visit of her Majesty.

LOUIS PHILIPPE'S PATRONAGE OF THE ARTS.—In the summer of last year Mr. Baud, architect, visited Paris, with the intention of presenting to the King of the French a series of sketches of Windsor Castle, which had previously been published in London. The King was pleased with this acknowledgment of respect, and upon his Majesty's recent visit to England, Mr. Baud was honoured with a complimentary letter, accompanied by a gold enamelled pencil-case, ornamented with a magnificent diamond top. The cost must have been upwards of forty guineas.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT IN A STONE QUARRY.—Two men, named Mottram and Smith, were killed on Monday, by the falling in of a portion of a stone quarry, at Ashton, in the neighbourhood of Manchester. Another workman, Michael Callaghan, was endeavouring to get out of the way, but was caught by a piece of stone, and seriously injured. The workmen with great alacrity removed the ruins in search of their fellow-labourers; and after removing several tons of stone and earth, they found the unfortunate man Smith. He was most dreadfully mutilated; one leg was severed from the body, and found a short distance from it. When taken from under the pieces of stone, which had fallen upon Mottram, it was found that the body was literally crushed to pieces, almost every bone being broken. Upwards of 1,000 tons of rock and earth fell at the time the accident took place.

BELANEY.—This notorious character visited Durham within the last few days, for the purpose of proving the will of his unfortunate wife in the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of Durham.

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

An adaptation of the French extravaganza, "Les Sept Chateaux du Diable," was produced at this theatre on Monday evening. The original piece was brought out at the Gaité last August, and was written by Messrs. Dennery and Clairville, the former being one of the most successful French dramatists of the present day. It was what is termed by our neighbours a Pièce Féerie. We have no dramatic entertainment that bears a precise analogy to this kind of production, which in France takes the place of our pantomime, depending chiefly upon singular transformations, superb effects, and extensive machinery for its success. In the present instance the "tricks" were furnished by Mr. William Bradwell, late of Covent Garden Theatre, to the French authors, M. Dennery having been in England during the past season for that purpose.

It was necessary to make several alterations in the spectacle, consistent with English notions of propriety, before it could be produced on our stage; but the story in both cases is the same. Satan (Mr. Diddear), finding his monarchy of the infernal regions a perfect sinecure, in consequence of the increasing morality amongst mortals, is desirous of finding how the emissaries are employed, whom he has sent upon earth to capture souls. By means of a magic glass he discovers that his chief agent, Sathaniel (Miss Farebrother), is playing him false, but, at the same time, finds out that two peasant girls of Brittany, whose father is a fisherman, are about to depart, together with their lovers, on a pilgrimage to the hermitage of Bon-Secours, to pray for his safety. To thwart this pious intention, and keep them to himself, Satan summonses the "Seven Passions," to intercept them, and endeavour, by various allurements, to turn them from their purpose. The Passions—Pride, Avarice, Envy, Rage, Idleness, Luxury, and Love—then appear, and promise to do their utmost for their master; whilst Sathaniel, wearied of serving the Evil One, assumes the office of their Guardian Angel. The two peasant girls, Azélie and Regaillette (Miss Fortescue and Mrs. Keeley), then set off, accompanied by their lovers, Raymond and Canuche (Messrs. Craven and Keeley), and their various adventures, perils, and escapes, amidst the different snares laid everywhere for them by the Passions, form the staple part of the piece, which finishes with the overthrow of the Evil One, and the triumph of the Guardian Angel. Regaillette and Canuche are peasants of vacillating morality, and constantly fall, with their eyes open, into every trap that is laid for them, always getting the worst of it. Some of the transformations brought about to punish them were exceedingly ingenious. One of the most elaborate was that of a scene divided into two parts, one of which represents the interior of a comfortable cottage, with a bed close to a blazing fire; and the other a cold wintry landscape, covered with snow. Canuche arrives first, and, occupying the cottage, refuses to allow his friends to enter, when the entire scene changes—the cottage goes over to the other side, ensconsing the pilgrims, whilst Canuche's bed vanishes, and he is left in the snow upon a block of stone. This very clever piece of machinery drew down long and loud applause.

Too much praise cannot be given to the acting of Mrs. Keeley, as Regaillette; and her childish spite, in the Castle of Envy, at her sister's dress, ending in a fit of crying from rage, with her subsequent horror at her own attire, when it becomes covered with toads and serpents, was the most natural delineation of mingled anger, jealousy, and terror we ever witnessed. Almost equally good was her occupation of the throne in the Castle of Pride, which she does not know how to make enough of, and at last gathers up her feet upon it. Keeley, as Canuche, was also exceedingly funny, but the part was far beneath him; and Mr. Collyer was very active as an attendant Imp of the Wieland school. Nor should we omit to mention the very effective and artistic manner in which Mrs. A. Wigan performed the trifling character of Idleness.

Nothing was spared in placing this drama effectively on the stage; and yet, with all the painstaking bestowed upon it, it could not be said to have achieved any great success. This arose from two causes: firstly, from the inanity of the dialogue, which was destitute of point or humour, serving merely as a vehicle for the effect; and, secondly, from the progress of the plot being too monotonous: the audience always appearing to know what was about to happen—a fault which we anticipated when we read the original French piece. That it will, however, prove attractive for a time, we have little doubt, for the clever scenic and mechanical effects are alone worth a visit to see: and as Mr. Keeley at the fall of the curtain announced the piece for repetition every evening until further notice, there is a chance for all our readers to gratify their curiosity on this point. The perfect manner in which everything worked, for a first night, looking to the complicated trapwork and changes, without a single hitch or wait, reflects great credit upon the exertions of the active stage-manager, Mr. Wilmot.

SADLER'S WELLS.

Thanks to the exertions of Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps, the legitimate drama may now be said to have taken a firm footing on the boards formerly devoted to pantomime and spectacle. The period which has now elapsed since they opened the theatre, and the uniformly good houses, have shown that the patronage they have received has not been that merely bestowed upon an undertaking for its novelty. Night after night have our best plays been performed to literally overflowing audiences; and a marked improvement has been visible in the taste of the more northern inhabitants of the metropolis. Instead of the dreary enactments at the theatrical taverns in the vicinity, with pieces and performers alike far below mediocrity, persons now flock to see the tragedies of Shakspeare excellently represented, and put upon the stage in a style that would do credit to either of our great theatres: the programme of the evening's amusements concluding with some lively farce or musical afterpiece. We were present during the performance of "King John," at the early part of the week; and were pleased with the careful and perfect manner in which every part was filled, no less than with the marked attention and perception of the audience in every division of the theatre. The merits of the various performers are too well known to require comment, but the getting up of the play deserves all praise. The scene in Act 2, "Before the walls of Angiers," was grouped with much artistic effect; and there was a careful unity preserved, even to the arms and trappings of the soldiers, throughout its entire arrangement. When we visited Sadler's Wells last year to see some tremendous melodrama, or piece of diablerie, we forget which, nothing could exceed the tumult of the house: now all is quiet, orderly, and attractive, although at the same prices; and the company of a very superior description. We feel pleasure in thus making honourable mention of the undertaking of Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps, for in all truth it deserves it; whilst it proves that so long as the plays of Shakspeare are performed with merit, and at a price within the means of the million, there need be no occasion to lament the decline of popular taste for the legitimate drama.

CITY OF LONDON.

The comedy of "The Belle's Stratagem" was performed here on Monday evening, for the purpose of introducing Mr. Robert Roxby, from Manchester, to a London audience, as Doricourt. This gentleman, a clever light comedian, will prove, if we mistake not, a very great acquisition to the company. His acting throughout was easy and natural; and in the fifth act his humour was unstained by the slightest tinge of vulgarity. Mrs. Walter Lacy was, of course, the Letitia Hardy, playing with her usual excellence, and singing so effectively as to call down loud applause; and Mr. James Browne was the best Flutter we have seen for some time. This gentleman, who has been for years absent from the London boards, is equally the finished actor in any part he undertakes. After the comedy, the "Bolero de Cadiz" was danced by Mdlles. Louise and Adele, and encored; and in the burlesque of "Aladdin" the same compliment was paid to the "real Bohemian Polka." This is by far the best dance of its kind that has been produced at any of the theatres, and so the audience appeared to think. Some thirty or forty very pretty girls, in the costumes of either sex, go through a series of Polka figures with admirable precision, and conclude by whirling round and round, in the manner of Perrot and Carlotta Grisi, the numbers greatly adding to the effect. The theatre was very well attended.

"Don Cæsar de Bazan" has already appeared at the Surrey and Victoria Theatres, whither we shall next week progress to report upon his success: and we see that the same popular personage is underlined at several other houses. The bills of Drury-lane, the Adelphi, Haymarket, Princess', and Strand, remain pecisely the same as last week, from which we infer that they are all doing well, and no novelty is needed. Mr. Marble leaves the Strand at the end of the week to join Mr. Webster's company at the Haymarket, whither, it is reported, Miss Woolgar is about to migrate from the Adelphi. A five-act comedy by Mr. Bourcicault is in preparation a the Haymarket; and we hear Mr. Jerrold has been applied to, to write an original drama for the Strand. The "Prisoner of War," by the latter talented dramatist, is about to be produced at Sadler's Wells.

HER MAJESTY IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

The recent debarkation of the Queen and the Prince Consort at Osborne House, although unattended with all "the pomp and circumstance" which usually accompany royal visits, was a scene of extreme interest, as the annexed Engraving, and details, sketched by an eye-witness, will testify.

On Tuesday morning, shortly after ten o'clock, the thunder of the artillery of Cowes Castle, succeeded by the salutes from the Royal Yacht Squadron battery, and the private batteries along both shores of the Medina, announced the approach of the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, having the Admiralty flag at the fore and the royal standard at the main; and at half-past ten the steamer let go her anchor in the Cowes Roads, off the harbour's mouth. The weather, which had been extremely boisterous, for days previous, continued unfavourable for the debarkation; the rain came down in torrents; the royal party consequently postponed for awhile their landing. The royal yacht, on her arrival in the roads, was unaccompanied by any man-of-war, and the whole was conducted in the most private manner; but she was followed by the Royal Yacht Squadron yacht Kestrel, Commodore the Earl of Yarborough; the Zarifa, the Earl of Wilton; the Turquoise, Flirt, and several others of the squadron's yachts, who saluted as they arrived in succession. There were no troops, nor indeed any person in authority to receive her Majesty on landing, except about eight of the A Division from London, and Inspector Callaghan of the Isle of Wight rural police with his staff; the whole of whom were useless, save to occupy the best positions for the sight themselves.

At eleven o'clock the rain ceased for awhile, and the sun, which had been almost for days obscured, burst forth with splendour. The royal barge was lowered, and immediately manned, and in a few minutes afterwards the royal standard was lowered from the yacht, and hoisted in the barge, which was seen to leave the royal yacht with her Majesty, the Prince, and their suite; followed by the customs' boat, in which was J. Donnan, Esq., the Tide Surveyor of the Port, who, on her arrival, proceeded alongside, and escorted her Majesty on shore, following in the wake of the royal barge. As her Majesty proceeded along the Medina, she was again saluted from the private batteries, and from the landing-place at East Cowes.

At a quarter past eleven o'clock, her Majesty disembarked at the stairs fronting the Royal Thames Yacht Club House, which was decorated with the words Victoria, Albert, arranged with dahlias of every hue, supplied from East Cowes Park gardens, by the proprietor, George Eyre Brook, Esq. Upon the Club House front, also, were "V A," in variegated lamps.

Her Majesty, on her landing, was conducted along the carpeted way to her carriage by Admiral Sir Graham Eden Hammond, G.C.B., one of the resident gentry; and was accompanied by the Prince and Viscountess Canning (we believe), the lady in waiting, who entered the first carriage. Two other carriages containing her suite followed in succession. Nothing could exceed the enthusiastic cheers of the multitude both ashore and afloat, which greeted her Majesty and the Prince on their landing; but we regret to add, that the loyalty of her subjects exceeded their good breeding, particularly among those in the numerous boats which had congregated at the stairs, and which approached much nearer to the royal visitors than could have been agreeable to her Majesty. It was with the greatest difficulty that the royal barge could approach the landing place, and her Majesty, instead of stepping at once on shore, was compelled to walk along the thwarts of the barge before she could effect a landing. The Queen and the Prince were dressed in deep black and looked remarkably well, notwithstanding the fatigue they must have undergone.

It may be added that the intrusion of the crowd should have been prevented by the proper authorities. We expected to have seen the Mayor and Corporation of Newport to present a dutiful and loyal address to her Majesty on her landing in their ancient borough; but they came not, although they say that that part of East Cowes on which her Majesty landed, and, in fact, on both sides of the river, even Cowes Roads, to the Brambles Shoal, are within their jurisdiction; but such absurdity is only to prove their right to the tolls and dues, and for municipal and parliamentary purposes; had it been to elect a member of Parliament for the borough of Newport, their jurisdiction would have extended to Cowes, and they would have thought it their business to pay the towns of East and West Cowes a visit; but the idea of welcoming their Sovereign appeared to be a different thing. If, then, in this case there was no patronage to be obtained, there might have been a chance of knighthood. Shortly after the arrival of the royal yacht, her Majesty's steamer Volcano arrived in the Roads, made signals to the yacht, and then returned to Portsmouth.

In the evening the Medina hotel was illnminated, as were several other houses.

HER MAJESTY'S RETURN FROM THE ISLE OF WIGHT, AND ARRIVAL AT WINDSOR.

On Monday afternoon, at two o'clock, her Majesty and Prince Albert embarked on board the royal yacht at East Cowes, on her return to Windsor. The various craft belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron were dressed out with flags, and the Kestrel, Lord Yarborough's yacht, with the Flirt, belonging to Sir Bellingham Graham, had their yards manned, the crew cheering loudly as they were passed by the royal yacht. Similar demonstrations of loyalty and respect were paid her Majesty by the several crews of the revenue cutters, Stag, Ada, and Rose, anchored in the roads. On her Majesty going on board the yacht, a royal salute was fired from the battery at West Cowes Castle, and also from the saluting battery in front of the Royal Yacht Squadron Club-house, and when the royal yacht got under weigh, another salute was fired by the Kestrel.

When her Majesty, upon the royal yacht entering the harbour at Portsmouth, saw the garlands at the trucks of the Victory, and the wreath on her figure-head, she inquired whether it was usual to deck the ship in that way, and on being informed that it was not, but that the Victory was decorated so in consequence of its being the anniversary of the ever-memorable battle of Trafalgar, she expressed her intention of going on board. Her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Lady Gainsborough, and Lord Liverpool, ascended the companion ladder to the middle deck, and immediately proceeded to the quarter-deck to view the spot on which the gallant Nelson had received the messenger of death. The spot is marked by a brass plate, on which is inscribed the words, "Here Nelson fell," in the centre of a wreath of laurel. Her Majesty, while reading the inscription to the memory of Nelson, shed tears, and remained silent for several moments. She then addressed a few words to Prince Albert, and, plucking a couple of leaves from the wreath of laurel, she expressed her desire to see the cabin in which Nelson died. Lights were immediately ordered in the cockpit, and her Majesty having inspected the poop of the Victory and the inscription in front—which she did with marked emphasis, she descended, followed by Prince Albert and the members of the royal suite in attendance. The main deck at this moment was in great confusion, having a few minutes previously just discharged a salvo in honour of her Majesty's arrival in the harbour, and whilst descending the ladder she was run against by a powder monkey, who was bringing up a fresh supply to salute her Majesty on her departure. Her Majesty was almost overthrown by the concussion, but bore it with the most gracious and condescending affability. Under the directions and care of Lieutenant Smith, every spot hallowed by the sufferings and death of the hero of Trafalgar, is preserved sacred with the most patriotic piety. On entering the cabin, therefore, her Majesty had no difficulty in descrying the identical spot where Nelson breathed his last; it is pointed out by the figure of a funeral urn emblazoned on one of the knees of the ship, surmounted by the words, "Here Nelson died." The royal party stopped here for several minutes, and appeared to feel the influence of the recollections which the scene awakened. Her Majesty inspected various parts of the vessel, observing to one of her conductors that the orlop deck was not so high in the Victory as in other men of war which she had visited. In the evening a banquet in honour of the occasion was given on board, at which all the officers belonging to the ship and ordinary were present. The greatest enthusiasm was displayed, the toast of the Queen being drank with as loud demonstrations of affectionate loyalty as "The memory of Nelson" was received with solemn and affecting silence.

> "England expects every man to do his duty,"

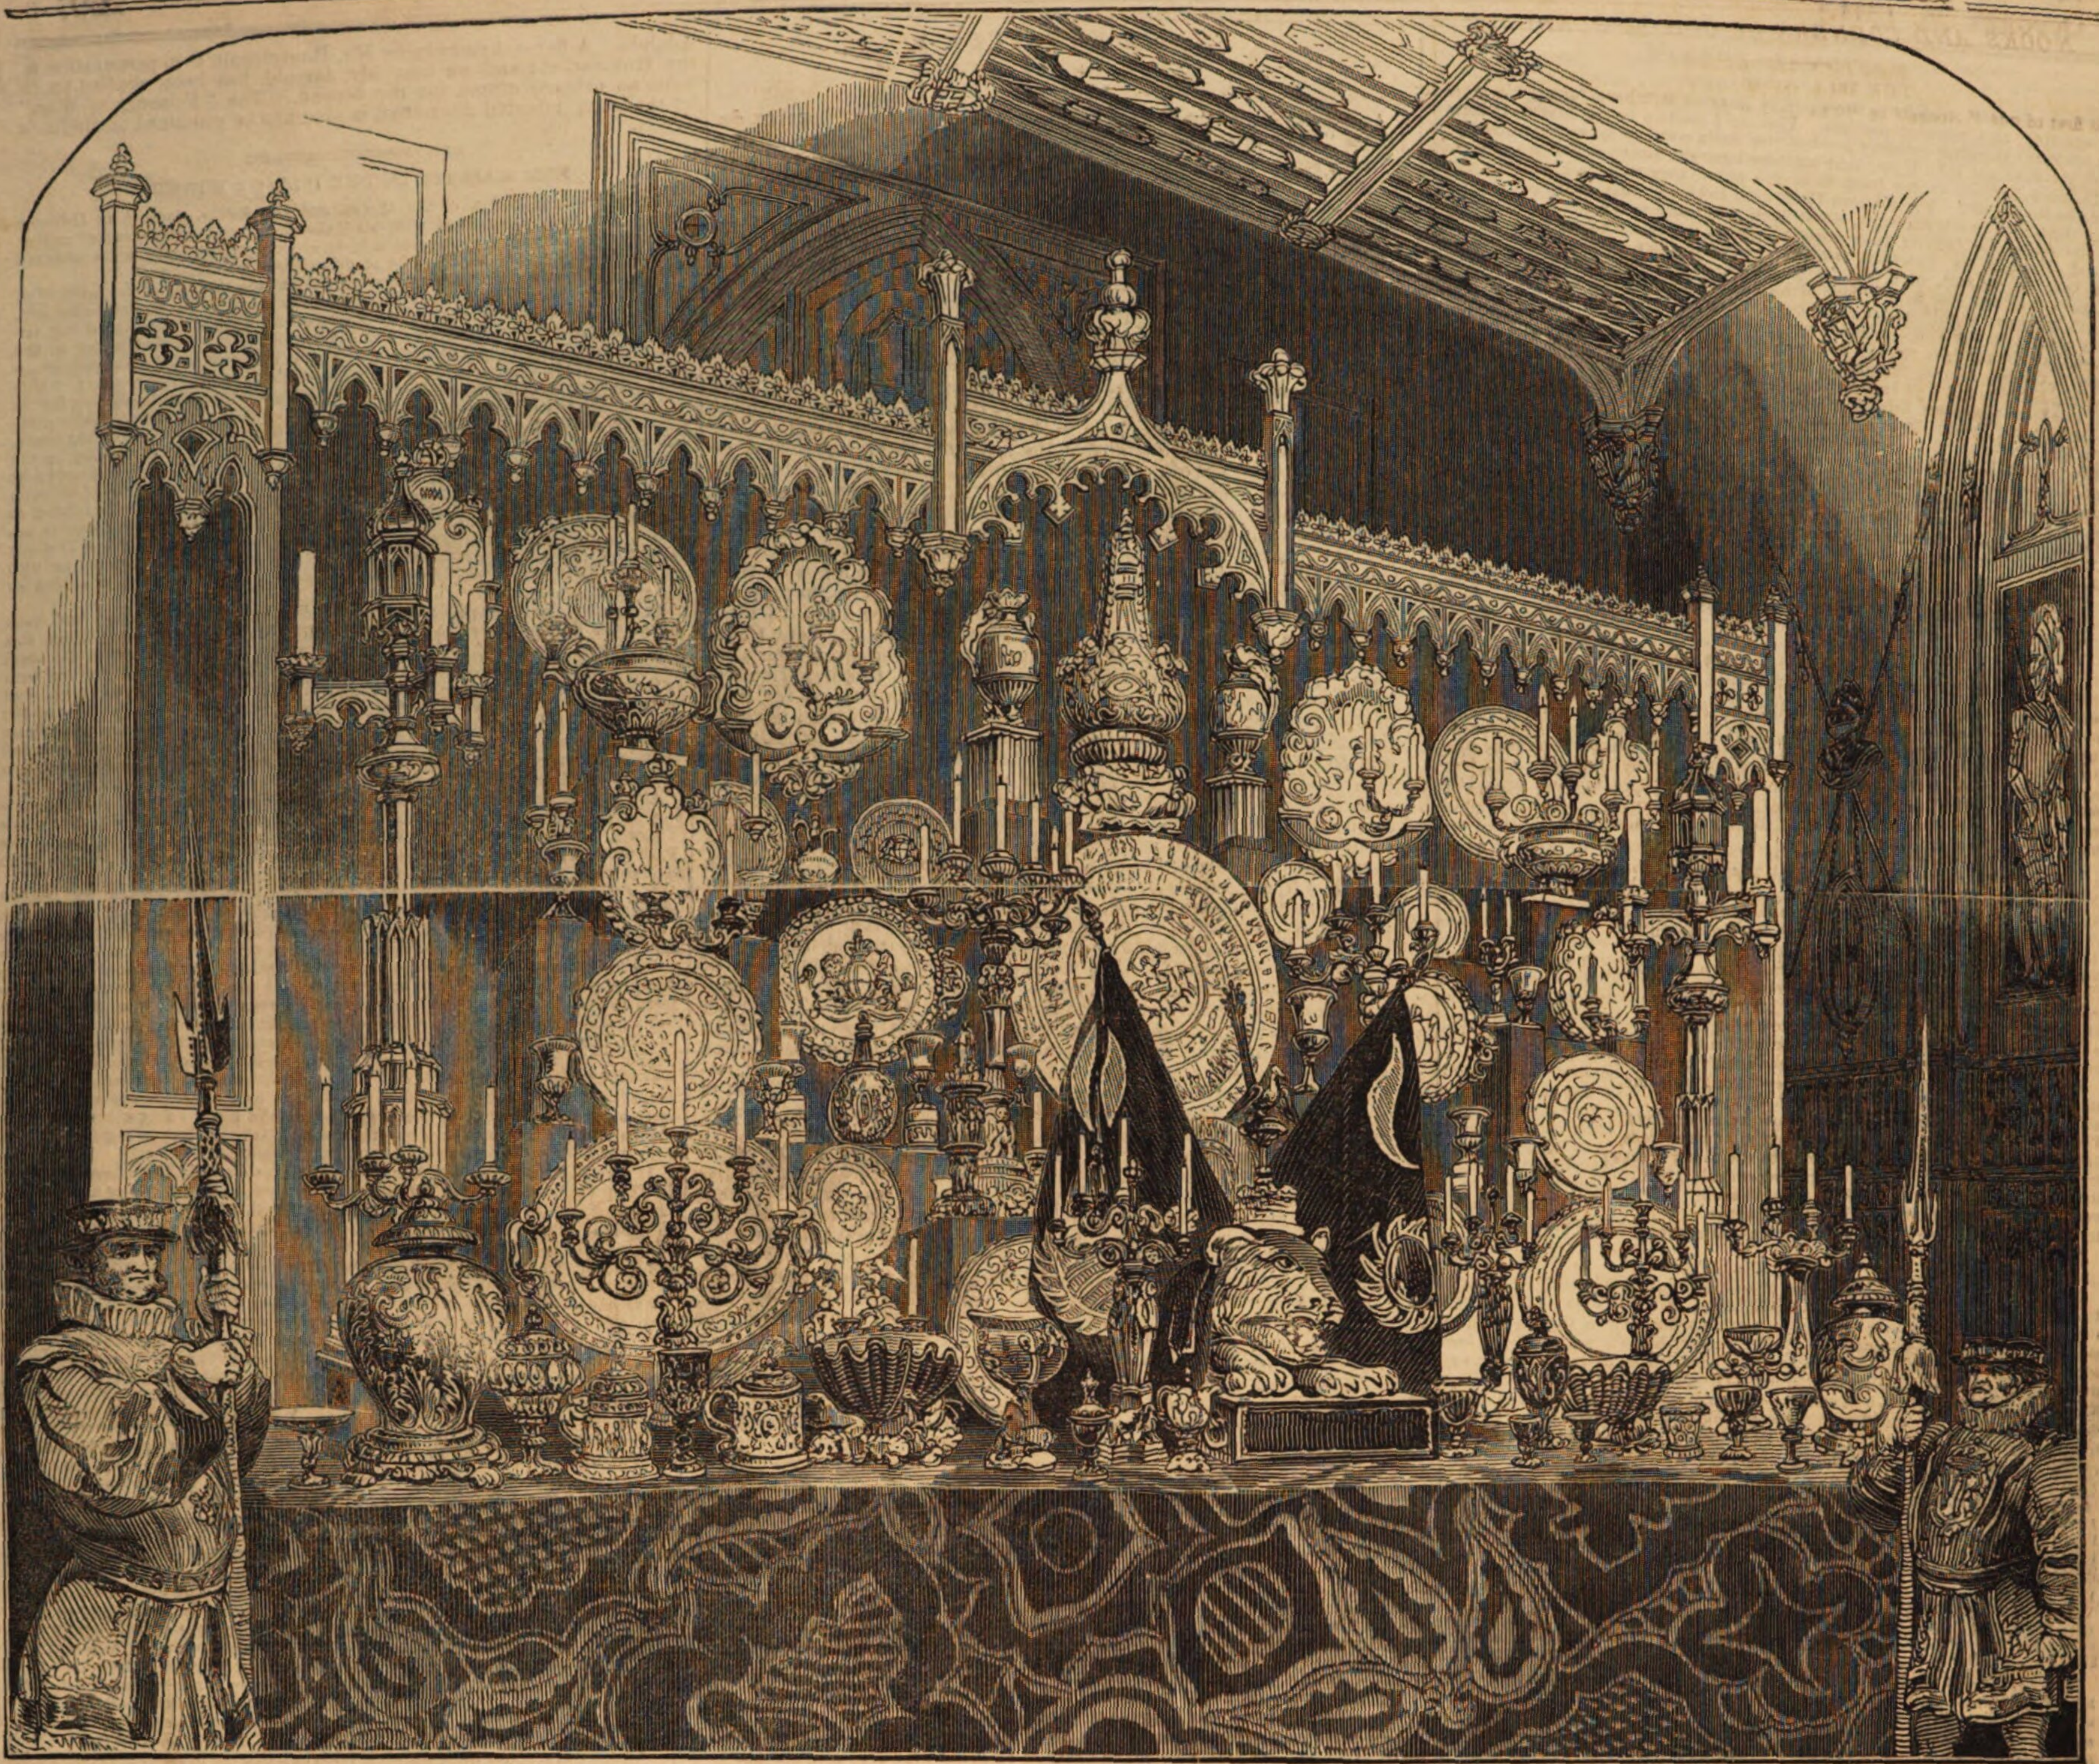
Upon her Majesty landing at the Royal Clarence-yard, Gosport, she was received by the Lords of the Admiralty, Sir George Cockburn, Sir William Gage, and the Hon. Mr. Corry; Admirals Parker and Bowles, Major-General Sir Hercules and Lady Pakenham, &c. Her Majesty walked from the landing-place to her carriage, leaning on the arm of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, as the carriage could not approach within two hundred yards, the platform being too narrow. Mr. Chaplin, and some of the other directors of the South Wester Railway Company, were at the terminus, to receive her Majesty. The splendid carriage recently built for the use of her Majesty had been sent down from London early in the morning. At four o'clock the special train left the Gosport terminus for the Farnborough station, where her Majesty's carriages were in waiting to convey the royal party to Windsor. Lady Gainsborough and the Earl of Liverpool were in the same carriage with her Majesty and Prince Albert

Her Majesty arrived at Farnborough station at 20 minutes after five, the distance being 57 miles. Her Majesty's intention was to have left Gosport at three, and this delay may be accounted for by her Majesty having visited and gone on board the Victory. Her Majesty was received by a guard of honour of Marines at the station.

The Queen and Prince Albert reached Windsor Castle at twelve minutes past seven o'clock, escorted by a party of the Royal Horse Guards.

On alighting at the Castle, her Majesty and his Royal Highness were received by the Hon. Misses Murray and Kerr, Maids of Honour, Lord Byron, Lord in Waiting, Sir Frederick Stovin, Groom in Waiting, and the Earl of Hardwicke.

As her Majesty and Prince Albert were taking their accustomed early walk about nine o'clock on Saturday morning at Cowes, they were caught in a heavy shower of rain at a rather shelterless part of the hill commanding a view of the sea. Her Majesty and the Prince hastened their steps homeward, when the old postman of East Cowes and Whippingham, who had just then been performing his morning rounds, observed that a lady and gentleman were rather disagreeably exposed to the storm, and running after them as fast as he could tendered his old gingham umbrella, which was graciously accepted, and he was invited to follow their footsteps to Osborne House. Little did the poor postman imagine at the time, that it was to his Royal Mistress he had thus the honour of affording such seasonable shelter; but on his arrival at the portico he was agreeably awakened to the fact by having tendered to him her Majesty's thanks and a five-pound note, together with his old umbrella.



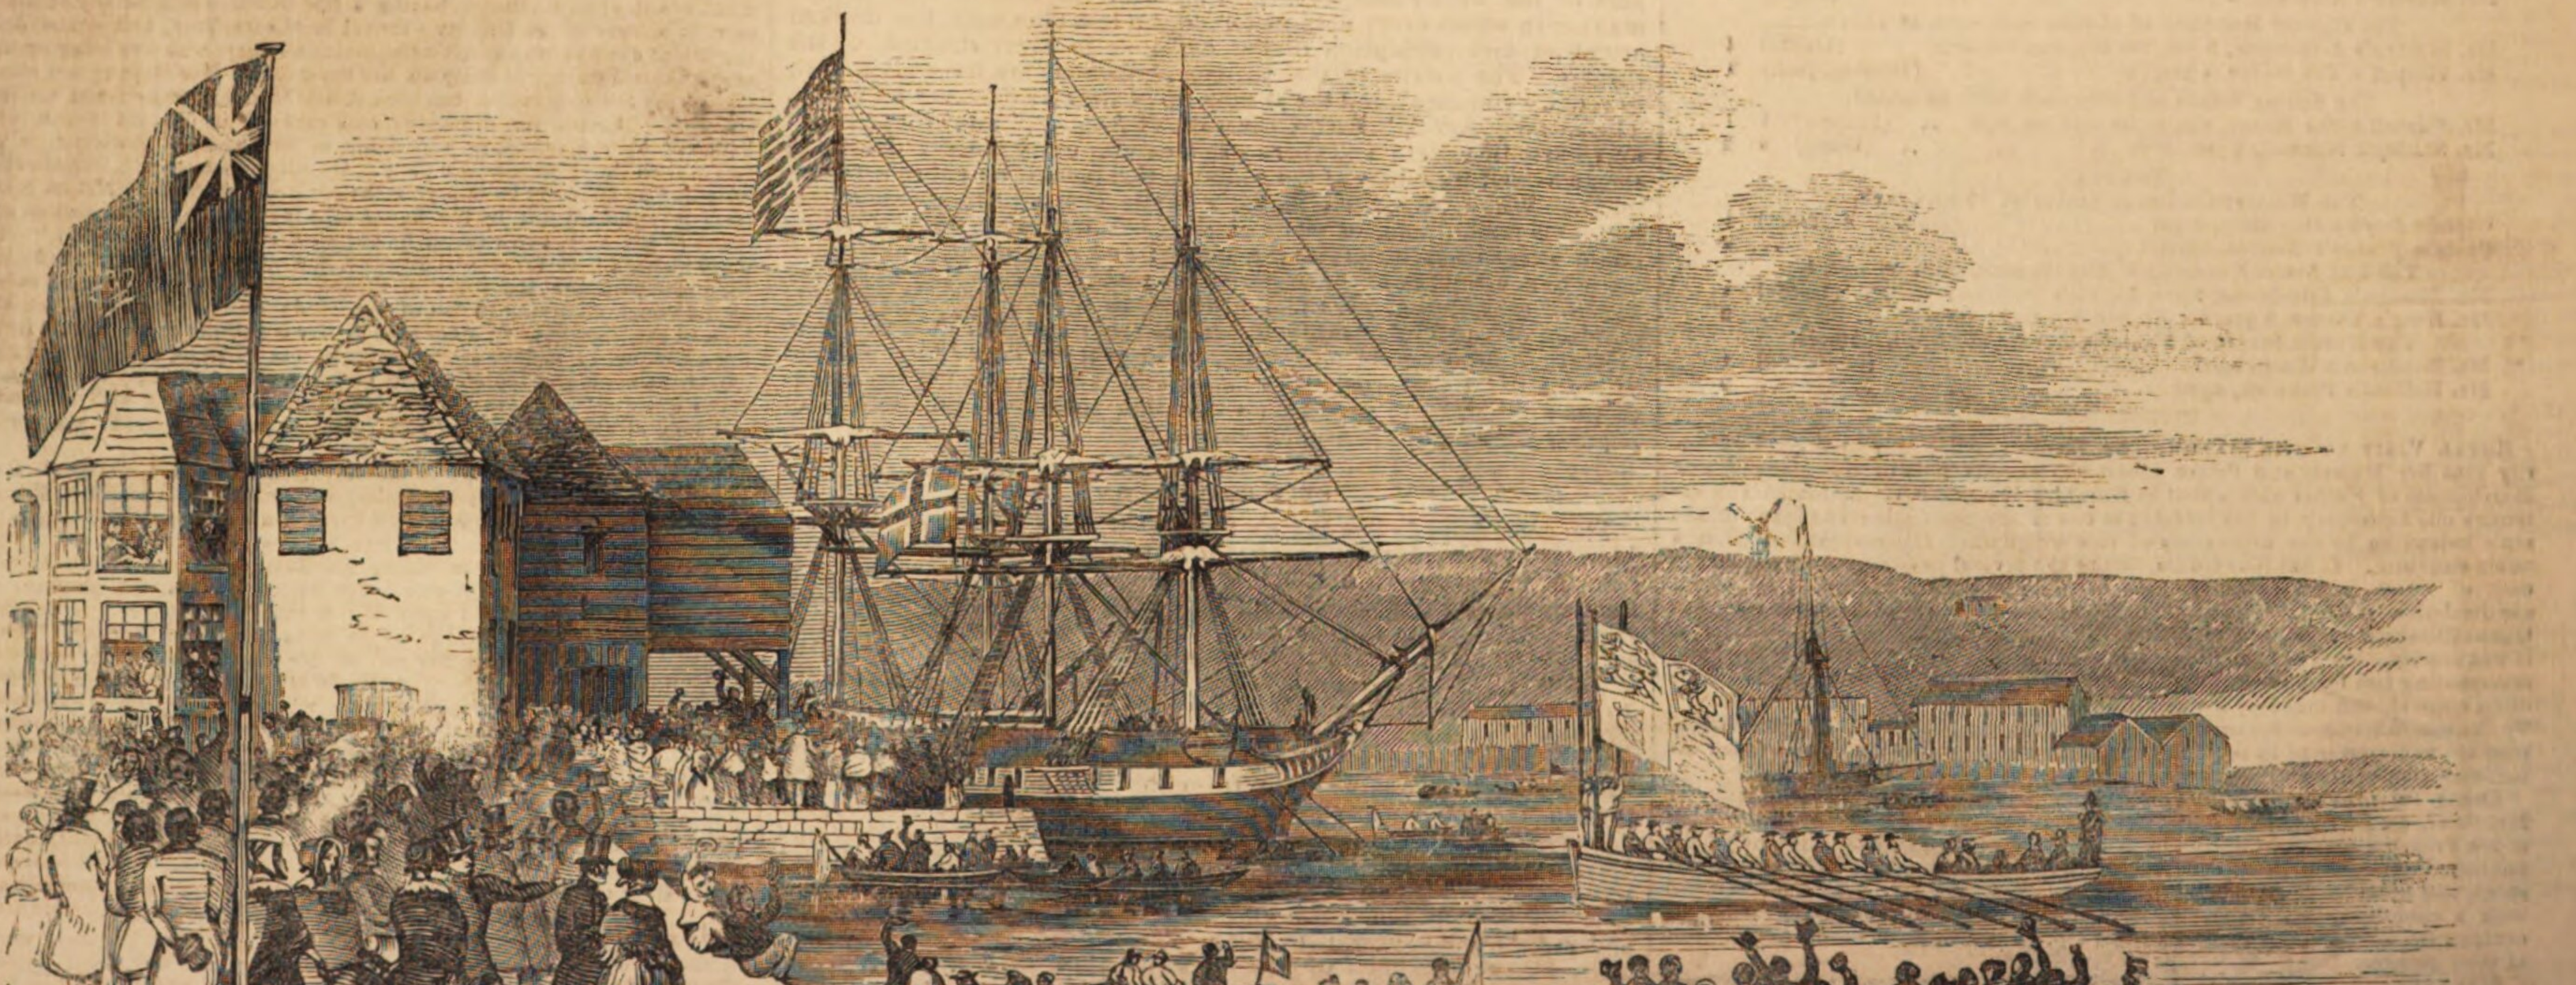
THE GRAND BUFFET, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, AT THE GARTER BANQUET, GIVEN TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF THE FRENCH.

STATE BUFFET, ST. GEORGE'S HALL, WINDSOR CASTLE.

The buffets at the royal banquets are neither placed nor arranged in the ordinary manner: the oriel window of the banqueting-hall, and the simple grouping of less costly collections, give way at Windsor to a bolder and more striking method for display. There, such is the size, the multitude, and precious character of the plate, that it has been found necessary, for its due display, to build it up in the form of two independent piles of gold, placed, on state occasions, at each end of the banqueting-hall. An engraving exhibits the westermost of these gorgeous structures, as they appeared on the night of the Garter Banquet, depicted in our last week's journal.

It will be seen to consist of a square Gothic screen, with tabular supports for the various pieces of plate; the whole covered with a rich drapery of red cloth, with decorations of gold. In the centre, appears the famous shield of Achilles: beneath it the Huma, or Peacock of Precious Stones; the Golden Tiger used by Tippoo Saib as his footstool; and two of his standards; all taken at the storming of Seringapatam. Above these, at the summit of the screen, stands the Spanish Wine-fountain, taken from a ship of the Armada; and around these, covering both sides of the buffets, are spread numerous costly specimens of English gold work, ranging from the massive sconces of Henry VIII. to the ponderous vases and salvers of Queen Anne. At the bottom, running the whole length of the buffet, appears a matchless collection of the works of Benevenuto Cellini, and his great church-working contemporaries; they consist chiefly of jewelled cups, formerly used for sacramental purposes; vases of gold and crystal; and censers, formed of ivory and gold, the former most exquisitely carved in alto-relievo, with various scriptural and historic scenes. Between them, at intervals, are placed the more choice specimens of George IV.'s. plate—chimeras, grotesques, Homeric fancies, marine groups and the like, all bearing marks of the classic fancy of Flaxman, by whom they were mostly designed.

The effect of this imposing display of the finest arts, revelling, as it were, in the wealth of kingdoms, was, however, neither dazzling nor exciting—a sense of reality, of perfection, seemed to fill the mind, to the exclusion of every other feeling. On the night of her Majesty's Garter Banquet to Louis Philippe we felt, as its flood of golden reflectors fell on the wondrous company, that for that night at least it was nobly employed. On other occassions, and in many lands, it had been used in adding to the splendours of superstitious worship, in serving the pride of conquerors, or ministering to the sensuality of luxurious kings; but on this, its proud destination was to give honour to the meeting of two princes of peace.

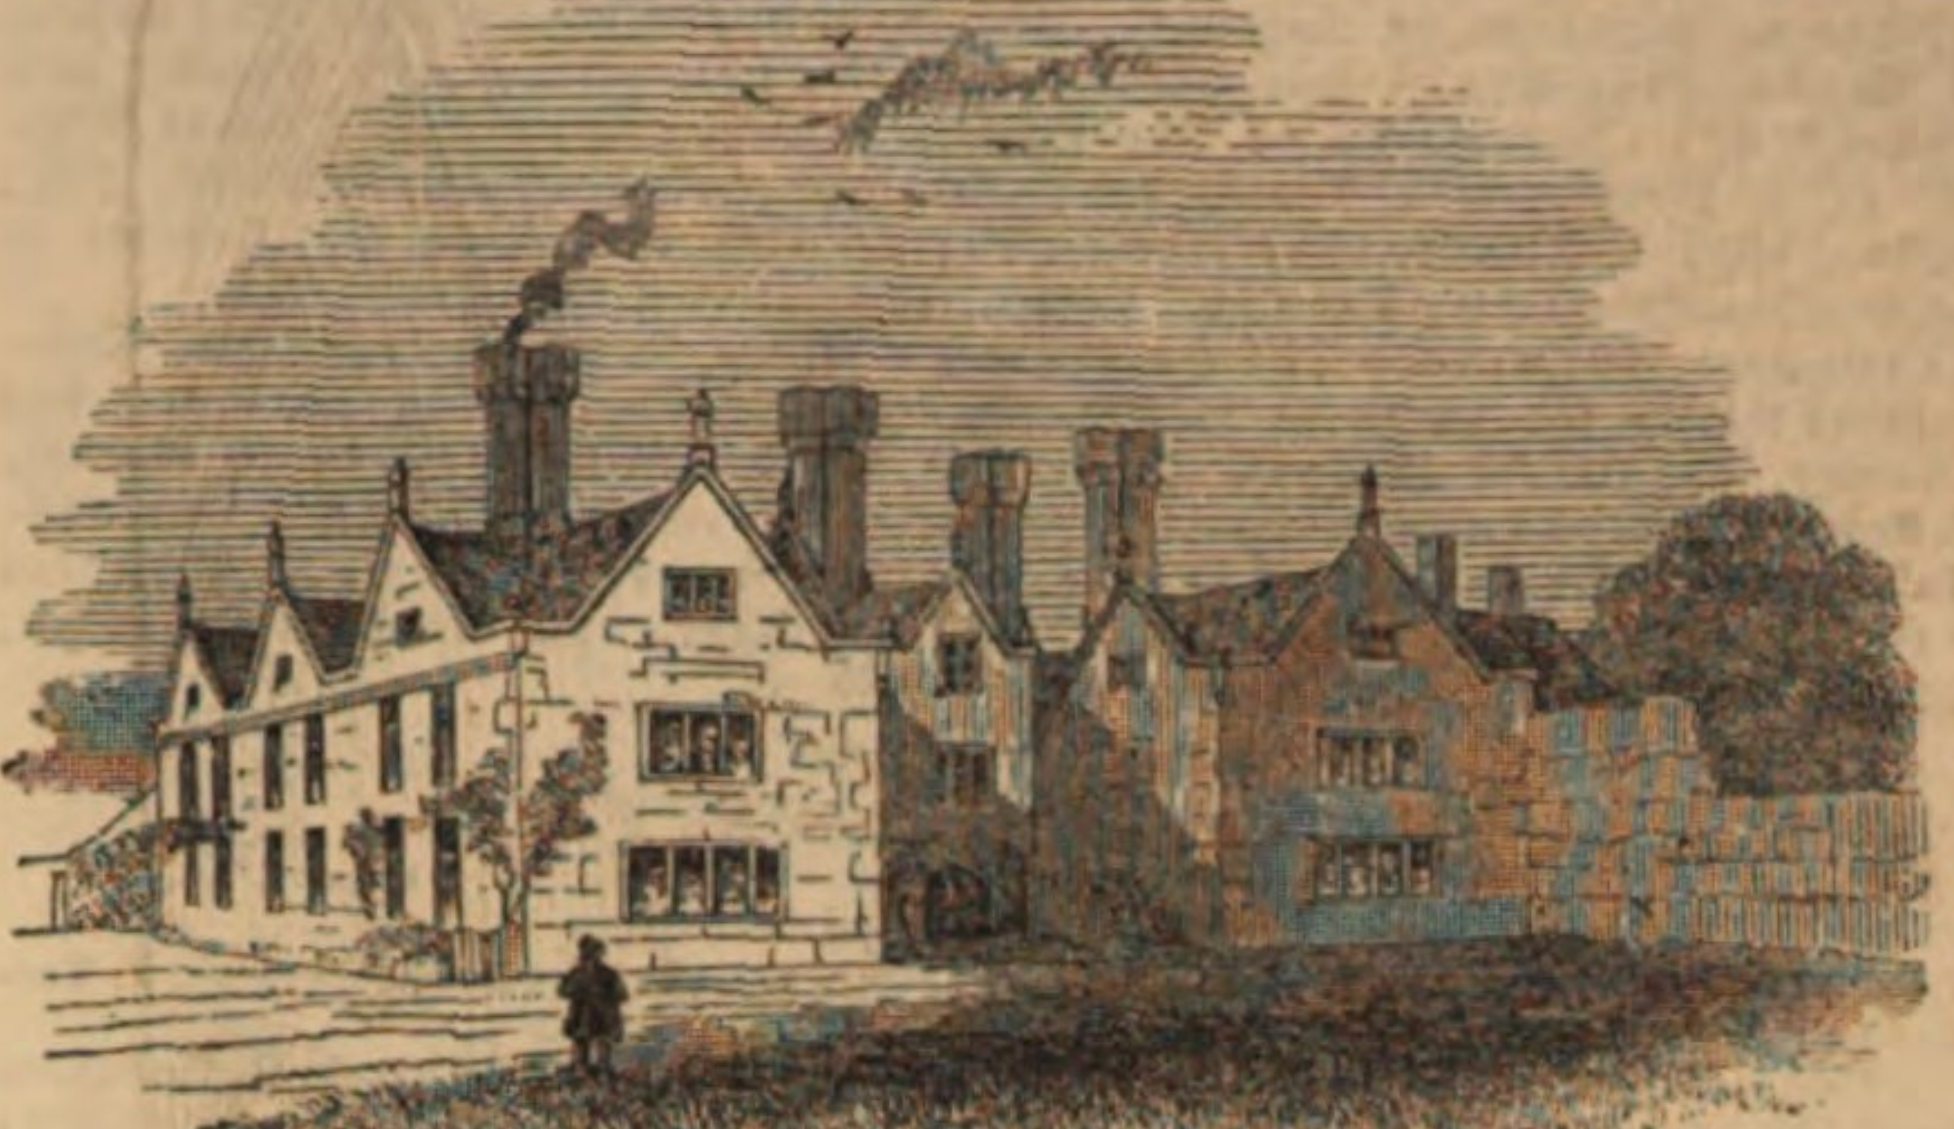


HER MAJESTY LANDING AT COWES, ISLE OF WIGHT.—See preceding page.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

The first of our "Nooks" in "The Garden of England" is Barton House,

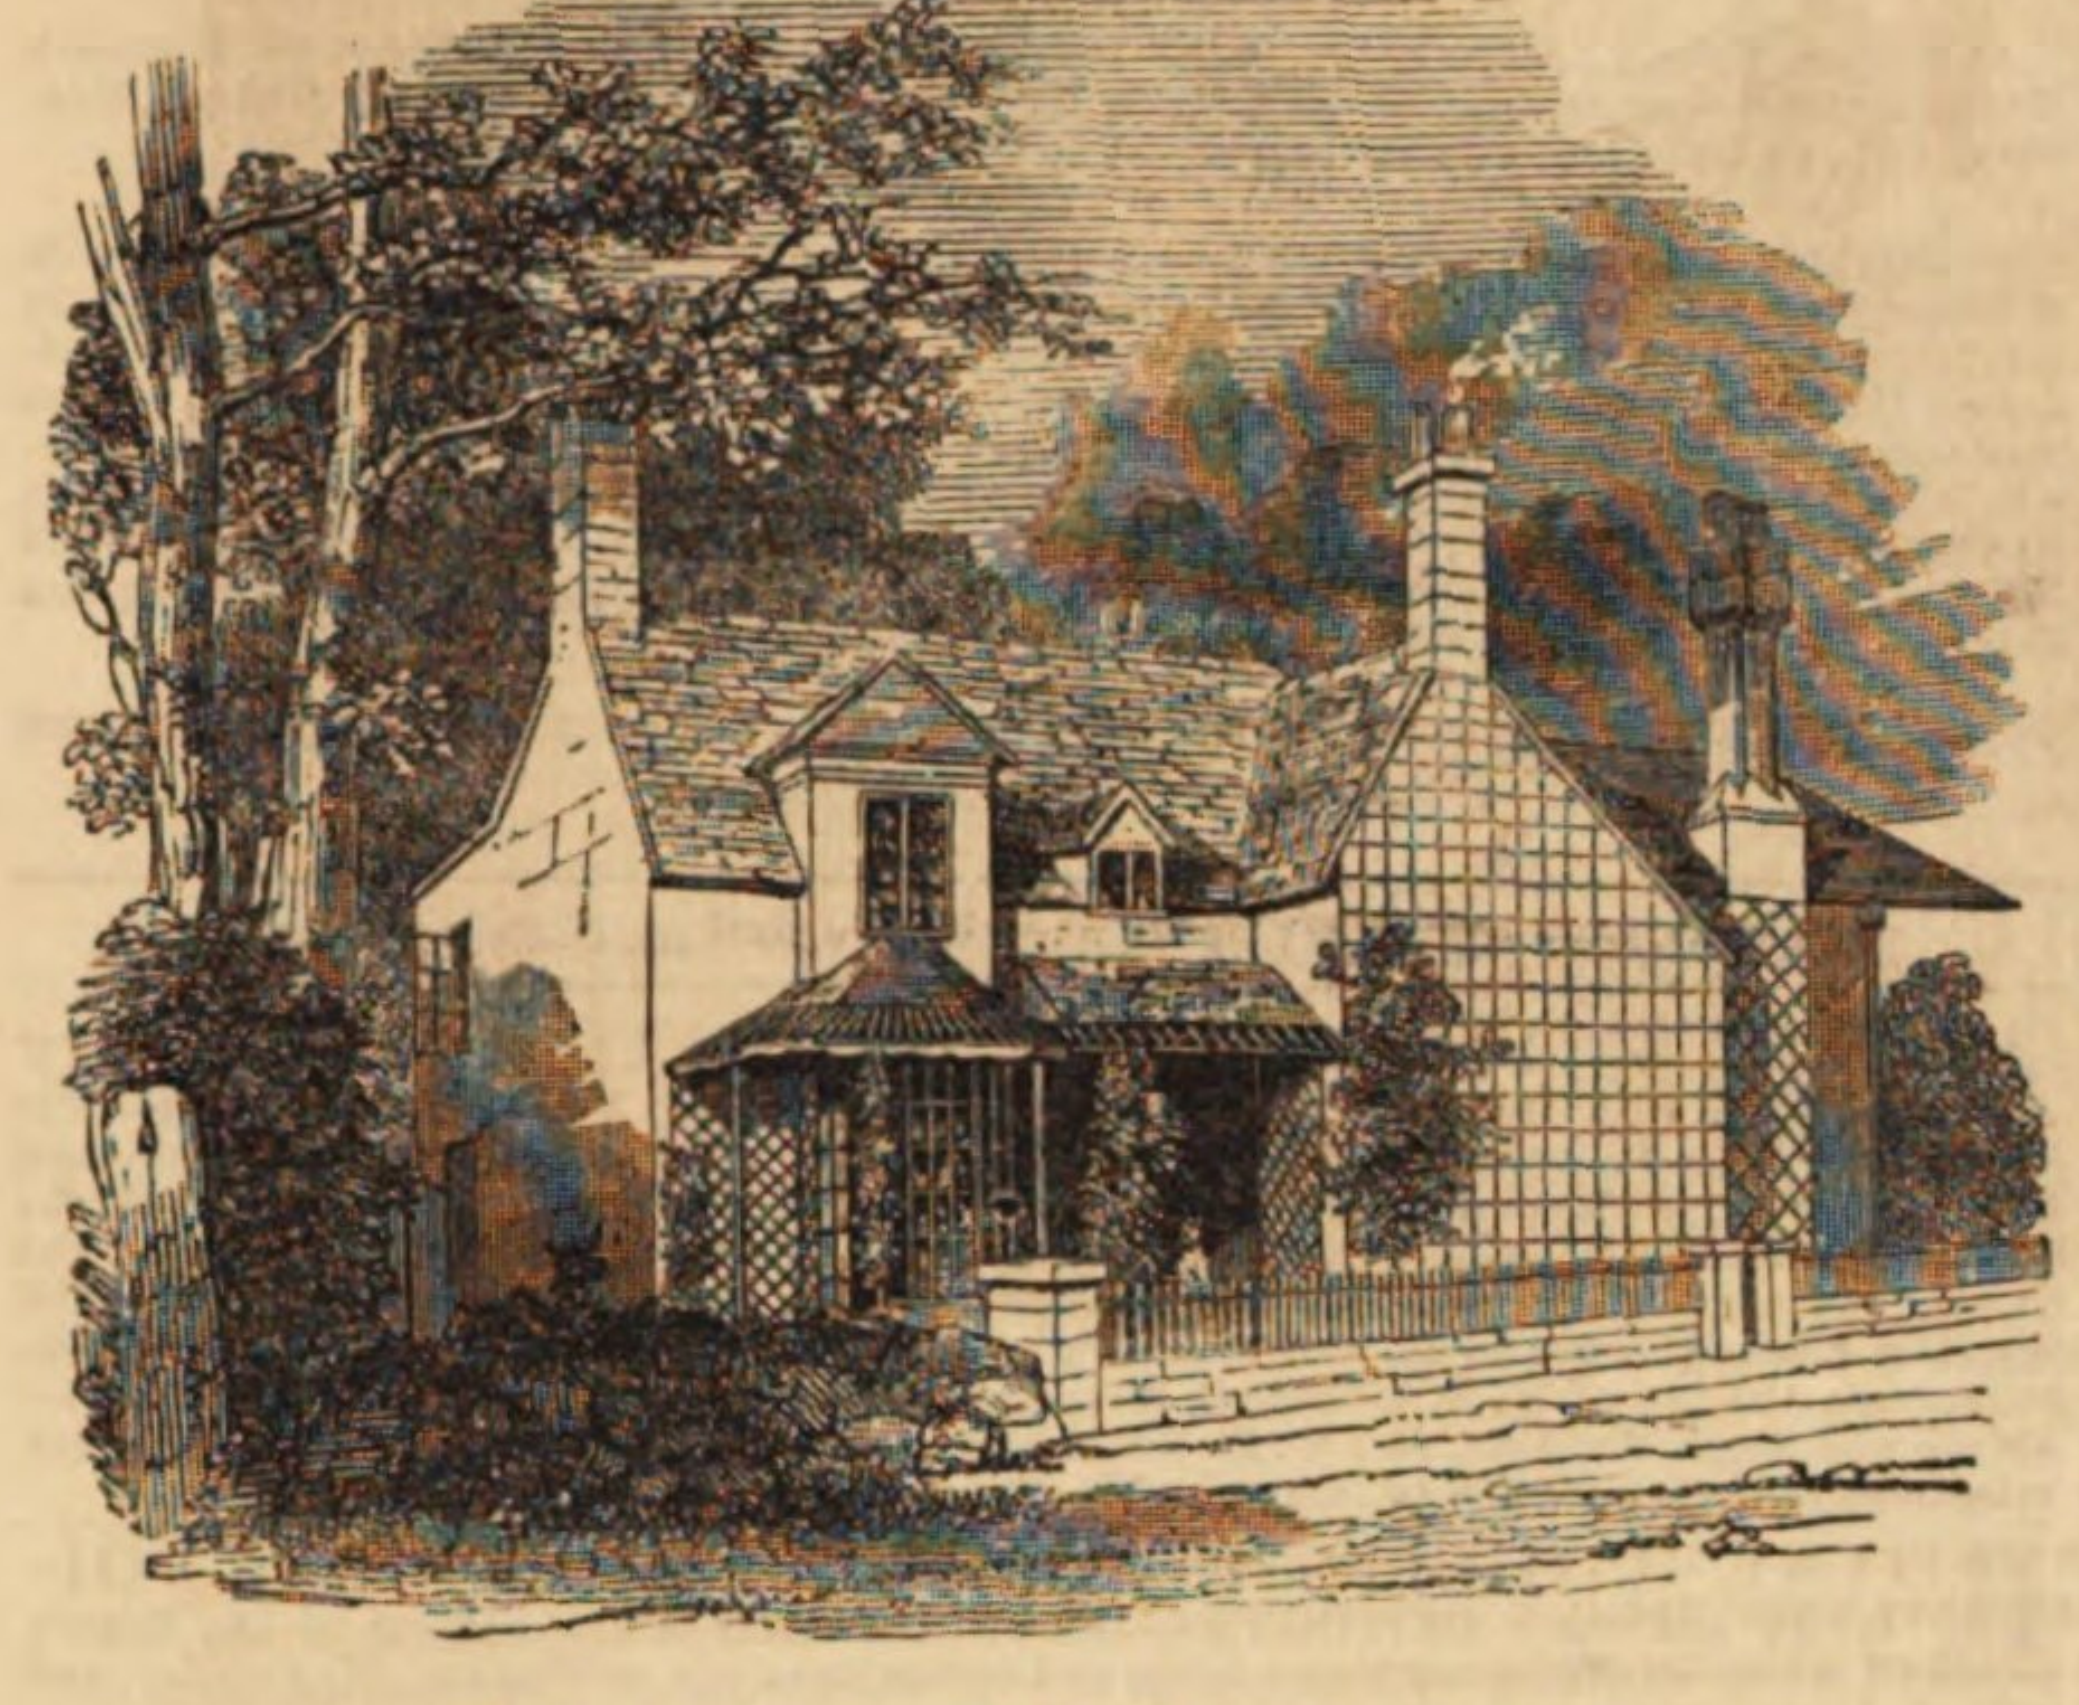


BARTON HOUSE, ISLE OF WIGHT.

divided by one field from the grounds of Osborne House, the marine residence of her Majesty. The ground is high, but slopes towards the sea. The house is spacious, and contains forty-seven rooms, half of which number, however, are not habitable. The drawing-room is twenty-four feet by nineteen; and the banqueting-room twenty-two feet by twenty-one. There are two principal staircases, one of which leads to the chapel.

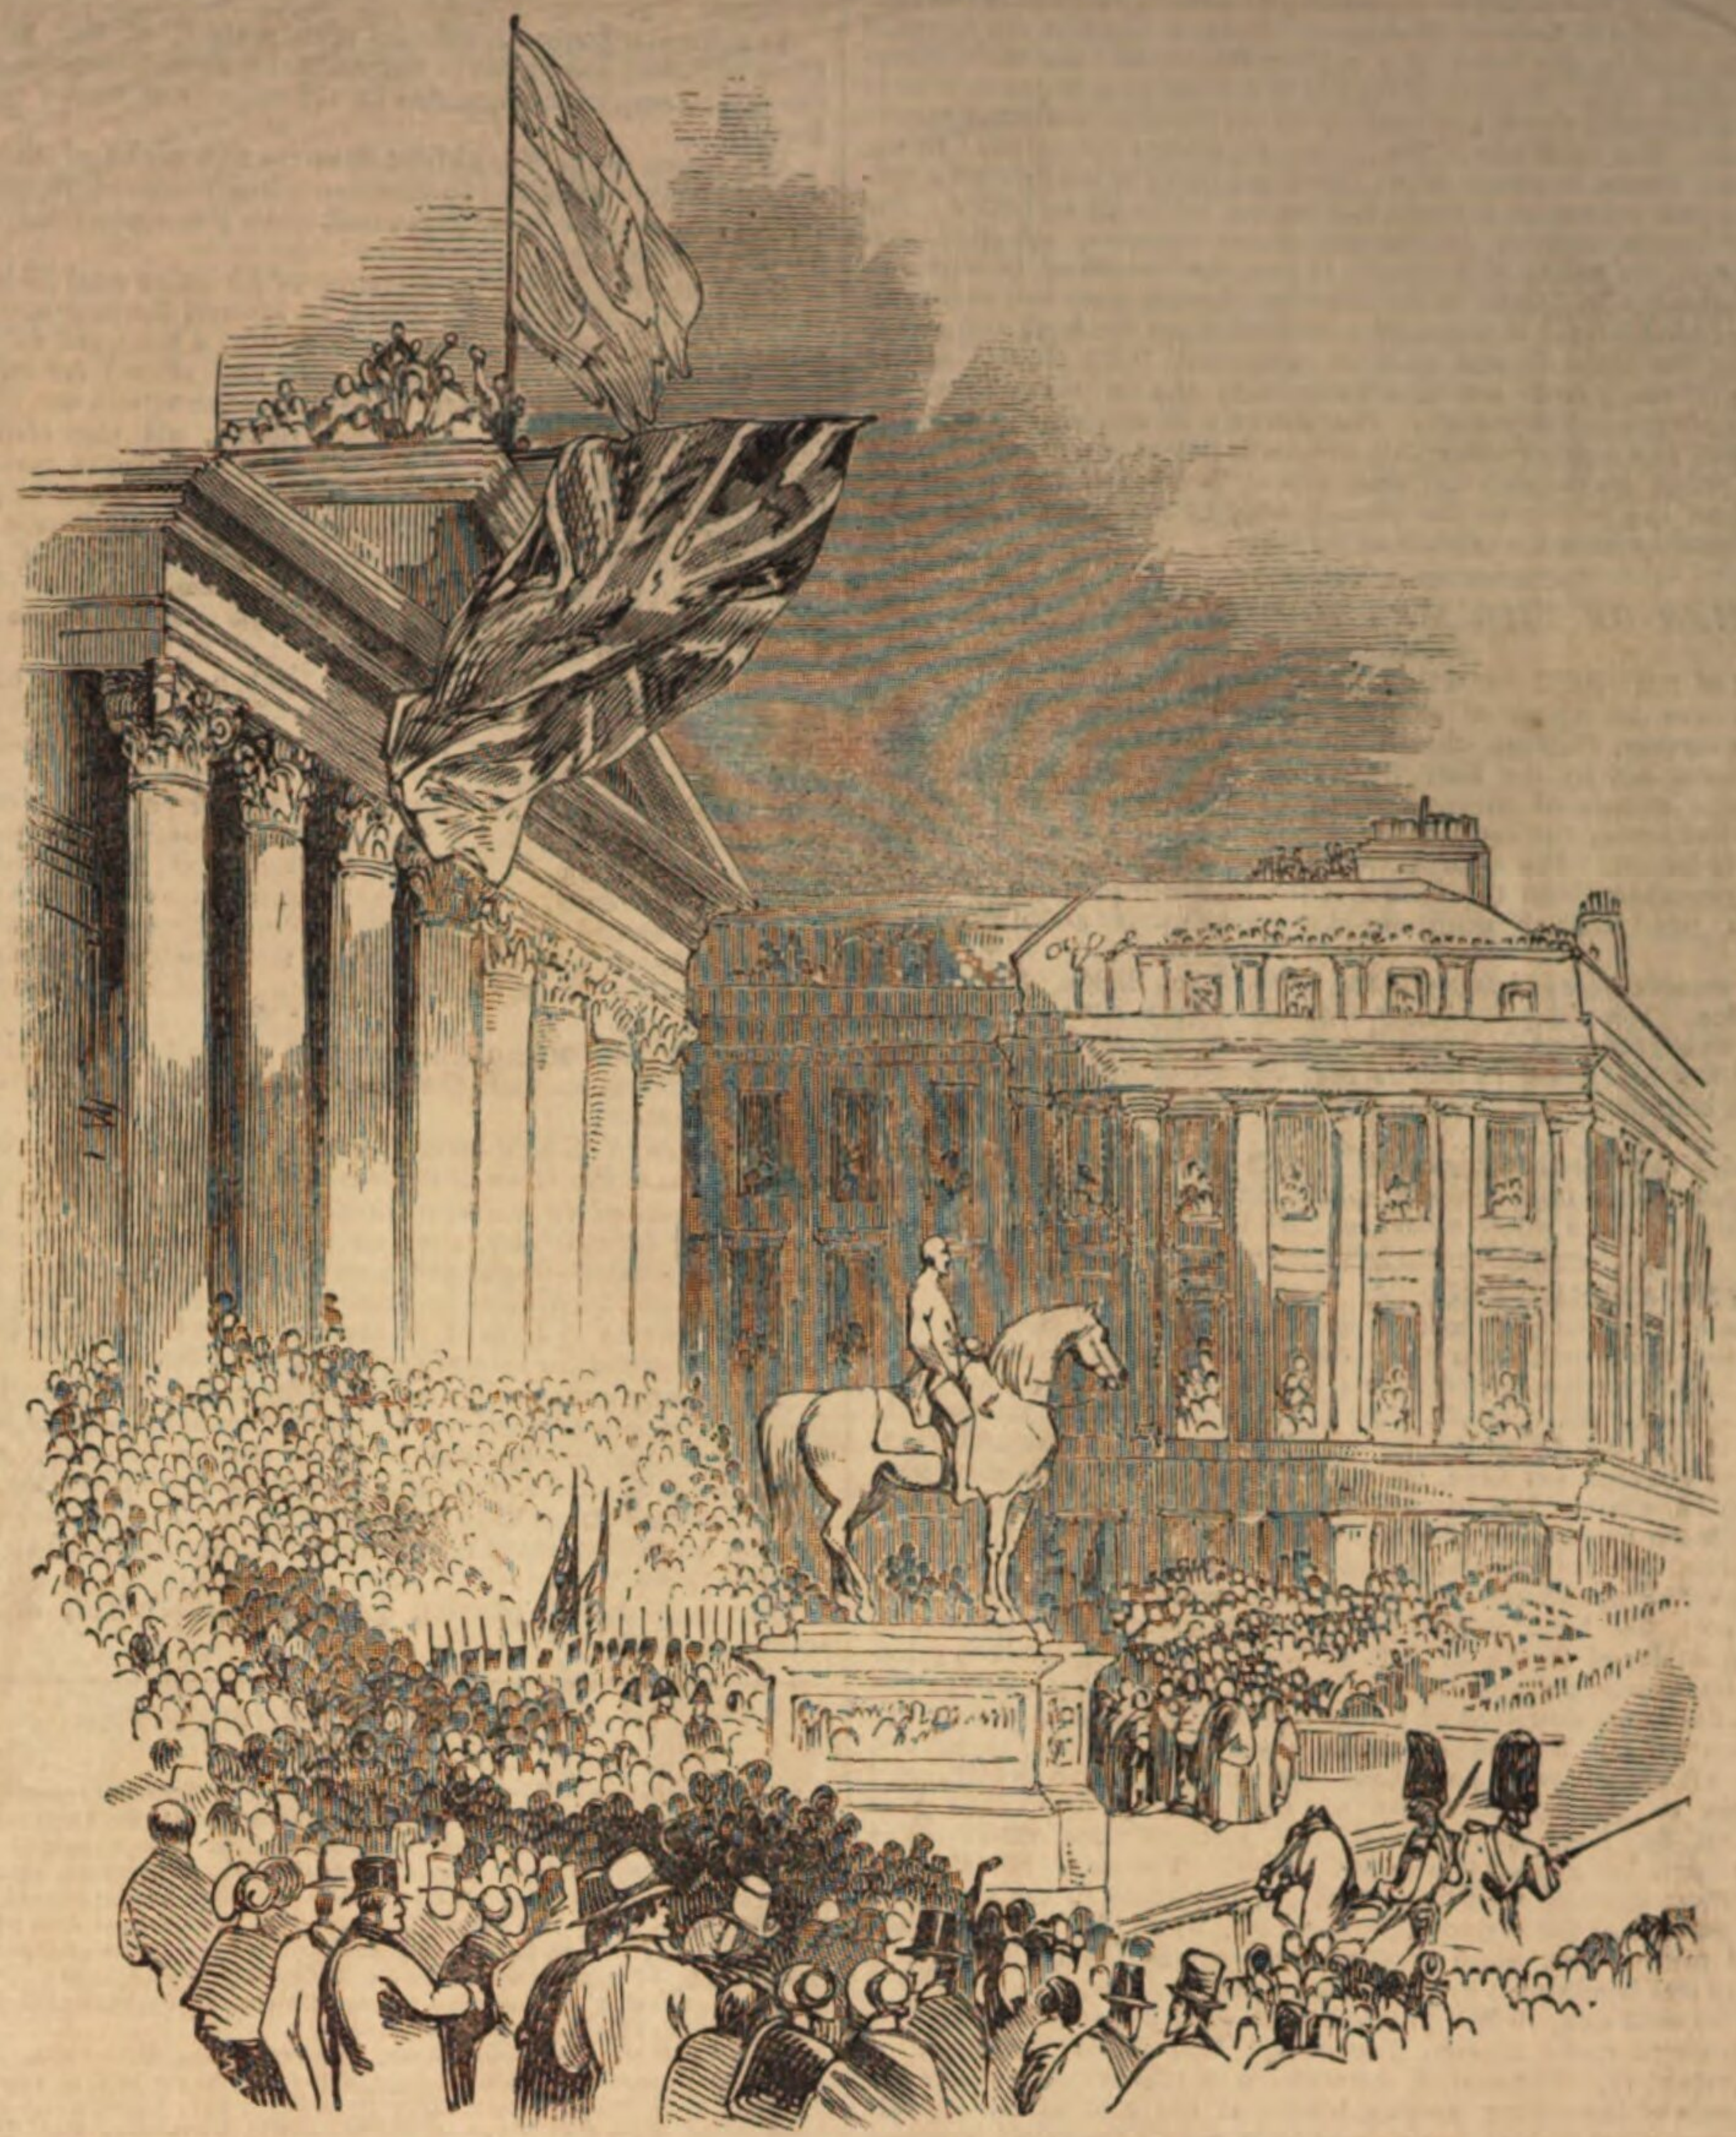
The situation is one of delightful retirement, and has called forth the following lines from a correspondent:—

Oh! dearest Barton! sweet, secluded spot!
How happy is the tranquil, peaceful lot
Of those who 'neath thy roof-tree shelter find,
And taste of rural bliss, by Heav'n design'd
To purify the heart, and raise the soul
Above the cold world's selfish, stern controul.
Although no regal pageantry be thine,
The azure skies of summer brightly shine
Upon thy lofty chimneys' tow'ring height,
Or tinge them with the evening's ruddy light;
Bright beacon to the cottager's rude home,
As to their own firesides they thronging come.
Serene abode of peace, of love, and joy,
Of pleasures which the heart can never cloy!
Thy shady walks, embowered in ancient trees,
Which wave their welcome to the ocean breeze;
Thy verdant lawns, of purest em'rald green,
With flow'rs bedecked, a lovely scene
Of ever-smiling happiness, disclose
Where Royalty might taste a sweet repose! M. E. R.



"WILKES'S COTTAGE," ISLE OF WIGHT.

Our second "Nook" is the cottage pointed out as once the residence of the celebrated, or rather notorious, John Wilkes. It stands contiguous to Sandown Fort, built to command the wide-spreading bay of the same name. The cottage is, indeed, a charming seclusion, and, to Wilkes, must have been a delightful retreat from mob popularity; and would have proved so, especially after the patriot became, to use his own words, "A fire burned out."



INAUGURATION OF THE WELLINGTON STATUE, GLASGOW.

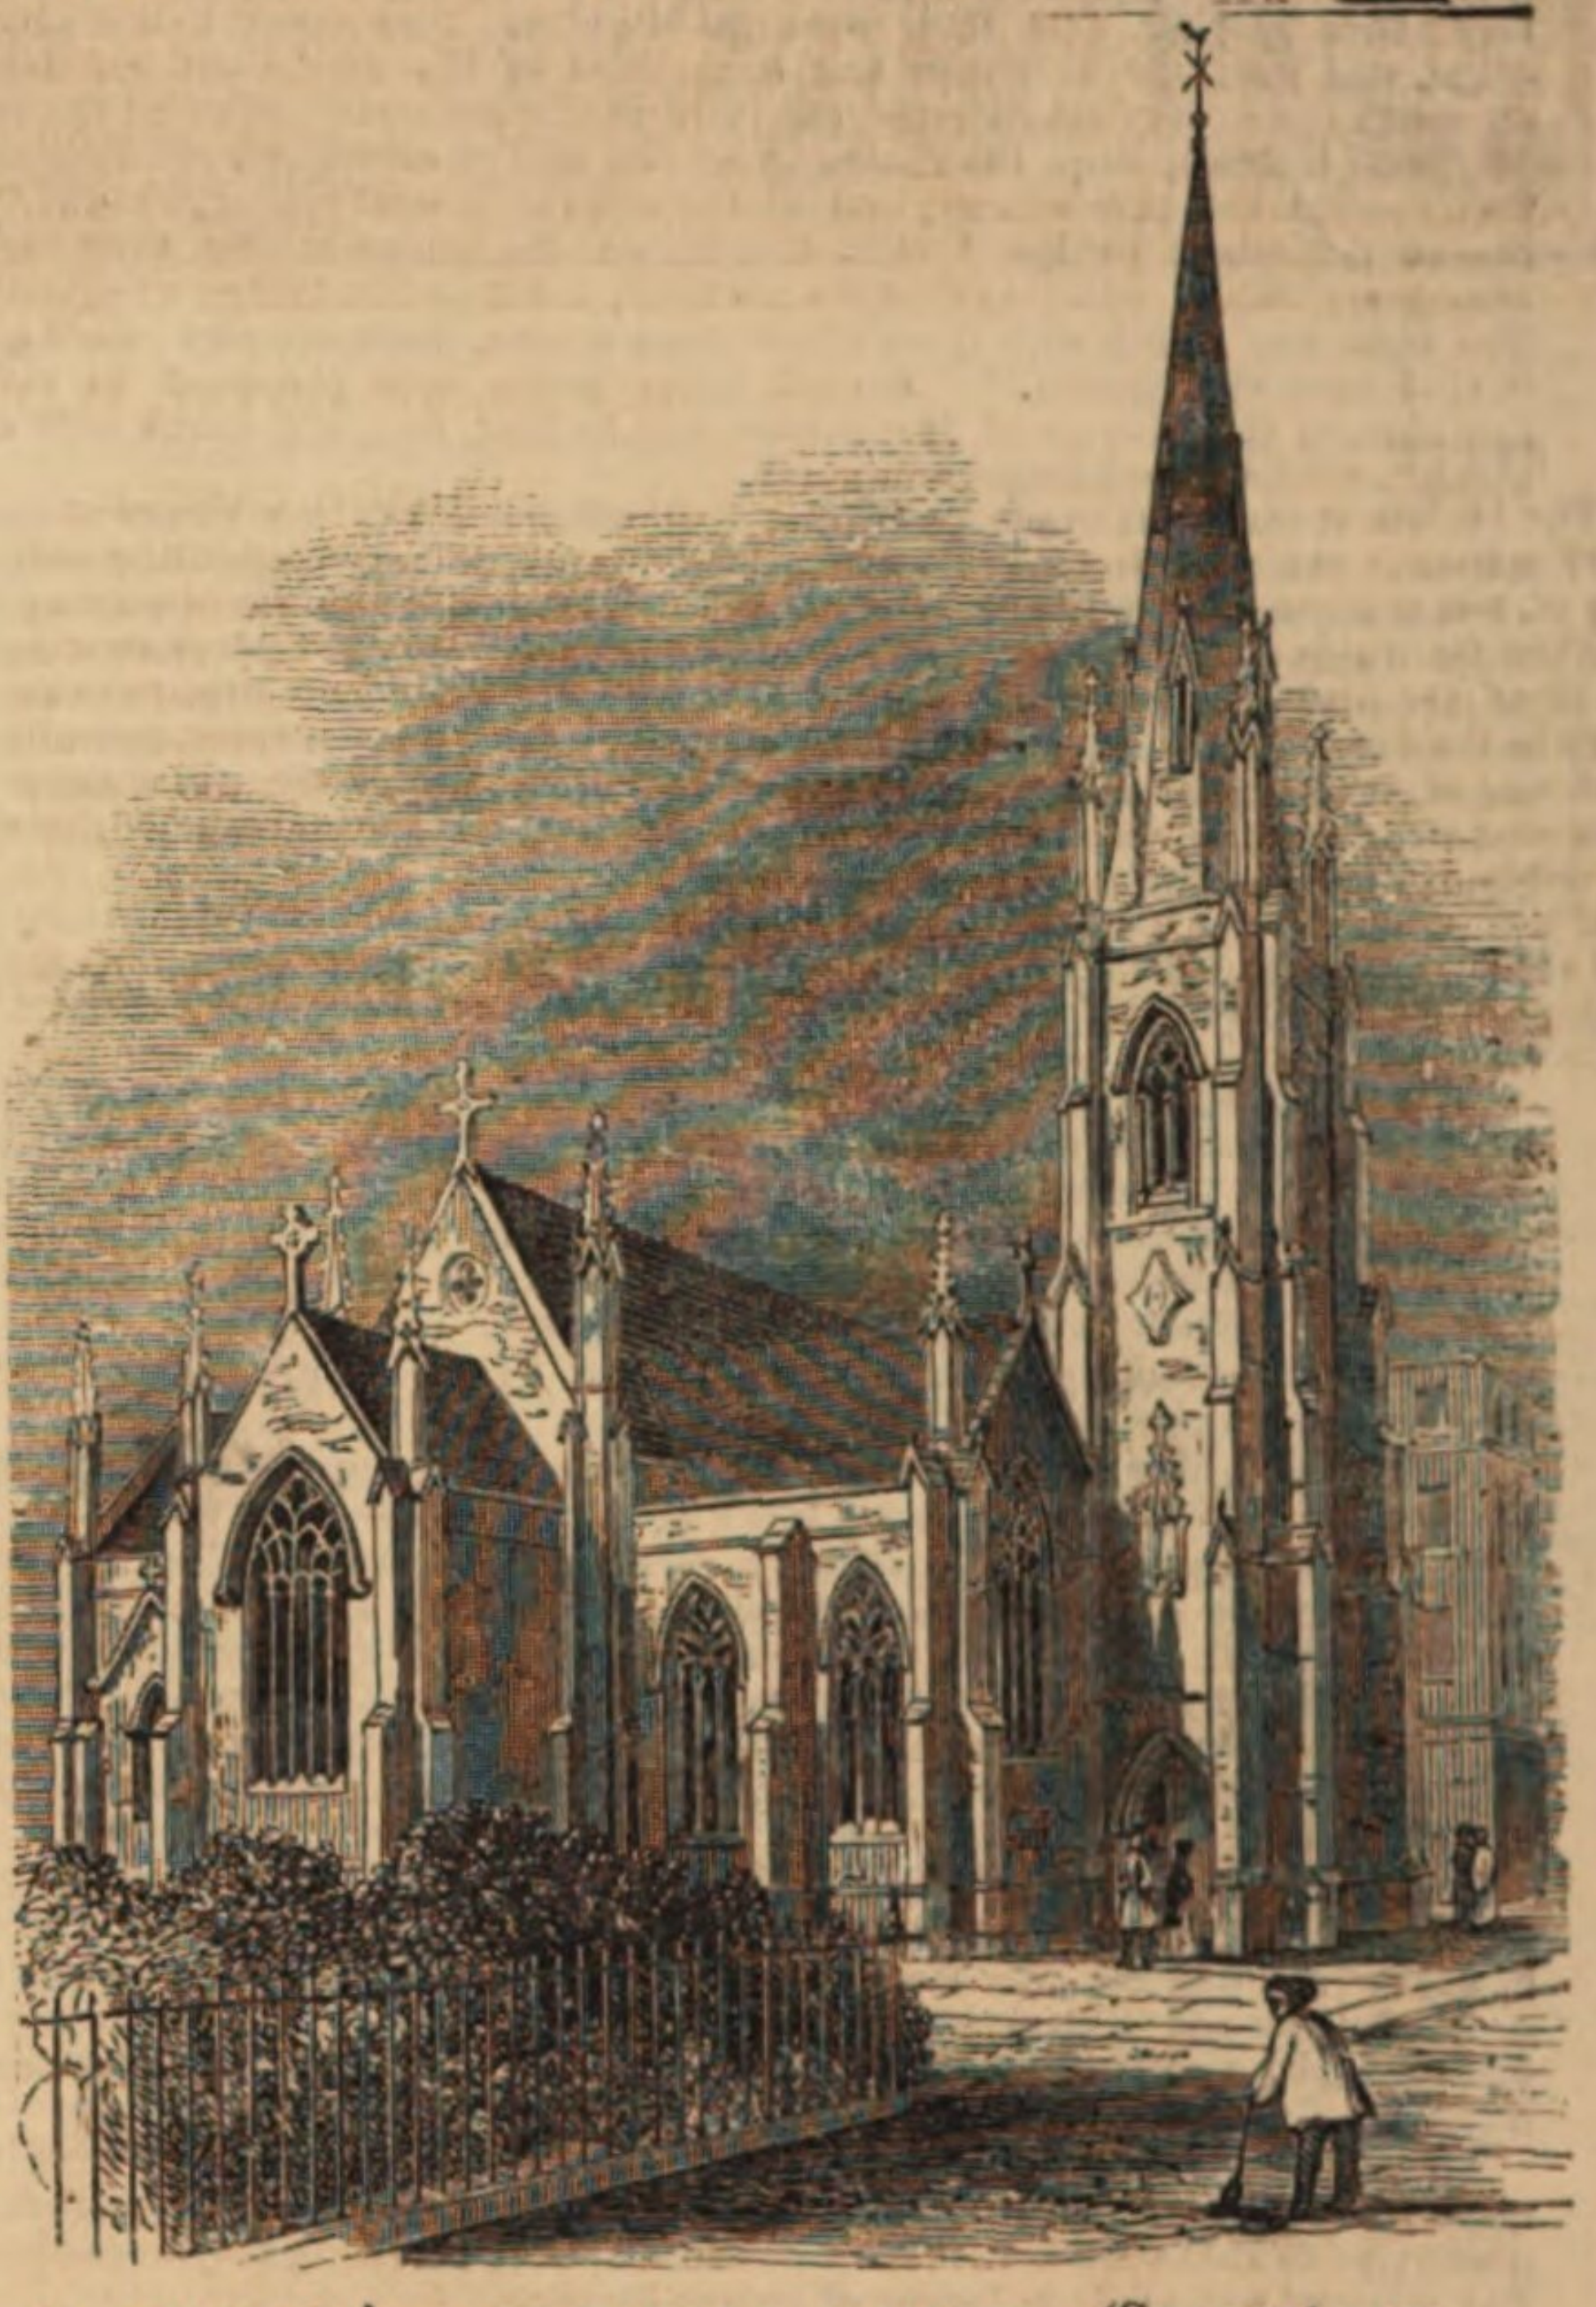
INAUGURATION OF THE EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON AT GLASGOW.

This magnificent testimonial to the high deserts of the Illustrious Duke well bespeaks the gratitude and liberality of the citizens of Glasgow. Its erection was decided on at an influential public meeting, in the spring of 1840; and within a few months the subscriptions amounted to nearly £10,000—several of the business firms and noblemen and gentlemen in Glasgow and the west of Scotland having contributed sums varying from £300 to £100 each. A deputation of the subscribers then waited upon the Duke of Wellington, at Apsley-House, and communicated their intention to his Grace.

After long and most anxious deliberation, the acting committee, on the 30th of November, 1841, resolved to nominate Charles, Baron Marochetti of Vaux, in the Department of Seine-et-Oise, in France, as the artist to design and erect the statue, with the illustrative bas reliefs, on the pedestal, representing the battles of Assaye and Waterloo.

The Baron, in due course, completed the important work assigned to him; and a granite pedestal having been executed to the satisfaction of all, by Mr. Jas. Smith, architect, the statue arrived in Glasgow on Friday, the 27th ult., the noble and accomplished artist having arrived a few days previously. It was transmitted from Havre to Liverpool, and conveyed from thence to the Clyde in the Admiral steam-ship, which had been gratuitously placed at the disposal of the committee by Messrs. Thomson and Macconnell, the enterprising owners. Several documents and coins, contained in two large crystal bottles, constructed for the purpose, were then deposited in the pedestal, previous to the 8th inst., the day fixed for the inauguration of the statue. The bas reliefs and other decorations were then inserted in the pedestal, upon which the statue itself was placed on Saturday, before the opening. The site has been felicitously chosen in front of the Royal Exchange.

The inauguration was fixed for two o'clock; but long before that hour all the streets in the neighbourhood of the Exchange were densely crowded, and the utmost anxiety was evinced by all to obtain what were considered the most prominent positions for observation. The ground immediately round the front of the Exchange had been staked and roped in; but these barriers were soon disregarded, and the arrangements of the Committee got so confused at the commencement that they were never afterwards retrieved. The scene was very imposing; for various banners flaunted in the vicinity, and every house-top and window from which a view could be obtained, was filled with anxious gazers. About two o'clock, Sheriff Alison; Sir Neil Douglas, the Commander of the Forces; the Lord Provost of Glasgow; and Colonel Fleming, ascended a temporary elevation in front of the statue; and after a brief address had been delivered by the learned Sheriff, the signal was given, and the covering which had hitherto concealed the statue of the Hero and Statesman was lifted up by means of block and tackle affixed to the summit of the portico of the Exchange. The opening was greeted by a round of enthusiastic cheering, and succeeded by the booming of the guns of the artillery, which had been placed in Bell's Park and which signalised the moment of the inauguration to every part of the city.



ST. MICHAEL'S NEW CHURCH, PIMLICO.—(See next page.

Immediately after the statue stood uncovered, the Scots Greys, at present in Glasgow, passed in slow marching time, preceded by their band, and saluted as they approached. The 92nd Highlanders followed, accompanied by their band playing "The Garb of Old Gaul," and also saluted. Then came the Artillery with their guns. The military part of the procession was closed by a fully armed and fine body of old pensioners in their new uniforms, amounting to upwards of 200. Many of them were decorated with medals, and had shared the career of the great Duke in the heady fight or the lonely bivouac. As the veterans passed, they were greeted with a most cordial cheer. Thereafter the Lord Provost ascended the temporary elevation, and proposed three cheers for Baron Marochetti, the artist of a work which will be considered the greatest ornament that Glasgow can boast of. The cheers were given with right good will, and modestly acknowledged by the Baron, who bowed respectfully to the assembly before him. The crowd then gradually broke up.

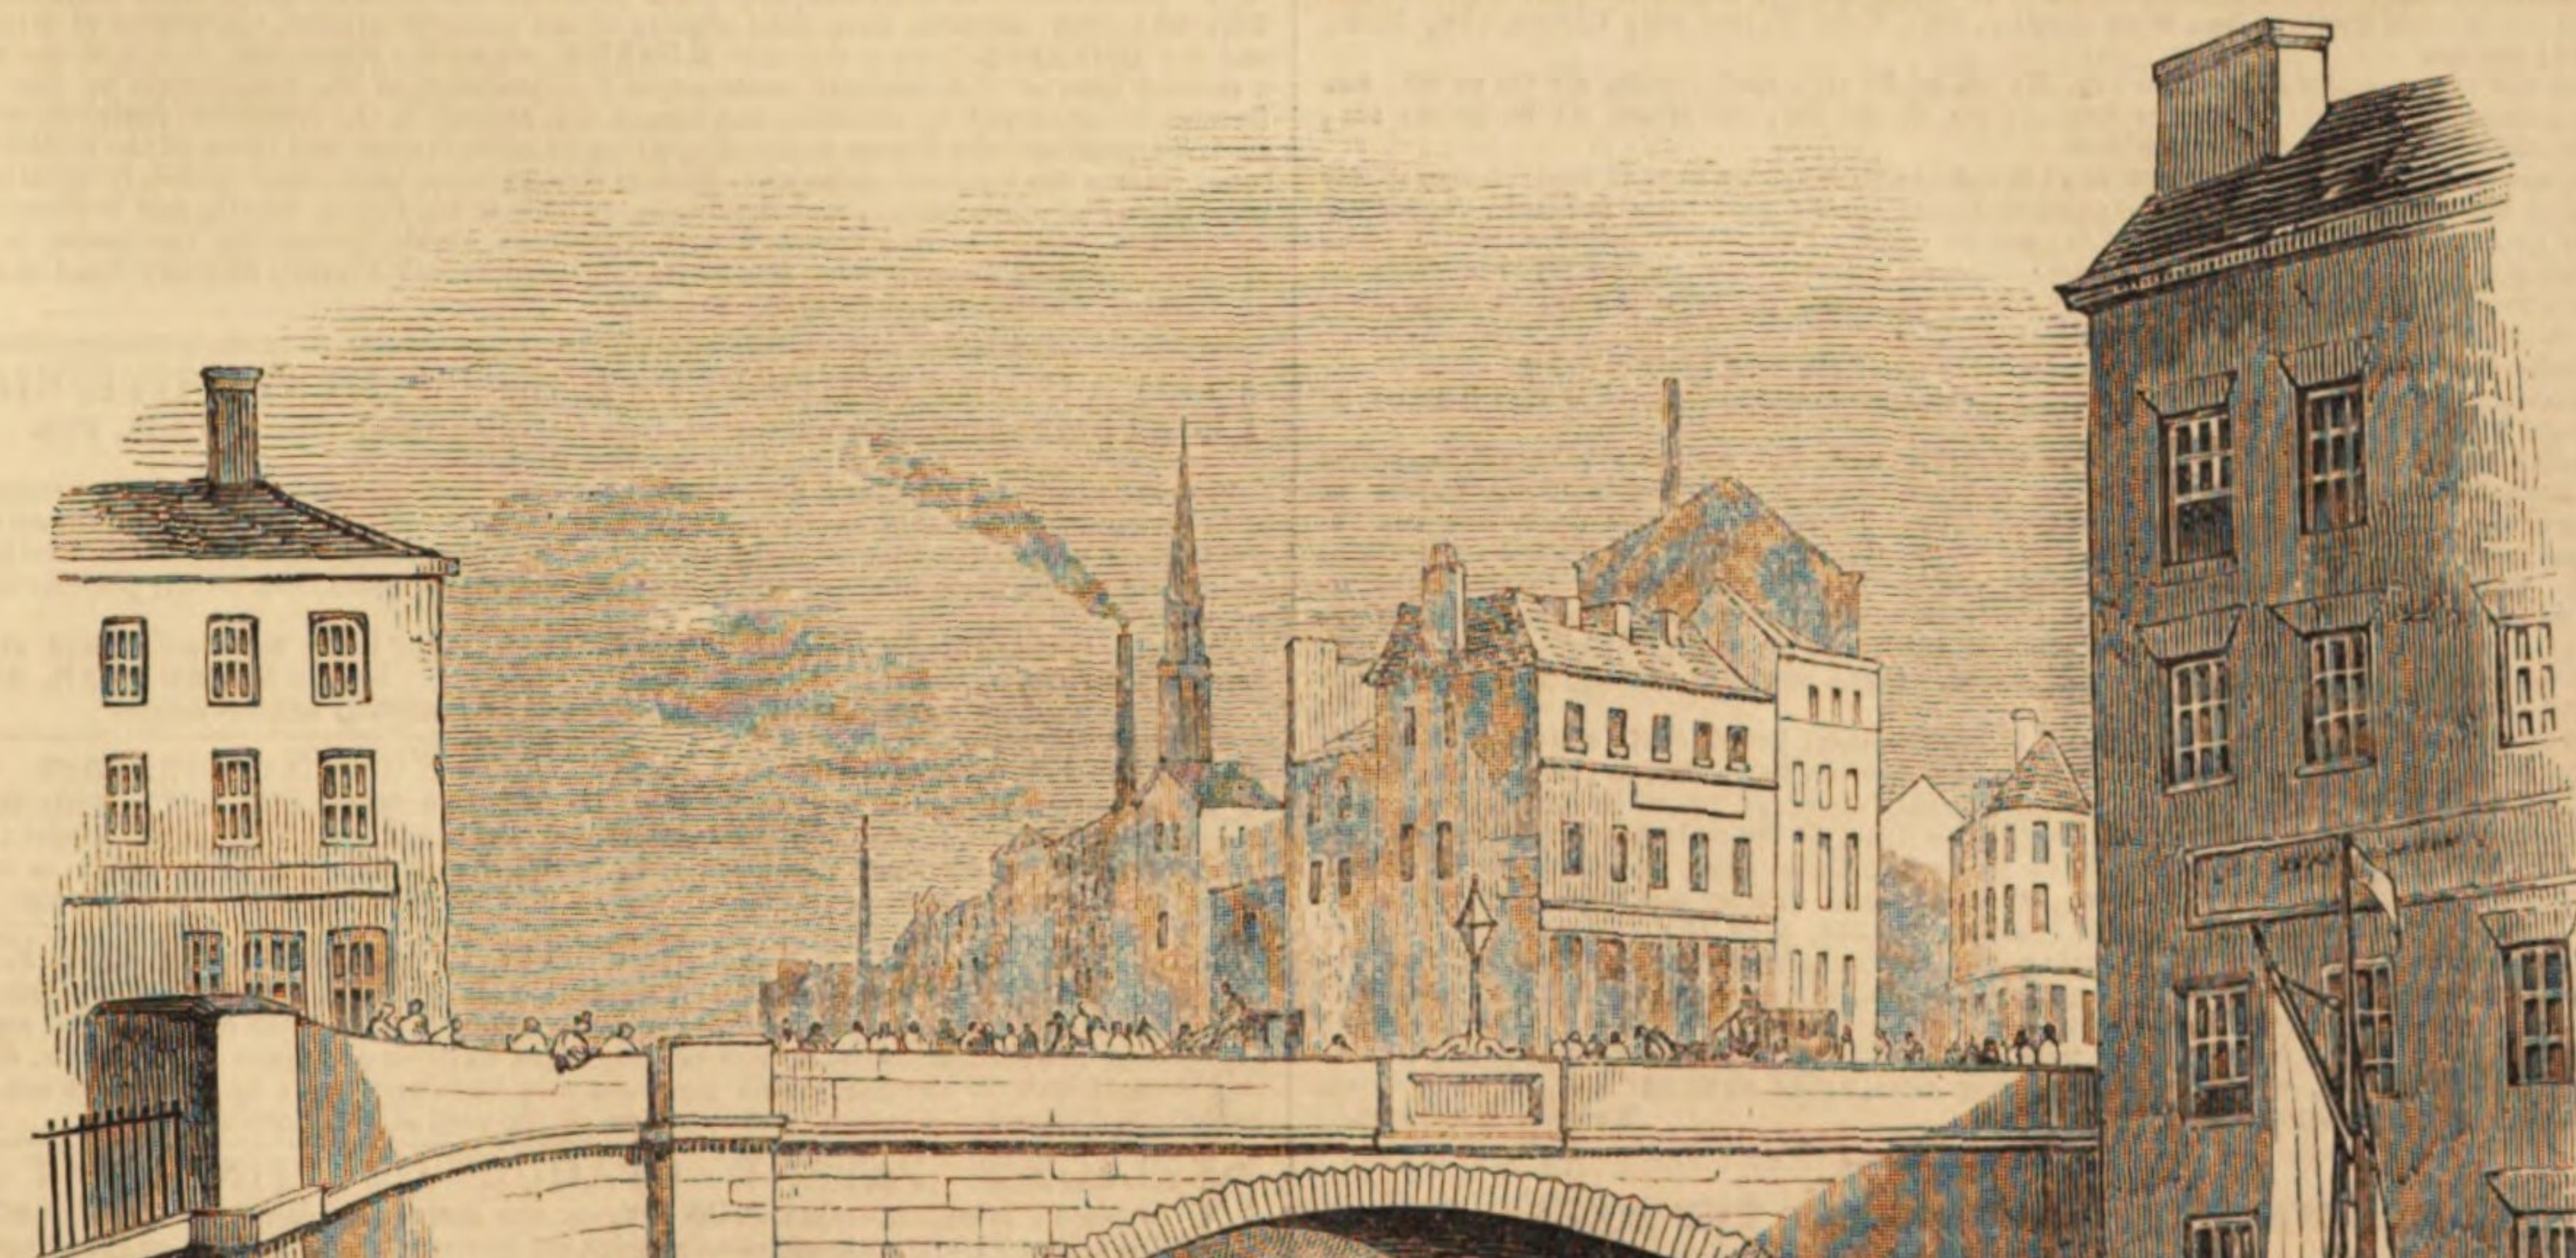
We subjoin the details of this highly commended work of art:—

THE STATUE.

The pedestal, which is of Peterhead granite, is 8½ feet high. On this, the statue is placed, resting on a floor of bronze. The horse has just come to a state of repose and seems as if listening to some distant sound. The head is that of an Arab, with the broad forehead and wide nostrils, and is standing with fore foot a little in advance, in an easy posture, the reins lying slack. The position of the Duke is that of a General reviewing his troops. The likeness is taken when the Duke was in the prime of life, and been declared by his Grace's brother, Lord Cowley, to be perfect. The hero is dressed in the full uniform of a Field Marshal, with his different orders.

THE BAS RELIEFS.

These are placed on the south and north sides of the pedestal, and rep



ALBERT BRIDGE, MANCHESTER.—See next page.

the first and last victories of the Duke, namely, that of Assaye, fought on 23rd September, 1803, and Waterloo, on the 18th June, 1815.

The scene to the left of the relief, in the victory of Assaye, represents the submission of the native chief to Colonel Wellesley. There is likewise the figure of a Highland soldier, leading the horse of a captive Prince, and one of Wellington's staff introducing him. Colonel Wellesley is represented in the middle of the bas relief, on a beautiful steed, and holding up his hand, in the act of receiving the submission. The right side of the picture represents the battle. In the foreground are two horses, in strong relief, drawing a piece of artillery on a carriage. Behind the gun the troops are seen to advance, led on by an officer. The background is, of course, entirely Asiatic, and shows mosques, minarets, &c.

In the bas relief of the Battle of Waterloo, is seen the Church of Waterloo to the left, with Hougomont, in flames. in the distance—broken guns and carriages, &c. The moment seized upon is supposed to be that when the final charge was ordered, and when the Duke is said to have exclaimed, "Up Guards and at them!" A party of the guards are in advance, with the Duke in the centre, mounted, and wearing a military cloak. The Marquis of Anglesey (a very fine likeness), Lord Hill, and another officer, all mounted, follow in a group.

The small bas reliefs on the east and west ends of the pedestal represent the soldier's return, and the soldier at the plough, after all his labours, and after having saved his country from the inroads of the foe.

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.—No. XLIX.

NEW CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL, PIMLICO.

This church is now in course of erection from the design of Mr. Thomas Cundy, of Chester-square, Pimlico, wherein the edifice is situate.

The first stone was laid by the Earl Grosvenor, on the 20th of May, in the present year. It is calculated to accommodate 1200 persons, 800 seated in pews, and 400 in free seats: the cost will be £8900, including a lofty tower and spire, of 150 feet in height. The style of architecture is that termed Decorated Gothic, such as prevailed about the middle of the 14th century. The exterior of the building is faced with Kentish rag-stone, with qucins and dressings of Bath stone.

There is still a considerable deficiency in the funds to enable the committee to complete the edifice. The amount already raised has been entirely by private subscription, to which the Earl Grosvenor has munificently contributed £5000. The site is the gift of his lordship's father, the Marquis of Westminster. The incumbent of the church will be the Rev. James Gibson, late minister of the Lock Chapel.

We regret to add, that the building of the church-tower has been suspended by order of the Admiralty, until the Semaphore on Chelsea College has been altered, the working of which would otherwise have been interrupted.

THE ALBERT BRIDGE, MANCHESTER.

This handsome bridge has just been erected on the site of the late New Bailey Bridge, across the Irwell, from Bridge-street, Manchester, to New Bailey-street, Salford; the old bridge having been closed to the public on the 26th of June last year, and wholly taken down, after having stood 59 years that month.

The first stone of the new Albert Bridge was laid, we believe, in August, 1843; and the keystone of the arch was fixed, by Mr. William Garnett, with some ceremonial, on the 5th June last. The footpath on the north side of the bridge was opened to the public on Friday, the 16th of August; and the bridge was wholly opened to the public for carriages and foot passengers, on Thursday, the 26th ult., having occupied about thirteen months in its erection. The bridge, from the level of the water, has been erected under the superintendence of Mr. C. Carrington, bridgemaster of the hundred of Salford, and the structure is generally admired for its massive and substantial character, and spacious carriage and footways. It is a fine stone structure of a single arch (the segment of a circle), the span of which is 110 feet 9¼ inches on the skew, but on the square, 106 feet. The arch springs from about the level of the water, and has a rise thence to the inner centre of the arch, of 20 feet; that centre being about 30 feet higher than the bed of the river. The thickness of the arch in masonry is about 3 feet. The arch (which was completed in the short space of six weeks, from the first stone to the keystone) is built of Bolton stone, and the keystone measures 5ft., by 3ft. 6in., and 1ft. 8in.; it weighs about 3 tons. The width of the bridge within the battlements is 60 feet, of which 40 feet is occupied by the carriage way, and the remainder by a spacious footpath on each side, 10 feet in width. Messrs. Sugden and Redfern were the sub-contractors, under Messrs. Bowers and Murray, of Liverpool, for the whole of the stonework. The cost of the erection of this bridge is solely defrayed from the funds of the county, and we believe it has cost nearly £9000. Besides this, the approaches in Manchester have been greatly improved, at a cost to the township of upwards of £3000; and its approaches on the Salford side will probably amount to upwards of £1000.

The bridge is certainly a noble and spacious structure, of plain but massive character: in the centre of each battlement, a large and neat cast-iron lamp-pillar is placed, the cross-piece of which contains, in gilt letters, the words "Albert Bridge." The lamps are eight-light burners, fitted, under the directions of Mr. Rose, superintendent of the Manchester fire-brigade, with his admirable Rose-lights.

The ceremonial of opening the bridge was an interesting spectacle; the structure was decorated with the national flags, and in the centre of the north footpath was placed a table furnished with refreshments, and in front, two chairs for the speakers of the day. The Salford authorities first crossed the bridge; then, the Manchester authorities advanced, and the two municipal processions met and passed on the centre of the bridge, the Mayors of Manchester and Salford met, for the first time on any public occasion, and saluted each other, the military bands playing. On their worships alighting, they shook hands with each other, and with the aldermen and councillors of the neighbour borough, and also with the county magistrates, the third public body assembled on the bridge. William Garnett, esq., the chairman of the bridge-committee of magistrates, then opened the proceedings, and at the close of a neat speech, drank, "Success to the Albert Bridge." Mr. Carrington, the bridge-master, then dashed a wine-glass, full of wine, against the parapet; and thus the bridge was christened. The toast was drunk with three times three cheers, both military bands playing "God save the Queen." Several other toasts were proposed. in excellent speeches by the Mayors of Manchester and Salford, &c., and drunk with enthusiasm, and the proceedings terminated.

It was stated that some gentleman had offered £2 to the owner of any cart which should pass first over the bridge after the mayors' carriages. In consequence of this intimation, a long line of carts, laden with people, were in waiting on the Salford side of the bridge: but a donkey cart, the only one that started from the Manchester side, got clear over before the heavier carts had gained the centre of the bridge, amidst the loud laughter and cheering of a great concourse of people, amongst whom it was gravely discussed whether a donkey cart was a cart.

In the evening, the bridge was, for the first time, illuminated by the "Rose light." The effect was exceedingly good.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

We are glad to hear that Sir William Follett, who is now at Naples, has received much benefit from the climate of Italy; so much so, that he has dispensed with the attendance of his medical adviser, Dr. Bright. It is however deemed necessary for the entire restoration of Sir William's health that he should remain some months longer in the genial climate of the south, so it is probable that he will not come to England before February.

The celebrated Spanish historian Don Martin Fernandez Navarete died on the 8th inst., at Madrid.

At the last sitting of the States of Hungary, the proposition of extending the land-tax to the nobles was rejected by a majority of 33 to 13.

A fire broke out at Clausthal, a mining town in the Hartz Forest in Hanover, on the 16th of last month, which in the short space of a few hours destroyed a church and several public offices, swept away 213 dwelling-houses and a great number of stables and barns, and left 3000 of the inhabitants without a roof to shelter them from the rigour of a northern winter, to which the town of Clausthal, owing to its situation on the top of a mountain, is particularly exposed.

News has been received from Vienna of the death of Alma, the only grand-daughter left by the distinguished poet Goethe. The young lady was in her 17th year, and her premature decease is very much lamented not only by her own relations and acquaintances, but also by those numerous admirers of her distinguished ancestor, who take a deep interest in everybody bearing his great name.

In the first days of the present month, an attempt at revolt was made in Servia. A band crossed the Saave into the district of Chabaez, took possession of that town and its town-house, but troops arriving they were dispersed. The attempt was made in favour of Prince Milosch.

The Paris papers state that the marriage of the Duke d'Aumale will certainly take place in November at Naples. On his return to Paris, the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale will occupy apartments at the Tuileries. M. Fontaine, the architect, had suggested the idea of placing the Palais-Royal at the disposal of their Royal Highnesses; but as the King holds to having all his children near him he refused to assent to such a project.

On the 29th ult. an experimental trip was made on the first line of railroad which is completed from Warsaw to Vienna. Prince and Princess Paskewitch, and a distinguished circle, proceeded by the train. The trial was perfectly successful.

A large and influential Conservative firm in Manchester have announced a voluntary intention of advancing the wages of their workpeople 10 per cent.

Accounts from Leipzic, of the 12th inst., announce the conclusion of the principal wholesale business of the great fair. Skins and furs do not appear to have been in very brisk demand, few of the foreign buyers taking largely. Sheep's wool was in much request; cotton manufactures sold well as regards those of the Zollverein, but English were in less favour. The supply was large. Woollen fabrics were best supported in value. Linens had a satisfactory sale, and hosiery was bought to a large amount.

The Munich Gazette announces that Fanny Ellsler was expected to appear at the Opera of that city.

The inauguration of a monument in memory of Göethe was to take place at Frankfort, on Tuesday last, with great pomp and ceremony.

The Prince Charles Anslem of Tour and Taxis died at Prague on the 8th instant, at the age of fifty-two. This nobleman was a second cousin of the Prince of Tour and Taxis, who partook of the splendid hospitalities of the Duke of Beaufort, at Badminton, last season.

It is now fixed that a winter gaol delivery shall take place, but it is believed that the subsidiary arrangements will not be made till the beginning of Term.

It appears from an official return that, at the end of August last, there had been completed in Germany 475 French leagues of railroads, and that the capital employed amounted to 136 millions of florins (about 272 millions of francs).

We learn from Frankfort that on the night of the 4th instant there were destructive fires in two Austrian villages, named Hennesdorf and Arnsdorf. Nearly 250 houses were consumed. At Hennesdorf the church was the only building spared by the flames.

On Tuesday a sale by auction of 85 bales and 38 half-bales of American hay took place at the offices of Messrs. Keeling and Hunt. There were sixteen lots, which realised from 35s. to 96s. a ton—10s. to 20s. higher per ton than the former parcels. There were also offered for sale 10,294lb. of Irish salmon in tins, at 6d. and 7d. per lb., and the article was highly approved of.

In consequence of a general order, all the children belonging to the charitable institutions of Lyons placed at nurse in Savoy have been recalled to France. On Monday last, at Chanaz, 28 of these helpless creatures were placed in a small boat on the Rhone, to be sent to France. But the children, when separated from their nurses, felt such a dread of the water, that they screamed loudly, and rushing to one side of the boat, they capsized it. The two boatmen could not even save themselves, but the Rhone engulfed them in its flood with the 28 children.

A letter from Nantes states that a fisherman of Chinon has just found in a neighbouring canal a statue of gilt metal. It is in good preservation, and is supposed to be of the time of the Romans, one of their camps having been erected near the spot.

A Christiania paper relates that the severe laws of Norway against the Jews have been lately applied in the case of two persons taken up on a charge of swindling. They were fully acquitted, but both were discovered to be Jews, one a chemist of Hamburgh, named Lopez, and the other an optician of Fridericia, named Philipsen. They were thrown into prison in the midst of thieves and malefactors, there to await their sentence, which will condemn them to a fine of 4000 francs, and to be taken out of the kingdom by gendarmes as vagabonds.

The Berlin Journals announce a great rise in the price of cotton goods in Prussia, and add that the manufactures in that country are in the most prosperous state.

Upwards of £3000 have been subscribed for the relief of the widows and children of the Haswell Colliery sufferers.

The Journal de Reims announces the death of M. Houzeau-Muiron, the deputy for that city, after an illness of 15 days. M. Houzeau-Muiron was one of the most distinguished men in France in the industrious arts. He was the person who introduced in France the lighting by portable gas on an improved system, and rose by force of perseverance and industry to the important position in which he stood for several years before his death.

The police authorities of Heidelberg, in the grand duchy of Baden, have, with a view to prevent idleness and drunkenness, issued an order, declaring that any workman who shall be found in a public-house, except at the hour of meals, shall be fined a sum equal to three francs French for the first offence, and be imprisoned three days for a second offence. Public-house keepers are prohibited, on pain of heavy fines, from supplying the workmen with wines or liquors, except at meal time.

The celebrated pianist, Liszt, is at Madrid, and is about to give several concerts.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—Friday.—Since Monday, a full average quantity of English wheat has been received up to our market, hence the stands, to-day, were well filled with samples. In the demand, we can notice no alteration from Monday. The supply of foreign wheat was not large, yet the inquiry for that article was inactive, at previous figures. Of English barley very little was offering; but 14,000 quarters of foreign having arrived, caused the barley trade to rule dull, at barely late rates. The best malt was quite as dear; but in other kinds, very little was doing. Oats, beans and peas supported the prices of Monday.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 6400; barley, 4720; oats, 1900 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 19,360 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3580; barley, 13,800; oats, 6250 quarters. Flour, 3680 sacks. Malt, 2660 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 45s to 50s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 39s to 44s; ditto white, 41s to 48s; rye, 35s to 37s; grinding barley, 28s to 29s; distilling ditto, 30s to 32s; malting ditto, 30s to 33s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 61s; brown ditto, 57s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 61s to 62s; Chevalier, 62s to —s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 22s; potatoe ditto, 21s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 21s; ditto white, 19s to 21s; tick beans, 34s to 36s; old ditto, 34s to 37s; grey peas, 29s to 31s; maple, 31s to 32s; white, 34s to 36s; boilers, 36s to 38s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s; Suffolk, 37s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 44s to 53s; Dantzig, red, 53s to 54s; white, 54s to 56s. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto feed, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 24s to —s per barrel. Town made, —s to —s.

Seed Market.—For linseed and rapeseed we have a very steady sale, at full prices. In all other kinds of seeds, however, very little is doing.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic crushing, 38s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; hempseed, 35s to 38s per quarter; coriander, 15s to 18s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, —s to —s; white ditto, —s to —s; tares, —s to —s per bushel; English rapeseed. £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters; Linseed cakes, English, £10 10s to £11; do., Foreign, £6 15s to £7 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 10s to £6 6s per ton; canary, 54s to 56s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 46s 3d; barley, 34s 0d; oats, 20s 8d; rye, 38s 0d; beans, 36s 9d; peas, 33s 10d.

Six Weeks' Averages that govern Duty.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 34s 6d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 37s 0d; beans, 37s 0d; peas, 33s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 4s; oats, 6s; rye, 5s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 9s 6d.

Tea.—Since the conclusion of the late large public sales, very little business has been transacted in any kind of tea, and prices have a downward tendency.

Sugar.—Fine colory parcels of West India, arising from their scarcity, are selling steadily, at full prices; but with all other kinds of sugar, raw as well as refined, the trade is very dull, and the quotations are with difficulty supported.

Coffee.—For all kinds of coffee, the market has a very flat appearance, yet we have no material alteration to notice in prices. Good ordinary Ceylon is selling at from 51s to 53s per cwt.

Rice.—This article is in steady request at full prices. Good middling white Bengal has sold at 12s per cwt.

Provisions.—Fine brands of new Irish butter have sold readily at, in some instances, a trifle more money; but other kinds are much neglected. Carlows, landed, may be quoted at 78s to 90s; Corks, 80s to 82s; Waterfords, 76s to 81s; Limericks, 78s to 80s; and Sligo, 75s to 77s per cwt. In foreign butter very little is doing. The finest Friezland is held at 96s to 98s per cwt. The bacon market is heavy at drooping figures. All other kinds of provisions are a dull sale.

Oils.—This market still rules inactive, yet prices may be considered about stationary.

Tallow.—The demand is still limited. Old P. Y. C. has sold at 41s; and new, 41s 3d to 41s 6d per cwt. For delivery, the rates are rather lower. Town tallow is scarce at 42s nett cash.

Coals.—(Friday.)—Adair's, 16s 6d; Bell's Hartley, 14s 6d; Carr's Hartley, 18s; Chester Main, 18s 6d; Old Pontop, 15s; West Hartley, 18s; West Wylam, 18s; Gibson, 21s; Hilda, 21s 6d; per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5; fine upland ditto, £5 to £5 8s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 10s; oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 11s to £1 13s, per load.

Hops.—Although the show of new hops is seasonably good, we have to report a very steady demand for the article, and the late improvement in the quotations is readily supported. In old hops, a large business is doing, at extreme rates. The duty is called £130,000. The following are the prices of new qualities:—Sussex pockets, £6 10s to £7 10s; Wealds, £6 18s to £8 0s; Mid Kent, £8 to £10 10s; East Kent, £7 7s to £9 0s; Choice ditto, £10 0s to £12 0s; Farnhams, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Wool.—Fine wools are quite as dear. In other qualities, very little is doing.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes being on the increase, the demand is very inactive, at from £3 to £4 5s per ton.

Smithfield.—Our market of to-day was tolerably well, but not to say heavily, supplied with beasts, the quality of which was very inferior. The primest Scots found buyers, at full prices; but other breeds were a mere drug. There were on sale 100 beasts, and 124 sheep, from Rotterdam, in fair condition; while, from Scotland, 110 Scots came fresh to hand. The numbers of sheep were limited; yet, the mutton trade, owing to the unfavourable weather, was in a sluggish state, at about Monday's quotations. The supply of calves was good, while the sale for that description of stock was very dull, and prices had a downward tendency. In pigs very little was doing. Milch cows sold slowly, at from £16 10s to £19 5s each.

Per 8lbs to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality do. 2s 10d to 3s 4d; prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d: prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves 3s 4d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; sucking calves, 18s to 33s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 714; cows, 170; sheep, 4680; calves, 269; pigs, 370.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We had only a moderate supply of meat on offer, to-day, yet the demand was heavy, on the following terms:—Per 8lb., by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; ditto small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 3s 8d to 3s 10d.

Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Business, on Monday next, the day of her Majesty's visit to the City, will be suspended at the Stock Exchange, and the Stock Department of the Bank of England. The Banking Department of the Bank of England and the Private and Joint Stock Banks will close at twelve o'clock. It will be also a holiday at the various public offices connected with City affairs.

The flatness and general tendency to a depression of prices that marked the past week, have been equally observable during the present. Consols on Monday receded to 99¾, but afterwards improved a point, and ultimately closed at 99⅞ to 100 for time. The opening of Reduced for public transfer gave no impetus to business on the following day, Consols only realizing the previous day's quotation. The market was a shade firmer, on Wednesday, Consols closing at par to 100⅛. Exchequer Bills have begun to be affected by the improvement in the value of money, and quote the reduced price of 71 to 73 premium. At the close of the week Consols again yielded, quoting on 99⅞ to par, money, and 100 for account. Reduced closed at 99. New Three and a Quarter per Cent., 101⅞. Long Annuities, 12 1-16. India Bonds, 93. Exchequer Bills, 71 to 73 prem.

The Foreign Market has been affected by the dullness of the English house, and speculation seems abandoned for the present in Foreign Stocks. Spanish, on Tuesday, advanced a point, but receded the following day to the former price. Belgian Stock has been a little flat, from a rumour that Messrs. Rothschild had taken the loan intended to pay off the liabilities of the old debt due to Holland, according to the financial arrangement made soon after the separation of the two kingdoms. Should this be confirmed, in all probability the Dutch Government will pay off the remainder of their Five per Cent. Stock, instead of converting it. The news on Thursday of the opening of the States-General in Holland was considered satisfactory, but had no particular influence on the Stock, which closed at 62¾ to 63 for the Two-and-a-Half per Cents; Five per Cents., 98⅝; Spanish Actives are 23¾; Three per Cents., 34¾; Mexican, 34⅝; Portuguese, 51; Columbian, 14½.

The general tendency of the Share Market, during the week, has been towards a decline. The value of money maintaining its advance, has materially affected many of the projected lines, especially those requiring a large outlay. The French lines, however, continue well supported, and are firm at their previous quotations. The following are the prices of the shares most dealt in, without reference to premium or discount. Birmingham and Gloucester, 102; Bristol and Exeter, 73½; Bristol and Gloucester, 43½; Caledonian, 4¼; Chester and Holyhead, 6¾; Churnett Valley, 3¾; Eastern Counties (New), 13⅝; Great Western, 137; Birmingham Stock, 212; Brighton, 46¾; South Western, 72¼; Croydon, 16½; Midlands, 106; Dovers, 42; London and York, 3½; Central of France (constituted), 8; Paris and Rouen, 40½; Rouen and Havre, 21¾.

Saturday Morning.—The market was a shade worse yesterday, the Commissioner taking his purchase in Consols at 99⅞. The closing price was 99⅞ for money, and 100 for account. Dutch receded a trifle in the Foreign Market, and Belgian quoted a slight decline. The former closed at 62⅞ for the Two-and-a-Half per Cents.; the latter at 103⅞. In the Railway Market, Birmingham and Gloucester were flat at 101 to 102, and Edinburgh and Glasgow are lower, quoting 59 to 60. The French lines continue firm.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, Oct. 22.

WAR-OFFICE, October 22.—1st Regiment of Life Guards: Assistant-Surgeon T. Tardrew, to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Colclough.

11th Foot: Major J. C. Harold, to be Major, vice Fordyce. 23rd: Captain C. Crutchley to be Major, vice Seymour; Lieutenant W. C. C. Baker to be Captain, vice Crutchley; Second Lieutenant F. T. Brock to be First Lieutenant, vice Baker; C. G. Sutton to be Second Lieutenant, vice Brock. 29th: Lieutenant B. M'Kenzie to be Captain, vice Durbin. 39th: Lieut. E. Croker to be Adjutant, vice Munro. To be Lieutenants: Ensign G. Newport, vice Croker; Ensign H. D. Gaynor, vice Newport; Ensign L. Farrington, vice Gaynor. To be Ensign: J. Agnew, vice Farrington. 40th: Ensign W. C. O'Brien, to be Lieutenant, vice M'Kenzie; Sergeant H. Baxter to be Ensign, vice O'Brien. 44th: Lieutenant B. Fenwick, to be Lieutenant, vice Bradley. 45th: Lieutenant D. W. Tench, to be Captain, vice Lewis; Ensign G. A. C. Kippen, to be Lieutenant, vice Tench; Sergeant-Major J. Morley, to be Ensign, vice Kippen. 74th: Major J. Fordyce, to be Major, vice Harold. 86th: Lieutenant W. Munro, to be Captain, vice Halliday. 92nd: Lieutenant C. E. S. Gleig, to be Adjutant, vice Mackenzie.

Ceylon Rifle Regiment: Lieutenant J. Bradley, to be First Lieutenant, vice B. Fenwick.

BANKRUPTS.—J. WILLETT, Coggeshall, Essex, leather dresser. C. TILL, Salisbury, linen-draper. W. BROOME and W. HARDY, Oxford-street, drapers. W. BROOME, Oxford-street, linen-draper. W. WESTRUP and T. M. COOKSEDGE, New Crane, Shadwell, millers. T. FLAHERTY, Bath, tailor. J. ASHMAN, Bath, innkeeper. M. COOLEY, Spalding, Lincolnshire, tailor.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. HAY, Musselburgh, smith. D. LEACH, Ardesier Inverness shire, merchant. A. MILLER and J. GARDNER, Stirling, manufacturers. D. MACKINTOSH, senior, Grahamstown, Falkirk, painter. W. WEBSTER, Old Meldrum, Aberdeen, merchant.

Friday, Oct. 25.

WAR-OFFICE, Oct. 25.—8th Light Dragoons: Captain D'Oyley W. Battley to be Paymaster, vice W. Jones.

11th Foot: Lieut. J. R. Wilton to be Lieutenant, vice Goold. 19th: Lieut. J. Maguire to be Lieutenant, vice R. A. M. Franklin. 24th: Ensign W. Hartshorn to be Adjutant, vice Williams. 42nd: Lieut. G. W. Macquarie to be Captain, vice Kinlock; Ensign E. F. G. Clavering to be Lieutenant, vice Macquarie; W. J. Cunninghame to be Ensign, vice Clavering. 93rd: Lieut. L. Skyuner to be Lieutenant, vice Pole.

Unattached.—Lieutenant W. Ward to be Captain.

BANKRUPTS.—J. SIMPSON, Stockwell, Surrey, builder. W. WESTRUP and T. M. COCKSEDGE, Shadwell, millers. J. W. CARTER, Long-acre coach-plater. A. FOWLER, Leamington Priors, Warwick, carpenter. J. GOULD, Congresbury, Somersetshire, cattle-salesman. B. JONES, Birmingham, victualler. W. WALKER, Birmingham, hatter.

BIRTHS.

At Aldermanbury, Mrs. Waistell, of a daughter.——At Gunton Park, Norfolk, the Hon. Mrs. Sanderson, of a son.——At Albion Cottage, Downshire-hill, Hampstead, the lady of D. Lloyd Jones, Esq., of a daughter.——The Countess of Sandwich, of a son.——The Countess of Chichester, of a son.——At Dowlais House, Lady Charlotte Guest, of a daughter.——At Matfen, Lady Blackett, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Belfast, Robert Leslie Ogilby, Esq., Dungivan, county of Londonderry, to Elizabeth Matilda, eldest daughter of the late Major Rainey.——At York-road Chapel, George Hepburn, Esq., to Lady Louisa, daughter of the late John Hepburn, Esq.

DEATHS.

At Brighton, Colonel William Spearman, aged 69.—At Gravesend, Mary Elizabeth, wife of Major-General Charles Palmer, aged 60.——At Lower Edmonton, J. A. Chappell, Esq., in the 74th year of his age.——At St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Samuel Tertius Galton, Esq., of Duddeston House, and of Leamington, Warwickshire, in the 62nd year of his age.——On the 20th inst., aged 45, at his residence, 12, Tavistock-place, Russell-square, Mr. George Horncastle, of the Theatre Royal Drury Lane.——At Broadstairs, after a short illness, Sarah Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Hougham Hudson, Esq., of the Civil Service, Cape of Good Hope.——At Broadstairs, after a protracted illness, Elizabeth Ann, the wife of Hougham Hudson, Esq., of the Civil Service, Cape of Good Hope, aged 48.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after Eight o'clock on Thursday Evening.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE, Open every Evening, with its unequalled rotation of Equestrian, Dramatic, and Gymnastic Entertainments.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—MONDAY, Oct. 28th, and during the week, at Seven o'Clock, Sir Walter Scott's Equestrian Tale of LOCHINVAR; or, the Bridal of Netherby, and Steed of the Brave. Splendid unequalled Scenes of the Circle, and acts of Horsemanship. Concluding with the Popular Spectacle of THE BLOOD RED KNIGHT; or, the Warriors of Palestine.—In preparation, a novel Spectacle, from the pen of W. T. Moncrieff, Esq., portraying Life's Course of Man and Horse.—Acting and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot.—Box Office open from Eleven till Five—Lessons in the art of Riding, daily, by Mr. R. Smith.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The POISONS and their ANTIDOTES.—PRUSSIC ACID is the subject of Dr. Ryan's present Lecture at Half-past Three daily, and in the Evenings of Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at a Quarter before Nine o'clock. Professor Bachhoffner's varied Lectures commence at Half-past Twelve o'clock daily, and in the Evenings of Tuesday and Thursday. All the Lectures abound in interesting experiments. The PROTEOSCOPE illustrates the passions from Collin's Ode, by Pictures, with Vocal and Instrumental Music. Extraordinary effects by the magnifying power of the PHYSIOSCOPE and the OPAQUE MICROSCOPE; the HYDRO ELECTRIC MACHINE, DIVING BELL, and DIVER, with experiments; various interesting additions to the Museum. The present Dissolving Views will be shortly withdrawn. Admission 1s.; Schools, half-price.

CHINESE COLLECTION, Hyde Park Corner.—Open Daily from Ten till Dusk, and from Seven to Ten.—Admission, One Shilling.—This SALOON contains numerous objects of the greatest interest, illustrative of CHINA and the CHINESE; and is the only MUSEUM where the visitor can obtain, at one view, a correct idea of the manners, customs, and appearance of the Inhabitants of that vast Empire, as conveyed by portraits, the size of life, attired in the respective costumes of the rank represented—the higher orders displaying a lavish luxury, and those of the middle and lower classes the strictest economy. Several figures have lately been added, illustrative of their modes of punishment; and the Saloon (which is 240 feet in length, and brilliantly lit up every Evening) is also enriched with numerous highly interesting specimens in the different scientific departments. His Royal Highness Prince Albert's Military Band attends on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL for the DESTITUTE SICK and DISEASED, Gray's-inn-road, (late Greville-street.) Founded A.D., 1828.
Patron—The QUEEN.

Patients admitted, night and day, without letters of recommendation. In consequence of the number of wretched applicants crowding the gates of this Hospital, the Committee feel it their imperative duty to make the most urgent appeal to the public for continued support to enable them to admit and relieve the distressing cases that hourly present themselves.

Contributions are kindly received at the various bankers' in the metropolis; and at the Secretary's-office, by the Rev. R. C. PACKMAN, Sec.

Cast off apparel, male and female, will be gratefully acknowledged.

OBTAINABLE for NOTHING.—The Nervous are respectfully invited to send to the Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELEY, 9, Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, London, for the small Pamphlet just published, on his most successful treatment of Mind or Nervous Complaints, by which he cures them as certainly as water quenches thirst, which Pamphlet he will return, if a stamp is inclosed, free of charge.

PATENT LIFE PRESERVING COATS and JACKETS, for the PREVENTION of DROWNING.—This important invention is worthy of every person's attention, especially those who are about to embark for foreign parts, and all engaged in nautical pursuits, in case of Shipwreck or other accidents on the water, which may be met with in skating. This invention may be always ready for immediate use.—R. WILSON, Tailor, &c., Inventor and Patentee, 30, Edward-street, Portman-square.

NELSON'S PATENT OPAQUE GELATINE, Half the Price of Isinglass.—CAUTION: From the increasing demands for NELSON'S OPAQUE GELATINE, many spurious articles are imposed on the Public; to guard against which, and for a protection to purchasers, it is sold in packets only, by most respectable chemists, grocers, and oilmen, in town and country, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s., and 15s. each packet, bearing the Patentee's signature. Extract from Dr Ure's testimonial. June 6, 1840:—"I find Mr. G. Nelson's Patent Opaque Gelatine to be at least equal in strength and purity, if not superior, to the best isinglass, for every culinary purpose; it is entirely free from any impregnation of acid, such as I have found to exist in other kinds of Gelatine in the London market." The Opaque Gelatine is an article well adapted for hotels, taverns, cabin use and ship stores, and a safe and profitable commodity for exportation.—Emscote Mills, Warwick; and 14, Bucklersbury.

COD LIVER OIL.—Read the following Undeniable Testimony of the extraordinary value of this natural remedy in the CURE of GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCROFULA, DISEASED JOINTS, SPINAL and GLANDULAR AFFECTIONS, LUMBAGO, SCROFULOUS ULCERS, and other external Diseases:—

Sept., 1844. Mr. H. W. Pitman, Moor's Picture Gallery, St. Martin's-lane, London, cured of excruciating Gout and Rheumatism, after having tried every other remedy.

Oct., 1844. Anne Midgley, 331, Strand, cured of a Diseased Swelling of the Legs, with only a small bottle of the Oil, after leaving St. Thomas's Hospital as incurable, and having the advice of several medical men without the least benefit.

Sold in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, by Sanger, Oxford-street; Hooper, Chemist, Pall-mall; Johnstons, Cornhill; and all respectable Medicine-vendors in Town and Country.

CAUTION—Observe the seal and address of JONES and CO., 201, STRAND, on the wrapper

On the 31st instant will be published, price 2s. 6d.,

PUNCH'S POCKET-BOOK for 1845, with numerous Illustrations on Steel and Wood.

Office, 194, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers and Stationers.

Just published, price 5s. 6d., with cases and coloured plates,

DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a Successful Mode of treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic, Nervous and Spasmodic Coughs, and Affections of the Heart.—"Full of important and consoling facts."—Gazette. London: Simpkin and Marshall.—Gratuitous advice by Dr. Maddock to the poor, at his residence, 10, Hunter-street, Brunswick-square.

Small 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s. 6d.,

SPARKES' EASY INTRODUCTION TO CHEMISTRY. "Clear and interesting."—Provincial Medical Journal. "Concise and extremely lucid."—Medical Times. Ought to supersede all other elementary books on Chemistry."—Monthly Magazine.—Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria lane.

GUIDE TO THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.

This day is published with Eighteen Embellishments, 2s. 6d., cloth,

WILSON'S DESCRIPTION of the NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE, including an Historical Account of the Former Edifices, and a Memoir of Sir Thomas Gresham, Knt., Founder of the original Burse in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Effingham Wilson (of the Royal Exchange), No. 18, Bishopsgate-street, Within.

EUGENE SUE'S MASTER PIECE!

Now Publishing, in Weekly Penny Numbers, and Monthly Parts at Sixpence,

THERESE DUNOYER; or, the Manor House of Treff Hartlog. By EUGENE SUE, Author of "The Wandering Jew." Beautifully Illustrated.

"This is the most original of all the admirable Novels of Eugene Sue."—National.

London: Cleave, 1, Shoe-lane; W. M. Clarke, Warwick-lane; Purkess, Compton-street, Soho; and all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

TUBAL CAIN: the new Song written by CHARLES MACKAY; composed and sung by Mr. HENRY RUSSELL at his vocal entertainments.

"And he sung, 'Hurra for my handiwork!'
"As the red sparks lit the air;
"Not alone for the blade was the bright steel made,
"And he fashion'd the first plough-share."

Mr. Russell produced an electrical effect by his fine delivery of this capital song. "Tubal Cain" bids fair to eclipse in popularity all his former productions. London: C. Jefferys, 21, Soho-square.

Published this day, 8vo. 1s. sewed,

INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS to the STUDENTS of UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, at the Opening of the Winter Session in the Faculty of Medicine, 1844-45; containing Observations upon the Effects likely to be produced by the Medical Reform Bill and the New Charter on the Surgical Profession and the Schools; Remarks on the Expediency of Combining Literary with Professional Pursuits; and Directions for the most Advantageous Method of Studying Medicine and Surgery. By SAMUEL COOPER, Professor of Surgery in the same College; Vice-President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Consulting Surgeon to University College Hospital, &c. &c.

London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans.

Just issued, Gratis—Post-free on receipt of two stamps,

A NEW LIST of the REDUNDANT COPIES of NEW PUBLICATIONS, in HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, TRAVELS, MEMOIRS, NOVELS, &c., withdrawn from the British and Foreign Library, Conduit-street, Hanover-square, and offered at very reduced prices. The abundant supply of New Works furnished for the use of Subscribers to this Library ensures the good and perfect condition of books withdrawn from it.—⁂ Libraries of any extent valued, arranged, catalogued, purchased or exchanged.—Saunders and Otley, Booksellers and Publishers, Conduit-street.

LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for NOVEMBER, Price 1s., post free 1s. 6d., contains double the number of Winter Fashions given in any other work, and a magnificent Coloured Giant Plate of Fashions for Windows, &c.; Patterns of the Royal Winter Dresses, and other important novelties. 100 figures; patterns of 40 walking, ball, and children's dresses; 60 bonnets, cloaks, pelisses, &c.; descriptions, tales, poetry, music of "Royal Polka," and the march in "Norma;" a Complete Ball Room and Polka Guide, all the Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, &c.

G. Berger, Holywell-street, Strand, and all Booksellers.

Price 1s. 6d, neatly bound. New edition, now ready,

PRACTICAL MECHANIC'S POCKET GUIDE. By PROFESSOR WALLACE.—"In no department of science and literature have we met a more truly useful manuel than this tiny volume. Though scarcely so large as an ordinary pocket-book, it contains a lucid exposition of the theory of mechanical powers as applied to the chief Prime Movers, human, animal, water, and steam force; an examination of the limits within which the materials used in mechanical contrivances are manageable in point of weight, and safe in point of strength; and a series of the tables most useful to practical engineers. The chapter on water-power is particularly valuable."—Athenæum.

Glasgow: Published by W. R. M'Phun; N. H. Cates, Cheapside, London; and may be had by order, of all Booksellers.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE: a Popular Treatise, exhibiting the Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases; with a Collection of approved Prescriptions, Management of Children, Doses of Medicine, &c., forming a comprehensive Guide for the Clergy, Families, and Invalids. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D., &c.—"It is evidently the result of great professional talent, experience, and judgment; the author everywhere appears conscientious, and candid. One object is prominently evident—a sincere desire to benefit his suffering fellow creatures. To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is only to manifest a proper regard for their welfare."—Literary Journal, Feb., 1843.—"It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London Weekly Review.

Simpkin and Co., Paternoster-row; Hatchards, 187, Piccadilly; and Tegg, 73, Cheapside. Sold by all Booksellers.

13, Great Marlborough-street, Oct. 26.

VOL. I. of the NELSON DISPATCHES AND LETTERS,

Is Now Ready, at all the Booksellers.

To be completed in Three Vols 8vo., price 15s. each, bound.

Also, Just Published,

A JOURNEY ACROSS THE DESERT FROM CEYLON TO MARSEILLES; comprising Sketches of Aden, the Red Sea, Lower Egypt, Malta, Sicily, and Italy. By Major and Mrs. GEORGE DARBY GRIFFITHS. Two Vols., small 8vo., with Twenty-one Illustrations. 21s., bound.

Now Ready, at all the Libraries,

YOUNG LOVE; a Novel. By Mrs. TROLLOPE, Authoress of "The Vicar of Wrexhill," "The Widow Barnaby," &c. Three Vols.

Henry Colburn, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Now ready, in elegant Illuminated Binding, with splendid emblazoned Title-page, price only 16s.,

THE MUSICAL TREASURY, containing Seventy-one Pieces for the Pianoforte, Vocal and Instrumental, being 56 Nos. of the popular Musical Periodical, "Music for the Million," elegantly bound, so as to form a splendid present, and consisting of Popular and Original Songs, Duets, Glees, Catches, &c., and favourite Overtures, Quadrilles, Polkas, Waltzes, Galopades, &c, newly arranged expressly for the work.

⁂ "Music for the Million," or "The Musical Treasury," is continued in Threepenny Numbers weekly, and in Shilling Parts monthly, being the only cheap Musical Periodical that is elegantly printed on the full-sized Music Folio. Part XV. (for November, the first of a new volume,) will contain, No. 57, "The Wynnstay Quadrilles," by M. Collinet, the celebrated Director of the Queen's Balls, now first published; No. 58, 'My Bonnie Plaid," Scotch Song, and "Content," a Song by J. R. Ling, the words by Mrs. Hemans (both original); No. 59, "The Punch and Judy Quadrille," by F. Lancelott; No 60, the Glee "Dame Durden," and the Catch, "Wo, Dobbin, wo," with Accompaiments. Either of the Numbers separately, Threepence each.

Published at Davidson's Library, Water-street, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

Just published, 1 vol., post 8vo.

THE IRISH COQUETTE. A TALE.

The mode of publication adopted for the "Irish Coquette" is quite original. Meant as a continuous history, we have here one of the Volumes in every way calculated to excite the highest interest. It will at once be seen as a result, that we are debarred from criticising the work as a whole. It would be wholly unfair to anticipate, even were that practicable; but the skill of the author has thrown such a provocative haze over the future, that the prophetic vision which could penetrate it must indeed be keen and piercing. The talents of the author are diversified; sometimes the scenes are melting with feminine feeling; at others, racy with masculine jovial hilarity. The pathetic and the humorous succeed each other with strong alternate power. The opening of the work is full of sad and sorrowful tenderness; the bereaved husband, on whom anguish has done the work of years, whose hair is blanched more by grief than age, bending under the despair of his deep suffering, is powerfully contrasted with the cherub girl, whose beauty and whose cheerfulness are yet too fresh from heaven to be soiled and fretted, and polluted, by this earth. The rosy child and the haggard parent form a striking picture, and one that would have been too painful for continued contemplation. Wisely, therefore, has the author withdrawn us from the scene, and carried us into one whose opposition is wide as the world, and all things in it. The house of sorrow changes to the house of merriment. Shillelagh Lodge, the residence of the real Irishman, body, soul, and mind, Squire Tom O'Grady, opens its portals to receive us. Here everything is purely natural to that most sad, and yet most merry land, emphatically termed "the Gem of the Sea." Here, whiskey-punch, and song, and carouse, and tumult, make the old walls reek and ring again, whilst their master, the fox-hunting, merry-making, hard-drinking Squire Tom O'Grady, the very prince of good fellows, the most jovial of souls, spent his time in hunting, shouting, and carousing, and making his companions right gloriously welcome to the hospitality of his roof, which he avowed to be the best and the most national, because genuine thatch. The Squire's guests are happy specimens of their facetious fatherland. Fat Doctor Dowse, imbibing the ambrosia of whiskey-punch, enacting the Ghost in "Hamlet," and refusing to dissolve into thin air, on Squire Tom O'Grady's imitative cock-crowing, presents us with a most capital convivial accompaniment to his patron. We are also well pleased to mark the truly catholic spirit which has pervaded the feelings of the author in his depicturing the characters of the Roman and the Protestant priests. By no illiberal liberty of fiction is the one endowed with all virtues, nor the other with all vices, and neither is mean innuendo made to do the mischief of open aspersion. The spirit of true religion actuates the hearts and lives of both, and their province in this history is singularly such as they ought to occupy. Active benevolence, cheerful philanthropy, and love, in its purity of purpose, influence the actions alike of Father Wynne and the Curate Stepney. Piety, as in reality it ever must, exalts these men, and they form a fine relief, in their elevated sanctity, to the class of retainers, who, in their prejudices, their passions, and their phraseology, are so thoroughly and genuinely Irish—Squire Tom O'Grady's groom-valet being a rich specimen of brogue, blunder, and garrulity. Leaving, however, the Irish hearth-stone, and following the history to our own country, two powerful and remarkable characters arrest our attention. The millionaire, Frederick Mansergh, with the heart of a philanthropist, and the liberality of a prince, and the beautiful adventuress, Mrs. Austin, with the mind of a Machievel and no heart at all. This slight introduction of the principal personages in this interesting work will give our readers some idea of the circle whose acquaintance we are recommending them to make. The beautiful child, whose fortunes remain to be developed, must still shine out the single star. The present volume does but open the path and prepare the way for one whose destinies are marked at the very commencement of her race. This portion of the "Irish Coquette" has but ushered in a radiant heroine, painted her parentage with a pen of pathos, surrounded her like some fairy queen, with an attendant host of satellites; placed her in a position of no common interest, raised expectation to its highest pitch, and then left us to await a second with all the eagerness of strongly-awakened interest and curiosity. We can only say, that we trust the pleasure of another volume will not long be delayed.—Metropolitan.

Saunders and Otley, publishers, Conduit-street.

Early in November, 1844, will be published,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1845, containing Designs by Kenny Meadows, and engraved by Linton, altogether about Eighty Engravings.

Published at the Office of the Illustrated London News, 198, Strand, price One Shilling.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT.

Now Publishing, Price One Penny,

OLD MOORE'S SHEET ALMANACK, for 1845. Containing a Splendid Engraving of the NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE, and Seven other Beautiful Engravings.—"We have received from Mr. Cleave a very neat Illustrated Old Moore's Sheet Almanack, which we cordially recommend to our readers. So much has been done of late years with cheap almanacks, that we almost considered it impossible to surpass what had hitherto been published; we were, however, mistaken—Mr. Cleave produces a Sheet Almanack for 1845, worthy of being framed and placed in a palace for one penny."—The Go-a-Head Journal.—London: Cleave, Shoe lane, Fleet street; W. M Clarke, Warwick-lane; Purkess, Compton-street, Soho; and all Booksellers.

WONDERS FOR A PENNY!!!

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ALMANACK!

OLD MOORE'S ALMANACK,

FOR THE YEAR OF HUMAN REDEMPTION, 1845.

32 Pages, with 17 Engravings, containing Rules for the Preservation of Health; List of Fairs; the Wisest Sayings of the Wisest Men; Prophetic Hieroglyphic, adapted to the Times; Stamp Tables; Table to Calculate Wages; Corn-law Scale; Table of Wars since the Revolution in 1688; Prophecies and Proverbs; Summary of the British Parliament; the British Navy; Gardener's Calendar; Farmer's Calendar; the Weather, calculated from never-failing data; Eclipses; Moon's Rising and Setting; and all that can be expected in an Almanack.

⁂ Town and Country Booksellers and Agents desirous of securing an early supply of this deservedly popular Almanack, must give their orders immediately.

London: Ingram and Cooke, Crane-court, Fleet-street.

On the 2nd of November, will be published, price 6d.,

WITH HUMOUROUS ILLUSTRATIONS BY PHIZ

THE FUNNY ALMANACK; and Mirth-moving Calendar of Broad Grins for 1845.

London: Frederick Lover, 10, Bolt-court, Fleet-street.

POLKA LESSON BOOK, or Ball-room Guide.—Illustrated, Price 1s., a complete Cours de Polka, with beautiful representations and correct instructions how to execute the various figures, also all the Quadrilles, Gallopades, Mazourkas, Polonaises, Polkas, Valse a Deux Tems, and those dances adopted at Court.—Order Mitchell's Edition of any bookseller, or of the publisher, C. Mitchell, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street; who sends the work (post-free) on receipt of 1s., or 12 Stamps

---

DR. COSTELLO AND MR. THOMAS WAKLEY.

THE MEDICAL TIMES of to-day will contain this brilliant EXPOSE, with Original Lectures by Pinet, on the Functions of the Brain, and Mr. Guthrie, jun., on Cataract; and Original Papers on points of great interest by Dr. Rigby, Dr. Hodgkin, Dr. Matteucci, Dr. Longet, Mr. Wilkinson King, Mr. Braid, Mr. Barker, and others.—Price 5d.; stamped, 6d.; or £1 5s. per annum, in advance.

J. A. Carfrae, 49, Essex-street, Strand.

SIX POUNDS of TEA, whether Black or Green, for 17s.; and small bright Gunpowder, in 12lb. boxes, at 4s. 6d. per lb.—EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY'S OFFICES, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, Brightest, Purest, and most in esteem by connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at 1s.!!! per Gallon, by addressing to the John Bull Brewery Office, 20, Philpot lane, City. Sent to any part of London carriage-free.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea.—LIVE GAME.—Gentlemen supplied with any number of LIVE PHEASANTS, Partridges, &c., for stocking Preserves; Gold, Silver, White, Pied, and Common Tame bred Pheasants for Aviaries; great variety of Ornamental Water Fowl, Poultry, &c. China Pigs, China and Cochin China Fowl. And Halfmoon-passage, Gracechurch-street.

WINTER HOSIERY, manufactured by POPE and PLANTE, 4, Waterloo place, Pall-mall, of White and Coloured Merino, Lambs-Wool, Real Cachmere, and of other Choice Wools, in Socks, Hose, and Underclothing. Elastic Silk and Cachmere GAITERS for Ladies, and every description of SILK and COTTON HOSIERY.

JONES' £4 4s SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to ladies and gentlemen of any age wishing privacy and expedition. An evening academy on Mondays and Fridays. A juvenile academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Lessons in the Polka and Valse a Deux Temps every day. Terms may be had on application as above. The rooms may be engaged by private parties.

SHIRT COLLARS.—The advantages of WELCH and MARGETSON'S REGISTERED SHIRT COLLAR consist in its fitting closer to the neck, and retaining its shape a greater length of time when in wear, combined with a greater degree of comfort and durability than ordinary collars, being made entirely of linen. Each collar bears the name of Welch and Margetson, London.—To be had of most of the respectable Hosiers. Prices:—No. 1 quality, 12s. per dozen; No. 2, 15s.; No 3, 18s.

CHUBB'S LOCKS and FIRE-PROOF SAFES.—CHUBB'S New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made of all sizes, and for every purpose, and are strong, secure, simple, and durable. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes and Boxes are the best preservative of deeds, books, plate, &c., from fire and thieves, and are secured by Detector Locks throwing from two to ten bolts. Cash Boxes and Japan Deed Boxes, Street Door Latches, with very neat Keys.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; and 28, Lord-street, Liverpool.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly-appreciated appendage of the British toilet has for nearly a century past maintained unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the Skin, together with the valuable properties of a Preserver and Sustainer of the Complexion of the most congenial nature, removing every trace of Sallowness and Discoloration, and promoting the Transparency and Brightness of the Skin which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion.—"ROBT. SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

ASK for the "POTOSIAN LIQUID SILVER," 1s. per bottle; or four in one, 3s. The really lasting preparation for resilvering WORN-OUT PLATED ARTICLES, and rendering them quite equal to new, by depositing a layer of pure silver upon the surface. The cost a few pence, the effect instant, and the operation so simple that it may be performed by a child.—Smith and Co., sole proprietors, opposite Norfolk-street, Strand, where specimens and the operation may be seen. Sold also by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard. The public are requested to notice that this preparation is not the Novargent.

COCOA-NUT-FIBRE MATTRESSES.—The best Mattresses for durability, cleanliness, comfort, and economy, are those made of Cocoa-Nut-Fibre; a material possessing elasticity equal to the finest horse hair, at less than one half the cost. It is a well known fact that from the peculiar chemical properties of the Fibre, no vermin will harbour in it.—TRELOAR'S Cocoa-Nut-Fibre Matting and Mattress Warehouse, 42, Ludgate-hill; established for the sale of articles made of Cocoa-Nut-Fibre, under Wildey and Co.'s patent.

THE REFORMED BILL.—An immense assortment of all the NEW PATTERNS for WINTER OVER COATS from 10s. 6d. each; Superfine Dress Coats, 38s. and 47s. 6d.; Frock Coats, silk facings, 42s. and 50s.; Shooting and Fishing Jackets, 10s. 6d. and 21s.; Winter Trousers, all the New Patterns, 10s. 6d and 17s. 6d.; Rich Winter Pattern Vests, 7s. to 12s.; Ladies' Riding Habits, 63s. and 84s.; Suit of Liveries, 63s.—DOUDNEY and SON, 49, Lombard street.—Established 1784.—Celebrated for the best and cheapest Boys' Clothing!!!

H. WALKER'S NEEDLES (by authority, the "Queen's Own,") have large eyes, easily threaded, (even by blind persons), and improved points, temper, and finish. Each paper is labelled with a likeness of her Majesty, or his Royal Highness Prince Albert, in relief, on coloured grounds. Every quality of Needles, Fish Hooks, Hooks and Eyes, Steel Pens, &c., for shipping. These Needles or Pens for the home trade are sent free, by post, by any respectable dealer, on receipt of 13 penny stamps for every 1s. value.—H. Walker, Manufacturer to the Queen, 1, (late 20), Maiden-lane, Wood-street, London.

SUPERIOR WINTER WATERPROOF WRAPPERS, OUTSIDE GARMENTS of all kinds, SHOOTING JACKETS, &c.—An extensive variety of the above, in new and greatly improved materials, in lieu of the unsightly and vulgar tweeds, now ready; also, of BERDOE'S well-known and much-approved VENTILATING FROCK, for all seasons, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. As winter approaches, attention is again invited to the Advertiser's VENTILATING WATERPROOF, which renders any garment thoroughly impervious to rain: this fact is established beyond all contradiction, by more than six years' extensive and most successful trial.—W. BERDOE, TAILOR, WATERPROOFER, &c., 69, CORNHILL (North side).

DISEASES OF THE EYE.—"We have much pleasure in learning that Mr. CHILD, the OCULIST, whose wonderful cures of Blindness have been many times noticed in our paper, is now located in the Great Metropolis, at 27, Great Russell-street, Bedford square. Witnessing, as we did, on one occasion, a large meeting in our Town-hall, assembled to testify to the benefit they had received from him; and some of them as full of gratitude as to appear almost ready to give him one eye for having restored the sight of the other—we cannot but rejoice in Mr. Child's success; and hope that in his new location his sphere of usefulness will be greatly enlarged."—Birmingham Advertiser, October 17, 1844.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 4s. 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. THOMAS Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Price 4s. 6d., and can be sent by post. Mr. THOMAS continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of Self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from Eleven till Four.

GOOD FURNITURE AT MODERATE PRICES.— THOMAS FOX, 93, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, respectfully invites the public to inspect the Stock of CABINET and UPHOLSTERY FURNITURE and BEDDING, at his Establishment, consisting of every requisite for the Mansion or Cottage, of a quality, fashion, material, and workmanship, not to be surpassed, and offered at prices scarcely exceeding those commonly charged for showy but unsubstantial furniture. Also, a most complete and beautiful collection of Chimney, Pier, and Console GLASSES; Decorative Painting, Paper-hanging, and other Ornamental Embellishments, at the most Moderate and Reasonable Prices. Parties requiring really good articles, will find at Thomas Fox's, a Stock so extensive and various, as to afford every facility for advantageous selection, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within.

BARRELLED OYSTERS, of the very best quality, closely packed, from 4s. 6d. to 6s. per barrel, at a moment's notice, and forwarded to all parts of the Kingdom, by H. ADAMSON, FISHMONGER, 333, OXFORD-STREET (established upwards of 40 years), being one door from Griffin's, Green Man and Still universal Coach and Booking Office.

N.B.—Country orders for Fish most carefully attended to.

PATENT PARAGON CAMPHINE LAMPS.—The great fault which was last year found with the Vesta from its great smoke and emission of black smuts, is happily entirely obviated in the Paragon—which surpasses in brilliancy and whiteness of light anything hitherto seen, giving the light of 16 wax candles at the cost of one halfpenny per hour. The largest stock in London to select from, at C. Watson's Warehouses, 41 & 42, Barbican, and 16, Norton Folgate. The Spirit, analyzed and recommended by Dr. Ure, is delivered by C. Watson's carts, at 4s. per gallon, in screw canse.

WATER CURE ESTABLISHMENT, SYDNEY-GARDENS, BATH. Resident Physician, A. E. Mastalier, M.D. The General Management is under Mr. and Mrs. WATSON, with whom Ladies and Gentlemen may respectively correspond. The establishment is open for the reception of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Families. The new Douche Building (under the same roof) is comfortably fitted up; all its rooms and passages are warmed for invalids. A Prospectus will be forwarded on application. ⁂ Treatment for Out-patients.

KINAHAN'S CELEBRATED LL WHISKY (7 years old), equal to the finest Cognac Brandy, and recommended by the Faculty as being the purest, most delicious, and wholesome spirit ever imported, will be forwarded to any part of the kingdom, in cask or bottle, from KINAHAN and Co.'s STORES, 25, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON.—N.B. Sealed bottles 3s 6d. each (observe Messrs. Kinahan's name and address on the seal and label). May be obtained from most respectable Wine and Spirit Merchants in Town and Country.

MONEY.—GRAND DISTRIBUTION OF £70,170 Sterling. Authorised by his Imperial Majesty and the Government of Austria.—The Next DRAWING of the IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN LOAN will take place at VIENNA, on the 2nd December, and be paid in British Money. There are 700 Prizes of £23,000, £5000, &c.; the lowest, £50. A few Tickets, £3 each; Shares, 12s., with Prospectus; six, Tickets for £15, may be obtained of Messrs. A. J. Straus and Co., Bankers and Receivers-General, Office, 26, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London. Remittance can be made by Post-office order. Government Lists of the Drawing will be sent to each Purchaser. Office hours from Twelve till Three.

SHORNE, KENT.—TO LET, PIPE'S PLACE, a genteel FAMILY RESIDENCE, with good Garden, Six-stall Stable, Hayloft, double Coach-house, Cow-house, and Ten Acres of rich Meadow and Orchard Land. The house, replete with convenience, contains three sitting-rooms, nine bed-rooms, numerous closets, large laundry, butler's pantry, kitchen, and other domestic offices; is situated about midway between Gravesend and Rochester, and within a quarter of a mile of the high road, whence conveyances are almost continually running; and commands an extensive and beautiful view of the river Thames and country adjacent.—For further particulars, apply to Mr. NOAKES Ifield, Shorne.

CROSBY HALL VAULTS, 35, Bishopsgate-street Within. —CURRALL and SON beg to invite public notice to their STOCK of OLD BOTTLED WINES: they being desirous to secure that patronage which WINES of the first quality, at fair and remunerating profits, will maintain, respectfully submit the annexed list of cash prices:—Port, old bottled, 36s. and 42s.; Do., six years in bottle, 48s.; Do., superior draught, 28s. and 33s.; Sherries, pale and brown, 36s.; Do., do., 42s. to 48s.; Bucellas, 32s.; Sherry (excellent dinner wine), 28s.; Marsala, 24s per dozen. Bottles, 2s. 6d. per dozen; hampers, 1s. each. ⁂ Marsala, per Quarter Pipe, £11 11s.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT, or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by instantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver, and Preserves and Cleanses Silver, Plated Ware, and German Silver. It is used with less trouble than cleaning, and is warranted not to contain Mercury or anything injurious. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and other eminent Chemists and Silversmiths. Sold by Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-st., London; and by Joseph Rodgers and Sons, 6, Norfolk-st., Sheffield; in bottles, with full directions, at 1s. and 3s. each, and to be had of all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the Kingdom. Beware of Imitations: the Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by I. D. Cogan and R. Gillo.

DANCING, CALISTHENICS, AND ORTHOPEDICAL EXERCISES.—Mrs. FREDERICK FINNEY (late Miss Kenward) respectfully informs the nobility and gentry that she has returned from Paris with the newest collection of Continental Dances, as taught and composed expressly for her by M. Coralli, Premier Artiste, Académie Royale. Ladies who do not approve of dancing, can, for the improvement of their figures, receive lessons on the Calisthenics and Orthopedical Exercises, and also be prepared for presentation at Court. Mrs. Finney's Academy will be held at the Hanover-square Rooms, in November, on Mondays and Thursdays, and at her own house on Wednesdays.—Schools and Private Families attended.—For terms, address Mrs. Frederick Finney, Tottenham-green.

ELECTRO PLATE SUPERSEDED by RICHARD and JOHN SLACK'S Pure NICKEL SILVER.—This incomparable metal possesses all the richness of Silver in appearance, with all its durability and hardness, warranted to stand the test of aquafortis, and to retain its silver-like appearance as long as the articles endure.—Tea spoons, 5s. per dozen; dessert ditto and forks, 10s.; table ditto and forks, 12s. R. and J. S. beg to caution the public against several Spurious Imitations of their articles which are daily offered; the genuine are to be had only at their Establishment, where no inferior articles are kept. R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset-house.

A BRONZED SPEAR and SCROLL FENDER for 10s.— RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are now offering an extensive assortment of Elegant Bronzed Fenders at prices, if compared with quality, 30 per cent. under any other house. Ornamental Iron Fenders, 3 feet, 4s. 6d; 3 feet 6 inches, 5s. 3d.; chamber fireirons, 1s. 9d. per set; parlour ditto, 3s. 6d.; superior ditto, from 6s. 6d. Their stock also consists of London-made dish covers, superior table cutlery, pure nickel silver spoons, forks, &c., and Furnishing Ironmongery of every description, every article of which is marked at such prices that will fully convince purchasers at their Warehouse of the great advantages resulting from cash payments. Their Illustrated Catalogue of prices may be had gratis, or sent post free to any part of the kingdom.—Established 1818.

WINTER OVER COATS, WRAPPERS, &c.—Messrs. BURCH and LUCAS (late J. Albert), respectfully invite gentlemen to view their new and fashionable assortment of PATENT and BEAUFORT BEAVERS, FANCY VESTINGS, TROUSERINGS, &c. for the approaching season; the style and cut of every garment are guaranteed equal to any of the first houses at the West-end, at prices in unison with the economy of the times, feeling confident that gentlemen who may do them the honour will be perfectly satisfied with any garment that leaves their establishment. A large assortment of Great Coats kept ready made in all the different and most approved forms agreeable to the prevailing taste; being made under the superintendence of the proprietors, they are enabled to speak confidently as to their superiority over all garments of a slop description, the which are entirely excluded from this establishment.—52, King William-street, London-bridge, opposite the Statue.

IMPORTANT to the FASHIONABLE WORLD.—By far the most influential of all the graces that contribute to personal adornment, is the Hair. Its recovery, preservation, and improvement, proportionably concern the elegantés of our fashionable circles, and any information which will ensure these desirable results will be hailed as an inestimable boon. The following extract from the letter of a respectable chemist in Bridlington, will be read with the highest interest:—"A lady, a customer of mine, has found great benefit from the use of your Balm. About six months ago her hair nearly all fell off. I recommended her to try your BALM of COLUMBIA, which she did. In the course of a few applications the hair ceased to fall off. Before she had used one 3s. 6d. bottle, it began to grow very profusely, and she has now a beautiful head of hair.—I am, gentlemen, yours, respectfully, Wm. Smith, Chemist and Druggist, Market-place, Bridlington. To Messrs. C. and A. Oldridge, March 13, 1844."—C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA causes the Hair to curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off; and a few bottles generally restore it again. It also prevents greyness. 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle; no other prices are genuine.—OLDRIDGE'S BALM.—1, Wellington-street; the second house from the Strand.

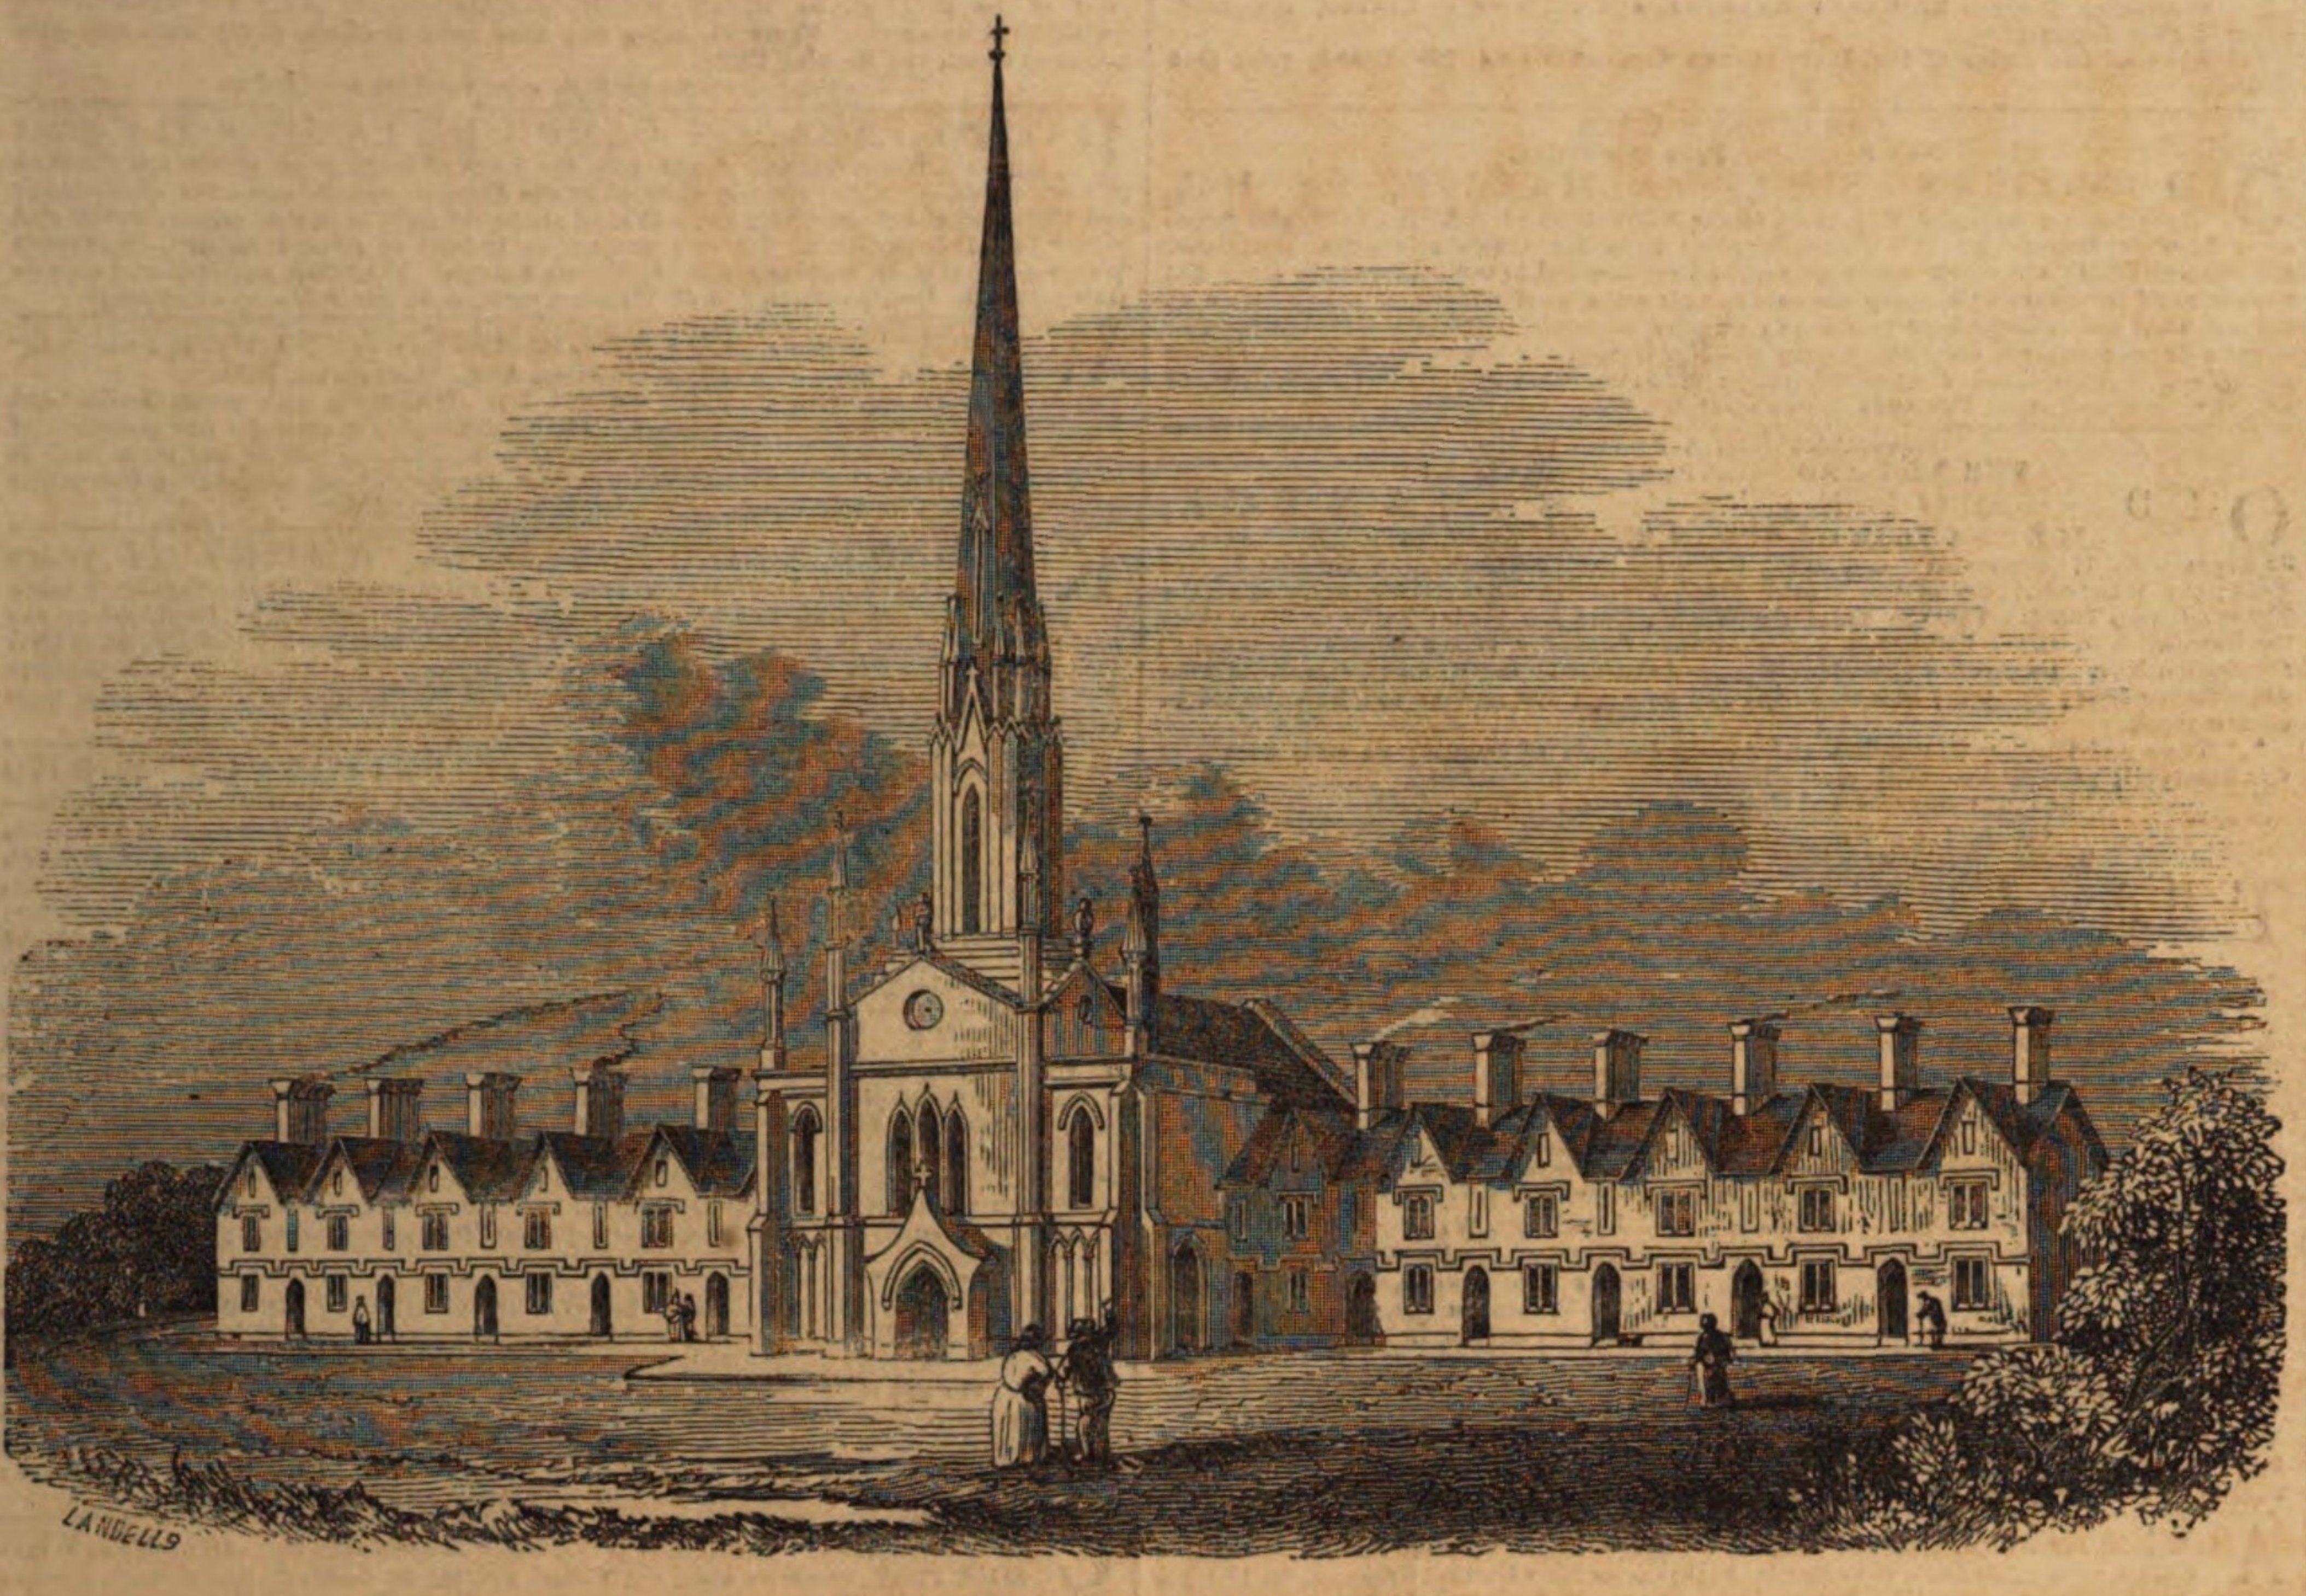
MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of mourning may be procured from this establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up; and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid or even sea-water. Black and Grey and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids and Merinos of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for mourning, in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c. W. C. JAY and Co.

FOR STAMPING AND MARKING LINEN.

EDE'S ROYAL HERALDIC INK, under the immediate Patronage of her Majesty, for Stamping all kinds of Linen with Coronets, Crests Ciphers, Names, and Devices, more legibly, and with the same facility that Letters are stamped at the Post-Office, warranted not to corrode the Linen, run or wash out. 2s. 6d. per case. Silver Stamps engraved to order. "Mr. Ede has had the honour of furnishing Stamps for his Heraldic Ink for Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace. Doubtless the late felonies at the latter establishment have led to the necessity of adopting this certain mode of identifying linen."—Brighton Herald. "Without the slightest blot or slur, the impressions are uniformly neat, sharp, and elegant."—Naval and Military Gazette. "Infinitely superior to the process generally in use. We therefore cannot too strongly recommend it."—Court Journal.

EDE'S NEW MARKING INK, NOT TO BE WASHED OUT, for Writing on Linen with a Pen. No preparation required. I, the Proprietor, hold myself responsible for its durability, writing Blue, and directly after the application of a hot iron, turning to a Deep Black; warranted to flow freely from the Pen, not to injure the linen, run, or wash out.—R. B. EDE. 1s. per Bottle. Manufactory, Dorking.—Depôts for R. B. EDE'S Perfumery, Barry and Son, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, and 122, Bishopsgate Within; Wholesale and Export Agent, R. E. Dear, 20 and 21, Bishopsgate Without. Sold in every town in the Kingdom.

GRAND SPORTING PARTIES AT HOMBURG, near Frankfort-on-the-Maine.—The CASINO of HOMBURG is the only establishment on the banks of the Rhine which is open all the year. The great number of fashionable visitors who have engaged apartments, and the gorgeous preparations of the administration, announce a more than ever brilliant season this winter. Foreigners receive permissions for the great sporting parties which take place twice a week. In consequence, the managers, shrinking from no sacrifice to render this watering-place as agreeable as possible, have hired 50,000 English acres of forest and meadow land, where game of every description is found in abundance, as well as a reserve for the great sporting parties. The superb Casino, which, by the beauty of its architecture, its internal arrangements, and the splendour of its decorations, surpasses everything that has been seen to this day on this side the Rhine, contains a magnificent ball room; a concert-room; saloons, for the games of trente, quarante, de roulette, and de commerce, from eleven o'clock in the morning till eleven o'clock at night; a reading-room, where are found most of the German, French, English, Russian, Belgian, and Dutch newspapers; a coffee-room; a divan, opening on a beautiful asphalte terrace; and a splendid dining-room, with a French table d'hote at one and five o'clock. The Casino of Homburg has hitherto had the sole privilege of remaining open during the whole year, and the continuance of games of chance, bals, concerts, and all kinds of festivals will procure to the residents of Homburg a most extraordinary attraction. Numerous furnished hotels, with all the comforts of London and Paris, and private lodging-houses offer accommodation to foreigners at exceedingly moderate prices. The distance from London to Homburg may be accomplished in forty-three hours, on taking the General Steam Navigation Company's steamer for Ostend, arriving in twelve hours; from Ostend to Cologne, by railroad, in thirteen hours; from Cologne to Mayence, by steamer, in fifteen hours; from Mayence to Frankfort-on-the-Maine, by railroad, in one hour; and from Frankfort-on-the-Maine to Homburg, in one hour and a half, by omnibuses and mail coaches, which start at all hours.



NEW ALMS-HOUSES AT NORTHFLEET.

ALMSHOUSES AT NORTHFLEET.

These buildings have just been erected at Northfleet, from the design of Mr. W. Chadwick, of Adelaide-place, London-bridge. The present design, however, only comprises twelve dwellings—the intended number being forty. They have been built from the private funds of Mr. John Huggins, of Sittingbourne, Kent, and are intended for the peaceful havens of those persons who, in common parlance, "have seen better days;" each of whom is to receive, in addition to this abode, a pension of twenty-one shillings per week. In the centre is a chapel, of neat design, in the pointed style, with a lofty spire. We cannot refrain from commemorating this noble act of individual munificence, and shall further rejoice at the completion of the benevolent founder's design.

DEATH OF MR. GEO. HORNCASTLE, THE VOCALIST.—This gentleman, who was one of the corps operatique of Drury-lane Theatre last season. died at his residence in Tavistock-place, on Sunday, in the prime of life. He made his débût, we believe, at Covent-garden, in the character of Lord Allcash, under the management of Madame Vestris, having been previously one of the leading vocalists at the Liverpool Theatre.

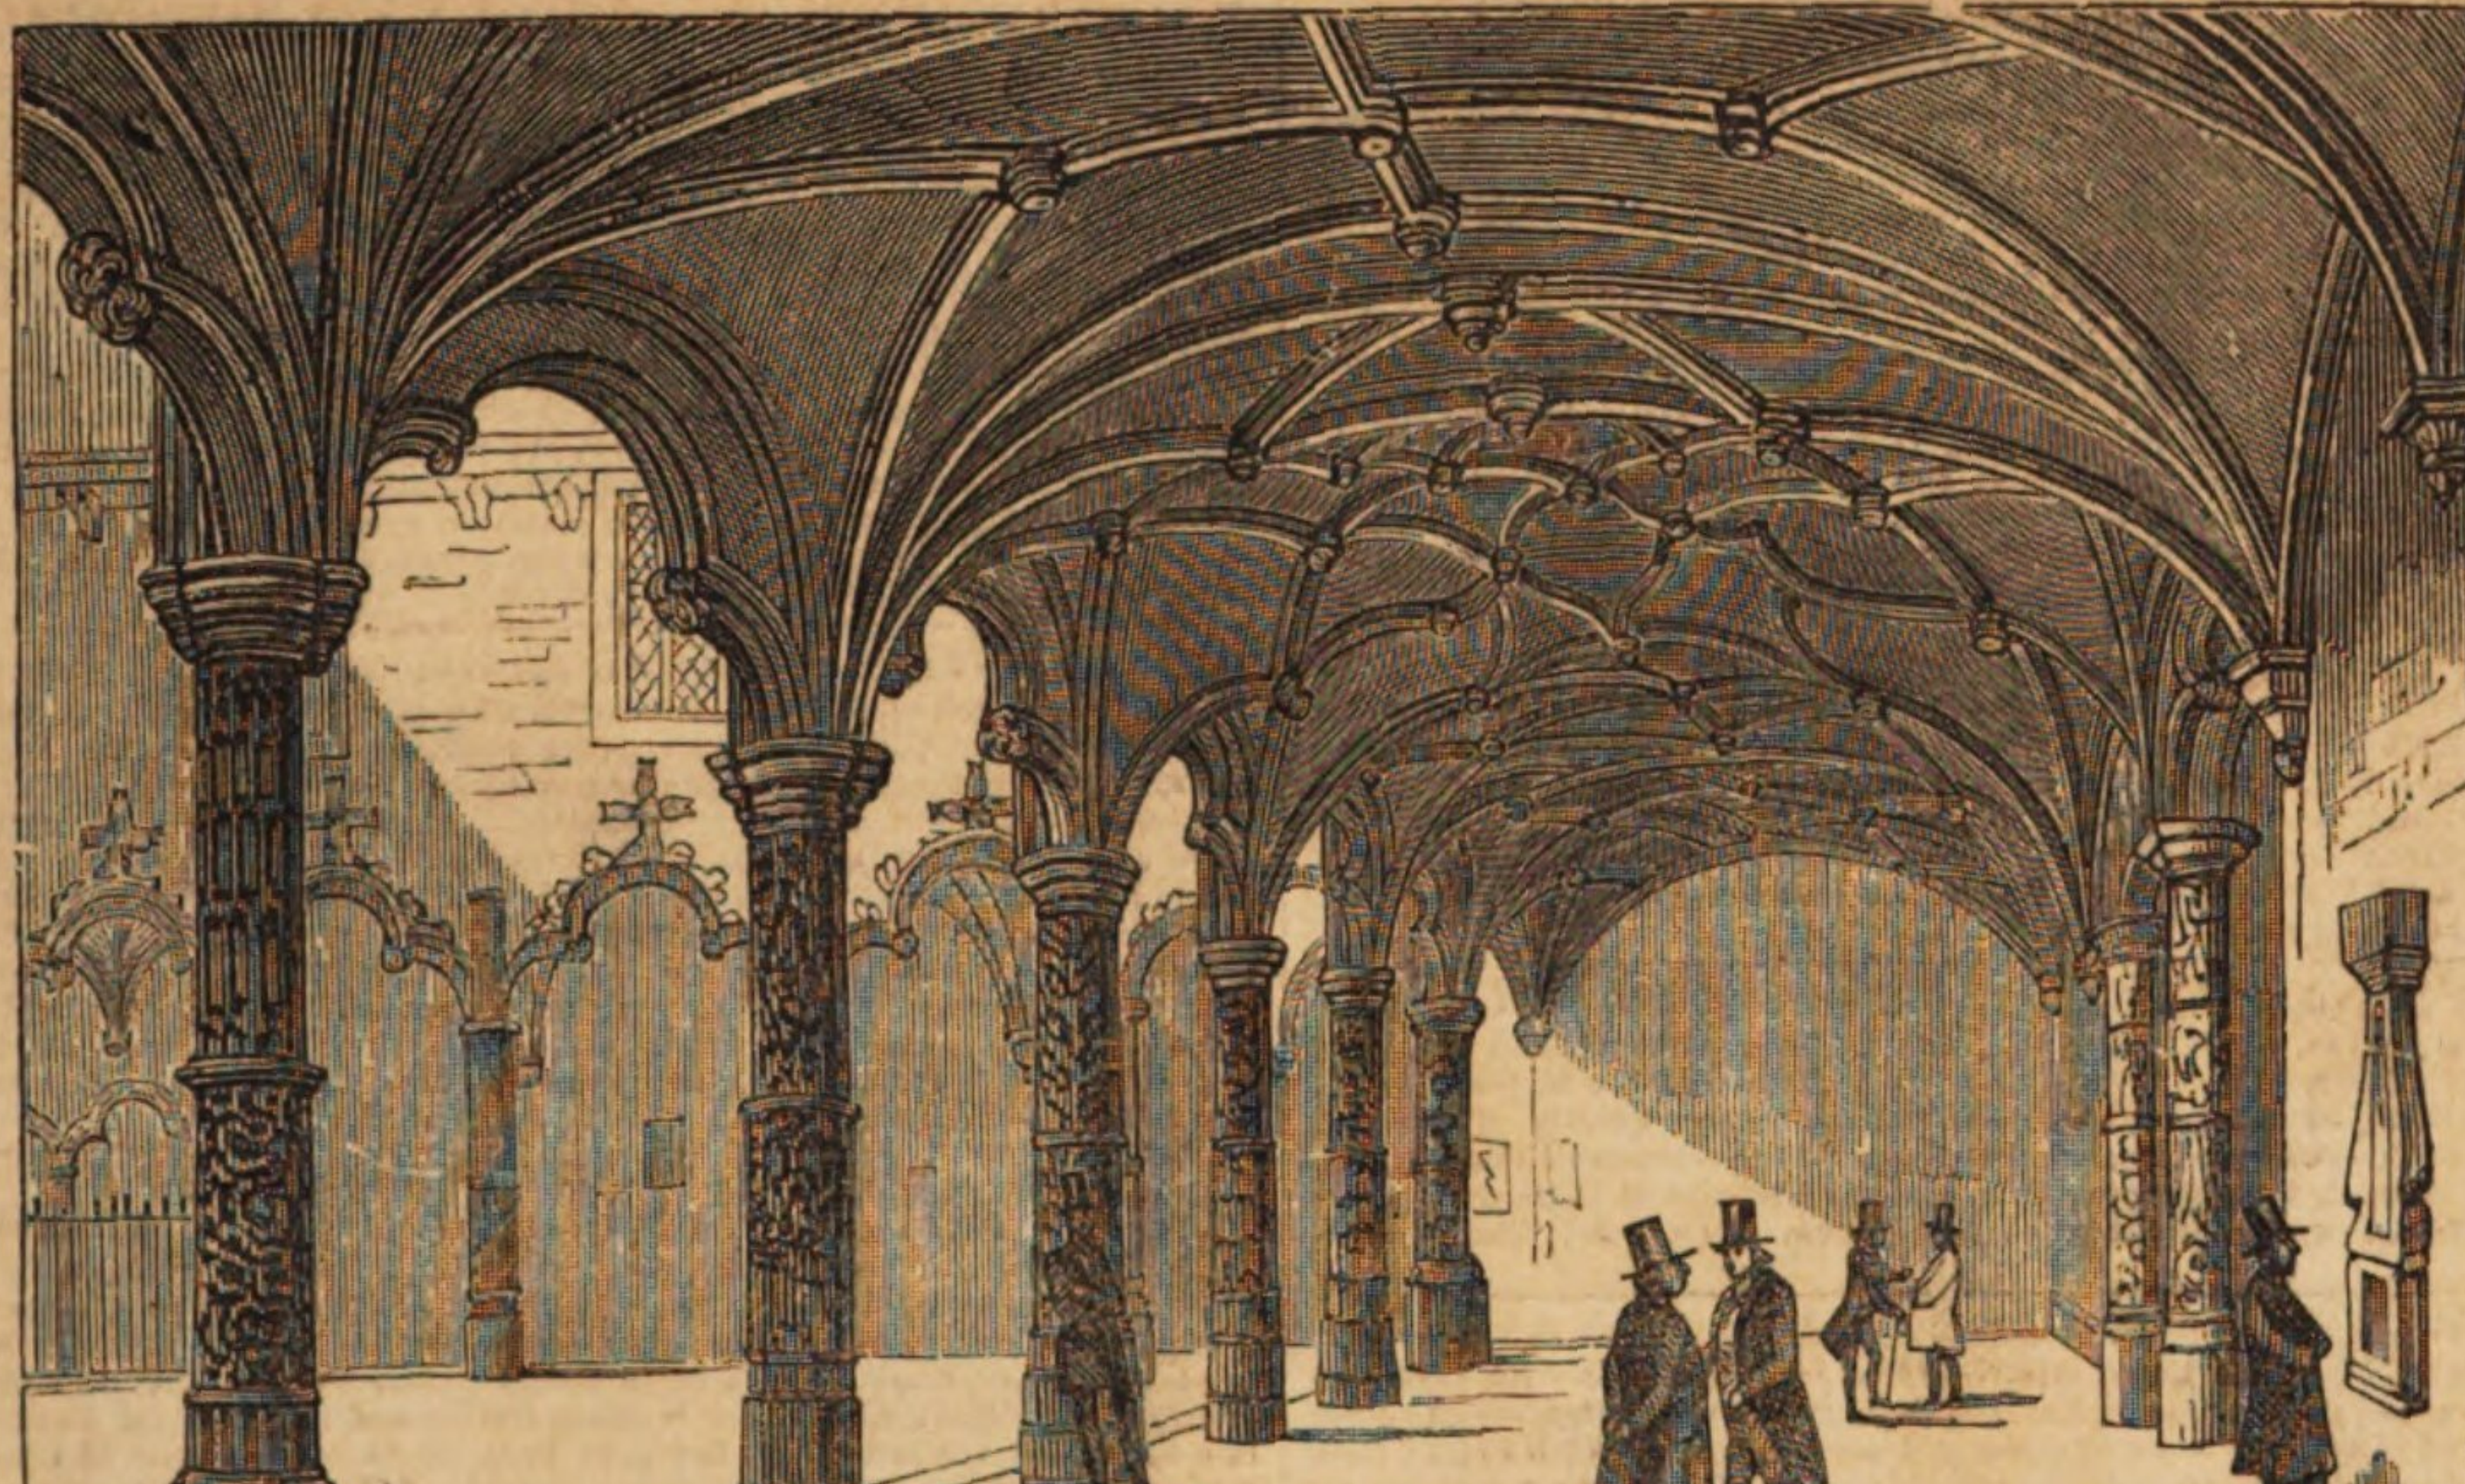
NEW CLAIMANT TO THE STONELEIGH ESTATES.—On Monday the town of Leamington was in commotion, in consequence of the examination of thirty-two individuals who had been apprehended by Mr. Roby, the superintendent of police, having been engaged in unlawfully taking forcible possession of Stoneleigh Abbey, the mansion of Lord Leigh. A new claimant, named John Leigh, has now just come forward, and sought to enforce his pretensions by proceeding with a party of thirty, with bludgeons, &c., to take forcible possession of the mansion. They were met by the police and constables; and Dencer, a police serjeant, and Hancox, an assistant-constable, were felled to the ground, and other persons engaged in guarding the premises seriously maltreated. They retained possession of the mansion for upwards of an hour. The police, however, went to the spot, and the whole of the party were handcuffed, and conveyed to the public office at Leamington, upon a charge of riot and assault. The above facts were elicited from the several witnesses, some of whom bore upon their forehead, face, and hands, marks of great external violence. Ultimately they (twenty-nine in number) were committed to take their trial at the next county sessions, with liberty to find bail.

Arthur Atherley, Esq., who represented Southampton before the Reform Bill, died suddenly at his seat at Arundel, Sussex, last week. He was seventy-four years of age, and has left three sons and three daughters.

A CLEVER PARISIAN TRICK.—A Paris paper gives the following account of a very ingenious robbery:—About a fortnight ago, a young man, of about 35, of elegant manners and appearance, presented himself at the house of the Misses N., in the Rue Meslay, to look at some apartments which were to let. He stated that he was an artist connected with the Porte St. Martin, and that he wanted to live near the theatre. He agreed about the apartments, and paid a month in advance. The very next day he had a long conversation with the ladies, and he soon contrived to make himself so agreeable to them, that he passed several hours a day in their company. In short, a few days afterwards, the so-called artist offered the ladies a box at the theatre for the next day, which the ladies did not scruple to accept. "I will accompany you myself," said he, "and take care that you are comfortable." The day came, and the gentleman took the ladies to the theatre according to promise. After he had been in the theatre about an hour, he made a pretext to leave. He immediately proceeded to the house in the Rue Mesley, and asked the porter for the keys of the apartment, pretending that the ladies had forgotten a shawl which they would require on coming out of the theatre. The porter having no suspicion, gave him the key. In about an hour he came down, having a parcel in his hand wrapped in a pocket handkerchief. On their return, the ladies were surprised at the answer of the porter; and, suspecting something, hastened to their apartment, but the truth became manifest. The furniture was in confusion, the desks broken open, and all the plate, money, and jewellery of which the ladies were possessed had disappeared. They found at once that a considerable robbery had taken place, and that they were the victims of the self-styled artist, who had only introduced himself to them with the intention of pillaging them. Inquiries were made the next day of persons to whom this adroit swindler had referred, but of course he was not known; and in spite of the exertions of the clever Parisian police, no trace has been discovered of this ingenious thief.

THE BOURSE, AT ANTWERP.

This celebrated structure will be found referred to in our historical details of the London Royal Exchange, in another part of the present number. It was long reported to be the finest building of the kind in Europe: and served as a model for not only the Exchange in London, but also for that at Amsterdam.



THE BOURSE AT ANTWERP.

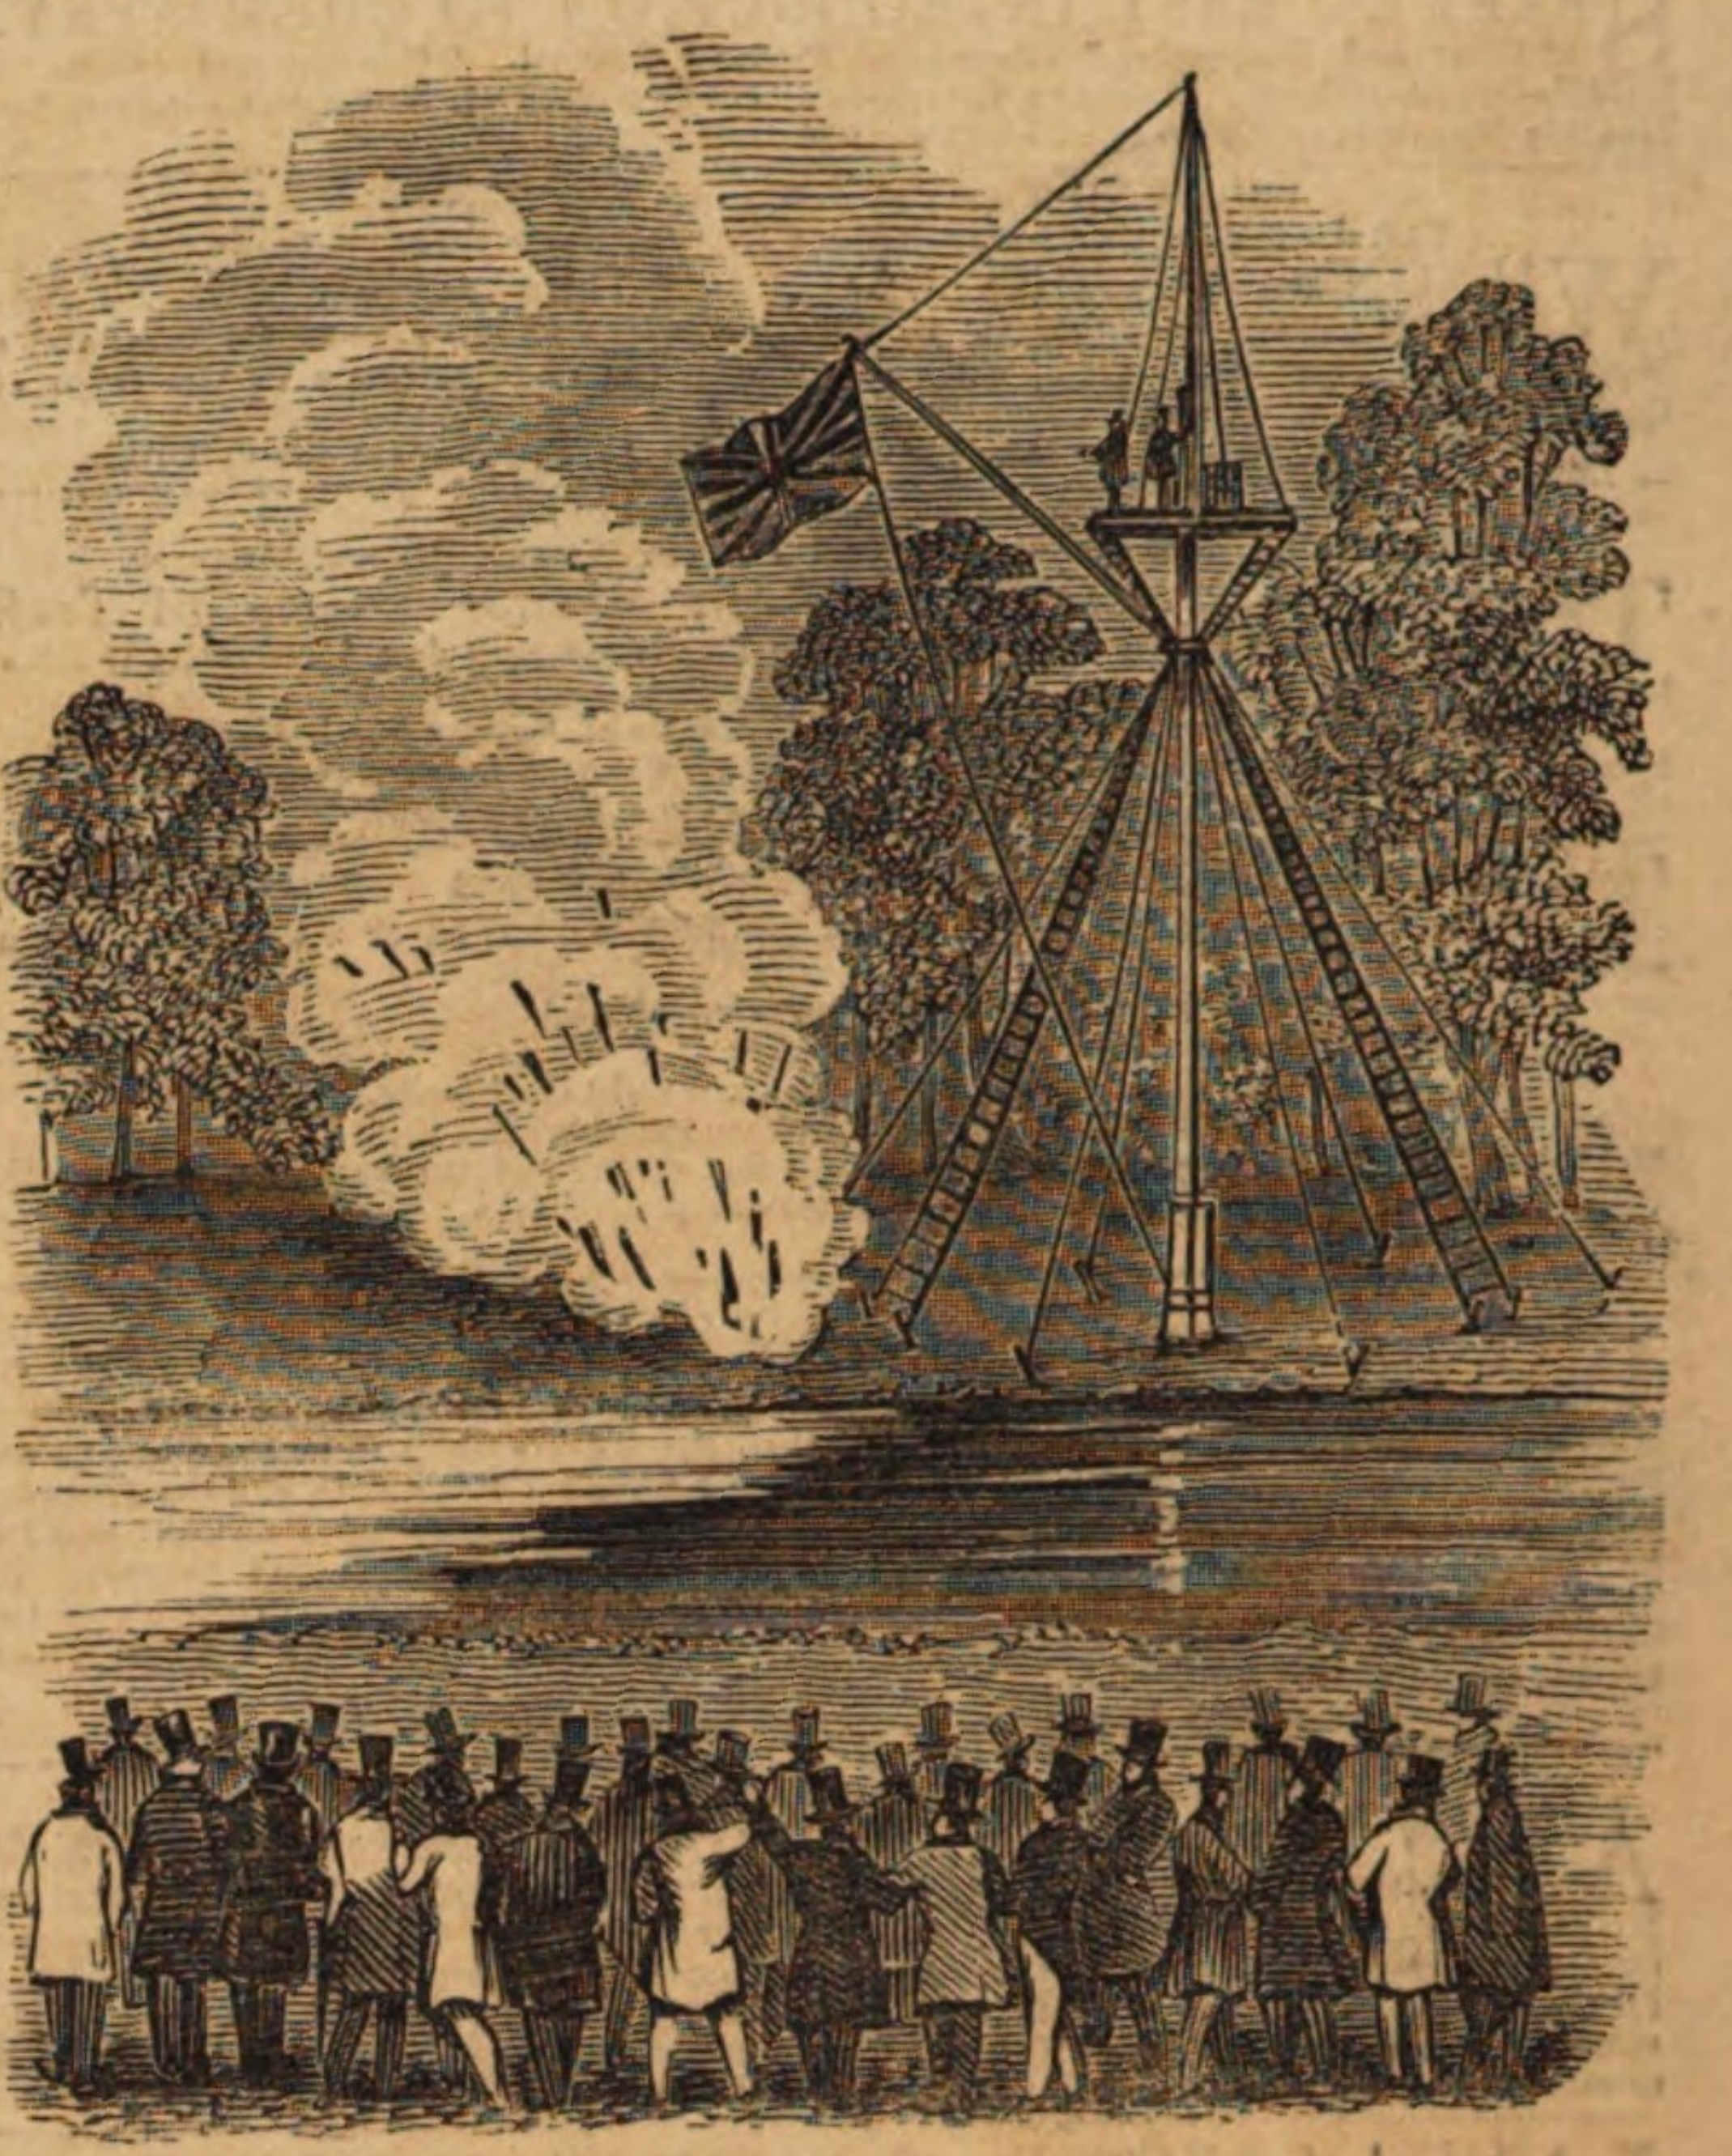
NOVEL EXPERIMENTS IN WARFARE.

A few days since, the first of an intended series of experiments were exhibited in the grounds of Mulgrave House, Fulham, now in the possession of "The Society of Practical Science, and Private Military School of a New and Noble Science of Warfare," having for its objects, as stated in the prospectus, "the advancement of science and the establishment of universal peace," and the placing "at the command of our young and beloved Sovereign such a tremendous machinery of warfare as to enable her Majesty to maintain universal peace. That her Majesty may overrule any nation disturbing our present tranquillity, and say, 'Be still—redress your grievance in some more laudable manner—but to war you shall not; the power is in my hands, and if war be your determination, the destruction of your fleet and army is certain.' To this great and glorious end do the Directors of the Society of Practical Science, and Noble Science of Warfare aspire, and they doubt not that in a short time the country will be convinced that they have such a system of warfare at their command, and are in possession of such inventions as will hurl to destruction any opposing power."

In the programme of the first field day the opening experiment was with a bomb-shell, the ignition of which was not to be seen. It was accordingly buried in the earth, but, owing to the damp preventing the fusee from completing the ignition, this experiment failed. This shell is designed to destroy an enemy pursuing retreating troops.

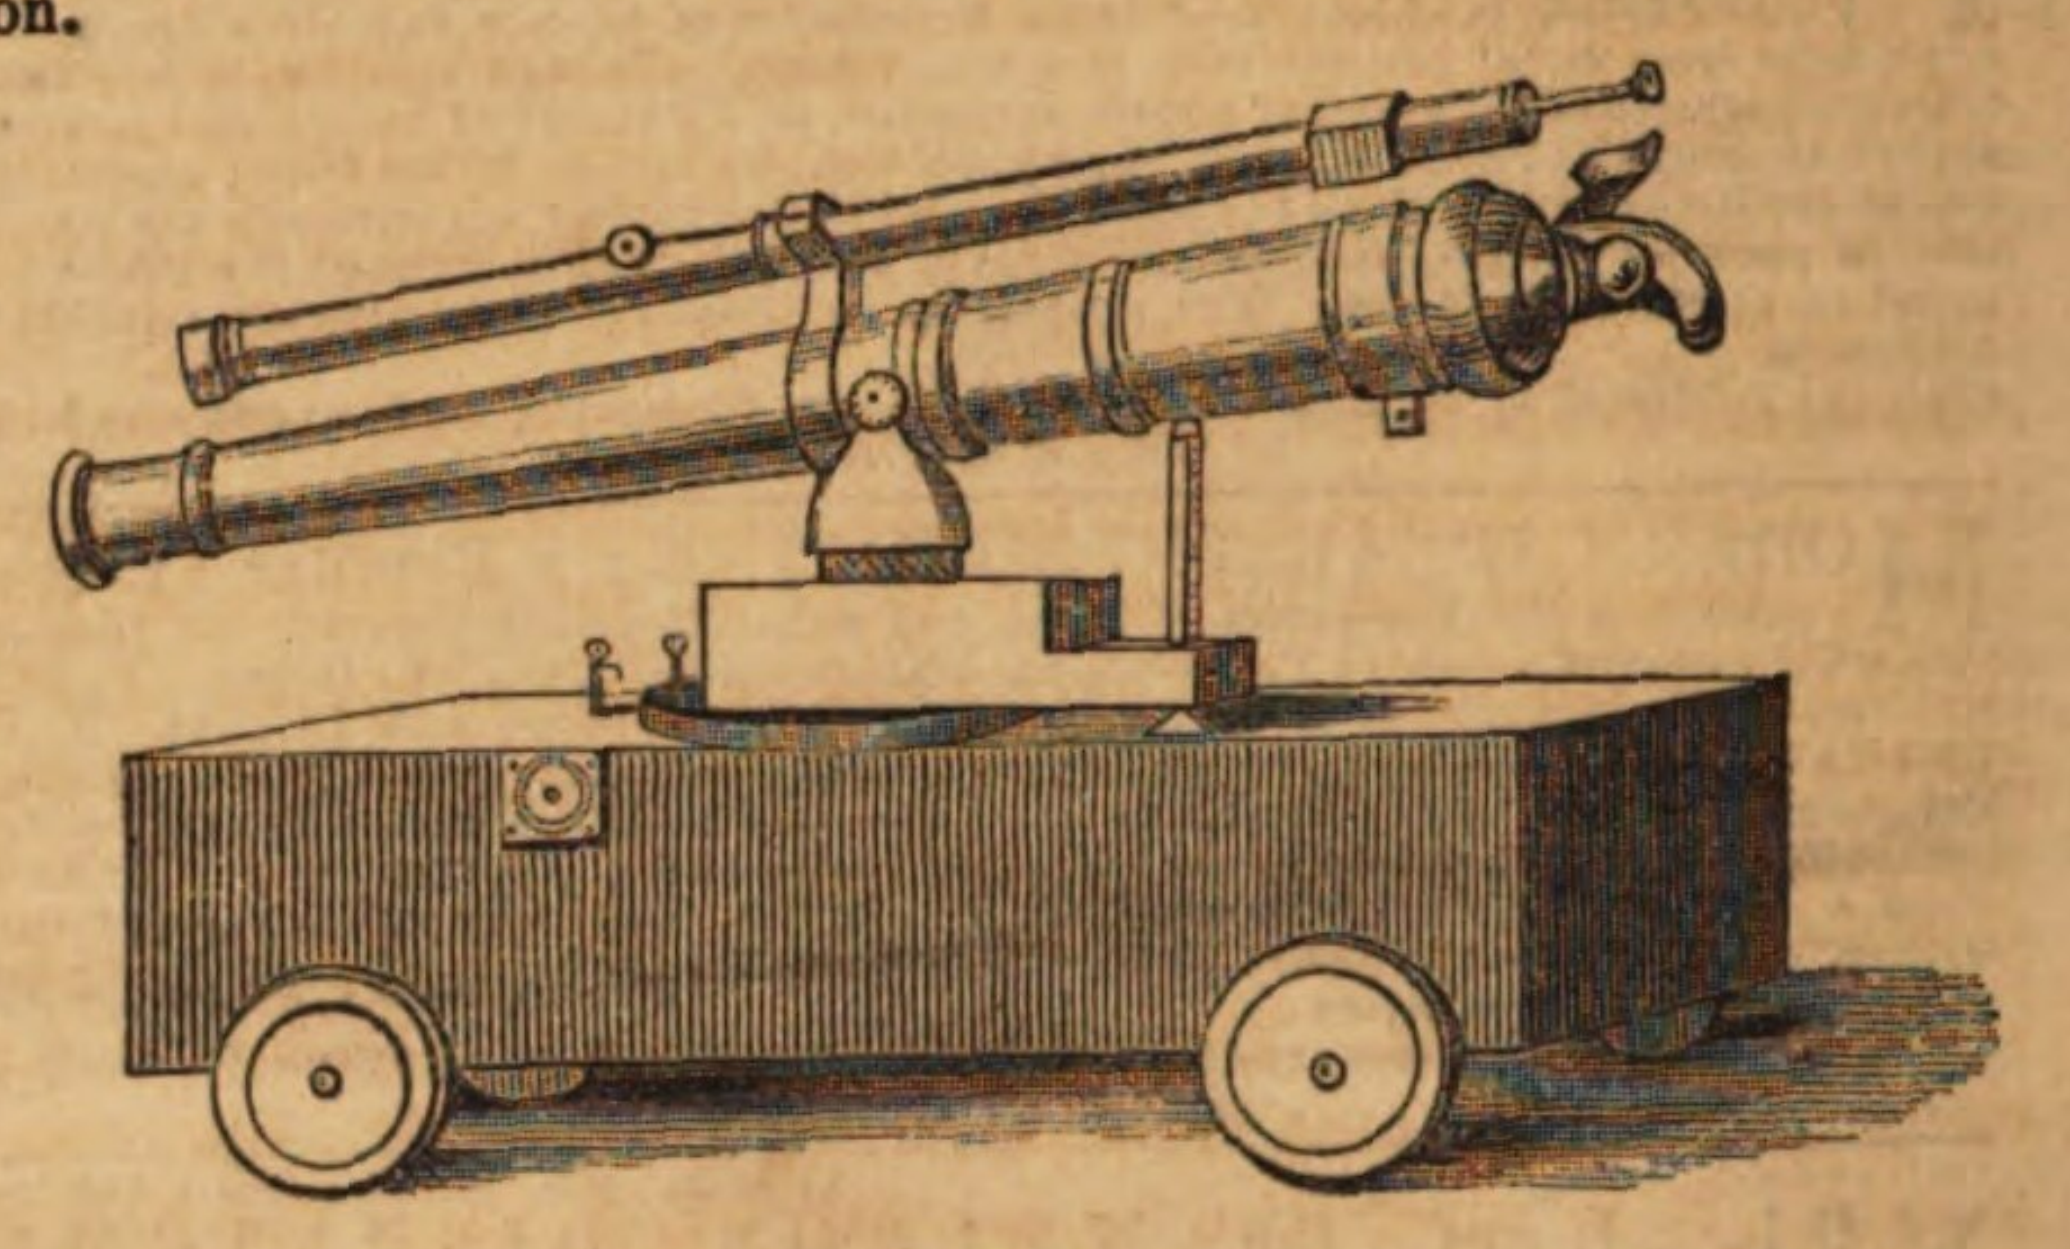
The second experiment was with a shell similar to the above, but with a visible explosion; it was suspended from a pole, and at a given signal was made to descend upon a substantially-constructed wooden hut, which it instantly shattered to pieces, the planks, rafters, &c. flying to immense height. This was effected on first striking the hut with the shell; a second shell was then exhibited, but not suffered to explode until the second time of falling. The object was to show that the inventor has complete controul over this destructive missile, and it appears that his controul consists in the application of a percussion-cap of a peculiar kind; for Lord Ranelagh, one of the visitors, applied an ordinary cap, which exploded the first time without igniting the shell. On the inventor's cap being applied on the second occasion, the shell fell into a deep hole prepared for the purpose to prevent danger, and exploded with terrific force.

A shower of hand-rockets were then thrown from a mast and exploded, to show how, by their means, a merchant-vessel could easily protect herself from pirates, or other hostile parties at sea: from the unfavourable weather, however, other intended trials were abandoned. Next were fired some self-exploding rockets, without sticks; and an exploding rocket of cannon, which can be manufactured to a tremendous power, and be fired from a cannon of any calibre: it was directed against a strong target, cased with sheet iron, which it instantly tore to pieces.



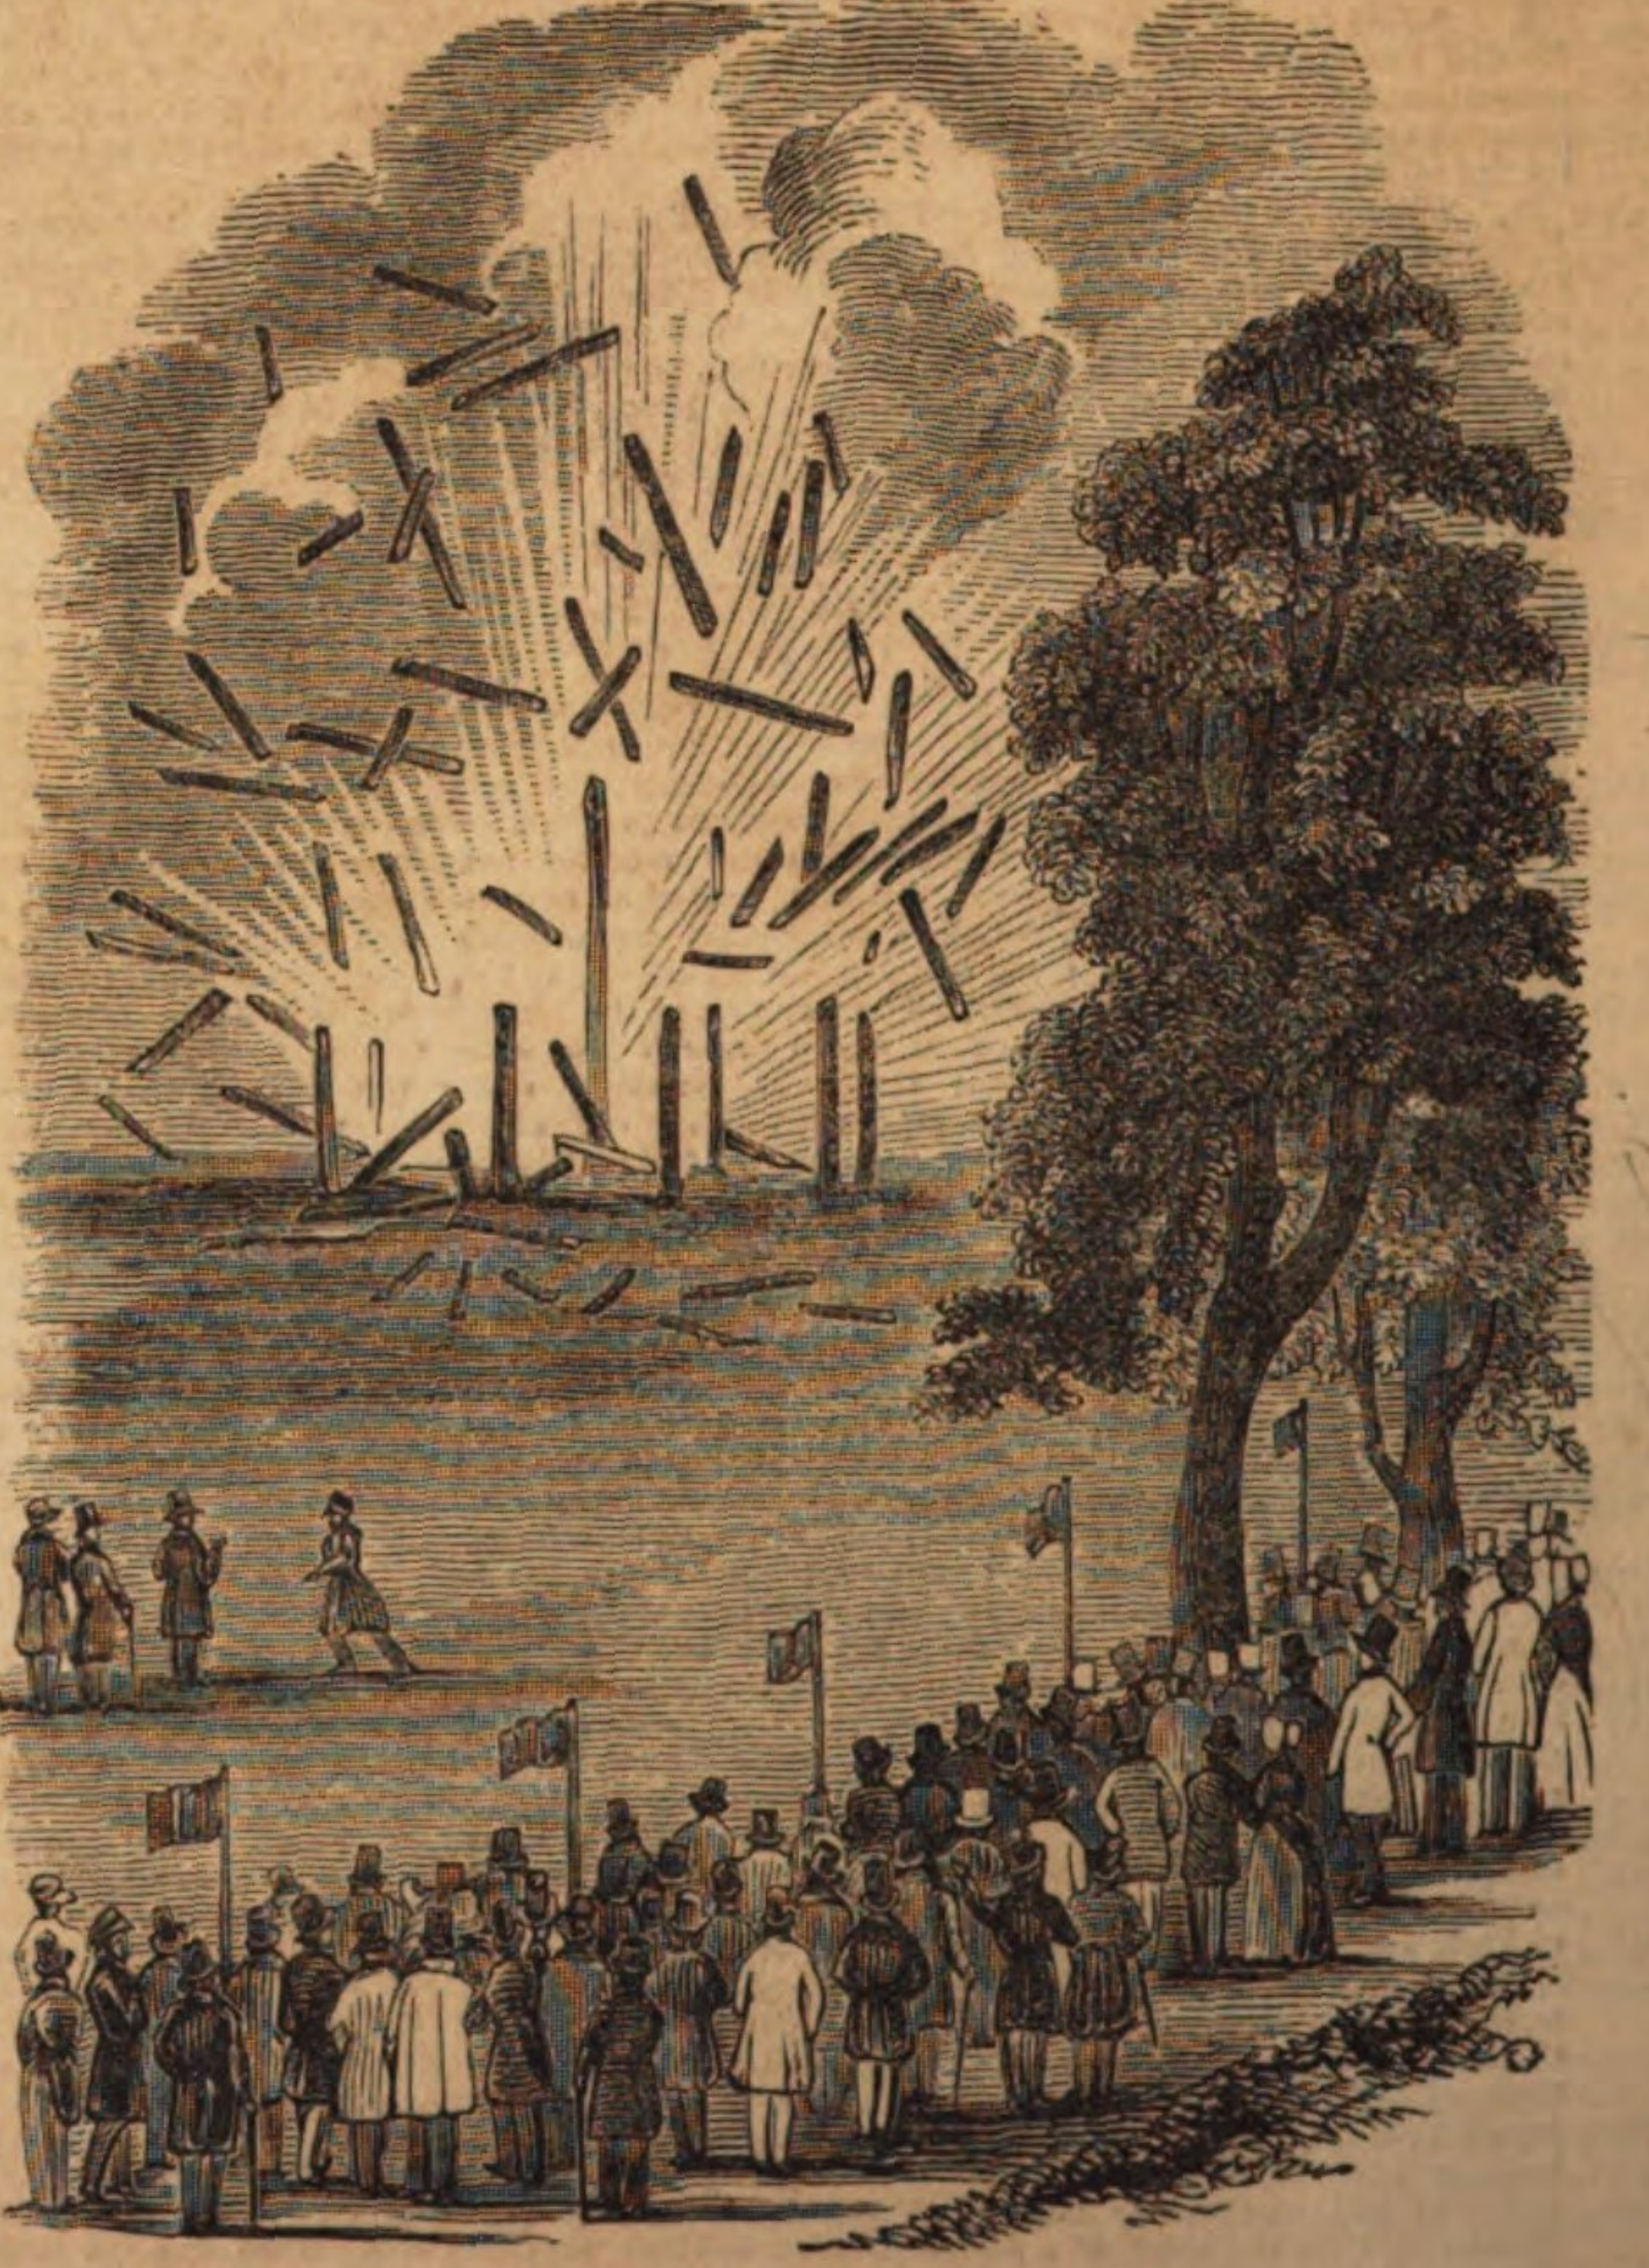
SHOWER OF HAND-ROCKETS.

But the implement which excited the most attention was a cannon upon the principle of non-recoil, which was fired several times with a strong charge of powder, without any recoil, or certainly not more than a quarter of an inch. The Society state that the principle is applicable to guns of any calibre. A telescope is attached, which they say enables the gunner to hit the smallest mark with unerring precision.



NON-RECOIL GUN.

This experiment gave rise to nearly an hour of discussion among the scientific and professional gentlemen present, till at length, the inventor (the Duke of Normandy, understood to be at the head of the Society) took the gun from the carriage, held it in his hands, and fired it, as did another gentleman present, with perfect safety, and without feeling the least effect from the recoil. The inventor then said to one of the stoutest sceptics: "I will allow you to take my gun to pieces, and if you discover the secret, I will make you a present of it; but, if you do not discover it"—("What, then?")—"you pay me. The challenge was declined.



HUT DESTROYED BY A SHELL.

It should be explained that the principal point aimed at by the inventor of the shells was to show the perfect safety with which they could be carried about; in proof of which they were let fall several times, when only the cap exploded.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid — SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1844.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

ANDREW BEST ET LELOIR. SC. A PARIS.

No. 131.—Vol. V.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1844. [Sixpence.

THE SPANISH CONSTITUTION.

ESPARTERO, the late Regent of Spain, has but just published an address to the Spanish people, in which he resigned his office, his functions ceasing on the Queen attaining her legal majority on the 10th of October. His resignation was one of form only, for he had long been an exile, without power or influence in the conduct of affairs, and the Queen had been declared of age in anticipation of the day fixed by law, to suit the purposes of the party which had got the child under its controul. Dwelling, as he did, on the efforts he had made to govern by and within the law, and on the respect he had always shown for the forms and spirit of the Constitution, this manifesto of the Duke of Victoria had an interest beyond that it derived from the circumstances amid which it was issued. It was the last homage paid to a Constitution now no more; it was a political document couched in a language that the rulers of Spain no longer understand. The Constitution of which Espartero was the servant, and as long as he could be, the defender, has ceased to exist. It is superseded by another, which, under the phrases and forms of a Constitution, is all that a Ferdinand could wish, and the whole of the people of Spain is subjected to the caprices of a profligate woman, who, like Louis XIV., is taking refuge in bigotry as an atonement for the vices of her past life, and the lawless sway of Ministers, whose only idea of government is that of the sword.

The new Constitution of Spain is a lengthy document—formal and legal in its appearance, and duly divided into heads and sections. But in no one single point is it changed, that it is not worse than the old one. It in every way invades the privileges of the people; and the few securities that are allowed to remain, may, and undoubtedly will be, broken through without ceremony or scruple on the first occasion on which it shall be thought necessary to dispense with them. There are also abundance of contradictory provisions laid down, which indicate that its promise and performance will be of no kin together. Thus it says, "All Spaniards can freely print and publish their opinions, without any previous censorship, by conforming to the laws." Who would imagine from this that the only protection the press possesses under the old Constitution, has been taken away? In all cases of libel, or what the Government may choose to consider such, the right of trial by jury is altogether destroyed. In a servile spirit of imitation of a bad model, the Spanish Ministry has copied one of the worst features of the French Constitution, such as it has become by the successive invasions of the Charter. Again, all Spaniards are declared to be equally subject to the laws; but exceptions are immediately made in favour of the army and the church, the members of which will be, we presume, only accountable to their own tribunal—the soldier to martial law, even for offences against the civil code; and the priest to his ecclesiastical courts, although guilty perhaps of crimes against society at large. Don Carlos, had he been permitted to ascend the throne on the death of his brother, or had he been placed there by his party at the beginning of the civil war, could not have made such an invasion of the liberties of the people, and certainly he could not have attempted it so openly. The liberal movement has degenerated into a military tyranny; all the struggles of the Constitutionalists, all the lives that have been sacrificed, all the blood that has been shed, have been in vain. Without calling forth a man worthy of the name of a leader, without eliciting a voice that can command a moment's attention, the last spark of Spanish liberty has been trampled out! And the outrage attracts far more notice and discussion in France and England than in Spain itself! This appears strange, but it is not impossible to account for it. In England we attach great importance to the terms and forms of law, and almost instinctively do the same when we study the laws or Constitution of another country. But in that country itself the laws may be badly administered, and the Constitution so broken and perverted as to be worse than useless. What then is the feeling created in the people who are subjected to the abuses of both? At the best, indifference and carelessness; more frequently a turbulent spirit ready to supply by revenge what the law cannot furnish by justice, and prepared to acquiesce, if not actively to promote any change, conscious that no alteration in the form of the Government will injure them in proportion to the advantages to be gained by the cabals, intrigues, and a chronic state of semi-warfare in which the Spaniards seem to delight. A Regent like Espartero governs by the law, cautiously abstains from violating it, is never even suspected of adding to his private fortune by playing fast and loose with the public revenues; and he is driven from the kingdom by the revolt of a mercenary army that seems to be absolutely at the command of any adventurer who has the means of bribing it. The people stand aloof and see the pronounciamentos of the soldiery depriving them of the only security they had for national liberty, without an effort to prevent Time passes on, and the military chief, who has got the ascendant, having shot those of his rivals whom he considered dangerous, seizes the Government, brings back the Queen-Mother, who had been deposed for her arbitrary tendencies, and then comes the stage at which we have at present arrived—the overthrow of the Constitution; slender as was the security it gave, it was something, but it is now among the things that were. Despotism has re-assumed its sway, and except some vague rumours of a wish among part of the population of the capital to excite a movement in favour of the recall of Espartero—a disposition already repressed by cavalry and infantry—there is no apparent excitement or feeling among the people. All is apathy, and will remain so till King Stork has carried his system beyond the limits of human endurance, and then those who tacitly consented to the expulsion of King Log will seize sword and musket, and purge out despotism by blood, for the Spaniard is energetic and brave, but somewhat superstitiously reverent of royalty, and weakly indulgent towards the wickedness of his Kings. He will pardon any sin if it wears the imperial purple; will recognise no merit if it resides in a plebeian. No nation but the Spanish would have permitted Ferdinand to remain on the throne, or allowed Christina to return to it. But they seem to think the Monarch a reality, and can understand him, even if a bad one; but a Constitution is to them an abstraction—and they suffer it to be taken from them without a murmur. Among ourselves it is just the reverse; the Constitution is all powerful, and the Monarch is subordinate to it, administering it, but without the power of changing, suspending, or impeding its operation. The Spaniards are cigar-smoking and bull-fighting, and taking their siesta, as composedly as ever, with their Constitution made a wreck: an attempt to innovate to one-fourth of the extent here, would convulse the whole framework of society. But we have been trained to a political system for two centuries, and our country is rich, populous, with an immense commerce, and a press that has no parallel in the world. Spain, as far as we can comprehend its condition, is almost the reverse. It is vast in extent, and thinly peopled; without roads, ships, or commerce; and just escaped from a civil war, which has demoralised society to such an extent that there is a completely organised banditti plundering up to the very gates of the capital. She is divided into provinces so distinct as to be almost like separate nations; for the Biscayan has little in common with the Andalusian, and the Arragonese differs from both. Amid such circumstances as these, an uniform Constitutional Government must be difficult to work out; yet the total indifference with which the Spaniards have seen their Charter destroyed, exhibits a degree of political degeneracy, when it is compared with the spirit of the men who gained it, that must give rise to regret.

PROCESSION OF HER MAJESTY TO OPEN THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE—DELIVERY OF THE CITY SWORD, AT TEMPLE BAR.—See page 275.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

By letters just received here, we see that many of the male leaders of English fashion—men distinguished by high rank and ample fortune, and the most versed in the art of society, such as the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Lord Dudley and Ward, Mr. H. Broadwood, M.P., Lord Clanricarde and Mr. Hubert de Burgh, &c.—several of them at present in Italy—will be immediate additions to the number of those who intend passing the winter in Paris. Amongst the ladies who contemplate a sojourn here have already been enumerated the Marchioness of Aylesbury, the Hon. Mrs. Norton, and her sister, Lady Seymour; Lady C. Paulett, the Countess of Cardigan, the Hon. Mrs. Anson, Mrs. Maberly, the Countess of Charleville, &c. &c. These gay, rich, and leading members of English society will be enlivened by the occasional presence of one who adds to the nearest approach to ubiquity and omniscience a human being has as yet attained, an acquaintance with persons of all parties, all classes, and all countries, as universal as his knowledge of science—I allude to the eccentric Lord Brougham, who goes to and fro betwixt Paris and his villa at Hyères with all the regularity and frequency, and with all the rapidity of an estafette.

By the continual afflux of Frenchmen from the provinces, and foreigners from all quarters of the globe, to the great misfortune of the nation, Paris has become France. Misfortune, I say, because nothing is so pernicious as that those who rule an empire by their power and example, should, instead of the converse with nature and the purer thoughts the country affords, be plunged constantly in the vortex of pleasures and passions of a city like Paris, where votaries of epicure from every part of the globe, are naturally prone to yield themselves to a questionable mode of life, and give an example they would not indulge in at home. All the new comers flock to the same fashionable quarters as far as they can. Lodgings near the sky are preferred in the Chausée d'Antin, to the most spacious in other faubourgs. New stories are constantly being added to the houses, until they reach the height of the Tower of Babel, and menace the sky. The height of new-built Paris houses astonishes even the most careless observer. Formerly mansions never exceeded four stories; they are now of six, seven, or even eight, without including the entresols, which are often double on the same staircase—the latter "veritable human kennels." The small broiling ovens, rather than rooms, under the roof at the 4ieme, 5ieme, and 6ieme ètages are sources of asphyxia and low fever. But all these efforts "superas evadere ad auras," which only increase the "facilis descensus averni"—do not suffice to lodge the influx of population—Paris spreads over the adjoining country. The distant line of fortifications will not suffice ultimately to bound the area of the city. Independent of the gradual absorption of the Bois de Boulogne, and the Champs Elysées, the dryads and sylvans are now flying in despair the secular alleys of the beautiful Park of Monceaux, formerly the property and favourite residence of the Duke of Orleans, Egàlité, which was planned after the designs of the famous Carmontel, and sung by so many poets. The King, Louis Philippe, has sold it to a company, who are in actual possession, and intend turning the locale into squares, in imitation of your London style of building. This style will at least preserve the "lungs of the metropolis," whilst it will add to the ornament of the capital. In the latter respect, much has been gloriously effected, although many errors have been committed. Some edifices are gilded like gingerbread; the sacred edifices are surcharged with statues and ornaments, until religious impression is destroyed—utility lost sight of for the sake of effect, as, for example, the gorgeous Maison de Ville, in which every room is inconvenient, except for balls, parties, and receptions of ceremony. The library of the town is still at the further extremity of Paris, on the quay of Austerlitz, at the corner of the Place Walhubert; but when it is restored to the Municipal Palace, the place assigned to it will still be inefficient; more than ten thousand volumes must be kept in the lofts. Where the Bande Noire has not destroyed them during the Revolution, unfortunately the beautiful monuments of past ages are too often overlaid by the new—little in harmony—as occurs at the aforesaid Hotel de Ville. Many a worse desecration is observed in other directions: for instance, There exists at the corner of the Vieille Rue du Temple and the Rue des Francs Bourgeois a relic of olden times—an ancient tower, of the most correct and elegant style of Gothic architecture, chased by ornamental work as rich as it is elegant. This turret is seen surmounting a house whose rez de chaussée is occupied by an epicier. The good man has shown his appreciation of this antique treasure by painting its basis and pendentives in a rich brown colour, and covering the delicate tracery ornamenting the body and capital of the turret with plaster of Paris. On the top flourishes the symbol of the grocer's trade—a tin sugar-loaf—and three immense pictures, hung high up in the place of former trophies of chivalry, &c., likewise symbolic of the divers trades of neighbouring shopkeepers, complete this curious ensemble. Here figures the sign of a rat-catcher—there a picture of a gigantic lady, bleeding under the lancet, announces that no fairy's midwife drives on her trade below. Independently of those extraordinary pictorial banners of tradesmen, that meet the eye in every direction, it is amusing to observe the means resorted to by shopkeepers to attract the attention of our Parisian gobemouches. For instance, a tobacconist, whose shop is on the Boulevards, hit, the other day, on an original expedient for increasing the customers to his shop. At an hour of the evening when the Boulevards were crowded with loungers, the report of a pistol was heard, and brought a rush of people to the spot, in the idea that the tobacconist had committed suicide. Very different was the sight that presented itself. In the midst of a cloud of smoke was distinguished the piquant physiognomy of a very pretty grisette, seated with perfect composure at the counter. From this moment the shop has been invaded by customers, and the aid of two policemen is found necessary to keep the crowd in order.

A perfect architectural revolution has taken place at the Boulevards des Italiens. All the splendid buildings are being seized upon by building speculators. Long since had they fixed their wishes on the vast mansion which commences at the Rue Lafitte, and which reaches to the Boulevard. The proprietor was M. Guillaume, a millionaire, who for some time resisted the most dazzling offers; but death cut short his determination; his heirs converted the bricks into gold; "notices to quit" were sent to the various tenants. This announcement came like an electric shock upon that witty original, the Marquis of Hertford. For fifteen years he had been in quiet possession of the lower portion of the "doomed house;" his entire existence had been adapted to the exigencies and agrémens of the spot. What cared he for his palaces and parks in England. Here had he collected the chef d'œuvres of the first masters of the pictorial art, both ancient and modern. Upon the announcement, not a feature expressed annoyance. "What is the sum necessary for the whole pile?" demanded the noble lord. "A million and a half," was the reply. The sum was paid!

An amusing mishap befell the other day the celebrated Solicitor-General, M. Plougonton, the terror of all political offenders. As he was returning from Nancy, the diligence in which he was travelling was stopped, and the passengers requested to show their passports, and on the declaration of the Solicitor-General that he was not furnished with one, he was, in spite of his violent protestations, carried off and brought before the Commissary of Police, who ordered him to be taken to prison. The indignation of the infuriated Solicitor-General knew no bounds; but he in vain threatened with the thunders of the law the obdurate and unmoved functionary. Fortunately the discovery of a confidential letter, from the Minister of Justice, in one of his pockets, which he had overlooked in his wrath, procured him his liberty.

A great deal of curiosity is excited here by a law-suit, brought against the Marquis d' Aligre, so well known for his immense fortune and just pride of birth, by a certain Madame Bouchet. She claims the restitution of certain titres de noblesse, of which she accuses the ancestors of the Marquis of having robbed her!

A highly interesting question, both in a judicial as well as a philosophical point of view, appears about to be set at rest, after agitating the tribunals of France from end to end. Messieurs Danger and Flaudin, who signalized themselves by their opposition to M. Orfila's celebrated toxicological theory, by which it would seem that men were in a perpetual state of empoisonnement, brought, the other day, the result of later experiments before the Académie de Sciences. These gentlemen having been for some time nourishing two dogs with oxyde of copper, proceeding first with small doses, and gradually increasing them, found, on examination after death, that there only existed in the bodies of these poor animals some atoms of the poison with which they had been inundated during life. M. Arago, the astronomer, in making his report on this memoir, at the Académie de Sciences, with a sarcastic smile alluded to "the general belief which had lately existed amongst chemical philosophers." The celebrated chemist, Thenard, immediately rose, and begged to deny that such an opinion ever existed in the mind of any of his philosophical brethren—a terrible hit for the inventor of the theory, M. Orfila, Dean of the Faculty. This is glad news—not only to the wretched persons accused of poisoning, but also to the judges, barristers, and juries, who were themselves often really poisoned by the experiments perpetrated in boiling the remains of the supposed victims of poisoning, to seek deadly elements which were created by the very process employed.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers, in the absence of political topics of an exciting character, devote some attention to the unsettled state of Spain, and the recently published outline of a new constitution for that country. Some unpleasant intelligence had been received in Paris from Algiers. It is to the following effect:—

"Events of a very serious nature have just taken place at about ten leagues from Dellys, in the part of the country not yet subdued of one of the three Agalicks organized by the Marshal upon his departure for Morocco.

"At the very moment that General Coruman was about to quit the country, which he fancied in a state of tranquillity, in order to return to Dellys, and thence to Algiers, he was informed that the Kabyles were again collected, and in a very numerous force. Assured of the truth of this information, he formed his small body of troops into three columns, which he ordered to march towards the spot where the Kabyles had gathered.

"The column commanded by Colonel Saint Arnaud arrived the first, and was obliged to sustain alone, for a great length of time (it is said that the combat lasted six hours), the onset of the Kabyles, three or four times more numerous than itself. It defended itself with vigour, and had almost entirely exhausted all its ammunition when the other two columns came up.

"One of them, commanded by Colonel Forey, one of the most distinguished officers of the French troops in Africa, had been delayed by the bad state of the roads, and by the attack of another body of Kabyles, which came to increase the already numerous body of the combatants.

"It is reported that twenty-nine men have been killed, and 130 wounded, among whom are more than twelve officers; one of whom has been obliged to suffer amputation.

"A steamer arrived in the evening of the 19th, with 106 wounded, and an account of this unfortunate affair.

"The Marshal immediately gave orders for the departure of all the troops of the 3rd léger, and of the 53rd of the line, which still remained at Algiers, and embarked himself with his staff and his aides-de-camp, determined not to return until everything should be terminated in that part of the country."

A letter from Algiers, of the 20th, published in the Siecle, says there were 130 of the French killed and wounded, of whom fifteen were officers. Thirty-five men and two officers were killed.

There have been some violent storms in the south of France, attended with great loss of life and destruction of property. At Cette a water spout fell upon the town on the 22nd ult., the ravages of which are thus described:—"This terrible phenomenon, which arrived in the direction of the Fortress of St. Pierre, skirted the mole in its whole length, and when it came opposite the engineers' establishment, attracted probably by the conductor and the zinc roof of the house, it turned round the edifice, and at last fell with violence upon it. At the same moment a violent explosion was heard, and the whole population thought that its last hour was come. During two minutes space of time a terrific crash resounded in the air. The roofs of the houses were smashed to pieces, and the fragments were carried to the most distant part of the town. The building belonging to the engineers has been entirely sacked; its zinc roof was carried off in the twinkling of an eye, and the whole façade demolished and raised to the ground, so that nothing now remains of it but the back and side walls. Another house, four stories high, new and solidly built, belonging to M. Labaille, was literally crushed to the earth."

A fearful inundation joined at the same time its ravages to those of the electric waterspout. In an instant the waters of the canal rose and flooded the quays. It was a pitiable spectacle to see all the lighters loaded with wines torn into the current, driven one against the other, and then swallowed up by the element. At least a dozen boats were sunk in the canal itself, and what was the most terrible is, that most of them had their crews on board. Some few were able to save themselves, the others have perished. It is supposed that nearly thirty have been carried down with their boats.

In Marseilles the inundations were so great that the water rose above the carriage wheels in the streets. In Toulouse a terrific storm visited the town on the 24th instant. At Avignon and other towns, the Rhone, the Durance, and the Saone had overflowed, and committed considerable ravages.

We find by these papers that some individuals have made a rich harvest in France and Belgium, by passing off forged £100 Bank of England notes to the money-changers.

SPAIN.

Our letters from Madrid, which are to the 23d ult., state that the position of affairs in Spain was very menacing, and that outbreaks were apprehended. Narvaez has taken extraordinary exertions to maintain his power. The Ministry have been successful in inducing the Senate to adopt the address, in answer to the Queen's speech, in the exact terms proposed by the committee. Reports prevailed of alarming disturbances in Gallicia.

PORTUGAL.

Our accounts from Lisbon to the 24th ult. state that the Ministry have had a majority of 48 in the Chamber of Deputies, in favour of their late decrees; and their continuance in office is thus rendered secure for the present. No news was stirring at Lisbon.

SWEDEN.

Letters from Stockholm state that the King of Sweden had demanded of the Diet authority to concede to a foreign power (not named, but presumed to be France), under somewhat disadvantageous circumstances, the island of St. Bartholomew. The pretext for this demand is, that the colony costs more than it is worth. St. Bartholomew is one of the smaller Antilles, situated to the north of Guadaloupe, and comprising a population of 5000 souls. It has been attached to Sweden since 1784, when it was ceded to that country by France.

THE UNITED STATES.

Arrival of the Caledonia.—The Caledonia, Captain Lott, has arrived at Liverpool, with New York papers to the 15th ult., Boston to the 16th, and Halifax to the 19th ult. The chief point of interest at New York turned upon the elections in the different states of the union.

The New York Herald mentions an important decision which has recently been given in Boston, that a slave can only serve on board an United States national vessel while that vessel is within the slave limits of that country, and that the moment the vessel passes without those limits he can claim his discharge.

The New York papers are endeavouring to create a little excitement out of an account received from Rio Janeiro of a rupture between the commander of the British brig of war Alert, Captain Bosanquet; and Captain Dumas, of the brig Cyrus, of New Orleans. It appears, that when lying off Calinda, on the coast of Africa, the British captain came alongside of the Cyrus, and suspecting her to be a slaver, demanded to see the brig's papers. This the American captain refused, and at length the box or chest containing them was broken open, and the documents were examined by the captain of the English vessel, he of the suspected brig protesting against the proceeding in loud and indignant terms. It is added, that after the British captain had left the Cyrus she was sold to the Portuguese, and immediately filled with slaves. During the altercation, and before the sale, the British captain is reported to have said to the American, "The reason you cannot show me the papers is because you have sold your vessel—I was told so." The American captain's version of the affair is evidently exaggerated, and contains a great deal of idle bombast, such as the "American flag trampled upon by the British," "our flag is insulted, it will cost the English nation dear," &c., and he accuses the English captain of being a coward and turning pale! His letter is published in the American papers, and duly penned with imposing capitals and notes of admiration.

The New York money market is stated to be flat. When the packet sailed, the rate of exchange at New York on London was high, 110.

In Canada, also, there is much electioneering excitement caused by the junction of the Irish and the French parties in the province, both opposed, of course, to the Government of Sir Charles Metcalfe. Rumours prevail that Papineau was about to return; he is now in France. Quebec exhibited some disturbance on the occasion of the Repeal party celebrating the triumph of O'Connell; they burned tar barrels in honour of the event, and smashed the windows of several houses which did not exhibit lights in commemoration of the event.

According to the Quebec Mercury of the 10th October, a smart shock of an earthquake had been experienced at Valcartier on the preceding Sunday.

A Boston paper states that the Governor of Cape Coast Castle, Mr. M'Lean, the husband of the unfortunate "L. E. L." (Miss Landon), had arrived in that city.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The Overland Mail has arrived by express, with papers from India to the 17th of September, and from China to the 29th of July, being a month later than those received by the last mail. Although they do not announce any fact of particular importance, yet the news is of an interesting character.

☞ Sir Henry Hardinge is stated to have commenced his administration with great discretion and vigour, and a very favourable augury is drawn from his appointment. The Punjaub is not in a very tranquil state. In Scinde, also, Captain Mackenzie has had another skirmish with the Beloochees.

Advices from Cabul mention, that an engagement had taken place on the 2d of Aug., between Akhbar Khan and Aubdool Summund, in which a great deal of bravery had been displayed on both sides. The former came off the victor, capturing, among his prisoners, two generals of the enemy. The loss on the side of the people of Cabul was estimated at 3000, while that of the enemy was stated to be 5000, besides prisoners.

We are sorry to notice the death from fever, of Lieut. Mackintosh, late Aide-de-Camp to Lord Ellenborough.

The Chinese papers mention the recurrence of disturbances at Canton. The English last year repaired the walls of the Company's garden, which had been broken down at the fire in 1842. They put on a gate, and were in the habit of walking, playing at quoits, and otherwise amusing themselves. On the 15th of July the Chinese endeavoured to force themselves into the garden, but were opposed. Upon this they threw brickbats, and broke down the gate, compelling the Englishmen to take refuge in a boat, in which they made their escape to the Consulate. On the following evening a party of Chinese went armed with brickbats, and attempted to take possession of the other garden. Resistance being offered, they commenced an indiscriminate attack upon all the foreigners who came within their reach. Several American gentlemen immediately armed themselves, and drove them from the front of the factories. Still continuing to throw brickbats, they were fired upon, and one man killed, and another wounded in the arm, which ended the affair for the day. The rioting was not continued on the succeeding day.

The Calcutta money market was quiet, and capital was in great abundance. Commercial matters in China were dull. Yarn was still in a depressed state.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The New Royal Exchange.—The public have been admitted, by ticket, during the week, to pass through the rooms occupied at the recent Royal banquet, as well as to survey the tesselated pavement, encaustic paintings, &c. Placards were placed throughout the building, intimating that subscriptions would be received for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the workmen who had lost their lives in the building; but many complained that it would have been much more advantageous to such fund had sixpence been charged for the admission of each person, as very few indeed turned aside to put money into the boxes appropriated for the purpose.

An Old Street Newly Named.—Cateaton-street has been named Gresham-street, and the end houses labelled accordingly.

Suicide by a Parish Officer.—Mr. Charles Fair, tax-collector in the parish of Clerkenwell, committed suicide at his residence in Charles-street, Northampton-square, on Monday night last, by cutting his throat.

At a Court of Aldermen, held on Tuesday, a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the Lord Mayor, for the manner in which he had conducted himself during the ceremonial.

Mortality of London.—The number of deaths in the metropolis during the week ending last Saturday, was 935, showing the mortality of the present season still under the weekly average, which, deduced from the returns of the last five years, is 946. Among the deaths from old age and natural decay is mentioned one of a female aged 100.

Alleged Ministerial Changes.—It is reported in circles likely to be correctly iuformed, that Lord Haddington is about to retire as First Lord of the Admiralty, and that Lord Ellenborough will take his place.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Death of a Miser at Brighton.—On Saturday week a very old inhabitant of Brighton, Mr. Thomas Ruxton, died worth some £10,000. He had lived alone for many years, denying himself every comfort, and preparing what food he did indulge in himself. His property, under a will made six years ago, goes to his sister's children, but they are not to be found.

Very Strange Suicide at Kilmarnock.—It is not an uncommon thing in France for lovers to commit suicide together; but in this country such double suicides are of rare occurrence. A singular instance, however, has recently occurred near Kilmarnock. The bodies of a lady and gentleman, apparently sixty years of age, have been found in the river Irvine, about three miles from Kilmarnock. They were attached by two handkerchiefs, knotted together, and tied round the arm of each. The linen of the gentleman was marked B; and in the lady's pocket, among other things, was a seal, with the word "Kate" on it. They had lived as man and wife at the Commercial Inn, at Kilmarnock. A local paper mentions that the name of Atkinson was found in the gentleman's hat, but all is conjecture as to their identity.

More Incendiarism in Bedfordshire.—A fire broke out on Sunday night in a barn on the farm of Mr. John Hall, of Whorley-end, near Cronfield. The building was detached from the stack-yard, or the entire homestead must have been consumed. The produce of 11 acres of wheat, besides a quantity of beans, was destroyed.

IRELAND.

The Repeal Association.—The meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday, offered nothing of the least interest. A Repeal warden, named Hussey, was expulsed from the roll, for quarrelling with his fellow wardens. The amount of rent was announced to be £475 15s. 5d. The subscription for Father Mathew is proceeding. The Duke of Leinster has given £50 and the Earl of Fortescue £25 towards the fund.

Attempt at Murder in Irishtown.—On Sunday a man named Francis Beddy, who resides in Irishtown, whilst at dinner with his wife, attempted to murder her by stabbing her with a knife in the side. The alarm was given, and the culprit was at once secured. The wound is of a very serious nature, but the doctors hope not of a vital character. The prisoner was brought before the magistrates of College-street Office, Dublin, on Monday, and remanded for further examination until the result of the inquiry can be satisfactorily ascertained.

Serious Accident to the Earl of Besborough.—The Earl of Besborough met with a serious accident on Saturday last. His lordship was riding out of the court-yard, in front of the house at Besborough, when his horse tripped, fell, and rolled over him. Dr. Purcell was immediately sent for, and on examination it was found that his lordship had sustained a very severe contusion on the hip-joint.

Disturbance in Galway.—The steam frigrte Cyclops has gone round from Tarbert to Galway Bay, to assist in quelling disturbances arising out of disputed rights of fisheries.

POLICE.

The Gentleman and the Hotel-keepers.—At Marlborough-street, on Tuesday, Louis Woodcock, a gentleman of property, who is well known from his disputes with various hotel-keepers with whom he has at times taken up his abode, was charged with having broken two lamp-shades, and also assaulted Mrs. Coquerell, landlady of the European Hotel, Leicester-place. It appeared that the defendant went to the European Hotel to obtain some linen he had left there, but the linen was refused to him until he had paid the balance of his bill. This excited the defendant, and with his stick he broke the glasses in question, and then afterwards struck the landlady a blow on the mouth and two on the body. He was fined £3.

Provocation to Fight by an Ex-M.P.—At Union-hall, on Tuesday, Mr. John Quincy Harris, the late M.P. for Newcastle-under-Lyme, appeared to answer a charge of endeavouring to provoke Mr. Philip Roberts, of Upper Montague-street, Russell-square, to a breach of the peace. The parties, it appeared, were connected by marriage, and in consequence of family disputes Mr. Harris had challenged Mr. Roberts to fight a duel. Mr. Harris was ordered to enter into his own recognizances in £500 to keep the peace.

A Lady Committed for Breaking the Peace.—On Wednesday, at Hammersmith, Mrs. Susannah Folkard, 10, Pelham-road, Brompton, who has repeatedly appeared at that court on similar charges, appeared before Mr. T. Paynter, the sitting magistrate, on summons charging her with having, on the 16th day of October last, and on divers other days, burst into the house of Colonel Francis Home, at Knightsbridge, in the metropolitan police district, and then and there behaved in a menacing and violent manner, whereby the said Francis Home apprehends some bodily harm. The magistrate ordered her to find two sureties in £10 each to keep the peace, upon which the defendant declared that she would die in prison first, and then the public would know the villany with which Colonel Home had treated her. She was accordingly conveyed to prison.

Complaint of Lord Ranelagh against a Police Inspector.—On Wednesday, at Bow-street, Inspector Barton, of the G division, appeared before Mr. Twyford, by order of the police commissioners, to answer a complaint preferred against him by Lord Ranelagh, for having assaulted him on Monday last in the Strand. His Lordship being sworn said, about twenty minutes to two o'clock on Monday, being in company with Sir Thomas Hare in the Strand, he was proceeding towards Charing Cross, when an order was received to clear the streets, as the Queen was on her return from the Royal Exchange, and as he was making his way to pass the crowd two policemen desired them to pass on to the footway pavement, which they omitted to do, but got on as well as they could with the crowd. The police then pushed him on, and on his remonstrating, as there was no occasion to hurry, it brought up another policeman, with whom he also remonstrated. A third policeman next came behind him, who, without inquiring into the cause of the altercation, pushed him violently against the curb-stone, and against the persons who were near to it. At the impulse of the moment he turned round to strike the person who had assaulted him, but the blow, fortunately, was not received by the constable. The defendant, who he then saw was the person who had pushed him, immediately seized him by the coat, waistcoat, and neckcloth, using the most violent language.—Mr. Twyford: Am I then to understand you struck the defendant?—Complainant: No, he was then too far from me; but I made the blow from the first impulse, feeling that I had been assaulted.—After a long examination of several witnesses, Mr. Twyford said his opinion was that the defendant had not exceeded his duty, and dismissed the complaint.

OPENING OF THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE, BY HER MAJESTY.

On Monday last, the splendid Ceremonial of the Inauguration of the New Royal Exchange was enacted with all the circumstance befitting so truly national an event. As a chronicle of the proceedings will doubtless hereafter occupy a prominent position in our regal and civic history, we have illustrated the principal scenes of the Pageant and the Ceremony to the full extent of this week's journal; and, as the best accompaniment for these picturesque records, we have taken the utmost care to insure the accuracy of the descriptive details, by collecting the several accounts narrated by our contemporaries, and testing them by our own observation (with considerable assistance), at the several grand stages of the event.

THE DEPARTURE FROM BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

In its natural order, our account, of course, must commence with the proceedings in St. James's Park, previously to, and after the departure of, the procession.

Before eight o'clock, numbers of persons had assembled round the Palace and in the Park, to occupy the best positions for seeing her Majesty pass.

At nine o'clock St. James's Park began rapidly to fill, and thousands of spectators ranged themselves in line down the Mall, from the Palace gates to the German Chapel, along which route the Royal carriages were to pass.

At ten o'clock the crowd in the Park, chiefly of well-dressed people, had increased to a dense mass, eight or ten deep on each side the way.

Shortly after ten o'clock the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), under the command of Captain Oliver, marched into the Park: a portion of these formed part of the Royal escort, the rest were stationed at intervals on the line through the Park, to aid in keeping back the crowd. The 17th Regiment of Lancers, from Hounslow, next marched through the Park, and formed from Marlborough-gate, where the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) terminated, keeping the line along Pall-mall to Charing-cross; the rest of the line to Temple-bar was kept by parties of the 1st and 2nd Regiments of Royal Horse Guards.

Soon after, a strong detachment of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, under the command of Lord William Beresford, ranged themselves to the right of the Palace gates; and a similar detachment of the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, under the command of Capt. Roche, ranged themselves opposite, to the left, to form the Royal escort. The whole of the cavalry were under the command of Major-General Lygon. The Ensigns of the two regiments of Life Guards and of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), bearing the colours of their respective regiments, with the Royal trumpeter, were ranged to the right, close to the Palace gates.

About twenty minutes to eleven o'clock the Royal carriages (the magnificent Royal state carriage drawn by eight beautiful cream-coloured horses, decked in their gorgeous trappings) drove to the Palace, followed by a troop of Yeomen of the Guard.

About five minutes past eleven o'clock her Majesty entered the Royal carriage, and the procession immediately formed. On emerging from under the marble arch, her Majesty was greeted with the greatest enthusiasm—the cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs being continued down the whole of the densely-crowded line. Her Majesty repeatedly acknowledged these bursts of enthusiasm in the most gracious and graceful manner, by bowing on either side.

Her Majesty's dress was of white satin (silver tissue) of the richest and most elegant design, portions of the pattern, representing leaves and foliage, being of different textures, and some having the effect of burnished silver. It was open in front from the girdle, increasing in width as it approached the bottom, and displaying a petticoat of the most valuable old point lace.

The sleeves were short, and at the top of each was a very brilliant diamond ornament.

The dress had a most chaste and magnificent appearance, the silver-brocaded satin of which it was composed being ornamented with valuable diamonds down each side of the front, placed at intervals on white satin bows.

The dress was of Spitalfields manufacture.

Her Majesty had a most splendid diamond stomacher, some of the brilliants in it being of extraordinary size and lustre, and on the left side the Queen wore the star of the Order of the Garter, having the cross in the centre formed of rubies, and the rest of the star composed of diamonds.

Her Majesty wore at the back of her head a miniature crown entirely formed of brilliants, and a diamond tiara surmounting the forehead. The necklace, earrings, and bracelets were of brilliants.

Over the left shoulder was the riband of the Garter, looped with diamonds, and having a most magnificent "George" suspended, composed of large and valuable brilliants; and on the left arm was the Garter of purple velvet, edged with diamonds, and having the motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense," set in diamonds.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert wore the uniform of Captain-General and Colonel of the Honourable Artillery Company, with the insignia of the most noble Order of the Garter and the Golden Fleece.

The Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, and the officers of the royal household wore the full dress household costume, and the Earl of Jersey his uniform as Master of the Horse, with the insignia of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order. The Duke of Norfolk carried his gold baton as Earl Marshal of England. The Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, and the Captain of the Yeomen Guard wore the uniforms of their respective corps. The Marquis of Anglesey appeared in the uniform of his regiment, the Royal Horse Guards, with the insignia of the Garter, and of two foreign orders. The Earl of Rosslyn wore his uniform as Master of the Buck Hounds.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent left her residence, Clarence House, St. James's, with her suite, in two carriages, escorted by a party of Life Guards, at a quarter before eleven o'clock.

The dress of the Royal Duchess was of white satin and silver, of Spitalfields manufacture. The head-dress, of feathers and diamonds.

The Duke of Cambridge left Cambridge House, attended by Baron Knesebeck, Equerry in Waiting, and escorted by a party of Life Guards.

The Royal Duke was habited in the uniform of a Field Marshal, and wore a star, set in diamonds, of the Order of the Garter, and the riband and badge. His Royal Highness also wore the Stars of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, and of the most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The following is the order of the procession, which left the Palace-gates at about five minutes past eleven o'clock. The route was along the Park, through the iron gates, by the German Chapel, into Pall-mall, along Pall-mall-east, the Strand, Fleet-street, Ludgate-hill, St. Paul's Churchyard, Cheapside, to the Royal Exchange:—

Detachment of Life Guards.
Her Majesty's Carriages,
Each drawn by Six Horses.
Two Grooms walking. The First Carriage, Drawn by Six Bays, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed Gentleman Usher of the Sword of State, Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber, Exon of the Yeomen of the Guard, Page of Honour in Waiting.
Two Grooms walking. The Second Carriage, Drawn by Six Bays, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed Lord George Lennox, Lord in Waiting to Prince Albert; the Hon. Capt. Duncombe, Groom in Waiting; Capt. F. Seymour, Groom in Waiting to Prince Albert; Silver Stick.
Two Grooms walking. The Third Carriage, Drawn by Six Bays, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed Lord Byron, Lord in Waiting; Earl Jermyn, Treasurer of the Household; Lord Ernest Bruce, Vice Chamberlain; the Right Hon. Colonel G. Dawson Damer, Comptroller of the Household.
Two Grooms walking. The Fourth Carriage, Drawn by Six Bays, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed the Marquis of Exeter, Groom of the Stole to Prince Albert; the Earl of Beverley, Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard; Lord Forrester, Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms; and the Earl of Rosslyn, Master of the Buckhounds.
Two Grooms walking. The Fifth Carriage, Drawn by Six Bays, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed the Hon. Miss Kerr, Maid of Honour; Bedchamber Woman; the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal; Gold Stick.
Two Grooms walking. The Sixth Carriage, Drawn by Six Blacks, Two Grooms walking.
Conveyed Lady Portman, Lady of the Bedchamber; the Hon. Miss A. Murray, Maid of Honour in Waiting; the Earl of Liverpool, Lord Steward; Earl Delawarr, Lord Chamberlain.
Yeomen of the Guard.
Twelve Footmen, four and four.
Four Grooms walking. The State Coach, Drawn by Eight Cream-coloured Horses. Four Grooms walking.
Attended by a Yeoman of the Guard at each Wheel, and Two Footmen at each door, conveying
THE QUEEN,
His Royal Highness Prince Albert;
The Mistress of the Robes, the Duchess of Buccleuch;
The Master of the Horse, the Earl of Jersey.
Escort of Life Guards.

The carriages of the Ambassadors and Foreign Ministers assembled at the lower end of St. James's-street, and fell into the line immediately after the Queen's procession.

The carriages of the Cabinet Ministers fell into the line immediately after those of the Ambassadors and Foreign Ministers.

The general direction of the procession was under the orders of Lord Charles Wellesley, Clerk Marshal; Major-General Wemyss, Equerry to the Queen; and Lieut-Colonel Bouverie, Equerry to Prince Albert.

ARRIVAL IN PALL-MALL.

On emerging from the Park into Pall-mall the scene was most exciting. Every balcony and every window—nay, every roof, where it was possible to obtain a view, was crowded. The streets on each side presented a dense and unbroken mass of human beings, with difficulty kept back within the bounds of their confined space by lines of policemen and mounted Lancers. Proceeding past the magnificent club-houses of Pall-mall, the cheering was most enthusiastic, and elegantly-dressed ladies from every window waved handkerchiefs in abundance. Passing the Italian Opera-house, the top of the Arcade was covered by a dense crowd of ladies. At Pall-mall East, the space in which the statue of George III. is placed was curiously crowded—little urchins formed a pyramid of heads to the very legs of the horse on which the statue rests.

About nine o'clock the Duke of Wellington passed through the yard of St. James's Palace in a private carriage, on his way to the City. He was dressed in the uniform of Field Marshal, and looked extremely well.

Long before the time for the appearance of the procession the streets were literally crammed with spectators, and the police had some difficulty in keeping them within bounds.

The Duchess of Kent passed in a carriage and four escorted by a party of Life Guards.

The houses in Pall-mall were mostly fitted up with seats to accommodate visitors, and as early as nine o'clock we saw many a fair head at open windows, without any covering, exposed to the chilly air. The 2nd Life Guards mustered in Waterloo-place soon after ten o'clock, and afterwards proceeded eastwards. To the 17th Lancers was deputed the duty of lining Pall-mall and the route to Charing-cross, where they joined the 2nd Life Guards. At the bottom of St. James's-street a space was reserved for the carriages of the Foreign Ministers to assemble, and before half-past ten—the time named in the programme—they were in readiness to join the Royal procession.

At Trafalgar-square, the boarded space around the Nelson monument had been opened, the steps around the monument affording a capital view to those admitted. The crowd on these steps presented a curious aspect—a pyramid of heads rising one above another, with the steps, to the plinth of the pillar, around which they appeared to cling like a swarm of bees. The crowd was immense in Trafalgar-square, extending up the steps of the Church of St. Martin's-in-the-fields, the bells of which were merrily ringing; the union jack and Royal standard decorating its spire.

CHARING-CROSS AND THE STRAND.

It having been arranged that the equipages of the Ambassadors and the other Foreign Ministers should fall in after the Royal carriages upon their entering Pall-mall, Charing-cross was, from the fact of the dense masses who assembled there, deemed the first point at which a good view of the procession could readily be obtained. As early as seven o'clock in the morning that locality presented a very bustling appearance. Vehicles of every description, conveying parties to their respective destinations for the day, passed by in rapid succession towards the eastern end of the metropolis, whilst pedestrians, thousands in number, moved in the same direction. Workmen were busily engaged in the various houses, preparing seats for those who might choose to occupy them; and flags and banners were being spread from the windows in profusion. Towards nine o'clock the rumbling of carriage wheels was heard less frequently, as the police were ordered to stop all conveyances that did not contain some person who had a ticket of admission to the Exchange, and before ten o'clock the neighbourhood became comparatively silent: little more was heard than the voices of those persons who had congregated, and were struggling to secure good places. The people, however, were exceedingly good-humoured, and joked with each other upon the various causes of pressure from within, and consequent breaches of the order of the lines, which, by the way, were admirably kept by the metropolitan police, who discharged their duty very temperately. Shortly after ten o'clock, three regiments of the household brigade marched past, and a portion of them took up positions at intervals to assist the police in maintaining order. From that period till eleven o'clock the carriages of the nobility, the great officers of state, and others who were invited to be present at the ceremony of opening the Exchange continued to roll by. Amongst them were those of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who was escorted by a party of the Horse Guards; her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Sir R. Peel, Lord Stanley, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c. Perhaps at no point on the route was a more animating scene presented than at this, when the period arrived that the Royal procession was approaching. With the exception of the line through which it was to pass, every spot in the immense area of Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, and the pathways leading to the Strand, was covered with people, and the windows of the houses were crowded with ladies and gentlemen.

At ten minutes after eleven o'clock, the royal cortège came in sight at the end of Cockspur-street, and the utmost excitement prevailed to catch a glimpse of her Majesty. Those who were in the background attempted to rush forward in the direction of the Strand, but they were happily restrained by the exertions of the police, else serious consequences must have ensued. As the Queen approached, the greatest demonstrations of loyalty were manifested towards her and her Royal Consort by the assembled multitude, which her Majesty and Prince Albert graciously acknowledged.

After the procession had passed, another rush was made by the crowd to follow it, and, notwithstanding all the exertions of the police and military to repress it, they succeeded in reaching Hungerford-street, and after a short time the lines were completely broken through.

Many of the balconies along the Strand were covered with cloth, hung with festoons of different coloured stuffs, and with bows of ribbons and artificial flowers, and a union jack or a Royal flag floated over the heads of the crowd from almost every window. Here the letting of seats to view the procession appeared to begin, and, if possible, more gaily-dressed people were crammed into each window. The reader of history was reminded of the description of Queen Elizabeth's celebrated entry into the City on her accession to the throne:—

"Gowns of velvet or satin richly trimmed with silk furs or gold lace, costly gold chains, and caps or hoods of rich materials, adorned with feathers or ouches, decorated on all occasions of display the persons, not of nobles and courtiers alone, but of their crowds of retainers and higher menials, and even of the wealthy citizens. Hangings of cloth, of silk velvet, and cloth of gold or silver, adorned on days of family festivity the upper chamber of every house of respectable appearance. These, on public festivals, were suspended from the balconies, and uniting with the banners and pennons floating over head, gave to the streets almost the appearance of a suite of long and gaily-dressed saloons. Every circumstance thus conspired to render the public entry of Queen Elizabeth the most gorgeous, and at the same time the most interesting, spectacle of the kind ever exhibited in the English metropolis."

There was the same rich adornment "even of the wealthy citizens;" and though "hangings of silk velvet and cloth of gold" were not suspended from the "upper chambers of every house," yet flags and banners, and innumerable handkerchiefs, waved from every window; and the entry of our present gracious Queen Victoria into her metropolis, though perhaps not marked with so much gorgeousness, from the altered customs of the age, exhibited at the least in every other respect as much of interest, of enthusiasm, and of triumph, as the public entry into the city of her illustrious predecessor Elizabeth. This was the scene presented along the Strand eastward, varied only here and there by a greater or less profusion of flags.

The Royal cortège entered the Strand from Charing-cross precisely at half-past eleven o'clock, amidst the enthusiastic applause of the assembled multitudes.

Near the church of St. Mary-le-Strand the students of King's College were drawn up in line; and the children of the parochial schools, who had been accommodated with very convenient seats in front of the church, rose on the approach of her Majesty, and sung with great enthusiasm the national anthem, evidently to her Majesty's great gratification. A platform had also been erected in St. Clement's Churchyard, where a large number of the children belonging to that parish were delighted with a most excellent view of the procession.

A curious and somewhat amusing incident occurred in the Strand during the passing of the Royal procession. It is usual on all such public occasions to have many of the police stationed in different parts of the streets, dressed in coloured clothes, in order more effectually to keep an eye upon thieves and pickpockets. One of these men had discovered a common thief in the act of picking the pocket of a student of King's College, and took him into custody. At the same moment, as some of the constables who were keeping the line were about to pounce upon him, the latter, mistaking their brother officer in the coloured clothes for a friend of the thief who wished to rescue him, began to belabour him with their staves; and it was not until after he had received several severe blows on the head that he succeeded in making them believe that he was what he represented himself. The thief was, however, secured.

The spectacle at St. Clement's church was perhaps the most beautiful on the line. Not only were the houses on the right hand side of the Strand crowded with elegantly dressed ladies, but to the left every window from which even the slightest glance could be obtained was occupied. On the top of the church and on the houses in all directions anxious groups were to be seen. As the Queen passed the church, her Majesty was evidently pleased with the pretty appearance of the flags which decorated the seats of that edifice, and directed the attention of Prince Albert to them. The effect produced by these flags, with a representation of the Royal Exchange, forming part of an announcement of the Illustrated London News, was exceedingly good, and attracted considerable notice. Altogether, the coup d'œil was beautiful in the extreme. The sun was shining brilliantly on a a part of the crescent on th eleft, which heightened the effect from the contrast presented by those portions of the surrounding buildings on which the sun's rays were not thrown. The ladies at the windows waved their handkerchiefs enthusiastically, and at this spot the state carriage stopped for an instant, as there was a slight impediment to the preceding part of the procession. Her Majesty turned her head several times towards the right-hand side of the Strand, from whence the cheers proceeded at the moment, and acknowledged them very gracefully. Prince Albert also bowed repeatedly.

The Royal carriage proceeded from this point to Temple-bar at a very slow pace. Arrived at the bar, the Royal carriage stopped under the archway, the gates being open, and was met there by the civic authorities. The ceremonial which there took place will be found detailed below. After the passing of the procession some confusion took place on the City side of Temple-bar, owing to the crowd breaking through the line.

THE STRAND SIDE OF TEMPLE-BAR.

So perfectly clear of all obstruction was the appointed route of the Royal procession kept, that it experienced no check or interruption to its advance until its arrival at the very threshold of its destination.

The time occupied between the early gathering of spectators at this spot and the arrival of the Royal cavalcade furnished but little for description in the shape of incident. The shop-windows, the usual wares being removed, were filled with seats, and the seats with ladies, exposing to public gaze a galaxy of beauty and fashion. The upper windows, too, were occupied to the very attics; and above them were not a few adventurous persons, sitting like sparrows upon the house-tops, with unrivalled patience awaiting to snatch a bird's-eye view of carriage roofs and hat-crowns.

At eleven o'clock the Queen's yeomen passed by, and more guards proceeded to line the streets; and a few minutes afterwards the Duke of Cambridge, in his carriage, rode rapidly through the bar, and he was followed at intervals, as he had been preceded, by many distinguished visitors, most of whom passed unnoticed, or rather, we should say, undiscovered.

The chimes of the clock of St. Clement Danes' church were musically proclaiming three-quarters past eleven o'clock, when general attention was directed towards that building, the royal procession, headed by a detachment of Life Guards, being then just in the act of turning the corner of the churchyard.

The scene presented on the west side of Temple-bar as witnessed from between the upper portion of the Bar and the banking-house of the Messrs. Child, to whose courtesy we are indebted for the above accommodation, was briefly as follows:—Immediately before the arrival at the Bar of the first Royal carriage, conveying the Gentleman Usher of the Sword of State, and other officers, Mr. Brown, the senior City Marshal, closed the gate. The Royal arrival being announced, the Marshal, at the bidding of the Lord Mayor, opened the gate, and Sir P. Laurie, who had been appointed conductor of the procession by the Court of Aldermen, advanced on horseback, dressed in his scarlet gown, wearing a Spanish hat with black feathers, and bearing a white wand, which he waved invitingly for the procession to advance. The carriages then followed him within the bar, in the order described below. As they slowly proceeded, the approach of the royal carriage was announced by a volley of cheers, which ran along the thick phalanx of the vast multitude that now filled every possible standing place, and was taken up and re-echoed by the occupants of the windows and lodgments of the adjacent buildings. The scene at this moment was most animated and joyous. The sun had broken forth, despite a thick autumnal atmosphere, and sparkled on the cuirasses and burnished accoutrements of the military, making more gay than usual the laced coats and splendid dresses of the Yeomen of the Guard and other attendants, and the gorgeous equipage of the matchless vehicle which contained her Majesty and Prince Albert. The Queen bowed most graciously in reply to the loyal and hearty cheering with which the congregated mass here saluted her Majesty.

When the beautiful cream-coloured horses which drew her Majesty's carriage had passed through the gates, they were stopped, and the royal carriage became stationary.

THE CITY SIDE OF TEMPLE-BAR.

From a very early hour in the morning, this point of the line of procession presented an appearance of great bustle and preparation. Before daybreak a number of workmen had been employed in laying down gravel along the street; at a later hour others might be seen fixing up flags from the sides or on the tops of the houses, or giving the finishing stroke to the seats prepared for spectators in the windows, doorways, and every available portion of building. Long before 9 o'clock these seats began to fill, chiefly with well-dressed females, whose gay attire, as seen in every story of each house—united with the banners, streamers, and union jacks, with which or with laurels most of the buildings in the neighbourhood of Temple Bar were decorated—made the scene here most picturesque and striking. Accordingly, this locality appeared to excite much interest, Fleet-street being densely crowded with foot passengers as early as 9 o'clock, great numbers having at that hour taken standing positions in the immediate vicinity of the bar, apparently with a determination of retaining them. About 11 o'clock, a party of the Royal Artillery on horseback, headed by four officers, came up, and filing through the gateway of the Middle Temple, proceeded to the open space in front of King's Bench-walk, where they dismounted to await the time when their horses should be required by the aldermen, for whose use in the procession they were destined. Shortly afterwards, a strong body of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) marched within the bar, and took their positions as is usual on occasions of processions—namely, two and two at short intervals on each side of the line. Soon after 11, the Aldermen began to arrive in their carriages, attended each by the ward beadle with his mace on foot; but such was the density of the crowd, and so great the pressure that it was with much difficulty the police could clear a passage from the carriages across the pavement to the entry to Messrs. Child's Bank, where the Aldermen alighted. Shortly afterwards, the Aldermen, headed by the Lord Mayor, and accompanied by several deputies and common councilmen, the latter in their mazarine gowns and cocked hats, and all bearing white wands, proceeded along the street to the Middle Temple, in order to mount their horses.

Half-past 11 had now arrived, and the scene that displayed itself to a person standing on the top of Temple-bar was as animated and lively as could be imagined consistently with the half-hazy state of the atmosphere. Gay flags were waving on every side; the houses up to, and including, the tops presented thousands of eager faces; the street below was covered with carriages, and cavalry intermingled with the police and the populace, the red horse-hair plumes of the Guards and their bright cuirasses giving life and variety to the generally dull and monotonous appearance of a London crowd. In another quarter of an hour, the head of the Royal procession arrived at the west side of the bar, and after a momentary pause passed within, being received upon entering the City by a flourish of trumpets from a party of the City trumpeters stationed on the south side of Fleet-street, in front of Messrs. Child's Bank.

No sooner had the royal carriage drawn up, than the Lord Mayor (who, at the head of the civic procession, was waiting her Majesty's arrival), alighted from his horse amidst the most profound silence—a silence which was not broken even by the circumstance that, in the hurry, his hat, with its Spanish plumes of feathers, fell on the ground. His lordship then took the Civic Sword of State from the Swordbearer, and, proceeding to the side of her Majesty's carriage, where was spread a handsome carpet, loyally tendered it to her Majesty. The Queen, gently touching the hilt, assured his lordship that it could not be in better hands.

The Engraving at page 273, represents this stage of the ceremony. The civic emblem is the Great Pearl Sword, presented by Queen Elizabeth to the City of London, on the occasion of her opening the first Exchange. The sword is 3½ feet in length, the handle is of chased gold, and the sheath is richly dight with pearls.

The Lord Mayor, after receiving back the sword, withdrew from the side of the state coach with several obeisances, which Prince Albert acknowledged by half rising from his seat beside her Majesty, and bowing repeatedly with much grace. The Lord Mayor then remounted, and, putting on his hat, took his place in the line of procession, immediately preceding the carriage of her Majesty. Some delay was here occasioned by the necessary alteration arising from the junction of the cavalcade of the City dignitaries, which was interposed between the twelve footmen whom we have mentioned as preceding the royal coach, and the coach itself. As soon as the alteration was accomplished, the cortège moved on in the following order:—

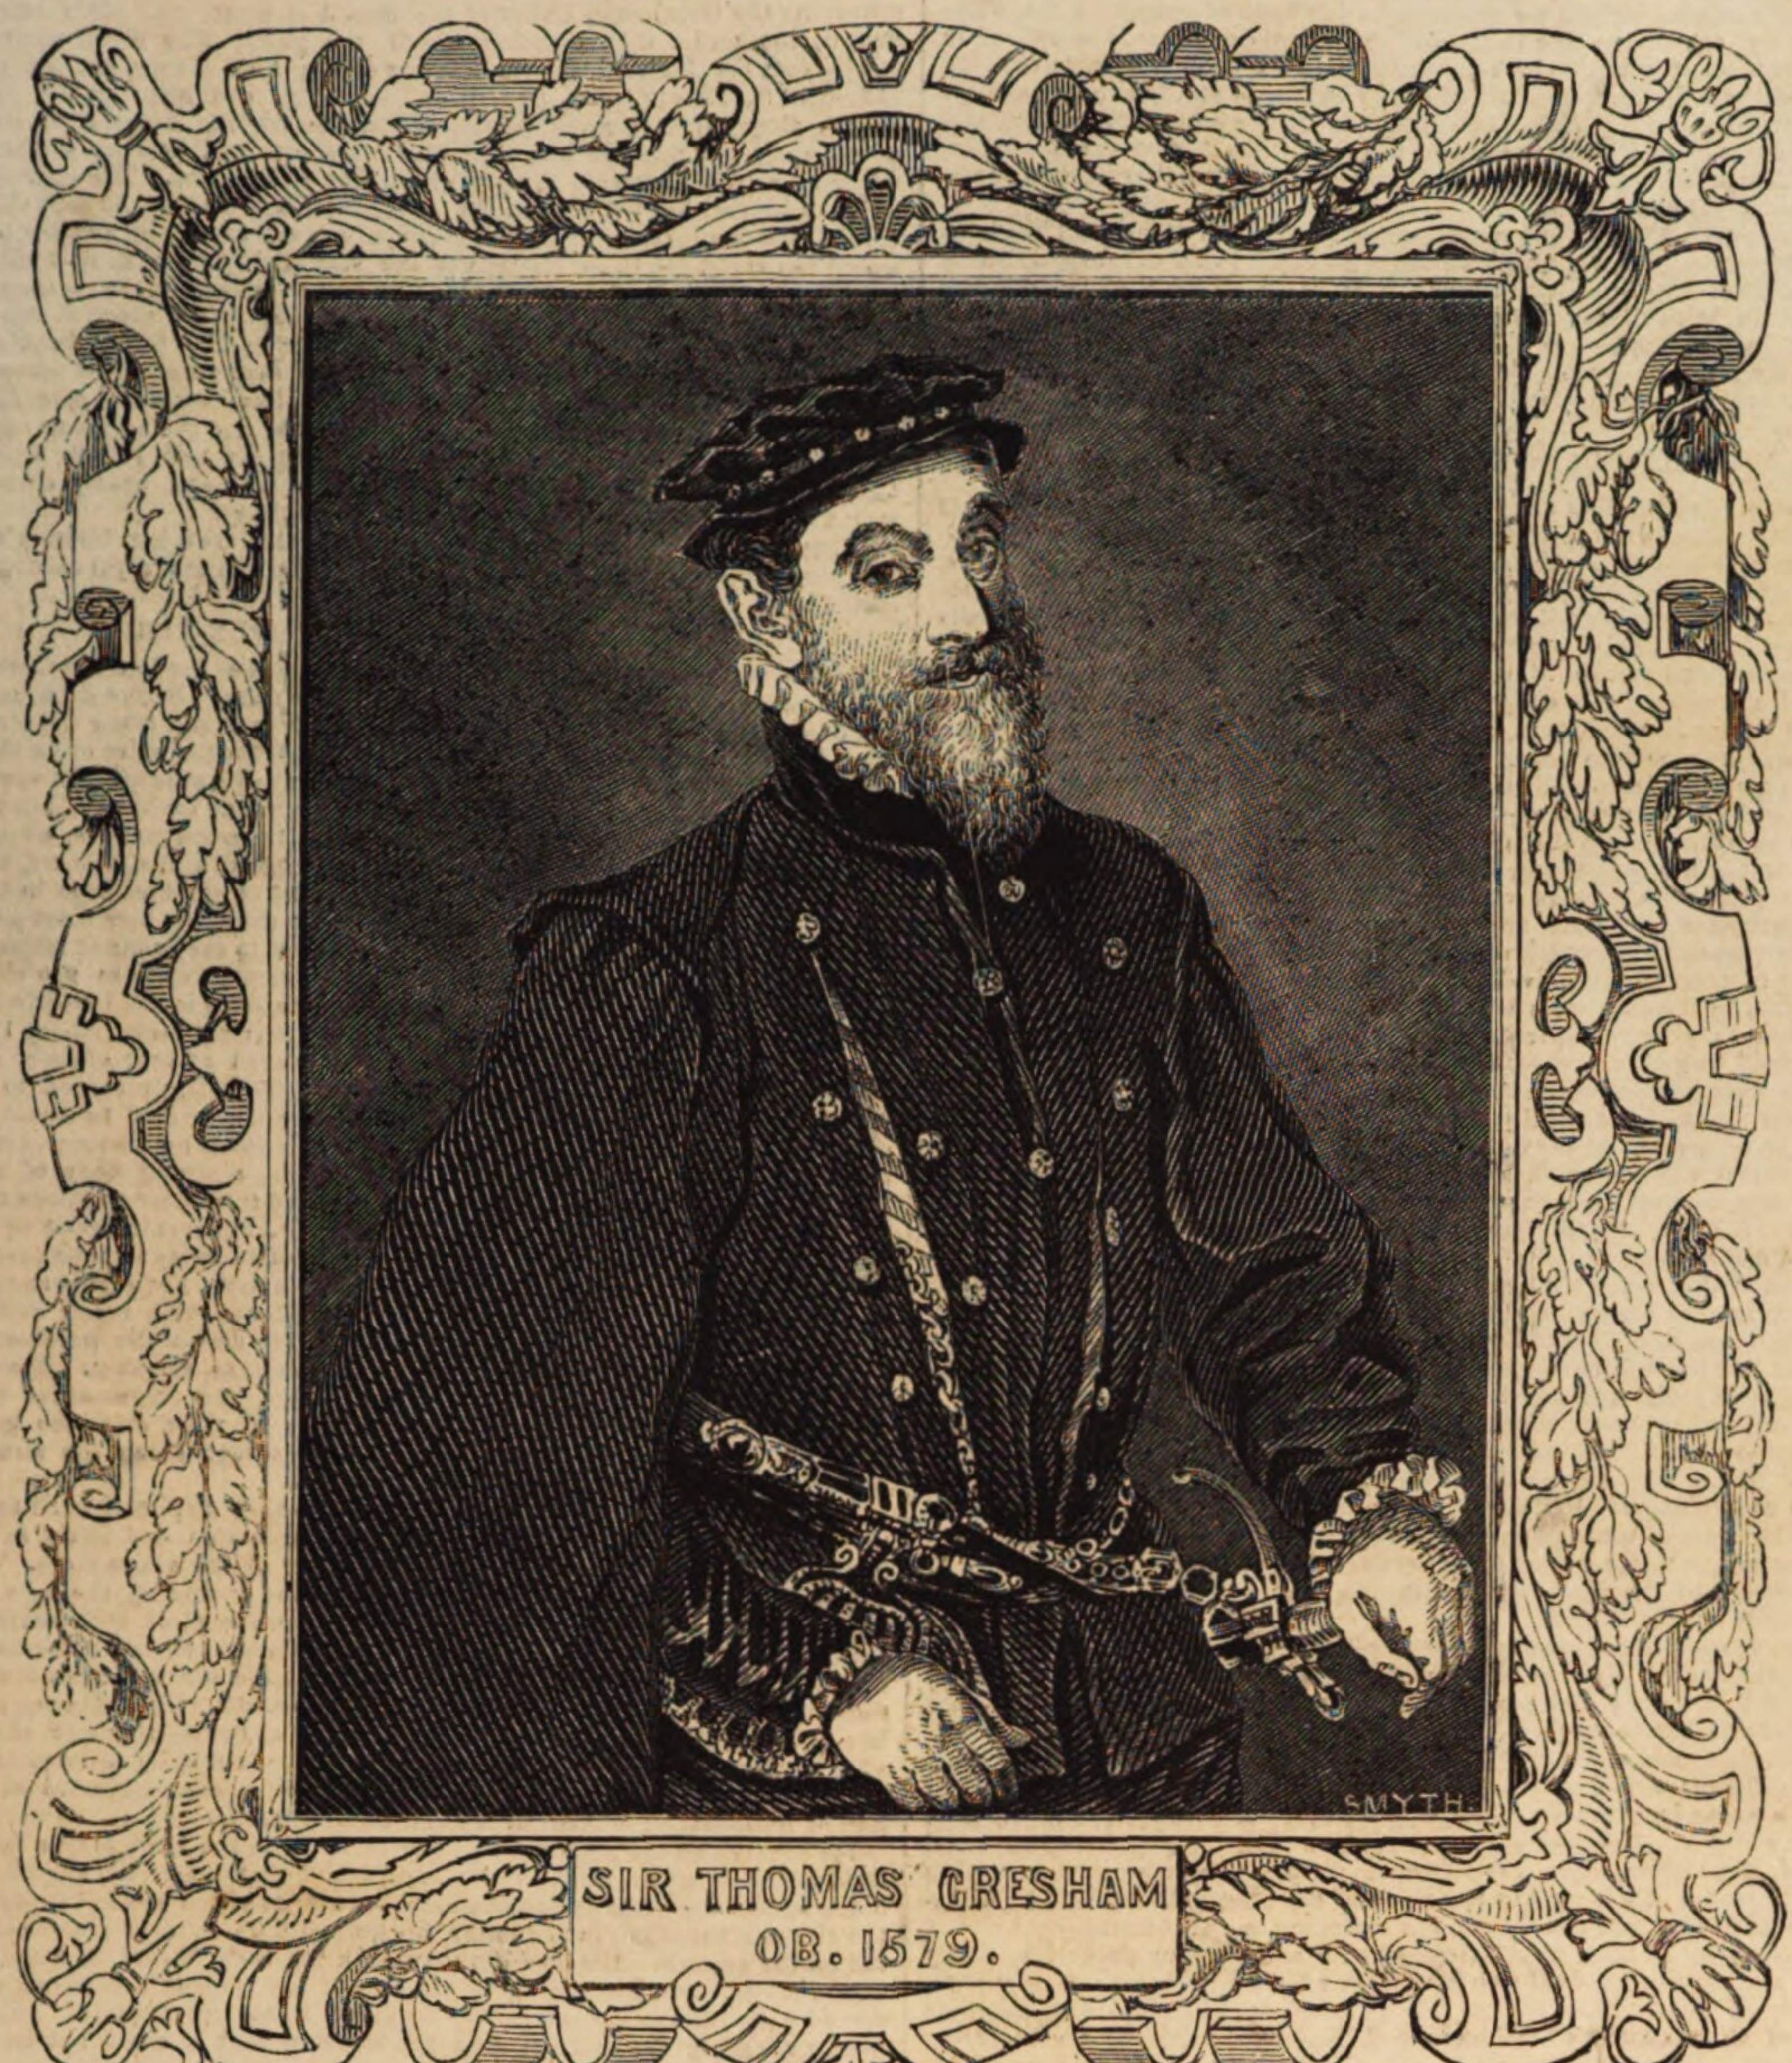
Police-officers on horseback.
Carriages of the Members of the Court of Common Council.
The state carriages of the Sheriffs.
Carriages of the Aldermen.
THE LORD MAYOR'S STATE CARRIAGE.
The Junior City Marshal on horseback.
Members of the Court of Common Council, in their mazarine gowns, on horseback, each with an attendant.
Mr. Henry Muggridge
Mr. Samuel S. Edkins
Mr. James Bayley
Mr. Thomas Q. Finnis
Mr. Edward Godson
Mr. Walter A. Peacock
Mr. William Gresham
Mr. W. J. Frodsham
Mr. James Anderton
Mr. W. Collingwood
Mr. Joshua G. Bedford
Mr. Richard Dixon.
The Senior City Marshal on horseback.
Mr. Thomas Sidney; Mr. William Hunter:
The Sheriffs, in their scarlet gowns and chains, on horseback, each attended by a Sergeant and a Groom.
The Aldermen, in their scarlet gowns (those past the chair in their chains), on horseback each attended by a Beadle and a Groom, and also by a Private of the Royal Artillery.
Mr. Alderman Farncomb
Sir George Carroll, Bart.
Mr. Alderman Wood
Sir P. Laurie, Knt.
Mr. Alderman Lucas
Mr. Alderman A. Hooper
Mr. Alderman Johnson
Mr. Alderman Farebrother
Sir J. Key, Bart.
Sir C. S. Hunter, Bart.
The Common Crier on horseback, Mr. S. Beddome, carrying the City Mace.
The Swordbearer on horseback, Mr. C. W. Hicks, with the Cap of Maintenance.
THE LORD MAYOR,
The Right Hon. William Magnay,
Three Footmen in State Liveries. Four Grooms walking.
in a Crimson Velvet Robe and Collar of SS., on Horseback, bearing the City Sword of State, immediately before
THE STATE COACH,
Three Footmen in State Liveries. Four Grooms walking.
Attended by a Yeoman of the Guard at each Wheel, and two Footmen at each door, conveying
THE QUEEN,
and
HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT,
Attended by the Duchess of Buccleuch, as Mistress of the Robes, and the Earl of Jersey, the Master of the Horse.

As soon as her Majesty was seen within the gateway, a loud, sharp, and general huzza rang through the street, and loyal acclamations continued as long as her Majesty remained in sight. Nor were the expressions of devotedness and attachment confined to the citizens in the street; from every window on each side of the way fair hands were waving handkerchiefs, or enthusiastically clapping in honour of her Majesty. Her Majesty's attention seemed to be particularly attracted by this display, to which she looked up with apparent interest and admiration.

The last of the strong body of the Life Guards, who closed the procession as an escort, had passed through the gateway by five minutes to 12 o'clock. Whether from the greater density of the crowd, concentrated as they were on what by many was considered a very interesting point of the line, or from the weakness of the force of City police on duty, the line within the gates was certainly not nearly so well kept as it was without the gates. Neither on going or returning were the distinguished subjects who formed part of the cortège, including the Duke o Wellington, greeted or recognized by the people. As the procession passed on the crowd, after a short struggle with the police, were permitted to close in the rear of it, but the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) remained upon the ground where they had been posted until the return of the Royal carriages.

The whole procession was of considerable length, and had an appearance only second to that of royalty itself. The beauty of the horses in the Lord Mayor's state coach, and the elegant carriages and liveries of the Sheriffs, the one maroon and gold, and the other green and gold, were universally admired. The different carriages, as they passed Child's banking house, by the corner of Temple-bar, set down those of their occupants (including the Lord Mayor, several of the Aldermen, &c.,) who constituted the civic deputation to receive the Queen and ride before her Majesty into the City. The Aldermen in their scarlet robes, and the members of the Common Council in their blue gowns, suited well with the genius of the scene, but the appearance of the legal functionaries in their wigs and gowns seemed somewhat to excite the risibility of the multitude. At one house in Fleet-street, a small cannon was placed on the parapet, from which minute salutes were continually fired, whilst all the moving groups appeared to be in the highest state of good humour and excitement.

OPENING OF THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.



SIR THOMAS GRESHAM—FROM THE PAINTING IN MERCERS' HALL.

This portion of the cortège was, certainly, the most novel. The first of the Common Councilmen in the procession, (See page 278) on the right hand, Mr. Gresham, is a descendant of the "Royal Merchant" who founded the Exchange.

PORTRAIT OF SIR THOMAS GRESHAM.

Of the famed "Royal Merchant," a memoir-sketch appeared in our journal of last week. We now annex the best known portrait of Sir Thomas, from the picture belonging to the Mercers' Company, and ascribed to Holbein, but Mr. Burgon considers, "with very unequal pretensions to the honour of having proceeded from his hand. It is on panel; has suffered considerable injury from injudicious cleaning; and was, probably, the performance of some third or fourth-rate Flemish artist." Be this as it may, the Mercers' Hall painting has been preferred by Mr. Lodge in his "Portraits of Illustrious Personages." A black doublet, cap, and cloak, appear to have been Gresham's invariable costume. In his person, he seems have been above the middle height, and handsome when a young man; he was lamed by a fall from his horse, in one of his posting expeditions in Flanders, when a broken leg was the consequence. "Gravity of deportment, and courtesy of manners, are hinted at by two old dramatists as having characterised him; and every means we possess of forming an opinion on the subject, leads to the belief that such was actually the case."

"Of Gresham," says Mr. Burgon, "it has been well remarked, that in founding a college, an exchange, and an asylum for the poor, he showed himself solicitous to provide for the wants of youth, the convenience of manhood, and the necessities of age. * * * Gresham was the younger son of a private merchant, who enjoyed no privileges, and whose only honours were those of a well-spent life. He was the maker of his own fortunes, and died while the brightest wits of the Elizabethan age were yet in their cradles."

LUDGATE-HILL.

So large a portion of her Majesty's subjects were, perhaps, scarcely ever before congregated within so small a portion of her Majesty's dominions as were to be found between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon, in the broad thoroughfare from Ludgate-hill to Cornhill. Before the sun had succeeded in dispelling the fog, a strong current of human beings had set in towards the centre point of attraction from all parts of the town; but, by about ten o'clock, when the avenues to this great artery were closed by the pressure from without, the tide ceased to flow or ebb, and the accumulated mass became stationary, we may even say, stagnant. The truncheons of the crowd-compelling policemen were then brought into requisition, but their peaceful weapons were obviously not so efficacious in inspiring the sight-seers with due respect for the constituted authorities, as the hoofs of the Blues and Life Guards' chargers—of which the profanum vulgus appeared to stand in righteous awe. Despite the general excellence of the arrangements in this part of the City, the municipal police would have scarce succeeded in maintaining order during the pageant without the assistance of the cavalry, who caricoled amongst the multitude with their well-trained chargers, doing their spiriting gently, and invariably, exercising the utmost care, forbearance, and discretion under circumstances which must necessarily have been somewhat trying to their tempers. There appeared to be a general feeling of admiration amongst the comfortably seated spectators for the admirable manner in which these fine fellows performed their arduous and disagreeable duty.

At eleven o'clock, the Lord Mayor's state coach, containing his lordship and the officers forming his suite, passed towards Temple-bar, followed by several of the Aldermen in their private carriages, and the Sheriffs in their state carriages. It need hardly be stated that the Chief Magistrate of London was very well received. Nothing could be more unequivocal than the greeting given to him in this part of the town, especially opposite the London Coffee-house, the three great houses which form this establishment being filled to the attics with highly respectable and numerous company. Her Majesty passed up Ludgate-hill a few minutes after twelve o'clock; her progress along the streets was marked by the most enthusiastic cheering, and both the Queen and Prince Albert seemed to partake of the joyous spirit which seemed to animate the vast assemblages through which they passed. The procession was of course followed by an immense mob, and the streets gradually became less crowded, perfect good humour and hilarity prevailing amongst the people during the whole of the day.

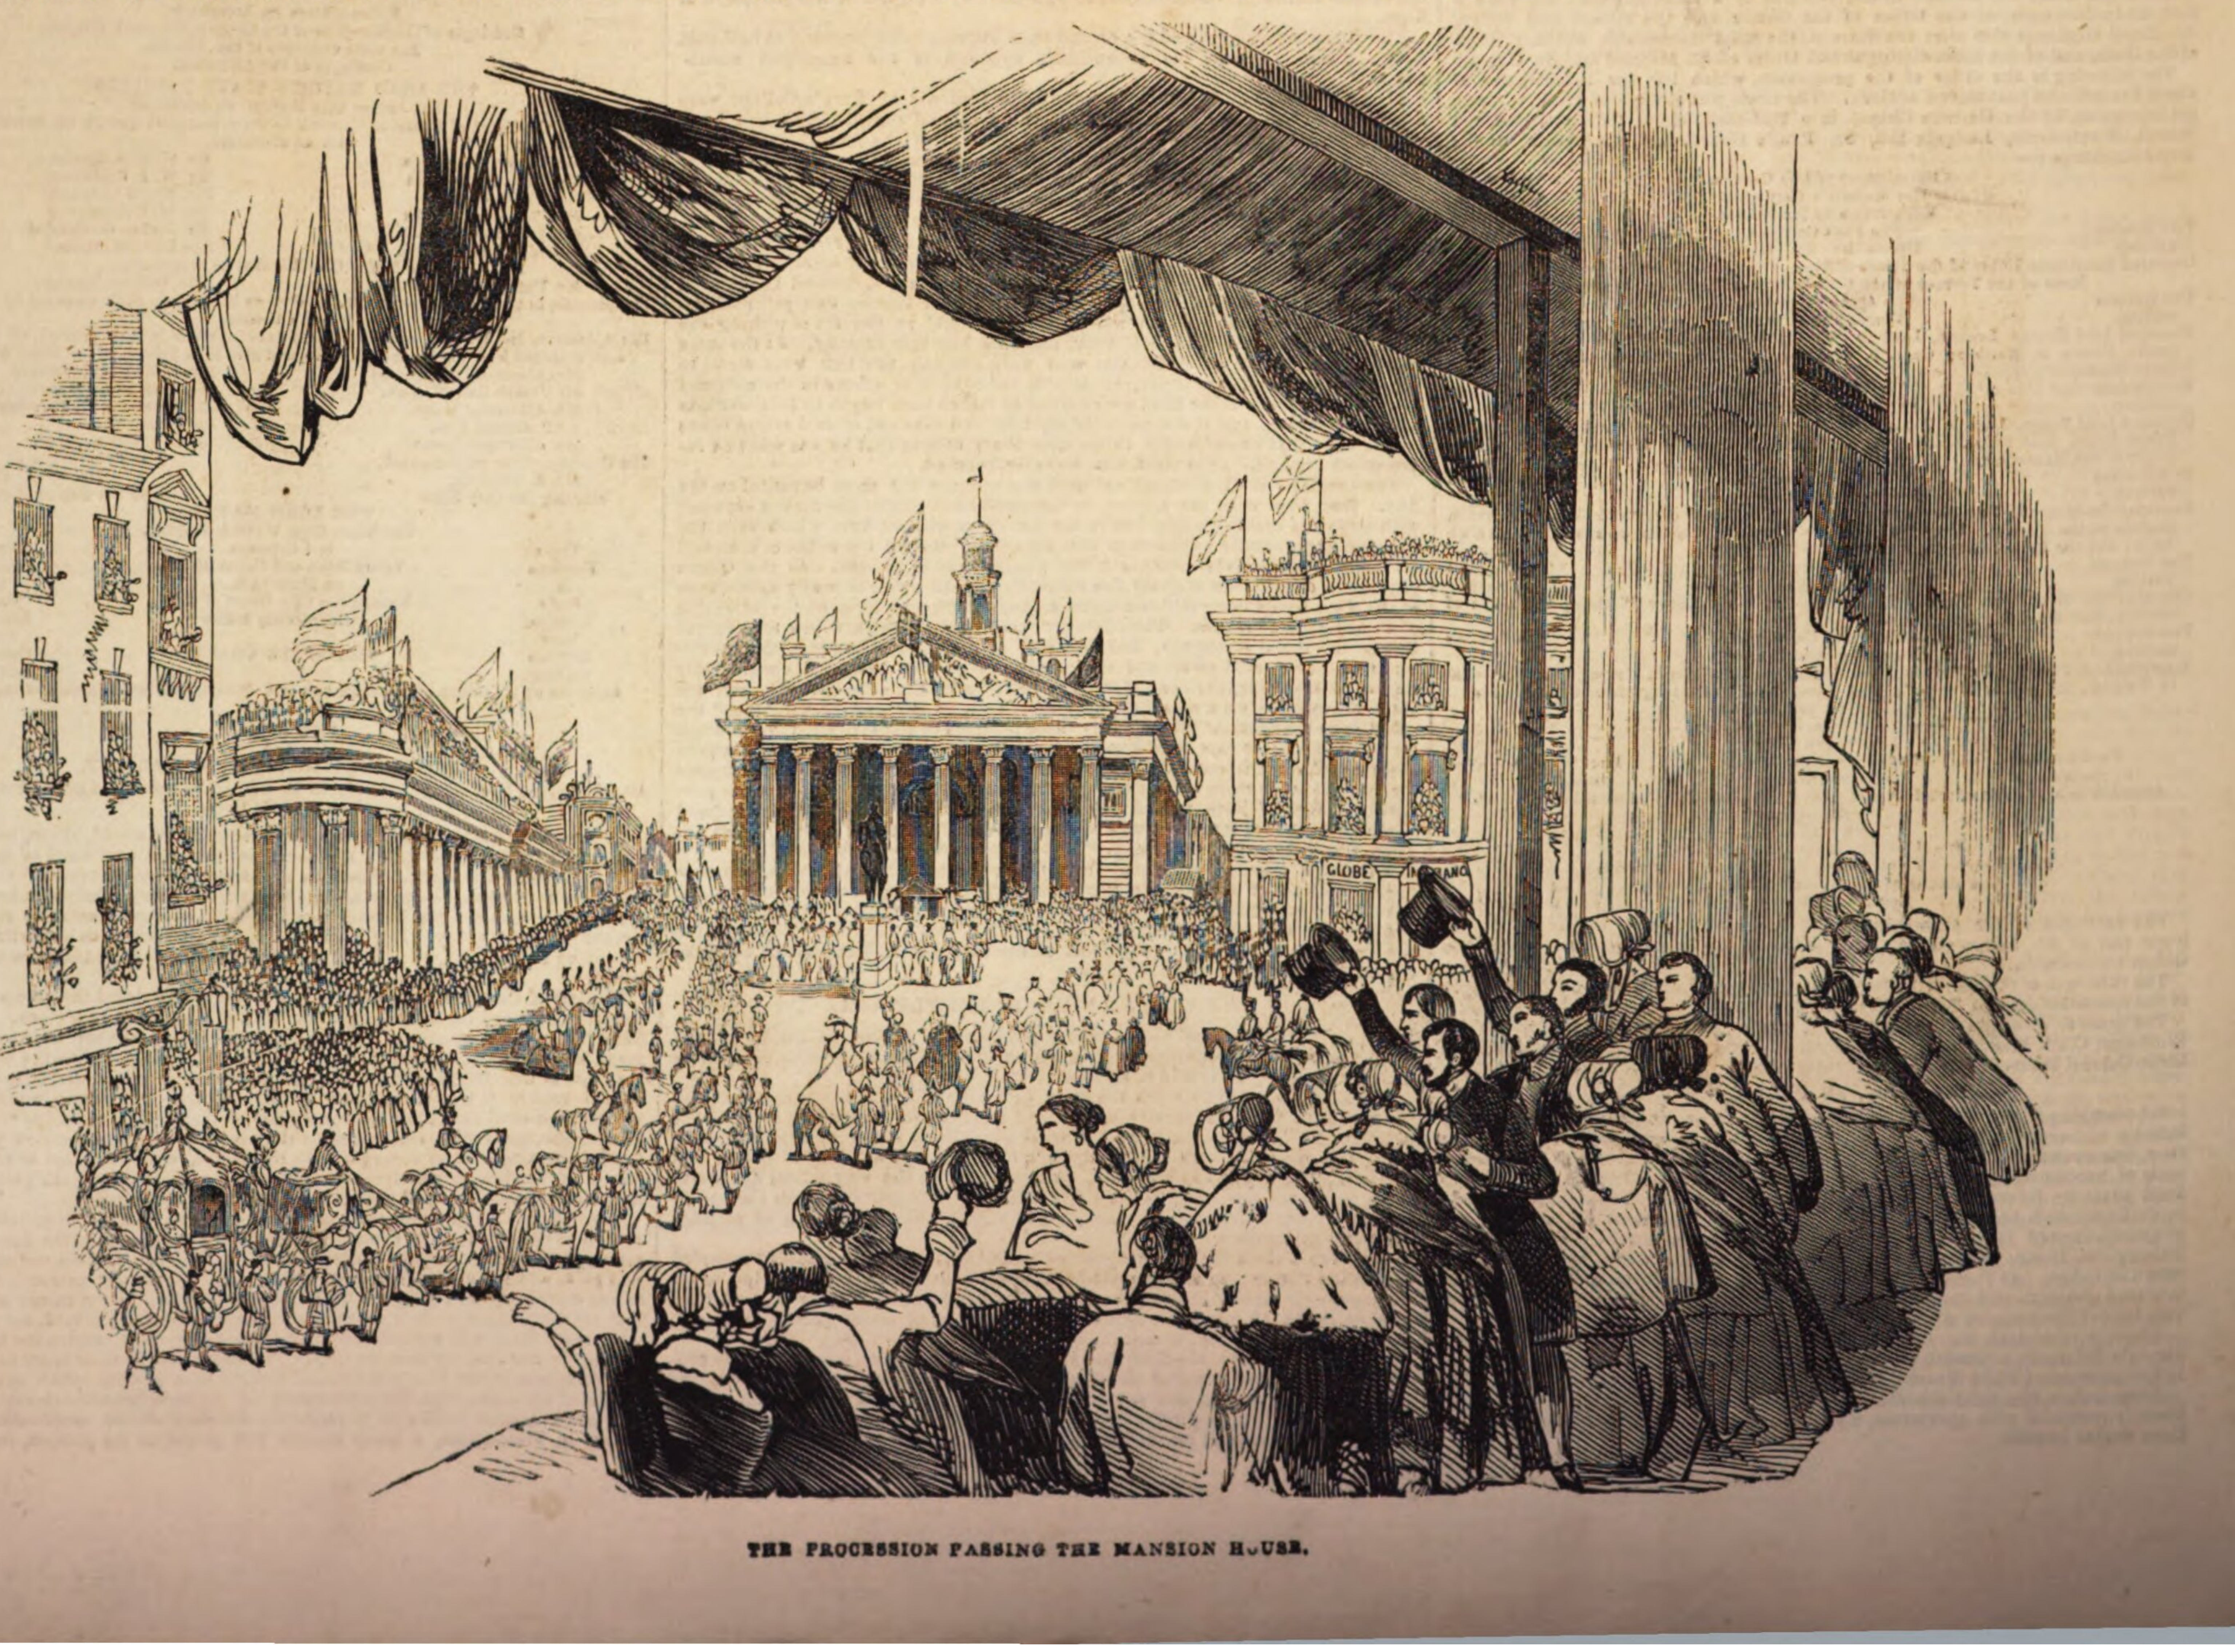
ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.

This locality was naturally one which excited much interest, and the company began to arrive as early as half-past seven in the morning, in order to secure their seats on the extensive platforms which had been previously erected. These scaffoldings extended from the right hand top of Ludgate-hill all along the south side of St. Paul's Cathedral, as far as Watling-street, and were continued eastward for a considerable distance, and were put together in a most substantial manner. The seats were not fully occupied till an hour or so before the Royal cortège arrived, in consequence of the price originally demanded for the sittings having been higher than it should have been; but during the early part of the morning the charge was materially reduced, and hundreds of her Majesty's loving subjects availed themselves of this fact.

The attention of the thousands of spectators was kept on the qui vive from eight o'clock until twelve o'clock by the numerous equipages of the nobility and gentry who were on their route to the Royal Exchange. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, were each heartily welcomed. In the confusion the Duke of Wellington's carriage was not observed. Sir Robert Peel was sitting so far back in his carriage that until the equipage had passed few persons were aware of the right hon. baronet's presence. The portico of St. Paul's School was decorated with the royal standard and two union flags, and was covered with crimson draperies. The compartments were filled with a very numerous and elegant company. From the house of Messrs. Dakins, the tea-dealers, were suspended several banners, on which were the following inscriptions—"The sun never sets on her dominions;" "On the waves of the sea, on all parts of the earth, among every people and nation, hath she not possession." The houses of Messrs. Toplis and Co., Berens, Blumberg, and Co., Felkin and Co., and the other firms on the south side of St. Paul's, were severally graced with a galaxy of female beauty, in gazing on which the beholder could not fail to exclaim—

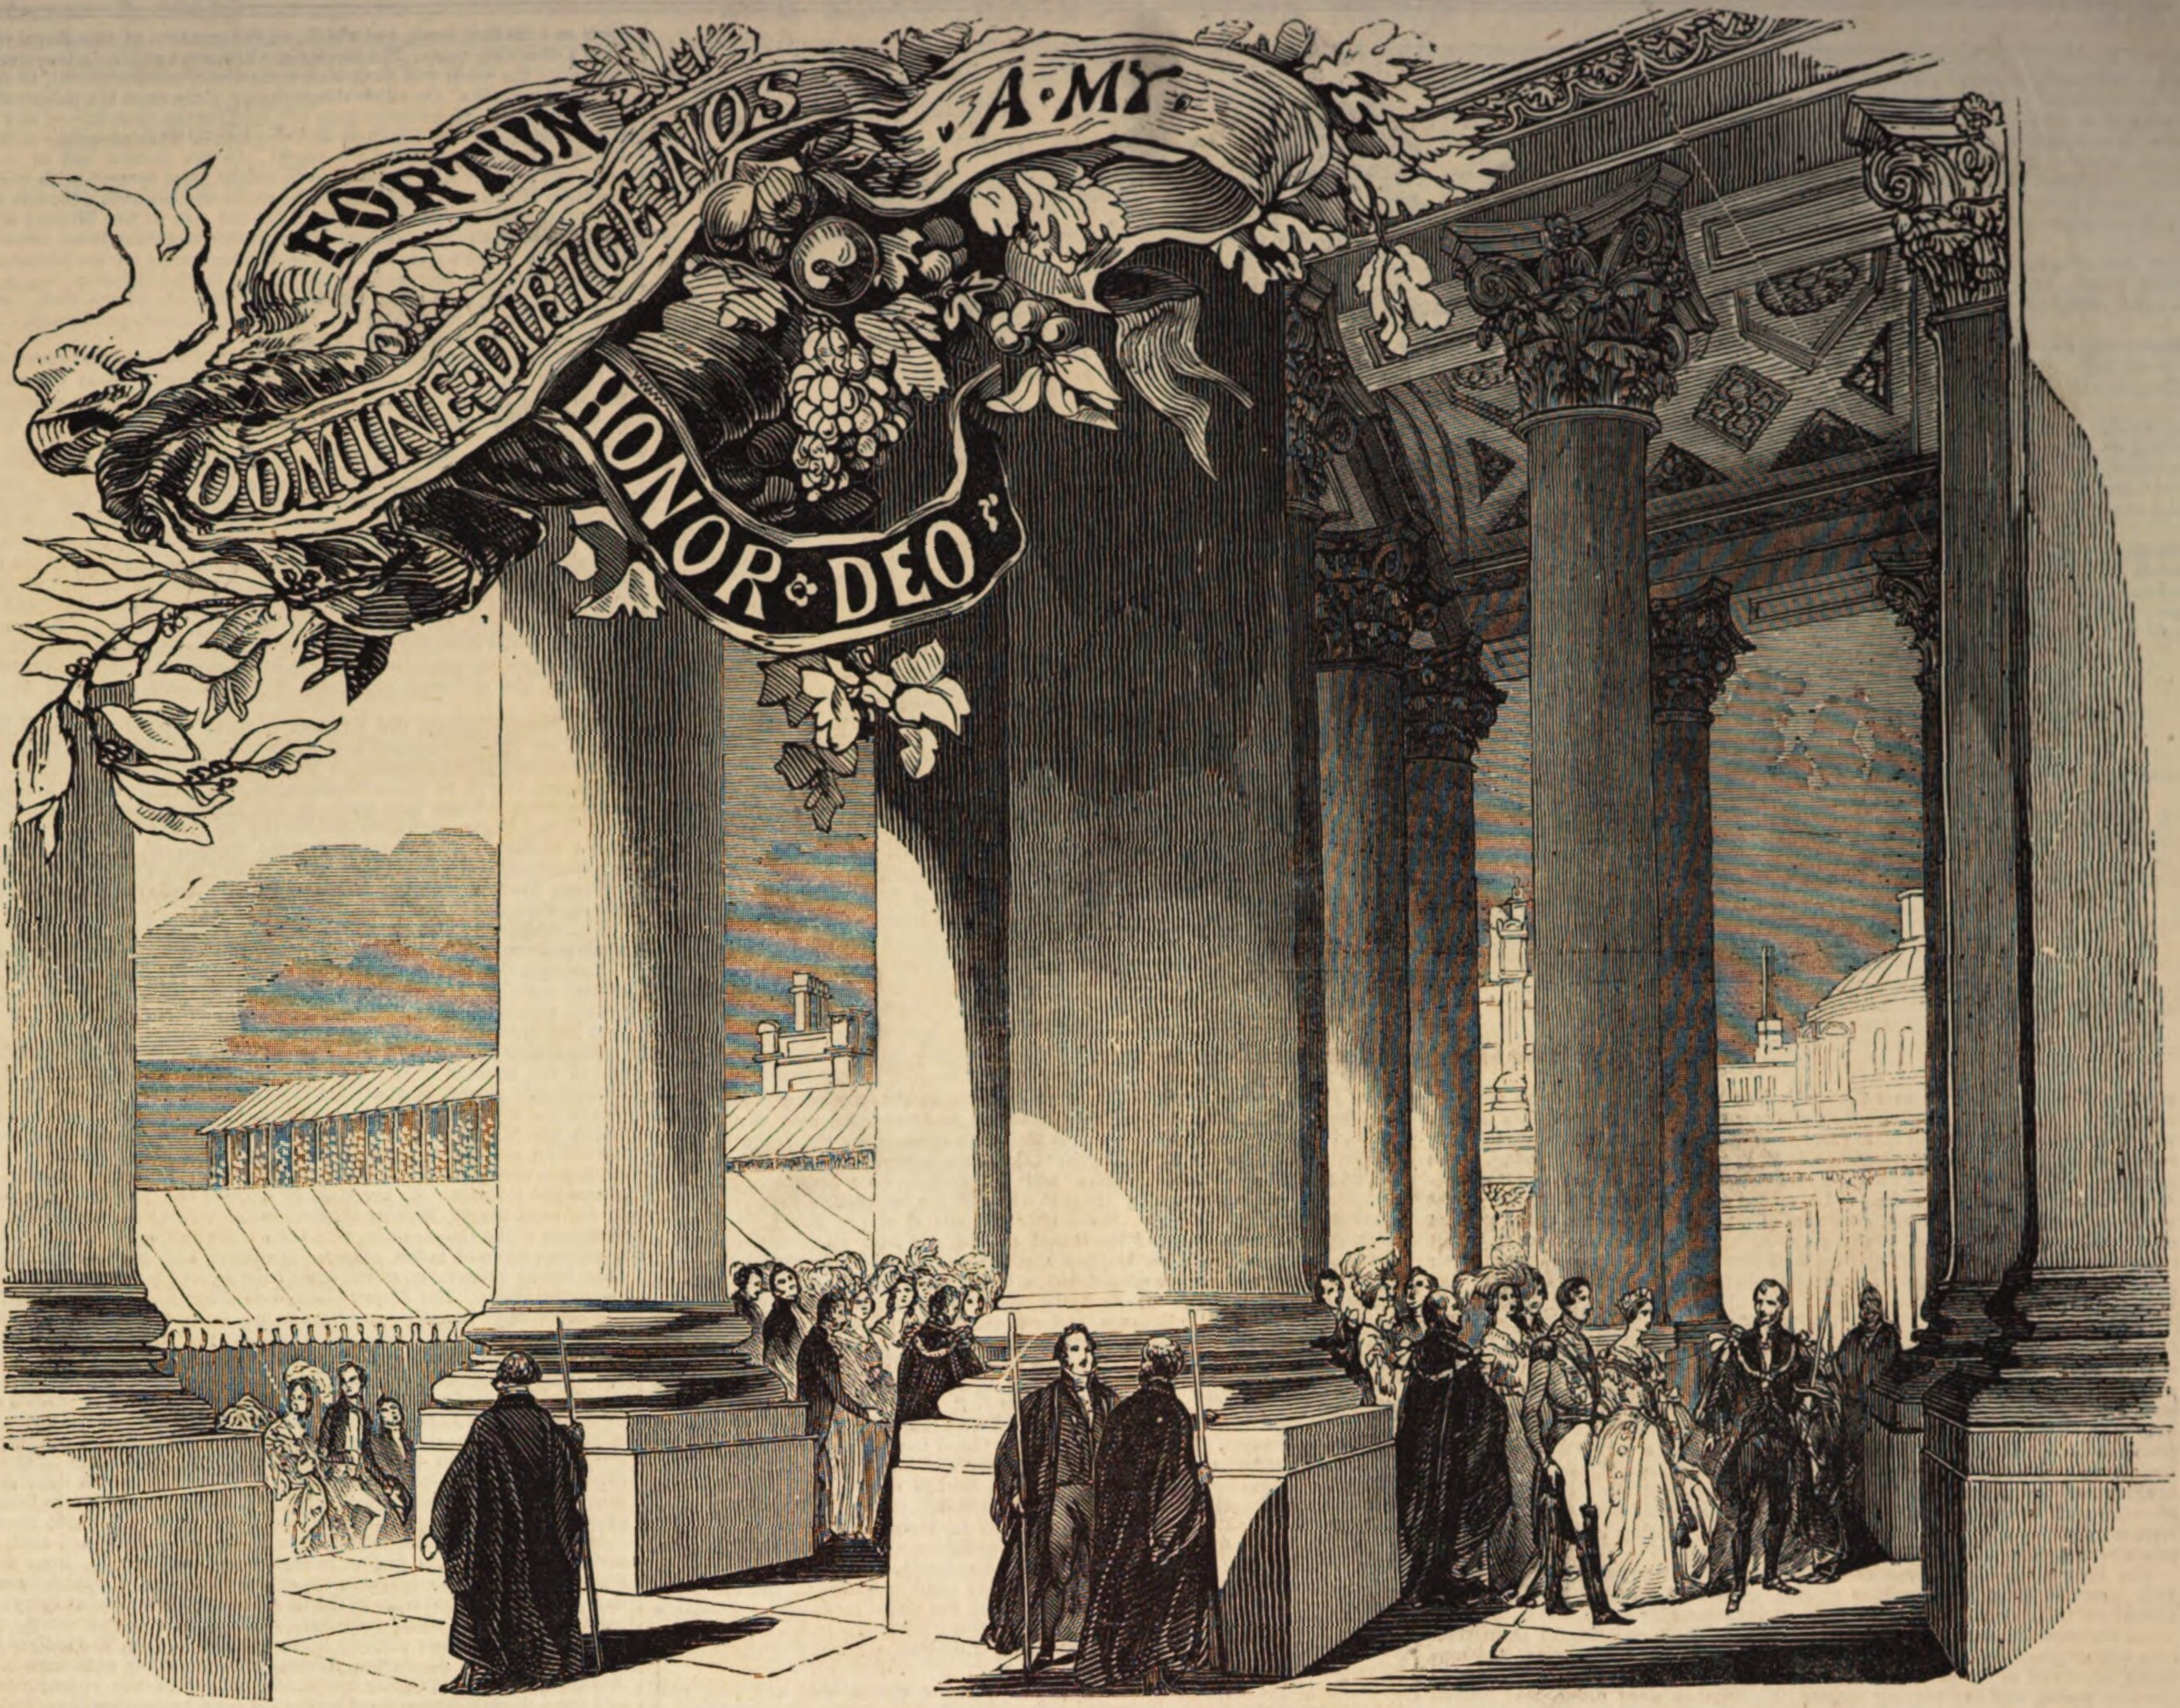
> "From woman's eyes this doctrine I derive;
> They are the ground, the books, the academies,
> From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire."

Whether we turned to the right or the left, everywhere we found that "bright eyes did abound." A band, which took up a position in Watling-street, played a variety of airs, and helped to relieve the ennui which prevailed for some time. At twelve o'clock the Royal procession, headed by that of the civic authorities, passed along in the order already described, and it would be impossible to convey an adequate idea of the enthusiasm with which her Majesty was everywhere greeted. The cheers were such as to excite the evident gratification of her Majesty, who acknowledged the reception thus given her in her Majesty's usual graceful manner. From the windows of the vast houses in St. Paul's Churchyard waved thousands of handkerchiefs, accompanied with the cry of "God bless the Queen," &c. The enthusiasm which pervaded all classes at this period led them to forget the toil they had undergone since half-past seven in the morning and good humour might be said to be "in the ascendant." At the moment of



THE PROCESSION PASSING THE MANSION HOUSE.

OPENING OF THE NEW ROYAL EXCHANGE.



FORTUN
A·MY DOMINE·DIRIGE·NOS
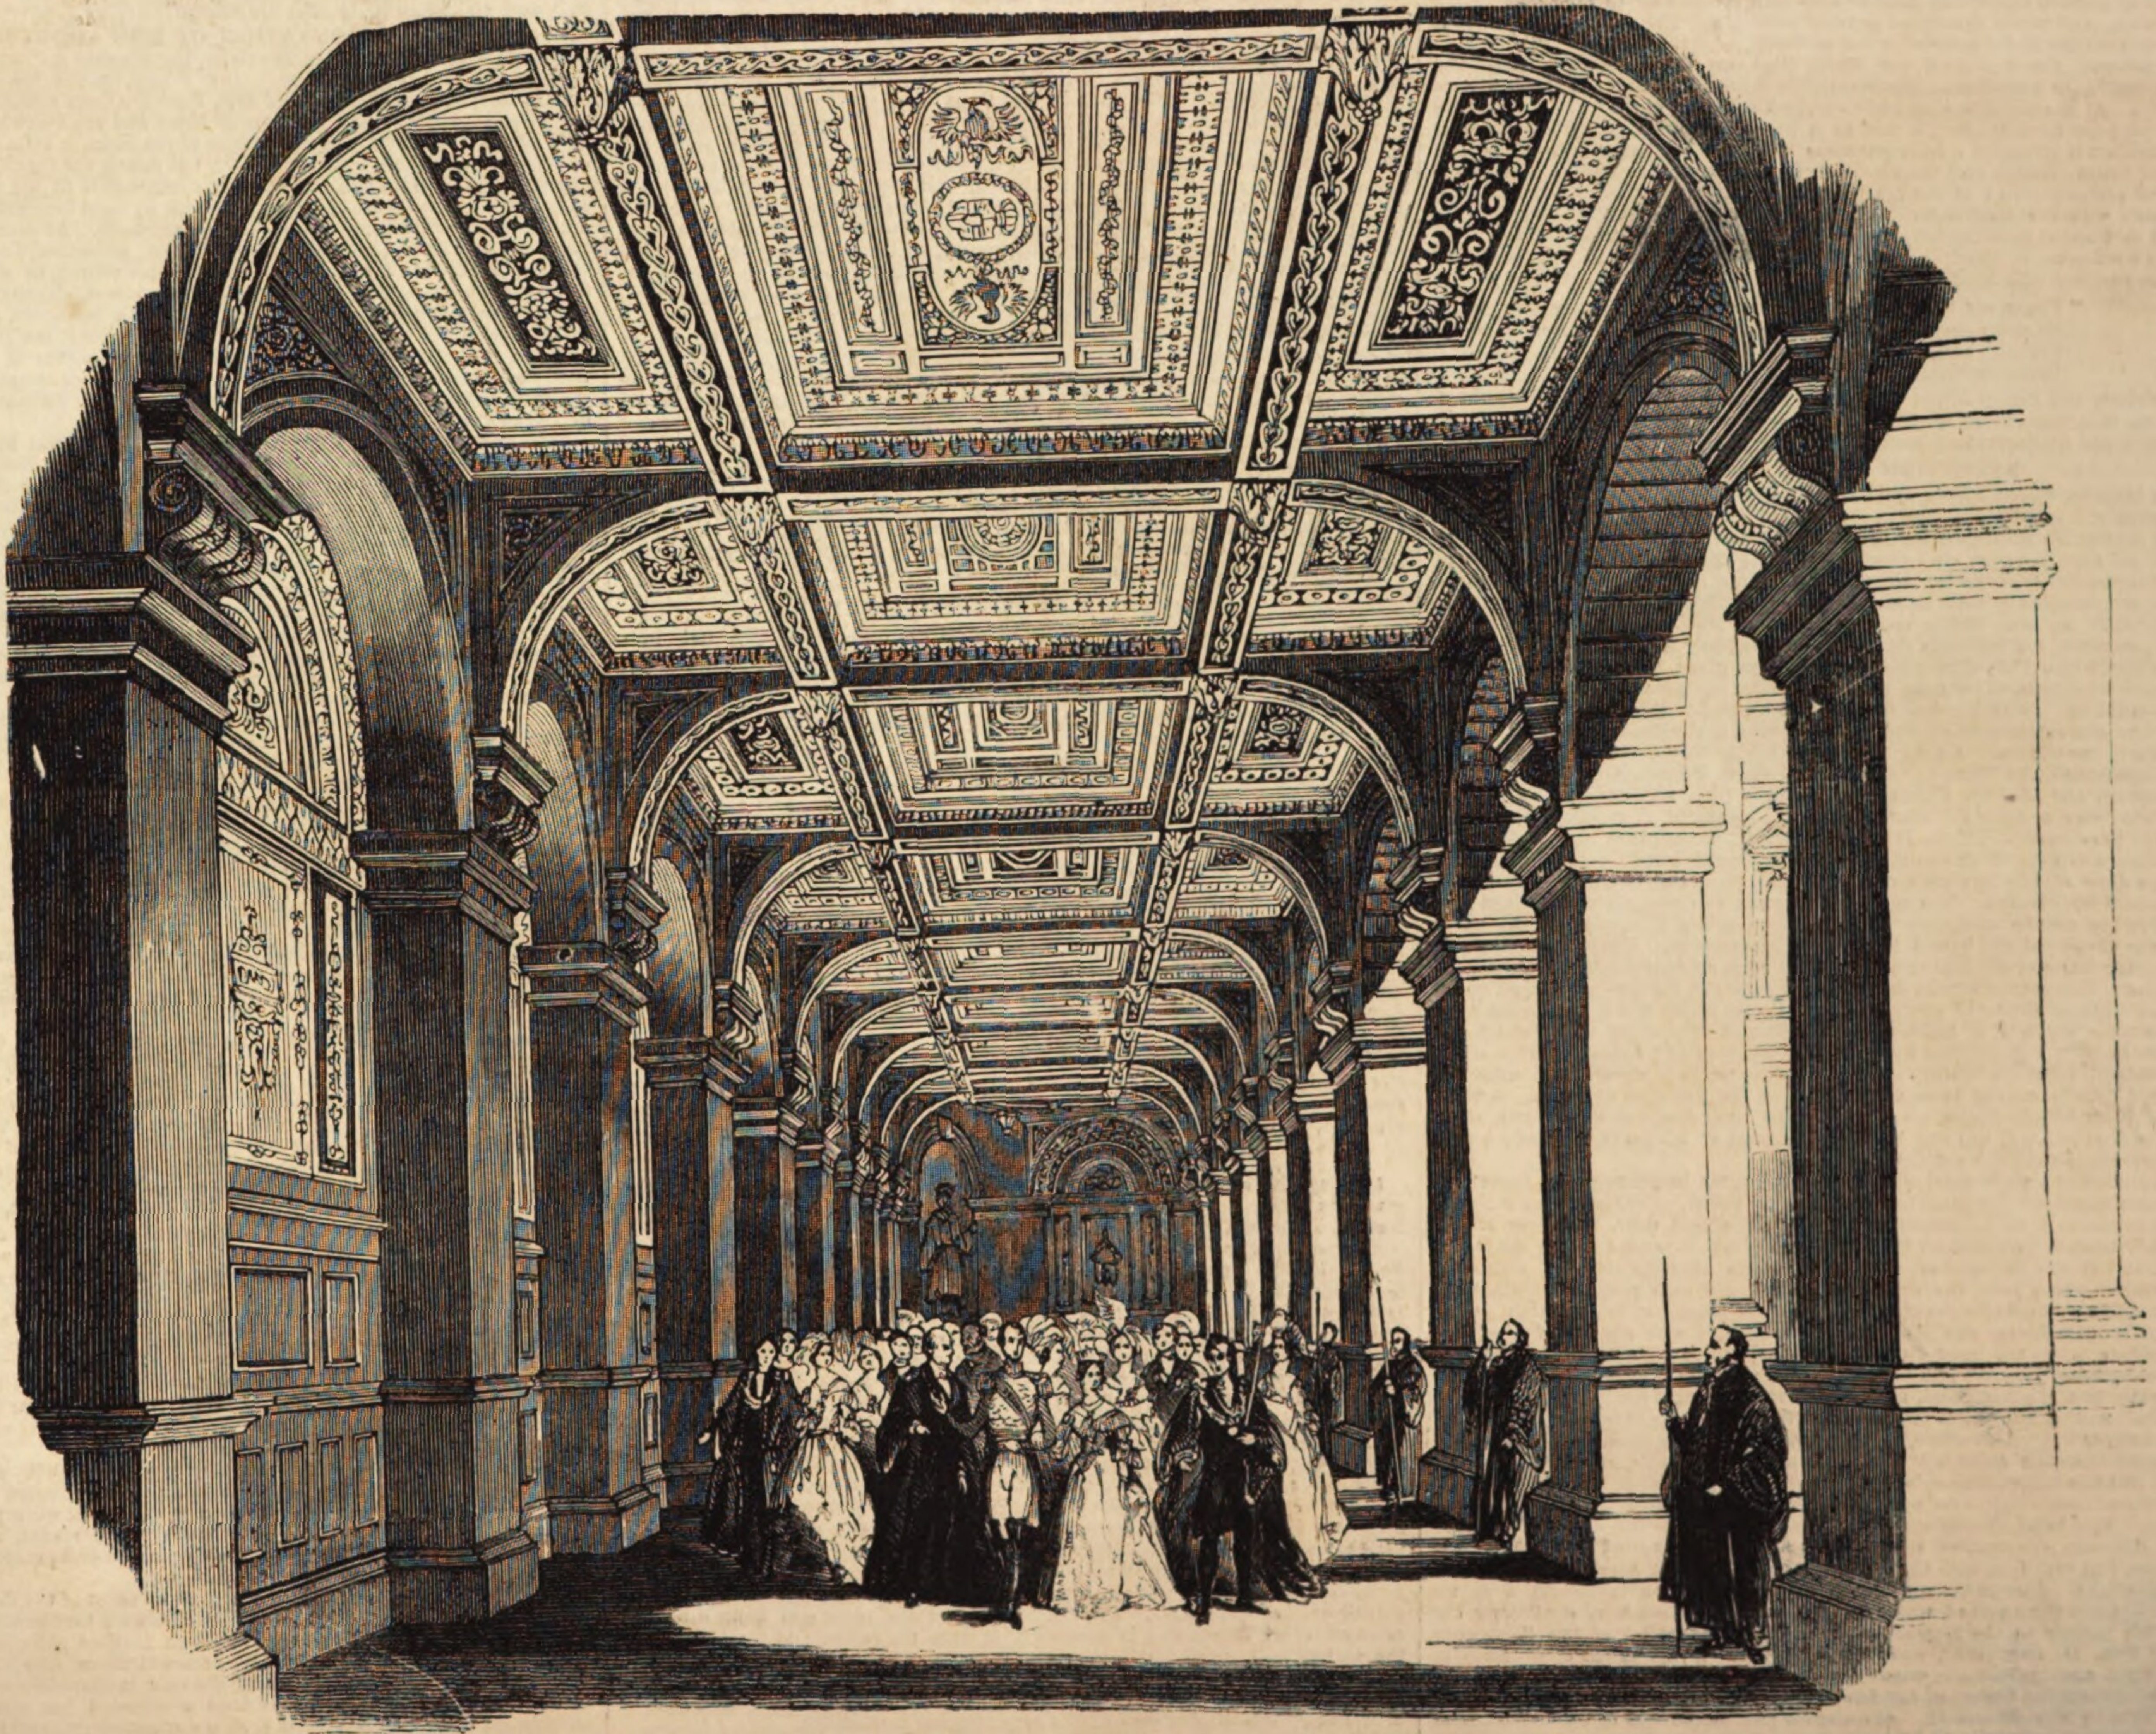
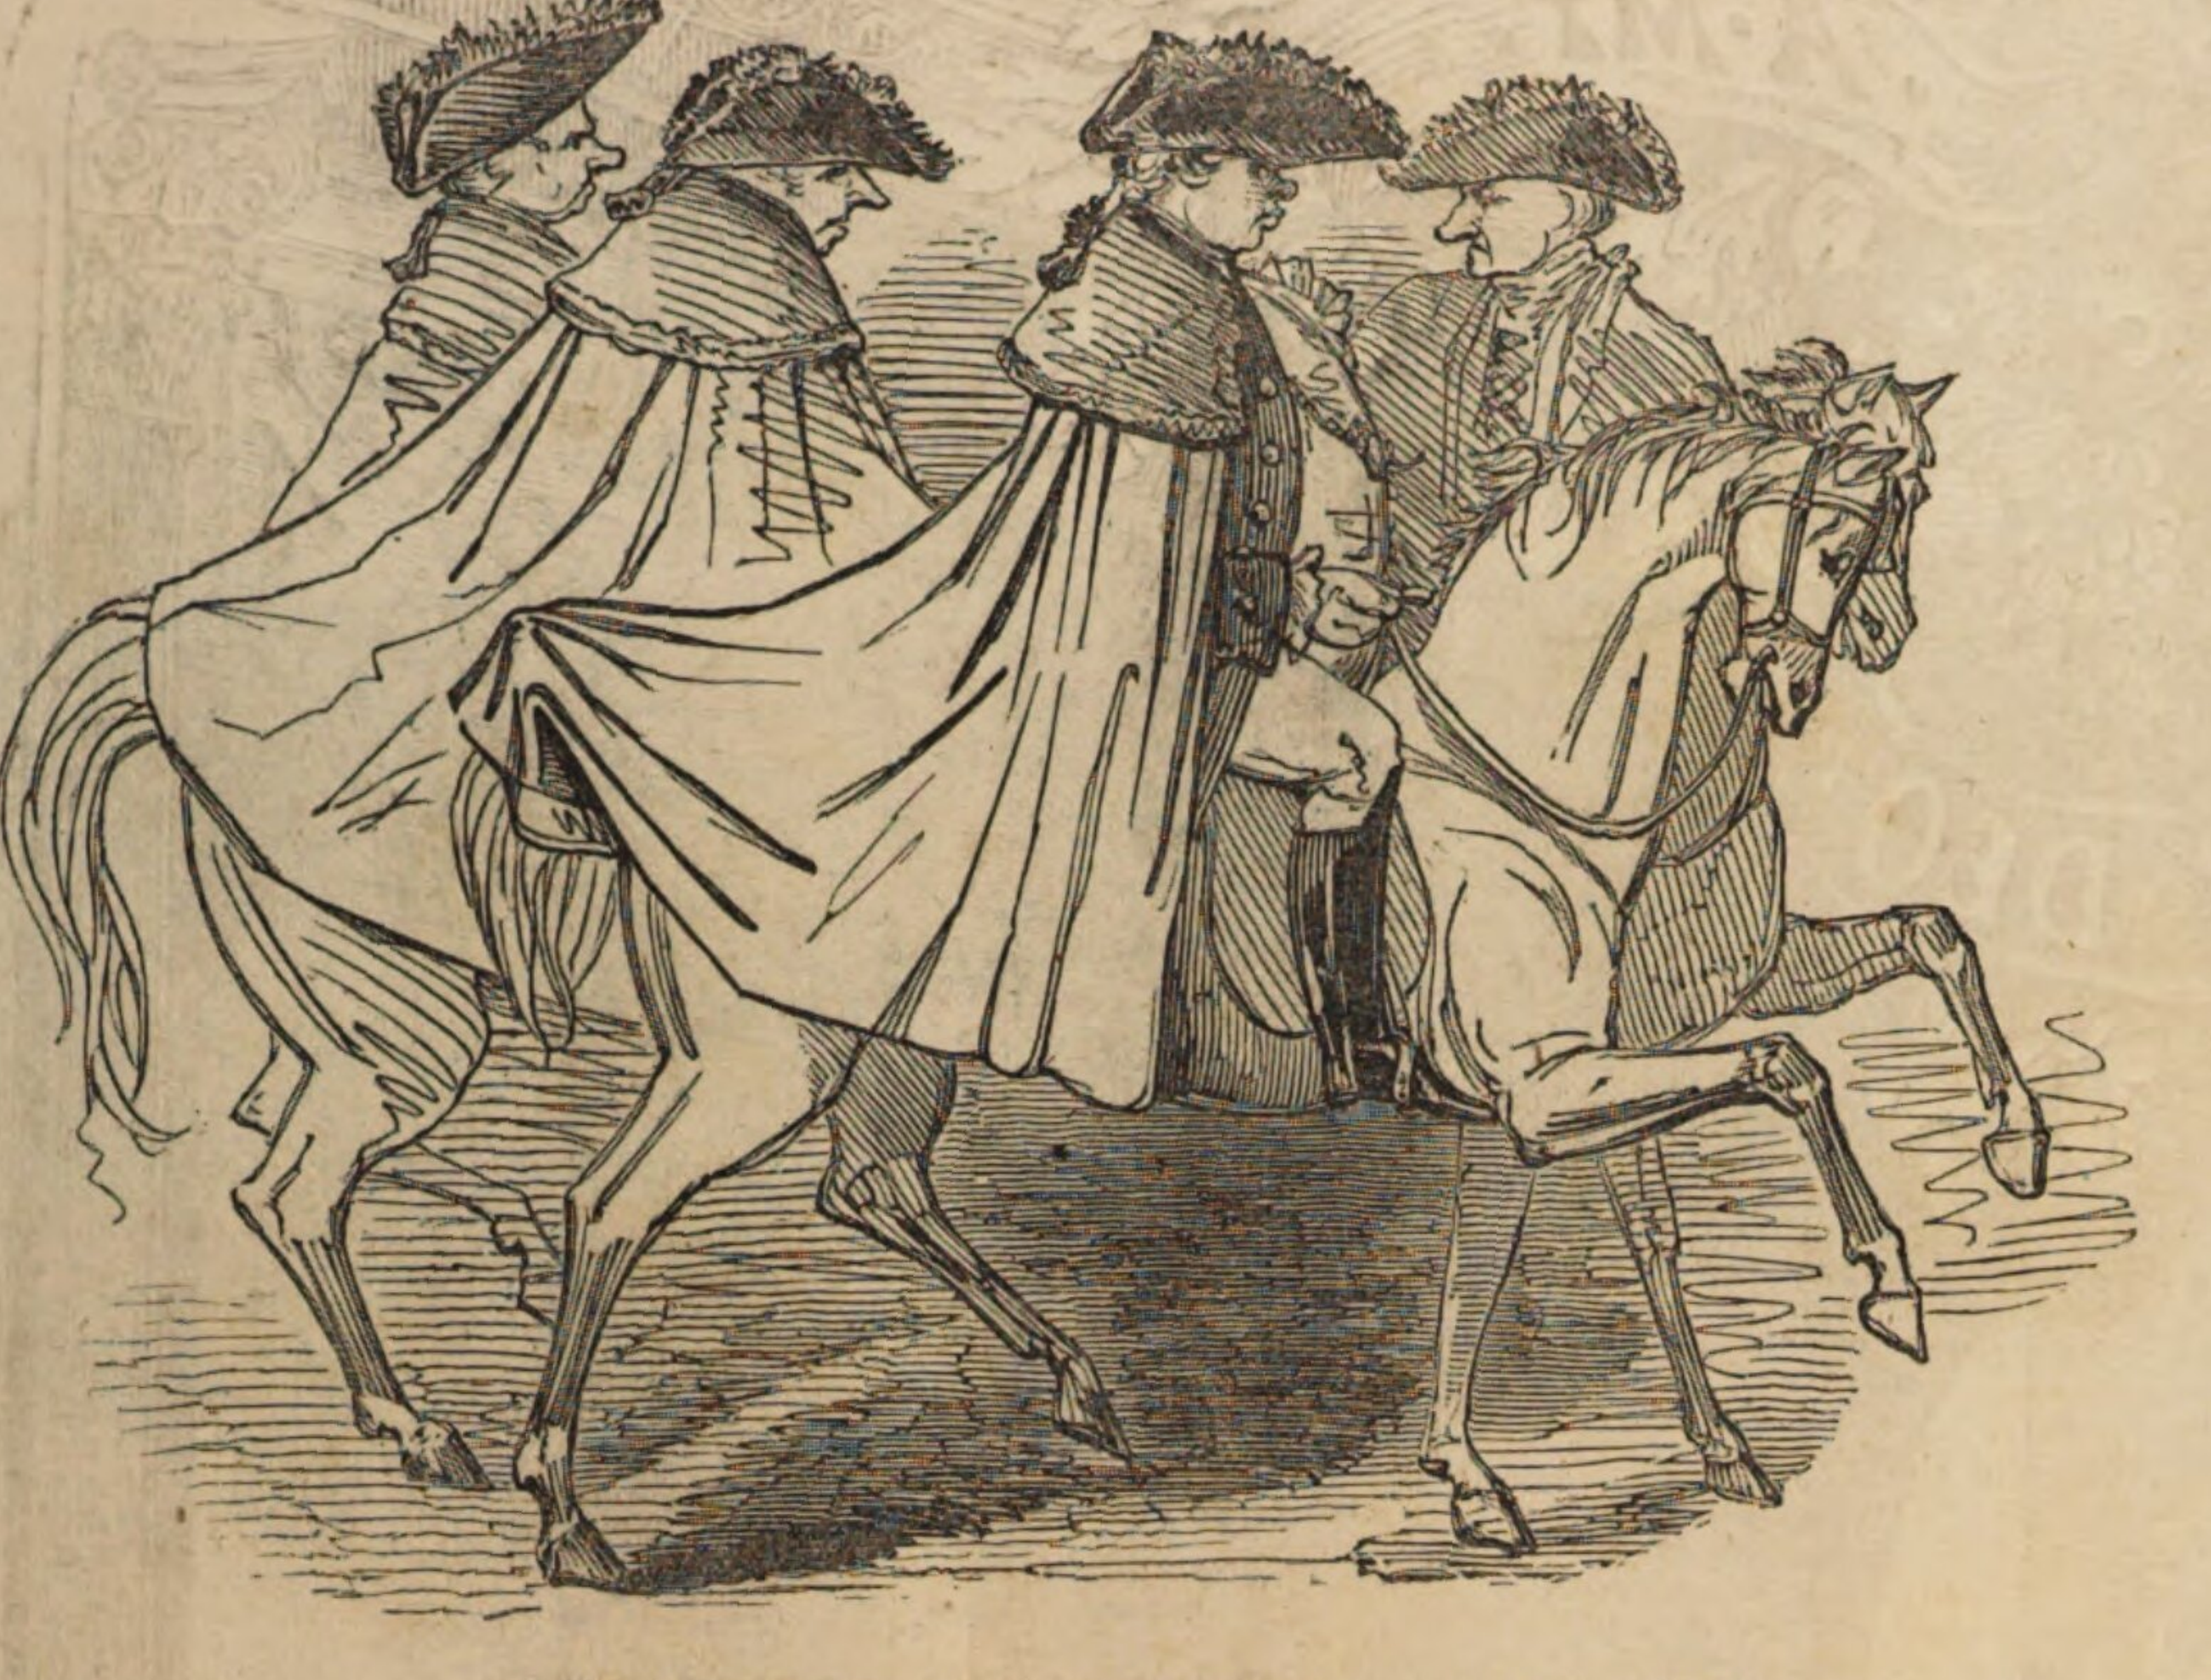
HONOR·DEO

HER MAJESTY CROSSING THE GREAT WEST PORTICO.



THE PROCESSION IN THE NORTH AMBULATORY



SKETCH FROM THE PROCESSION, BY A CORRESPONDENT.

the Royal carriage arriving near the south door of St. Paul's, the crush amongst the crowd at the end of Watling-street was very great, but the few Life Guards who were patrolling rendered speedy and most efficient aid, without inflicting any injury, though some lads were knocked down in the momentary confusion. The eagerness of many persons to view the procession, on the one hand, and the cupidity of those who had rooms, &c., to let, on the other, was such that, the garret windows having been taken out, a number of men sat on the top of the parapet of a house near the corner of Watling-street, hanging their legs over it, whilst others leaned back on the roof, placing their feet in the shallow gutter. Their position was such as to create a very unpleasant feeling on the part of those who beheld it.

CHEAPSIDE.

At an early hour of the morning the busy hum of preparation was heard throughout this locale to give effect to the auspicious event that was to take place—an event that will, no doubt, form an important feature in the historical incidents connected with this great metropolis. As early as nine o'clock the houses on either side of this spacious thoroughfare were filled to overflowing from the basement to the roof, and never before were the ample windows of the tradesmen's shops set off to such advantage. The beauty and fashion of London congregated together in extensive groups, and occupied the place of the merchandise with which these warehouses are usually stored. Several of the houses were ornamented with handsome flags and banners, bearing inscriptions appropriate to the great occasion.

The loving subjects of one of the best and most popular sovereigns that ever presided over the destinies of this great and glorious kingdom, were permitted to perambulate the streets uninterruptedly until eleven o'clock, when the splendid regiment of Life Guards appeared, and formed themselves into orderly positions, for the purpose of clearing the centre of the road, and confining the crowd to the pavements. They were ably assisted by a large body of the City police, and the moving masses fell back in good order, and formed themselves into compact lines on each side of the thoroughfare. The patience of the spectators was kept alive by the number of splendid equipages which occasionally passed, containing persons who were proceeding to take part in the procession, and which demanded general attention. The excitement was thus kept up until the Royal procession had arrived.

At half-past eleven o'clock, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and suite passed. In a short time afterwards, Sir Robert Peel followed in his private carriage. At five minutes after twelve o'clock the head of the procession turned into Cheapside from St. Paul's, and as it proceeded slowly along this spacious thoroughfare it presented a truly gorgeous and imposing appearance. The myriads of human beings that thronged every available spot enjoyed a remarkably fine and prolonged view of the magnificent pageant until it had arrived in close proximity with the Exchange. At a quarter past twelve o'clock, her Majesty passed in front of Bow Church, the celebrated bells of which rang out a merry peal as a welcome to the "Queen of earthly Queens," and as she proceeded she was received with loud, fervent, and continuous acclamation.

> "You would have thought the very windows spake;
> So many greedy looks of young aud old
> Through casements darted their desiring eyes
> Upon her visage."

Her Majesty and Prince Albert bowing their heads repeatedly to the general welcome that was offered them, expressed their acknowledgments in the most courteous and condescending manner.

RECEPTION AT THE EXCHANGE.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their suite, arrived at the western gate of the Exchange at a quarter past twelve o'clock.

The door at the western entrance of the Exchange was opened for the reception of the company soon after nine o'clock. At the same time a strong body of civic functionaries, consisting chiefly of members of the Joint Gresham Committee, who wielded in their hands the wands of office, took their station within the portico. As each visitor arrived, the ticket was formally demanded, and being presented, was solemnly inspected, mysteriously indented, and then condescendingly returned; after which, a signal was given, the sliding gates were expanded for a moment, and the fortunate holder was admitted into the interior of the building. The band of the Life Guards and of the Hon. Artillery Company were also in attendance, and were stationed in divisions in the quadrangle, and also in the portico. Among the early arrivals were Sir C. Napier, the Earl of Westmorland, the Marquis of Salisbury, Sir F. Pollock (Chief Baron of the Exchequer), and Mr. W. Holmes. These were soon followed by Lord J. Russell, who wore a splendid court dress, and appeared in excellent health and spirits. Very soon after his lordship's arrival, tremendous shouts from the thousands and tens of thousands assembled around burst upon the ear, and a carriage drove rapidly into the area, from which immediately alighted, his grace the Duke of Wellington. The moment his grace was recognised the band stationed in the portico struck up "See, the Conquering Hero comes," and every head was uncovered and bowed low to do him reverence. Notwithstanding this astonishing burst of national enthusiasm, his grace evidently retained his wonted composure, and, ascending the steps, calmly surveyed the portico, turned round and cast a glance almost of recognition at his own statue which adorns the area, surveyed the myriads of heads gathered around him, every one of which was strained to catch a glimpse of him, and the windows and housetops from which thousands of kerchiefs waved and enthusiastic tongues shouted his welcome, and then quietly walked towards the door of the principal entrance. Arrived there, the official gentlemen, who had by this time resumed their posts, stood with the door in hand, but still closed, and looked at his grace, evidently awaiting the production of the red ticket.

Then followed a momentary pantomime, the most interesting and expressive we ever witnessed. His grace evidently had no ticket, or did not think it necessary to produce it, so he merely glanced at the closed door, and then at the official. "Can it be necessary?" was evidently the language of the mute demand, and it was understood, and responded to immediately; for, without a word said on either side, the door was opened, and with profound obeisances, his grace was ushered into the interior. Here his grace was immediately joined by Mr. Lambert Jones, and Mr. Tite, the architect, who conducted him over the building, while the band stationed inside likewise struck up in honour of "the conquering hero." Next to his grace arrived the Solicitor-General (Sir F. Thesiger), in full court dress, and soon afterwards the Earl and Countess of Lincoln. Shortly afterwards followed the Recorder of the City (the Right Hon. C. E. Law, Q.C.), in his official robes; Alderman Gibbs, with two ladies; and also Lord Granville Somerset and Sir Thomas Fremantle, who wore the rich official costume of her Majesty's Ministers. At about eleven o'clock his Grace the Duke of Cambridge drove up to the Exchange, attended by a body of Life Guards. The band immediately struck up "God save the Queen," and his Royal Highness was received in the portico by the Duke of Wellington, Mr. L. Jones, and Mr. Tite, with the former of whom he shook hands, and conversed very cheerfully. Among the next succeeding arrivals were the Right Hon. Sir James Graham (who carried under his arm a small green box, containing her Majesty's answer to the proposed address,) the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Right Hon. H. Goulburn), and the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Each of these right hon. gentlemen wore the official costume of a Cabinet Minister. Soon afterwards the Bishop of London arrived in academical robes and cap, accompanied by Mrs. Blomfield. At a quarter past eleven her Grace the Duchess of Kent arrived, accompanied by her ladies in waiting, and attended by a detachment of Life Guards. Her Royal Highness was received by the military with the usual honours, while the band again played the National Anthem. Her Royal Highness was detained for some minutes in the portico, while some of the official gentlemen ran to collect the others to receive her with the honours due to her illustrious station, but was at length received by the Duke of Cambridge, with whom her Royal Highness shook hands very cordially, the Duke of Wellingon, the Cabinet Ministers, and the various civic functionaries before mentioned, and conducted by them to a seat in the banqueting-room, near that appropriated to her Majesty. Soon after the arrival of her Royal Highness a large party of the Yeomen of the Guard arrived, and took up their positions so as to form a passage for her Majesty through the portico into the quadrangle. As soon as this had been accomplished, a loud cheer from the multitude without announced the arrival of Sir R. Peel. The right hon. baronet wore the same costume as his official colleagues, and was accompanied by Lady Peel. He also was received in the portico by the members of the Gresham Committee and the architect, and stood there for some time conversing with the Duke of Wellington and other gentlemen around him. Nearly at the same time there arrived the Governor of the Bank of England, with Sir J. R. Reid, Mr. Pattison, M.P., and many other influential gentlemen connected with the City. Afterwards arrived in quick succession, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale), Lord F. Somerset, Lord A. Fitzclarence, Vice Chancellor Knight Bruce, Hon. G. R. Dawson, Marquis of Northampton, Earl of Dalhousie, Earl of Haddington, Viscount and Viscountess Canning, Viscount Cantilupe, Lord Hill, Sir G. Murray, Right Hon. J. C. Herries, Sir J. Macdonald, Hon. J. T. L. Melville, Sir I. L. Goldsmid, Sir H. Pottinger, &c. At twelve o'clock a distant shout, which was immediately taken up and continued throughout Cheapside, announced the near approach of her Majesty, and immediately every head was turned, and every eye strained westward to catch the first glimpse of the Royal procession. At length it came in sight, and her Majesty was seen bowing gracefully in acknowledgment of the homage paid to her, and of the loyalty and affection evinced by the heartfelt acclamations of all classes of her subjects.

As the Royal carriage passed the Mansion-house, cheers loud and long rent the air, which were audible far and wide. In a few moments after passing the Mansion-house, the Royal carriage reached the principal western entrance of the Royal Exchange, where it drew up in the centre. Her Majesty was handed out of the carriage by Prince Albert. Her Majesty, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, then passed on to the interior of the Exchange, preceded by the Lord Mayor, bearing the city sword of state, and bowing as he ushered her Majesty and Royal Consort into the new building. As her Majesty went from her carriage to the inside of the Exchange, she was most vociferously cheered, while her immediate attendants, who had previously arrived in the Royal carriages, and the Ministers and other high officers of State, formed a lane through which her Majesty passed. Her Majesty smiled most graciously in recognition of the hearty reception given her by her loyal subjects, and gracefully acknowledged the obeisances made to her by her Ministers and State Officers as she proceeded.

It was a quarter past 12 o'clock when her Majesty and Prince Albert arrived at the western entrance of the Royal Exchange; and the cheerings of the multitude, the music of the military bands, which immediately struck up "God save the Queen," the waving of handkerchiefs and of banners of the gayest description, with which most of the houses in the vicinity were decorated, produced a sensation which it must take a long time indeed to efface. Immediately on her Majesty stepping out of her carriage, the Royal standard was hoisted on the top of the Exchange, and underneath that floated a banner bearing a combined representation of the Gresham, City, and Mercers' Arms. Along the roof of the north and south sides were also poles, eight on each side, to the end of each of which was affixed the union jack.

The second Engraving, at page 276, represents the Royal carriage passing the Mansion-house, sketched from a gallery under the Portico. The first Illustration, at page 277, shows a side view of the interior of the Great Portico of the Exchange (looking towards the Bank), with the arrival of her Majesty. Upon the ribbon at the head of the page are inscribed the mottoes of Gresham, the City, and the Mercers' Company.

INTERIOR OF THE EXCHANGE.

After the reception, her Majesty, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, proceeded up the steps of the portico and through it to the entrance of the Merchants' Quadrangle, or, as it is usually termed, the Merchants' Area. Her Majesty was immediately preceded by the Lord Mayor, who carried the City sword of state. On entering the quadrangle, her Majesty, still preceded by the Lord Mayor and accompanied by all the chief personages, walked round the arcade or Ambulatory which surrounds the quadrangle. In the area of the quadrangle, a considerable number of ladies and gentlemen, principally members of the Common Council, and others connected with the City, had been accommodated; the band of the Coldstream Guards and that of the Grenadiers was also stationed within the quadrangle, and played the National Anthem as her Majesty entered, and while the Royal party walked round the ambulatory. During the same time, those who had been admitted into the centre of the quadrangle, formed in line on either side of the direct pathway from the portico up to the eastern end, leading to Lloyd's rooms. Along this pathway her Majesty and the rest of the Royal party walked up towards the foot of the staircase leading to Lloyd's rooms, after having completed the circuit of the ambulatory. The whole quadrangle presented a very gay and animated scene, formed by the brilliant uniforms of the noblemen and gentlemen who accompanied her Majesty, the bright groups of ladies who were to be seen at the windows and in the area itself, the martial music of the band and the loyal cheering of the spectators.

The Engravings at pages 277 and 284, represent these splendid stages of the ceremony—the Procession in the Great Northern Ambulatory, and the Quadrangle; the latter view being taken from the south-east angle.

THE BANQUETING ROOM.

Leaving the quadrangle, her Majesty and the royal party proceeded up the grand staircase, through the Vestibule, towards the suite of rooms called Lloyd's Rooms, which was to be the principal scene of the day's proceedings.

The principal apartment in which her Majesty was to be received is called the Subscribers' Room. It is 98 feet long by 40 wide, so that it afforded ample room for a grand entertainment. The tables were spread with every conceivable delicacy, and a profusion of the finest wines. There were four tables extending the whole length of the room, with seats on either side for the guests, the two centre tables being wider apart than the others, in order to afford a broad passage up the room to the cross-table, where a special preparation had been made for her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duke of Cambridge, and several others of the chief guests. This table was covered with massive gold plate, of the most exquisite workmanship, and those who had arranged the banquet had not forgotten her Majesty's fondness for flowers, of which two large and beautiful bouquets were placed opposite where her Majesty was to sit. There were also some dishes of magnificent hot-house grapes, and also three or four dishes of very fine strawberries. Her Majesty's seat was placed at the centre of this cross-table, a little raised above the rest. There were some other seats on the right and left. Among the elegant decorations of the Royal table were napkins of exquisite fineness, bordered with the richest lace, one of which was placed opposite the seat of each of the guests. The southern end of the room was hung with rich crimson velvet, descending in massive folds from the ceiling; and ranged along the wall at the back of the Royal table, in rows reaching nearly to the ceiling, were some massive pieces of plate, bowls, salvers, and other large articles, all of the finest workmanship. Reflected in looking-glass, which formed the surface of the wall, this display presented a very brilliant appearance.

Leaving the southern end of the room, where the déjeûner was laid, under an archway at the south-east, you come to another room, in length 40 feet, and 25 feet wide, which will be used when the Exchange is open for commercial purposes as a reading-room, but which, on the occasion of this Royal visit, was fitted up as a reception-room. The decorations here were particularly splendid. The eastern wall of the room was hung with a curtain of crimson velvet, 20 feet high, from richly-gilt wreaths. On either side at the top of the room is a gallery of very delicate framework. These galleries were not used for the reception of any spectators on this occasion, but the lightness and elegance of their structure relieved the effect of the massive hangings of the room. At the eastern end of this reception-room was a raised dais, three steps in height, and covered with crimson cloth, of the same with which the whole of the room was covered. On this dais there was a chair of crimson velvet and gold, for the use of her Majesty when receiving the address of the corporation. Beyond this reception-room some of the offices attached to Lloyd's were fitted up as retiring-rooms for her Majesty.

The guests who had received invitations to the déjeûner began to reach the Exchange very soon after ten o'clock. Indeed, before that hour there was a very considerable assemblage of visitors, ladies and gentlemen. A detailed list of the chief guests will be found below.

The Earl and Countess of Lincoln arrived shortly before eleven o'clock. The Bishop of London and Mrs. Blomfield also arrived about the same time. Sir Robert and Lady Sale on their arrival were received with marked interest and respect by the company. Sir Henry and Lady Pottinger were also objects of much interest.

The Duke of Wellington, on entering the banqueting-room was received with the most lively demonstrations of respect. The band at the entrance of the room played the air "See, the conquering hero comes;" and the appearance of his grace was the signal for a general clapping of hands, and even some cheering from the gentlemen, and waving of handkerchiefs from the ladies. The Duke was welcomed at the door by Mr. Lambert Jones and some of the leading members of the Corporation, by whom he was attended to the top of the room. Sir G. Murray was among the gentlemen who accompanied the Duke. Sir R. Peel soon after arrived, and was the object of much attention. He was very warmly received by the company. Sir Robert was accompanied by Lady Peel, and before he came up stairs to the banqueting-room he had been shown round the building, the different purposes of which were explained to him by Mr. Tite.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent entered the room, leaning on the arm of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. Their Royal Highnesses were received at the entrance by Mr. Alderman Humphery, Mr. Lambert Jones, and some others of the authorities of the place, and were conducted to the throne-room, whence they went to her Majesty's private apartments. While their Royal Highnesses were proceeding up the room the band played the National Anthem. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Gladstone, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, and several members of the Cabinet arrived soon after.

Baron Brunow with the Baroness Brunow and several of the foreign Ambassadors, were also there.

By half-past 11 o'clock all the guests, except those who were in immediate attendance on her Majesty, had arrived, and the banqueting room was full.

Amongst the last of those who came was Sir James Graham, who, in his official capacity, inspected all the preparations that had been made for her Majesty's accommodation. He expressed himself highly satisfied with everything that had been done.

Her Majesty's approach was announced to the guests by a call from the upper end of the room of "The Queen is coming!" and the National Anthem was immediately played by the band of the Life Guards stationed outside. Immediately the whole mass of guests rose, and faced on each side the avenue through which her Majesty was to pass to the top of the room. Two lines were thus formed on either side of this avenue, of ladies and gentlemen, glittering with diamonds and jewels, and brilliant in uniforms, military and naval, covered with orders and insignia. As her Majesty entered and passed up the room, preceded by the Lord Mayor, bearing the civic sword before him, and by the Aldermen and members of the Corporation, with their robes and wands of office, and followed by a brilliant suite of ladies, officers, Ministers, and Ambassadors, the whole company bowed repeatedly, at the same time receiving her Majesty with a loyal and respectful cheer. Her Majesty leaned on the arm of Prince Albert.

A scene more imposing and interesting from the great event which called it forth, and, at the same time, more brilliant and striking in the display which it occasioned, can seldom have been witnessed. The size of the building afforded space for a great effect; but the distinguished rank and position of the guests added an importance and an interest which mere numbers or state could not have produced. Within the compass of this room were assembled some of the highest in rank and the most distinguished in talent, not only in England, but in continental Europe; and the flower of the female aristocracy of this country were there to add the charm of beauty, and all those aids which their personal adornments could bring, to vary and make gay the scene. Their brilliant jewels, and dresses of the brightest and purest colours blent in variegated beauty, formed at once a gay and a soft contrast to the uniforms, military and civil, of the gentlemen, not less bright or various in colour, nor less dazzling, from the orders and stars with which their breasts were studded. All the gayest colours of the rainbow were brought together in the living mass; chequered at every interval by the scarlet hues of the military officers, and the blue of the naval, the darker and more sombre Windsor uniform blazing with gold lace, and the gay bright colours of the costume of the foreign Ambassadors glittering with their many marks of Royal favour. Her Majesty appeared struck with the appearance of the place and the company, accustomed as she has been to such scenes; but she was evidently gratified at her reception, for she bowed repeatedly, and that in a manner indicating a desire to do more than reply by a mere formal salutation to those who were endeavouring to offer her honour.

PRESENTATION OF THE ADDRESS.

Arrived at the upper end of the room, her Majesty did not take her seat at the Royal table, but proceeded with the Prince, to the inner banqueting-room. Her Majesty took her seat on the dais, Prince Albert standing on her right, on the second step, and the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cambridge on her left. Sir Robert Peel stood on the floor of the room, a little below Prince Albert, and Sir James Graham next Sir Robert, but nearer the foot of the throne, that he might be ready to receive her Majesty's commands in his official capacity. A guard of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, officered by Lord Forrester, Sir B. Smith, and others, were in the throne-room at the entrance. As soon as her Majesty had taken her seat on the throne, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and other members of the Corporation and of the Gresham Committee retired, as a matter of form, on the assumption that they would prepare the address, although it had, of course, been prepared and written beforehand. In a few moments, they returned to the room, and formed a semicircle in front of her Majesty, the Lord Mayor a little in advance, and the Recorder on his right. The members of the Administration, with their ladies, the foreign Ambassadors, with their ladies, and some others of the chief guests, were then invited into the room to be present at the reception of the address.

Here again, the scene, though on a smaller scale, was imposing. The room contained the élite of the whole company, all the most distinguished of the distinguished persons present in the Exchange; and as an assemblage of commercial wealth, of hereditary rank, of political and diplomatic talent, of military and naval renown, and last, though not least, of female beauty, it would be difficult to match it within the same small space, or on an occasion characterised by so little of mere ceremonial, or of attempt at pomp and display. Her Majesty, as she sat on her throne facing the brilliant circle, looked indeed royal; and, what will perhaps please her subjects better, she looked in the full bloom of health. Her magnificent tiara of diamonds became her admirably.

The Recorder, on an intimation given from the throne, then proceeded to read the address, which he did in a very emphatic way, appropriate to the sentiments it conveyed. We subjoin an official copy:—

"TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

"The humble Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled.

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, your Majesty's faithful subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London in Common Council assembled, together with the Master, Wardens, and Commonalty of the Mystery of the Mercers, joint trustees of Sir Thomas Gresham, hail your Majesty's auspicious presence in the heart of the metropolis on this renowned and favoured spot with the liveliest sentiments of devoted loyalty and attachment.

"The privilege we this day enjoy of approaching your Royal person under the roof of the new Exchange revives the memory of the olden time, when your Majesty's illustrious predecessor, Queen Elizabeth, vouchsafed to adorn by her presence the simpler edifice raised by a citizen, and dedicated to the commerce of the world.

"Your Majesty in this respect emulates the example of that great monarch, who deemed it no disparagement of her imperial state to proclaim by the herald and to distinguish the work of a subject by the title of the 'Royal Exchange.'

"It is recorded in the graceful narrative of events inscribed on the foundation-stone of this building, that 'the relief of indigence and the advancement of literature and science' entered into the capacious scheme of the original founder of this noble institution, and were made subsidiary to the stability and grandeur of a commerce co-extensive with the habitable globe.

"Yielding to that eminent citizen and benefactor of his kind, Sir Thomas Gresham, the signal merit to plan and execute at his own charge this glorious work, we still rejoice to trace the assisting hand of the City and the ancient company of Mercers from the earliest prosecution of the design, and our gratitude is kindled on reflecting that each memorable epoch of the Royal Exchange is marked by the solicitude of the reigning monarch to raise and to rebuild the structure from the ashes to which it has been twice reduced by the calamitous effects of fire.

"King Charles II. commenced the former building on the 23d of October, 1667, and the illustrious Prince, the Royal Consort of yonr Majesty, under your Majesty's auspices, laid the first stone of the present edifice on the 17th of January, 1842.

"Deign, therefore, Most Gracious Lady, to regard wit your Royal approbation this work of our hands, the noble and well-constructed pile again raised by the Citizens of London, and erected on a site rendered worthy of the objects of so vast an undertaking, to endure, we fervently pray for ages, a memorial and imperishable monument of the commercial grandeur and prosperity, and the peaceful triumphs of your Majesty's happy reign.

"Signed by order of the Court,
"HENRY ALWORTH MEREWETHER."

Her Majesty listened to the address with marked attention, and bowed at its conclusion. She then turned to Sir James Graham, who handed her a written copy of her Majesty's answer, which she read in that clear and emphatic tone of voice which, though by no means loud or elevated, has made her so distinctly audible on several occasions in even the remotest parts of the House of Lords. Her Majesty's answer was as follows:—

"I receive with peculiar satisfaction this dutiful address. It is a pledge of

(Continued on page 282.)

SPLENDID ENGRAVING

FOR THE

SUBSCRIBERS

TO THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

COMPANION PRINT TO THE COLOSSEUM VIEW OF "LONDON IN 1842."

The Proprietors of the Illustrated London News have great pleasure in announcing the forward preparation of a most Superb Engraving, as a companion to their celebrated large Print, entitled "London in 1842."

In selecting this engraving, they are convinced that the subject chosen, from its paramount interest and attraction, will meet with universal approbation. It will represent a Magnificent

PANORAMA

OF

THE RIVER THAMES,

showing at one view "the Royal-towered Thame;" its "Forests of Masts;" its crowded Docks and Port; its Fleet of Steamers; its

NOBLE BRIDGES, UNEQUALLED IN THE WORLD;

its busy Wharfs and Quays; and the various objects of interest and beauty upon its immediate banks, including

GREENWICH, AND ITS SUPERB PALACE-HOSPITAL;

and exhibiting the winding of the "Silver Thames" through the mighty mass of buildings that form the metropolis of the Commercial World.

Showing as distinctly as in a Map, yet with beautifully picturesque effect, the several

STREETS OF THE METROPOLIS;

with the many hundred Churches, Palaces, Columns, and Arches; Government Offices, and Public Institutions; Club Houses, Noble Mansions, and Palatial Homes; embellished Street Architecture, Terraces, and Villas; Theatres; Railways; Parks and Public Walks; Factories and Warehouses; and, in short, a perfect Picture of the Vast Extent, Architectural Character, and Most Recent Improvement, of the BANKS OF THIS NOBLE RIVER.

To be Engraved in the

FIRST STYLE OF THE ART,

From a most Elaborate Drawing made expressly for the

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS;

And which has occupied the Artists for several months, so that the strictest reliance may be placed on its accuracy.

The entire length of the PRINT will be

UPWARDS OF EIGHT FEET!

but it is impossible to enumerate one-tenth of the objects.

The interest of the subject cannot be surpassed, and the highest talent is employed in its execution.

☞ Further announcement this Magnificent Print will be duly given.

198, Strand.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Nov 3.—Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 4.—King William III. landed, 1688.
Tuesday, 5.—Gunpowder Plot, 1605.
Wednesday, 6.—Princess Charlotte died, 1817.
Thursday, 7.—First Gazette published, 1665.
Friday, 8.—Milton died, 1674.
Saturday, 9.—Lord Mayor's Day; Prince of Wales born, 1841.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending November 9.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
7 39	8 16	8 56	9 34	10 9	10 43	11 16	11 44	0 0	0 10	0 31	0 53

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"An Interested Party," Penn, Bucks, cannot marry a deceased wife's sister.

"A Native of Bath," Stuttgard, will find the View of Bath at page 216, vol. 1.

"J. R. S."—We will endeavour to extend the University Intelligence.

"Haras Doon," Bradford.—Both.

"Y. O. S." may obtain the Act of Parliament, by order, of any bookseller.

"H. E.," Gloucester.—The Garrick Club, King-street, Covent-garden.

"H. H. H.," Margate; Ordo; will be entitled to the Large Print.

"W. R. C.," Sunderland, is thanked; but we have not room.

"J. W. P.," Burslem; A. Smith, Barmouth.—"Taylor's Short-hand" may be obtained, by order, of any bookseller.

"P. P. C."—We have not room for the monument at Marston.

"F. B. R." states the "Beggar's Petition" to have been written by the Rev. R. Moss, born in Norfolk, about 1666.

"T. J. S.," Mile-end-road.—Although frequently overlooked, it is not lawful.

"J. T.," Brook-green.—Our correspondent's letter has been referred to the printer.

"A Subscriber," Abroad.—If the cultivation of the waste lands of Great Britain and Ireland were likely to turn out profitable, capitalists would soon be found to undertake it.

"Ernest," Edinburgh.—The South Western Royal Railway Carriage was built at the expense of the Railway Proprietors. In the description, it should have been mentioned that the interior was designed and trimmed by Mr. Herring, Fleet street.

"A Leicestershire Cattle Dealer" complains that the mode in which cattle are delivered at the railway station at Camden-town calls for the interference of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and of the Railway Directors.

"A Subscriber," Warminster, should read our account of the Atmospheric Railway, in No. 113 of our journal.

"C. E.," Ramsgate, will be entitled to the Large Print.

"H. H. N. B."—The irregularity shall be remedied.

"H. D."—No.

"An Old Subscriber."—We have frequently cautioned our subscribers against becoming shareholders in new schemes.

"A Constant Subscriber."—Our demand for paper has so considerably increased of late, that the supply of one mill has been inadequate.

Birkenhead Docks.—Some explanation is due to our Birkenhead and Liverpool readers of the delay of the engraving of the ceremony of founding the New Docks; the importance of which has only been surpassed by that of opening the Royal Exchange in the metropolis. Next week week we shall illustrate the Grand Ceremony at Birkenhead.

Ineligible.—Lines on the Opening of the New Exchange; The Loved of Youthful Days; sonnet, The Lunar Rainbow.

"T. S.," Clerkenwell.—The Frenchman modestly meant to allow that London is half the size of Paris.

"Alpha."—"Meadows's French Pronouncing Dictionary." Negus was, we believe, named after the person who first mixed it.

"A Subscriber."—We have not room for "Scholastic Tactics."

"Margaret."—See future announcements.

"Melton."—We do not know anything beyond the advertisement of "the Grand Distribution."

"A Constant Reader," Beaminster.—Ineligible, Riddle, by X. Y. Z.

"Moody," Coleford.—"Taylor's System of Short-hand," improved by Harding.

"A Correspondent."—The salary of the Governor-General of India is £30,000 per annum.

"J. P.," Drummond-street.—If our correspondent has other evidence than a receipt that he has paid the money, it will be a sufficient discharge.

⁂ The two middle pages of this number, are to be cut out by the binder and folded, and placed so as not to injure the plate in binding.

The Completion of the Description of the New Royal Exchange, with Engravings, will be given in our next.

Last week's Number contains a complete History of the Royal Exchange, from its first foundation, with many Engravings.

Chess.—"Rector;" "J. W. P.," Burslem.—Referred to our chess correspondent. "C. H.:" Your pawn may be exchanged for any piece you choose: thus, you may have two or more Queens, three or more Rooks, &c., on the board at once.

Christ's Hospital.—We are indebted to a Governor of this Royal foundation for the following correction of our answer to a correspondent, "E. H. P.," in No. 128, respecting Christ's Hospital:—The Lord Mayor and Aldermen are ex-officio Governors of Christ's Hospital. The Lord Mayor has two presentations annually (one as Lord Mayor, the other as Alderman), and each of the Aldermen has one presentation annually at Easter. The other Governors of the Hospital have a presentation about every third year, according to the number of vacancies. The amount of benefaction to the hospital by the nobility and gentlemen in order to render them eligible to be elected Governors of the Hospital, has been raised about two or three years ago from £400 to £500. The twelve members of the Court of Common Council who are elected Governors enjoy the like privileges which the other Governors, not being Aldermen, enjoy, so long as they shall continue members of Common Council; and the Court of Common Council fill up from time to time all vacancies by death or otherwise.

PART XXVI., is Now Ready, Price 2s. 6d.

⁂ Any Country News Agent may receive Posting Bills, bearing his address, by informing our Publisher where a parcel can be enclosed, free of expense.

☞ We are continually receiving complaints from subscribers respecting the slovenly way some newsmen forward our journal by post, much to the injury of the work. Our advice is, change the agent for one who is more attentive.

In consequence of the press of engravings, we are obliged to defer the illustration of the Fashions.

STEAM CAN'T DO IT!!!
THE IMMENSE SALE OF THE
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

THIS WEEK, renders it IMPOSSIBLE to SUPPLY HALF THE DEMAND IN THE USUAL TIME.

The Indulgence of the Public is earnestly requested until the whole number Ordered is printed.

Office, 198, Strand, Nov. 2, 1844.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1844.

Every public event has two sides from which it is looked at—the anticipatory, and the retrospective. We need scarcely add that the backward view is not always so bright as the forward one; things are included in it that mar the harmony of the prospect. For unmingled gratification in this world it is better to trust to hope than memory. The opening of the Royal Exchange has been no exception to the very general rule; indeed, it has rather been a very striking instance of how a gratifying occurrence can be twisted and mismanaged till it produces a vast amount of dissatisfaction. From all we have heard and read, we have been compelled to come to the conclusion that the ceremony was converted into a selfish job by that most selfish of bodies, the Corporation of London. It does not require to be told by us that it has long lost the respect of the public; it is no longer the true representative of the wealth, power, and let us add, the integrity of the citizens of London. Yet, with so few claims on public regard, it took advantage of one of the very few occasions on which a prominence might have been accorded it without the accompaniment of contempt, to annoy and insult, individually and collectively, nearly every body and institution that have a real value and importance in the commercial community. The Exchange was built for the merchants at large, and it was seized on, on the day of opening, and appropriated as exclusively as if it had been the fee simple of the Corporation. The object of all the arrangements was evidently to make a show of her Majesty, for the gratification of themselves and their wives; the purpose of the day was lost sight of; the character of the festival perverted to that of a supplementary Lord Mayor's day; and the guiding principle of those who, by some means or other, had the exclusive management of matters, was to take the best possible care of themselves, by appropriating as many of the good places, and monopolising as much of the good things as they decently, or rather indecently, could. The public press is teeming with complaints of the scandalous and unblushing manner in which the merchants of London were swamped by the greedy ostentation of the corporate body. It is scarcely credible to find it stated that to such a body as Lloyd's, only twelve tickets were forwarded, and that in a tardy, ungracious manner! Why, the banquet itself was given in the rooms destined for the members of this association. But we have heard and read of omissions quite as bad: we understand that, as a body, the Directors of the East India Company were neither invited nor represented; nor the Elder Brothers of the Trinity House. To one of these bodies tickets were sent at the eleventh hour, as an after-thought; and from the grudging, unhandsome manner in which it was done, they were contemptuously returned. Admittance was most judiciously withheld from everybody who could be excluded, except they happened to be connected with the Corporation. Yet that body might be searched throughout, and there are not two men among them who can properly call himself a banker or merchant; if the commerce of London was no greater than that which they represent, there would be no occasion for an Exchange at all. The same Bumble-spirit of ignorance and insolence combined, caused every impediment to be thrown in the way of the press, though half the interest of the day consisted in its events being faithfully recorded. We do not complain on our own account, as we had an admission which the underlings did not venture to dispute. But several of the morning papers were either refused admittance or put to great inconvenience to effect it, and on the broad principle that the press had a right to be there, we condemn the exclusion. And throughout the arrangements there was a consistency of almost studied slight to those who had the best right to be present at such an inauguration, which has altogether so disgusted and irritated the mercantile body of London, that it is not at all improbable some marked mode of expressing its feelings may be resolved on. The Corporation should recollect this fact, and derive from it a truer notion of its real position; every place and office in it has fallen to its present possessor, not from any merit of the holder, but from the contempt in which the whole mixture of mummery and corruption is held by those whose wealth, position, and characters make them in reality what the Corporation is in appearance only—the influential men of the City. The occasion was a great one, and its interest was not entirely destroyed even by the mismanagement we have noticed; the Queen of a Great Empire was there, and nothing could diminish the real respect and loyalty with which she was received. Nor could any amount of official insignificance, thrusting itself every where to the exclusion of better worth, deprive men of the consciousness that the event was one worthy of being held in remembrance.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—His Royal Highness Prince Albert left the Castle this morning, between nine and ten o'clock, in a travelling carriage and four, for the Slough Station, and proceeded thence by a special train to Paddington, en route to Buckingham Palace. Colonel Bouverie, equerry in waiting, was in attendance upon the Prince. His Royal Highness returned to the Castle this afternoon at a quarte past three o'clock. The infant Royal Family were taken out for their usual airing, during the day, in the private grounds of the Castle. Her Majesty, attended by Lady Portman, took a carriage drive this afternoon. Major-General Wemyss was in attendance on horseback. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Countess Josephine Wratislaw, and Lady Charlotte Dundas, had the honour of joining the Royal dinner-party this evening. The band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) performed during the banquet, and her Majesty's private band attended during the remainder of the evening.

Her Majesty's Visit to the Marquis of Exeter.—The long-contemplated visit of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert to the Marquis of Exeter, at Burleigh House, is expected to take place in the course of next week. It is understood that the Court will be absent from the Castle about four or five days. During the visit of the Queen and the Prince Consort to Burleigh House, the christening of the infant daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter will take place, the celebration of which will be upon the most magnificent and extensive scale. Her Majesty will confer the honour upon the Marquis of being present during the performance of the sacred rite, and standing as one of the sponsors. The chamber containing the gorgeous state bed in which Queen Elizabeth slept nearly three centuries ago, will be appropriated for the use of the Queen, as well as the entire suite of state rooms, during her Majesty's stay at Burleigh House.

The Duke of Wellington left Apsley House, on Tuesday afternoon, for Walmer Castle. Lord Brougham arrived at the castle on Friday week last, to visit the noble and gallant duke, and remained till the next afternoon, when the learned lord went to Dover, and there embarked for Boulogne, on his way to Paris, from thence intending to go to his estates in the south of France. The noble and learned lord has arrived in Paris.

Lord John Russell has returned to Dover to join his lady, who is residing there for the benefit of her health.

Marriage in High Life.—The marriage of Viscount Loftus, eldest son of the Marquis of Ely, with Miss Jane Hope Vere, niece of the Marquis of Tweeddale, was on Tuesday solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, in the presence of a large circle of the nobility.

Accident to the Hon. George Egerton.—The Hon. George Egerton, second son of Lord and Lady Francis Egerton, has been thrown from his horse, a high-spirited animal, in the Fulham-road, and received some very severe contusions in his fall. The horse was so injured as to be obliged to be killed. The hon. gentleman is going on favourably.

Lord and Lady Sale have arrived at Windsor Castle on a visit to the Queen.

We are sorry to announce the death of the Hon. Miss Wynyard, who, it will be recollected, was for many years bedchamber woman and constant companion of her late Royal Highness Princess Augusta. The deceased, who was in her 71st year, was third daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Wynyard.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Strange Death of a Child.—On Monday an infant, whose parents live in Ratcliffe-Highway, that had been left alone in bed, with a chair to prevent its falling out of bed, was found quite dead, hanging with its neck tightly fixed between the back rails of the chair, having evidently forced its head through, and then slipped out of bed before extricating itself.

Serious Accident at the Royal Exchange.—A lamentable accident occurred on Monday morning in the Royal Exchange. An individual fell to the ground through one of the sky-lights of the building, and was very seriously injured. He was immediately carried to St. Thomas's Hospital in a very dangerous state.

Accident on the Brighton Railway.—As an engine was passing through Folly-hill Cutting, a short distance from Hayward's-heath, on Saturday, a jolting motion intimated that the wheels had passed over some obstruction on the line. The engine was at once stopped, and the driver found that a man, who must have been lying on the rails, was nearly cut in two by the wheels, which had passed over the abdomen. He was quite dead. He is a labourer, named Mitchell, and had been drinking at several public-houses and beer-shops during Saturday. He parted from a companion at ten o'clock on Saturday night, in order to go home, and he had probably taken the railroad as his nearest road, till, overcome by liquor, he probably lay down to sleep.

The Late Murder at Dover.—John and William Clark, charged on the coroner's inquest, with their father, another brother, and a man named Smith, with the wilful murder of Samuel Couchman, a Dover police-constable, have been apprehended, and committed to Maidstone to take their trial.

Fatal Accident at Turnham-green.—A most frightful accident occurred on Tuesday afternoon, opposite the Post-office, Turnham-green. The driver of a market-gardener's waggon being fast asleep, suddenly rolled off, and two of the wheels passed over his body and killed him.

The Alleged Murder of a Wife at Lambeth.—In our Union-hall police report, last week, we gave the examination of a Mr. Brenton, an apothecary at Lambeth, on a charge of murdering his wife. The inquiry before the coroner lasted a considerable time. The jury, after being locked up many hours, returned a verdict of "Manslaughter against Mr. Brenton," and he was committed on the coroner's warrant.

Suicide of a Literary Character.—Mr. William Thompson, a reporter on the Newcastle Chronicle, committed suicide last week by cutting his throat. It is supposed that the cause was his dismissal from his situation, in consequence of a neglect of duty. He was well known as a poet, and was the author of some excellent pieces in the periodical magazines.—The jury gave a verdict of "Temporary Insanity."

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

One of the inmates of the Grand-Hospice at Brussels has attained the age of 109 years and 6 months.

There is a report that in the vessel which took out Barber and Fletcher, the will-forgers, a fever has broken out, to which several of the crew have fallen a sacrifice, and which had also communicated to some of the convicts, by which, it is said, Barber himself has also become a victim. He has, it is said, left behind him some important memoirs connected with the will-forgeries.

Westminster bridge has been again thrown open for carriages. Several improvements have been made.

A letter from St. Petersburgh announces that the Emperor Nicholas has been so much affected by the death of the Grand Duchess Alexandra, that his health has much suffered, and it was lately found necessary to apply leeches three times. He lives almost alone, and takes no part in public affairs.

Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick, sheriff of Dumfriesshire, died suddenly last week. He had been Sheriff of the county for 33 years.

A Constantinople letter of the 10th October, says,—"Mehemet Ali has consulted the Porte upon the subject of the treaty with England for the passage of the Indian mail; and the answer received was, that everything in such an arrangement was left to his own judgment and prudence."

Letters from Leghorn of the 20th ult. state that political prosecutions are still being continued in the Roman territory, and that several persons had been obliged to fly into Tuscany. The persons implicated in the affairs of 1843 and 1844, not yet condemned, were to be shortly judged; and it was supposed that after their condemnation the Pope would accord an amnesty in favour of the less compromised, and send the others into exile.

The German papers continue to speak of the objections made by England to the treaty of Belgium with the Zollverein, and now state that the British Minister at Brussels had declared to the Belgian Government, that every new concession of the kind would be looked upon by the British Cabinet as a formal act of hostility to England.

The first section of the railroad of Lower Silesia, viz., from Breslau to Leignitz, a distance of about 58 English miles, was opened on the 18th. This is part of the great line of railway which will extend from Kiel (Holstein) to Trieste, and thus connect the Baltic Sea with the Adriatic.

Accounts have been received from Carmarthen of the alarming illness of Major-General Nott, who is residing in that town.

The Courrier Français states that Louis Philippe has sent a splendid doll, worth 10,000f. to the Sultan Abdul Medjid, as a present for his daughter Naimé, who is four years old.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

The Ceremony of Monday Last.—Sir James Graham has sent an official letter to the Lord Mayor, by command of the Queen, in which her Majesty expresses the gratification experienced by herself and Prince Albert at the loyalty of the people, and the hospitality of the city of London, on the occasion of her visit to the Royal Exchange.

The Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath has been conferred upon Lord Ellenborough.

We are sorry to announce the death of the Countess Berkeley, which took place at her seat, Cranford House, Middlesex. The countess, as our readers are probably aware, was the mother of Captain Berkeley, the present Earl Fitzhardinge. Her ladyship was in her 77th year.

Sir William Follett.—Dr. Bright, whose professional services were devoted to the Attorney-General since his departure for Italy, has returned to this country from Milan, leaving his patient there, greatly improved in health. Sir Wm. Follett does not intend returning to England before February.

Indisposition of Sir Charles Thornton.—Sir Charles Thornton was this morning (Friday) seized with a fainting fit in Westminster Abbey. In a short time, after proper remedies had been administered, Sir Charles was sufficiently recovered to be able to walk to the residence of the Dean.

The Lord Mayor Elect.—The Recorder this day presented Mr. Alderman Gibbs to the Lord Chancellor at his house in Hanover-square, when the noble and learned lord signified her Majesty's approbation of the choice of the Livery in the usual form.

Lord Mayor's Day.—Preparations have been commenced at Guildhall for the Lord Mayor's dinner next Saturday. The monuments have all undergone a thorough cleaning, and the Hall altogether has a very pretty appearance. The civic procession, after leaving Guildhall, will proceed through King-street, Cheapside, Poultry, Mansion-house-street, to London-bridge, returning by the usual route through Bridge-street, Blackfriars, Ludgate-hill, St. Paul's Churchyard, Cheapside, to Guildhall.

Michaelmas Term.—This being the first day of Michaelmas Term, the courts in Westminster-hall were opened with the usual ceremonies, but no business of public interest occurred.

County Palatine of Lancaster.—The Vice-Chancellorship of this court having lately become vacant by the death of Mr. Holt, Lord Granville Somerset, the Chancellor of the Duchy, has selected Mr. Twiss as his successor.

The Royal Exchange.—The anxiety to obtain a view of the interior of this edifice still continues. Yesterday the applicants for admission were greater than ever, and from the time the doors were opened till the close the crowding and crushing were awful. Several women got driven by the pressure against the barriers, over which some gentlemen, attracted by their shrieks, drew them and released them from danger. Some children were extricated at the same time. Among the immense concourse of persons, several of the "light-fingered gentry" have been extremely active; many complaints having been made of the loss of pocket-handkerchiefs, &c. On Thursday afternoon a gentleman named Scarf, holding a situation in a mercantile house in the City, had his pocket picked of his pocket-book, containing Bills of Exchange and private memorandums. Fortunately, the gentleman had a few minutes previous to his entering the Exchange deposited £150 in bank-notes at his banker's, in Lombard-street. The Bills of Exchange were not endorsed, therefore they are of no use.

Mr. Macready returned to England by the Caledonia, and is now in London.

Newmarket Races.—(Friday.)—Alice Hawthorn paid forfeit to Foigh-a-Ballagh. Scalteen beat Give-him-a-Name. Glen Fishie beat Pathfinder. Garry Owen beat Plantagenet. Event won the Second Class of the Nursery Stakes, and Rose of Cashmere the other.

The Grand Junction Railway Company met yesterday at Liverpool, and declared a dividend of £2 10s. per share.

Mr. Renton Nicholson, better known perhaps as the Judge of the Judge and Jury Society, and keeper of the Garrick's Head, Bow-street, has been examined again at the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and after giving some further account of of his affairs, was ordered to be discharged.

Lamentable Accident at Oldham.—We have received from Oldham an account of a very fatal accident which occurred there on Thursday afternoon. A portion of the cotton-mill of Messrs. Ratcliffe suddenly fell down, burying all the people at work in it. Up to half-past eight o'clock in the evening about 12 or 14 bodies had been found. It is not yet known how many are missing, but report says 30 or 40.

A lamentable accident occurred yesterday evening at Cooke's Circus, at Hackney. The high wind suddenly snapped the ropes of the awning, and the centre pole fell with great violence into the pit, striking a Mrs. Isbetter with such force that she died soon afterwards. Her head was literally crushed, both eyes were terribly swollen, and her face altogether presented a most appalling spectacle. A relative, a Mrs. Laws, was also much hurt.

FOREIGN.

